

CURRY COLLEGE

Binney Gunnison Library

805 [REDACTED] AVENUE
[REDACTED] [REDACTED] AVENUE
[REDACTED]
[REDACTED] AVENUE
[REDACTED]
[REDACTED] AVENUE
[REDACTED]

FROM BEOWULF TO THOMAS HARDY

—
VOLUME ONE

FROM BOWEN TO THOMAS WARD

FOR THE ONE

1872

FROM BEOWULF TO THOMAS HARDY

TEXTS SELECTED AND EDITED
BY
ROBERT SHAFER, PH.D.

ASSOCIATE PROFESSOR OF LITERATURE AND FELLOW OF THE GRADUATE SCHOOL, UNIVERSITY OF CINCINNATI

IN TWO VOLUMES

VOLUME I.—FROM BEOWULF TO DOCTOR JOHNSON

BOSTON BAPTIST COLLEGE LIBRARY
950 METROPOLITAN AVENUE
BOSTON, MA 02136

TEL (617) 364-3510 EXT 216 NEW YORK
GARDEN CITY
DOUBLEDAY, PAGE AND COMPANY
1924

PR

1109

- $485-

v. 1

COPYRIGHT, 1924, BY DOUBLEDAY, PAGE & COMPANY
ALL RIGHTS RESERVED

PRINTED IN THE UNITED STATES AT THE COUNTRY LIFE PRESS, GARDEN CITY, N. Y.

First Edition

TO THE MEMORY OF JOHN KESTER BONNELL
SCHOLAR, TEACHER, FRIEND

PREFACE

These volumes are designed primarily for the introductory course in the general history of English literature given in many colleges and universities. The plan they follow is based on the conviction, gained from my own experience and that of many other teachers, that anthologies and collections of extracts are more useful to those who know literature than to those who are just learning to know it. It is of little permanent use for the learner to read a few pages of fragments from the work of an important writer; it may even do him harm rather than good. These volumes represent an effort to consult the learner's actual needs; and to this end not only have writers of minor importance, and works which can profitably be studied only by the mature student, been excluded, but the writers who are represented are, I hope, adequately represented. As far as possible, only pieces complete in themselves have been chosen for inclusion, and the texts selected are printed without omissions. The amount of material included in the volumes is more than can be studied and discussed in the average course running through a single academic year. This may enable teachers to avoid the almost prohibitive expense of using a number of different text-books for the work of one course, and yet at the same time enable them in large measure to enjoy the advantage of a considerable range of possible selection. Some of the texts, too, may be found useful for the purpose of supplementary reading. Such reading is very desirable, and most teachers wish to encourage it, but not all college and university libraries can supply the necessary books when the number of students enrolled in a course is large.

The annotation is, I believe, sufficient for accurate though fairly rapid reading. I have endeavored to provide explanations wherever they are really needed, but have aimed to take up as little space as possible with such matter. The purpose of these volumes is best served by the inclusion within them of the maximum amount of literature, and there has been in recent years a wholesome reaction from excessive annotation. In the first volume a glossary is provided for the selections from Chaucer, Piers Plowman, the Popular Ballads, and Spenser.

In general, modern usage has been followed in the matters of spelling and punctuation, though the selections from Chaucer and Piers Plowman, some of the ballads, and the first book of Spenser's Faerie Queene have been printed in their original form—the symbols ð and ȝ, however, being replaced by their modern equivalents, and modern usage being followed with respect to i, j, u, and v.

Any one who undertakes a work of this sort incurs at every turn obligations to previous editors. Not only am I deeply indebted to them, but also to many friends and colleagues who have given me advice or assistance in the course of the four or five years during which these volumes have been preparing. It would be impossible for me here to name all those who have thus aided me, and I must be content with one compendious and general acknowledgment. I am, however, particularly indebted to the Macmillan Company for making it possible for me to use the late Professor Gummere's translation of Beowulf; to my friend and former colleague Professor Joseph M. Beatty, Jr., of Goucher College, for assistance with the glossary in the present volume; to Professor Morris W. Croll, of Princeton University, for reading some of the proofs and making several valuable suggestions; and to Miss Hilda Bittenwieser, Miss Estelle Hunt, and Miss Dorothy Sisson, all of the University of Cincinnati, for help in the preparation of the manuscript.

In so large and complex a work as this, involving almost countless details, it is practically inevitable that mistakes should occur. I have taken all possible pains to secure accuracy both in text and in notes, but I can hardly hope to be more fortunate in this than others have been, and I shall be grateful to any who use these volumes for pointing out to me any errors they find, of whatever sort, so that they may be promptly corrected.

ROBERT SHAFER.

I MARCH, 1924.

CONTENTS

	PAGE
Beowulf . . . . .	I
The Wanderer . . . . .	39
The Seafarer . . . . .	41
The Battle of Brunanburh . . . . .	44
The Battle of Maldon . . . . .	46
Sir Gawain and the Green Knight . . . . .	51
WILLIAM LANGLAND (?)
Piers Plowman: Prologue . . . . .	74
GEOFFREY CHAUCER
The Canterbury Tales: The Prologue . . . . .	80
The Prioress's Tale . . . . .	89
The Nun's Priest's Tale . . . . .	92
The Pardoner's Tale . . . . .	99
Chaucers Words unto Adam, his owne Scriveyn . . . . .	106
Truth, Balade de Bon Conseyl. . . . .	106
Lak of Stedfastnesse . . . . .	106
The Compite of Chaucer to his Empty Purse . . . . .	107
<hr style="width: 20%; margin: auto;"/> Popular Ballads
Riddles Wisely Expounded . . . . .	108
The Douglas Tragedy . . . . .	109
Robin Hood and Guy of Gisborne . . . . .	110
Robin Hood and the Monk . . . . .	113
Robin Hood's Death . . . . .	117
The Hunting of the Cheviot . . . . .	118
Sir Patrick Spens . . . . .	122
The Three Ravens . . . . .	123
Edward . . . . .	123
The Twa Sisters . . . . .	124
The Twa Brothers . . . . .	124
The Cruel Brother . . . . .	125
The Wife of Usher's Well . . . . .	126
Kemp Owyne . . . . .	126
Thomas Rymer . . . . .	127
Sir Hugh or the Jew's Daughter . . . . .	128
Get Up and Bar the Door . . . . .	129
<hr style="width: 20%; margin: auto;"/>
Everyman . . . . .	130
SIR THOMAS MALORY
Le Morte D'Arthur: Caxton's Preface . . . . .	143
Book XXI . . . . .	146
JOHN LYLY
Euphues, the Anatomy of Wit: A Cooling Card for Philautus and All Fond Lovers . . . . .	159
CHRISTOPHER MARLOWE
The Tragical History of Doctor Faustus . . . . .	166

	PAGE
EDMUND SPENSER
The Faerie Queene: A Letter to Sir Walter Raleigh . . . . .	190
Book I . . . . .	192
Epithalamion . . . . .	278
Authorized Version of the Holy Bible: The Book of Ruth. . . . .	284
The Song of Solomon . . . . .	288
FRANCIS BACON
Essays or Counsels, Civil and Moral:
1. Of Truth . . . . .	293
5. Of Adversity . . . . .	294
6. Of Simulation and Dissimulation . . . . .	294
7. Of Parents and Children . . . . .	296
8. Of Marriage and Single Life . . . . .	297
10. Of Love . . . . .	297
11. Of Great Place . . . . .	298
12. Of Boldness . . . . .	300
14. Of Nobility . . . . .	301
16. Of Atheism . . . . .	301
17. Of Superstition . . . . .	303
23. Of Wisdom for a Man's Self . . . . .	303
25. Of Dispatch . . . . .	304
26. Of Seeming Wise. . . . .	305
27. Of Friendship . . . . .	306
28. Of Expense . . . . .	309
32. Of Discourse . . . . .	309
34. Of Riches . . . . .	310
38. Of Nature in Men . . . . .	312
42. Of Youth and Age . . . . .	313
47. Of Negotiating . . . . .	313
50. Of Studies . . . . .	314
53. Of Praise . . . . .	315
56. Of Judicature . . . . .	316
57. Of Anger . . . . .	318
Lyric Poetry of the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries
SIR THOMAS WYATT
The Lover for Shamefastness Hideth his Desire within his Faithful Heart . . . . .	320
The Wavering Lover Willeth, and Dreadeth, to Move his Desire . . . . .	320
The Lover Having Dreamed Enjoying of his Love, Complaineth that the Dream is not either Longer or Truer . . . . .	320
Description of the Contrarious Passions in a Lover . . . . .	320
The Lover Compareth his State to a Ship in Perilous Storm Tossed on the Sea . . . . .	320
A Renouncing of Love . . . . .	321
The Lover Sendeth Sighs to Move his Suit . . . . .	321
The Lover Complaineth the Unkindness of his Love . . . . .	321
An Earnest Suit to his Unkind Mistress not to Forsake Him . . . . .	321
The Lover Beseecheth his Mistress not to Forget his Steadfast Faith and True Intent . . . . .	322
Of the Mean and Sure Estate . . . . .	322
HENRY HOWARD, EARL OF SURREY
Description of Spring, Wherein Each Thing Renews, save only the Lover . . . . .	324
Complaint of a Lover Rebuked . . . . .	324
A Vow to Love Faithfully, Howsoever he be Rewarded . . . . .	324
Complaint of the Absence of her Lover Being upon the Sea . . . . .	324
A Praise of his Love, Wherein he Reproveth them that Compare their Ladies with His . . . . .	325
The Means to Attain Happy Life. . . . .	325
Of the Death of Sir Thomas Wyatt . . . . .	325

Anonymous	PAGE
A Student at his Book . . . . .	326
Back and Side go Bare . . . . .	326
JOHN LYLY
Apelles' Song . . . . .	326
Spring's Welcome . . . . .	327
SIR PHILIP SIDNEY
Astrophel and Stella: 1, 15, 31, 39, 41, 64, 95, Eleventh Song. . . . .	327
My True-Love Hath my Heart . . . . .	329
My Sheep are Thoughts . . . . .	329
SIR EDWARD DYER
My Mind to me a Kingdom Is . . . . .	329
SIR WALTER RALEIGH
His Pilgrimage . . . . .	330
GEORGE PEELE
Cupid's Curse . . . . .	331
Harvestmen A-Singing . . . . .	331
ROBERT GREENE
Sweet are the Thoughts that Savor of Content . . . . .	331
Weep not my Wanton . . . . .	331
MICHAEL DRAYTON
To his Coy Love . . . . .	332
Idea: To the Reader of these Sonnets . . . . .	332
61 . . . . .	332
Ode XI. To the Virginian Voyage . . . . .	332
Ode XII. To the Cambro-Britons and their Harp his Ballad of Agincourt . . . . .	333
WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE
Sonnets: 15, 18, 25, 29, 30, 31, 55, 57, 60, 64, 71, 73, 90, 94, 97, 98, 106, 109, 110, 111, 116, 129, 130, 146 . . . . .	335
Songs from the Plays:
When Daisies Pied. . . . .	340
When Icicles Hang by the Wall . . . . .	340
Who is Sylvia? . . . . .	340
Tell me, Where is Fancy Bred . . . . .	340
Under the Greenwood Tree . . . . .	340
Blow, Blow, thou Winter Wind . . . . .	341
Sigh no More . . . . .	341
O Mistress Mine . . . . .	341
Take, O Take those Lips Away . . . . .	341
Come, thou Monarch of the Vine . . . . .	341
Hark, Hark! the Lark . . . . .	341
Fear no More the Heat o' the Sun . . . . .	341
Full Fathom Five thy Father Lies . . . . .	342
THOMAS CAMPION
Follow thy Fair Sun . . . . .	342
Follow your Saint . . . . .	342
There is a Gården in her Face. . . . .	342
When thou must Home . . . . .	343
Now Winter Nights Enlarge . . . . .	343
Rose-Cheeked Laura . . . . .	343
Never Love . . . . .	343
Beauty is but a Painted Hell . . . . .	343
The Man of Life Upright . . . . .	344
BEN JONSON
Hymn to Diana . . . . .	344
Song: To Celia . . . . .	344
To Celia . . . . .	344
Song: That Women are but Men's Shadows. . . . .	345

	PAGE
Still to be Neat . . . . .	345
Her Triumph . . . . .	345
An Ode . . . . .	345
A Song . . . . .	345
A Nymph's Passion. . . . .	346
To the Memory of my Beloved Master William Shakespeare. . . . .	346
A Pindaric Ode . . . . .	347
Epitaph on Elizabeth, L. H. . . . .	349
Epitaph on Salathiel Pavy . . . . .	349
JOHN DONNE
Song . . . . .	349
The Indifferent . . . . .	350
Lovers' Infiniteness . . . . .	350
The Dream . . . . .	351
The Ecstasy . . . . .	351
The Funeral . . . . .	352
Holy Sonnet . . . . .	352
A Hymn to God the Father . . . . .	352
ROBERT HERRICK
The Argument of his Book . . . . .	353
Upon the Loss of his Mistresses . . . . .	353
Cherry Ripe . . . . .	353
Delight in Disorder . . . . .	353
Corinna's Going A-Maying . . . . .	353
To the Virgins to Make Much of Time . . . . .	354
To Music, to Becalm his Fever . . . . .	354
To Anthea, Who may Command him Anything . . . . .	355
Upon a Child that Died . . . . .	355
To Daffodils . . . . .	355
To Daisies, not to Shut so Soon . . . . .	355
To Enjoy the Time . . . . .	355
His Winding Sheet . . . . .	355
Art above Nature, to Julia . . . . .	356
The Primrose . . . . .	356
The Night Piece, to Julia . . . . .	356
To Electra . . . . .	357
An Ode for Ben Jonson. . . . .	357
Comfort to a Youth that had Lost his Love. . . . .	357
His Litany, to the Holy Spirit. . . . .	357
A Grace for a Child. . . . .	358
GEORGE HERBERT
The Collar . . . . .	358
Discipline . . . . .	358
The Pulley . . . . .	359
Love . . . . .	359
EDMUND WALLER
Go Lovely Rose . . . . .	359
SIR JOHN SUCKLING
A Doubt of Martyrdom . . . . .	360
The Constant Lover . . . . .	360
Why so Pale and Wan? . . . . .	360
RICHARD LOVELACE
To Althea, from Prison. . . . .	360
ANDREW MARVELL
An Horatian Ode upon Cromwell's Return from Ireland . . . . .	361
To his Coy Mistress . . . . .	362
Bermudas . . . . .	363

HENRY VAUGHAN

	PAGE
The World . . . . .	363
The Retreat . . . . .	364
Man . . . . .	364
Ascension Hymn . . . . .	365
The Waterfall . . . . .	365

SIR THOMAS BROWNE

Hydriotaphia, or Urn-Burial . . . . .	367
---------------------------------------	-----

JOHN MILTON

On Time . . . . .	389
At a Solemn Music . . . . .	389
On Shakespeare . . . . .	389
L'Allegro . . . . .	390
Il Penseroso . . . . .	391
Lycidas . . . . .	393

Sonnets:

VII. (How soon hath Time, the subtle thief of youth) . . . . .	396
VIII. (Captain or Colonel, or Knight in Arms) . . . . .	396
IX. (Lady, that in the prime of earliest youth) . . . . .	397
XI. (A Book was writ of late called Tetrachordon ) . . . . .	397
XII. On the Same . . . . .	397
XV. On the Late Massacre in Piedmont . . . . .	397
XVI. (When I consider how my light is spent) . . . . .	398
XVII. (Lawrence, of virtuous father virtuous son) . . . . .	398
XVIII. (Cyriack, whose grandsire on the royal bench) . . . . .	398
XIX. (Methought I saw my late espoused saint) . . . . .	398
To the Lord General Cromwell, May, 1652 . . . . .	399
To Mr. Cyriack Skinner upon his Blindness . . . . .	399

Paradise Lost: Book I. . . . .	399
Book II. . . . .	411
Book IV. . . . .	425
Book IX. . . . .	440

JOHN DRYDEN

All for Love . . . . .	457
Absalom and Achitophel . . . . .	500
MacFlecknoe . . . . .	514
Religio Laici . . . . .	517
Song for St. Cecilia's Day . . . . .	528
Alexander's Feast . . . . .	529

JOSEPH ADDISON AND SIR RICHARD STEELE

The Tatler : No. 1 (Steele) . . . . .	533
No. 25 (Steele) . . . . .	533
No. 85 (Steele) . . . . .	534
No. 132 (Steele) . . . . .	536
No. 158 (Addison) . . . . .	538
The Spectator : No. 1 (Addison) . . . . .	540
No. 2 (Steele) . . . . .	542
No. 10 (Addison) . . . . .	544
No. 81 (Addison) . . . . .	546
No. 112 (Addison) . . . . .	548
No. 122 (Addison) . . . . .	549
No. 159 (Addison) . . . . .	551
No. 323 (Addison) . . . . .	553
No. 377 (Addison) . . . . .	555

JONATHAN SWIFT

Gulliver's Travels: Part I, A Voyage to Lilliput . . . . .	558
--	-----

ALEXANDER POPE	PAGE
Ode on Solitude . . . . .	590
An Essay on Criticism . . . . .	590
The Rape of the Lock . . . . .	600
An Essay on Man, Epistle I . . . . .	612
Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot . . . . .	616
WILLIAM COLLINS
Dirge in Cymbeline . . . . .	623
Ode to Simplicity . . . . .	624
Ode on the Poetical Character . . . . .	624
Ode, Written in the Beginning of the Year 1746 . . . . .	625
Ode to Liberty . . . . .	626
Ode to Evening . . . . .	627
The Passions, an Ode for Music . . . . .	628
THOMAS GRAY
Ode on the Death of a Favorite Cat . . . . .	630
Ode on a Distant Prospect of Eton College . . . . .	631
Hymn to Adversity . . . . .	632
The Progress of Poesy, A Pindaric Ode . . . . .	633
The Bard, A Pindaric Ode . . . . .	634
The Fatal Sisters, An Ode . . . . .	637
Elegy Written in a Country Church-Yard . . . . .	638
Sonnet on the Death of Richard West . . . . .	640
Sketch of his own Character . . . . .	640
SAMUEL JOHNSON
History of Rasselas, Prince of Abyssinia . . . . .	642
Glossary . . . . .	693
Index of Authors, Titles, and First Lines of Poems. . . . .	711

VOLUME ONE

---

FROM BEOWULF TO DOCTOR JOHNSON

BEOWULF

There is only one extant manuscript of Beowulf. It is bound with some other Anglo-Saxon texts in a volume belonging to the collection of Sir Robert Cotton (1571-1631), which is now in the British Museum. This manuscript was written by two scribes about A. D. 1000. The poem was probably composed in the first half of the eighth century. Of its author nothing is directly known, though the internal evidence of the poem enables us to picture him to ourselves "as a man connected in some way with an Anglian court, a royal chaplain or abbot of noble birth or, it may be, a monk friend of his, who possessed an actual knowledge of court life and addressed himself to an aristocratic, in fact a royal audience. A man well versed in Germanic and Scandinavian heroic lore, familiar with secular Anglo-Saxon poems of the type exemplified by Widsith, Finnsburg, Deor, and Waldere, and a student of Biblical poems of the Cædmonian cycle, a man of notable taste and culture and informed with a spirit of broad-minded Christianity" (Fr. Klaeber, Beowulf, p. cxxii). The poem consists of two parts, joined to each other only by the person of the hero. The first part has three divisions, Beowulf's fight with Grendel, his fight with Grendel's mother, and his return to his own land. In the second part is narrated Beowulf's fight, after the passage of many years, with a dragon. The events of the poem take place entirely in Denmark and southern Sweden, and England is nowhere mentioned in it. It is considered practically certain that the stories of the conflict with the Grendel race and of the slaying of the dragon are of direct Scandinavian origin. The Anglian author, however, fuses with these many other elements from other sources—notably the pervasive Christian coloring, which deeply affects the character of the poem. But notwithstanding the latter, Beowulf gives us a faithful picture of many phases of ancient Germanic life, moral as well as material, and particularly of Germanic military ideals. Practically the only direct historical data of the poem are the several allusions to the raid of Hygelac which took place between A. D. 512 and 520. It has been conjectured that a person named Beowulf actually accompanied Hygelac on this raid and so distinguished himself by exceptional bravery that he gradually became a center of heroic legend. Whether this be so or not the Beowulf of the poem is obviously an idealized, heroic figure, not an historical character.

The translation here printed reproduces the meter of the original as far as that is possible in modern English. Each verse contains four accented syllables together with a freely varying number of unaccented ones, and each verse contains a marked pause between the second and third accented syllables. The accented syllables are, with the exceptions presently to be noted, distinguished by alliteration—that is, they begin with the same sound. They occur at the beginning of a word, save that prefixes are disregarded. Like consonant sounds alliterate with each other, whether they are indicated by the same letter or not; thus card and kitchen alliterate with each other, as also noon and knight, and bedeck and indict. Any vowel sound alliterates with any other vowel sound. The fourth accented syllable never alliterates with the third in Anglo-Saxon verse of the best period; but the third always alliterates with the first or second, and in the majority of cases with both. Occasionally the fourth accented syllable alliterates with the second, and more rarely with the first, when either of these is not in alliteration with the third.

The first eleven lines of Beowulf are subjoined in their original form:

Hwæt, we Gar-Dena      in geardagum, þeodcyninga      þrym gefrunon,
 hu þa æþelingas      ellen fremedon!
 Oft Scyld Scefing      sceapena þreatum, monegum mægþum      meodo-setla ofteah,
 egsode eorl[as],      syððan ærest wearð
 feasceaft funden;      he þæs frofre gebad,
 weox under wolcnum,      weorðmyndum þah,
 oðþæt him æghwylc      þara ymbsittendra
 ofer hron-rade      hyran scolde, gomban gyldan;      þæt wæs god cyning!

PRELUDE OF THE FOUNDER OF THE DANISH HOUSE<sup>1</sup>

Lo, PRAISE of the prowess of people-kings of spear-armed Danes, in days long sped,
we have heard, and what honor the athelings won!

Oft Scyld the Scefing from squadroned foes,
from many a tribe, the mead-bench tore, awing the earls. Since erst he lay friendless, a foundling, fate repaid him:
for he waxed under welkin, in wealth he throve,

till before him the folk, both far and near,
who house by the whale-path,<sup>2</sup> heard his mandate,

gave him gifts: a good king he!
To him an heir was afterward born,
a son in his halls, whom heaven sent to favor the folk, feeling their woe that erst they had lacked an earl for leader
so long a while; the Lord endowed him,
the Wielder of Wonder, with world's renown.

Famed was this Beowulf:<sup>3</sup> far flew the boast of him,

son of Scyld, in the Scandian lands.
So becomes it a youth to quit him well
with his father's friends, by fee and gift,
that to aid him, agéd, in after days,
come warriors willing, should war draw nigh,
liegemen loyal: by lauded deeds
shall an earl have honor in every clan.

Forth he fared at the fated moment,
sturdy Scyld to the shelter of God.
Then they bore him over to ocean's billow,
loving clansmen, as late he charged them,
while wielded words the winsome Scyld,
the leader beloved who long had ruled. . . .

In the roadstead rocked a ring-dight vessel,
ice-flecked, outbound, atheling's barge:
there laid they down their darling lord on the breast of the boat, the breaker-of-
rings,

by the mast the mighty one. Many a treasure

fetched from far was freighted with him.
No ship have I known so nobly dight
with weapons of war and weeds of battle,

with breastplate and blade: on his bosom lay a heapéd hoard that hence should go far o'er the flood with him floating away.

No less these loaded the lordly gifts,
thanes' huge treasure, than those had done
who in former time forth had sent him sole on the seas, a suckling child.

High o'er his head they hoist the standard,
a gold-wove banner; let billows take him,
gave him to ocean. Grave were their spirits, mournful their mood. No man is able to say in sooth, no son of the halls, no hero 'neath heaven,—who harbored that freight!

I

Now Beowulf bode in the burg of the Scyld-
ings,

leader beloved, and long he ruled in fame with all folk, since his father had gone away from the world, till awoke an heir,
haughty Healfdene, who held through life,
sage and sturdy, the Scyldings glad.

Then, one after one, there woke to him,
to the chieftain of clansmen, children four:
Heorogar, then Hrothgar, then Halga brave;
and I heard that — was —'s queen,<sup>4</sup>
the Heathoscyfling's helpmate dear.

To Hrothgar was given such glory of war,
such honor of combat, that all his kin obeyed him gladly till great grew his band of youthful comrades. It came in his mind to bid his henchmen a hall uprear,
a master mead-house, mightier far
than ever was seen by the sons of earth, and within it, then, to old and young
he would all allot that the Lord had sent him,
save only the land and the lives of his men.

Wide, I heard, was the work commanded,
for many a tribe this mid-earth round, to fashion the folkstead. It fell, as he ordered,

in rapid achievement that ready it stood
there,

of halls the noblest: Heorot<sup>5</sup> he named it
whose message had might in many a land.
Not reckless of promise, the rings he dealt,
treasure at banquet: there towered the hall,
high, gabled wide, the hot surge waiting

<sup>1</sup>This translation is from The Oldest English Epic, by Francis B. Gummere, copyrighted by the Macmillan Company. Reprinted by permission.

<sup>2</sup>The sea.

<sup>3</sup>Not Beowulf the Geat, hero of the poem.

<sup>4</sup>The first of the missing names is lost and the second imperfect in the original.

<sup>5</sup>The word means stag (hart). The hall was so named because of decorations in the gables resembling the antlers of a deer.

of furious flame.<sup>1</sup> Nor far was that day when father and son-in-law stood in feud for warfare and hatred that woke again.

With envy and anger an evil spirit endured the dole in his dark abode, that he heard each day the din of revel high in the hall: there harps rang out, clear song of the singer. He sang who knew tales of the early time of man, how the Almighty made the earth, fairest fields enfolded by water, set, triumphant, sun and moon for a light to lighten the land-dwellers, and braided bright the breast of earth with limbs and leaves, made life for all of mortal beings that breathe and move.

So lived the clansmen in cheer and revel a winsome life, till one began to fashion evils, that fiend of hell. Grendel this monster grim was called, march-riever<sup>2</sup> mighty, in moorland living, in fen and fastness; fief of the giants the hapless wight a while had kept since the Creator his exile doomed. On kin of Cain was the killing avenged by sovran God for slaughtered Abel. Ill fared his feud, and far was he driven, for the slaughter's sake, from sight of men. Of Cain awoke all that woful breed, Etins<sup>3</sup> and elves and evil-spirits, as well as the giants that warred with God weary while: but their wage was paid them!

II

Went he forth to find at fall of night that haughty house, and heed wherever the Ring-Danes, outreveled, to rest had gone. Found within it the atheling band asleep after feasting and fearless of sorrow, of human hardship. Unhallowed wight, grim and greedy, he grasped betimes, wrathful, reckless, from resting-places, thirty of the thanes, and thence he rushed fain of his fell spoil, faring homeward, laden with slaughter, his lair to seek. Then at the dawning, as day was breaking, the might of Grendel to men was known; then after wassail was wail uplifted, loud moan in the morn. The mighty chief, atheling excellent, unblithe sat, labored in woe for the loss of his thanes, when once had been traced the trail of the fiend, spirit accurst: too cruel that sorrow, too long, too loathsome. Not late the respite;

with night returning, anew began ruthless murder; he recked no whit, firm in his guilt, of the feud and crime.

They were easy to find who elsewhere sought in room remote their rest at night, bed in the bowers,<sup>4</sup> when that bale was shown, was seen in sooth, with surest token,—the hall-thane's<sup>5</sup> hate. Such held themselves far and fast who the fiend outran! Thus ruled unrighteous and raged his fill one against all; until empty stood that lordly building, and long it bode so. Twelve years' tide the trouble he bore, sovran of Scyldings, sorrows in plenty, boundless cares. There came unhidden tidings true to the tribes of men, in sorrowful songs, how ceaselessly Grendel harassed Hrothgar, what hate he bore him, what murder and massacre, many a year, feud unfading,—refused consent to deal with any of Daneland's earls, make pact of peace, or compound for gold: still less did the wise men ween to get great fee for the feud from his fiendish hands. But the evil one ambushed old and young, death-shadow dark, and dogged them still, lured, and lurked in the livelong night of misty moorlands: men may say not where the haunts of these Hell-Runes<sup>6</sup> be. Such heaping of horrors the hater of men, lonely roamer, wrought unceasing, harassings heavy. O'er Heorot he lorded, gold-bright hall, in gloomy nights; and ne'er could the prince approach his throne, —'twas judgment of God,—or have joy in his hall.

Sore was the sorrow to Scyldings'-friend, heart-rending misery. Many nobles sat assembled, and searched out counsel how it were best for bold-hearted men

<sup>1</sup>Sooner or later these halls burned down.

<sup>2</sup>Border-raider.

<sup>3</sup>Giants.

<sup>4</sup>Smaller buildings near the hall.

<sup>5</sup>Grendel's. He is so described because he has made himself master of the hall.

<sup>6</sup>Witches of hell.

against harassing terror to try their hand.
 Whiles they vowed in their heathen fanes altar-offerings, asked with words that the slayer-of-souls would succor give them
 for the pain of their people. Their practice
 this,
 their heathen hope; 'twas Hell they thought of
 in mood of their mind. Almighty they knew not,
 Doomsman of Deeds and dreadful Lord,
 nor Heaven's-Helmet heeded they ever, Wielder-of-Wonder.—Woe for that man who in harm and hatred hales his soul to fiery embraces;—nor favor nor change awaits he ever. But well for him that after death-day may draw to his Lord,
 and friendship find in the Father's arms!

III

Thus seethed unceasing the son of Healfdene with the woe of these days; not wisest men
 assuaged his sorrow; too sore the anguish, loathly and long, that lay on his folk,
 most baneful of burdens and bales of the
 night.

This heard in his home Hygelac's thane,
 great among Geats, of Grendel's doings.
 He was the mightiest man of valor
 in that same day of this our life, stalwart and stately. A stout wave-walker he bade make ready. Yon battle-king, said
 he,
 far o'er the swan-road he fain would seek,
 the noble monarch who needed men!
 The prince's journey by prudent folk was little blamed, though they loved him
 dear;
 they whetted the hero, and hailed good
 omens.

And now the bold one from bands of Geats comrades chose, the keenest of warriors e'er he could find; with fourteen men
 the sea-wood<sup>1</sup> he sought, and, sailor proved, led them on to the land's confines.

Time had now flown; afloat was the ship, boat under bluff. On board they climbed, warriors ready; waves were churning sea with sand; the sailors bore on the breast of the bark their bright array,

<sup>1</sup>A ship.

their mail and weapons: the men pushed off,
 on its willing way, the well-braced craft.
 Then moved o'er the waters by might of the wind

that bark like a bird with breast of foam, till in season due, on the second day,
 the curvèd prow such course had run
 that sailors now could see the land, sea-cliffs shining, steep high hills,
 headlands broad. Their haven was found,
 their journey ended. Up then quickly
 the Weders'<sup>2</sup> clansmen climbed ashore, anchored their sea-wood, with armor clashing and gear of battle: God they thanked for passing in peace o'er the paths of the sea.

Now saw from the cliff a Scylding clans-
 man,
 a warden that watched the water-side,
 how they bore o'er the gangway glittering
 shields,

war-gear in readiness; wonder seized him
 to know what manner of men they were.
 Straight to the strand his steed he rode, Hrothgar's henchman; with hand of might
 he shook his spear, and spake in parley.
 "Who are ye, then, ye armèd men,
 mailèd folk, that yon mighty vessel have urged thus over the ocean ways, here o'er the waters? A warden I,
 sentinel set o'er the sea-march here,
 lest any foe to the folk of Danes with harrying fleet should harm the land.
 No aliens ever at ease thus bore them,
 linden-wielders: yet word-of-leave clearly ye lack from clansmen here, my folk's agreement.—A greater ne'er saw I of warriors in world than is one of you,— yon hero in harness! No henchman he worthied by weapons, if witness his features, his peerless presence! I pray you, though,
 tell

your folk and home, lest hence ye fare suspect to wander your way as spies in Danish land. Now, dwellers afar, ocean-travelers, take from me simple advice: the sooner the better
 I hear of the country whence ye came."

IV

To him the stateliest spake in answer;
 the warriors' leader his word-board unlocked:—

<sup>2</sup>Another name for the Geats.

"We are by kin of the clan of Geats, and Hygelac's own hearth-fellows we.
 To folk afar was my father known,
 noble atheling, Ecgtheow named.
 Full of winters, he fared away aged from earth; he is honored still through width of the world by wise men all.
 To thy lord and liege in loyal mood
 we hasten hither, to Healfdene's son, people-protector: be pleased to advise us!
 To that mighty-one come we on mickle errand,

to the lord of the Danes; nor deem I right that aught be hidden. We hear—thou knowest

if sooth it is—the saying of men,
 that amid the Scyldings a scathing monster,
 dark ill-doer, in dusky nights shows terrific his rage unmatched, hatred and murder. To Hrothgar I in greatness of soul would succor bring,
 so the Wise-and-Brave may worst his foes,—
 if ever the end of ills is fated,
 of cruel contest, if cure shall follow,
 and the boiling care-waves cooler grow;
 else ever afterward anguish-days
 he shall suffer in sorrow while stands in place high on its hill that house unpeered!"
 Astride his steed, the strand-ward answered, clansman unquailing: "The keen-souled
 thane

must be skilled to sever and sunder duly words and works, if he well intends.
 I gather, this band is graciously bent to the Scyldings' master. March, then, bearing

weapons and weeds the way I show you.
 I will bid my men your boat meanwhile to guard for fear lest foemen come,— your new-tarred ship by shore of ocean faithfully watching till once again
 it waft o'er the waters those well-loved thanes,

—winding-necked wood, — to Weders'
 bounds,

heroes such as the hest of fate shall succor and save from the shock of war."
 They bent them to march,—the boat lay still, fettered by cable and fast at anchor, broad-bosomed ship.—Then shone [the boars<sup>1</sup>

over the cheek-guard; chased with gold, )

keen and gleaming, guard it kept o'er the man of war, as marched along heroes in haste, till the hall they saw,
 broad of gable and bright with gold:
 that was the fairest, 'mid folk of earth,
 of houses 'neath heaven, where Hrothgar lived,

and the gleam of it lightened o'er lands afar.
 The sturdy shieldsman showed that bright burg-of-the-boldest; bade them go straightway thither; his steed then turned, hardy hero, and hailed them thus:—

"'Tis time that I fare from you. Father Almighty

in grace and mercy guard you well, safe in your seekings. Seaward I go,
 'gainst hostile warriors hold my watch."

V

Stone-bright the street: it showed the way to the crowd of clansmen. Corselets glis-tened

hand-forged, hard; on their harness bright the steel ring sang, as they strode along in mail of battle, and marched to the hall.
 There, weary of ocean, the wall along they set their bucklers, their broad shields,
 down,

and bowed them to bench: the breastplates
 clanged,

war-gear of men; their weapons stacked,
 spears of the seafarers stood together,
 gray-tipped ash: that iron band was worthily weaponed!—A warrior proud asked of the heroes their home and kin.

"Whence, now, bear ye burnished shields, harness gray and helmets grim,
 spears in multitude? Messenger, I, Hrothgar's herald! Heroes so many ne'er met I as strangers of mood so strong.
 'Tis plain that for prowess, not plunged into exile,

for high-hearted valor, Hrothgar ye seek!"
 Him the sturdy-in-war bespake with words, proud earl of the Weders answer made,
 hardy 'neath helmet:—"Hygelac's, we,
 fellows at board; I am Beowulf named.
 I am seeking to say to the son of Healfdene
 this mission of mine, to thy master-lord, the doughty prince, if he deign at all grace that we greet him, the good one, now."
 Wulfgar spake, the Wendles' chieftain, whose might of mind to many was known,

<sup>1</sup>Images of boars on Beowulf's helmet.

his courage and counsel: "The king of Danes, the Scyldings' friend, I fain will tell, the Breaker-of-Rings, as the boon thou askest, the faméd prince, of thy faring hither, and, swiftly after, such answer bring as the doughty monarch may deign to give." Hied then in haste to where Hrothgar sat white-haired and old, his earls about him, till the stout thane stood at the shoulder there of the Danish king: good courtier he! Wulfgar spake to his winsome lord:—"Hither have fared to thee far-come men o'er the paths of ocean, people of Geatland; and the stateliest there by his sturdy band is Beowulf named. This boon they seek, that they, my master, may with thee have speech at will: nor spurn their prayer to give them hearing, gracious Hrothgar! In weeds of the warrior worthy they, methinks, of our liking; their leader most surely, a hero that hither his henchmen has led."

VI

Hrothgar answered, helmet of Scyldings:—"I knew him of yore in his youthful days; his agéd father was Ecgtheow named, to whom, at home, gave Hrethel the Geat his only daughter. Their offspring bold fares hither to seek the steadfast friend. And seamen, too, have said me this,—who carried my gifts to the Geatish court, thither for thanks,—he has thirty men's heft of grasp in the gripe of his hand, the bold-in-battle. Blesséd God out of his mercy this man hath sent to Danes of the West, as I ween indeed, against horror of Grendel. I hope to give the good youth gold for his gallant thought. Be thou in haste, and bid them hither, clan of kinsmen, to come before me; and add this word,—they are welcome guests to folk of the Danes."

[To the door of the hall Wulfgar went] and the word declared:—"To you this message my master sends, East-Danes' king, that your kin he knows, hardy heroes, and hails you all welcome hither o'er waves of the sea! Ye may wend your way in war-attire, and under helmets Hrothgar greet;

but let here the battle-shields bide your parley, and wooden war-shafts wait its end."

Uprose the mighty one, ringed with his men, brave band of thanes: some bode without, battle-gear guarding, as bade the chief. Then hied that troop where the herald led them, under Heorot's roof: [the hero strode,] hardy 'neath helm, till the hearth he neared. Beowulf spake,—his breastplate gleamed, war-net woven by wit of the smith:—"Thou Hrothgar, hail! Hygelac's I, kinsman and follower. Fame a plenty have I gained in youth! These Grendel-deeds I heard in my home-land heralded clear. Seafarers say how stands this hall, of buildings best, for your band of thanes empty and idle, when evening sun in the harbor of heaven is hidden away. So my vassals advised me well,—brave and wise, the best of men,—O sovran Hrothgar, to seek thee here, for my nerve and my might they knew full well.

Themselves had seen me from slaughter come blood-flecked from foes, where five I bound, and that wild brood worsted. I' the waves I slew nicors<sup>1</sup> by night, in need and peril avenging the Weders, whose woe they sought,—crushing the grim ones. Grendel now, monster cruel, be mine to quell in single battle! So, from thee, thou sovran of the Shining-Danes, Scyldings'-bulwark, a boon I seek,—and, Friend-of-the-folk, refuse it not, O Warriors'-shield, now I've wandered far,—that I alone with my liegemen here, this hardy band, may Heorot purge! More I hear, that the monster dire, in his wanton mood, of weapons recks not; hence shall I scorn—so Hygelac stay, king of my kindred, kind to me!—brand or buckler to bear in the fight, gold-colored targe: but with gripe alone must I front the fiend and fight for life, foe against foe. Then faith be his in the doom of the Lord whom death shall take.

<sup>1</sup>Sea monsters.

Fain, I ween, if the fight he win,
in this hall of gold my Geatish band will he fearless eat,—as oft before,— my noblest thanes. Nor need'st thou then to hide my head;<sup>1</sup> for his shall I be,
dyed in gore, if death must take me;
and my blood-covered body he'll bear as prey,
ruthless devour it, the roamer-lonely,
with my life-blood redden his lair in the fen:
no further for me need'st food prepare!
To Hygelac send, if Hild<sup>2</sup> should take me,
best of war-weeds, warding my breast,
armor excellent, heirloom of Hrethel and work of Wayland.<sup>3</sup> Fares Wyrd<sup>4</sup> as she must."

VII

Hrothgar spake, the Scyldings'-helmet:—
"For fight defensive, Friend my Beowulf, to succor and save, thou hast sought us here.
Thy father's combat a feud enkindled
when Heatholaf with hand he slew among the Wylfings; his Weder kin for horror of fighting feared to hold him.
Fleeing, he sought our South-Dane folk,
over surge of ocean the Honor-Scyldings,
when first I was ruling the folk of Danes,
wielded, youthful, this widespread realm, this hoard-hold of heroes. Heorogar was dead,
my elder brother, had breathed his last,
Healfdene's bairn: he was better than I!
Straightway the feud with fee I settled,
to the Wylfings sent, o'er watery ridges,
treasures olden: oaths he swore me.

Sore is my soul to say to any of the race of man what ruth for me in Heorot Grendel with hate hath wrought, what sudden harrings. Hall-folk fail me, my warriors wane; for Wyrd hath swept
them into Grendel's grasp. But God is able this deadly foe from his deeds to turn!
Boasted full oft, as my beer they drank,
earls o'er the ale-cup, armed men,
that they would bide in the beer-hall here,

<sup>1</sup>The reference is either to interment or to the custom of covering the head of the dead with a cloth.

<sup>2</sup>War. Gummere supposes that war is here personified.

<sup>3</sup>The Germanic Vulcan.

<sup>4</sup>Destiny.

Grendel's attack with terror of blades.
Then was this mead-house at morning tide dyed with gore, when the daylight broke,
all the boards of the benches blood-besprinkled,
gory the hall: I had heroes the less,
doughty dear-ones that death had reft.
—But sit to the banquet, unbind thy words,
hardy hero, as heart shall prompt thee."

Gathered together, the Geatish men in the banquet-hall on bench assigned,
sturdy-spirited, sat them down,
hardy-hearted. A henchman attended,
carried the carven cup in hand,
served the clear mead. Oft minstrels sang blithe in Heorot. Heroes reveled, no dearth of warriors, Weder and Dane.

VIII

Unferth spake, the son of Ecglaf,
who sat at the feet of the Scyldings' lord, unbound the battle-runes.<sup>5</sup>—Beowulf's
quest,
sturdy seafarer's, sorely galled him;
ever he envied that other men should more achieve in middle-earth of fame under heaven than he himself.—
"Art thou that Beowulf, Breca's rival, who emulous swam on the open sea,
when for pride the pair of you proved the floods,
and wantonly dared in waters deep to risk your lives? No living man, or lief or loath, from your labor dire could you dissuade, from swimming the main.
Ocean-tides with your arms ye covered,
with strenuous hands the sea-streets measured,
swam o'er the waters. Winter's storm rolled the rough waves. In realm of sea a sennight strove ye. In swimming he topped thee,
had more of main! Him at morning-tide billows bore to the Battling Reamas, whence he hied to his home so dear,
beloved of his liegemen, to land of Brondings, fastness fair, where his folk he ruled,
town and treasure. In triumph o'er thee
Beanstan's bairn<sup>6</sup> his boast achieved.

<sup>5</sup>Began the battle or word-combat which follows.

<sup>6</sup>Breca.

So ween I for thee a worse adventure,
—though in buffet of battle thou brave hast been,
in struggle grim,—if Grendel's approach thou dar'st await through the watch of
night!"

Beowulf spake, bairn of Ecgtheow:—
"What a deal hast uttered, dear my Unferth, drunken with beer, of Breca now,
told of his triumph! Truth I claim it, that I had more of might in the sea
than any man else, more ocean-endurance.
We twain had talked, in time of youth,
and made our boast,—we were merely boys,
striplings still,—to stake our lives
far at sea: and so we performed it.
Naked swords, as we swam along,
we held in hand, with hope to guard us against the whales. Not a whit from me could he float afar o'er the flood of waves,
haste o'er the billows; nor him I abandoned.
Together we twain on the tides abode
five nights full till the flood divided us,
churning waves and chillest weather,
darkling night, and the northern wind
ruthless rushed on us: rough was the surge.
Now the wrath of the sea-fish rose apace;
yet me 'gainst the monsters my mailed coat,
hard and hand-linked, help afforded,— battle-sark braided my breast to ward, garnished with gold. There grasped me firm
and haled me to bottom the hated foe,
with grimmest gripe. 'Twas granted me,
though,
to pierce the monster with point of sword,
with blade of battle: huge beast of the sea was whelmed by the hurly through hand of mine.

IX

"Me thus often the evil monsters thronging threatened. With thrust of my sword,
the darling, I dealt them due return!
Nowise had they bliss from their booty then to devour their victim, vengeful creatures, seated to banquet at bottom of sea;
but at break of day, by my brand sore hurt,
on the edge of ocean up they lay,
put to sleep by the sword. And since, by
them
on the fathomless sea-ways sailor-folk are never molested.—Light from east, came bright God's beacon; the billows sank,

so that I saw the sea-cliffs high,
windy walls. For Wyrð oft saveth earl undoomed if he doughty be!
And so it came that I killed with my sword nine of the nicors. Of night-fought battles ne'er heard I a harder 'neath heaven's dome,
nor adrift on the deep a more desolate man!
Yet I came unharmed from that hostile clutch,

though spent with swimming. The sea up-bore me,
flood of the tide, on Finnish land,
the welling waters. No wise of thee have I heard men tell such terror of falchions, bitter battle. Breca ne'er yet, not one of you pair, in the play of war
such daring deed has done at all with bloody brand,—I boast not of it!— though thou wast the bane<sup>1</sup> of thy brethren
dear,

thy closest kin, whence curse of hell awaits thee, well as thy wit may serve!
For I say in sooth, thou son of Ecglaf,
never had Grendel these grim deeds wrought,
monster dire, on thy master dear,
in Heorot such havoc, if heart of thine
were as battle-bold as thy boast is loud!
But he has found no feud will happen;
from sword-clash dread of your Danish clan
he vaunts him safe, from the Victor-Scyldings.

He forces pledges, favors none of the land of Danes, but lustily murders, fights and feasts, nor feud he dreads from Spear-Dane men. But speedily now shall I prove him the prowess and pride of the Geats,

shall bid him battle. Blithe to mead go he that listeth, when light of dawn
this morrow morning o'er men of earth,
ether-robed sun from the south shall beam!"

Joyous then was the Jewel-giver, hoar-haired, war-brave; help awaited
the Bright-Danes' prince, from Beowulf hear-
ing,
folk's good shepherd, such firm resolve.
Then was laughter of liegemen loud resound-
ing
with winsome words. Came Wealhtheow forth,

<sup>1</sup>Murderer.

queen of Hrothgar, heedful of courtesy,
gold-decked, greeting the guests in hall;
and the high-born lady handed the cup
first to the East-Danes' heir and warden, bade him be blithe at the beer-carouse, the land's beloved one. Lustily took he banquet and beaker, battle-famed king.
Through the hall then went the Helmings'

Lady,
to younger and older everywhere carried the cup, till came the moment when the ring-graced queen, the royal-hearted,

to Beowulf bore the beaker of mead.
She greeted the Geats' lord, God she thanked in wisdom's words, that her will was granted, that at last on a hero her hope could lean for comfort in terrors. The cup he took, hardy-in-war, from Wealhtheow's hand,
and answer uttered the eager-for-combat.
Beowulf spake, bairn of Ecgtheow:—

"This was my thought, when my thanes and I

bent to the ocean and entered our boat,
that I would work the will of your people
fully, or fighting fall in death, in fiend's gripe fast. I am firm to do an earl's brave deed, or end the days of this life of mine in the mead-hall here."
Well these words to the woman seemed,
Beowulf's battle-boast.—Bright with gold
the stately dame by her spouse sat down.
Again, as erst, began in hall
warriors' wassail and words of power,
the proud-band's revel, till presently the son of Healfdene hastened to seek rest for the night; he knew there waited fight for the fiend in that festal hall,
when the sheen of the sun they saw no more,
and dusk of night sank darkling nigh,
and shadowy shapes came striding on,
wan under welkin. The warriors rose.
Man to man, he made harangue, Hrothgar to Beowulf, bade him hail,
let him wield the wine hall: a word he added:—

"Never to any man erst I trusted,
since I could heave up hand and shield,
this noble Dane-Hall, till now to thee.
Have now and hold this house unpeered;
remember thy glory; thy might declare;
watch for the foe! No wish shall fail thee
if thou bidest the battle with bold-won life."

X

Then Hrothgar went with his hero-train, defence-of-Scyldings, forth from hall;
fain would the war-lord Wealhtheow seek,
couch of his queen. The King-of-Glory against this Grendel a guard had set,
so heroes heard, a hall-defender,
who warded the monarch and watched for the monster.

In truth, the Geats' prince gladly trusted his mettle, his might, the mercy of God!
Cast off then his corselet of iron, helmet from head; to his henchman gave,— choicest of weapons,—the well-chased sword,
bidding him guard the gear of battle.

Spake then his Vaunt the valiant man,
Beowulf Geat, ere the bed he sought:—
"Of force in fight no feebler I count me,
in grim war-deeds, than Grendel deems him.
Not with the sword, then, to sleep of death
his life will I give, though it lie in my power.
No skill is his to strike against me,
my shield to hew though he hardy be,
bold in battle; we both, this night,
shall spurn the sword, if he seek me here,
unweaponed, for war. Let wisest God, sacred Lord, on which side soever doom decree as he deemeth right."

Reclined then the chieftain, and cheek-pillows held

the head of the earl, while all about him seamen hardy on hall-beds sank.

None of them thought that thence their steps to the folk and fastness that fostered them, to the land they loved, would lead them
back!

Full well they wist that on warriors many battle-death seized, in the banquet-hall,
of Danish clan. But comfort and help, war-weal weaving, to Weder folk the Master gave, that, by might of one,
over their enemy all prevailed,
by single strength. In sooth 'tis told that highest God o'er human kind hath wielded ever!—Thro' wan night strid-
ing,

came the walker-in-shadow. Warriors slept whose hest was to guard the gabled hall,— all save one. 'Twas widely known that against God's will the ghostly ravager him could not hurl to haunts of darkness;
wakeful, ready, with warrior's wrath,
bold he bided the battle's issue.

XI

Then from the moorland, by misty crags, with God's wrath laden, Grendel came.
The monster was minded of mankind now sundry to seize in the stately house.
Under welkin he walked, till the wine-palace
there,

gold-hall of men, he gladly discerned,
flashing with fretwork. Not first time, this,
that he the home of Hrothgar sought,— yet ne'er in his life-day, late or early,
such hardy heroes, such hall-thanes, found!
To the house the warrior walked apace,
parted from peace;<sup>1</sup> the portal opened,
though with forged bolts fast, when his fists
had struck it,

and baleful he burst in his blatant rage,
the house's mouth. All hastily, then,
o'er fair-paved floor the fiend trod on,
ireful he strode; there streamed from his eyes fearful flashes, like flame to see.

He spied in hall the hero-band,
kin and clansmen clustered asleep,
hardy liegemen. Then laughed his heart;
for the monster was minded, ere morn should
dawn,

savage, to sever the soul of each,
life from body, since lusty banquet waited his will! But Wyrd forbade him to seize any more of men on earth
after that evening. Eagerly watched Hygelac's kinsman his cursed foe,
how he would fare in fell attack.
Not that the monster was minded to pause!
Straightway he seized a sleeping warrior
for the first, and tore him fiercely asunder,
the bone-frame bit, drank blood in streams, swallowed him piecemeal: swiftly thus
the lifeless corse was clear devoured, e'en feet and hands. Then farther he hied;
for the hardy hero with hand he grasped,
felt for the foe with fiendish claw,
for the hero reclining,—who clutched it boldly,

prompt to answer, propped on his arm.
Soon then saw that shepherd-of-evils that never he met in this middle-world,
in the ways of earth, another wight
with heavier hand-gripe; at heart he feared,
sorrowed in soul,—none the sooner escaped!
Fain would he flee, his fastness seek,
the den of devils: no doings now

<sup>1</sup>I. e., doomed to hell.

such as oft he had done in days of old!
Then bethought him the hardy Hygelac-
thane
of his boast at evening: up he bounded,
grasped firm his foe, whose fingers cracked.
The fiend made off, but the earl close followed.

The monster meant—if he might at all—
to fling himself free, and far away fly to the fens,—knew his fingers' power in the gripe of the grim one. Gruesome march

to Heorot this monster of harm had made!
Din filled the room; the Danes were bereft,
castle-dwellers and clansmen all, earls, of their ale. Angry were both those savage hall-guards: the house resounded.

Wonder it was the wine-hall firm in the strain of their struggle stood, to earth the fair house fell not; too fast it was within and without by its iron bands craftily clamped; though there crashed from sill

many a mead-bench—men have told me—
gay with gold, where the grim foes wrestled.
So well had weened the wisest Scyldings that not ever at all might any man that bone-decked, brave house break asunder, crush by craft,—unless clasp of fire
in smoke engulfed it.—Again uprose din redoubled. Danes of the North with fear and frenzy were filled, each one,
who from the wall that wailing heard,
God's foe sounding his grisly song,
cry of the conquered, clamorous pain from captive of hell. Too closely held him he who of men in might was strongest
in that same day of this our life.

XII

Not in any wise would the earls' defence suffer that slaughterous stranger to live, useless deeming his days and years to men on earth. Now many an earl of Beowulf brandished blade ancestral,
fain the life of their lord to shield,
their praised prince, if power were theirs;
never they knew,—as they neared the foe,
hardy-hearted heroes of war,
aiming their swords on every side
the accursed to kill,—no keenest blade,
no fairest of falchions fashioned on earth,

could harm or hurt that hideous fiend!
 He was safe, by his spells, from sword of battle,
 from edge of iron. Yet his end and parting on that same day of this our life
 woful should be, and his wandering soul far off flit to the fiends' domain.
 Soon he found, who in former days,
 harmful in heart and hated of God,
 on many a man such murder wrought,
 that the frame of his body failed him now.
 For him the keen-souled kinsman of Hygelac held in hand; hateful alive was each to other. The outlaw dire took mortal hurt; a mighty wound showed on his shoulder, and sinews cracked, and the bone-frame burst. To Beowulf now the glory was given, and Grendel thence death-sick his den in the dark moor sought, noisome abode: he knew too well that here was the last of life, an end of his days on earth.—To all the Danes
 by that bloody battle the boon had come.
 From ravage had rescued the roving stranger Hrothgar's hall; the hardy and wise one had purged it anew. His night-work pleased
 him,
 his deed and its honor. To Eastern Danes had the valiant Geat his vaunt made good,
 all their sorrow and ills assuaged,
 their bale of battle borne so long,
 and all the dole they erst endured,
 pain a-plenty.—'Twas proof of this,
 when the hardy-in-fight a hand laid down,
 arm and shoulder,—all, indeed,
 of Grendel's gripe,—'neath the gabled roof.

XIII

Many at morning, as men have told me,
 warriors gathered the gift-hall round,
 folk-leaders faring from far and near,
 o'er wide-stretched ways, the wonder to view, trace of the traitor. Not troublous seemed the enemy's end to any man who saw by the gait of the graceless foe
 how the weary-hearted, away from thence, baffled in battle and banned, his steps
 death-marked dragged to the devils' mere.<sup>1</sup> Bloody the billows were boiling there, turbid the tide of tumbling waves
 horribly seething, with sword-blood hot,

<sup>1</sup>Sea or lake of the water monsters.

by that doomed one dyed, who in den of the moor

laid forlorn his life adown,
 his heathen soul,—and hell received it.

Home then rode the hoary clansmen
 from that merry journey, and many a youth,
 on horses white, the hardy warriors,
 back from the mere. Then Beowulf's glory eager they echoed, and all averred that from sea to sea, or south or north,
 there was no other in earth's domain,
 under vault of heaven, more valiant found,
 of warriors none more worthy to rule!
 (On their lord beloved they laid no slight, gracious Hrothgar: a good king he!)

From time to time, the tried-in-battle their gray steeds set to gallop amain,
 and ran a race when the road seemed fair.
 From time to time, a thane of the king,
 who had made many vaunts, and was mindful of verses,

stored with sagas and songs of old,
 bound word to word in well-knit rhyme,
 welded his lay; this warrior soon
 of Beowulf's quest right cleverly sang,
 and artfully added an excellent tale,
 in well-ranged words, of the warlike deeds
 he had heard in saga of Sigemund.
 Strange the story: he said it all,— the Wælsing's wanderings wide, his struggles, which never were told to tribes of men,
 the feuds and the frauds, save to Fitela only,
 when of these doings he deigned to speak,
 uncle to nephew; as ever the twain stood side by side in stress of war,
 and multitude of the monster kind they had felled with their swords. Of Sigemund grew,

when he passed from life, no little praise;
 for the doughty-in-combat a dragon killed that herded the hoard: under hoary rock
 the atheling dared the deed alone,
 fearful quest, nor was Fitela there.
 Yet so it befell, his falchion pierced that wondrous worm;<sup>2</sup>—on the wall it struck,

best blade; the dragon died in its blood.
 Thus had the dread-one by daring achieved over the ring-hoard to rule at will,
 himself to pleasure; a sea-boat he loaded,
 and bore on its bosom the beaming gold,
 son of Wæls; the worm was consumed.

<sup>2</sup>Dragon.

He had of all heroes the highest renown
among races of men, this refuge-of-warriors, for deeds of daring that decked his name
since the hand and heart of Heremod grew slack in battle. He, swiftly banished to mingle with monsters at mercy of foes, to death was betrayed; for torrents of sorrow had lamed him too long; a load of care to earls and athelings all he proved.
Oft indeed, in earlier days,
for the warrior's wayfaring wise men
mourned,
who had hoped of him help from harm and bale,
and had thought their sovran's son would thrive,
follow his father, his folk protect,
the hoard and the stronghold, heroes' land,
home of Scyldings.—But here, thanes said,
the kinsman of Hygelac kinder seemed to all: the other was urged to crime!

And afresh to the race, the fallow roads
by swift steeds measured! The morning sun was climbing higher. Clansmen hastened to the high-built hall, those hardy-minded,
the wonder to witness. Warden of treasure, crowned with glory, the king himself,
with stately band from the bride-bower
strode;
and with him the queen and her crowd of maidens
measured the path to the mead-house fair.

XIV

Hrothgar spake,—to the hall he went,
stood by the steps, the steep roof saw,
garnished with gold, and Grendel's hand:—
“For the sight I see to the Sovran Ruler be speedy thanks! A throng of sorrows
I have borne from Grendel; but God still works

wonder on wonder, the Warden-of-Glory.
It was but now that I never more for woes that weighed on me waited help
long as I lived, when, laved in blood, stood sword-gore-stained this stateliest
house,—

widespread woe for wise men all,
who had no hope to hinder ever foes infernal and fiendish sprites from havoc in hall. This hero now, by the Wielder's might, a work has done
that not all of us erst could ever do by wile and wisdom. Lo, well can she say whoso of women this warrior bore

among sons of men, if still she liveth, that the God of the ages was good to her in the birth of her bairn. Now, Beowulf,
thee,

of heroes best, I shall heartily love
as mine own, my son; preserve thou ever this kinship new: thou shalt never lack wealth of the world that I wield as mine!
Full oft for less have I largess showered,
my precious hoard, on a punier man,
less stout in struggle. Thyself hast now fulfilled such deeds, that thy fame shall endure

through all the ages. As ever he did, well may the Wielder reward thee still!”
Beowulf spake, bairn of Ecgtheow:—
“This work of war most willingly we have fought, this fight, and fearlessly dared

force of the foe. Fain, too, were I hadst thou but seen himself, what time
the fiend in his trappings tottered to fall!
Swiftly, I thought, in strongest gripe
on his bed of death to bind him down, that he in the hent of this hand of mine
should breathe his last: but he broke away.
Him I might not—the Maker willed not—hinder from flight, and firm enough hold the life-destroyer: too sturdy was he,
the ruthless, in running! For rescue, however,

he left behind him his hand in pledge,
arm and shoulder; nor aught of help
could the curséd one thus procure at all.
None the longer liveth he, loathsome fiend, sunk in his sins, but sorrow holds him
tightly grasped in gripe of anguish, in baleful bonds, where bide he must,
evil outlaw, such awful doom
as the Mighty Maker shall mete him out.”

More silent seemed the son of Ecglaf<sup>1</sup>
in boastful speech of his battle-deeds, since athelings all, through the earl's great prowess,
beheld that hand, on the high roof gazing,<sup>2</sup> foeman's fingers,—the forepart of each of the sturdy nails to steel was likest,— heathen's “hand-spear,” hostile warrior's

<sup>1</sup>Unferth, Beowulf's opponent in the word-combat.

<sup>2</sup>I. e., Beowulf had placed Grendel's arm as high as he could reach over the door on the outside of the hall.

claw uncanny. 'Twas clear, they said,
that him no blade of the brave could touch,
how keen soever, or cut away
that battle-hand bloody from baneful foe.

XV

There was hurry and hest in Heorot now for hands to bedeck it, and dense was the throng
of men and women the wine-hall to cleanse, the guest-room to garnish. Gold-gay shone
the hangings
that were wove on the wall, and wonders many
to delight each mortal that looks upon them.
Though braced within by iron bands,
that building bright was broken sorely;
rent were its hinges; the roof alone held safe and sound, when, seared with crime,
the fiendish foe his flight essayed,
of life despairing.—No light thing that,
the flight for safety,—essay it who will!
Forced of fate, he shall find his way to the refuge ready for race of man,
for soul-possessors, and sons of earth;
and there his body on bed of death
shall rest after revel.

Arrived was the hour
when to hall proceeded Healfdene's son:
the king himself would sit to banquet.
Ne'er heard I of host in haughtier throng more graciously gathered round giver-of-
rings!
Bowed then to bench those bearers-of-glory,
fain of the feasting. Featly received many a mead-cup the mighty-in-spirit,
kinsmen who sat in the sumptuous hall,
Hrothgar and Hrothulf.<sup>1</sup> Heorot now was filled with friends; the folk of Scyld-
ings
ne'er yet had tried the traitor's deed.

To Beowulf gave the bairn of Healfdene
a gold-wove banner, guerdon of triumph, broiordered battle-flag, breastplate and helmet;
and a splendid sword was seen of many borne to the brave one. Beowulf took cup in hall: for such costly gifts
he suffered no shame in that soldier throng.
For I heard of few heroes, in heartier
mood,

<sup>1</sup>Hrothgar's nephew.

with four such gifts, so fashioned with
gold,
on the ale-bench honoring others thus!
O'er the roof of the helmet high, a ridge,
wound with wires, kept ward o'er the head,
lest the relict-of-files<sup>2</sup> should fierce invade,
sharp in the strife, when that shielded hero
should go to grapple against his foes.
Then the earls'-defence<sup>3</sup> on the floor bade lead
coursers eight, with carven head-gear, adown the hall: one horse was decked with a saddle all shining and set in jewels;
'twas the battle-seat of the best of kings,
when to play of swords the son of Healfdene was fain to fare. Ne'er failed his valor in the crush of combat when corpses fell.
To Beowulf over them both then gave the refuge-of-Ingwines right and power, o'er war-steeds and weapons: wished him joy
of them.

Manfully thus the mighty prince,
hoard-guard for heroes, that hard fight repaid
with steeds and treasures contemned by none who is willing to say the sooth aright.

XVI

And the lord of earls, to each that came with Beowulf over the briny ways, an heirloom there at the ale-bench gave,
precious gift; and the price bade pay in gold for him whom Grendel erst murdered,—and fain of them more had killed,
had not wisest God their Wyrd averted, and the man's brave mood. The Maker
then
ruled human kind, as here and now.
Therefore is insight always best,
and forethought of mind. How much awaits
him
of lief and of loath, who long time here,
through days of warfare this world endures!

Then song and music mingled sounds
in the presence of Healfdene's head-of-armies and harping was heard with the hero-lay as Hrothgar's singer the hall-joy woke along the mead-seats, making his song

<sup>2</sup>Sword.

<sup>3</sup>Hrothgar.

of that sudden raid on the sons of Finn.<sup>1</sup>

Healfdene's hero, Hnæf the Scylding, was fated to fall in the Frisian slaughter. Hildeburh needed not hold in value her enemies' honor! Innocent both were the loved ones she lost at the linden-play, bairn and brother; they bowed to fate, stricken by spears; 'twas a sorrowful woman! None doubted why the daughter of Hoc bewailed her doom when dawning came, and under the sky she saw them lying, kinsmen murdered, where most she had kenned of the sweets of the world! By war were swept, too,

Finn's own liegemen, and few were left; in the parleying-place he could ply no longer weapon, nor war could he wage on Hengest, and rescue his remnant by right of arms from the prince's thane. A pact he offered: another dwelling the Danes should have, hall and high-seat, and half the power should fall to them in Frisian land; and at the fee-gifts, Folcwald's son day by day the Danes should honor, the folk of Hengest favor with rings, even as truly, with treasure and jewels, with fretted gold, as his Frisian kin he meant to honor in ale-hall there.

Pact of peace they plighted further on both sides firmly. Finn to Hengest with oath, upon honor, openly promised that woful remnant, with wise-men's aid, nobly to govern, so none of the guests by word or work should warp the treaty, <sup>1</sup>As with the story of Sigemund and Heremod above, the poet assumes that his readers know the tale of Finn and his feud, and so merely gives a summary. Gummere gives the following explanation: Finn, a Frisian chieftain, who nevertheless has a "castle" outside the Frisian border, marries Hildeburh, a Danish princess; and her brother, Hnæf, with many other Danes, pays Finn a visit. Relations between the two peoples have been strained before. Something starts the old feud anew; and the visitors are attacked in their quarters. Hnæf is killed; so is a son of Hildeburh. Many fall on both sides. Peace is patched up; a stately funeral is held; and the surviving visitors become in a way vassals or liegemen of Finn, going back with him to Frisia. So matters rest a while. Hengest is now leader of the Danes; but he is set upon revenge for his former lord, Hnæf. Probably he is killed in feud; but his clansmen, Guthlaf and Oslaf, gather at their home a force of sturdy Danes, come back to Frisia, storm Finn's stronghold, kill him, and carry back their kinswoman Hildeburh.

or with malice of mind bemoan themselves as forced to follow their fee-giver's slayer, lordless men, as their lot ordained. Should Frisian, moreover, with foeman's taunt, that murderous hatred to mind recall, then edge of the sword must seal his doom. Oaths were given, and ancient gold heaped from hoard.—The hardy Scylding, battle-thane best,<sup>2</sup> on his balefire lay.

All on the pyre were plain to see the gory sark, the gilded swine-crest, boar of hard iron, and athelings many slain by the sword: at the slaughter they fell. It was Hildeburh's hest, at Hnæf's own pyre the bairn of her body on brands to lay, his bones to burn, on the balefire placed, at his uncle's side. In sorrowful dirges bewept them the woman: great wailing ascended.

Then wound up to welkin the wildest of death-fires, roared o'er the hillock: heads all were melted, gashes burst, and blood gushed out from bites<sup>3</sup> of the body. Balefire devoured, greediest spirit, those spared not by war out of either folk: their flower was gone.

XVII

Then hastened those heroes their home to see, friendless, to find the Frisian land, houses and high burg. Hengest still through the death-dyed winter dwelt with Finn, holding pact, yet of home he minded, though powerless his ring-decked prow to drive over the waters, now waves rolled fierce lashed by the winds, or winter locked them in icy fetters. Then fared another year to men's dwellings, as yet they do, the sunbright skies, that their season ever duly await. Far off winter was driven; fair lay earth's breast; and fain was the rover, the guest, to depart, though more gladly he pondered on wreaking his vengeance than roaming the deep, and how to hasten the hot encounter where sons of the Frisians were sure to be.

<sup>2</sup>Hnæf.

<sup>3</sup>From wounds.

So he escaped not the common doom, when Hun with "Lafing," the light-of-
 battle,
 best of blades, his bosom pierced:
 its edge was famed with the Frisian earls.
 On fierce-heart Finn there fell likewise,
 on himself at home, the horrid sword-death;
 for Guthlaf and Oslaf of grim attack had sorrowing told, from sea-ways landed, mourning their woes. Finn's wavering spirit

bode not in breast. The burg was reddened with blood of foemen, and Finn was slain,
 king amid clansmen; the queen was taken.
 To their ship the Scylding warriors bore
 all the chattels the chieftain owned, whatever they found in Finn's domain of gems and jewels. The gentle wife o'er paths of the deep to the Danes they bore, led to her land.

The lay was finished,
 the gleeman's song. Then glad rose the revel;

bench-joy brightened. Bearers draw from their "wonder-vats" wine. Comes Wealhtheow forth,

under gold-crown goes where the good pair
 sit,

uncle and nephew, true each to the other one,
 kindred in amity. Unferth the spokesman at the Scylding lord's feet sat: men had faith
 in his spirit,

his keenness of courage, though kinsmen had found him

unsure at the sword-play. The Scylding queen spoke:

"Quaff of this cup, my king and lord,
 breaker of rings, and blithe be thou,
 gold-friend of men; to the Geats here speak
 such words of mildness as man should use.
 Be glad with thy Geats; of those gifts be mindful,

or near or far, which now thou hast.
 Men say to me, as son thou wishest yon hero to hold. Thy Heorot purged, jewel-hall brightest, enjoy while thou canst,
 with many a largess; and leave to thy kin folk and realm when forth thou goest to greet thy doom. For gracious I deem my Hrothulf, willing to hold and rule nobly our youths, if thou yield up first,
 prince of Scyldings, thy part in the world.
 I ween with good he will well requite offspring of ours, when all he minds that for him we did in his helpless days of gift and grace to gain him honor!"

 Then she turned to the seat where her sons
 were placed,
 Hrethric and Hrothmund, with heroes'
 bairns,
 young men together: the Geat, too, sat there,
 Beowulf brave, the brothers between.

XVIII

A cup she gave him, with kindly greeting and winsome words. Of wunden gold,
 she offered, to honor him, arm-jewels twain, corselet and rings, and of collars the noblest that ever I knew the earth around.
 Ne'er heard I so mighty, 'neath heaven's dome,

a hoard-gem of heroes, since Hama bore to his bright-built burg the Brisings' necklace,

jewel and gem casket.—Jealousy fled he,
 Eormenric's hate: chose help eternal.
 Hygelac Geat, grandson of Swerting, on the last of his raids this ring bore with
 him,

under his banner the booty defending,
 the war-spoil warding; but Wyrd o'erwhelmed him

what time, in his daring, dangers he sought, feud with Frisians. Fairest of gems
 he bore with him over the beaker-of-waves,
 sovran strong: under shield he died.
 Fell the corpse of the king into keeping of Franks,

gear of the breast, and that gorgeous ring;
 weaker warriors won the spoil,
 after gripe of battle, from Geatland's lord,
 and held the death-field.

Din rose in hall.

Wealhtheow spake amid warriors, and
 said:—

"This jewel enjoy in thy jocund youth, Beowulf loved, these battle-weeds wear,
 a royal treasure, and richly thrive!
 Preserve thy strength, and these striplings
 here

counsel in kindness: requital be mine.
 Hast done such deeds, that for days to come thou art famed among folk both far and near,
 so wide as washeth the wave of Ocean his windy walls. Through the ways of life prosper, O prince! I pray for thee rich possessions. To son of mine be helpful in deed and uphold his joys!

Here every earl to the other is true,
mild of mood, to the master loyal!
Thanes are friendly, the throng obedient,
liegemen are reveling: list and obey!"

Went then to her place.—That was proud-est of feasts;

flowed wine for the warriors. Wyrd they knew not,

destiny dire, and the doom to be seen by many an earl when eve should come,
and Hrothgar homeward hasten away,
royal, to rest. The room was guarded by an army of earls, as erst was done.
They bared the bench-boards; abroad they spread

beds and bolsters.—One beer-carouser
in danger of doom lay down in the hall.—
At their heads they set their shields of war, bucklers bright; on the bench were there over each atheling, easy to see,
the high battle-helmet, the haughty spear,
the corselet of rings. 'Twas their custom so ever to be for battle prepared,
at home, or harrying, which it were,
even as oft as evil threatened their sovran king.—They were clansmen good.

XIX

Then sank they to sleep. With sorrow one bought

his rest of the evening,—as ofttime had happened

when Grendel guarded that golden hall,
evil wrought, till his end drew nigh, slaughter for sins. 'Twas seen and told how an avenger survived the fiend, as was learned afar. The livelong time after that grim fight, Grendel's mother, monster of women, mourned her woe.

She was doomed to dwell in the dreary waters,
cold sea-courses, since Cain cut down
with edge of the sword his only brother,
his father's offspring: outlawed he fled,
marked with murder, from men's delights,
warded the wilds.—There woke from him such fate-sent ghosts as Grendel, who,
war-wolf horrid, at Heorot found a warrior watching and waiting the fray,
with whom the grisly one grappled amain.
But the man remembered his mighty power,
the glorious gift that God had sent him,
in his Maker's mercy put his trust

for comfort and help: so he conquered the foe,
felled the fiend, who fled abject,
reft of joy, to the realms of death,
mankind's foe. And his mother now, gloomy and grim, would go that quest
of sorrow, the death of her son to avenge.

To Heorot came she, where helmeted Danes slept in the hall. Too soon came back old ills of the earls, when in she burst,
the mother of Grendel. Less grim, though,
that terror,

e'en as terror of woman in war is less,
might of maid, than of men in arms
when, hammer-forgéd, the falchion hard, sword gore-stained, through swine of the helm,

crested, with keen blade carves amain.
Then was in hall the hard-edge drawn,
the swords on the settles, and shields a-many firm held in hand: nor helmet minded
nor harness of mail, whom that horror seized.

Haste was hers; she would hie afar
and save her life when the liegemen saw her.
Yet a single atheling up she seized fast and firm, as she fled to the moor.

He was for Hrothgar of heroes the dearest,
of trusty vassals betwixt the seas,
whom she killed on his couch, a clansman famous,

in battle brave.—Nor was Beowulf there;
another house had been held apart,
after giving of gold, for the Geat renowned.— Uproar filled Heorot; the hand all had viewed blood-flecked, she bore with her; bale was returned,

dole in the dwellings: 'twas dire exchange where Dane and Geat were doomed to give the lives of loved ones. Long-tried king, the hoary hero, at heart was sad
when he knew his noble no more lived,
and dead indeed was his dearest thane.

To his bower was Beowulf brought in haste, dauntless victor. As daylight broke,
along with his earls the atheling lord,
with his clansmen, came, where the king abode

waiting to see if the Wielder-of-All would turn this tale of trouble and woe.
Strode o'er floor the famed-in-strife,
with his hand-companions,—the hall re-
sounded,—

wishing to greet the wise old king, Ingwines' lord; he asked if the night
had passed in peace to the prince's mind.

XX

Hrothgar spake, helmet-of-Scyldings:—
 "Ask not of pleasure! Pain is renewed to Danish folk. Dead is Æschere, of Yrmenlaf the elder brother,
 my sage adviser and stay in council,
 shoulder-comrade in stress of fight when warriors clashed and we warded our heads,
 heved the helm-boars: hero famed should be every earl as Æschere was!
 But here in Heorot a hand hath slain him of wandering death-sprite. I wot not whither,
 proud of the prey, her path she took,
 fain of her fill. The feud she avenged that yesternight, unyieldingly, Grendel in grimpest grasp thou killedst,— seeing how long these liegemen mine
 he ruined and ravaged. Reft of life, in arms he fell. Now another comes,
 keen and cruel, her kin to avenge,
 faring far in feud of blood:
 so that many a thane shall think, who e'er sorrows in soul for that sharer of rings, this is hardest of heart-bales. The hand lies
 low
 that once was willing each wish to please Land-dwellers here and liegemen mine, who house by those parts, I have heard relate
 that such a pair they have sometimes seen,
 march-stalkers mighty the moorland haunt-
 ing,
 wandering spirits: one of them seemed,
 so far as my folk could fairly judge
 of womankind; and one, accursed,
 in man's guise trod the misery-track of exile, though huger than human bulk.
 Grendel in days long gone they named him,
 folk of the land; his father they knew not,
 nor any brood that was born to him of treacherous spirits. Untrod is their home;
 by wolf-cliffs haunt they and windy headlands,
 fenways fearful, where flows the stream
 from mountains gliding to gloom of the rocks, underground flood. Not far is it hence in measure of miles that the mere expands,
 and o'er it the frost-bound forest hanging,
 sturdily rooted, shadows the wave.
 By night is a wonder weird to see,

fire on the waters. So wise lived none of the sons of men, to search those depths!
 Nay, though the heath-rover, harried by dogs,
 the horn-proud hart, this holt should seek,
 long distance driven, his dear life first on the brink he yields ere he brave the plunge
 to hide his head: 'tis no happy place!
 Thence the welter of waters washes up wan to welkin when winds bestir evil storms, and air grows dusk, and the heavens weep. Now is help once
 more with thee alone! The land thou knowst not, place of fear, where thou findest out that sin-flecked being. Seek if thou dare!
 I will reward thee, for waging this fight,
 with ancient treasure, as erst I did,
 with winding gold, if thou winnest back."

XXI

Beowulf spake, bairn of Ecgtheow:
 "Sorrow not, sage! It beseems us better friends to endure than fruitlessly mourn
 them.
 Each of us all must his end abide in the ways of the world; so win who may glory ere death! When his days are told, that is the warrior's worthiest doom.
 Rise, O realm-warrior! Ride we anon,
 and mark the trail of the mother of Grendel.
 No harbor shall hide her—heed my promise!—
 enfolding of field or forested mountain or floor of the flood, let her flee where she will!
 But thou this day endure in patience,
 as I ween thou wilt, thy woes each one."
 Leaped up the graybeard: God he thanked,
 mighty Lord, for the man's brave words.
 For Hrothgar soon a horse was saddled wave-maned steed. The sovran wise stately rode on; his shield-armed men followed in force. The footprints led along the woodland, widely seen, a path o'er the plain, where she passed, and trod
 the murky moor; of men-at-arms
 she bore the bravest and best one, dead,
 him who with Hrothgar the homestead ruled.
 On then went the atheling-born o'er stone-cliffs steep and strait defiles,

narrow passes and unknown ways, headlands sheer, and the haunts of the nicors.

Foremost he<sup>1</sup> fared, a few at his side of the wiser men, the ways to scan,
till he found in a flash the forested hill hanging over the hoary rock,
a woful wood: the waves below were dyed in blood. The Danish men had sorrow of soul, and for Scyldings all,
for many a hero, 'twas hard to bear,
ill for earls, when Æschere's head
they found by the flood on the foreland there.
Waves were welling, the warriors saw,
hot with blood; but the horn sang oft battle-song bold. The band sat down, and watched on the water worm-like things,
sea-dragons strange that sounded the deep,
and nicors that lay on the ledge of the ness<sup>2</sup>
—such as oft essay at hour of morn on the road-of-sails their ruthless quest—and sea-snakes and monsters. These started
away,

swollen and savage that song to hear,
that war-horn's blast. The warden of Geats, with bolt from bow, then balked of life,
of wave-work, one monster; amid its heart went the keen war-shaft; in water it seemed less doughty in swimming whom death had seized.

Swift on the billows, with boar-spears well hooked and barbed, it was hard beset,
done to death and dragged on the headland, wave-roamer wondrous. Warriors viewed the grisly guest.

Then girt him Beowulf
in martial mail, nor mourned for his life.
His breastplate broad and bright of hues,
woven by hand, should the waters try;
well could it ward the warrior's body that battle should break on his breast in vain
nor harm his heart by the hand of a foe.
And the helmet white that his head protected was destined to dare the deeps of the flood, through wave-whirl win: 'twas wound with chains,

decked with gold, as in days of yore
the weapon-smith worked it wondrously,
with swine-forms set it, that swords nowise,
brandished in battle, could bite that helm.
Nor was that the meanest of mighty helps which Hrothgar's orator<sup>3</sup> offered at need:

"Hrunting" they named the hilted sword,
of old-time heirlooms easily first;
iron was its edge, all etched with poison,
with battle-blood hardened, nor blenched it at fight

in hero's hand who held it ever,
on paths of peril prepared to go to folkstead<sup>4</sup> of foes. Not first time this it was destined to do a daring task.
For he bore not in mind, the bairn of Ecglaf sturdy and strong, that speech he had made,
drunk with wine, now this weapon he lent
to a stouter swordsman. Himself, though, durst not under welter of waters wager his life
as loyal liegeman. So lost he his glory, honor of earls. With the other not so,
who girded him now for the grim encounter.

XXII

Beowulf spake, bairn of Ecgtheow:—

"Have mind, thou honored offspring of Healfdene,

gold-friend of men, now I go on this quest,
sovrän wise, what once was said:

if in thy cause it came that I should lose my life, thou wouldst loyal bide
to me, though fallen, in father's place!

Be guardian, thou, to this group of my
thanes,

my warrior-friends, if War should seize me;
and the goodly gifts thou gavest me,
Hrothgar beloved, to Hygelac send!
Geatland's king may ken by the gold, Hrethel's son see, when he stares at the
treasure,

that I got me a friend for goodness famed,
and joyed while I could in my jewel-bestower.
And let Unferth wield this wondrous sword, earl far-honored, this heirloom precious, hard of edge: with Hrunting I seek doom of glory, or Death shall take me."

After these words the Weder-Geat lord boldly hastened, biding never answer at all: and ocean floods closed o'er the hero. Long while of the day fled ere he felt the floor of the sea.
Soon found the fiend who the flood-domain

<sup>1</sup>Probably Hrothgar.

<sup>2</sup>Cliff.

<sup>3</sup>Unferth.

<sup>4</sup>Battle-place.

sword-hungry held these hundred winters, greedy and grim, that some guest from
above,

some man, was raiding her monster-realm.
She grasped out for him with grisly claws,
and the warrior seized; yet scathed she not his body hale; the breastplate hindered,
as she strove to shatter the sark of war,
the linkéd harness, with loathsome hand.
Then bore this brine-wolf, when bottom she touched,

the lord of rings to the lair she haunted,
whiles vainly he strove, though his valor held,

weapon to wield against wondrous monsters that sore beset him; sea-beasts many tried with fierce tusks to tear his mail, and swarmed on the stranger. But soon he marked

he was now in some hall, he knew not which,
where water never could work him harm,
nor through the roof could reach him ever fangs of the flood. Firelight he saw, beams of a blaze that brightly shone.

Then the warrior was ware of that wolf-of-the deep,

mere-wife monstrous. For mighty stroke
he swung his blade, and the blow withheld not.
Then sang on her head that seemly blade its war-song wild. But the warrior found the light-of-battle<sup>1</sup> was loath to bite,
to harm the heart: its hard edge failed
the noble at need, yet had known of old strife hand to hand, and had helmets cloven, doomed men's fighting-gear. First time,
this,

for the gleaming blade that its glory fell.

Firm still stood, nor failed in valor,
heedful of high deeds, Hygelac's kinsman;
flung away fretted sword, featly jeweled,
the angry earl; on earth it lay steel-edged and stiff. His strength he trusted,

hand-gripe of might. So man shall do whenever in war he weens to earn him lasting fame, nor fears for his life!

Seized then by shoulder, shrank not from combat,

the Geatish war-prince Grendel's mother.
Flung then the fierce one, filled with wrath,
his deadly foe, that she fell to ground.
Swift on her part she paid him back with grisly grasp, and grappled with him.

Spent with struggle, stumbled the warrior,
fiercest of fighting-men, fell adown.
On the hall-guest she hurled herself, hent
her short sword,

broad and brown-edged, the bairn to avenge,
The sole-born son.—On his shoulder lay braided breast-mail, barring death, withstanding entrance of edge or blade.

Life would have ended for Ecgtheow's son,
under wide earth for that earl of Geats,
had his armor of war not aided him,
battle-net hard, and holy God
wielded the victory, wisest Maker.
The Lord of Heaven allowed his cause;
and easily rose the earl erect.

XXIII

'Mid the battle-gear saw he a blade triumphant,

old-sword of Eotens,<sup>2</sup> with edge of proof,
warriors' heirloom, weapon unmatched,
—save only 'twas more than other men to bandy-of-battle could bear at all—as the giants had wrought it, ready and keen.
Seized then its chain-hilt the Scyldings'
chieftain,

bold and battle-grim, brandished the sword,
reckless of life, and so wrathfully smote that it gripped her neck and grasped her hard,

her bone-rings breaking: the blade pierced through

that fated-one's flesh: to floor she sank.
Bloody the blade: he was blithe of his deed.

Then blazed forth light. 'Twas bright within

as when from the sky there shines unclouded heaven's candle. The hall he scanned.
By the wall then went he; his weapon raised high by its hilts the Hygelac-thane, angry and eager: That edge was not useless to the warrior now. He wished with speed Grendel to guerdon for grim raids many,
for the war he waged on Western-Danes oftener far than an only time,
when of Hrothgar's hearth-companions
he slew in slumber, in sleep devoured, fifteen men of the folk of Danes,
and as many others outward bore,
his horrible prey. Well paid for that the wrathful prince! For now prone he saw Grendel stretched there, spent with war, spoiled of life, so scathed had left him Heorot's battle. The body sprang far when after death it endured the blow, sword-stroke savage, that severed its head.

<sup>1</sup>The sword, Hrunting.

<sup>2</sup>Giants.

Soon, then, saw the sage companions who waited with Hrothgar, watching the flood, that the tossing waters turbid grew, blood-stained the mere. Old men together, hoary-haired, of the hero spake; the warrior would not, they weened, again, proud of conquest, come to seek their mighty master. To many it seemed the wolf-of-the-waves had won his life. The ninth hour came. The noble Scyldings left the headland; homeward went the gold-friend of men.<sup>1</sup> But the guests sat on, stared at the surges, sick in heart, and wished, yet weened not, their winsome lord again to see.

Now that sword began, from blood of the fight, in battle-droppings, war-blade, to wane: 'twas a wondrous thing that all of it melted as ice is wont when frosty fetters the Father loosens, unwinds the wave-bonds, wielding all seasons and times: the true God he!

Nor took from that dwelling the duke of the Geats precious things, though a plenty he saw, save only the head and that hilt withal blazoned with jewels: the blade had melted, burned was the bright sword, her blood was so hot,

so poisoned the hell-sprite who perished within there.

Soon he was swimming who safe saw in combat downfall of demons; up-dove through the flood.

The clashing waters were cleanséd now, waste of waves, where the wandering fiend her life-days left and this lapsing world.

Swam then to strand the sailors'-refuge, sturdy-in-spirit, of sea-booty glad, of burden brave he bore with him.

Went then to greet him, and God they thanked,

the thane-band choice of their chieftain blithe, that safe and sound they could see him again. Soon from the hardy one helmet and armor deftly they doffed: now drowsed the mere, water 'neath welkin, with war-blood stained.

Forth they fared by the footpaths thence, merry at heart the highways measured, well-known roads. Courageous men carried the head from the cliff by the sea, an arduous task for all the band, the firm in fight, since four were needed on the shaft-of-slaughter<sup>2</sup> strenuously to bear to the gold-hall Grendel's head. So presently to the palace there foemen fearless, fourteen Geats, marching came. Their master-of-clan mighty amid them the meadow-ways trod. Strode then within the sovran thane fearless in fight, of fame renowned, hardy hero, Hrothgar to greet. And next by the hair into hall was borne Grendel's head, where the henchmen were drinking, an awe to clan and queen alike, a monster of marvel: the men looked on.

XXIV

Beowulf spake, bairn of Ecgtheow:—

"Lo, now, this sea-booty, son of Healfdene, Lord of Scyldings, we've lustily brought thee, sign of glory; thou seest it here.

Not lightly did I with my life escape!

In war under water this work I essayed with endless effort; and even so my strength had been lost had the Lord not shielded me.

Not a whit could I with Hrunting do in work of war, though the weapon is good;

yet a sword the Sovran of Men vouchsafed me to spy on the wall there, in splendor hanging, old, gigantic,—how oft He guides

the friendless wight!—and I fought with that brand,

felling in fight, since fate was with me,

the house's wardens. That war-sword then all burned, bright blade, when the blood gushed o'er it,

battle-sweat hot; but the hilt I brought back

<sup>1</sup>Hrothgar.

<sup>2</sup>Spear.

from my foes. So avenged I their fiendish deeds, death-fall of Danes, as was due and right. And this is my hest, that in Heorot now safe thou canst sleep with thy soldier band, and every thane of all thy folk both old and young; no evil fear, Scyldings' lord, from that side again, aught ill for thy earls, as erst thou must!" Then the golden hilt, for that gray-haired leader, hoary hero, in hand was laid, giant-wrought, old. So owned and enjoyed it after downfall of devils, the Danish lord, wonder-smiths' work, since the world was rid of that grim-souled fiend, the foe of God, murder-marked, and his mother as well.

Now it passed into power of the people's king, best of all that the oceans bound who have scattered their gold o'er Scandia's isle.

* Hrothgar spake—the hilt he viewed, heirloom old, where was etched the rise of that far-off fight when the floods o'erwhelmed, raging waves, the race of giants (fearful their fate!), a folk estranged from God Eternal: whence guerdon due in that waste of waters the Wielder paid them.

So on the guard of shining gold in runic staves it was rightly said for whom the serpent-traced sword was wrought, best of blades, in bygone days, and the hilt well wound.—The wise-one spake, son of Healfdene; silent were all:—

"Lo, so may he say who sooth and right follows 'mid folk, of far times mindful, a land-warden old, that this earl belongs to the better breed! So, borne aloft, thy fame must fly, O friend my Beowulf, far and wide o'er folksteads many. Firmly thou shalt all maintain, mighty strength with mood of wisdom. Love of mine will I assure thee, as, awhile ago, I promised: thou shalt prove a stay in future, in far-off years, to folk of thine, to the heroes a help. Was not Heremod thus to offspring of Ecgwela, Honor-Scyldings, nor grew for their grace, but for grisly slaughter,

for doom of death to the Danishmen.

He slew, wrath-swollen, his shoulder-comrades, companions at board! So he passed alone, chieftain haughty, from human cheer.

Though him the Maker with might endowed, delights of power, and uplifted high above all men, yet blood-fierce his mind, his breast-board, grew; no bracelets gave he to Danes as was due; he endured all joyless strain of struggle and stress of woe, long feud with his folk. Here find thy lesson! Of virtue advise thee! This verse I have said for thee, wise from lapsed winters. Wondrous seems how to sons of men Almighty God in the strength of His spirit sendeth wisdom, estate, high station: He swayeth all things. Whiles He letteth right lustily fare the heart of the hero of high-born race,— in seat ancestral assigns him bliss, his folk's sure fortress in fee to hold, puts in his power great parts of the earth, empire so ample, that end of it this wanter-of-wisdom weeneth none.

So he waxes in wealth; nowise can harm him illness or age; no evil cares shadow his spirit; no sword-hate threatens from ever an enemy: all the world

wends at his will; no worse he knoweth, till all within him obstinate pride

waxes and wakes while the warden slumbers, the spirit's sentry; sleep is too fast which masters his might, and the murderer nears, stealthily shooting the shafts from his bow!

XXV

"Under harness his heart then is hit indeed by sharpest shafts; and no shelter avails from foul behest of the hellish fiend.

Him seems too little what long he possessed. Greedy and grim, no golden rings

he gives for his pride; the promised future forgets he and spurns, with all God has sent him, Wonder-Wielder, of wealth and fame.

Yet in the end it ever comes that the frame of the body fragile yields, fated falls; and there follows another who joyously the jewels divides,

the royal riches, nor reck's of his forebear.
 Ban, then, such baleful thoughts, Beowulf dearest,

best of men, and the better part choose,
 profit eternal; and temper thy pride, warrior famous! The flower of thy might lasts now a while: but ere long it shall be that sickness or sword thy strength shall minish,

or fang of fire, or flooding billow,
 or bite of blade, or brandished spear,
 or odious age; or the eyes' clear beam
 wax dull and darken: Death even thee
 in haste shall o'erwhelm, thou hero of war!
 So the Ring-Danes these half-years a hundred I ruled,
 wielded 'neath welkin, and warded them
 bravely

from mighty-ones many o'er middle-earth,
 from spear and sword, till it seemed for me
 no foe could be found under fold of the sky.
 Lo, sudden the shift! To me seated secure came grief for joy when Grendel began to harry my home, the hellish foe;
 for those ruthless raids, unresting I suffered heart-sorrow heavy. Heaven be thanked,
 Lord Eternal, for life extended that I on this head all hewn and bloody,
 after long evil, with eyes may gaze!
 —Go to the bench now! Be glad at banquet,

warrior worthy! A wealth of treasure at dawn of day, be dealt between us!"

Glad was the Geats' lord, going betimes to seek his seat, as the Sage commanded.
 Afresh, as before, for the famed-in-battle,
 for the band of the hall, was a banquet dight nobly anew. The Night-Helm darkened dusk o'er the drinkers.

The doughty ones rose:
 for the hoary-headed would hasten to rest,
 agéd Scylding; and eager the Geat,
 shield-fighter sturdy, for sleeping yearned.
 Him wander-weary, warrior-guest from far, a hall-thane heralded forth, who by custom courtly cared for all needs of athane as in those old days warrior-wanderers wont to have.
 So slumbered the stout-heart. Stately the hall

rose gabled and gilt where the guest slept on till a raven black the rapture-of-heaven!

<sup>1</sup>The sun.

blithe-heart boded. Eright came flying shine after shadow. The swordsmen hastened,

athelings all were eager homeward forth to fare; and far from thence
 the great-hearted guest would guide his keel.

Bade then the hardy-one Hrunting be brought to the son of Ecglaf, the sword bade him take,

 excellent iron, and uttered his thanks for it,
 quoth that he counted it keen in battle,
 "war-friend" winsome: with words he slandered not

edge of the blade: 'twas a big-hearted man!
 Now eager for parting and armed at point warriors waited, while went to his host that Darling of Danes. The doughty athel-
 ing

to high-seat hastened and Hrothgar greeted.

XXVI

Beowulf spake, bairn of Ecgtheow:—

"Lo, we seafarers say our will, far-come men, that we fain would seek Hygelac now. We here have found hosts to our heart: thou hast harbored us
 well.

If ever on earth I am able to win me
 more of thy love, O lord of men,
 aught anew, than I now have done,
 for work of war I am willing still!

If it come to me ever across the seas that neighbor foemen annoy and fright
 thee,—

as they that hate thee erewhile have used,— thousands then of thanes I shall bring, heroes to help thee. Of Hygelac I know,
 ward of his folk, that, though few his years,
 the lord of the Geats will give me aid
 by word and by work, that well I may serve
 thee,

wielding the war-wood to win thy triumph and lending thee might when thou lackest
 men.

If thy Hrethric should come to court of Geats,

a sovran's son, he will surely there find his friends. A far-off land each man should visit who vaunts him
 brave."

Him then answering, Hrothgar spake:—
 "These words of thine the wisest God sent to thy soul! No sager counsel from so young in years e'er yet have I heard.

 Thou art strong of main and in mind art wary,
 art wise in words! I ween indeed if ever it hap that Hrethel's heir<sup>1</sup>
 by spear be seized, by sword-grim battle,
 by illness or iron, thine elder and lord,
 people's leader,—and life be thine,— no seemlier man will the Sea-Geats find at all to choose for their chief and king, for hoard-guard of heroes, if hold thou wilt thy kinsman's kingdom! Thy keen mind pleases me
 the longer the better, Beowulf loved!
 Thou hast brought it about that both our peoples,
 sons of the Geat and Spear-Dane folk,
 shall have mutual peace, and from murderous strife,
 such as once they waged, from war refrain.
 Long as I rule this realm so wide,
 let our hoards be common, let heroes with
 gold

each other greet o'er the gannet's-bath,<sup>2</sup> and the ringed-prow bear o'er rolling waves tokens of love. I trow my landfolk towards friend and foe are firmly joined,
 and honor they keep in the olden way."

To him in the hall, then, Healfdene's son gave treasures twelve, and the trust-of-earls bade him fare with the gifts to his folk beloved,

hale to his home, and in haste return.
 Then kissed the king of kin renowned,
 Scylding's chieftain, that choicest thane, and fell on his neck. Fast flowed the tears of the hoary-headed. Heavy with winters, he had chances twain,<sup>3</sup> but he clung to
 this,—

that each should look on the other again,
 and hear him in hall. Was this hero so dear
 to him,

his breast's wild billows he banned in vain;
 safe in his soul a secret longing,
 locked in his mind, for that lovéd man burned in his blood. Then Beowulf strode, glad of his gold-gifts, the grass-plot o'er,
 warrior blithe. The wave-roamer bode riding at anchor, its owner awaiting.
 As they hastened onward, Hrothgar's gift

they lauded at length.—'Twas a lord unpeered,
 every way blameless, till age had broken
 —it spareth no mortal—his splendid might.

XXVII

Came now to ocean the ever-courageous hardy henchmen, their harness bearing, woven war-sarks. The warden marked, trusty as ever, the earl's return.
 From the height of the hill no hostile words reached the guests as he rode to greet them;
 but "Welcome!" he called to that Weder clan
 as the sheen-mailed spoilers to ship marched on.

Then on the strand, with steeds and treasure and armor their roomy and ring-dight ship was heavily laden: high its mast
 rose over Hrothgar's hoarded gems.

A sword to the boat-guard Beowulf gave, mounted with gold; on the mead-bench since he was better esteemed, that blade possess-
 ing,

heirloom old.—Their ocean-keel boarding,
 they drove through the deep, and Daneland
 left.

A sea-cloth was set, a sail with ropes, firm to the mast; the flood-timbers moaned;<sup>4</sup> nor did wind over billows that wave-swimmer blow

across from her course. The craft sped on,
 foam-necked it floated forth o'er the waves,
 keel firm-bound over briny currents,
 till they got them sight of the Geatish cliffs, home-known headlands. High the boat, stirred by winds, on the strand updrove.
 Helpful at haven the harbor-guard stood,
 who long already for loved companions
 by the water had waited and watched afar.
 He bound to the beach the broad-bosomed ship

with anchor-bands, lest ocean-billows that trusty timber should tear away.
 Then Beowulf bade them bear the treasure, gold and jewels; no journey far was it thence to go to the giver of rings, Hygelac Hrethling; at home he dwelt
 by the sea-wall close, himself and clan.
 Haughty that house, a hero the king,
 high the hall, and Hygd<sup>5</sup> right young,

<sup>1</sup>Hygelac.

<sup>2</sup>The sea.

<sup>3</sup>I.e. he might or might not see Beowulf again.

<sup>4</sup>From the boat's speed.

<sup>5</sup>Hygelac's queen.

wise and wary, though winters few in those fortress walls she had found a home, Hæreth's daughter. Nor humble her ways,
nor grudged she gifts to the Geatish men,
of precious treasure. Not Thryth's pride showed she,

folk-queen famed, or that fell deceit.
Was none so daring that durst make bold (save her lord alone) of the liegemen dear that lady full in the face to look,
but forðed fetters he found his lot,
bonds of death! And brief the respite;
soon as they seized him, his sword-doom was spoken,

and the burnished blade a baleful murder proclaimed and closed. No queenly way for woman to practise, though peerless she,
that the weaver-of-peace! from warrior dear
by wrath and lying his life should reave!
But Hemming's kinsman hindered this.—

For over their ale men also told that of these folk-horrors fewer she wrought, onslaughts of evil, after she went,
gold-decked bride, to the brave young prince,
atheling haughty, and Offa's hall
o'er the fallow flood at her father's bidding safely sought, where since she prospered, royal, thronéd, rich in goods,
fain of the fair life fate had sent her,
and leal in love to the lord of warriors.
He, of all heroes I heard of ever from sea to sea, of the sons of earth, most excellent seemed. Hence Offa was praised

for his fighting and feeling by far-off men,
the spear-bold warrior; wisely he ruled over his empire. Eomer woke to him, help of heroes, Hemming's kinsman,
grandson of Garmund, grim in war.

XXVIII

Hastened the hardy one, henchmen with him, sandy strand of the sea to tread and widespread ways. The world's great candle,

sun shone from south. They strode along with sturdy steps to the spot they knew where the battle-king young, his burg
within,

slayer of Ongentheow, shared the rings,
shelter-of-heroes. To Hygelac Beowulf's coming was quickly told,—

<sup>1</sup>Wife.

that there in the court the clansmen's refuge,
the shield-companion sound and alive,
hale from the hero-play homeward strode.
With haste in the hall, by highest order,
room for the rovers was readily made.
By his sovran he sat, come safe from battle, kinsman by kinsman. His kindly lord
he first had greeted in gracious form, with manly words. The mead dispensing, came through the high hall Hæreth's daughter,

winsome to warriors, wine-cup bore to the hands of the heroes. Hygelac then his comrade fairly with question plied
in the lofty hall, sore longing to know what manner of sojourn the Sea-Geats made.
"What came of thy quest, my kinsman
Beowulf,

when thy yearnings suddenly swept thee yonder

battle to seek o'er the briny sea, combat in Heorot? Hrothgar couldst thou aid at all, the honored chief, in his wide-known woes? With waves of care

my sad heart seethed; I sore mistrusted
my loved one's venture: long I begged thee
by no means to seek that slaughtering monster,

but suffer the South-Danes to settle their feud themselves with Grendel. Now God be thanked

that safe and sound I can see thee now!"

Beowulf spake, the bairn of Ecgtheow:—

"'Tis known and unhidden, Hygelac Lord, to many men, that meeting of ours,
struggle grim between Grendel and me,
which we fought on the field where full too
many

sorrows he wrought for the Scylding-Victors, evils unending. These all I avenged.

No boast can be from breed of Grendel,
any on earth, for that uproar at dawn,
from the longest-lived of the loathsome race
in fleshly fold!—But first I went

Hrothgar to greet in the hall of gifts,
where Healfdene's kinsman high-renowned,
soon as my purpose was plain to him,
assigned me a seat by his son and heir.

The liegemen were lusty; my life-days never such merry men over mead in hall have I heard under heaven! The high-born queen,

people's peace-bringer, passed through the hall,
 cheered the young clansmen, clasps of gold,
 ere she sought her seat, to sundry gave.
 Oft to the heroes Hrothgar's daughter, to earls in turn, the ale-cup tendered,— she whom I heard these hall-companions Freawaru name, when fretted gold she proffered the warriors. Promised is she,
 gold-decked maid, to the glad son of Froda.
 Sage this seems to the Scyldings'-friend,
 kingdom's-keeper: he counts it wise
 the woman to wed so and ward off feud, store of slaughter. But seldom ever when men are slain, does the murder-spear sink
 but briefest while, though the bride be fair!
 "Nor haply will like it the Heathobard
 lord,
 and as little each of his liegemen all,
 when a thane of the Danes, in that doughty
 throng,
 goes with the lady along their hall,
 and on him the old-time heirlooms glisten
 hard and ring-decked, Heathobard's treasure, weapons that once they wielded fair until they lost at the linden-play<sup>1</sup>
 liegeman leal and their lives as well.
 Then, over the ale, on this heirloom gazing,
 some ash-wielder old who has all in mind that spear-death of men,—he is stern of
 mood,
 heavy at heart,—in the hero young tests the temper and tries the soul and war-hate wakens, with words like these:—

*Canst thou not, comrade, ken that sword which to the fray thy father carried in his final feud, 'neath the fighting-mask, dearest of blades, when the Danish slew him and wielded the war-place on Withergild's fall,
 after havoc of heroes, those hardy Scyldings?
 Now, the son of a certain slaughtering Dane,
 proud of his treasure, paces this hall,
 joys in the killing, and carries the jewel<sup>2</sup>
 that rightfully ought to be owned by thee!
 Thus he urges and eggs him all the time with keenest words, till occasion offers that Freawaru's thane, for his father's deed, after bite of brand in his blood must slumber,*

losing his life; but that liegeman flies
 living away, for the land he kens.
 And thus be broken on both their sides oaths of the earls, when Ingeld's breast wells with war-hate, and wife-love now after the care-billows cooler grows.

"So I hold not high the Heathobards' faith
 due to the Danes, or their during love and pact of peace.—But I pass from that,
 turning to Grendel, O giver-of-treasure,
 and saying in full how the fight resulted,
 hand-fray of heroes. When heaven's jewel had fled o'er far fields, that fierce sprite
 came,

night-foe savage, to seek us out
 where safe and sound we sentried the hall.
 To Hondscio then was that harassing deadly,
 his fall there was fated. He first was slain, girded warrior. Grendel on him turned murderous mouth, on our mighty kinsman,
 and all of the brave man's body devoured.
 Yet none the earlier, empty-handed,
 would the bloody-toothed murderer, mindful
 of bale,

outward go from the gold-decked hall:
 but me he attacked in his terror of might,
 with greedy hand grasped me. A glove<sup>3</sup> hung by him

wide and wondrous, wound with bands;
 and in artful wise it all was wrought,
 by devilish craft, of dragon-skins.
 Me therein, an innocent man,
 the fiendish foe was fain to thrust with many another. He might not so, when I all angrily upright stood.

'Twere long to relate how that land-destroyer
 I paid in kind for his cruel deeds;
 yet there, my prince, this people of thine got fame by my fighting. He fled away,
 and a little space his life preserved;
 but there stayed behind him his stronger hand left in Heorot; heartsick thence on the floor of the ocean that outcast fell.
 Me for this struggle the Scyldings'-friend paid in plenty with plates of gold, with many a treasure, when morn had come
 and we all at the banquet-board sat down.
 Then was song and glee. The gray-haired

Scylding
 much tested, told of the times of yore.
 Whiles the hero his harp bestirred,

<sup>1</sup>Battle.

<sup>2</sup>Sword.

<sup>3</sup>I. e., a kind of sack.

wood-of-delight; now lays he chanted of sooth and sadness, or said aright
legends of wonder, the wide-hearted king;
or for years of his youth he would yearn at times,

for strength of old struggles, now stricken with age,

hoary hero: his heart surged full when, wise with winters, he wailed their flight.

Thus in the hall the whole of that day at ease we feasted, till fell o'er earth another night. Anon full ready in greed of vengeance, Grendel's mother set forth all doleful. Dead was her son through war-hate of Weders; now, woman monstrous,

with fury fell a foeman she slew, avenged her offspring. From Æschere old,
loyal councilor, life was gone;
nor might they e'en, when morning broke,
those Danish people, their death-done comrade

burn with brands, on balefire lay the man they mourned. Under mountain stream

she had carried the corpse with cruel hands.
For Hrothgar that was the heaviest sorrow of all that had laden the lord of his folk.

The leader then, by thy life, besought me (sad was his soul) in the sea-waves' coil to play the hero and hazard my being for glory of prowess: my guerdon he pledged.
I then in the waters—'tis widely known—that sea-floor-guardian savage found.

Hand-to-hand there a while we struggled;
billows welled blood; in the briny hall
her head I hewed with a hardy blade
from Grendel's mother,—and gained my life, though not without danger. My doom was not yet.

Then the haven-of-heroes, Healfdene's son,
gave me in guerdon great gifts of price.

XXXI<sup>1</sup>

"So held this king to the customs old,
that I wanted for nought in the wage I gained,

the meed of my might; he made me gifts,
Healfdene's heir, for my own disposal.

Now to thee, my prince, I proffer them all,

<sup>1</sup>Sections XXIX and XXX are not indicated in the original.

gladly give them. Thy grace alone can find me favor. Few indeed have I of kinsmen, save, Hygelac, thee!"
Then he bade them bear him the boar-head standard,

the battle-helm high, and breastplate gray,
the splendid sword; then spake in form:—

"Me this war-gear the wise old prince, Hrothgar, gave, and his hest he added,
that its story be straightway said to thee.—
A while it was held by Heorogar king,
for long time lord of the land of Scyldings;
yet not to his son the sovran left it,
to daring Heorowearð,—dear as he was to
him,

his harness of battle.—Well hold thou it all!"

And I heard that soon passed o'er the path
of this treasure,

all apple-fallow, four good steeds,
each like the others; arms and horses
he gave to the king. So should kinsmen be,
not weave one another the net of wiles,
or with deep-hid treachery death contrive for neighbor and comrade. His nephew was ever

by hardy Hygelac held full dear,
and each kept watch o'er the other's weal.
I heard, too, the necklace to Hygd he presented,

wonder-wrought treasure, which Wealhtheow
gave him,
sovran's daughter: three steeds he added,
slender and saddle-gay. Since such gift thé gem gleamed bright on the breast of the queen.

Thus showed his strain the son of Ecg-theow

as a man remarked for mighty deeds and acts of honor. At ale he slew not comrade or kin; nor cruel his mood, though of sons of earth his strength was greatest,

a glorious gift that God had sent the splendid leader. Long was he spurned, and worthless by Geatish warriors held;
him at mead the master-of-clans failed full oft to favor at all.

Slack and shiftless the strong men deemed
him,

profitless prince; but payment came,
to the warrior honored, for all his woes:—

Then the bulwark-of-earls bade bring
within,
hardy chieftain, Hrethel's heirloom garnished with gold: no Geat e'er knew in shape of a sword a statelier prize.

The brand he laid in Beowulf's lap;
and of hides assigned him seven thousand, with house and high-seat. They held in common
land alike by their line of birth, inheritance, home: but higher the king
because of his rule o'er the realm itself.

Now further it fell with the flight of years,
with harryings horrid, that Hygelac perished,
and Heardred, too, by hewing of swords
under the shield-wall slaughtered lay,
when him at the van of his victor-folk sought hardy heroes, Heatho-Scilfings,
in arms o'erwhelming Hereric's nephew.
Then Beowulf came as king this broad realm to wield; and he ruled it well fifty winters,<sup>1</sup> a wise old prince, warding his land, until One began in the dark of night, a Dragon, to rage.
In the grave on the hill a hoard it guarded,
in the stone-barrow steep. A strait path reached it,
unknown to mortals. Some man, however, came by chance that cave within to the heathen hoard. In hand he took a golden goblet, nor gave he it back,
stole with it away, while the watcher slept,
by thievish wiles: for the warden's wrath
prince and people must pay betimes!

XXXII

That way he went with no will of his own,
in danger of life, to the dragon's hoard,
but for pressure of peril, some prince's thane.
He fled in fear the fatal scourge,
seeking shelter, a sinful man,
and entered in. At the awful sight
tottered that guest, and terror seized him;
yet the wretched fugitive rallied anon
from fright and fear ere he fled away,
and took the cup from that treasure-hoard.
Of such besides there was store enough,
heirlooms old, the earth below,
which some earl forgotten, in ancient years,
left the last of his lofty race,
heedfully there had hidden away,
dearest treasure. For death of yore had hurried all hence; and he alone

<sup>1</sup>Not to be taken literally. What is really meant is,
"for a long time."

left to live, the last of the clan, weeping his friends, yet wished to bide
warding the treasure, his one delight, though brief his respite. The barrow, new-ready,

to strand and sea-waves stood anear,
hard by the headland, hidden and closed;
there laid within it his lordly heirlooms and heaped hoard of heavy gold that warden of rings. Few words he
spake:—

"Now hold thou, earth, since heroes may not,

what earls have owned! Lo, erst from thee brave men brought it! But battle-death
seized

and cruel killing my clansmen all,
robbed them of life and a liegeman's joys.

None have I left to lift the sword,
or to cleanse the carven cup of price,
beaker bright. My brave are gone.
And the helmet hard, all haughty with gold, shall part from its plating. Polishers sleep who could brighten and burnish the battle-mask;

and those weeds of war that were wont to brave

over bicker of shields the bite of steel rust with their bearer. The ringéd mail fares not far with famous chieftain, at side of hero! No harp's delight, no glee-wood's gladness! No good hawk
now

flies through the hall! Nor horses fleet stamp in the burgstead! Battle and death the flower of my race have reft away."
Mournful of mood, thus he moaned his

woe,

alone, for them all, and unblithe wept
by day and by night, till death's fell wave o'erwhelmed his heart. His hoard-of-bliss that old ill-doer open found, who, blazing at twilight the barrows
haunteth,

naked foe-dragon flying by night
folded in fire: the folk of earth dread him sore. 'Tis his doom to seek hoard in the graves, and heathen gold to watch, many-wintered: nor wins he thereby!

Powerful this plague-of-the-people thus held the house of the hoard in earth
three hundred winters; till One aroused wrath in his breast, to the ruler bearing that costly cup and the king implored for bond of peace. So the barrow was plundered,

borne off was booty. His boon was granted that wretched man; and his ruler saw first time what was fashioned in far-off days.

When the dragon awoke, new woe was kindled.

O'er the stone he snuffed. The stark-heart
found

footprint of foe who so far had gone in his hidden craft by the creature's head.—
So may the undoomed easily flee evils and exile, if only he gain
the grace of The Wielder!—That warden of
gold

o'er the ground went seeking, greedy to find the man who wrought him such wrong in sleep.

Savage and burning, the barrow he circled
all without; nor was any there, none in the waste. . . . Yet war he desired,

was eager for battle. The barrow he entered,

sought the cup, and discovered soon that some one of mortals had searched his
treasure,

his lordly gold. The guardian waited ill-enduring till evening came;

boiling with wrath was the barrow's keeper,
and fain with flame the foe to pay for the dear cup's loss.—Now day was fled as the worm had wished. By its wall no
more

was it glad to bide, but burning flew folded in flame: a fearful beginning for sons of the soil; and soon it came,
in the doom of their lord, to a dreadful end.

XXXIII

Then the baleful fiend its fire belched out, and bright homes burned. The blaze stood high

all landsfolk frightening. No living thing would that loathly one leave as aloft it flew.
Wide was the dragon's warring seen,
its fiendish fury far and near,
as the grim destroyer those Geatish people hated and hounded. To hidden lair, to its hoard it hastened at hint of dawn.
Folk of the land it had lapped in flame, with bale and brand. In its barrow it

trusted,
its battling and bulwarks: that boast was vain!

To Beowulf then the bale was told quickly and truly: the king's own home,
of buildings the best, in brand-waves melted,
that gift-throne of Geats. To the good old
man

sad in heart, 'twas heaviest sorrow.

The sage assumed that his sovran God
he had angered, breaking ancient law, and embittered the Lord. His breast within with black thoughts welled, as his wont was never.

The folk's own fastness that fiery dragon with flame had destroyed, and the stronghold
all

washed by waves; but the warlike king,
prince of the Weders, plotted vengeance.

Warriors'-bulwark, he bade them work

all of iron—the earl's commander—
a war-shield wondrous: well he knew that forest-wood against fire were worthless,

linden could aid not.—Atheling brave,
he was fated to finish this fleeting life,
his days on earth, and the dragon with him,
though long it had watched o'er the wealth of the hoard!—

Shame he reckoned it, sharer-of-rings,
to follow the flyer-afar with a host,
a broad-flung band; nor the battle feared he,
nor deemed he dreadful the dragon's warring,
its vigor and valor: ventures desperate
he had passed a-plenty, and perils of war, contest-crash, since, conqueror proud,
Hrothgar's hall he had wholly purged,
and in grapple had killed the kin of Grendel, loathsome breed! Not least was that of hand-to-hand fights where Hygelac fell,
when the ruler of Geats in rush of battle,
lord of his folk, in the Frisian land,
son of Hrethel, by sword-draughts died,
by brands down-beaten. Thence Beowulf fled

through strength of himself and his swimming power,

though alone, and his arms were laden with thirty

coats of mail, when he came to the sea!

Nor yet might Hetwaras haughtily boast their craft of contest, who carried against
him

shields to the fight: but few escaped from strife with the hero to seek their homes! Then swam over ocean Ecgtheow's son lonely and sorrowful, seeking his land, where Hygd made him offer of hoard and realm, rings and royal-seat, reckoning naught the strength of her son to save their kingdom from hostile hordes, after Hygelac's death. No sooner for this could the stricken ones in any wise move that atheling's mind over young Heardred's head as lord and ruler of all the realm to be: yet the hero upheld him with helpful words, aided in honor, till, older grown, he wielded the Weder-Geats.—Wandering exiles sought him o'er seas, the sons of Ohtere, who had spurned the sway of the Scyflings'-helmet, the bravest and best that broke the rings, in Swedish land, of the sea-kings' line, haughty hero. Hence Heardred's end. For shelter he gave them, sword-death came, the blade's fell blow, to bairn of Hygelac; but the son of Ongentheow sought again house and home when Heardred fell, leaving Beowulf lord of Geats and gift-sear's master.—A good king he!

XXXIV

The fall of his lord he was fain to requite in after days; and to Eadgils he proved friend to the friendless, and forces sent over the sea to the son of Ohtere, weapons and warriors: well repaid he those care-paths cold when the king he slew. Thus safe through struggles the son of Ecgtheow had passed a plenty, through perils dire, with daring deeds, till this day was come that doomed him now with the dragon to strive.

With comrades eleven the lord of Geats swollen in rage went seeking the dragon. He had heard whence all the harm arose and the killing of clansmen; that cup of price on the lap of the lord had been laid by the finder.

In the throng was this one thirteenth man, starter of all the strife and ill, care-laden captive; cringing thence forced and reluctant, he led them on till he came in ken of that cavern-hall, the barrow delled near billowy surges, flood of ocean. Within 'twas full of wire-gold and jewels; a jealous warden, warrior trusty, the treasures held, lurked in his lair. Not light the task of entrance for any of earth-born men!

Sat on the headland the hero king, spake words of hail to his hearth-companions, gold-friend of Geats. All gloomy his soul, wavering, death-bound. Wyrd full nigh stood ready to greet the gray-haired man, to seize his soul-hoard, sunder apart life and body. Not long would be the warrior's spirit enwound with flesh.

Beowulf spake, the bairn of Ecgtheow:—"Through store of struggles I strove in youth, mighty feuds; I mind them all.

I was seven years old when the sovran of rings,

friend-of-his-folk, from my father took me, had me, and held me, Hrethel the king, with food and fee, faithful in kinship.

Ne'er, while I lived there, he loathlier found me, bairn in the burg, than his birthright sons, Herebeald and Hæthcyn and Hygelac mine.

For the eldest of these, by unmeet chance, by kinsman's deed, was the death-bed strewn, when Hæthcyn killed him with horny bow, his own dear liege laid low with an arrow, missed the mark and his mate shot down, one brother the other, with bloody shaft.

A feeless fight and a fearful sin, horror to Hrethel; yet, hard as it was, unavenged must the atheling die!

Too awful it is for an aged man to bide and bear, that his bairn so young rides on the gallows. A rhyme he makes, sorrow-song for his son there hanging as rapture of ravens; no rescue now can come from the old, disabled man!

Still is he minded, as morning breaks, of the heir gone elsewhere; another he hopes not

he will bide to see his burg within as ward for his wealth, now the one has found doom of death that the deed incurred.

Forlorn he looks on the lodge of his son, wine-hall waste and wind-swept chambers reft of revel. The rider sleepeth, the hero, far-hidden; no harp resounds,

in the courts no wassail, as once was heard.

XXXV

"Then he goes to his chamber, a grief-song chants alone for his lost. Too large all seems, homestead and house. So the helmet-of-Weders

hid in his heart for Herebeald waves of woe. No way could he take to avenge on the slayer slaughter so foul;
nor e'en could he harass that hero at all
with loathing deed, though he loved him not.
And so for the sorrow his soul endured,
men's gladness he gave up and God's light chose.

Lands and cities he left his sons
(as the wealthy do) when he went from earth.
There was strife and struggle 'twixt Swede and Geat

o'er the width of waters; war arose,
hard battle-horror, when Hrethel died,
and Ongentheow's offspring grew strife-keen, bold, nor brooked o'er the seas pact of peace, but pushed their hosts to harass in hatred by Hreosnabeorh.
Men of my folk for that feud had vengeance,
for woful war ('tis widely known),
though one of them bought it with blood of his heart,

a bargain hard: for Hæthcyn proved fatal that fray, for the first-of-Geats.
At morn, I heard, was the murderer killed
by kinsman for kinsman, with clash of sword,
when Ongentheow met Eofor there.
Wide split the war-helm: wan he fell,
hoary Scyfling; the hand that smote him of feud was mindful, nor flinched from the death-blow.

—"For all that he<sup>1</sup> gave me, my gleaming
sword

repaid him at war,—such power I wielded,— for lordly treasure: with land he entrusted
me,

homestead and house. He had no need from Swedish realm, or from Spear-Dane folk,

or from men of the Gifths, to get him help,—
some warrior worse for wage to buy!

Ever I fought in the front of all,
sole to the fore; and so shall I fight while I bide in life and this blade shall last that early and late hath loyal proved since for my doughtiness Dæghrefn fell,
slain by my hand, the Hugas' champion.
Nor fared he thence to the Frisian king with the booty back, and breast-adornments;
but, slain in struggle, that standard-bearer fell, atheling brave. Not with blade was he slain,

but his bones were broken by brawny gripe,
his heart-waves stilled.—The sword-edge
now,
hard blade and my hand, for the hoard shall strive."

Beowulf spake, and a battle-vow made, his last of all: "I have lived through many wars in my youth; now once again,
old folk-defender, feud will I seek,
do doughty deeds, if the dark destroyer forth from his cavern come to fight me!"
Then hailed he the helmeted heroes all,
for the last time greeting his liegemen dear,
comrades of war: "I should carry no weapon,
no sword to the serpent, if sure I knew how, with such enemy, else my vows
I could gain as I did in Grendel's day.
But fire in this fight I must fear me now,
and poisonous breath; so I bring with me breastplate and board.<sup>2</sup> From the barrow's keeper

no footbreadth flee I. One fight shall end our war by the wall, as Wyrd allots, all mankind's master. My mood is bold but forbears to boast o'er this battling-flyer.
—Now abide by the barrow, ye breastplate-mailed,

ye heroes in harness, which of us twain
better from battle-rush bear his wounds.
Wait ye the finish. The fight is not yours, nor meet for any but me alone
to measure might with this monster here and play the hero. Hardily I shall win that wealth, or war shall seize, cruel killing, your king and lord!"

Up stood then with shield the sturdy champion,
stayed by the strength of his single manhood,
and hardy 'neath helmet his harness bore
under cleft of the cliffs: no coward's path!
Soon spied by the wall that warrior chief,

<sup>1</sup>Hygelac.

<sup>2</sup>Shield.

survivor of many a victory-field
where foemen fought with furious clashings, an arch of stone; and within, a stream that broke from the barrow. The brooklet's wave

was hot with fire. The hoard that way he never could hope unharmed to near,
or endure those deeps, for the dragon's flame.

Then let from his breast, for he burst with rage,

the Weder-Geat prince a word outgo;
stormed the stark-heart; stern went ringing and clear his cry 'neath the cliff-rocks gray.
The hoard-guard heard a human voice;
his rage was enkindled. No respite now for pact of peace! The poison-breath of that foul worm first came forth from the cave,

hot reek-of-fight: the rocks resounded.
Stout by the stone-way his shield he raised,
lord of the Geats, against the loathed-one;
while with courage keen that coiled foe came seeking strife. The sturdy king had drawn his sword, not dull of edge, heirloom old; and each of the two felt fear of his foe, though fierce their mood.
Stoutly stood with his shield high-raised the warrior king, as the worm now coiled together amain: the mailed-one waited.
Now, spire by spire, fast sped and glided that blazing serpent. The shield protected soul and body a shorter while for the hero-king than his heart desired, could his will have wielded the welcome respite

but once in his life! But Wyrd denied it,
and victory's honors.—His arm he lifted,
lord of the Geats, the grim foe smote with atheling's heirloom. Its edge was turned,

brownblade, on the bone, and bit more feebly than its noble master had need of then in his baleful stress.—Then the barrow's
keeper

waxed full wild for that weighty blow, cast deadly flames; wide drove and far those vicious fires. No victor's glory
the Geats' lord boasted; his brand had failed, naked in battle, as never it should,
excellent iron!—'Twas no easy path that Ecgtheow's honored heir must tread over the plain to the place of the foe;
for against his will he must win a home

elsewhere far, as must all men, leaving this lapsing life!—Not long it was ere those champions grimly closed again.
The hoard-guard was heartened; high heaved his breast

once more; and by peril was pressed again,
enfolded in flames, the folk-commander!
Nor yet about him his band of comrades, sons of athelings, armed stood with warlike front: to the woods they bent
them,

their lives to save. But the soul of one with care was cumbered. Kinship true can never be marred in a noble mind!

XXXVI

Wiglaf his name was, Weohstan's son,
linden-thane loved, the lord of Scylfings, Ælfhere's kinsman. His king he now saw with heat under helmet hard oppressed.
He minded the prizes his prince had given
him,

wealthy seat of the Wægmunding line,
and folk-rights that his father owned.
Not long he lingered. The linden yellow, his shield, he seized; the old sword he drew:— as heirloom of Eanmund earth-dwellers knew
it,

who was slain by the sword-edge, son of Ohtere,
friendless exile, erst in fray
killed by Weohstan, who won for his kin brown-bright helmet, breastplate ringed,
old sword of Eotens, Onela's gift,
weeds of war of the warrior-thane,
battle-gear brave: though a brother's child
had been felled, the feud was unfelt by Onela.
For winters this war-gear Weohstan kept, breastplate and board, till his bairn had grown earlship to earn as the old sire did:

then he gave him, mid Geats, the gear of
battle,
portion huge, when he passed from life,
fared agêd forth. For the first time now with his leader-lord the liegeman young was bidden to share the shock of battle.
Neither softened his soul, nor the sire's bequest

weakened in war. So the worm found out when once in fight the foes had met!
Wiglaf spake,—and his words were sage;
sad in spirit, he said to his comrades:—

"I remember the time, when mead we took,
what promise we made to this prince of ours,
in the banquet-hall, to our breaker-of-rings,
for gear of combat to give him requital, for hard-sword and helmet, if hap should
bring

stress of this sort! Himself who chose us from all his army to aid him now, urged us to glory, and gave these treasures,
because he counted us keen with the spear and hardy 'neath helm, though this hero-
work

our leader hoped unhelped and alone to finish for us,—folk-defender who hath got him glory greater than all men for daring deeds! Now the day is come that our noble master has need of the might of warriors stout. Let us stride along the hero to help while the heat is about him glowing and grim! For God is my witness I am far more fain the fire should seize along with my lord these limbs of mine!
Unsuited it seems our shields to bear homeward hence, save here we essay to fell the foe and defend the life of the Weders' lord. I wot 'twere shame on the law of our land if alone the king out of Geatish warriors woe endured and sank in the struggle! My sword and helmet,

breastplate and board, for us both shall serve!"

Through slaughter-reek strode he to succor
his chieftain,
his battle-helm bore, and brief words
spake:—

"Beowulf dearest, do all bravely,
as in youthful days of yore thou vowedst that while life should last thou wouldst let no wise

thy glory droop! Now, great in deeds, atheling steadfast, with all thy strength shield thy life! I will stand to help thee."

At the words the worm came once again,
murderous monster mad with rage,
with fire-billows flaming, its foes to seek,
the hated men. In heat-waves burned that board<sup>1</sup> to the boss, and the breastplate failed

to shelter at all the spear-thane young.
Yet quickly under his kinsman's shield went eager the earl, since his own was now

all burned by the blaze. The bold king again had mind of his glory: with might his glaive was driven into the dragon's head,— blow nerved by hate. But Nægling was shivered,

broken in battle was Beowulf's sword,
old and gray. 'Twas granted him not that ever the edge of iron at all could help him at strife: too strong was his
hand,

so the tale is told, and he tried too far with strength of stroke all swords he wielded, though sturdy their steel: they steadied him
nought.

Then for the third time thought on its feud that folk-destroyer, fire-dread dragon,
and rushed on the hero, where room allowed,
battle-grim, burning; its bitter teeth closed on his neck, and covered him with waves of blood from his breast that welled.

XXXVII

'Twas now, men say, in his sovran's need that the earl made known his noble strain, craft and keenness and courage enduring.
Heedless of harm, though his hand was burned,

hardy-hearted, he helped his kinsman.
A little lower the loathsome beast
he smote with sword; his steel drove in bright and burnished; that blaze began to lose and lessen. At last the king wielded his wits again, war-knife drew,
a biting blade by his breastplate hanging,
and the Weders'-helm smote that worm
asunder,

felled the foe, flung forth its life.

So had they killed it, kinsmen both,
athelings twain: thus an earl should be in danger's day!—Of deeds of valor
this conqueror's-hour of the king was last,
of his work in the world. The wound began,
which that dragon-of-earth had erst inflicted,
to swell and smart; and soon he found in his breast was boiling, baleful and deep, pain of poison. The prince walked on,
wise in his thought, to the wall of rock;
then sat, and stared at the structure of giants,

where arch of stone and steadfast column
upheld forever that hall in earth.

Yet here must the hand of the henchman peerless

<sup>1</sup>Wiglaf's shield,

lave with water his winsome lord,
the king and conqueror covered with blood,
with struggle spent, and unspan his helmet.
Beowulf spake in spite of his hurt,
his mortal wound; full well he knew his portion now was past and gone of earthly bliss, and all had fled of his file of days, and death was near:
"I would fain bestow on son of mine
this gear of war, were given me now that any heir should after me come of my proper blood. This people I ruled fifty winters. No folk-king was there, none at all, of the neighboring clans who war would wage me with 'warriors'- friends<sup>1</sup> and threat me with horrors. At home I bided
what fate might come, and I cared for mine
own;
feuds I sought not, nor falsely swore ever on oath. For all these things, though fatally wounded, fain am I!
From the Ruler-of-Man no wrath shall seize
me,
when life from my frame must flee away,
for killing of kinsmen! Now quickly go and gaze on that hoard 'neath the hoary rock, Wiglaf loved, now the worm lies low,
sleeps, heart-sore, of his spoil bereaved.
And fare in haste. I would fain behold
the gorgeous heirlooms, golden store, have joy in the jewels and gems, lay down
softlier for sight of this splendid hoard
my life and the lordship I long have held."

XXXVIII

I have heard that swiftly the son of Weohstan
at wish and word of his wounded king,— war-sick warrior,—woven mail-coat, battle-sark, bore 'neath the barrow's roof.
Then the clansman keen, of conquest proud,
passing the seat, saw store of jewels
and glistening gold the ground along;
by the wall were marvels, and many a vessel
in the den of the dragon, the dawn-flier old:
unburnished bowls of bygone men
reft of richness; rusty helms of the olden age; and arm-rings many wondrously woven.—Such wealth of gold, booty from barrow, can burden with pride

<sup>1</sup>Swords.

each human wight: let him hide it who will!—
His glance too fell on a gold-wove banner high o'er the hoard, of handiwork noblest, brilliantly broidered; so bright its gleam,
all the earth-floor he easily saw and viewed all these vessels. No vestige
now
was seen of the serpent: the sword had ta'en
him.

Then, I heard, the hill of its hoard was reft,
old work of giants, by one alone;
he burdened his bosom with beakers and plate
at his own good will, and the ensign took, brightest of beacons.—The blade of his lord
—its edge was iron—had injured deep one that guarded the golden hoard
many a year and its murder-fire spread hot round the barrow in horror-billows

at midnight hour, till it met its doom.
Hasted the herald, the hoard so spurred him his track to retrace; he was troubled by doubt,

high-souled hero, if haply he'd find alive, where he left him, the lord of Weders, weakening fast by the wall of the cave.
So he carried the load. His lord and king
he found all bleeding, famous chief, at the lapse of life. The liegeman again plashed him with water, till point of word broke through the breast-hoard. Beowulf

spake,
sage and sad, as he stared at the gold:—
"For the gold and treasure, to God my thanks,

to the Wielder-of-Wonders, with words I say,
for what I behold, to Heaven's Lord, for the grace that I give such gifts to my folk or ever the day of my death be run!
Now I've bartered here for booty of treasure
the last of my life, so look ye well to the needs of my land! No longer I tarry
A barrow bid ye the battle-famed raise for my ashes. 'Twill shine by the shore of
the flood,

to folk of mine memorial fair
on Hronēs Headland high uplifted, that ocean-wanderers oft may hail Beowulf's Barrow, as back from far they drive their keels o'er the darkling
wave."

From his neck he unclasped the collar of
gold,

valorous king, to his vassal gave it with bright-gold helmet, breastplate, and
ring,
to the youthful thane: bade him use them in joy.

"Thou art end and remnant of all our
race,
the Wægmunding name. For Wyrd hath swept them,
all my line, to the land of doom,
earls in their glory: I after them go."

This word was the last which the wise old
man
harbored in heart ere hot death-waves of balefire he chose. From his bosom fled his soul to seek the saints' reward.

XXXIX

It was heavy hap for that hero young on his lord beloved to look and find him lying on earth with life at end, sorrowful sight. But the slayer too,
awful earth-dragon, empty of breath;
lay felled in fight, nor, fain of its treasure,
could the writhing monster rule it more.
For edges of iron had ended its days,
hard and battle-sharp, hammers' leaving;<sup>1</sup>
and that flier-afar had fallen to ground hushed by its hurt, its hoard all near,
no longer lusty aloft to whirl
at midnight, making its merriment seen, proud of its prizes: prone it sank
by the handiwork of the hero-king.
Forsooth among folk but few achieve,
—though sturdy and strong, as stories tell
me,
and never so daring in deed of valor,—
the perilous breath of a poison-foe to brave, and to rush on the ring-hoard
hall,
whenever his watch the warden keeps bold in the barrow. Beowulf paid the price of death for that precious hoard;
and each of the foes had found the end of this fleeting life.

Befell erelong
that the laggards in war the wood had left,
trothbreakers, cowards, ten together,
fearing before to flourish a spear
in the sore distress of their sovran lord.
Now in their shame their shields they carried,
armor of fight, where the old man lay;

<sup>1</sup>Well forged.

and they gazed on Wiglaf. Wearied he sat at his sovran's shoulder, shieldsman good,
to wake him with water. Nowise it availed.
Though well he wished it, in world no more could he barrier life for that leader-of-battles
nor baffle the will of all-wielding God.
Doom of the Lord was law o'er the deeds
of every man, as it is to-day.
Grim was the answer, easy to get,
from the youth for those that had yielded to fear!

Wiglaf spake, the son of Weohstan,— mournful he looked on those men unloved:—
"Who sooth will speak, can say indeed that the ruler who gave you golden rings and the harness of war in which ye stand —for he at ale-bench often-times bestowed on hall-folk helm and breastplate, lord to liegemen, the likeliest gear which near or far he could find to give,— threw away and wasted these weeds of battle,
on men who failed when the foemen came!
Nor at all could the king of his comrades-in-arms

venture to vaunt, though the Victory-Wielder,
God, gave him grace that he got revenge
sole with his sword in stress and need.
To rescue his life, 'twas little that I could serve him in struggle; yet shift I made (hopeless it seemed) to help my kinsman.
Its strength ever waned, when with weapon
I struck

that fatal foe, and the fire less strongly flowed from its head.—Too few the heroes
in throe of contest that thronged to our king!
Now gift of treasure and girding of sword,
joy of the house and home-delight shall fail your folk; his freehold-land every clansman within your kin shall lose and leave, when lords highborn hear afar of that flight of yours, a fameless deed. Yea, death is better for liegemen all than a life of shame!"

XL

That battle-toil bade he at burg to announce,
at the fort on the cliff, where, full of sorrow,
all the morning earls had sat,
daring shieldsmen, in doubt of twain:
would they wail as dead, or welcome home,
their lord beloved? Little kept back of the tidings new, but told them all, the herald that up the headland rode.—

 "Now the willing-giver to Weder folk in death-bed lies, the Lord of Geats on the slaughter-bed sleeps by the serpent's deed!

And beside him is stretched that slayer-of-
 men

with knife-wounds sick: no sword availed on the awesome thing in any wise to work a wound. There Wiglaf sitteth, Weohstan's bairn, by Beowulf's side,
 the living earl by the other dead,
 and heavy of heart a head-watch keeps o'er friend and foe.—Now our folk may look for waging of war when once unhidden to Frisian and Frank the fall of the king is spread afar.—The strife began when hot on the Hugas Hygelac fell and fared with his fleet to the Frisian land.
 Him there the Hetwaras humbled in war,
 plied with such prowess their power o'er-whelming

that the bold-in-battle bowed beneath it and fell in fight. To his friends no wise could that earl give treasure! And ever since

the Merowings' favor has failed us wholly.
 Nor aught expect I of peace and faith
 from Swedish folk. 'Twas spread afar
 how Ongentheow reft at Ravenswood Hæthcyn Hrethling of hope and life, when the folk of Geats for the first time
 sought

in wanton pride the Warlike-Scyflings.

Soon the sage old sire of Ohtere, ancient and awful, gave answering blow;
 the sea-king he slew, and his spouse redeemed,

his good wife rescued, though robbed of her
 gold,

mother of Ohtere and Onela.

Then he followed his foes, who fled before
 him

sore beset and stole their way,
 bereft of a ruler, to Ravenswood.

With his host he besieged there what swords had left,

the weary and wounded; woes he threatened the whole night through to that hard-pressed throng:

some with the morrow his sword should kill,
 some should go to the gallows-tree for rapture of ravens. But rescue came with dawn of day for those desperate men

when they heard the horn of Hygelac sound, tones of his trumpet; the trusty king had followed their trail with faithful band.

XLI

"The bloody swath of Swedes and Geats
 and the storm of their strife, were seen afar,
 how folk against folk the fight had awakened.
 The ancient king with his atheling band sought his citadel, sorrowing much:
 Ongentheow earl went up to his burg.
 He had tested Hygelac's hardihood,
 the proud one's prowess, would prove it no longer,

defied no more those fighting-wanderers
 nor hoped from the seamen to save his hoard,
 his bairn and his bride: so he bent him again, old, to his earth-walls. Yet after him came with slaughter for Swedes the standards of Hygelac

o'er peaceful plains in pride advancing,
 till Hrethelings fought in the fenced town.
 Then Ongentheow with edge of sword,
 the hoary-bearded, was held at bay,
 and the folk-king there was forced to suffer
 Eofor's anger. In ire, at the king Wulf Wonreding with weapon struck;
 and the chieftain's blood, for that blow, in streams

flowed 'neath his hair. No fear felt he, stout old Scyfling, but straightway repaid
 in better bargain that bitter stroke and faced his foe with fell intent.
 Nor swift enough was the son of Wonred answer to render the aged chief;
 too soon on his head the helm was cloven;
 blood-bedecked he bowed to earth,
 and fell adown: not doomed was he yet,
 and well he waxed, though the wound was sore.

Then the hardy Hygelac-thane,
 when his brother fell, with broad brand
 smote,
 giants'-sword crashing through giants'-helm
 across the shield-wall: sank the king,
 his folk's old herdsman, fatally hurt.
 There were many to bind the brother's wounds

and lift him, fast as fate allowed his people to wield the place-of-war.
 But Eofor took from Ongentheow,
 earl from other, the iron-breastplate,
 hard sword hilted, and helmet too,

and the hoar-chief's harness to Hygelac carried,
 who took the trappings, and truly promised rich fee 'mid folk,—and fulfilled it so.
 For that grim strife gave the Geatish lord, Hrethel's offspring, when home he came,
 to Eofor and Wulf a wealth of treasure.
 Each of them had a hundred thousand in land and linked rings; nor at less price reckoned
 mid-earth men such mighty deeds!
 And to Eofor he gave his only daughter in pledge of grace, the pride of his home.

“Such is the feud, the foeman's rage, death-hate of men: so I deem it sure that the Swedish folk will seek us home for this fall of their friends, the fighting-Scylfings,
 when once they learn that our warrior leader lifeless lies, who land and hoard ever defended from all his foes, furthered his folk's weal, finished his course
 a hardy hero.—Now haste is best,
 that we go to gaze on our Geatish lord,
 and bear the bountiful breaker-of-rings to the funeral pyre. No fragments merely shall burn with the warrior. Wealth of jewels,
 gold untold and gained in terror,
 treasure at last with his life obtained,
 all of that booty the brands shall take,
 fire shall eat it. No earl must carry memorial jewel. No maiden fair shall wreath her neck with noble ring:
 nay, sad in spirit and shorn of her gold,
 oft shall she pass o'er paths of exile
 now our lord all laughter has laid aside, all mirth and revel. Many a spear morning-cold shall be clasped amain, lifted aloft; nor shall lilt of harp
 those warriors wake; but the wan-hued raven,
 fain o'er the fallen, his feast shall praise
 and boast to the eagle how bravely he ate when he and the wolf were wasting the slain.”

So he told his sorrowful tidings, and little he lied, the loyal man of word or of work. The warriors rose;
 sad, they climbed to the Cliff-of-Eagles,
 went, welling with tears, the wonder to view.
 Found on the sand there, stretched at rest,
 their lifeless lord, who had lavished rings of old upon them. Ending-day had dawned on the doughty-one; death had seized

 in woful slaughter the Weders' king.
 There saw they, besides, the strangest being,
 loathsome, lying their leader near,
 prone on the field. The fiery dragon, fearful fiend, with flame was scorched.
 Reckoned by feet, it was fifty measures in length as it lay. Aloft erewhile it had reveled by night, and anon come back, seeking its den; now in death's sure clutch
 it had come to the end of its earth-hall joys.
 By it there stood the stoups and jars;
 dishes lay there, and dear-decked swords
 eaten with rust, as, on earth's lap resting,
 a thousand winters they waited there.
 For all that heritage huge, that gold of bygone men, as bound by a spell,
 so the treasure-hall could be touched by none
 of human kind,—save that Heaven's King,
 God himself, might give whom he would,
 Helper of Heroes, the hoard to open,— even such a man as seemed to him meet.

XLII

A perilous path, it proved, he trod who heinously hid, that hall within, wealth under wall! Its watcher had killed one of a few, and the feud was avenged in woful fashion. Wondrous seems it, what manner a man of might and valor
 oft ends his life, when the earl no longer in mead-hall may live with loving friends.
 So Beowulf, when that barrow's warden
 he sought, and the struggle; himself knew
 not

in what wise he should wend from the world
 at last.

For princes potent, who placed the gold,
 with a curse to doomsday covered it deep,
 so that marked with sin the man should be,
 hedged with horrors, in hell-bonds fast, racked with plagues, who should rob their hoard.

Yet no greed for gold, but the grace of
 heaven,
 ever the king had kept in view.

Wiglaf spake, the son of Weohstan:— “At the mandate of one, oft warriors many sorrow must suffer; and so must we.
 The people's-shepherd showed not aught
 of care for our counsel, king beloved!

That guardian of gold he should grapple not,
 urged we,
 but let him lie where he long had been in his earth-hall waiting the end of the world,
 the hest of heaven.—This hoard is ours,
 but grievously gotten; too grim the fate
 which thither carried our king and lord.
 I was within there, and all I viewed,
 the chambered treasure, when chance allowed me

(and my path was made in no pleasant wise) under the earth-wall. Eager, I seized such heap from the hoard as hands could bear and hurriedly carried it hither back to my liege and lord. Alive was he still, still wielding his wits. The wise old man spake much in his sorrow, and sent you greetings

and bade that ye build, when he breathed no
 more,

on the place of his balefire a barrow high, memorial mighty. Of men was he worthiest warrior wide earth o'er the while he had joy of his jewels and burg.
 Let us set out in haste now, the second time to see and search this store of treasure, these wall-hid wonders,—the way I show
 you,—

where, gathered near, ye may gaze your fill at broad-gold and rings. Let the bier, soon made,

be all in order when out we come,
 our king and captain to carry thither
 —man beloved—where long he shall bide safe in the shelter of sovran God.”

Then the bairn of Weohstan bade command, hardy chief, to heroes many that owned their homesteads, hither to bring firewood from far—o'er the folk they ruled—for the famed-one's funeral. “Fire shall devour

and wan flames feed on the fearless warrior who oft stood stout in the iron-shower,
 when, sped from the string, a storm of arrows shot o'er the shield-wall: the shaft held firm, feathery feathered, followed the barb.”<sup>1</sup>

And now the sage young son of Weohstan seven chose of the chieftain's thanes,
 the best he found that band within,
 and went with these warriors, one of eight,
 under hostile roof. In hand one bore
 a lighted torch and led the way.

No lots they cast for keeping the hoard
 when once the warriors saw it in hall,
 altogether without a guardian,
 lying there lost. And little they mourned
 when they had hastily haled it out, dear-bought treasure! The dragon they cast,

the worm, o'er the wall for the wave to take,
 and surges swallowed that shepherd of gems.
 Then the woven gold on a wain was laden—countless quite!—and the king was borne, hoary hero, to Hronæs-Ness.

XLIII

Then fashioned for him the folk of Geats firm on the earth a funeral-pile, and hung it with helmets and harness of war and breastplates bright, as the boon he asked;

and they laid amid it the mighty chieftain,
 heroes mourning their master dear.
 Then on the hill that hugest of balefires
 the warriors awakened. Wood-smoke rose black over blaze, and blent was the roar of flame with weeping (the wind was still),
 till the fire had broken the frame of bones,
 hot at the heart. In heavy mood their misery moaned they, their master's death.

Wailing her woe, the widow<sup>2</sup> old,
 her hair upbound, for Beowulf's death sung in her sorrow, and said full oft she dreaded the doleful days to come,
 deaths enow, and doom of battle,
 and shame.—The smoke by the sky was devoured.

The folk of the Weders fashioned there on the headland a barrow broad and high,
 by ocean-farers far descried:
 in ten days' time their toil had raised it,
 the battle-brave's beacon. Round brands of the pyre

a wall they built, the worthiest ever that wit could prompt in their wisest men.
 They placed in the barrow that precious booty,
 the rounds and the rings they had reft ere-
 while,

hardy heroes, from hoard in cave,— trusting the ground with treasure of earls,

<sup>2</sup>Nothing has been said of Beowulf's wife in the poem. It has been conjectured that he may have married Hygd.

<sup>1</sup>Professor Garnett's translation (Gummere's note).

gold in the earth, where ever it lies useless to men as of yore it was.

Then about that barrow the battle-keen rode,
atheling-born, a band of twelve,
lament to make, to mourn their king,
chant their dirge, and their chieftain honor.
They praised his earlship, his acts of prowess worthily witnessed: and well it is that men their master-friend mightily laud, heartily love, when hence he goes from life in the body forlorn away.

Thus made their mourning the men of Geatland,
for their hero's passing his hearth-companions:
quoth that of all the kings of earth,
of men he was mildest and most beloved,
to his kin the kindest, keenest for praise.

THE WANDERER<sup>1</sup>

This poem is preserved in the Exeter Book, a manuscript volume left with other books to his church by Leofric (first bishop of Exeter, died A. D. 1071). The volume is still in the cathedral library at Exeter. The author of the poem is unknown, as well as the date of its composition, though it is supposed that the poem was written in the eighth century. "Over the body of the poem lie the shadows of fatalism, and a profound sense of the instability of the earth and its joys" (J. Duncan Spaeth, Old English Poetry, p. 247). This theme is a characteristic one in Anglo-Saxon literature.

"STILL the lone one and desolate waits for his Maker's ruth—God's good mercy, albeit so long it tarry, in sooth.
Careworn and sad of heart, on the watery ways must he
Plow with the hand-grasped oar—how long?
—the rime-cold sea,
Tread thy paths of exile, O Fate, who art cruelty."
Thus did a wanderer speak, being heart-full of woe, and all Thoughts of the cruel slayings, and pleasant comrades' fall:
"Morn by morn I, alone, am fain to utter my
woe;
Now is there none of the living to whom I dare to show
Plainly the thought of my heart; in very sooth I know
Excellent is it in man that his breast he straightly bind,
Shut fast his thinkings in silence, whatever
he have in his mind.
The man that is weary in heart, he never can fate withstand;
The man that grieves in his spirit, he finds
not the helper's hand.
Therefore the glory-grasper full heavy of soul may be.
So, far from my fatherland, and mine own
good kinsmen free,
I must bind my heart in fetters, for long, ah!
long ago,
The earth's cold darkness covered my giver
of gold brought low;

And I, sore stricken and humbled, and winter-saddened, went Far over the frost-bound waves to seek for the dear content
Of the hall of the giver of rings; but far nor near could I find
Who felt the love of the mead-hall, or who with comforts kind
Would comfort me, the friendless. 'T is he alone will know,
Who knows, being desolate too, how evil a
fere is woe;
For him the path of the exile, and not the twisted gold;
For him the frost in his bosom, and not earth-
riches old.
"O, well he remembers the hall-men, the treasure bestowed in the hall;
The feast that his gold-giver made him, the joy at its highth, at its fall;
He knows who must be forlorn for his dear
lord's counsels gone,
Where sleep and sorrow together are binding
the lonely one;
When himthinks he clasps and kisses his leader of men, and lays His hands and head on his knee, as when, in the good yore-days,
He sat on the throne of his might, in the strength that wins and saves.
But the friendless man awakes, and he sees
the yellow waves,
And the sea-birds dip to the sea, and broaden their wings to the gale,
And he sees the dreary rime, and the snow
commingled with hail.
O, then are the wounds of his heart the sorer
much for this,
The grief for the loved and lost made new by the dream of old bliss.

<sup>1</sup>The translation is by Emily H. Hickey. It is reprinted here with the permission of the editors and publishers from Select Translations from Old English Poetry, edited by A. S. Cook and C. B. Tinker, and published by Messrs. Ginn and Company.

His kinsmen's memory comes to him as he lies asleep,
 And he greets it with joy, with joy, and the heart in his breast doth leap;
 But out of his ken the shapes of his warrior-comrades swim
 To the land whence seafarers bring no dear old saws for him;
 Then fresh grows sorrow and new to him whose bitter part
 Is to send o'er the frost-bound waves full often his weary heart.
 For this do I look around this world, and cannot see Wherefore or why my heart should not grow dark in me.
 When I think of the lives of the leaders, the
 clansmen mighty in mood;
 When I think how sudden and swift they yielded the place where they stood.
 So droops this mid-earth and falls, and never a man is found Wise ere a many winters have girt his life around.
 Full patient the sage must be, and he that would counsel teach—
 Not over-hot in his heart, nor over-swift in his speech;
 Nor faint of soul nor secure, nor fain for the fight nor afraid;
 Nor ready to boast before he know himself
 well arrayed.
 The proud-souled man must bide when he utters his vaunt, until He know of the thoughts of the heart, and whitherward turn they will.
 The prudent must understand how terror and awe shall be,
 When the glory and weal of the world lie waste, as now men see
 On our mid-earth, many a where, the windswept walls arise,
 And the ruined dwellings and void, and the
 rime that on them lies.
 The wine-halls crumble, bereft of joy the warriors lie.
 The flower of the doughty fallen, the proud ones fair to the eye.
 War took off some in death, and one did a strong bird bear

Over the deep; and one—his bones did the gray wolf share;
 And one was hid in a cave by a comrade
 sorrowful-faced.
 O, thus the Shaper of men hath laid the earth
 all waste,
 Till the works of the city-dwellers, the works of the giants of earth, Stood empty and lorn of the burst of the mighty revelers' mirth.
 "Who wisely hath mused on this wallstead,
 and ponders this dark life well,
 In his heart he hath often bethought him of slayings many and fell,
 And these be the words he taketh, the thoughts of his heart to tell:
 'Where is the horse and the rider? Where is the giver of gold?
 Where be the seats at the banquet? Where be the hall-joys of old?
 Alas for the burnished cup, for the byrned
 chief to-day!
 Alas for the strength of the prince! for the time hath passed away—
 Is hid 'neath the shadow of night, as it never had been at all.
 Behind the dear and doughty there standeth
 now a wall,
 A wall that is wondrous high, and with wondrous snake-work wrought.
 The strength of the spears hath fordene the earls and hath made them naught,
 The weapons greedy of slaughter, and she,
 the mighty Wyrd;
 And the tempests beat on the rocks, and the storm-wind that maketh afeard—
 The terrible storm that fetters the earth, the winter-bale,
 When the shadow of night falls wan, and wild
 is the rush of the hail,
 The cruel rush from the north, which maketh
 men to quail.
 Hardship-full is the earth, o'erturned when
 the stark Wyrd say:
 Here is the passing of riches, here friends are passing away;
 And men and kinsfolk pass, and nothing and none may stay;
 And all this earth-stead here shall be empty and void one day.' . ."

THE SEAFARER<sup>1</sup>

This poem is, like The Wanderer, preserved in the Exeter Book. Its author and date of composition are unknown, though it was probably written in the eighth century. The first part has been thought by some scholars to be a dialogue between an old mariner who knows the sea from bitter experience and a young man eager to go to sea. This is only conjecture, though it is plain that two opposed moods are realized by the poet and expressed. It has also been supposed that the second part is by a different and later hand, but this too is only conjecture.

PART I

I CAN sing of myself a true song, of my voyages telling,
How oft through laborious days, through the wearisome hours
I have suffered; have borne tribulations; explored in my ship,
Mid the terrible rolling of waves, habitations of sorrow.
Benumbed by the cold, oft the comfortless night-watch hath held me
At the prow of my craft as it tossed about under the cliffs.
My feet were imprisoned with frost, were fettered with ice-chains,
Yet hotly were wailing the querulous sighs round my heart;
And hunger within me, sea-wearied, made havoc of courage.
This he, whose lot happily chances on land, doth not know;
Nor how I on the ice-cold sea passed the winter in exile,
In wretchedness, robbed of my kinsmen, with icicles hung.
The hail flew in showers about me; and there I heard only
The roar of the sea, ice-cold waves, and the song of the swan;
For pastime the gannets' cry served me; the kittiwakes' chatter
For laughter of men; and for mead-drink the call of the sea-mews.

When storms on the rocky cliffs beat, then the terns, icy-feathered,
Made answer; full oft the sea-eagle forebodingly screamed,
The eagle with pinions wave-wet. There none of my kinsmen Might gladden my desolate soul; of this little he knows
Who possesses the pleasures of life, who has felt in the city
Some hardship, some trifling adversity, proud and wine-flushed.
How weary I oft had to tarry upon the seaway!
The shadows of night became darker, it snowed from the north;
The world was enchained by the frost; hail fell upon earth;
'Twas the coldest of grain. Yet the thoughts of my heart now are throbbing
To test the high streams, the salt waves in tumultuous play.
Desire in my heart ever urges my spirit to wander
To seek out the home of the stranger in lands afar off.
There is no one that dwells upon earth, so exalted in mind,
So large in his bounty, nor yet of such vigorous youth,
Nor so daring in deeds, nor to whom his liege lord is so kind,
But that he has always a longing, a seafaring passion
For what the Lord God shall bestow, be it honor or death.
No heart for the harp has he, nor for acceptance of treasure,

<sup>1</sup>The translation is by LaMotte Iddings. It is reprinted here with the permission of the editors and publishers from Select Translations from Old English Poetry, edited by A. S. Cook and C. B. Tinker, and published by Messrs. Ginn and Company.

No pleasure has he in a wife, no delight in the world,
 Nor in aught save the roll of the billows; but always a longing,
 A yearning uneasiness, hastens him on to the sea.

The woodlands are captured by blossoms,
 the hamlets grow fair,
 Broad meadows are beautiful, earth again
 bursts into life,
 And all stir the heart of the wanderer eager to journey,
 So he meditates going afar on the pathway of tides.

The cuckoo, moreover, gives warning with sorrowful note,
 Summer's harbinger sings, and forebodes to the heart bitter sorrow.

The nobleman comprehends not, the luxurious
 man,

What some must endure, who travel the farthest in exile.

Now my spirit uneasily turns in the heart's narrow chamber,

Now wanders forth over the tide, o'er the home of the whale,

To the ends of the earth—and comes back to me. Eager and greedy,

The lone wanderer screams, and resistlessly
 drives my soul onward,

Over the whale-path, over the tracts of the sea.

PART II

The delights of the Lord are far dearer to me
 than this dead,

Fleeting life upon earth, for I cannot believe that earth's riches

For ever endure. Each one of three things, ere its time comes,

Is always uncertain: violence, age, and disease

Wrench the soul away, doomed to depart.
 This is praise from the living,

From those who speak afterwards, this the best fame after death—

That ere he departed he labored, and wrought daring deeds

'Gainst the malice of fiends, and the devil; so men shall extol him,

His praise among angels shall live, ever,
 world without end,

His the blessing of life everlasting, and joy
 mid the hosts.

The days have departed, all pomps of earth's kingdom have vanished;

There now are no kings, no emperors now, no
 gold-givers

As of yore, when they wrought in their midst
 the most glorious deeds,

And lived in the lordliest power. This glory
 has fallen,

Delights have all vanished away; the weak
 ones remain,

And these govern the world, obtaining their pleasure with effort.

Power has declined, earth's glory grows aged
 and sear,

Like every man now in the world; old age
 overtakes him,

His countenance loses its color, gray-haired
 he laments;

He has seen his old friends, sons of princes,
 consigned to the earth.

This garment of flesh has no power, when
 the spirit escapes,

To drink in the sweet nor to taste of the bitter; it then

Has no power to stretch forth the hands or to think with the mind.

Though the grave should be covered with gold by the nearest of kin,

Be buried along with the dead in masses of
 treasure,

Still that will not go with them. Gold can no substitute be

For the fear of the Lord, to the soul which is laden with sin,

Which aforesaid, so long as it lived, kept that treasure concealed.

Great is the fear of the Lord; the earth
 trembles before it;

He established the unmovable earth, the world and the heavens.

Foolish is he who stands not in awe of the Lord—

Unexpectedly death comes upon him; but happy is he

Who lives humble in mind, to him cometh
 honor from heaven;

God doth establish the soul that believes in His might.

One should check a strong will, and should govern it firmly,

Be true unto men, and be clean in his manner
 of life.

Fate, God the Creator, is stronger than any man's will.

Come, let us reflect where our home is,
consider the way
By which we go thither; then let us each strive to press forward
To joy everlasting, where life has its source in God's love,

Where is heavenly hope. Then to Him who is holy be thanks,
Because He hath honored us; thanks to the Ruler of Heaven,
The Lord everlasting, throughout all the ages! Amen.

THE BATTLE OF BRUNANBURH<sup>1</sup>

This poem is preserved in four of the six extant manuscripts of the Saxon Chronicle—in the Parker MS. in the library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, and in three Cotton MSS. in the British Museum. Its author is unknown, but the date under which it is entered in the Chronicle is A. D. 937. The poem describes an historical event. Tennyson, whose translation is printed here, prefixed to it the following note: "Constantinus, King of the Scots, after having sworn allegiance to Æthelstan, allied himself with the Danes of Ireland under Anlaf, and invading England, was defeated by Æthelstan and his brother Edmund with great slaughter at Brunanburh in the year 937." Æthelstan reigned over the West-Saxons and Mercians from A. D. 925 to 940, and extended his influence throughout England. The site of Brunanburh is unknown. The most likely conjecture hitherto advanced is apparently that it is Bramber, near Preston in Lancashire.

I

ÆTHELSTAN King,
Lord among Earls,
Bracelet-bestower and Baron of Barons,
He with his brother,
Edmund Atheling,
Gaining a lifelong Glory in battle,
Slew with the sword-edge
There by Brunanburh,
Brake the shield-wall,
Hewed the linden-wood,
Hacked the battle-shield,
Sons of Edward with hammered brands.

II

Theirs was a greatness
Got from their grandsires—
Theirs that so often in Strife with their enemies Struck for their hoards and their hearths and their homes.

III

Bowed the spoiler,
Bent the Scotsman,
Fell the ship-crews
Doomed to the death.
All the field with blood of the fighters
Flowed, from when first the great Sun-star of morning-tide,
Lamp of the Lord God

Lord everlasting,
Glode over earth till the glorious creature
Sank to his setting.

IV

There lay many a man
Marred by the javelin,
Men of the Northland
Shot over shield.
There was the Scotsman
Weary of war.

V

We the West-Saxons,
Long as the daylight
Lasted, in companies Troubled the track of the host that we hated.
Grimly with swords that were sharp from the grind-stone,
Fiercely we hacked at the flyers before us.

VI

Mighty the Mercian,
Hard was his hand-play,
Sparing not any of Those that with Anlaf, Warriors over the Weltering waters
Borne in the bark's-bosom,
Drew to this island—
Doomed to the death.

VII

Five young kings put asleep by the sword-
stroke,
Seven strong Earls of the army of Anlaf

<sup>1</sup>This translation is by Alfred Tennyson. Tennyson stated that he more or less availed himself of his son's prose translation of the poem published in the Contemporary Review, November, 1876.

Fell on the war-field, numberless numbers,
Shipmen and Scotsmen.

VIII

Then the Norse leader,
Dire was his need of it,
Few were his following,
Fled to his war-ship;

Fleeted his vessel to sea with the king in it,
Saving his life on the fallow flood.

IX

Also the crafty one,
Constantinus,
Crept to his North again,
Hoar-headed hero!

X

Slender warrant had
He to be proud of
The welcome of war-knives—
He that was reft of his Folk and his friends that had Fallen in conflict,
Leaving his son too
Lost in the carnage,
Mangled to morsels,
A youngster in war!

XI

Slender reason had
He to be glad of
The clash of the war-glaive—
Traitor and trickster
And spurner of treaties—
He nor had Anlaf
With armies so broken
A reason for bragging
That they had the better
In perils of battle
On places of slaughter—
The struggle of standards,
The rush of the javelins,
The crash of the charges,
The wielding of weapons—
The play that they played with The children of Edward.

XII

Then with their nailed prows
Parted the Norsemen, a Blood-reddened relic of Javelins over
The jarring breaker, the deep-sea
billow,
Shaping their way toward Dyflen<sup>1</sup>
again,
Shamed in their souls.

XIII

Also the brethren,
King and Atheling,
Each in his glory,
Went to his own in his own West-Saxonland,
Glad of the war.

XIV

Many a carcase they left to be carrion,
Many a livid one, many a fallow-skin—
Left for the white-tailed eagle to tear it, and Left for the horny-nibbed raven to rend it,
and
Gave to the garbaging war-hawk to gorge it,
and
That gray beast, the wolf of the weald.

XV

Never had huger
Slaughter of heroes
Slain by the sword-edge—
Such as old writers
Have writ of in histories—
Hapt in this isle, since
Up from the East hither Saxon and Angle from Over the broad billow Broke into Britain with Haughty war-workers who Harried the Welshman, when Earls that were lured by the Hunger of glory gat
Hold of the land.

<sup>1</sup>Dublin.

THE BATTLE OF MALDON<sup>1</sup>

The unique manuscript in the Cotton collection in which The Battle of Maldon was preserved, was destroyed by fire in 1731. Fortunately this manuscript had been printed at Oxford five years before, by Thomas Hearne in his history of Glastonbury. Hearne's transcript has thus become our only source for the text of the poem. The author is unknown; he may have been one of the monks of Ely. The date of the poem is determined by the date of the battle described, for The Battle of Maldon, like The Battle of Brunanburh, describes an historical event. In the Saxon Chronicle under the year 991 there occurs the following entry: "In this year came Unlaf with ninety-three ships to Stan [Folkstone], and laid waste the country round about, and from there he went to Sandwich and so on to Ipswich and harried all the country. And then he came to Maldon where the ealdorman Byrhtnoth with his force came to meet him and fought against him. And they slew the ealdorman there and were masters of the field of battle, and afterwards peace was made with them and the King received him at the bishop's hands." This Unlaf was the famous Olaf Trygvasson, the favorite hero of Norse history. The site of the battle is thus described by Freeman (Norman Conquest, I, 268): "The battle took place near the town of Maldon [in Essex], on the banks of the tidal river Panta, now called the Blackwater. The town lies on a hill; immediately at its base flows one branch of the river while another, still crossed by a medieval bridge, flows at a little distance to the north. The Danish ships seem to have lain in the branch nearest to the town and their crews must have occupied the space between the two streams, while Byrhtnoth came to the rescue from the north. He seems to have halted on the spot now occupied by the church of Heybridge, having both streams between him and the town."

HE BADE each youth turn loose his horse and drive it far away,
And onward go with steadfast heart to mingle in the fray.

When Offa's kinsman saw the Earl no cowardice would brook,
Off from his wrist to woodland wide his falcon
dear he shook;

He joined the ranks, and straightway then might all men clearly know Never the knight would shrink from fight
when armed against the foe.

Beside his liege lord Eadric, too, in battle sought to be;
Forth to the war he bore his spear—a dauntless heart had he—

The while he with his hands could grasp the
buckler and broad sword;
Right well he kept the vow he pledged to fight before his lord.

There Byrhtnoth then arrayed his men and taught them how to stand,

To keep their ranks, and fearless grasp the buckler in the hand.

And when they were in order set, he lighted
from his steed

Among his own loved household-men whom he knew good at need.

The herald of the Vikings stood beside the
river shore,

And the sea-rover's haughty words before
the Earl he bore:

"From seamen bold I come: they bid that thou shalt straightway send

Treasure for ransom; better 'twill be for you in the end

To buy with gifts our onslaught off than with us war to hold.

No need to fight if ye agree—we'll make a peace for gold:

If so thou orderest it, who here among the rest art chief,

That thou wilt set thy people free, then bid
for their relief,

That they shall to the seamen give as seamen
shall decree

Treasure for peace; then take ye peace, and we will put to sea

With booty-laden ships, and peace henceforth between us be!"

Then Byrhtnoth lifted up his voice—his shield he brandished high,

<sup>1</sup>The translation is by H. W. Lumsden. It was first published in Macmillan's Magazine (Vol. 55). It is here reprinted from Select Translations from Old English Poetry with the permission of the editors, A. S. Cook and C. B. Tinker, and of the publishers, Messrs. Ginn and Company. A few lines (indicated by dots) are missing from both the beginning and the end of the poem.

And shook his slender ashen shaft—and thus he made reply.
 Wrathful and resolute he spake: "O thou sea-robber, hear What saith this folk! To you they give no tribute but the spear,
 The venomed point, the old keen edge, and all the battle-gear
 That works no good for you in fight! Go, seamen's herald, say
 This message of yet deeper hate: that here,
 an Earl, I stay
 Undaunted with my men to guard the kingdom, folk, and land
 Of Æthelred my lord. In war the heathen shall not stand!
 That ye should with our spoil go hence un-fought, since thus ye came
 So far into this land of ours, too great me-seems the shame!
 Nor think ye to win gold with ease—rather shall grim war-play
 And sword and spear our compact make ere we will tribute pay!"
 With that he bade his men go forth; their bucklers then they bore Till at the landing-place they stood beside the
 river-shore.
 Neither could reach the other there—between them flowed the tide;
 For after ebb the flood rolled up, it filled the channel wide.
 And till their spears together clashed too long
 the time did seem
 To Vikings and East-Saxon ranks arrayed by Panta's stream,
 For neither could the other hurt save by the arrows' flight
 Till ebb of tide. Then ready there and burning for the fight
 The Vikings stood, the seamen host. But Wulfstan—warrior old,
 The son of Ceola—with his kin by Byrhtnoth sent to hold
 The bridge against them, with the lance the foremost Viking slew
 Who stepped, foolhardy, on the bridge.
 With Wulfstan heroes two,
 Ælfhere and Maccus, firmly stood, no passage would they yield,
 But bravely fought against the foe while they could weapons wield.
 Now when the hated strangers saw the bridge-wards there so stout,

They changed their ground, and to the ford
 they led their forces out.
 Then for the heathen host the Earl made way, and overbold
 Men heard the son of Byrthelm shout across the waters cold:
 "Lo! here is room for you! Come on, come warriors to the fray!
 God only knows which of us twain shall hold
 the field to-day."
 Then onward came the wolves of war, they recked not of the flood; Westward o'er Panta's gleaming waves they bore their shields and stood Upon the bank. There 'gainst their foes were Byrhtnoth's men arrayed,
 And at his word they held their ground and buckler-war they made.
 Now drew the time of glorious deeds, the tide of battle nigh;
 And now the fatal hour was come when death-doomed men must die!
 Now loud uprose the battle-cry, and, greedy
 for their prey,
 The ravens wheeled, the eagles screamed.
 On earth was noise of fray!
 From hand was hurled the sharp-filed spear, the whetted arrow flew,
 The bow was busy, shield met spear, and fierce the combat grew;
 On either side brave soldiers fell. There Byrhtnoth's kinsman died, Wulfmær, his sister's son, all hewn with sword-wounds deep and wide.
 But to the Vikings recompense was fully paid; I know That Eadward smote one with his sword, nor did the stroke forego Till at his feet the doomed foe lay. For this his lord gave thanks To his bower-thane in season due. Thus stoutly in the ranks
 The warriors fought with weapons sharp, and each one strove to be The first whose spear might reach the life of death-doomed enemy.
 On earth was slaughter! Firm they stood;
 and Byrhtnoth's words of flame Stirred every heart to bide the brunt and win
 a glorious name.
 Forth went the hero old in war, he raised his sheltering shield
 And shook his spear, and onward went into the battlefield.

Thus of one mind went earl to churl—alike
their fell intent.

A southern lance the warrior's lord now pierced, by Viking sent;

But with his shield he thrust at it, the shaft
to splinters broke,

And bent the head till out it sprang; then fierce his wrath awoke,

And at the foe who dealt the wound he hurled his deadly spear.

Skilled was the leader of the host—he sent the javelin sheer

Through the youth's neck; his guiding hand
that Viking sought to slay;

And then another swift he shot, through
corslet it made way,

And in the heart through rings of mail the venomed lance-head stood.

The blither was the Earl for that—he laughed, the bold of mood,

And for the day's work rendered thanks that God to him had given.

But from a warrior's clenched hand a dart
was fiercely driven,

Too sure it went, and pierced the noble
thane of Æthelred.

Besides him stood a beardless youth—a boy
in battle dread—

Young Wulfmær, son of Wulfstan; he swift from the hero drew

The bloody dart and hurled it back; the hardened spear-head flew,

And on the earth the Viking lay who thus had reached his lord.

Then rushed a warrior armed to seize the goodly graven sword,

Bracelets, and corslet of the Earl, but Byrhtnoth drew his blade,

Brown-edged and broad, and fierce the strokes he on his corslet laid.

Too soon another smote his arm and hindered him. Then rolled

On earth the yellow-hilted sword, nor longer could he hold

Keen blade, nor weapon wield; but still the gray-haired leader bade

His men keep heart and onward press, good comrades undismayed.

No longer could he stand upright, his eyes
to heaven he bent:

"Ruler of nations! I give thanks for all that Thou hast lent

Of joys in this world. Now have I, O
gracious Lord! most need

That Thou show favor to my soul, that it to Thee may speed,

And to Thy kingdom, Lord of angels! pass
in peace. I pray

That hell-foes do me no despite."

They hewed him as he lay—

The heathen dogs!—and two with him
Ælfnóth and Wulfmær; there

Beside their lord they gave their lives.
Then those who did not dare

To bide the battle turned away, and foremost in the flight

Were Odda's sons: Godric forsook his leader
and the fight;

On his lord's horse he basely leaped—he who from that kind man

Had many a horse received—and with him
both his brothers ran.

Godric and Godwy turned and fled, they cared not for the strife,

But sought the fastness of the wood and saved their coward life!

And many more ran with them than be-seemed if they had thought

Of all the good in happier times the Earl for them had wrought,

So in the mead-hall at the moot had Offa
said one day,

That many there spoke boldly who at need would fall away.

Thus fell the leader of the host, the Earl of Æthelred,

And all his hearth-companions saw that there their lord lay dead.

But hotly thither came proud thanes and dauntless men drew nigh;

One thing alone they all desired—to take revenge or die!

Young Ælfwine, Ælfric's son was he, thus boldly spake to all

And cheered them on: "O think how oft we've sat—brave men in hall!—

And on the benches o'er the mead made boast of deeds in fight!

Now let the truly brave be seen! I will in all men's sight

Uphold my ancestry; I come of noble Mercian race,

Ealhelm my grandsire was—a ruler wise and
high in place;

And never shall my people's thanes reproach
me that I fled

To seek my native land, and left my leader
lying dead—

To me the worst of ills, for he my kinsman was and lord!"

Then forward burning for revenge he rushed,
and with his sword

He smote a seaman 'mong the foe (on earth
the heathen lay

Hewn with the weapon) and he cheered his comrades to the fray.

"Ælfwine, well said!" cried Offa then, and shook his ashen spear,

"Full surely it behoves us all, when slain our lord lies here,

To cheer each other on to fight while we can weapons wield,

Good sword, hard brand, or lance! Nigh lost to us hath been the field

Through Godric, Odda's dastard son; when on the noble steed

He rode away, too many deemed it was our lord indeed,

And thus the folk were all dismayed—
broken the buckler-wall;

On his foul deed that wrought such flight my curses ever fall!"

• Leofsunu to the warriors spake and raised his linden shield:

"A vow I've made that one foot's length here
will I never yield,

But to revenge my dear loved lord right onward will I fare!

Round Stourmere never shall they say—the sturdy fighters there—

The scornful words that, now my lord is fallen, I turned from fray

And went home lordless! No! me rather spear and sword shall slay!"

Wrathful he rushed, he scorned to flee, but fought with steadfast heart.

Dunhere (an aged churl was he) then spoke and shook his dart;

Each warrior to revenge the earl he bade, and loud o'er all,

"Let him," he cried, "who on the foe would wreak his leader's fall

Brook no delay, nor care for life!" And onward went they then—

Regardless of their lives they went. Fiercely
the household men,

The grim spear-bearers fought; to God they prayed that they might take Full vengeance on their enemies for their loved leader's sake.

The hostage Æscferth, Ecglaf's son, now helped them readily,

(Of stout Northumbrian race he came); never at all paused he

In war-play, but continually he let his arrows
go;

Sometimes with them he struck a shield, and
sometimes pierced a foe;

With every shot he dealt a wound while he
could weapons wield.

Eager and fierce tall Eadward stood, the foremost in the field,

Never a foot length would he flee, thus haughtily he spoke,

Nor turn his back on his dead lord! The buckler-wall he broke,

And fought the foe till, ere he died, full
vengeance he had wrought,

For his wealth-giver, on the Danes. And fiercely likewise fought

His noble comrade Sigbyrht's brother Æthe-
ric, brave and true,

And many more; the keeled shields they clove, they sternly slew.

All broken was the buckler's edge—dreadful the corslets' song!

Now Offa struck and felled to earth a seaman 'mid the throng,

But there Gadd's kinsman bit the dust—too soon was Offa slain!

Yet he fulfilled the vow he pledged his lord
that both again

Should ride safe homeward to the burgh, or wounded in the fray

Die on the battle-field. Thane-like, beside his lord, he lay!

Loud clashed the shields! Oft went the spear through doomed man's house of
life!

The Vikings, burning for the war, came on.
Then to the strife

Wigstan the son of Thurstan rushed, and in the crowd slew three

Ere he lay dead. 'Twas fiercest moot! The warriors steadfastly

In battle stood and wounded fell. On earth was slaughter dire!

Oswald and Ealdwold all the while still kept
the ranks entire,

And both the brothers with fit words besought their kinsmen dear

Unflinchingly to bide the brunt and wield the sword and spear.

Then Byrhtwold the old comrade spoke;
he shook his ashen dart

And grasped his shield and proudly cried:
"The bolder be each heart,
Each spirit sterner, valor more, now that our strength is less!
Here our good leader lies on earth; may he who now from stress Of war-play turns, for ever rue! Full old of years am I—
Hence will I never, but beside my lord I hope to lie,

The man beloved!"

So Godric, too, the son of Æthelgar, Cheered on the warriors to the fight. Oft flew his spear afar—
His deadly spear—and Vikings smote: then rushing on the foe
Foremost of all he cut and hewed till battle laid him low.
Not that same Godric he who turned from
fight. . .

SIR GAWAIN AND THE GREEN KNIGHT<sup>1</sup>

This poem is preserved in a manuscript of the Cotton collection in the British Museum. The manuscript dates from the end of the fourteenth century or early in the fifteenth, but the poem was probably written about 1370. Of the author nothing is known save what can be gathered from this poem—or from this poem and from the Pearl, Purity, and Patience (three other poems found in the same manuscript) if, as some scholars think on the basis of internal evidence, all four poems are by the same author. In either case we can say that the author was probably a native of Lancashire, as he uses the West Midland dialect; he was also a highly educated and cultivated gentleman, familiar with the best society of his day. “He had a keen eye, a vivid imagination, and a love for external phenomena, that gave him a power for description unequalled in Middle English literature. He was a lover of details; but he handled the details with a constructive power and a picturesqueness that create vivid impressions or realistic scenes. His observation of dress, of color, of position, of relative location, of deportment, enabled him at the opening of the piece to make of a conventional situation an intense, rich, dramatic scene with a splendid background. . . . He caught, and makes us feel, the very spirit of nature in varied moods, spring, summer, autumn—but especially nature in her wilder aspects, the biting winter, the icy rain, the dreary forest, the rugged rocks, the snow-covered country, and the cold hills lost in mist” (J. E. Wells, Manual of the Writings in Middle English, pp. 56–57). It should be added that this author had, too, real feeling for the higher spirit of chivalry and an uncommon fineness of nature. It is believed that he drew the materials for his story from a Norman-French romance now lost, but that their perfection of treatment is all his own. Sir Gawain and the Green Knight is by general consent the best of the English romances. It is also interesting for the picture it gives of the earlier Gawain; for in the beginning Gawain was without peer for courage and courtesy among the knights of the Round Table. It was only later that he came to be depreciated for the sake of others, and it is unfortunate that both Malory and Tennyson have contributed to make him best known as an “empty-headed, empty-hearted worldling.”

I

AFTER the siege and the assault of Troy, when that burg was destroyed and burnt to ashes, and the traitor tried for his treason, the noble Æneas and his kin sailed forth to become princes and patrons of well-nigh all the Western Isles. Thus Romulus built Rome (and gave to the city his own name, which it bears even to this day); and Ticius turned him to Tuscany; and Langobard raised him up dwellings in Lombardy; and Felix Brutus sailed far over the French flood, and founded the kingdom of Britain, wherein have been war and waste and wonder, and bliss and bale, oftentimes since.

And in that kingdom of Britain have been wrought more gallant deeds than in any other; but of all British kings Arthur was the most valiant, as I have heard tell; therefore will I set forth a wondrous adventure that fell out in his time. And if ye will listen to me, but for a little while, I will tell it even as it stands in story stiff and strong, fixed in the letter, as it hath long been known in the land.

King Arthur lay at Camelot upon a Christmas-tide, with many a gallant lord and lovely lady, and all the noble brotherhood of the Round Table. There they held rich revels with gay talk and jest; one while they would ride forth to joust and tourney, and again back to the court to make carols;<sup>2</sup> for there was the feast holden fifteen days with all the mirth that men could devise, song and glee, glorious to hear, in the daytime, and dancing at night. Halls and chambers were crowded with noble guests, the bravest of knights and the loveliest of ladies, and Arthur himself was the comeliest king that ever held a court. For all this fair folk were in their youth, the fairest and most fortunate under heaven, and the king himself of such fame that it were hard now to name so valiant a hero.

<sup>1</sup>This translation is by Miss Jessie L. Weston. It forms the first volume in the series of “Arthurian Romances unrepresented in Malory’s Morte d’ Arthur” published by David Nutt.

<sup>2</sup>Dances accompanied by song.

Now the New Year had but newly come in, and on that day a double portion was served on the high table to all the noble guests, and thither came the king with all his knights, when the service in the chapel had been sung to an end. And they greeted each other for the New Year, and gave rich gifts, the one to the other (and they that received them were not wroth, that may ye well believe!), and the maidens laughed and made mirth till it was time to get them to meat. Then they washed and sat them down to the feasting in fitting rank and order, and Guinevere the queen, gaily clad, sat on the high dais. Silken was her seat, with a fair canopy over her head, of rich tapestries of Tars, embroidered, and studded with costly gems; fair she was to look upon, with her shining gray eyes, a fairer woman might no man boast himself of having seen.

But Arthur would not eat till all were served, so full of joy and gladness was he, even as a child; he liked not either to lie long, or to sit long at meat, so worked upon him his young blood and his wild brain. And another custom he had also, that came of his nobility, that he would never eat upon an high day till he had been advised of some knightly deed, or of some strange and marvelous tale, of his ancestors, or of arms, or of other ventures. Or till some stranger knight should seek of him leave to joust with one of the Round Table, that they might set their lives in jeopardy, one against another, as fortune might favor them. Such was the king's custom when he sat in hall at each high feast with his noble knights; therefore on that New Year tide, he abode, fair of face, on the throne, and made much mirth withal.

Thus the king sat before the high tables, and spake of many things; and there good Sir Gawain was seated by Guinevere the queen, and on her other side sat Agravain, à la dure main,<sup>1</sup> both were the king's sister's sons and full gallant knights. And at the end of the table was Bishop Bawdewyn, and Ywain, King Urien's son, sat at the other side alone. These were worthily served on the dais, and at the lower tables sat many valiant knights. Then they bare the first course with the blast of trumpets and waving of banners, with the sound of drums and pipes, of song and lute, that many a heart was uplifted at the melody. Many were the dainties, and rare the meats; so great was the plenty they might scarce find room on the board to set on the dishes. Each helped himself as he liked best, and to each two were twelve dishes, with great plenty of beer and wine.

Now I will say no more of the service, but that ye may know there was no lack, for there drew near a venture that the folk might well have left their labor to gaze upon. As the sound of the music ceased, and the first course had been fitly served, there came in at the hall door one terrible to behold, of stature greater than any on earth; from neck to loin so strong and thickly made, and with limbs so long and so great that he seemed even as a giant. And yet he was but a man, only the mightiest that might mount a steed; broad of chest and shoulders and slender of waist, and all his features of like fashion; but men marveled much at his color, for he rode even as a knight, yet was green all over.

For he was clad all in green, with a straight coat, and a mantle above; all decked and lined with fur was the cloth and the hood that was thrown back from his locks and lay on his shoulders. Hose had he of the same green, and spurs of bright gold with silken fastenings richly worked; and all his vesture was verily green. Around his waist and his saddle were bands with fair stones set upon silken work, 't were too long to tell of all the trifles that were embroidered thereon—birds and insects in gay gauds of green and gold. All the trappings of his steed were of metal of like enamel, even the stirrups that he stood in stained of the same, and stirrups and saddle-bow alike gleamed and shone with green stones. Even the steed on which he rode was of the same hue, a green horse, great and strong, and hard to hold, with brodered bridle, meet for the rider.

The knight was thus gaily dressed in green, his hair falling around his shoulders; on his breast hung a beard, as thick and green as a bush, and the beard and the hair of his head were clipped all round above his elbows. The lower part of his sleeves was fastened with clasps in the same wise as a king's mantle. The horse's mane was crisp and plaited with many a knot folded in with gold thread about the fair green, here a twist of the hair, here another of gold. The tail was twined in like manner, and both were bound about with a band of bright green set with many a precious stone; then they were tied aloft in a cunning knot, whereon rang many bells of burnished gold. Such a steed might no other ride, nor had such ever been looked upon in that hall ere that time; and all who saw that knight spake and said that a man might scarce abide his stroke.

<sup>1</sup>Of the hard hand.

The knight bore no helm nor hauberk, neither gorget nor breast-plate, neither shaft nor buckler to smite nor to shield, but in one hand he had a holly-bough, that is greenest when the groves are bare, and in his other an axe, huge and uncomely, a cruel weapon in fashion, if one would picture it. The head was an ell-yard long, the metal all of green steel and gold, the blade burnished bright, with a broad edge, as well shapen to shear as a sharp razor. The steel was set into a strong staff, all bound round with iron, even to the end, and engraved with green in cunning work. A lace was twined about it, that looped at the head, and all adown the handle it was clasped with tassels on buttons of bright green richly broidered.

The knight rideth through the entrance of the hall, driving straight to the high daïs, and greeted no man, but looked ever upwards; and the first words he spake were, "Where is the ruler of this folk? I would gladly look upon that hero, and have speech with him." He cast his eyes on the knights, and mustered<sup>1</sup> them up and down, striving ever to see who of them was of most renown.

Then was there great gazing to behold that chief, for each man marveled what it might mean that a knight and his steed should have even such a hue as the green grass; and that seemed even greener than green enamel on bright gold. All looked on him as he stood, and drew near unto him, wondering greatly what he might be; for many marvels had they seen, but none such as this, and phantasm and faërie did the folk deem it. Therefore were the gallant knights slow to answer, and gazed astounded, and sat stone still in a deep silence through that goodly hall, as if a slumber were fallen upon them. I deem it was not all for doubt, but some for courtesy that they might give ear unto his errand.

Then Arthur beheld this adventurer before his high daïs, and knightly he greeted him, for fearful was he never. "Sir," he said, "thou art welcome to this place—lord of this hall am I, and men call me Arthur. Light thee down, and tarry awhile, and what thy will is, that shall we learn after."

"Nay," quoth the stranger, "so help me he that sitteth on high, 't was not mine errand to tarry any while in this dwelling; but the praise of this thy folk and thy city is lifted up on high, and thy warriors are holden for the best and most valiant of those who ride mail-clad to the fight. The wisest and the worthiest of this world are they, and well proven in all knightly sports. And here, as I have heard tell, is fairest courtesy; therefore have I come hither as at this time. Ye may be sure by the branch that I bear here that I come in peace, seeking no strife. For had I willed to journey in warlike guise I have at home both hauberk and helm, shield and shining spear, and other weapons to mine hand, but since I seek no war, my raiment is that of peace. But if thou be as bold as all men tell, thou wilt freely grant me the boon I ask."

And Arthur answered, "Sir Knight, if thou cravest battle here thou shalt not fail for lack of a foe."

And the knight answered, "Nay, I ask no fight; in faith here on the benches are but beardless children; were I clad in armor on my steed there is no man here might match me. Therefore I ask in this court but a Christmas jest, for that it is Yule-tide and New Year, and there are here many fain for sport. If any one in this hall holds himself so hardy, so bold both of blood and brain, as to dare strike me one stroke for another, I will give him as a gift this axe, which is heavy enough, in sooth, to handle as he may list, and I will abide the first blow, unarmed as I sit. If any knight be so bold as to prove my words, let him come swiftly to me here, and take this weapon; I quit claim to it, he may keep it as his own, and I will abide his stroke, firm on the floor. Then shalt thou give me the right to deal him another, the respite of a year and a day shall he have. Now haste, and let see whether any here dare say aught."

Now if the knights had been astounded at the first, yet stiller were they all, high and low, when they had heard his words. The knight on his steed straightened himself in the saddle, and rolled his eyes fiercely round the hall; red they gleamed under his green and bushy brows. He frowned and twisted his beard, waiting to see who should rise, and when none answered he cried aloud in mockery, "What, is this Arthur's hall, and these the knights whose renown hath run through many realms? Where are now your pride and your conquests, your wrath, and anger, and mighty words? Now are the praise and the renown of the Round Table overthrown by one man's speech, since all keep silence for dread ere ever they have seen a blow!"

<sup>1</sup>Surveyed.

With that he laughed so loudly that the blood rushed to the king's fair face for very shame; he waxed wroth, as did all his knights, and sprang to his feet, and drew near to the stranger and said, "Now by heaven, foolish is thy asking, and thy folly shall find its fitting answer. I know no man aghast at thy great words. Give me here thine axe and I shall grant thee the boon thou hast asked." Lightly he sprang to him and caught at his hand, and the knight, fierce of aspect, lighted down from his charger.

Then Arthur took the axe and gripped the haft, and swung it round, ready to strike. And the knight stood before him, taller by the head than any in the hall; he stood, and stroked his beard, and drew down his coat, no more dismayed for the king's threats than if one had brought him a drink of wine.

Then Gawain, who sat by the queen, leaned forward to the king and spake, "I beseech ye, my lord, let this venture be mine. Would ye but bid me rise from this seat, and stand by your side, so that my liege lady thought it not ill, then would I come to your counsel before this goodly court. For I think it not seemly when such challenges be made in your hall that ye yourself should undertake it, while there are many bold knights who sit beside ye, none are there, methinks, of readier will under heaven, or more valiant in open field. I am the weakest, I wot, and the feeblest of wit, and it will be the less loss of my life if ye seek sooth. For save that ye are mine uncle, naught is there in me to praise, no virtue is there in my body save your blood, and since this challenge is such folly that it beseems ye not to take it, and I have asked it from ye first, let it fall to me, and if I bear myself ungallantly, then let all this court blame me."

Then they all spake with one voice that the king should leave this venture and grant it to Gawain.

Then Arthur commanded the knight to rise, and he rose up quickly and knelt down before the king, and caught hold of the weapon; and the king loosed his hold of it, and lifted up his hand, and gave him his blessing, and bade him be strong both of heart and hand. "Keep thee well, nephew," quoth Arthur, "that thou give him but the one blow, and if thou redest<sup>1</sup> him rightly I trow thou shalt well abide the stroke he may give thee after."

Gawain stepped to the stranger, axe in hand, and he, never fearing, awaited his coming. Then the Green Knight spake to Sir Gawain, "Make we our covenant ere we go further. First, I ask thee, knight, what is thy name? Tell me truly, that I may know thee."

"In faith," quoth the good knight, "Gawain am I, who give thee this buffet, let what may come of it; and at this time twelvemonth will I take another at thine hand with whatsoever weapon thou wilt, and none other."

Then the other answered again, "Sir Gawain, so may I thrive as I am fain to take this buffet at thine hand," and he quoth further, "Sir Gawain, it liketh me well that I shall take at thy fist that which I have asked here, and thou hast readily and truly rehearsed all the covenant that I asked of the king, save that thou shalt swear me, by thy troth, to seek me thyself wherever thou hopest that I may be found, and win thee such reward as thou dealest me to-day, before this folk."

"Where shall I seek thee?" quoth Gawain. "Where is thy place? By him that made me, I wot never where thou dwellest, nor know I thee, knight, thy court, nor thy name. But teach me truly all that pertaineth thereto, and tell me thy name, and I shall use all my wit to win my way thither, and that I swear thee for sooth, and by my sure troth."

"That is enough in the New Year, it needs no more," quoth the Green Knight to the gallant Gawain, "if I tell thee truly when I have taken the blow, and thou hast smitten

<sup>1</sup>Handlest.

me; then will I teach thee of my house and home, and mine own name, then mayest thou ask thy road and keep covenant. And if I waste no words then farest thou the better, for thou canst dwell in thy land, and seek no further. But take now thy toll, and let see how thou strikest."

"Gladly will I," quoth Gawain, handling his axe.

Then the Green Knight swiftly made him ready, he bowed down his head, and laid his long locks on the crown that his bare neck might be seen. Gawain gripped his axe and raised it on high, the left foot he set forward on the floor, and let the blow fall lightly on the bare neck. The sharp edge of the blade sundered the bones, smote through the neck, and clave it in two, so that the edge of the steel bit on the ground, and the fair head fell to the earth that many struck it with their feet as it rolled forth. The blood spurted forth, and glistened on the green raiment, but the knight neither faltered nor fell; he started forward with out-stretched hand, and caught the head, and lifted it up; then he turned to his steed, and took hold of the bridle, set his foot in the stirrup, and mounted. His head he held by the hair, in his hand. Then he seated himself in his saddle as if naught ailed him, and he were not headless. He turned his steed about, the grim corpse bleeding freely the while, and they who looked upon him doubted them much for the covenant.

For he held up the head in his hand, and turned the face towards them that sat on the high daïs, and it lifted up the eyelids and looked upon them and spake as ye shall hear. "Look, Gawain, that thou art ready to go as thou hast promised, and seek loyally till thou find me, even as thou hast sworn in this hall in the hearing of these knights. Come thou, I charge thee, to the Green Chapel; such a stroke as thou hast dealt thou hast deserved, and it shall be promptly paid thee on New Year's morn. Many men know me as the Knight of the Green Chapel, and if thou askest, thou shalt not fail to find me. Therefore it behooves thee to come, or to yield thee as recreant."

With that he turned his bridle, and galloped out at the hall door, his head in his hands, so that the sparks flew from beneath his horse's hoofs. Whither he went none knew, no more than they wist whence he had come; and the king and Gawain they gazed and laughed, for in sooth this had proved a greater marvel than any they had known aforetime.

Though Arthur the king was astonished at his heart, yet he let no sign of it be seen, but spake in courteous wise to the fair queen: "Dear lady, be not dismayed, such craft is well suited to Christmas-tide when we seek jesting, laughter, and song, and fair carols of knights and ladies. But now I may well get me to meat, for I have seen a marvel I may not forget." Then he looked on Sir Gawain, and said gaily, "Now, fair nephew, hang up thine axe, since it has hewn enough," and they hung it on the dossal<sup>1</sup> above the daïs, where all men might look on it for a marvel, and by its true token tell of the wonder. Then the twain sat them down together, the king and the good knight, and men served them with a double portion, as was the share of the noblest, with all manner of meat and of minstrelsy. And they spent that day in gladness, but Sir Gawain must well bethink him of the heavy venture to which he had set his hand.

II

This beginning of adventures had Arthur at the New Year; for he yearned to hear gallant tales, though his words were few when he sat at the feast. But now had they stern work on hand. Gawain was glad to begin the jest in the hall, but ye need have no marvel if the end be heavy. For though a man be merry in mind when he has well drunk, yet a year runs full swiftly, and the beginning but rarely matches the end.

For Yule was now over-past, and the year after, each season in its turn following the other. For after Christmas comes crabbed Lent, that will have fish for flesh and simpler cheer. But then the weather of the world chides with winter; the cold withdraws itself, the clouds uplift, and the rain falls in warm showers on the fair plains. Then the flowers come forth, meadows and grove are clad in green, the birds make ready to build, and sing sweetly for solace of the soft summer that follows thereafter. The blossoms bud and blow in the hedgerows rich and rank, and noble notes enough are heard in the fair woods.

<sup>1</sup>Tapestry.

After the season of summer, with the soft winds, when zephyr breathes lightly on seeds and herbs, joyous indeed is the growth that waxes thereout when the dew drips from the leaves beneath the blissful glance of the bright sun. But then comes harvest and hardens the grain, warning it to wax ripe ere the winter. The drought drives the dust on high, flying over the face of the land; the angry wind of the welkin wrestles with the sun; the leaves fall from the trees and light upon the ground, and all brown are the groves that but now were green, and ripe is the fruit that once was flower. So the year passes into many yesterdays, and winter comes again, as it needs no sage to tell us.

When the Michaelmas moon was come in with warnings of winter, Sir Gawain be-thought him full oft of his perilous journey. Yet till All Hallows Day he lingered with Arthur, and on that day they made a great feast for the hero's sake, with much revel and richness of the Round Table. Courteous knights and comely ladies, all were in sorrow for the love of that knight, and though they spake no word of it, many were joyless for his sake.

And after meat, sadly Sir Gawain turned to his uncle, and spake of his journey, and said, "Liege lord of my life, leave from you I crave. Ye know well how the matter stands without more words; to-morrow am I bound to set forth in search of the Green Knight."

Then came together all the noblest knights, Ywain and Erec, and many another. Sir Dodinel le Sauvage, the Duke of Clarence, Launcelot and Lionel, and Lucan the Good, Sir Bors and Bedivere, valiant knights both, and many another hero, with Sir Mador de la Porte, and they all drew near, heavy at heart, to take counsel with Sir Gawain. Much sorrow and weeping was there in the hall to think that so worthy a knight as Gawain should wend his way to seek a deadly blow, and should no more wield his sword in fight. But the knight made ever good cheer, and said, "Nay, wherefore should I shrink? What may a man do but prove his fate?"

He dwelt there all that day, and on the morn he arose and asked betimes for his armor; and they brought it unto him on this wise: first, a rich carpet was stretched on the floor (and brightly did the gold gear glitter upon it), then the knight stepped upon it, and handled the steel; clad he was in a doublet of silk, with a close hood, lined fairly throughout. Then they set the steel shoes upon his feet, and wrapped his legs with greaves, with polished knee-caps, fastened with knots of gold. Then they cased his thighs in cuisses closed with thongs, and brought him the byrnie of bright steel rings sewn upon a fair stuff. Well burnished braces they set on each arm with good elbow-pieces, and gloves of mail, and all the goodly gear that should shield him in his need. And they cast over all a rich surcoat, and set the golden spurs on his heels, and girt him with a trusty sword fastened with a silken bawdrick. When he was thus clad his harness was costly, for the least loop or latchet gleamed with gold. So armed as he was he hearkened Mass and made his offering at the high altar. Then he came to the king, and the knights of his court, and courteously took leave of lords and ladies, and they kissed him, and commended him to Christ.

With that was Gringalet ready, girt with a saddle that gleamed gaily with many golden fringes, enriched and decked anew for the venture. The bridle was all barred about with bright gold buttons, and all the covertures and trappings of the steed, the crupper and the rich skirts, accorded with the saddle; spread fair with the rich red gold that glittered and gleamed in the rays of the sun.

Then the knight called for his helmet, which was well lined throughout, and set it high on his head, and hasped it behind. He wore a light kerchief over the ventail, that was broidered and studded with fair gems on a broad silken ribbon, with birds of gay color, and many a turtle<sup>1</sup> and true-lover's knot interlaced thickly, even as many a maiden had wrought diligently for seven winters long. But the circlet which crowned his helmet was yet more precious, being adorned with a device in diamonds. Then they brought him his shield, which was of bright red, with the pentangle painted thereon in gleaming gold. And why that noble prince bare the pentangle I am minded to tell you, though my tale tarry thereby. It is a sign that Solomon set ere-while, as betokening truth; for it is a figure with five points and each line overlaps the other, and nowhere hath it beginning or end, so that in English it is called "the endless knot." And therefore was it well suiting to this knight and to his arms, since Gawain was faithful in five and five-fold, for pure was he as gold, void of all villainy and endowed with all virtues. Therefore he bare the pentangle on shield and surcoat as truest of heroes and gentlest of knights.

<sup>1</sup>Turtle-dove.

For first he was faultless in his five senses; and his five fingers never failed him; and all his trust upon earth was in the five wounds that Christ bare on the cross, as the Creed tells. And wherever this knight found himself in stress of battle he deemed well that he drew his strength from the five joys which the Queen of Heaven had of her Child. And for this cause did he bear an image of Our Lady on the one half of his shield, that whenever he looked upon it he might not lack for aid. And the fifth five that the hero used were frankness and fellowship above all, purity and courtesy that never failed him, and compassion that surpasses all; and in these five virtues was that hero wrapped and clothed. And all these, five-fold, were linked one in the other, so that they had no end, and were fixed on five points that never failed, neither at any side were they joined or sundered, nor could ye find beginning or end. And therefore on his shield was the knot shapen, red-gold upon red, which is the pure pentangle. Now was Sir Gawain ready, and he took his lance in hand, and bade them all farewell, he deemed it had been for ever.

Then he smote the steed with his spurs, and sprang on his way, so that sparks flew from the stones after him. All that saw him were grieved at heart, and said one to the other, "By Christ, 't is great pity that one of such noble life should be lost! I' faith, 't were not easy to find his equal upon earth. The king had done better to have wrought more warily. Yonder knight should have been made a duke; a gallant leader of men is he, and such a fate had beseemed him better than to be hewn in pieces at the will of an elfish man, for mere pride. Who ever knew a king to take such counsel as to risk his knights on a Christmas jest?" Many were the tears that flowed from their eyes when that goodly knight rode from the hall. He made no delaying, but went his way swiftly, and rode many a wild road, as I heard say in the book.

So rode Sir Gawain through the realm of Logres<sup>1</sup>, on an errand that he held for no jest. Often he lay companionless at night, and must lack the fare that he liked. No comrade had he save his steed, and none save God with whom to take counsel. At length he drew nigh to North Wales, and left the isles of Anglesey on his left hand, crossing over the fords by the foreland over at Holyhead, till he came into the wilderness of Wirral,<sup>2</sup> where but few dwell who love God and man of true heart. And ever he asked, as he fared, of all whom he met, if they had heard any tidings of a Green Knight in the country thereabout, or of a Green Chapel? And all answered him, "Nay," never in their lives had they seen any man of such a hue. And the knight wended his way by many a strange road and many a rugged path, and the fashion of his countenance changed full often ere he saw the Green Chapel.

Many a cliff did he climb in that unknown land, where afar from his friends he rode as a stranger. Never did he come to a stream or a ford but he found a foe before him, and that one so marvelous, so foul and fell, that it behooved him to fight. So many wonders did that knight behold, that it were too long to tell the tenth part of them. Sometimes he fought with dragons and wolves; sometimes with wild men that dwelt in the rocks; another while with bulls, and bears, and wild boars, or with giants of the high moorland that drew near to him. Had he not been a doughty knight, enduring, and of well-proved valor, and a servant of God, doubtless he had been slain, for he was oft in danger of death. Yet he cared not so much for the strife; what he deemed worse was when the cold clear water was shed from the clouds, and froze ere it fell on the fallow ground. More nights than enough he slept in his harness on the bare rocks, near slain with the sleet, while the stream leapt bubbling from the crest of the hills, and hung in hard icicles over his head.

Thus in peril and pain, and many a hard-

<sup>1</sup>England.

<sup>2</sup>In Cheshire.

ship, the knight rode alone till Christmas Eve, and in that tide he made his prayer to the Blessed Virgin that she would guide his steps and lead him to some dwelling. On that morning he rode by a hill, and came into a thick forest, wild and drear; on each side were high hills, and thick woods below them of great hoar oaks, a hundred together, of hazel and hawthorn with their trailing boughs intertwined, and rough ragged moss spreading everywhere. On the bare twigs the birds chirped piteously, for pain of the cold. The knight upon Gringalet rode lonely beneath them, through marsh and mire, much troubled at heart lest he should fail to see the service of the Lord, who on that self-same night was born of a maiden for the cure of our grief; and therefore he said, sighing, "I beseech thee, Lord, and Mary thy gentle Mother, for some shelter where I may hear Mass, and thy matins at morn. This I ask meekly, and thereto I pray my Paternoster, Ave, and Credo." Thus he rode praying, and lamenting his misdeeds, and he crossed himself, and said, "May the Cross of Christ speed me."

Now that knight had crossed himself but thrice ere he was aware in the wood of a dwelling within a moat, above a lawn, on a mound surrounded by many mighty trees that stood round the moat. 'Twas the fairest castle that ever a knight owned; built in a meadow with a park all about it, and a spiked palisade, closely driven, that enclosed the trees for more than two miles. The knight was ware of the hold from the side, as it shone through the oaks. Then he lifted off his helmet, and thanked Christ and Saint Julian that they had courteously granted his prayer, and hearkened to his cry. "Now," quoth the knight, "I beseech ye, grant me fair hostel." Then he pricked Gringalet with his golden spurs, and rode gaily towards the great gate, and came swiftly to the bridge end.

The bridge was drawn up and the gates close shut; the walls were strong and thick, so that they might fear no tempest. The knight on his charger abode on the bank of the deep double ditch that surrounded the castle. The walls were set deep in the water, and rose aloft to a wondrous height; they were of hard hewn stone up to the corbels, which were adorned beneath the battlements with fair carvings, and turrets set in between with many a loophole; a better barbican Sir Gawain had never looked upon. And within he beheld the high hall, with its tower and many windows with carven cornices, and chalk-white chimneys on the turreted roofs that shone fair in the sun. And everywhere thickly scattered on the castle battlements, were pinnacles, so many that it seemed as if it were all wrought out of paper, so white was it.

The knight on his steed deemed it fair enough, if he might come to be sheltered within it to lodge there while that the holy-day lasted. He called aloud, and soon there came a porter of kindly countenance, who stood on the wall and greeted this knight and asked his errand.

"Good sir," quoth Gawain, "wilt thou go mine errand to the high lord of the castle, and crave for me lodging?"

"Yea, by Saint Peter," quoth the porter. "In sooth I trow that ye be welcome to dwell here so long as it may like ye."

Then he went, and came again swiftly, and many folk with him to receive the knight. They let down the great drawbridge, and came forth and knelt on their knees on the cold earth to give him worthy welcome. They held wide open the great gates, and courteously he bade them rise, and rode over the bridge. Then men came to him and held his stirrup while he dismounted, and took and stabled his steed. There came down knights and squires to bring the guest with joy to the hall. When he raised his helmet there were many to take it from his hand, fain to serve him, and they took from him sword and shield.

Sir Gawain gave good greeting to the noble and the mighty men who came to do him honor. Clad in his shining armor they led him to the hall, where a great fire burned brightly on the floor; and the lord of the household came forth from his chamber to meet the hero fitly. He spake to the knight, and said: "Ye are welcome to do here as it likes ye. All that is here is your own to have at your will and disposal."

"Gramercy!" quoth Gawain, "may Christ requite ye."

As friends that were fain each embraced the other; and Gawain looked on the knight who greeted him so kindly, and though-

't was a bold warrior that owned that burg.

Of mighty stature he was, and of high age; broad and flowing was his beard, and of a bright hue. He was stalwart of limb, and strong in his stride, his face fiery red, and his speech free: in sooth he seemed one well fitted to be a leader of valiant men.

Then the lord led Sir Gawain to a chamber, and commanded folk to wait upon him, and at his bidding there came men enough who brought the guest to a fair bower. The bedding was noble, with curtains of pure silk wrought with gold, and wondrous coverings of fair cloth all embroidered. The curtains ran on ropes with rings of red gold, and the walls were hung with carpets of Orient, and the same spread on the floor. There with mirthful speeches they took from the guest his byrnie and all his shining armor, and brought him rich robes of the choicest in its stead. They were long and flowing, and became him well, and when he was clad in them all who looked on the hero thought that surely God had never made a fairer knight: he seemed as if he might be a prince without peer in the field where men strive in battle.

Then before the hearth-place, whereon the fire burned, they made ready a chair for Gawain, hung about with cloth and fair cushions; and there they cast around him a mantle of brown samite, richly embroidered and furred within with costly skins of ermine, with a hood of the same, and he seated himself in that rich seat, and warmed himself at the fire, and was cheered at heart. And while he sat thus, the serving men set up a table on trestles, and covered it with a fair white cloth, and set thereon salt-cellar, and napkin, and silver spoons; and the knight washed at his will, and set him down to meat.

The folk served him courteously with many dishes seasoned of the best, a double portion. All kinds of fish were there, some baked in bread, some broiled on the embers, some sodden,<sup>1</sup> some stewed and savored with spices, with all sorts of cunning devices to his taste. And often he called it a feast, when they spake gaily to him all together, and said, "Now take ye this penance, and it shall be for your amendment." Much mirth thereof did Sir Gawain make.

Then they questioned that prince courteously of whence he came; and he told them that he was of the court of Arthur, who is the rich royal king of the Round Table, and that it was Gawain himself who was within their walls, and would keep Christmas with them, as the chance had fallen out. And when the lord of the castle heard those tidings he laughed aloud for gladness, and all men in that keep were joyful that they should be in the company of him to whom belonged all fame, and valor, and courtesy, and whose honor was praised above that of all men on earth. Each said softly to his fellow, "Now shall we see courteous bearing, and the manner of speech befitting courts. What charm lieth in gentle speech shall we learn without asking, since here we have welcomed the fine father of courtesy. God has surely shown us his grace since he sends us such a guest as Gawain! When men shall sit and sing, blithe for Christ's birth, this knight shall bring us to the knowledge of fair manners, and it may be that hearing him we may learn the cunning speech of love."

By the time the knight had risen from dinner it was near nightfall. Then chaplains took their way to the chapel, and rang loudly, even as they should, for the solemn evensong of the high feast. Thither went the lord, and the lady also, and entered with her maidens into a comely closet, and thither also went Gawain. Then the lord took him by the sleeve and led him to a seat, and called him by his name, and told him he was of all men in the world the most welcome. And Sir Gawain thanked him truly, and each kissed the other, and they sat gravely together throughout the service.

Then was the lady fain to look upon that knight; and she came forth from her closet with many fair maidens. The fairest of ladies was she in face, and figure, and coloring, fairer even than Guinevere, so the knight thought. She came through the chancel to greet the hero; another lady held her by the left hand, older than she, and seemingly of highest estate, with many nobles about her. But unlike to look upon were those ladies, for if the younger were fair, the elder was yellow. Rich red were the cheeks of the one, rough and wrinkled those of the other; the kerchiefs

<sup>1</sup>Boiled.

of the one were broidered with many glistening pearls, her throat and neck bare, and whiter than the snow that lies on the hills; the neck of the other was swathed in a gorget, with a white wimple over her black chin. Her forehead was wrapped in silk with many folds, worked with knots, so that naught of her was seen save her black brows, her eyes, her nose, and her lips, and those were bleared, and ill to look upon. A worshipful lady in sooth one might call her! In figure was she short and broad, and thickly made—far fairer to behold was she whom she led by the hand.

When Gawain beheld that fair lady, who looked at him graciously, with leave of the lord he went towards them, and, bowing low, he greeted the elder, but the younger and fairer he took lightly in his arms, and kissed her courteously, and greeted her in knightly wise. Then she hailed him as friend, and he quickly prayed to be counted as her servant, if she so willed. Then they took him between them, and talking, led him to the chamber, to the hearth, and bade them bring spices, and they brought them in plenty with the good wine that was wont to be drunk at such seasons. Then the lord sprang to his feet and bade them make merry, and took off his hood, and hung it on a spear, and bade him win the worship thereof who should make most mirth that Christmas-tide. "And I shall try, by my faith, to fool it with the best, by the help of my friends, ere I lose my raiment." Thus with gay words the lord made trial to gladden Gawain with jests that night, till it was time to bid them light the tapers, and Sir Gawain took leave of them and gat him to rest.

In the morn when all men call to mind how Christ our Lord was born on earth to die for us, there is joy, for his sake, in all dwellings of the world; and so was there here on that day. For high feast was held, with many dainties and cunningly cooked messes. On the daïs sat gallant men, clad in their best. The ancient dame sat on the high seat with the lord of the castle beside her. Gawain and the fair lady sat together, even in the midst of the board when the feast was served; and so throughout all the hall each sat in his degree, and was served in order. There was meat, there was mirth, there was much joy, so that to tell thereof would take me too long, though peradventure I might strive to declare it. But Gawain and that fair lady had much joy of each other's company through her sweet words and courteous converse. And there was music made before each prince, trumpets and drums, and merry pipings; each man hearkened his minstrel, and they too hearkened theirs.

So they held high feast that day and the next, and the third day thereafter, and the joy on Saint John's Day was fair to hearken, for 't was the last of the feast and the guests would depart in the gray of the morning. Therefore they awoke early, and drank wine, and danced fair carols, and at last, when it was late, each man took his leave to wend early on his way. Gawain would bid his host farewell, but the lord took him by the hand, and led him to his own chamber beside the hearth, and there he thanked him for the favor he had shown him in honoring his dwelling at that high season, and gladdening his castle with his fair countenance. "I wis, sir, that while I live I shall be held the worthier that Gawain has been my guest at God's own feast."

"Gramercy, sir," quoth Gawain, "in good faith, all the honor is yours, may the High King give it you, and I am but at your will to work your behest, inasmuch as I am beholden to you in great and small by rights."

Then the lord did his best to persuade the knight to tarry with him, but Gawain answered that he might in no wise do so. Then the host asked him courteously what stern behest had driven him at the holy season from the king's court, to fare all alone, ere yet the feast was ended?

"Forsooth," quoth the knight, "ye say but the truth: 't is a high quest and a pressing that hath brought me afield, for I am summoned myself to a certain place, and I know not whither in the world I may wend to find it; so help me Christ, I would give all the kingdom of Logres an I might find it by New Year's morn. Therefore, sir, I make request of you that ye tell me truly if ye ever heard word of the Green Chapel, where it may be found, and the Green Knight that keeps it. For I am pledged by solemn compact sworn between us to meet that knight at the New Year if so I were on life; and of that same New Year it wants but little—I' faith, I would look on that hero more joyfully than on any other fair sight! Therefore, by your will, it behooves me to leave you, for I have but barely three days, and I would as fain fall dead as fail of mine errand."

Then the lord quoth, laughing, "Now must ye needs stay, for I will show you your goal, the Green Chapel, ere your term be at an end, have ye no fear! But ye can take your ease, friend, in your bed, till the fourth day, and go forth on the first of the year and come to that place at mid-morn to do as ye will. Dwell here till New Year's Day, and then rise and set forth, and ye shall be set in the way; 't is not two miles hence."

Then was Gawain glad, and he laughed gaily. "Now I thank you for this above all else. Now my quest is achieved I will dwell here at your will, and otherwise do as ye shall ask."

Then the lord took him, and set him beside him, and bade the ladies be fetched for their greater pleasure, tho' between themselves they had solace. The lord, for gladness, made merry jest, even as one who wist not what to do for joy; and he cried aloud to the knight, "Ye have promised to do the thing I bid ye: will ye hold to this behest, here, at once?"

"Yea, forsooth," said that true knight, "while I abide in your burg I am bound by your behest."

"Ye have traveled from far," said the host, "and since then ye have waked with me, ye are not well refreshed by rest and sleep, as I know. Ye shall therefore abide in your chamber, and lie at your ease to-morrow at Mass-tide, and go to meat when ye will with my wife, who shall sit with you, and comfort you with her company till I return; and I shall rise early and go forth to the chase." And Gawain agreed to all this courteously.

"Sir knight," quoth the host, "we will make a covenant. Whatsoever I win in the wood shall be yours, and whatever may fall to your share, that shall ye exchange for it. Let us swear, friend, to make this exchange, however our hap may be, for worse or for better."

"I grant ye your will," quoth Gawain the good; "if ye list so to do, it liketh me well."

"Bring hither the wine-cup, the bargain is made," so said the lord of that castle. They laughed each one, and drank of the wine, and made merry, these lords and ladies, as it pleased them. Then with gay talk and merry jest they rose, and stood, and spoke softly, and kissed courteously, and took leave of each other. With burning torches, and many a serving-man, was each led to his couch; yet ere they gat them to bed the old lord oft repeated their covenant, for he knew well how to make sport.

III

Full early, ere daylight, the folk rose up; the guests who would depart called their grooms, and they made them ready, and saddled the steeds, tightened up the girths, and trussed up their mails. The knights, all arrayed for riding, leapt up lightly, and took their bridles, and each rode his way as pleased him best.

The lord of the land was not the last. Ready for the chase, with many of his men, he ate a sop hastily when he had heard Mass, and then with blast of the bugle fared forth to the field. He and his nobles were to horse ere daylight glimmered upon the earth.

Then the huntsmen coupled their hounds, unclosed the kennel door, and called them out. They blew three blasts gaily on the bugles, the hounds bayed fiercely, and they that would go a-hunting checked and chastised them. A hundred hunters there were of the best, so I have heard tell. Then the trackers gat them to the trysting-place and uncoupled the hounds, and the forest rang again with their gay blasts.

At the first sound of the hunt the game quaked for fear, and fled, trembling, along the vale. They betook them to the heights, but the liers in wait turned them back with loud cries; the harts they let pass them, and the stags with their spreading antlers, for the lord had forbidden that they should be slain, but the hinds and the does they turned back, and drave down into the valleys. Then might ye see much shooting of arrows. As the deer fled under the boughs a broad whistling shaft smote and wounded each sorely, so that, wounded and bleeding, they fell dying on the banks. The hounds followed swiftly on their tracks, and hunters, blowing the horn, sped after them with ringing shouts as if the cliffs burst asunder. What game escaped those that shot was run down at the outer ring. Thus were they driven on the hills, and harassed at the waters, so well did the men know their work, and the greyhounds were so great and swift that they ran them down as fast as the hunters could slay them. Thus the lord passed the day in mirth and joyfulness, even to nightfall.

So the lord roamed the woods, and Gawain, that good knight, lay ever a-bed, curtained about, under the costly coverlet, while the daylight gleamed on the walls. And as he lay half slumbering, he heard a little sound at the door, and he raised his head, and caught back a corner of the curtain, and waited to see what it might be. It was the lovely lady, the lord's wife; she shut the door softly behind her, and turned towards the bed; and Gawain was shamed, laid him down softly and made as if he slept. And she came lightly to the bedside, within the curtain, and sat herself down beside him, to wait till he wakened. The knight lay there awhile, and marvelled within himself what her coming might betoken; and he said to himself, "'T were more seemly if I asked her what hath brought her hither.'" Then he made feint to waken, and turned towards her, and opened his eyes as one astonished, and crossed himself; and she looked on him laughing, with her cheeks red and white, lovely to behold, and small smiling lips.

"Good morrow, Sir Gawain," said that fair lady; "ye are but a careless sleeper, since one can enter thus. Now are ye taken un-awares, and lest ye escape me I shall bind you in your bed; of that be ye assured!" Laughing, she spake these words.

"Good morrow, fair lady," quoth Gawain blithely. "I will do your will, as it likes me well. For I yield me readily, and pray your grace, and that is best, by my faith, since I needs must do so." Thus he jested again, laughing. "But an ye would, fair lady, grant me this grace that ye pray your prisoner to rise. I would get me from bed, and array me better, then could I talk with ye in more comfort."

"Nay, forsooth, fair sir," quoth the lady, "ye shall not rise, I will rede<sup>1</sup> ye better. I shall keep ye here, since ye can do no other, and talk with my knight whom I have captured. For I know well that ye are Sir Gawain, whom all the world worships, wheresoever ye may ride. Your honor and your courtesy are praised by lords and ladies, by all who live. Now ye are here and we are alone, my lord and his men are afeld; the serving men in their beds, and my maidens also, and the door shut upon us. And since in this hour I have him that all men love I shall use my time well with speech, while it lasts. Ye are welcome to my company, for it behooves me in sooth to be your servant."

"In good faith," quoth Gawain, "I think me that I am not him of whom ye speak, for unworthy am I of such service as ye here proffer. In sooth, I were glad if I might set myself by word or service to your pleasure; a pure joy would it be to me!"

"In good faith, Sir Gawain," quoth the gay lady, "the praise and the prowess that pleases all ladies I lack them not, nor hold them light; yet are there ladies enough who would liever now have the knight in their hold, as I have ye here, to dally with your courteous words, to bring them comfort and to ease their cares, than much of the treasure and the gold that are theirs. And now, through the grace of Him who upholds the heavens, I have wholly in my power that which they all desire!"

Thus the lady, fair to look upon, made him great cheer, and Sir Gawain, with modest words, answered her again: "Madam," he quoth, "may Mary requite ye, for in good faith I have found in ye a noble frankness. Much courtesy have other folk shown me, but the honor they have done me is naught to the worship of yourself, who knoweth but good."

"By Mary," quoth the lady, "I think otherwise; for were I worth all the women alive, and had I the wealth of the world in my hand, and might choose me a lord to my liking, then, for all that I have seen in ye, Sir Knight, of beauty and courtesy and blithe semblance, and for all that I have hearkened and hold for true, there should be no knight on earth to be chosen before ye."

"Well I wot," quoth Sir Gawain, "that ye have chosen a better; but I am proud that ye should so prize me, and as your servant do

<sup>1</sup>Manage.

I hold ye my sovereign, and your knight am I, and may Christ reward ye."

So they talked of many matters till mid-morn was past, and ever the lady made as though she loved him, and the knight turned her speech aside. For though she were the brightest of maidens, yet had he forborne to show her love for the danger that awaited him, and the blow that must be given without delay.

Then the lady prayed her leave from him, and he granted it readily. And she gave him good-day, with laughing glance, but he must needs marvel at her words:

"Now He that speeds fair speech reward ye this disport; but that ye be Gawain my mind misdoubts me greatly."

"Wherefore?" quoth the knight quickly, fearing lest he had lacked in some courtesy.

And the lady spake: "So true a knight as Gawain is holden, and one so perfect in courtesy, would never have tarried so long with a lady but he would of his courtesy have craved a kiss at parting."

Then quoth Gawain, "I wot I will do even as it may please ye, and kiss at your commandment, as a true knight should who forbears to ask for fear of displeasure."

At that she came near and bent down and kissed the knight, and each commended the other to Christ, and she went forth from the chamber softly.

Then Sir Gawain rose and called his chamberlain and chose his garments, and when he was ready he gat him forth to Mass, and then went to meat, and made merry all day till the rising of the moon, and never had a knight fairer lodging than had he with those two noble ladies, the elder and the younger.

And ever the lord of the land chased the hinds through holt and heath till eventide, and then with much blowing of bugles and baying of hounds they bore the game homeward; and by the time daylight was done all the folk had returned to that fair castle. And when the lord and Sir Gawain met together, then were they both well pleased. The lord commanded them all to assemble in the great hall, and the ladies to descend with their maidens, and there, before them all, he bade the men fetch in the spoil of the day's hunting, and he called unto Gawain, and counted the tale of the beasts, and showed them unto him, and said, "What think ye of this game, Sir Knight? Have I deserved of ye thanks for my woodcraft?"

"Yea, I wis," quoth the other, "here is the fairest spoil I have seen this seven year in the winter season."

"And all this do I give ye, Gawain," quoth the host, "for by accord of covenant ye may claim it as your own."

"That in sooth," quoth the other, "I grant you that same; and I have fairly won this within walls, and with as good will do I yield it to you." With that he clasped his hands round the lord's neck and kissed him as courteously as he might. "Take ye here my spoils, no more have I won; ye should have it freely, though it were greater than this."

"T is good," said the host, "gramercy thereof. Yet were I fain to know where ye won this same favor, and if it were by your own wit?"

"Nay," answered Gawain, "that was not in the bond. Ask me no more: ye have taken what was yours by right, be content with that."

They laughed and jested together, and sat them down to supper, where they were served with many dainties; and after supper they sat by the hearth, and wine was served out to them; and oft in their jesting they promised to observe on the morrow the same covenant that they had made before, and whatever chance might betide, to exchange their spoil, be it much or little, when they met at night. Thus they renewed their bargain before the whole court, and then the night-drink was served, and each courteously took leave of the other and gat him to bed.

By the time the cock had crowed thrice the lord of the castle had left his bed; Mass was sung and meat fitly served. The folk were forth to the wood ere the day broke, with hound and horn they rode over the plain, and uncoupled their dogs among the thorns. Soon they struck on the scent, and the hunt cheered on the hounds who were first to seize it, urging them with shouts. The others hastened to the cry, forty at once, and there rose such a clamor from the pack that the rocks rang again. The huntsmen spurred them on with shouting and blasts of the horn; and the hounds drew together to a thicket betwixt the water and a high crag in the cliff beneath the hillside. There where the rough rock fell ruggedly they, the huntsmen, fared to the finding, and cast about round the hill and the thicket behind them. The knights wist well what beast was within, and would drive him forth with the bloodhounds. And as they beat the bushes, suddenly over the beaters there rushed forth a wondrous great and fierce boar, long since had he left the herd to roam by himself. Grunting, he cast many to the ground, and fled forth at his best speed, without more mischief. The men hallooed loudly and cried, "Hay! Hay!" and blew the horns to urge on the hounds, and rode swiftly after the boar. Many a time did he turn to bay and tare the hounds, and they yelped, and howled shrilly. Then the men made ready their arrows and shot at him, but the points were turned on his thick hide, and the barbs would not bite upon him, for the shafts shivered in pieces, and the head but leapt again wherever it hit.

But when the boar felt the stroke of the arrows he waxed mad with rage, and turned on the hunters and tare many, so that, affrightened, they fled before him. But the lord on a swift steed pursued him, blowing his bugle; as a gallant knight he rode through the woodland chasing the boar till the sun grew low.

So did the hunters this day, while Sir Gawain lay in his bed lapped in rich gear; and the lady forgat not to salute him, for early was she at his side, to cheer his mood.

She came to the bedside and looked on the knight, and Gawain gave her fit greeting, and she greeted him again with ready words, and sat her by his side and laughed, and with a sweet look she spoke to him:

"Sir, if ye be Gawain, I think it a wonder that ye be so stern and cold, and care not for the courtesies of friendship, but if one teach ye to know them ye cast the lesson out of your mind. Ye have soon forgotten what I taught ye yesterday, by all the truest tokens that I knew!"

"What is that?" quoth the knight. "I trow I know not. If it be sooth that ye say, then is the blame mine own."

"But I taught ye of kissing," quoth the fair lady. "Wherever a fair countenance is shown him, it behooves a courteous knight quickly to claim a kiss."

"Nay, my dear," said Sir Gawain, "cease that speech; that durst I not do lest I were denied, for if I were forbidden I wot I were wrong did I further entreat."

"I' faith," quoth the lady merrily, "ye may not be forbid, ye are strong enough to constrain by strength an ye will, were any so discourteous as to give ye denial."

"Yea, by heaven," said Gawain, "ye speak well; but threats profit little in the land where I dwell, and so with a gift that is given not of good will! I am at your commandment to kiss when ye like, to take or to leave as ye list."

Then the lady bent her down and kissed him courteously.

And as they spake together she said, "I would learn somewhat from ye, an ye would not be wroth, for young ye are and fair, and so courteous and knightly as ye are known to be, the head of all chivalry, and versed in all wisdom of love and war—'t is ever told of true knights how they adventured their lives for their true love, and endured hardships for her favors, and avenged her with valor, and eased her sorrows, and brought joy to her bower; and ye are the fairest knight of your time, and your fame and your honor are everywhere, yet I have sat by ye here twice, and never a word have I heard of love! Ye who are so courteous and skilled in such love ought surely to teach one so young and unskilled some little craft of true love! Why are ye so unlearned who art otherwise so famous? Or is it that ye deemed me unworthy to hearken to your teaching? For shame, Sir Knight! I come hither alone and sit at your side to learn of ye some skill; teach me of your wit, while my lord is from home."

"In good faith," quoth Gawain, "great is my joy and my profit that so fair a lady as ye are should deign to come hither, and trouble ye with so poor a man, and make sport with your knight with kindly countenance, it pleaseth me much. But that I, in my turn, should take it upon me to tell of love and such like matters to ye who know more by half, or a hundred fold, of such craft than I do, or ever shall in all my lifetime, by my troth 't were folly indeed! I will work your will to the best of my might as I am bounden, and evermore will I be your servant, so help me Christ!"

Then often with guile she questioned that knight that she might win him to woo her, but he defended himself so fairly that none might in any wise blame him, and naught but bliss and harmless jesting was there between them. They laughed and talked together till at last she kissed him, and craved her leave of him, and went her way.

Then the knight rose and went forth to Mass, and afterward dinner was served and he sat and spake with the ladies all day. But the lord of the castle rode ever over the land chasing the wild boar, that fled through the thickets, slaying the best of his hounds and breaking their backs in sunder; till at last he was so weary he might run no longer, but made for a hole in a mound by a rock. He got the mound at his back and faced the hounds, whetting his white tusks and foaming at the mouth. The huntsmen stood aloof, fearing to draw nigh him; so many of them had been already wounded that they were loath to be torn with his tusks, so fierce he was and mad with rage. At length the lord himself came up, and saw the beast at bay, and the men standing aloof. Then quickly he sprang to the ground and drew out a bright blade, and waded through the stream to the boar.

When the beast was aware of the knight with weapon in hand, he set up his bristles and snorted loudly, and many feared for their lord lest he should be slain. Then the boar leapt upon the knight so that beast and man were one atop of the other in the water; but the boar had the worst of it, for the man had marked, even as he sprang, and set the point of his brand to the beast's chest, and drove it up to the hilt, so that the heart was split in twain, and the boar fell snarling, and was swept down by the water to where a hundred hounds seized on him, and the men drew him to shore for the dogs to slay.

Then was there loud blowing of horns and baying of hounds, the huntsmen smote off the boar's head, and hung the carcass by the four feet to a stout pole, and so went on their way homewards. The head they bore before the lord himself, who had slain the beast at the ford by force of his strong hand.

It seemed him o'er long ere he saw Sir Gawain in the hall, and he called, and the guest came to take that which fell to his share. And when he saw Gawain the lord laughed aloud, and bade them call the ladies and the household together, and he showed them the game, and told them the tale, how they hunted the wild boar through the woods, and of his length and breadth and height; and Sir Gawain commended his deeds and praised him for his valor, well proven, for so mighty a beast had he never seen before.

Then they handled the huge head, and the lord said aloud, "Now, Gawain, this game is your own by sure covenant, as ye right well know."

"'T is sooth," quoth the knight, "and as truly will I give ye all I have gained." He took the host round the neck, and kissed him courteously twice. "Now are we quits," he said, "this eventide, of all the covenants that we made since I came hither."

And the lord answered, "By Saint Giles, ye are the best I know; ye will be rich in a short space if ye drive such bargains!"

Then they set up the tables on trestles, and covered them with fair cloths, and lit waxen tapers on the walls. The knights sat and were served in the hall, and much game and glee was there round the hearth, with many songs, both at supper and after; song of Christmas, and new carols, with all the mirth one may think of. And ever that lovely lady sat by the knight, and with still stolen looks made such feint of pleasing him, that Gawain marveled much, and was wroth with himself, but he could not for his courtesy return her fair glances, but dealt with her cunningly, however she might strive to wrest the thing.

When they had tarried in the hall so long as it seemed them good, they turned to the inner chamber and the wide hearth-place, and there they drank wine, and the host proffered to renew the covenant for New Year's Eve; but the knight craved leave to depart on the morrow, for it was nigh to the term when he must fulfil his pledge. But the lord would withhold him from so doing, and prayed him to tarry, and said:

"As I am a true knight I swear my troth that ye shall come to the Green Chapel to achieve your task on New Year's morn, long before prime.<sup>1</sup> Therefore abide ye in your bed, and I will hunt in this wood, and hold ye to the covenant to exchange with me against all the spoil I may bring hither. For twice have I tried ye, and found ye true, and the morrow shall be the third time and the best. Make we merry now while we may, and think on joy, for misfortune may take a man whensoever it wills."

<sup>1</sup>Probably nine o'clock.

Then Gawain granted his request, and they brought them drink, and they gat them with lights to bed.

Sir Gawain lay and slept softly, but the lord, who was keen on woodcraft, was afoot early. After Mass he and his men ate a morsel, and he asked for his steed; all the knights who should ride with him were already mounted before the hall gates.

'T was a fair frosty morning, for the sun rose red in ruddy vapor, and the welkin was clear of clouds. The hunters scattered them by a forest side, and the rocks rang again with the blast of their horns. Some came on the scent of a fox, and a hound gave tongue; the huntsmen shouted, and the pack followed in a crowd on the trail. The fox ran before them, and when they saw him they pursued him with noise and much shouting, and he wound and turned through many a thick grove, often cowering and hearkening in a hedge. At last by a little ditch he leapt out of a spinney, stole away slyly by a copse path, and so out of the wood and away from the hounds. But he went, ere he wist, to a chosen tryst, and three started forth on him at once, so he must needs double back, and betake him to the wood again.

Then was it joyful to hearken to the hounds; when all the pack had met together and had sight of their game they made as loud a din as if all the lofty cliffs had fallen clattering together. The huntsmen shouted and threatened, and followed close upon him so that he might scarce escape, but Reynard was wily, and he turned and doubled upon them and led the lord and his men over the hills, now on the slopes, now in the vales, while the knight at home slept through the cold morning beneath his costly curtains.

But the fair lady of the castle rose betimes, and clad herself in a rich mantle that reached even to the ground, left her throat and her fair neck bare, and was bordered and lined with costly furs. On her head she wore no golden circlet, but a network of precious stones, that gleamed and shone through her tresses in clusters of twenty together. Thus she came into the chamber, closed the door after her, and set open a window, and called to him gaily, "Sir Knight, how may ye sleep? The morning is so fair."

Sir Gawain was deep in slumber, and in his dream he vexed him much for the destiny that should befall him on the morrow, when he should meet the knight at the Green Chapel, and abide his blow; but when the lady spake he heard her, and came to himself, and roused from his dream and answered swiftly. The lady came laughing, and kissed him courteously, and he welcomed her fittingly with a cheerful countenance. He saw her so glorious and gaily dressed, so faultless of features and complexion, that it warmed his heart to look upon her.

They spake to each other smiling, and all was bliss and good cheer between them. They exchanged fair words, and much happiness was therein, yet was there a gulf between them, and she might win no more of her knight, for that gallant prince watched well his words—he would neither take her love, nor frankly refuse it. He cared for his courtesy, lest he be deemed churlish, and yet more for his honor lest he be traitor to his host. "God forbid," quoth he to himself, "that it should so befall." Thus with courteous words did he set aside all the special speeches that came from her lips.

Then spake the lady to the knight, "Ye deserve blame if ye hold not that lady who sits beside ye above all else in the world, if ye have not already a love whom ye hold dearer, and like better, and have sworn such firm faith to that lady that ye care not to loose it—and that am I now fain to believe. And now I pray ye straitly that ye tell me that in truth, and hide it not."

And the knight answered, "By Saint John" (and he smiled as he spake) "no such love have I, nor do I think to have yet awhile."

"That is the worst word I may hear," quoth the lady, "but in sooth I have mine answer; kiss me now courteously, and I will go hence; I can but mourn as a maiden that loves much."

Sighing, she stooped down and kissed him, and then she rose up and spake as she stood, "Now, dear, at our parting do me this grace, give me some gift, if it were but thy glove, that I may bethink me of my knight, and lessen my mourning."

"Now, I wis," quoth the knight, "I would that I had here the most precious thing that I possess on earth that I might leave ye as love-token, great or small, for ye have deserved forsooth more reward than I might give ye. But it is not to your honor to have at this time a glove for reward as gift from Gawain, and I am here on a strange errand, and have no man with me, nor mails with goodly things—that mislikes me much, lady, at this time; but each man must fare as he is taken, if for sorrow and ill."

"Nay, knight highly honored," quoth that lovesome lady, "though I have naught of yours, yet shall ye have somewhat of mine." With that she reached him a ring of red gold with a sparkling stone therein, that shone even as the sun (wit ye well, it was worth many marks); but the knight refused it, and spake readily.

"I will take no gift, lady, at this time. I have none to give, and none will I take."

She prayed him to take it, but he refused her prayer, and sware in sooth that he would not have it.

The lady was sorely vexed, and said, "If ye refuse my ring as too costly, that ye will not be so highly beholden to me, I will give you my girdle as a lesser gift." With that she loosened a lace that was fastened at her side, knit upon her kirtle under her mantle. It was wrought of green silk, and gold, only braided by the fingers, and that she offered to the knight, and besought him though it were of little worth that he would take it, and he said nay, he would touch neither gold nor gear ere God give him grace to achieve the adventure for which he had come hither. "And therefore, I pray ye, displease ye not, and ask me no longer, for I may not grant it. I am dearly beholden to ye for the favor ye have shown me, and ever, in heat and cold, will I be your true servant."

"Now," said the lady, "ye refuse this silk, for it is simple in itself, and so it seems, indeed; lo, it is small to look upon and less in cost, but whoso knew the virtue that is knit therein he would, peradventure, value it more highly. For whatever knight is girded with this green lace, while he bears it knotted about him there is no man under heaven can overcome him, for he may not be slain for any magic on earth."

Then Gawain bethought him, and it came into his heart that this were a jewel for the jeopardy that awaited him when he came to the Green Chapel to seek the return blow—could he so order it that he should escape unslain, 't were a craft worth trying. Then he bare with her chiding, and let her say her say, and she pressed the girdle on him and prayed him to take it, and he granted her prayer, and she gave it him with good will, and besought him for her sake never to reveal it but to hide it loyally from her lord, and the knight agreed that never should any man know it, save they two alone. He thanked her often and heartily, and she kissed him for the third time.

Then she took her leave of him, and when she was gone Sir Gawain rose, and clad him in rich attire, and took the girdle, and knotted it round him, and hid it beneath his robes. Then he took his way to the chapel, and sought out a priest privily and prayed him to teach him better how his soul might be saved when he should go hence; and there he shrived him, and showed his misdeeds, both great and small, and besought mercy and craved absolution; and the priest absolved<sup>1</sup> him, and set him as clean as if doomsday had been on the morrow. And afterwards Sir Gawain made him merry with the ladies, with carols, and all kinds of joy, as never he did but that one day, even to night-fall; and all the men marveled at him, and said that never since he came thither had he been so merry.

Meanwhile the lord of the castle was abroad chasing the fox; awhile he lost him, and as he rode through a spinney he heard the hounds near at hand, and Reynard came creeping through a thick grove, with all the pack at his heels. Then the lord drew out his shining brand, and cast it at the beast, and the fox swerved aside for the sharp edge, and would have doubled back, but a hound was on him ere he might turn, and right before the horse's feet they all fell on him, and worried him fiercely, snarling the while.

Then the lord leapt from his saddle, and caught the fox from the jaws, and held it aloft over his head, and hallooed loudly, and many brave hounds bayed as they beheld it; and the hunters hied them thither, blowing their horns; all that bare bugles blew them at once, and all the others shouted. 'T was the merriest meeting that ever men heard, the clamor that was raised at the death of the fox. They rewarded the hounds, stroking them and rubbing their heads, and took Reynard and stripped him of his coat; then blowing their horns, they turned them homewards, for it was nigh nightfall.

<sup>1</sup>Absolved.

The lord was gladsome at his return, and found a bright fire on the hearth, and the knight beside it, the good Sir Gawain, who was in joyous mood for the pleasure he had had with the ladies. He wore a robe of blue, that reached even to the ground, and a surcoat richly furred, that became him well. A hood like to the surcoat fell on his shoulders, and all alike were done about with fur. He met the host in the midst of the floor, and jesting, he greeted him, and said, "Now shall I be first to fulfil our covenant which we made together when there was no lack of wine." Then he embraced the knight, and kissed him thrice, as solemnly as he might.

"Of a sooth," quoth the other, "ye have good luck in the matter of this covenant, if ye made a good exchange!"

"Yet, it matters naught of the exchange," quoth Gawain, "since what I owe is swiftly paid."

"Marry," said the other, "mine is behind, for I have hunted all this day, and naught have I got but this foul fox-skin, and that is but poor payment for three such kisses as ye have here given me."

"Enough," quoth Sir Gawain, "I thank ye, by the Rood."

Then the lord told them of his hunting, and how the fox had been slain.

With mirth and minstrelsy, and dainties at their will, they made them as merry as a folk well might till 't was time for them to sever, for at last they must needs betake them to their beds. Then the knight took his leave of the lord, and thanked him fairly.

"For the fair sojourn that I have had here at this high feast may the High King give ye honor. I give ye myself, as one of your servants, if ye so like; for I must needs, as you know, go hence with the morn, and ye will give me, as ye promised, a guide to show me the way to the Green Chapel, an God will suffer me on New Year's Day to deal the doom of my weird."<sup>1</sup>

"By my faith," quoth the host, "all that ever I promised, that shall I keep with good will." Then he gave him a servant to set him in the way, and lead him by the downs, that he should have no need to ford the stream, and should fare by the shortest road through the groves; and Gawain thanked the lord for the honor done him. Then he would take leave of the ladies, and courteously he kissed them, and spake, praying them to receive his thanks, and they made like reply; then with many sighs they commended him to Christ, and he departed courteously from that fold. Each man that he met he thanked him for his service and his solace, and the pains he had been at to do his will; and each found it as hard to part from the knight as if he had ever dwelt with him.

Then they led him with torches to his chamber, and brought him to his bed to rest. That he slept soundly I may not say, for the morrow gave him much to think on. Let him rest awhile, for he was near that which he sought, and if ye will but listen to me I will tell ye how it fared with him thereafter.

IV

Now the New Year drew nigh, and the night passed, and the day chased the darkness, as is God's will; but wild weather wakened therewith. The clouds cast the cold to the earth, with enough of the north to slay them that lacked clothing. The snow drave smartly, and the whistling wind blew from the heights, and made great drifts in the valleys. The knight, lying in his bed, listened, for though his eyes were shut, he might sleep but little, and hearkened every cock that crew.

He arose ere the day broke, by the light of a lamp that burned in his chamber, and called to his chamberlain, bidding him bring his armor and saddle his steed. The other gat him up, and fetched his garments, and robed Sir Gawain.

First he clad him in his clothes to keep off the cold, and then in his harness, which was well and fairly kept. Both hauberk and plates were well burnished, the rings of the rich byrnie freed from rust, and all as fresh as at first, so that the knight was fain to thank them. Then he did on each piece, and bade them bring his steed, while he put the fairest raiment on himself; his coat with its fair cognizance, adorned with precious stones upon velvet, with broidered seams, and all furred within with costly skins. And he left not the lace, the lady's gift, that Gawain forgot not, for his own good. When he had girded on his sword he wrapped the gift twice about him, swathed around his waist. The girdle of green silk set gaily and well upon the royal red cloth, rich to behold, but the knight ware it not for pride of the pendants, polished though they were with fair gold that gleamed brightly on the ends, but to save himself from sword and knife, when it behooved him to abide his hurt without question. With that the hero went forth, and thanked that kindly folk full often.

<sup>1</sup>To take the judgment of my fate.

Then was Gringalet ready, that was great and strong, and had been well cared for and tended in every wise; in fair condition was that proud steed, and fit for a journey. Then Gawain went to him, and looked on his coat, and said by his sooth, "There is a folk in this place that thinketh on honor; much joy may they have, and the lord who maintains them, and may all good betide that lovely lady all her life long. Since they for charity cherish a guest, and hold honor in their hands, may he who holds the heaven on high requite them, and also ye all. And if I might live anywhere on earth, I would give ye full reward, readily, if so I might." Then he set foot in the stirrup and bestrode his steed, and his squire gave him his shield, which he laid on his shoulder. Then he smote Gringalet with his golden spurs, and the steed pranced on the stones and would stand no longer.

By that his man was mounted, who bare his spear and lance, and Gawain quoth, "I commend this castle to Christ, may he give it ever good fortune." Then the drawbridge was let down, and the broad gates unbarred and opened on both sides; the knight crossed himself, and passed through the gateway, and praised the porter, who knelt before the prince, and gave him good-day, and commended him to God. Thus the knight went on his way, with the one man who should guide him to that dread place where he should receive rueful payment.

The two went by hedges where the boughs were bare, and climbed the cliffs where the cold clings. Naught fell from the heavens, but 't was ill beneath them; mist brooded over the moor and hung on the mountains; each hill had a cap, a great cloak, of mist. The streams foamed and bubbled between their banks, dashing sparkling on the shores where they shelved downwards. Rugged and dangerous was the way through the woods, till it was time for the sun-rising. Then were they on a high hill; the snow lay white beside them, and the man who rode with Gawain drew rein by his master.

"Sir," he said, "I have brought ye hither, and now ye are not far from the place that ye have sought so specially. But I will tell ye for sooth, since I know ye well, and ye are such a knight as I well love, would ye follow my counsel ye would fare the better. The place whither ye go is accounted full perilous, for he who liveth in that waste is the worst on earth, for he is strong and fierce; and loveth to deal mighty blows; taller he is than any man on earth, and greater of frame than any four in Arthur's court, or in any other. And this is his custom at the Green Chapel; there may no man pass by that place, however proud his arms, but he does him to death by force of his hand, for he is a discourteous knight, and shows no mercy. Be he churl or chaplain who rides by that chapel, monk or mass-priest, or any man else, he thinks it as pleasant to slay them as to pass alive himself. Therefore, I tell ye, as sooth as ye sit in saddle, if ye come there and that knight know it, ye shall be slain, though ye had twenty lives; throw me that truly! He has dwelt here full long and seen many a combat; ye may not defend ye against his blows. Therefore, good Sir Gawain, let the man be, and get ye away some other road; for God's sake seek ye another land, and there may Christ speed ye! And I will hie me home again, and I promise ye further that I will swear by God and the saints, or any other oath ye please, that I will keep counsel faithfully, and never let any wit the tale that ye fled for fear of any man."

"Gramercy," quoth Gawain, but ill-pleased. "Good fortune be his who wishes me good, and that thou wouldst keep faith with me I will believe; but didst thou keep it never so truly, an I passed here and fled for fear as thou sayest, then were I a coward knight, and might not be held guiltless. So I will to the chapel let chance what may, and talk with that man, even as I may list, whether for weal or for woe as fate may have it. Fierce though he may be in fight, yet God knoweth well how to save his servants."

"Well," quoth the other, "now that ye have said so much that ye will take your own harm on yourself, and ye be pleased to lose your life, I will neither let<sup>1</sup> nor keep ye. Have here your helm and the spear in your hand, and ride down this same road beside the rock till ye come to the bottom of the valley, and there look a little to the left hand, and ye shall see in that vale the chapel, and the grim man who keeps it. Now fare ye well, noble Gawain; for all the gold on earth I would not go with ye nor bear ye fellowship one step further." With that the man turned his bridle into the wood, smote the horse with his spurs as hard as he could, and galloped off, leaving the knight alone.

Quoth Gawain, "I will neither greet nor moan, but commend myself to God, and yield me to his will."

Then the knight spurred Gringalet, and rode adown the path close in by a bank beside a grove. So he rode through the rough thicket, right into the dale, and there he halted, for it seemed him wild enough. No sign of a chapel could he see, but high and burnt banks on either side and rough rugged crags with great stones above. An ill-looking place he thought it.

Then he drew in his horse and looked round to seek the chapel, but he saw none and thought it strange. Then he saw as it were a mound on a level space of land by a bank beside the stream where it ran swiftly; the water bubbled within as if boiling. The knight turned his steed to the mound, and lighted down and tied the rein to the branch of a linden; and he turned to the mound and walked round it, questioning with himself what it might be. It had a hole at the end and at either side, and was overgrown with clumps of grass, and it was hollow within as an old cave or the crevice of a crag; he knew not what it might be.

"Ah," quoth Gawain, "can this be the Green Chapel? Here might the devil say his matins at midnight! Now I wis there is wizardry here. 'Tis an ugly oratory, all overgrown with grass, and 't would well beseech that fellow in green to say his devotions on devil's wise. Now feel I in five wits, 'tis the foul fiend himself who hath set me this tryst, to destroy me here! This is a chapel of mischance: ill-luck betide it, 'tis the curseddest kirk that ever I came in!"

Helmet on head and lance in hand, he came up to the rough dwelling, when he heard over the high hill beyond the brook, as it were in a bank, a wondrous fierce noise, that rang in the cliff as if it would cleave asunder. 'T was as if one ground a scythe on a grindstone, it whirled and whetted like water on a mill-wheel and rushed and rang, terrible to hear.

"By God," quoth Gawain, "I trow that gear is preparing for the knight who will meet me here. Alas! naught may help me, yet should my life be forfeit, I fear not a jot!" With that he called aloud. "Who waiteth in this place to give me tryst. Now is Gawain come hither: if any man will aught of him let him hasten hither now or never."

"Stay," quoth one on the bank above his head, "and ye shall speedily have that which I promised ye." Yet for a while the noise of whetting went on ere he appeared, and then he came forth from a cave in the crag with a fell weapon, a Danish axe newly dight, wherewith to deal the blow. An evil head it had, four feet large, no less, sharply ground, and bound to the handle by the lace that gleamed brightly. And the knight himself was all green as before, face and foot, locks and beard, but now he was afoot. When he came to the water he would not wade it, but sprang over with the pole of his axe, and strode boldly over the bent that was white with snow.

Sir Gawain went to meet him, but he made no low bow. The other said, "Now, fair sir, one may trust thee to keep tryst. Thou art welcome, Gawain, to my place. Thou hast timed thy coming as befits a true man. Thou knowest the covenant set between us: at this time twelve months agone thou didst take that which fell to thee, and

<sup>1</sup>Hinder.

I at this New Year will readily requite thee. We are in this valley, verily alone, here are no knights to sever us, do what we will. Have off thy helm from thine head, and have here thy pay; make me no more talking than I did then when thou didst strike off my head with one blow."

"Nay," quoth Gawain, "by God that gave me life, I shall make no moan whatever befall me, but make thou ready for the blow and I shall stand still and say never a word to thee, do as thou wilt."

With that he bent his head and showed his neck all bare, and made as if he had no fear, for he would not be thought a-dread.

Then the Green Knight made him ready and grasped his grim weapon to smite Gawain. With all his force he bore it aloft with a mighty feint of slaying him: had it fallen as straight as he aimed he who was ever doughty of deed had been slain by the blow. But Gawain swerved aside as the axe came gliding down to slay him as he stood, and shrank a little with the shoulders, for the sharp iron. The other heaved up the blade and rebuked the prince with many proud words:

"Thou art not Gawain," he said, "who is held so valiant, that never feared he man by hill or vale, but thou shrinkest for fear ere thou feelest hurt. Such cowardice did I never hear of Gawain! Neither did I flinch from thy blow, or make strife in King Arthur's hall. My head fell to my feet, and yet I fled not; but thou didst wax faint of heart ere any harm befell. Wherefore must I be deemed the braver knight."

Quoth Gawain, "I shrank once, but so will I no more; though an my head fall on the stones I cannot replace it. But haste, Sir Knight, by thy faith, and bring me to the point, deal me my destiny, and do it out of hand, for I will stand thee a stroke and move no more till thine axe have hit me—my troth on it."

"Have at thee, then," quoth the other, and heaved aloft the axe with fierce mien, as if he were mad. He struck at him fiercely but wounded him not, withholding his hand ere it might strike him.

Gawain abode the stroke, and flinched in no limb, but stood still as a stone or the stump of a tree that is fast rooted in the rocky ground with a hundred roots.

Then spake gaily the man in green, "So now thou hast thine heart whole it behooves me to smite. Hold aside thy hood that Arthur gave thee, and keep thy neck thus bent lest it cover it again."

Then Gawain said angrily, "Why talk on thus? Thou dost threaten too long. I hope thy heart misgives thee."

"For sooth," quoth the other, "so fiercely thou speakest I will no longer let thine errand wait its reward." Then he braced himself to strike, frowning with lips and brow, 't was no marvel that it pleased but ill him who hoped for no rescue. He lifted the axe lightly and let it fall with the edge of the blade on the bare neck. Though he struck swiftly, it hurt him no more than on the one side where it severed the skin. The sharp blade cut into the flesh so that the blood ran over his shoulder to the ground. And when the knight saw the blood staining the snow, he sprang forth, swift-foot, more than a spear's length, seized his helmet and set it on his head, cast his shield over his shoulder, drew out his bright sword, and spake boldly (never since he was born was he half so blithe), "Stop, Sir Knight, bid me no more blows, I have stood a stroke here without flinching, and if thou give me another, I shall requite thee, and give thee as good again. By the covenant made betwixt us in Arthur's hall but one blow falls to me here. Halt, therefore."

Then the Green Knight drew off from him and leaned on his axe, setting the shaft on the ground, and looked on Gawain as he stood all armed and faced him fearlessly—at heart it pleased him well. Then he spake merrily in a loud voice, and said to the knight, "Bold sir, be not so fierce; no man here hath done thee wrong, nor will do, save by covenant, as we made at Arthur's court. I promised thee a blow and thou hast it—hold thyself well paid! I release thee of all other claims. If I had been so minded I might perchance have given thee a rougher buffet. First I menaced thee with a feigned one, and hurt thee not for the covenant that we made in the first night, and which thou didst hold truly. All the gain didst thou give me as a true man should. The other feint I proffered thee for the morrow: my fair wife kissed thee, and thou didst give me her kisses—for both those days I gave thee two blows without scathe—true man, true return. But the third time thou didst fail, and therefore hadst thou that blow. For 't is my weed thou wearest, that same woven girdle, my own wife wrought it, that do I wot for sooth. Now know I well thy kisses, and thy conversation, and the wooing of my wife, for 't was mine own doing. I sent her to try thee, and in sooth I think thou art the most faultless knight that ever trod earth. As a pearl among white peas is of more worth than they, so is Gawain, i' faith, by other knights. But thou didst lack a little, Sir Knight, and wast wanting in loyalty, yet that was for no evil work, nor for wooing neither, but because thou lovedst thy life—therefore I blame thee the less."

Then the other stood a great while, still sorely angered and vexed within himself; all the blood flew to his face, and he shrank for shame as the Green Knight spake; and the first words he said were, "Cursed be ye, cowardice and covetousness, for in ye is the destruction of virtue." Then he loosed the girdle, and gave it to the knight. "Lo, take there the falsity, may foul befall it! For fear of thy blow cowardice bade me make friends with covetousness and forsake the customs of largess and loyalty, which befit all knights. Now am I faulty and false and have been afeared: from treachery and untruth come sorrow and care. I avow to thee, Sir Knight, that I have ill done; do then thy will. I shall be more wary hereafter."

Then the other laughed and said gaily, "I wot I am whole of the hurt I had, and thou hast made such free confession of thy misdeeds, and hast so borne the penance of mine axe edge, that I hold thee absolved from that sin, and purged as clean as if thou hadst never sinned since thou wast born. And this girdle that is wrought with gold and green, like my raiment, do I give thee, Sir Gawain, that thou mayest think upon this chance when thou goest forth among princes of renown, and keep this for a token of the adventure of the Green Chapel, as it chanced between chivalrous knights. And thou shalt come again with me to my dwelling and pass the rest of this feast in gladness." Then the lord laid hold of him, and said, "I wot we shall soon make peace with my wife, who was thy bitter enemy."

"Nay, forsooth," said Sir Gawain, and seized his helmet and took it off swiftly, and thanked the knight: "I have fared ill, may bliss betide thee, and may he who rules all things reward thee swiftly. Commend me to that courteous lady, thy fair wife, and to the other my honored ladies, who have beguiled their knight with skilful craft. But 't is no marvel if one be made a fool and brought to sorrow by women's wiles, for so was Adam beguiled by one, and Solomon by many, and Samson all too soon, for Delilah dealt him his doom; and David thereafter was wedded with Bathsheba, which brought him much sorrow—if one might love a woman and believe her not, 't were great gain! And since all they were beguiled by women, methinks 't is the less blame to me that I was misled! But as for thy girdle, that will I take with good will, not for gain of the gold, nor for samite, nor silk, nor the costly pendants, neither for weal nor for worship, but in sign of my frailty. I shall look upon it when I ride in renown and remind myself of the fault and faintness of the flesh; and so when pride uplifts me for prowess of arms, the sight of this lace shall humble my heart. But one thing would I pray, if it displease thee not: since thou art lord of yonder land wherein I have dwelt, tell me what thy rightful name may be, and I will ask no more."

"That will I truly," quoth the other. "Bernlak de Hautdesert am I called in this land. Morgain le Fay dwelleth in mine house, and through knowledge of clerkly craft hath she taken many. For long time was she the mistress of Merlin, who knew well all you knights of the court. Morgain the goddess is she called therefore, and there is none so haughty but she can bring him low. She sent me in this guise to yon fair hall to test the truth of the renown that is spread abroad of the valor of the Round Table. She taught me this marvel to betray your wits, to vex Guinevere and fright her to death by the man who spake with his head in his hand at the high table. That is she who is at home, that ancient lady, she is even thine aunt, Arthur's half-sister, the daughter of the Duchess of Tintagel, who afterward married King Uther. Therefore I bid thee, knight, come to thine aunt, and make merry in thine house; my folk love thee, and I wish thee as well as any man on earth, by my faith, for thy true dealing."

But Sir Gawain said nay, he would in no wise do so; so they embraced and kissed, and commended each other to the Prince of Paradise, and parted right there, on the cold ground. Gawain on his steed rode swiftly to the king's hall, and the Green Knight got him whithersoever he would.

Sir Gawain, who had thus won grace of his life, rode through wild ways on Gringale; oft he lodged in a house, and oft without, and many adventures did he have and came off victor full often, as at this time I cannot relate in tale. The hurt that he had in his neck was healed, he bare the shining girdle as a baldric bound by his side, and made fast with a knot 'neath his left arm, in token that he was taken in a fault—and thus he came in safety again to the court.

Then joy awakened in that dwelling when the king knew that the good Sir Gawain was come, for he deemed it gain. King Arthur kissed the knight, and the queen also, and many valiant knights sought to embrace him. They asked him how he had fared, and he told them all that had chanced to him—the adventure of the chapel, the fashion of the knight, the love of the lady—at last of the lace. He showed them the wound in the neck which he won for his disloyalty at the hand of the knight; the blood flew to his face for shame as he told the tale.

"Lo, lady," he quoth, and handled the lace, "this is the bond of the blame that I bear in my neck, this is the harm and the loss I have suffered, the cowardice and covetousness in which I was caught, the token of my covenant in which I was taken. And I must needs wear it so long as I live, for none may hide his harm, but undone it may not be, for if it hath clung to thee once, it may never be severed."

Then the king comforted the knight, and the court laughed loudly at the tale, and all made accord that the lords and the ladies who belonged to the Round Table, each hero among them, should wear bound about him a baldric of bright green for the sake of Sir Gawain. And to this was agreed all the honor of the Round Table, and he who ware it was honored the more thereafter, as it is testified in the book of romance. That in Arthur's days this adventure befell, the book of Brutus bears witness. For since that bold knight came hither first, and the siege and the assault were ceased at Troy, I wis

Many a venture herebefore

Hath fallen such as this:

May He that bare the crown of thorn

Bring us unto His bliss.

Amen.

WILLIAM LANGLAND(?)

The Vision of William concerning Piers the Plowman has been traditionally attributed to one William Langland, to whom Skeat assigned, for convenience' sake, the conjectural dates c. 1332-c. 1400. On the basis of the author's supposed references to himself within the poem a biography has also been made up. The author's name, however, has been disputed, and likewise the identification with him of the "Will" of the poem, and as a matter of fact nothing is certainly known about the poem's authorship. Piers the Plowman exists in three versions, known as the A-, B-, and C-texts. The A-text was written in 1362 or shortly thereafter. It is 2567 lines in length. The B-text was written probably in 1376 or 1377; for this the A-text was taken as a basis, was thoroughly made over, and was considerably enlarged, the number of lines in this text being 7242. The C-text was written probably some time between 1393 and 1399; it is a revision of the B-text with many comparatively small changes, and contains 7357 lines. Until recent years these versions have been accepted as the work of one writer. In 1906, however, Professor J. M. Manly asserted that the A-text was the work of three writers, and that the B- and C-texts were by two different authors, each other than the writers of the A-text. Proof of these assertions has not yet appeared, and the published work of other scholars since 1906 has on the whole gone to show that their proof would be more difficult than may have been at first supposed. Consequently, although the question of single or multiple authorship remains an open one and can perhaps never be settled, it seems justifiable to retain, at least provisionally, the traditional name William Langland.

Piers the Plowman was in its own age and in the fifteenth century one of the most popular and valued pieces of literature in the English language, as is evinced by the fact that no less than forty-seven manuscripts of it are still extant. This popularity was deserved. The poem is, after the Canterbury Tales of Chaucer, "the greatest piece of Middle English literature; it is one of the greatest of the medieval vision poems, and, as a vision poem, in many respects second only to the Divine Comedy; it is one of the foremost of the writings in English in which allegory is used" (J. E. Wells, Manual of the Writings in Middle English, p. 264). Moreover, to any student of the fourteenth century the poem is a necessary complement to the work of Chaucer, picturing as it does the life of the lower classes, and reflecting as it does the convictions and aspirations of simple-hearted men of deep feeling. Piers the Plowman has little of conscious art, its language is rough and broken, and it is written in the old alliterative meter, but its author felt intensely, saw deeply, and dealt greatly with the great issues of life.

Only the Prologue of the B-text is here printed. It may be well to give Skeat's summary of it, which is as follows: "The author describes how, weary of wandering, he sits down to rest upon Malvern Hills, and there falls asleep and dreams. In his vision, the world and its people are represented to him by a field full of folk, busily engaged in their avocations. The field was situate between the tower of Truth, who is God the Father, and the dungeon which is the abode of evil spirits. In it there were plowmen and spendthrifts, anchorites, merchants, jesters, beggars, pilgrims, hermits, friars, a pardoner with his bulls, and priests who deserted their cures. There was also a king, to whom an angel speaks words of advice. Then was seen suddenly a rout of rats and mice, conspiring to bell the cat, from doing which they were dissuaded by a wise mouse. There were also lawsergeants, burgesses, tradesmen, laborers, and taverners touting for custom."

THE VISION OF WILLIAM CONCERNING PIERS THE PLOWMAN

PROLOGUE

In a somer seson · whan soft was the sonne,
I shope me in shroudes · as I a shepe
were,

In habite as an heremite · unholy of workes,
Went wyde in this world · wondres to here.
Ac on a May mornynge · on Malverne
hulles,

Me byfel a ferly · of fairy, me thougte;
I was very forwandred · and went me to reste

Under a brode banke · bi a bornes side,
And as I lay and lened · and loked in the wateres,

I slombred in a slepyng · it sweyved so merye.

Thanne gan I to meten · a merveilouse
swevene,

That I was in a wilderness · wist I never
where;

As I bihelde in-to the est · an hiegh to the
sonne,
I seigh a toure on a toft · trielich ymaked;
A depe dale binethe · a dongeon there-Inne,
With depe dyches & derke · and dredful of
sight.
A faire felde ful of folke · fonde I there by-twene,
Of alle maner of men · the mene and the
riche,
Worchyng and wandryng · as the worlde
asketh.
Some putten hem to the plow · pleyed ful
selde,
In setting and in sowyng · swonken ful
harde,
And wonnen that wastours · with glotonye
destruyeth.
And some putten hem to pruyde · appar-
ailed hem thereafter,
In contenance of clothyng · comen disgised.
In prayers and in penance · putten hem
manye,
·Al for love of owre lorde · lyveden ful streyte,
In hope forto have · heveneriche blisse;
As ances and heremites · that holden hem
in here selles,
And coveiten nought in contre · to kairen
about,
For no likerous liflode · her lykam to ples.
And somme chosen chaffare · they cheven
the bettere,
As it semeth to owre sygt · that suche men
thryveth;
And somme murthes to make · as myn-
stralles conneth,
And geten gold with here glee · giltles, I leve.
Ac japers & jangelers · Judas chylderen,
Feynen hem fantasies · and foles hem mak-
eth,
And han here witte at wille · to worche, gif
thei sholde;
That Poule precheth of hem · I nel nought
preve it here;
Qui turpilouquium loquitur<sup>1</sup> · is luciferes hyne.
Bidders and beggers · fast aboute gede,
With her belies and her bagges · of bred ful
ycrammed;
Fayteden for here fode · fougten atte ale;
In glotonye, god it wote · gon hij to bedde,

And risen with ribaudye · tho roberdes
knaves;
Slepe and sori sleuthe · seweth hem evre.
Pilgrymes and palmers · plighted hem togidere
To seke seynt James · and seyntes in Rome.
Thei went forth in here wey · with many wise tales,
And hadden leve to lye · al here lyf after.
I seigh somme that seiden · thei had ysought
seyntes:
To eche a tale that thei tolde · here tonge
was tempred to lye,
More than to sey soth · it semed bi here
speche.
Heremites on an heep · with hoked
staves,
Wenten to Walsyngham · and here wenches
after;
Grete lobyes and longe · that loth were to swynke,
Clotheden hem in copis · to ben known
fram othere;
And shopen hem heremites · here ese to have.
I fonde there Freris · alle the foure ordres,
Preched the peple · for profit of hem-selven,
Glosed the gospel · as hem good lyked,
For coveitise of copis · construed it as thei
wolde.
Many of this maistres Freris · mowe clothen
hem at lykyng,
For here money and marchandise · marchen togideres.
For sith charite hath be chapman · and
chief to shryve lordes,
Many ferlis han fallen · in a fewe geris.
But holychirche and hij · holde better togi-
deres,
The most myschief on molde · is mountyng
wel faste.
There preched a Pardonere · as he a prest
were,
Brougte forth a bulle · with bishopes seles,
And seide that hym-self mygte · assoilen
hem alle
Of falshed of fastyng · of vowes ybroken.
Lewed men leved hym wel · and lyked his
wordes,
Comen up knelyng · to kissen his bulles;
He bonched hem with his brevet · & blered
here eyes,
And raugte with his ragman · rynges and broches;

<sup>1</sup>He who uses vile language.

Thus they geven here golde · glotones to
 kepe
 And levethe such loseles · that lecherye
 haunten.
 Were the bischop yblissed · and worth bothe
 his eres,
 His seel shulde nought be sent · to deceyve
 the peple.
 Ac it is naugt by the bischop · that the boy
 precheth,
 For the parisch prest and the pardonere ·
 parten the silver,
 That the poraille of the parisch · sholde have, gif thei nere.
 Persones and parisch pesters · pleynd
 hem to the bischop,
 That here parissches were pore · sith the pestilence tyme,
 To have a lycence and a leve · at London to dwelle,
 And syngen there for symonye · for silver is swete.
 Bischopes and bachelers · bothe maistres
 and doctours,
 That han cure under criste · and crounyng
 in tokne
 And signe that thei sholden · shryven here
 paroschienes,
 Prechen and prey for hem · and the pore
 fede,
 Liggen in London · in lenten, an elles.
 Somme serven the kyng · and his silver tellen,
 In cheker and in chancerye · chalengen his dettes
 Of wardes and wardmotes · weyves and streyves.
 And some serven as servantz · lordes and ladyes,
 And in stede of stuwardes · sytten and demen.
 Here messe and here matynes · and many of here oures
 Arn don undevoutlych; · drede is at the laste
 Lest crist in consistorie · acorse ful manye.
 I parceyved of the power · that Peter had to
 kepe,
 To bynde and to unbynde · as the boke
 telleth,
 How he it left with love · as owre lorde
 hight,
 Amonges foure vertues · the best of all ver-
 tues,

That cardinales ben called · & closyng gatis,
 There crist is in kyngdome · to close and to shutte,
 And to opne it to hem · and hevene blisse
 shewe.
 Ac of the cardinales atte Courte · that caught
 of that name,
 And power presumed in hem · a Pope to
 make,
 To han that power that Peter hadde · in-pugnen I nelle;
 For in love and letterure · the eleccioun
 bilongeth,
 For-thi I can and can naughte · of courte
 speke more.
 Thanne come there a kyng · knyghthod
 hym ladde,
 Migt of the comunes · made hym to regne,
 And thanne cam kynde wytte · and clerkes
 he made,
 For to conseilte the kyng · and the comune
 save.
 The kyng and knyghthode · and clergie
 bothe
 Casten that the comune · shulde hem-self fynde.
 The comune contrevd · of kynde witte
 craftes,
 And for profit of alle the poeple · plowmen
 ordeygnd,
 To tilie and travaile · as trewe lyf asketh.
 The kyng and the comune · and kynde
 witte the thridde
 Shope lawe & lewte · eche man to knowe his owne.
 Thanne loked up a lunatik · a lene thing
 with-alle,
 And knelyng to the kyng · clergealy he
 seyde;
 “Crist kepe the, sire kyng · and thi kyng-
 riche,
 And leve the lede thi londe · so leute the lovyne,
 And for thi rightful rewlyng · be rewarded in
 hevene!”
 And sithen in the eyre an hiegh · an angel of hevene
 Lowed to speke in latyn— · for lewed men
 ne coude
 Jangle ne jugge · that justifie hem shulde,
 But suffren & serven— · for-thi seyde the angel,
 “*Sum Rex, sum Princeps · neutrum fortasse
 deinceps;*—

*O qui iura regis · Christi specialia regis,
Hoc quod agas melius · iustus es, esto pius!
Nudum ius a te · vestiri vult pietate;
Qualia vis metere · talia grana sere.
Si ius nudatur · nudo de iure metatur;
Si seritur pietas · de pietate metas!"<sup>1</sup>*

Thanne greved hym a Goliardeys · a glo-toun of wordes,

And to the angel an heig · answered after,
"Dum rex a regere · dicatur nomen habere, Nomen habet sine re · nisi studet iura tenere."<sup>2</sup>

And thanne gan alle the comune · crye in vers of latin,

To the kynges conseil · construe ho-so
wolde—

"Precepta Regis · sunt nobis vincula legis."<sup>3</sup>
With that ran there a route · of ratones
at ones,

And smale mys myd hem · mo then a thou-
sande,

And comen to a conseil · for here comune
profit;

For a cat of a courte · cam whan hym lyked,
And overlepe hem lygtlich · and laugte hem
at his wille,

And pleyde with hem perilouslych · and possed hem aboute.

"For doute of dyverse dredes · we dar
nought wel loke;

And gif we grucche of his gamen · he wil
greve us alle,

Cracche us, or clowe us · and in his cloches
holde,

That us lotheth the lyf · or he lete us passe.

Mygte we with any witte · his wille with-stonde,

We mygte be lordes aloft · and lyven at owre ese."

A raton of renon · most renable of tonge,
Seide for a sovereygne · help to hym-selve;—

<sup>1</sup>[You say] "I am a king, I am a prince," [but you will be] neither perhaps hereafter. O you who administer the special laws of Christ the King, that you may do this the better, as you are just, be also merciful! Naked justice you must clothe with mercy; as you would reap you must sow the seeds. If justice is stripped bare, from bare justice may [your] harvest be reaped; if mercy is sown, may you reap a harvest of mercy!

<sup>2</sup>While the ruler is said to take his name from ruling, he has the name without the thing unless he strives to maintain the laws.

<sup>3</sup>The commands of the king to us are the bonds of the law.

"I have ysein segges," quod he · "in the cite of London

Beren biges ful brigte · abouten here nekkes,
And some colers of crafty werk; · uncoupled
thei wenden

Bothe in wareine & in waste · where hem
leve lyketh;

And otherwhile thei aren elles-where · as I here telle.

Were there a belle on here beig · bi Jesu, as
me thynketh,

Men mygte wite where thei went · and awei
renne!

And rigt so," quod that ratoun · "reson me
sheweth,

To bugge a belle of brasse · or of brigte syl-
ver,

And knitten on a colere · for owre comune
profit,

And hangen it up-on the cattes hals · thanne
here we mowen

Where he ritt or rest · or renneth to playe.
And gif him list for to laike · thenne loke
we mowen,

And peren in his presence · ther-while hym
plaie liketh,

And gif him wrattheth, be ywar · and his weye shonye."

Alle this route of ratones · to this reson
thei assented.

Ac tho the belle was ybought · and on the beige hanged,

There ne was ratoun in alle the route · for alle the rewme of Fraunce,

That dorst have ybounden the belle ·
aboute the cattis nekke,

Ne hangen it aboute the cattes hals · al
Engelonde to wyne;

And helden hem unhardy · and here conseil
feble,

And leten here laboure lost · & alle here
longe studye.

A mous that moche good · couthe, as me
thoughte,

Stroke forth sternly · and stode biforn hem
alle,

And to the route of ratones · reherced these
wordes;

"Thoug we culled the catte · yut sholde
ther come another,

To cracchy us and al owre kynde · thoug we crope under benches.

For-thi I conseil · alle the comune · to lat
the catte worthe,

And be we never so bolde · the belle hym to
 shewe;
 For I herde my sire seyn · is sevene gere
 ypassed,
 There the catte is a kitoun · the courte is ful elyng;
 That wittiseth holiwrite · who-so wil it rede-
Ve terre ubi puer rex est, &c.<sup>1</sup>
 For may no renke there rest have · for rat-ones bi nygte;
 The while he caccheth conynges · he coveit-
 eth nought owre caroyne,
 But fet hym al with venesoun · defame we hym nevere.
 For better is a litel losse · than a longe
 sorwe,
 The mase amonge us alle · thoug we mysse
 a schrewe.
 For many mannus malt · we mys wolde
 destruye,
 And also ye route of ratones · rende mennes
 clothes,
 Nere that cat of that courte · that can yow
 overlepe;
 For had ye rattes yowre wille · ye couthe
 nought reule yowreselve.
 I sey for me," quod the mous · "I se so mykel after,
 Shal never the cat ne the kitoun · bi my
 conseilte be greved,
 Ne carpyng of this coler · that costed me
 neure.
 And thoug it had coste me catel · biknowen
 it I nolde,
 But suffre as hym-self wolde · to do as hym
 liketh,
 Coupled & uncoupled · to cacche what thei
 mowe.
 For-thi uche a wise wigte I warne · wite wel
 his owne."—

<sup>1</sup>Alas for the land whose king is a child (Ecclesiastes x, 16).

What this meteles bemeneth · ye men
 that be merye,
 Devine ye, for I ne dar · bi dere god in
 hevene!
 Git hoved there an hondreth · in houves
 of selke, Seriauntz it semed · that serveden atte
 barre,
 Plededden for penyes · and poundes the lawe,
 And nought for love of owre lorde · unlese
 here lippes onis.
 Thow mygtest better mete the myste · on malverne hulles,
 Than gete a momme of here mouthe · but money were shewed.
 Barones an burgeis · and bonde-men als
 I seig in this assemble · as ye shul here after.
 Baxsteres & brewesteres · and bocheres
 manye,
 Wollewebsteres · and weveres of lynnen, Tailloours and tynkeres · & tolleres in marketes,
 Masons and mynours · and many other
 craftes.
 Of alkin libbyng laboreres · lopen forth
 somme,
 As dykers & delveres · that doth here dedes
 ille,
 And dryven forth the longe day · with
 "Dieu vous save, Dame Emme!"<sup>2</sup> Cokes and here knaves · crieden, "hote pies,
 hote!
 Gode gris and gees · gowe dyne, gowe!"
 Taverners un-til hem · tolde the same,
 "White wyn of Oseye · and red wyn of Gascoigne,
 Of the Ryne and of the Rochel · the roste to defye."—
 Al this seig I slepyng · and sevene sythes
 more.

<sup>2</sup>God save you, Lady Emma! (Evidently the refrain of some popular song).

GEOFFREY CHAUCER (c. 1340-1400)

Chaucer was born in London, the son of a wine-merchant who was in some way connected with the court of Edward III. He is the earliest English writer about whose life and works we have reasonably full knowledge. Though our knowledge of his life is confined almost exclusively to its external course, still, what we do know is definite and dependable. The reason is that Chaucer from an early age was connected with the English court or government, so that the outlines of his public career can be traced from documentary evidence. We first hear of him as attached to the household of the wife of Prince Lionel, the third son of Edward III, in 1357. The only known evidence concerning the date of Chaucer's birth is contained in testimony he gave in a suit in 1386, when he stated that he was forty years or more of age and had borne arms for twenty-seven years. This statement agrees with the record of his service with the English army in France in 1359 (when he was taken prisoner by the French), and suggests 1340 as a probable date for his birth. In 1367 he was granted a pension for his services as valet in the king's household. Probably about this time Chaucer married Philippa, a lady who is thought to have been a sister-in-law of John of Gaunt. In 1372-1373 he was sent on a diplomatic mission to Italy. In 1374 he was given a post in the customs. In 1377 he was in Flanders and France on diplomatic service, and in 1378 went again to Italy. In 1382 he was given an additional post in the customs and three years later was allowed to exercise his office through a deputy. In 1386 he sat as a member of Parliament for Kent; in the same year he was for some reason deprived of his offices in the customs. Later he again held public offices, being appointed clerk of the king's works at Westminster in 1389 and holding the same office at Windsor in 1390, while he received a pension which was increased in 1394 and again in 1399; but despite this help Chaucer seems to have been in some financial difficulty from the time of his reverses in 1386 until shortly before his death. He died in 1400 and was buried in Westminster Abbey.

Chaucer's literary career has been divided into three periods: the French and Latin period (to 1373), the Italian period (1373-1385), and the English period (1385-1400). This division is convenient and is roughly in accordance with the facts. It should be kept in mind, however, that it is only approximate and that the so-called periods are not mutually exclusive. As a young man Chaucer made himself familiar with what was closest to hand—the Latin literature that was known to everyone of any education, and French poetry of his own time or shortly before. His acquaintance with the work of Dante, Petrarch, and Boccaccio probably dates from his first Italian journey in 1373. All that he learned from these varied sources was of use to him throughout his life, and what is meant in terming his last fifteen years an "English" period is that his apprenticeship was definitely over, and that he then wrote with a free command of his material which enabled him, more clearly than before, to exhibit himself in his work. In his first period Chaucer translated at least parts of the French Romance of the Rose, an allegorical poem of the thirteenth century, and wrote the Book of the Duchess, which shows the influence of French allegorical love poetry. In his second period he began, but did not finish, The House of Fame, he wrote The Parliament of Fowls, he translated Boethius' Consolation of Philosophy, and he wrote Troilus and Criseyda, a long and highly finished narrative poem based upon, and in part translated from, Boccaccio's Filostrato. In his third period he wrote The Legend of Good Women and The Canterbury Tales, leaving both unfinished. Chaucer won for himself immediately a foremost place in literature, and his works were an important influence in determining the dominance of London English. He was a deft craftsman, and his verse is remarkable for its smoothness, ease, grace, and variety. He was not a man of profound insight or deep seriousness, and this has cost him a place among the greatest poets; but he was a keen observer of the appearances of things and of the less profound traits of human character, which, with his mastery of a precise and finished style, enabled him to tell a story supremely well. His poetry might show us, even if we knew nothing of his public career, that he was a successful man of the world. He took men and things as he found them and was content to describe, as he so well could, and not to judge. He had, to be sure, his standards, and they were not low, but neither were they deeply felt. His nature was catholic and he viewed the human scene with whimsical detachment;—with a constant enjoyment, too, which he still communicates to all his readers.

THE CANTERBURY TALES

THE PROLOGUE<sup>1</sup>

WHAN that Aprille with his shoures sote
The droghte of Marche hath perced to the rote,

And bathed every veyne in swich licour,
Of which vertu engendred is the flour;
Whan Zephirus eek with his swete breeth
Inspired hath in every holt and heeth
The tendre croppes, and the yonge sonne
Hath in the Ram<sup>2</sup> his halfe cours y-ronne,
And smale fowles maken melodye.
That slepen al the night with open yē,
(So priketh hem nature in hir corages):
Than longen folk to goon on pilgrimages
(And palmers for to seken straunge strondes)
To ferne halwes, couthe in sondry londes;
And specially, from every shires ende
Of Engelond, to Caunterbury they wende,
The holy blisful martir<sup>3</sup> for to seke,
That hem hath holpen, whan that they were seke.

Bifel that, in that seson on a day,<sup>4</sup>
In Southwerk at the Tabard as I lay
Redy to wenden on my pilgrimage
To Caunterbury with ful devout corage,
At night was come in-to that hostelrye
Wel nyne and twenty in a companye,
Of sondry folk, by aventure y-falle
In felawshipe, and pilgrims were they alle,
That toward Caunterbury wolden ryde;
The chambres and the stables weren wyde,
And wel we weren esed atte beste.
And shortly, whan the sonne was to reste,
So hadde I spoken with hem everichon,
That I was of hir felawshipe anon,
And made forward erly for to ryse,
To take our wey, ther as I yow devyse.

But natheles, whyl I have tyme and space,
Er that I ferther in this tale pace,
Me thinketh it acordaunt to resoun,
To telle yow al the condicioun

<sup>1</sup>The Prologue, besides describing the pilgrims, outlines Chaucer's general design. This calls for about 120 stories, two told by each pilgrim on the way to Canterbury, and two on the way back. Chaucer seems later to have modified this plan, reducing the number of tales by one-half. But even so he left the work far from completed. We have only 24 tales, several of them unfinished.

<sup>2</sup>Sign of the zodiac, Aries.

<sup>3</sup>Thomas à Becket.

<sup>4</sup>The day was 16 April, and the year may be supposed to be 1387 (Skeat).

Of ech of hem, so as it semed me,
And whiche they weren, and of what degree;
And eek in what array that they were inne:
And at a knight than wol I first biginne.

A KNIGHT ther was, and that a worthy
man,

That fro the tyme that he first bigan
To ryden out, he loved chivalrye,
Trouthe and honour, fredom and curteisye.
Ful worthy was he in his lordes werre,
And therto hadde he riden (no man ferre)
As wel in Cristendom as hethenesse,
And ever honoured for his worthinesse.

At Alisaundre he was, whan it was wonne;
Ful ofte tyme he hadde the bord bigonne
Aboven alle naciouns in Puce.
In Lettow hadde he reysed and in Ruce,
No Cristen man so ofte of his degree.
In Gernade at the sege eek hadde he be
Of Algezir, and riden in Belmarye.
At Lyeys was he, and at Satalye,
Whan they were wonne; and in the Grete
See

At many a noble aryve hadde he be.
At mortal batailles hadde he been fiftene,
And foughten for our feith at Tramissene
In listes thryes, and ay slayn his fo.
This ilke worthy knight had been also Somytyme with the lord of Palatye,
Ageyn another hethen in Turkye:
And evermore he hadde a sovereyn prys.
And though that he were worthy, he was wys,
And of his port as meke as is a mayde.
He never yet no vileinye ne sayde
In al his lyf, un-to no maner wight.
He was a verray parfit gentil knight.
But for to tellen yow of his array,
His hors were gode, but he was nat gay.
Of fustian he wered a gipoun
Al bismotered with his habergeoun;
For he was late y-come from his viage,
And wente for to doon his pilgrimage.

With him ther was his sone, a yong
SQUYER,

A lovyere, and a lusty bachelor,
With lokkes crulle, as they were leyd in presse.

Of twenty yeer of age he was, I gesse.
Of his stature he was of evene lengthe,
And wonderly deliver, and greet of strengthe.
And he had been somtyme in chivachye,
In Flaundres, in Artoys, and Picardye,
And born him wel, as of so litel space,
In hope to stonden in his lady grace.

Embrouded was he, as it were a mede
 Al ful of fresshe floures, whyte and rede.
 Singinge he was, or floytinge, al the day;
 He was as fresh as is the month of May.
 Short was his gounce, with sleeves longe and wyde.

Wel coude he sitte on hors, and faire ryde.
 He coude songes make and wel endyte,
 Juste and eek daunce, and wel purtreie and wryte.

So hote he lovede, that by nightertale
 He sleep namore than dooth a nightingale.
 Curteys he was, lowly, and servisable,
 And carf biforn his fader at the table.

A YEMAN hadde he, and servaunts namo
 At that tyme, for him liste ryde so;
 And he was clad in cote and hood of grene;
 A sheef of pecok-arwes brighte and kene
 Under his belt he bar ful thriftily;
 (Wel coude he dresse his takel yemanly:
 His arwes drouped noght with fetheres lowe),
 And in his hand he bar a mighty bowe.
 A not-heed hadde he, with a broun visage.
 Of wode-craft wel coude he al the usage.
 Upon his arm he bar a gay bracer,
 And by his syde a swerd and a bokeler,
 And on that other syde a gay daggere,
 Harneised wel, and sharp as point of spere;
 A Cristofre on his brest of silver shene.
 An horn he bar, the bawdrik was of grene;
 A forster was he, soothly, as I gesse.

Ther was also a Nonne, a PRIORESSE,
 That of hir smyling was ful simple and coy;

Hir gretteste outh was but by seynt Loy;
 And she was cleped madame Eglentyne.
 Ful wel she song the service divyne,
 Entuned in hir nose ful semely;
 And Frensh she spak ful faire and fetisly,
 After the scole of Stratford atte Bowe,<sup>1</sup>
 For Frensh of Paris was to hir unknowe.
 At mete wel y-taught was she with-alle;
 She leet no morsel from hir lippes falle,
 Ne wette hir fingres in hir sauce depe.
 Wel coude she carie a morsel, and wel kepe,
 That no drope ne fille up-on hir brest.
 In curteisye was set ful muche hir lest.
 Hir over lippe wyped she so clene,
 That in hir coppe was no ferthing sene
 Of grece, whan she dronken hadde hir draughte.
 Ful semely after hir mete she raughte,

And sikerly she was of greet disport,
 And ful plesaunt, and amiable of port,
 And peyned hir to countrefete chere
 Of court, and been estatlich of manere,
 And to ben holden digne of reverence.
 But, for to speken of hir conscience,
 She was so charitable and so pitous,
 She wolde wepe, if that she sawe a mous
 Caught in a trappe, if it were deed or bledde.
 Of smale houndes had she, that she fedde
 With rosted flesh, or milk and wastel-breed.
 But sore weep she if oon of hem were deed,
 Or if men smoot it with a yerde smerte:
 And al was conscience and tendre herte.
 Ful semely hir wimpel pinched was;
 Hir nose tretys; hir eyen greye as glas;
 Hir mouth ful smal, and ther-to softe and reed;

But sikerly she hadde a fair forheed;
 It was almost a spanne brood, I trowe;
 For, hardly, she was nat undergrowe.
 Ful fetis was hir cloke, as I was war.
 Of smal coral aboute hir arm she bar
 A peire of bedes, gauded al with grene;
 And ther-on heng a broche of gold ful shene,
 On which ther was first write a crowned A,
 And after, Amor vincit omnia.<sup>2</sup>

Another NONNE with hir hadde she,
 That was hir chapeleyne, and PREESTES
 THREE.

A MONK ther was, a fair for the maistrye,
 An out-rydere, that lovede venerye;
 A manly man, to been an abbot able.
 Ful many a deyntee hors hadde he in stable:
 And, whan he rood, men mighte his brydel here

Ginglen in a whistling wind as clere,
 And eek as loude as dooth the chapel-belle Ther as this lord was keper of the celle.
 The reule of seint Maure or of seint Beneit
 By-cause that it was old and som-del streit,
 This ilke monk leet olde thinges pace,
 And held after the newe world the space.
 He yaf nat of that text a pulled hen,
 That seith, that hunters been nat holy men;
 Ne that a monk, whan he is cloisterlees,
 Is lykned til a fish that is waterlees;
 This is to seyn, a monk out of his cloistre.
 But thilke text held he nat worth an oistre;
 And I seyde, his opinioun was good.
 What sholde he studie, and make him-selven wood,

<sup>1</sup>A convent near London.

<sup>2</sup>Love conquers all things.

Upon a book in cloistre alwey to poure,
Or swinken with his handes, and laboure,
As Austin bit? How shal the world be served?

Lat Austin have his swink to him reserved.
Therefore he was a pricasour aright; Grehoundes he hadde, as swifte as fowel in
flight;

Of priking and of hunting for the hare
Was al his lust, for no cost wolde he spare.
I seigh his sleeves purfild at the hond
With grys, and that the fyneste of a lond;
And, for to festne his hood under his chin,
He hadde of gold y-wroght a curious pin:
A love-knotte in the gretter ende ther was.
His heed was balled, that shoon as any glas,
And eek his face, as he had been anoint.
He was a lord ful fat and in good point;
His eyen stepe, and rollinge in his heed,
That stemed as a forneys of a leed;
His botes souple, his hors in greet estat.
Now certainly he was a fair prelat;
He was nat pale as a for-pyned goost.
A fat swan loved he best of any roost.
His palfrey was as broun as is a berye.

A FRERE ther was, a wantown and a merye,
A limitour, a ful solempne man.
In alle the ordres foure<sup>1</sup> is noon that can
So muche of daliaunce and fair langage.
He hadde maad ful many a mariage
Of yonge wommen, at his owne cost.
Un-to his ordre he was a noble post.
Ful wel biloved and famulier was he
With frankeleyns over-al in his contree,
And eek with worthy wommen of the toun:
For he had power of confessioun,
As seyde him-self, more than a curat,
For of his ordre he was licentiat.
Ful swetely herde he confessioun,
And plesaunt was his absolucioun;
He was an esy man to yeve penaunce
Ther as he wiste to han a good pitaunce;
For unto a povre ordre for to yive
Is signe that a man is wel y-shrive.
For if he yaf, he dorste make avaunt,
He wiste that a man was repentaunt.
For many a man so hard is of his herte,
He may nat wepe al-thogh him sore smerte.
Therefore, in stede of weping and preyeres,
Men moot yeve silver to the povre freres.
His tipet was ay farsed ful of knyves
And pinnes, for to yeven faire wyves.

<sup>1</sup>Dominicans, Franciscans, Carmelites, and Austin Friars.

And certainly he hadde a mery note;
Wel coude he singe and pleyen on a rote.
Of yeddinges he bar utterly the prys.
His nekke whyt was as the flour-de-lys;
Ther-to he strong was as a champioun.
He knew the tavernes wel in every toun,
And everich hostiler and tappestere
Bet than a lazor or a beggestere;
For un-to swich a worthy man as he Acorde nat, as by his facultee,
To have with seke lazars aqueyntaunce.
It is nat honest, it may nat avaunce
For to delen with no swich poraille,
But al with riche and sellers of vitaille.
And over-al, ther as profit sholde aryse,
Curteys he was, and lowly of servyse.
Ther nas no man no-where so vertuous.
He was the beste beggere in his hous;
And yaf a certeyn ferme for the graunt;
Noon of his bretheren cam ther in his haunt;
For thogh a widwe hadde noght a sho,
So plesaunt was his "In principio,"<sup>2</sup>
Yet wolde he have a ferthing, er he wente.
His purchas was wel bettre than his rente.
And rage he coude, as it were right a whelpe.
In love-dayes ther coude he muchel helpe.
For there he was nat lyk a cloisterer,
With a thredbar cope, as is a povre scoler,
But he was lyk a maister or a pope.
Of double worsted was his semi-cope,
That rounded as a belle out of the presse.
Somwhat he lipped, for his wantownesse,
To make his English swete up-on his tonge;
And in his harping, whan that he had songe,
His eyen twinkled in his heed aright,
As doon the sterres in the frosty night.
This worthy limitour was cleped Huberd.

A MARCHANT was ther with a forked berd,
In mottelee, and hye on horse he sat,
Up-on his heed a Flaundrish bever hat;
His botes clasped faire and fetisly.
His resons he spak ful solempnely,
Souninge alway th'encrees of his winning.
He wolde the see were kept for any thing
Bitwixe Middelburgh and Orewelle.<sup>3</sup>
Wel coude he in eschaunge sheeldes selle.
This worthy man ful wel his wit bisette;
Ther wiste no wight that he was in dette,

<sup>2</sup>In the beginning. (Opening words of the Gospel of St. John, a text much quoted by the friars).

<sup>3</sup>The former a port on an island off the coast of the Netherlands, the latter an English port at the mouth of the Orwell river. He wanted the sea-route between the two kept open at any expense.

So estatly was he of his governaunce,
With his bargaynes, and with his chevi-saunce.

For sothe he was a worthy man with-alle,
But sooth to seyn, I noot how men him calle.

A CLERK ther was of Oxenford also,
That un-to logik hadde longe y-go.
As lene was his hors as is a rake,
And he nas nat right fat, I undertake;
But loked holwe, and ther-to soberly.
Ful thredbar was his overest courtepy;
For he had geten him yet no benefyce,
Ne was so worldly for to have offyce.
For him was lever have at his beddes heed
Twenty bokes, clad in blak or reed,
Of Aristotle and his philosophye,
Than robes riche, or fithele, or gay sautrye.
But al be that he was a philosopre,
Yet hadde he but litel gold in cofre;<sup>1</sup>
But al that he mighte of his freendes hente,
On bokes and on lerninge he it spente,
And bisily gan for the soules preye
Of hem that yaf him wher-with to scoleye.
Of studie took he most cure and most hede.

Noght o word spak he more than was nede,
And that was seyed in forme and reverence,
And short and quik, and ful of hy sentence.
Souninge in moral vertu was his speche,
And gladly wolde he lerne, and gladly teche.

A SERGEANT OF THE LAWE, war and wys,
That often hadde been at the parvyys,
Ther was also, ful riche of excellence.
Discreet he was, and of greet reverence:
He semed swich, his wordes weren so wyse.
Justyce he was ful often in assyse,
By patente, and by pleyn commissioun;
For his science, and for his heigh renoun
Of fees and robes hadde he many oon.
So greet a purchasour was no-wher noon.
Al was fee simple to him in effect,<sup>2</sup>
His purchasing mighte nat been infect.
No-wher so bisy a man as he ther nas,
And yet he semed bisier than he was.
In termes hadde he caas and domes alle,
That from the tyme of king William were falle.

Therto he coude endyte, and make a thing,
Ther coude no wight pinche at his wryting;

<sup>1</sup>The reference is to the alchemists, who were also termed philosophers. It was commonly believed that they could turn base metals into gold.

<sup>2</sup>The meaning is that he could untie any entail, or restriction on land.

And every statut coude he pleyn by rote.
He rood but hoonly in a medlee cote
Girt with a ceint of silk, with barres smale;
Of his array telle I no lenger tale.

A FRANKLEYN was in his companye;
Whyt was his berd, as is the dayesye.
Of his complexioun he was sangwyn.
Wel loved he by the morwe a sop in wyn.
To liven in delyt was ever his wone,
For he was Epicurus owne sone,
That heeld opinioun, that pleyn delyt
Was verrailly felicitee parfyt.
An housholdere, and that a greet, was he;
Seint Julian<sup>3</sup> he was in his contree.
His breed, his ale, was alwey after oon;
A better envyned man was no-wher noon.
With-oute bake mete was never his hous,
Of fish and flesh, and that so plentevous,
It snewed in his hous of mete and drinke,
Of alle deyntees that men coude thinke.
After the sondry sasons of the yeer,
So chaunged he his mete and his soper.
Ful many a fat partrich hadde he in mewe,
And many a breem and many a luce in stewe.
Wo was his cook, but-if his sauce were Poynaunt and sharp, and redy al his gere.
His table dormant in his halle alway
Stood redy covered al the longe day.
At sessiouns ther was he lord and sire;
Ful ofte tyme he was knight of the shire.
An anlas and a gipser al of silk
Heng at his girdel, whyt as morne milk.
A shirreve hadde he been, and a countour;
Was no-wher such a worthy vavasour.

AN HABERDASSHER and a CARPENTER,
A WEBBE, a DYERE, and a TAPICER,
Were with us eek, clothed in o liveree,
Of a solempne and greet fraternitee.
Ful fresh and newe hir gere apyked was;
Hir knyves were y-chaped noght with bras,
But al with silver, wroght ful clene and weel,
Hir girdles and hir pouches every-deel.
Wel semed ech of hem a fair burgeys,
To sitten in a yeldhalle on a deys.
Everich, for the wisdom that he can,
Was shaply for to been an alderman.
For catel hadde they y-nogh and rente,
And eek hir wyves wolde it wel assente;
And elles certein were they to blame.
It is ful fair to been y-clept "ma dame,"
And goon to vigilyës al bifore,
And have a mantel royalliche y-bore.

<sup>3</sup>The patron saint of hospitality.

A Cook they hadde with hem for the nones,
 To boille the chiknes with the mary-bones,
 And poudre-marchant tart, and galingale.
 Wel coude he knowe a draughte of London ale.
 He coude roste, and sethe, and broille, and frye,
 Maken mortreux, and wel bake a pye.
 But greet harm was it, as it thoughte me,
 That on his shine a mormal hadde he;
 For blankmanger, that made he with the beste.

A SHIPMAN was ther, woning fer by weste:
 For aught I woot, he was of Dertemouthe.
 He rood up-on a rouncy, as he couthe,
 In a gowne of falding to the knee.
 A daggere hanging on a laas hadde he Aboute his nekke under his arm adoun.
 The hote somer had maad his hewe al broun;
 And, certainly, he was a good felawe.
 Ful many a draughte of wyn had he y-drawe
 From Burdeux-ward, whyl that the chapman sleep.<sup>1</sup>

Of nyce conscience took he no keep.
 If that he faught, and hadde the hyer hond,
 By water he sente hem hoom to every lond.<sup>2</sup>
 But of his craft to rekene wel his tydes,
 His stremes and his daungers him bisydes,
 His herberwe and his mone, his lode-menage,
 Ther nas noon swich from Hulle to Cartage.
 Hardy he was, and wys to undertake;
 With many a tempest hadde his berd been shake.

He knew wel alle the havenes, as they were,
 From Gootlond to the cape of Finistere,
 And every cryke in Britayne and in Spayne;
 His barge y-cleped was the Maudelayne.

With us ther was a DOCTOUR OF PHISYK,
 In al this world ne was ther noon him lyk
 To speke of phisik and of surgerye;
 For he was grounded in astronomye.<sup>3</sup>
 He kepte his pacient a ful greet del
 In houres, by his magik naturel.
 Wel coude he fortunen the ascendent
 Of his images for his pacient.
 He knew the cause of everich maladye,

<sup>1</sup>He had stolen wine from the casks he was carrying from Bordeaux.

<sup>2</sup>Threw them overboard.

<sup>3</sup>"Astronomye." This is really astrology. The physician knew well how to watch for a favorable astrological hour for the making of images to be used as charms in the treatment of his patient.

Were it of hoot or cold, or moiste, or drye,
 And where engendred, and of what humour;
 He was a verrey parfit practisour.
 The cause y-knowe, and of his harm the rote,
 Anon he yaf the seke man his bote.
 Ful redy hadde he his apothecaries,
 To sende him drogges and his letuaries,
 For ech of hem made other for to winne;
 Hir frendschipe nas nat newe to biginne.
 Wel knew he th'olde Esculapius,
 And Deiscorides, and eek Rufus,
 Old Ypocras, Haly, and Galien;
 Serapion, Razis, and Avicen;
 Averrois, Damascien, and Constantyn;
 Bernard, and Gatesden, and Gilbertyn.<sup>4</sup>
 Of his diete mesurable was he,
 For it was of no superfluitee,
 But of greet norissing and digestible.
 His studie was but litel on the bible.
 In sangwin and in pers he clad was al,
 Lyned with taffata and with sendal;
 And yet he was but esy of dispence;
 He kepte that he wan in pestilence.
 For gold in phisik is a cordial,
 Therfore he lovede gold in special.

A good WYF was ther of bisyde BATHE,
 But she was som-del deaf, and that was scathe.

Of clooth-making she hadde swiche an haunt,
 She passed hem of Ypres and of Gaunt.
 In all the parissh wyf ne was ther noon
 That to th' offring bfore hir sholde goon;
 And if ther dide, certeyn, so wrooth was she,
 That she was out of alle charitee.
 Hir coverchiefs ful fyne were of ground;
 I dorste swere they weyeden ten pound
 That on a Sondag were upon hir heed.
 Hir hosen weren of fyn scarlet reed,
 Ful streite y-teyd, and shoos ful moiste and newe.

Bold was hir face, and fair, and reed of hewe.
 She was a worthy womman al hir lyve,
 Housbondes at chirche-dore she hadde fyve,
 Withouten other companye in youthe;
 But therof nedeth nat to speke as nouthe.
 And thryes hadde she been at Jerusalem;
 She hadde passed many a straunge streem;
 At Rome she hadde been, and at Boloigne,
 In Galice at seint Jame,<sup>5</sup> and at Coloigne.
 She coude muche of wandring by the weye:
 Gat-tothed was she, soothly for to seye.

<sup>4</sup>All great medical authorities.

<sup>5</sup>Compostella in Spain.

Up-on an amblere esily she sat,
Y-wimpled wel, and on hir heed an hat
As brood as is a bokeler or a targe;
A foot-mantel aboute hir hipes large,
And on hir feet a paire of spores sharpe.
In felawship wel coude she laughe and carpe.
Of remedyes of love she knew perchaunce,
For she coude of that art the olde daunce.

A good man was ther of religioun,
And was a povre PERSON of a toun;
But riche he was of holy thoght and werk.
He was also a lerned man, a clerk,
That Cristes gospel trewely wolde preche;
His parisshe devoutly wolde he teche.
Benigne he was, and wonder diligent,
And in adversitee ful pacient;
And swich he was y-preved ofte sythes.
Ful looth were him to cursen for his thythes,
But rather wolde he yeven, out of doute,
Un-to his povre parisshe aboute
Of his offring, and eek of his substaunce.
He coude in litel thing han suffisaunce.
Wyd was his parisshe, and houses fer asonder,

But he ne lafte nat, for reyn ne thonder,
In siknes nor in meschief, to visyte
The ferreste in his parisshe, muche and lyte,
Up-on his feet, and in his hand a staf.
This noble ensample to his sheep he yaf,
That first he wroghte, and afterward he taughte;

Out of the gospel he tho wordes caughte;<sup>1</sup>
And this figure he added eek ther-to,
That if gold ruste, what shal iren do?
For if a preest be foul, on whom we truste,
No wonder is a lewed man to ruste;
And shame it is, if a preest take keep,
A shiten shepherde and a clene sheep.
Wel oghte a preest ensample for to yive,
By his clenness, how that his sheep shold
live.

He sette nat his benefice to hyre,
And leet his sheep encombred in the myre,
And ran to London, un-to sēynt Poules,
To seken him a chaunterie for soules,<sup>2</sup>
Or with a bretherhed to been withholde;<sup>3</sup>
But dwelte at hoom, and kepte wel his folde,
So that the wolf ne made it nat miscarie;
He was a shepherde and no mercenarie.

And though he holy were, and vertuuous,
He was to sinful man nat despituous,
Ne of his speche daungerous ne digne,
But in his teching discreet and benigne.
To drawn folk to heven by fairnesse
By good ensample, was his bisnesse:
But it were any persone obstinat,
What-so he were, of heigh or lowe estat,
Him wolde he snibben sharply for the nones.
A better preest, I trowe that nowher noon is.
He wayted after no pompe and reverence,
Ne maked him a spyced conscience,
But Cristes lore, and his apostles twelve,
He taughte, and first he folwed it him-selve.

With him ther was a PLOWMAN, was his brother,
That hadde y-lad of dong ful many a fother,
A trewe swinker and a good was he,
Livinge in pees and parfit charitee.
God loved he best with al his hole herte
At alle tymes, thogh him gamed or smerte,
And thanne his neighebour right as him-selve.
He wolde thresshe, and ther-to dyke and delve,

For Cristes sake, for every povre wight,
Withouten hyre, if it lay in his might.
His thythes payed he ful faire and wel,
Bothe of his propre swink and his catel.
In a tabard he rood upon a mere.

Ther was also a Reve and a Millere,
A Somnour and a Pardoner also,
A Maunciple, and my-self; ther were namo.

The MILLER was a stout carl, for the nones,
Ful big he was of braun, and eek of bones;
That proved wel, for over-al ther he cam,
At wrastling he wolde have alwey the ram.<sup>4</sup>
He was short-sholdred, brood, a thikke
knarre,

Ther nas no dore that he nolde heve of harre,
Or breke it, at a renning, with his heed.
His berd as any sowe or fox was reed,
And ther-to brood, as though it were a spade.
Up-on the cop right of his nose he hade
A werte, and ther-on stood a tuft of heres,
Reed as the bristles of a sowes eres;
His nose-thirles blake were and wyde.
A swerd and bokeler bar he by his syde;
His mouth as greet was as a greet forneys.
He was a jangler and a goliardeys,
And that was most of sinne and harlotryes.
Wel coude he stelen corn, and tollen thryes;

<sup>1</sup>St. Matthew, v, 19.

<sup>2</sup>There were 35 chantries at St. Paul's, served by 54 priests who said masses for the dead.

<sup>3</sup>"Or to remain in retirement with some fraternity."

<sup>4</sup>The prize.

And yet he hadde a thombe of gold, pardee.
A whyt cote and a blew hood wered he.
A baggepye wel coude he blowe and sowne,
And ther-with-al he broghte us out of towne.

A gentil MAUNCIPLE was ther of a temple,
Of which achatours mighte take exemple
For to be wyse in bying of vitaille.
For whether that he payde, or took by taille,
Algate he wayted so in his achat,
That he was ay biforn and in good stat.
Now is nat that of God a ful fair grace,
That swich a lewed mannes wit shal pace
The wisdom of an heap of lerned men?
Of maistres hadde he mo than thryes ten,
That were of lawe expert and curious;
Of which ther were a doseyne in that hous
Worthy to been stiwardes of rente and lond
Of any lord that is in Engeland,
To make him live by his propre good,
In honour dettelees, but he were wood,
Or live as scarsly as him list desire;
And able for to helpen al a shire
In any cas that mighte falle or happe;
And yit this maunciple sette hir aller cappe.

The REVE was a sclendre colerik man,
His berd was shave as ny as ever he can.
His heer was by his eres round y-shorn.
His top was dokked lyk a preest biforn.
Ful longe were his legges, and ful lene,
Y-lyk a staf, ther was no calf y-sene.
Wel coude he kepe a gerner and a binne;
Ther was noon auditour coude on him winne.
Wel wiste he, by the droghte, and by the reyn,
The yelding of his seed, and of his greyn.
His lordes sheep, his neet, his dayerye,
His swyn, his hors, his stoor, and his pultrye,
Was hoolly in this reves governing,
And by his covenaut yaf the rekening,
Sin that his lord was twenty yeer of age;
Ther coude no man bringe him in arrerage.<sup>1</sup>
Ther nas baillif, ne herde, ne other hyne,
That he ne knew his sleighte and his covyne;
They were adrad of him, as of the deeth.
His woning was ful fair up-on an heeth,
With grene treës shadwed was his place.
He coude better than his lord purchase.
Ful riche he was astored prively,
His lord wel coude he plesen subtilly,
To yeve and lene him of his owne good,
And have a thank, and yet a cote and hood.
In youthe he lerned hadde a good mister;
He was a wel good wrighte, a carpenter.

This reve sat up-on a ful good stot,
That was al pomely grey, and highte Scot.
A long surcote of pers up-on he hade,
And by his syde he bar a rusty blade.
Of Northfolk was this reve, of which I telle,
Bisyde a toun men clepen Baldeswelle,
Tukked he was, as is a frere, aboute,
And ever he rood the hindreste of our route.

A SOMNOUR was ther with us in that place,
That hadde a fyr-reed cherubinnes face,
For sawcefleem he was, with eyen narwe.
As hoot he was, and lecherous, as a sparwe;
With scalled browes blake, and piled berd;
Of his visage children were aferd.
Ther nas quik-silver, litarge, ne brimston,
Boras, ceruce, ne oille of tartre noon,
Ne oynement that wolde clense and byte,
That him mighte helpen of his whelkes
whyte,

Nor of the knobbes sittinge on his chekes.
Wel loved he garleek, oynons, and eek lekes,
And for to drinken strong wyn, reed as blood.
Than wolde he speke, and crye as he were wood.

And whan that he wel dronken hadde the
wyn,

Than wolde he speke no word but Latyn.
A fewe termes hadde he, two or three,
That he had lerned out of som decree;
No wonder is, he herde it al the day;
And eek ye knownen wel, how that a jay
Can clepen "Watte," as well as can the pope.
But who-so coude in other thing him grope,
Thanne hadde he spent al his philosophye;
Ay "Questio quid iuris,"<sup>2</sup> wolde he crye.
He was a gentil harlot and a kinde;
A better felawe sholde men noght finde.
He wolde suffre, for a quart of wyn,
A good felawe to have his concubyn
A twelf-month, and excuse him atte fulle:
Full prively a finch eek coude he pulle.
And if he fond o-wher a good felawe,
He wolde techen him to have non awe,
In swich cas, of the erchedeknes curs,
But-if a mannes soule were in his purs;
For in his purs he sholde y-punished be.
"Purs is the erchedeknes helle," seyde he.
But well I woot he lyed right in dede;
Of cursing oghte ech giltly man him drede—
For curs wol slee, right as assoilling saveth—
And also war him of a significavit.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>2</sup>What is the law on this point?

<sup>3</sup>A writ of excommunication, which usually began with this word.

<sup>1</sup>Catch him in arrears.<sup>4</sup>

In daunger hadde he at his owne gyse
 The yonge girles of the diocyse,
 And knew hir counseil, and was al hir reed.
 A gerland hadde he set up-on his heed,
 As greet as it were for an ale-stake;
 A bokeler hadde he maad him of a cake.

With him ther rood a gentil PARDONER
 Of Rouncival,<sup>1</sup> his freend and his compeer,
 That streight was comen fro the court of Rome.

Ful loude he song, "Com hider, love, to me."
 This somnour bar to him a stif burdoun,
 Was never trompe of half so greet a soun.
 This pardoner hadde heer as yelow as wex,
 But smothe it heng, as dooth a strike of flex;
 By ounces henge his lokkes that he hadde,
 And ther-with he his shuldres over-spradde;
 But thinne it lay, by colpons oon and oon;
 But hood, for jolitee, ne wered he noon,
 For it was trussed up in his walet.
 Him thoughte, he rood al of the newe jet;
 Dischevele, save his cappe, he rood al bare.
 Swiche glaringe eyen hadde he as an hare.
 A vernicle hadde he sowed on his cappe.
 His walet lay biforn him in his lappe,
 Bret-ful of pardoun come from Rome al
 hoot.

A voys he hadde as smal as hath a goot.
 No berd hadde he, ne never sholde have,
 As smothe it was as it were late y-shave;
 I trowe he were a gelding or a mare.
 But of his craft, fro Berwik into Ware,
 Ne was ther swich another pardoner.
 For in his male he hadde a pilwe-beer,
 Which that, he seyde, was our lady veyl:
 He seyde, he hadde a gobet of the seyl
 That seynt Peter hadde, whan that he wente
 Up-on the see, til Jesu Crist him hente.
 He hadde a croys of latoun, ful of stones,
 And in a glas he hadde pigges bones.
 But with thise relikes, whan that he fond
 A povre person dwelling up-on lond,
 Up-on a day he gat him more moneye
 Than that the person gat in monthes tweye.
 And thus, with feyned flaterye and japes,
 He made the person and the peple his apes.
 But trewely to tellen, atte laste,
 He was in chirche a noble ecclesiaste.
 Wel coude he rede a lessoun or a storie,
 But alderbest he song an offertorie;
 For wel he wiste, whan that song was songe,
 He moste preche, and wel affyle his tonge,

To winne silver, as he ful wel coude;
 Therefore he song so meriely and loude.

Now have I told you shortly, in a clause, Th'estat, th'array, the nombre, and eek the
 cause

Why that assembled was this companye
 In Southwerk, at this gentil hostelrye,
 That highte the Tabard, faste by the Belle.
 But now is tyme to yow for to telle
 How that we baren us that ilke night,
 Whan we were in that hostelrye alight.
 And after wol I telle of our viage,
 And al the remenaunt of our pilgrimage.
 But first I pray yow, of your curteisye,
 That ye n'arette it nat my vileinye,
 Thogh that I pleylnly speke in this matere,
 To telle yow hir wordes and hir chere;
 Ne thogh I speke hir wordes properly.
 For this ye knowen al-so wel as I,
 Who-so shal telle a tale after a man,
 He moot reherce, as ny as ever he can,
 Everich a word, if it be in his charge,
 Al speke he never so rudeliche and large;
 Or elles he moot telle his tale untrewe,
 Or feyne thing, or finde wordes newe.
 He may nat spare, al-thogh he were his
 brother;

He moot as wel seye o word as another.
 Crist spak him-self ful brode in holy writ,
 And wel ye woot, no vileinye is it.
 Eek Plato seith, who-so that can him rede,
 The wordes mote be cosin to the dede.<sup>2</sup>
 Also I prey yow to foryeve it me, Al have I nat set folk in hir degree
 Here in this tale, as that they sholde stonde;
 My wit is short, ye may wel understonde.

Greet chere made our hoste us everichon,
 And to the soper sette us anon;
 And served us with vitaille at the beste.
 Strong was the wyn, and wel to drinke us
 leste.

A semely man our hoste was with-alle
 For to han been a marshal in an halle;
 A large man he was with eyen stepe,
 A fairer burgeys is ther noon in Chepe.<sup>3</sup>
 Bold of his speche, and wys, and wel y-
 taught,
 And of manhod him lakkede right naught.
 Eek therto he was right a mery man,
 And after soper pleyen he bigan,

<sup>2</sup>Chaucer took this from Boethius, De Consolatione, bk. III, pr. 12. Cf. Plato, Timaeus, 29B.

<sup>3</sup>Cheapside.

<sup>1</sup>An hospital near Charing Cross, London.

And spak of mirthe amonges othere thinges,
Whan that we hadde maad our rekeninges;
And seyde thus: "Now, lordinges, trewely,
Ye been to me right welcome hertely:
For by my trouthe, if that I shal nat lye,
I ne saugh this yeer so mery a companye
At ones in this herberwe as is now.

Fayn wolde I doon yow mirthe, wiste I how.
And of a mirthe I am right now bithoght,
To doon yow ese, and it shal coste noght.

Ye goon to Caunterbury; God yow spede,
The blisful martir quyte yow your mede.
And wel I woot, as ye goon by the weye,
Ye shapen yow to talen and to pleye;
For trewely, confort ne mirthe is noon
To ryde by the weye dounb as a stoon;
And therefore wol I maken yow disport,
As I seyde erst, and doon yow som confort.
And if yow lyketh alle, by oon assent,
Now for to stonden at my jugement,
And for to werken as I shal yow seye,
To-morwe, whan ye ryden by the weye,
Now, by my fader soule, that is deed,
But ye be merye, I wol yeve yow myn
heed.

Hold up your hond, withouten more speche."

Our counseil was nat longe for to seche;
Us thoughte it was noght worth to make it
wys,

And graunted him withouten more avys,
And bad him seye his verdit, as him leste.

"Lordinges," quod he, "now herkneth for the beste;

But tak it not, I prey yow, in desdeyn;
This is the poynt, to speken short and pleyn,
That ech of yow, to shorte with your weye,
In this viage, shal telle tales tweye,
To Caunterbury-ward, I mene it so,
And hom-ward he shal tellen othere two,
Of aventures that whylom han bifalle,
And which of yow that bereth him best of
alle,

That is to seyn, that telleth in this cas
Tales of best sentence and most solas,
Shal have a soper at our aller cost
Here in this place, sitting by this post,
Whan that we come agayn fro Caunterbury.
And for to make yow the more mery,
I wol my-selven gladly with yow ryde,
Right at myn owne cost, and be your gyde.
And who-so wol my jugement withseye
Shal paye al that we spenden by the weye.
And if ye vouche-sauf that it be so,
Tel me anon, with-uten wordes mo,

And I wol erly shape me therfore."

This thing was graunted, and our othes
swore

With ful glad herte, and preyden him also
That he wold vouche-sauf for to do so,
And that he wolde been our governour,
And of our tales juge and reportour,
And sette a soper at a certeyn prys;
And we wold reuled been at his devys,
In heigh and lowe; and thus, by oon assent,
We been accorded to his jugement.
And ther-up-on the wyn was fet anon;
We dronken, and to reste wente echon,
With-uten any lenger taryinge.

A-morwe, whan that day bigan to springe,
Up roos our host, and was our aller cok,
And gadrede us togidre, alle in a flok,
And forth we riden, a litel more than pas,
Un-to the watering of saint Thomas.
And there our host bigan his hors areste,
And seyde; "Lordinges, herkneth, if yow
leste.

Ye woot your forward, and I it yow recorde.
If even-song and morwe-song acorde,
Lat see now who shal telle the firste tale.
As ever mote I drinke wyn or ale,
Who-so be rebel to my jugement
Shal paye for al that by the weye is spent.
Now draweth cut, er that we ferrer twinne;
He which that hath the shortest shal bi-ginne.

Sire knight," quod he, "my maister and my
lord,

Now draweth cut, for that is myn acord.
Cometh neer," quod he, "my lady prioress;
And ye, sir clerk, lat be your shamfastnesse,
Ne studieth noght; ley hond to, every man."

Anon to drawen every wight bigan,
And shortly for to tellen, as it was,
Were it by aventure, or sort, or cas,
The sothe is this, the cut fil to the knight,
Of which ful blythe and glad was every
wight;

And telle he moste his tale, as was resoun,
By forward and by composicioun,
As ye han herd; what nedeth wordes mo?
And whan this gode man saugh it was so,
As he that wys was and obedient
To kepe his forward by his free assent,
He seyde: "Sin I shal beginne the game,
What, welcome be the cut, a Goddes name!
Now lat us ryde, and herkneth what I seye."

And with that word we riden forth our weye;

And he bigan with right a mery chere
His tale anon, and seyde in this manere.<sup>1</sup>

THE PRIORESSES PROLOGUE

"WEL seyde, by corpus dominus,"<sup>2</sup> quod our hoste,

"Now longe moot thou sayle by the coste,
Sir gentil maister, gentil marineer!
God yeve this monk a thousand last quad
yeer!

A ha! felawes! beth ware of swiche a jape!
The monk putte in the mannes hood an ape,
And in his wyves eek, by seint Austin!
Draweth no monkes more un-to your in.

But now passe over, and lat us seke aboute,
Who shal now telle first, of al this route,
Another tale;" and with that word he sayde,
As curteisly as it had been a mayde,
"My lady Prioress, by your leve,
So that I wiste I sholde yow nat greve,
I wolde demen that ye tellen sholde
A tale next, if so were that ye wolde.

Now wol ye vouche-sauf, my lady dere?"
"Gladly," quod she, and seyde as ye shal
here.

THE PRIORESSES TALE

Domine, dominus noster.<sup>3</sup>

O LORD our lord, thy name how merveillous
Is in this large worlde y-sprad—quod she:—
For noght only thy laude precious
Parfourned is by men of dignitee,
But by the mouth of children thy bountee
Parfourned is, for on the brest soukinge
Som tyme shewen they thyn heryinge.

Wherfor in laude, as I best can or may,
Of thee, and of the whyte lily flour
Which that thee bar, and is a mayde alway,
To telle a storie I wol do my labour;
Not that I may encresen hir honour;
For she hir-self is honour, and the rote
Of bountee, next hir sone, and soules bote.—

<sup>1</sup>Here follow the tales of the Knight, the Miller, the Reeve, and the Cook, the last unfinished. On the morning of the second day the Man of Law tells the first tale, then the Shipman tells one, and then the Host turns to the Prioress.

<sup>2</sup>By the body of our Lord.

<sup>3</sup>O Lord, our Lord.

O moder mayde! o mayde moder free!
O bush unbrent, brenninge in Moyses sighte,
That ravisedest down fro the deitee, Thurgh thyn humblesse, the goost that in th'alighte,
Of whos vertu, whan he thyn herte lighte,
Conceived was the fadres sapience,
Help me to telle it in thy reverence!

Lady! thy bountee, thy magnificence,
Thy vertu, and thy grete humilitee
Ther may no tonge expresse in no science;
For som-tyme, lady, er men praye to thee,
Thou goost bifrom of thy benigneite,
And getest us the light, thurgh thy preyere,
To gyden us un-to thy sone so dere.

My conning is so wayk, o blisful quene,
For to declare thy grete worthinesse,
That I ne may the weighte nat sustene,
But as a child of twelf monthe old, or lesse,
That can unnethes any word expresse,
Right so fare I, and therfor I yow preye,
Gydeth my song that I shal of yow seye.

Here Beginneth the Prioresses Tale<sup>4</sup>

Ther was in Asie, in a greet citee,
Amonges Cristen folk, a Jewerye, Sustened by a lord of that contree
For foule usure and lucre of vilanye,
Hateful to Crist and to his companye;
And thurgh the strete men mighte ryde or
wende,
For it was free, and open at either ende.

A litel scole of Cristen folk ther stood Doun at the ferther ende, in which ther were Children an heep, y-comen of Cristen blood,
That lerned in that scole yeer by yeer
Swich maner doctrine as men used there,
This is to seyn, to singen and to rede,
As smale children doon in hir childhede.

Among these children was a widwes sone,
A litel clergeon, seven yeer of age,
That day by day to scole was his wone,
And eek also, wher-as he saugh th' image
Of Cristes moder, hadde he in usage,

<sup>4</sup>Chaucer probably based this tale on some Latin prose legend current in his day. The theme, the murder of a Christian child by Jews, was a popular one in the Middle Ages, and at least 29 versions of it are known.

As him was taught, to knele adoun and seye
His Ave Marie,<sup>1</sup> as he goth by the weye.

Thus hath this widwe hir litel sone y-taught
Our blisful lady, Cristes moder dere,
To worshipe ay, and he forgat it naught,
For sely child wol alday sone lere;
But ay, whan I remembre on this matere,
Seint Nicholas stant ever in my presence,
For he so yong to Crist did reverence.

This litel child, his litel book lerninge,
As he sat in the scole at his prymer,
He Alma redemptoris,<sup>2</sup> herde singe,
As children lerned hir antiphoner;
And, as he dorste, he drough him ner and
ner,
And herkned ay the wordes and the note,
Til he the firste vers coude al by rote.

Noght wiste he what this Latin was to seye,
For he so yong and tendre was of age;
But on a day his felaw gan he preye
T'expounden him this song in his langage,
Or telle him why this song was in usage;
This preyde he him to construe and declare
Ful ofte tyme upon his knowes bare.

His felaw, which that elder was than he,
Answerde him thus: "this song, I have herd
seye,

Was maked of our blisful lady free,
Hir to salue, and eek hir for to preye
To been our help and socour whan we deye.
I can no more expounde in this matere;
I lerne song, I can but smal grammere."

"And is this song maked in reverence
Of Cristes moder?" seyde this innocent;
"Now certes, I wol do my diligence
To conne it al, er Cristemasse is went;
Though that I for my prymer shal be shent,
And shal be beten thryës in an houre,
I wol it conne, our lady for to honoure."

His felaw taughte him homward prively,
Fro day to day, til he coude it by rote,
And than he song it wel and boldly
Fro word to word, acordng with the note;
Twyës a day it passed thurgh his throte,

<sup>1</sup>Hail Mary—the first two words of a short prayer made up from St. Luke, i, 28 and 42.

<sup>2</sup>Gracious Mother of the Redeemer. There is more than one medieval hymn with this beginning.

To scoleward and homward whan he wente;
On Cristes moder set was his entente.

As I have seyde, thurgh-out the Jewerye
This litel child, as he cam to and fro,
Ful merily than wolde he singe, and crye
O Alma redemptoris ever-mo.
The swetnes hath his herte perced so
Of Cristes moder, that, to hir to preye,
He can nat stinte of singing by the weye.

Our firste fo, the serpent Sathanas,
That hath in Jewes herte his waspes nest,
Up swal, and seide, "O Hebraik peple, allas!
Is this to yow a thing that is honest,
That swich a boy shal walken as him lest
In your despyt, and singe of swich sentence,
Which is agayn your lawes reverence?"

Fro thennes forth the Jewes han conspyred
This innocent out of this world to chace;
An homicyde ther-to han they hyred,
That in an aley hadde a privee place;
And as the child gan for-by for to pace,
This cursed Jew him hente and heeld him
faste,
And kitte his throte, and in a pit him caste.

I seye that in a wardrobe they him threwe
Wher-as these Jewes purgen hir entraille.
O cursed folk of Herodes al newe,
What may your yvel entente yow availle?
Mordre wol out, certein, it wol nat faille,
And namely ther th'onour of god shal sprede,
The blood out cryeth on your cursed dede.

"O martir, souted to virginitee,
Now maystou singen, folwing ever in oon
The whyte lamb celestial," quod she,
"Of which the grete evangelist, seint John,
In Pathmos wroot, which seith that they that goon
Biforn this lamb, and singe a song al newe,
That never, fleshly, wommen they ne knewe."

This povre widwe awaiteth al that night
After hir litel child, but he cam noght;
For which, as sone as it was dayes light,
With face pale of drede and bisy thought,
She hath at scole and elles-where him soght,
Til finally she gan so fer espye
That he last seyn was in the Jewerye.

With modres pitee in hir brest enclosed,
 She gooth, as she were half out of hir minde,
 To every place wher she hath supposed
 By lyklihede hir litel child to finde;
 And ever on Cristes moder meke and kinde
 She cryde, and atte laste thus she wroughte,
 Among the cursed Jewes she him soghte.

She frayneth and she preyeth pitously
 To every Jew that dwelt in thilke place,
 To telle hir, if hir child wente oght for-by.
 They seyde, "nay"; but Jesu, of his grace,
 Yaf in hir thought, inwith a litel space,
 That in that place after hir sone she cryde,
 Wher he was casten in a pit bisyde.

O grete god, that parfournest thy laude
 By mouth of innocents, lo heer thy might!
 This gemme of chastitee, this emeraude,
 And eek of martirdom the ruby bright,
 Ther he with throte y-corven lay upright,
 He "Alma redemptoris" gan to singe
 So loude, that al the place gan to ringe.

* The Cristen folk, that thurgh the strete
 wente,
 In coomen, for to wondre up-on this thing,
 And hastily they for the provost sente;
 He cam anon with-outen taryng,
 And herieth Crist that is of heven king,
 And eek his moder, honour of mankinde,
 And after that, the Jewes leet he binde.

This child with pitous lamentacioun
 Up-taken was, singing his song alway;
 And with honour of greet processioun
 They carien him un-to the nexte abbay.
 His moder swowning by the bere lay;
 Unnethe might the peple that was there
 This newe Rachel bringe fro his bere.

With torment and with shamful deth echon
 This provost dooth thise Jewes for to sterve
 That of this morde wiste, and that anon;
 He nolde no swich cursednesse observe.
 Yvel shal have, that yvel wol deserve.
 Therfor with wilde hors he dide hem drawe,<sup>1</sup>
 And after that he heng hem by the lawe.

Up-on his bere ay lyth this innocent
 Biforn the chief auter, whyl masse laste,
 And after that, the abbot with his covent
 Han sped hem for to burien him ful faste;
 And whan they holy water on him caste,

<sup>1</sup>Sc. to the gallows.

Yet spak this child, whan spreynnd was holy water,
 And song—"O Alma redemptoris mater!"

This abbot, which that was an holy man
 As monkes been, or elles oghten be,
 This yonge child to conjure he bigan,
 And seyde, "o dere child, I halse thee,
 In vertu of the holy Trinitee,
 Tel me what is thy cause for to singe,
 Sith that thy throte is cut, to my seminge?"

"My throte is cut un-to my nekke-boon," Seyde this child, "and, as by wey of kinde,
 I sholde have deyed, ye, longe tyme agoon,
 But Jesu Crist, as ye in bokes finde,
 Wil that his glorie laste and be in minde;
 And, for the worship of his moder dere,
 Yet may I singe 'O Alma' loude and clere.

This welle of mercy, Cristes moder swete,
 I lovede alwey, as after my conninge;
 And whan that I my lyf sholde forlete,
 To me she cam, and bad me for to singe
 This antem verrailly in my deyinge,
 As ye han herd, and, whan that I had songe,
 Me thoughte, she leyde a greyn up-on my tonge.

Wherfor I singe, and singe I moot certeyn
 In honour of that blisful mayden free,
 Til fro my tonge of-taken is the greyn;
 And afterward thus seyde she to me,
 'My litel child, now wol I fecche thee
 Whan that the greyn is fro thy tonge y-take;
 Be nat agast, I wol thee nat forsake.'

This holy monk, this abbot, him mene I,
 Him tonge out-caughte, and took a-wey the greyn,
 And he yaf up the goost ful softly.
 And whan this abbot had this wonder seyn,
 His salte teres trikked down as reyn,
 And gruf he fil al plat up-on the grounde,
 And stille he lay as he had been y-bounde.

The covent eek lay on the pavement
 Weping, and herien Cristes moder dere,
 And after that they ryse, and forth ben went,
 And toke away this martir fro his bere,
 And in a tombe of marbul-stones clere
 Enclosen they his litel body swete;
 Ther he is now, god leve us for to mete.

O yonge Hugh of Lincoln, slayn also
 With cursed Jewes, as it is notable,
 For it nis but a litel whyle ago;
 Preye eek for us, we sinful folk unstable,
 That, of his mercy, god so merciable
 On us his grete mercy multiplye,
 For reverence of his moder Marye. Amen.

THE NONNE PREESTES TALE<sup>1</sup>

A POVRE widwe, somdel stape in age,
 Was whylom dwelling in a narwe cotage,
 Bisyde a grove, stonding in a dale.
 This widwe, of which I telle yow my tale,
 Sin thilke day that she was last a wyf,
 In pacience ladde a ful simple lyf,
 For litel was hir catel and hir rente;
 By housbondrye, of such as God hir seente,
 She fond hir-self, and eek hir doghtren two.
 Three large sowes hadde she, and namo,
 Three kyn, and eek a sheep that highte Malle.

Ful sotty was hir bour, and eek hir halle,
 In which she eet ful many a splendre meel.
 Of poynaunt sauce hir neded never a deel.
 No deyntee morsel passed thurgh hir throte;
 Hir dyete was accordant to hir cote.
 Repleccioun ne made hir never syk;
 Attempree dyete was al hir phisyk,
 And exercyse, and hertes suffisaunce.

The goute lette hir no-thing for to daunce,
 N'apoplexye shente nat hir heed;
 No wyn ne drank she, neither whyt ne reed;
 Hir bord was served most with whyt and
 blak,

Milk and broun breed, in which she fond no
 lak,

Seynd bacoun, and somtyme an ey or tweye,
 For she was as it were a maner deye.

A yerd she hadde, enclosed al aboute
 With stikkes, and a drye dich with-oute,
 In which she hadde a cok, hight Chauntecleer,

In al the land of crowing nas his peer.

<sup>1</sup>Following the Prioress's tale the Host asks Chaucer for a story. He begins Sir Thopas, a burlesque of the popular romances of the day, but is soon interrupted by the Host, who is bored. Thereupon Chaucer begins anew, and tells the edifying prose Tale of Melibeus. The Monk's tale follows (also interrupted, by the Knight), and then the Host turns to the Nun's Priest. The immediate source of this story is not known, but there were popular cycles dealing with Reynard the Fox.

His vois was merier than the mery orgon
 On messe-dayes that in the chirche gon;
 Wel sikerer was his crowing in his logge,
 Than is a klokke, or an abbey orlogge.
 By nature knew he ech ascencioun
 Of equinoxial in thilke toun;
 For whan degrees fiftene were ascended, Thanne crew he, that it mighte nat been amended.

His comb was redder than the fyn coral,
 And batailed, as it were a castel-wal.
 His bile was blak, and as the jeet it shoon;
 Lyk asur were his legges, and his toon;
 His nayles whytter than the lilie flour,
 And lyk the burned gold was his colour.
 This gentil cok hadde in his governaunce
 Sevene hennes, for to doon al his pleasaunce,
 Whiche were his sustres and his paramours,
 And wonder lyk to him, as of colours.
 Of whiche the faireste hewed on hir throte
 Was cleped faire damoysele Pertelote.
 Curteys she was, discreet, and debonaire,
 And compaignable, and bar hir-self so faire,
 Sin thilke day that she was seven night old,
 That trewely she hath the herte in hold
 Of Chauntecleer loken in every lith;
 He loved hir so, that wel was him therwith.
 But such a joye was it to here hem singe,
 Whan that the bryghte sonne gan to springe,
 In swete accord, "my lief is faren in londe."
 For thilke tyme, as I have understonde,
 Bestes and briddes coude speke and singe.

And so bifel, that in a daweninge,
 As Chauntecleer among his wyves alle
 Sat on his perche, that was in the halle,
 And next him sat this faire Pertelote,
 This Chauntecleer gan gronen in his throte,
 As man that in his dreem is drecched sore.
 And whan that Pertelote thus herde him rore,
 She was agast, and seyde, "O herte dere,
 What eyleth yow, to grone in this manere?
 Ye been a verray sleper, fy for shame!"
 And he answerde and seyde thus, "madame,
 I pray yow, that ye take it nat a-grief:
 By god, me mette I was in swich meschief Right now, that yet myn herte is sore
 afright.

Now god," quod he, "my swevene recche
 aright,

And keep my body out of foul prisoun!
 Me mette, how that I romed up and down
 Withinne our yerde, wher-as I saugh a beste,
 Was lyk an hound, and wolde han maad
 areste

Upon my body, and wolde han had me deed.
His colour was bitwixe yelwe and reed;
And tipped was his tail, and bothe his eres,
With blak, unlyk the remenant of his heres;
His snowte smal, with glowingen eyen tweye.
Yet of his look for fere almost I deye;
This caused me my groning, doutelees."

"Avoy!" quod she, "fy on yow, hertelees!
Allas!" quod she, "for, by that god above,
Now han ye lost myn herte and al my love;
I can nat love a coward, by my feith.
For certes, what so any womman seith,
We alle desyren, if it mighte be,
To han housbondes hardy, wyse, and free,
And secree, and no nigard, ne no fool,
Ne him that is agast of every tool,
Ne noon avauntour, by that god above!
How dorste ye seyn for shame unto your
love,

That any thing mighte make yow aferd?
Have ye no mannes herte, and han a berd?
Allas! and conne ye been agast of swevenis?
No-thing, god wot, but vanitee, in sweven is.
Swevenes engendren of replecciouns,
And ofte of fume, and of complecciouns, Whan humours been to habundant in a
wight,

Certes this dreem, which ye han met to-
night,
Cometh of the grete superfluitee
Of youre rede colera, pardee,
Which causeth folk to dreden in here dremes
Of arwes, and of fyr with rede lemes,
Of grete bestes, that they wol hem byte,
Of kontek, and of whelpes grete and lyte;
Right as the humour of malencolye
Causeth ful many a man, in sleep, to crye,
For fere of blake beres, or boles blake,
Or elles, blake develes wole hem take.
Of othere humours coude I telle also,
That werken many a man in sleep ful wo;
But I wol passe as lightly as I can.

Lo Catoun,<sup>1</sup> which that was so wys a man,
Seyde he nat thus, ne do no fors of dremes?
Now, sire," quod she, "whan we flee fro the
bemes,

For Goddes love, as tak som laxatyf;
Up peril of my soule, and of my lyf,
I counseille yow the beste, I wol nat lye,
That bothe of colere and of malencolye
Ye purge yow; and for ye shul nat tarie,
Though in this toun is noon apotecarie,

I shal my-self to herbes techen yow,
That shul ben for your hele, and for your prow;

And in our yerd tho herbes shal I finde,
The whiche han of hir propretee, by kinde,
To purgen yow binethe, and eek above.
Forget not this, for goddes owene love!
Ye been ful colerik of compleccioun.
Ware the sonne in his ascencioun
Ne fynde yow nat repleet of humours hote;
And if it do, I dar wel leye a grote,
That ye shul have a fevere terciane,
Or an agu, that may be youre bane.
A day or two ye shul have digestyves
Of wormes, er ye take your laxatyves,
Of lauriol, centaure, and fumetere,
Or elles of ellebor, that groweth there,
Of catapuce, or of gaytres beryis,
Of erbe yve, growing in our yerd, that mery
is;

Pekke hem up right as they growe, and ete
hem in.

Be mery, housbond, for your fader kin!
Dredeth no dreem; I can say yow namore."
"Madame," quod he, "graunt mercy of<sup>2</sup> your lore.

But nathelees, as touching daun Catoun,
That hath of wisdom such a greet renoun,
Though that he had no dremes for to drede,
By god, men may in olde bokes rede
Of many a man, more of auctoritee
Than ever Catoun was, so mote I thee,
That al the revers seyn of his sentence,
And han wel founden by experience,
That dremes ben significaciouns,
As wel of joye as tribulaciouns
That folk enduren in this lyf present.
Ther nedeth make of this noon argument;
The verray preve sheweth it in dede.

Oon of the gretteste auctours that men rede
Seith thus, that whylom two felawes wente
On pilgrimage, in a ful good entente;
And happed so, thay come into a toun,
Wher-as ther was swich congregacioun
Of peple, and eek so streit of herbergage
That they ne founde as muche as o cotage
In which they bothe mighte y-logged be.
Wherfor thay mosten, of necessitee,
As for that night, departen compaignye;
And ech of hem goth to his hostelrye,
And took his logging as it wolde falle.
That oon of hem was logged in a stalle,

<sup>1</sup>Dionysius Cato, a mediæval writer.

<sup>2</sup>Many thanks for.

Fer in a yerd, with oxen of the plough;
That other man was logged wel y-nough,
As was his aventure, or his fortune,
That us governeth alle as in commune.

And so bifel, that, longe er it were day,
This man mette in his bed, ther-as he lay,
How that his felawe gan up-on him calle,
And seyde, 'allas! for in an oxes stalle
This night I shal be mordred ther I lye.
Now help me, dere brother, er I dye;
In alle haste com to me,' he sayde.
This man out of his sleep for fere abrayde;
But whan that he was wakned of his sleep,
He turned him, and took of this no keep;
Him thoughte his dreem nas but a vanitee.
Thus twyës in his sleping dremed he.
And atte thridde tyme yet his felawe
Cam, as him thoughte, and seide, 'I am now
slawe;

Bihold my bloody woundes, depe and wyde!
Arys up erly in the morwe-tyde,
And at the west gate of the toun,' quod he,
'A carte ful of dong ther shaltow see,
In which my body is hid ful prively;
Do thilke carte aresten boldly.
My gold caused my mordre, sooth to sayn';
And tolde him every poynt how he was slayn,
With a ful pitous face, pale of hewe.
And truste wel, his dreem he fond ful trewe;
For on the morwe, as sone as it was day,
To his felawes in he took the way;
And whan that he cam to this oxes stalle,
After hisfel awe he bigan to calle.

The hostiler answered him anon,
And seyde, 'sire, your felawe is agon,
As sone as day he wente out of the toun.'
This man gan fallen in suspecion,
Remembring on his dremes that he mette,
And forth he goth, no lenger wolde he lette,
Unto the west gate of the toun, and fond
A dong-carte, as it were to donge lond,
That was arrayed in the same wyse
As ye han herd the dede man devyse;
And with an hardy herte he gan to crye
Vengeance and justice of this felonye:—
'My felawe mordred is this same night,
And in this carte he lyth gaping upright.
I crye out on the ministres,' quod he,
'That sholden kepe and reulen this citee;
Harrow! allas! her lyth my felawe slayn!
What sholde I more un-to this tale sayn?
The peple out-sterre, and caste the cart to grounde,
And in the middel of the dong they founde

The dede man, that mordred was al newe.

O blisful god, that art so just and trewe!
Lo, how that thou biwreyest mordre alway!
Mordre wol out, that see we day by day.
Mordre is so wlatson and abhominable
To God, that is so just and resonable,
That he ne wol nat suffre it heled be;
Though it abyde a yeer, or two, or three,
Mordre wol out, this my conclusioun.
And right anoon, ministres of that toun
Han hent the carter, and so sore him pynded,
And eek the hostiler so sore engnyed,
That thay biknewe hir wikkednesse anoon,
And were an-hanged by the nekke-boon.

Here may men seen that dremes been to drede,

And certes, in the same book I rede,
Right in the nexte chapitre after this (I gabbe nat, so have I joye or blis),
Two men that wolde han passed over see,
For certeyn cause, in-to a fer contree,
If that the wind ne hadde been contrarie,
That made hem in a citee for to tarie,
That stood ful mery upon an havensyde.
But on a day, agayn the even-tyde,
The wind gan chaunge, and blew right as hem leste,
Jolif and glad they wente un-to hir reste,
And casten hem ful erly for to saille;
But to that oo man fil a greet mervaille.
That oon of hem, in sleping as he lay,
Him mette a wonder dreem, agayn the day;
Him thoughte a man stood by his beddes
syde,
And him comaunded, that he sholde abyde,
And seyde him thus, 'if thou to-morwe
wende,
Thou shalt be dreynt; my tale is at an ende.'

He wook, and tolde his felawe what he mette,
And preyde him his viage for to lette;
As for that day, he preyde him to abyde.
His felawe, that lay by his beddes syde,
Gan for to laughe, and scorned him ful faste.
'No dreem,' quod he, 'may so myn herte
agaste,
That I wol lette for to do my thinges.
I sette not a straw by thy dreminges,
For swevenes been but vanitees and japes.
Men dreme al-day of owles or of apes,
And eke of many a mase therwithal;
Men dreme of thing that never was ne shal.
But sith I see that thou wolt heer abyde,
And thus for-slëuthen wilfully thy tyde,

God wot it reweth me; and have good day.'
And thus he took his leve, and wente his way,
But er that he hadde halfe his cours y-seyled,
Noot I nat why, ne what mischaunce it
eyled,

But casuelly the shippes botme rente,
And ship and man under the water wente
In sighte of othere shippes it byside,
That with hem seyled at the same tyde.
And therfor, faire Pertelote so dere,
By swiche ensamples olde maistow lere,
That no man sholde been to recchelees
Of dremes, for I sey thee, doutelees,
That many a dreem fol sore is for to drede.

Lo, in the lyf of seint Kenelm, I rede,
That was Kenulphus sone, the noble king
Of Mercenrike,<sup>1</sup> how Kenelm mette a thing;
A lyte er he was mordred, on a day,
His mordre in his avisioun he say.
His norice him expounded every del
His sweven, and bad him for to kepe him
wel

For traisoun; but he nas but seven yeer old,
And therfore litel tale hath he told
Of any dreem, so holy was his herte.
By god, I hadde lever than my shert
That ye had rad his legende, as have I.
Dame Pertelote, I sey yow trewely,
Macrobeus, that writ th' avisioun
In Affrike of the worthy Cipiou, Affermeth dremes, and seith that they been Warning of thinges that men after seen.

And further-more, I pray yow loketh wel
In th' olde testament, of Daniel,
If he held dremes any vanitee.
Reed eek of Joseph, and ther shul ye see
Wher dremes ben somtyme (I sey nat alle)
Warning of thinges that shul after falle.
Loke of Egypt the king, daun Pharaos,
His bakere and his boteler also,
Wher they ne felte noon effect in dremes.
Who-so wol seken actes of sondry remes,
May rede of dremes many a wonder thing.

Lo Cresus, which that was of Lyde king,
Mette he nat that he sat upon a tree,
Which signified he sholde anhangd be?
Lo heer Andromacha, Ectores wyf,
That day that Ector sholde lese his lyf,
She dremed on the same night biforn,
How that the lyf of Ector sholde be lorn,
If thilke day he wente in-to bataille;
She warned him, but it mighte nat availle;

He wente for to fighte nathelees,
But he was slayn anon of Achilles.
But thilke tale is al to long to telle,
And eek it is ny day, I may nat dwelle.
Shortly I seye, as for conclusioun,
That I shal han of this avisioun
Adversitee; and I sey further-more,
That I ne telle of laxatyves no store,
For they ben venimous, I woot it wel;
I hem defye, I love hem never a del.

Now let us speke of mirthe, and stinte al
this;

Madame Pertelote, so have I blis,
Of o thing god hath sent me large grace;
For whan I see the beautee of your face,
Ye ben so scarlet-reed about your yën,
It maketh al my drede for to dyen;
For, also siker as In principio,
Mulier est hominis confusio;<sup>2</sup> Madame, the sentence of this Latin is—Womman is mannes joye and al his blis.
For whan I fele a-night your softe syde,
Al-be-it that I may nat on you ryde,
For that our perche is maad so narwe, alas!
I am so ful of joye and of solas
That I defye bothe sweven and dreem."
And with that word he fley doun fro the beem,

For it was day, and eek his hennes alle;
And with a chuk he gan hem for to calle,
For he had founde a corn, lay in the yerd.
Royal he was, he was namore aferd;
He fethered Pertelote twenty tyme,
And trad as ofte, er that it was pryme.
He loketh as it were a grim leoun;
And on his toos he rometh up and doun,
Him deynd not to sette his foot to grounde.
He chukketh, whan he hath a corn y-founde,
And to him rennen thanne his wyves alle.
Thus royal, as a prince is in his halle,
Leve I this Chauntecleer in his pasture;
And after wol I telle his aventure.

Whan that the month in which the world
bigan,
That highte March, whan god first maked
man,

Was complet, and [y]-passed were also,
Sin March bigan, thritty dayes and two,
Bifel that Chauntecleer, in al his pryde,
His seven wyves walking by his syde,
Caste up his eyen to the brighte sonne,
That in the signe of Taurus hadde y-ronne

<sup>1</sup>Mercia.

<sup>2</sup>In the beginning woman is man's undoing.

Twenty degrees and oon, and somewhat more;
And knew by kynde, and by noon other lore,
That it was pryme, and crew with blisful
stevene.

"The sonne," he sayde, "is clomben up on
hevene

Fourty degrees and oon, and more, y-wis.
Madame Pertelote, my wordes blis,
Herkneth thise blisful briddes how they singe,
And see the fresshe floures how they springe;
Ful is myn herte of revel and solas."

But sodeinly him fil a sorweful cas;
For ever the latter ende of joye is wo.

God woot that worldly joye is sone ago;
And if a rethor coude faire endyte,
He in a cronique sauffy mighte it wryte,
As for a sovereyn notabilitee.

Now every wys man, lat him herkne me;
This storie is al-so trewe, I undertake,
As is the book of Launcelot de Lake,<sup>1</sup>
That wommen holde in ful gret reverence.
Now wol I torne agayn to my sentence.

A col-fox, ful of sly iniquitee,
That in the grove hadde woned yeres three,
By heigh imaginacioun forn-cast,
The same night thurgh-out the hegges brast
Into the yerd, ther Chauntecleer the faire
Was wont, and eek his wyves, to repaire;
And in a bed of wortes stille he lay,
Til it was passed undern of the day,
Wayting his tyme on Chauntecleer to falle,
As gladly doon thise homicydes alle,
That in awayt ligen to mordre men.
O false mordrer, lurking in thy den!
O newe Scariot, newe Genilon!<sup>2</sup>
False dissimilour, O Greek Sinon,
That broghtest Troye al outrely to sorwe!
O Chauntecleer, acursed be that morwe,
That thou into that yerd flogh fro the
bemes!

Thou were ful wel y-warned by thy dremes,
That thilke day was perilous to thee.
But what that god forwoot mot nedes be,
After the opinioun of certeyn clerkis.
Witnesse on him, that any perfit clerk is,
That in scole is gret altercacioun
In this matere, and gret disputisoun,
And hath ben of an hundred thousand men.
But I ne can not bulte it to the bren,
As can the holy doctour Augustyn,
Or Boëce, or the bishop Bradwardyn,

Whether that goddes worthy forwiting
Streyneth me nedely for to doon a thing,
(Nedely clepe I simple necessitee);
Or elles, if free choys be graunted me
To do that same thing, or do it noght, Though god forwoot it, er that it was wroght;

Or if his witing streyneth nevere a del
But by necessitee condicionel.
I wol not han to do of swich matere;
My tale is of a cok, as ye may here,
That took his counseil of his wyf, with sorwe,
To walken in the yerd upon that morwe
That he had met the drem, that I yow tolde.
Wommennes counseils been ful ofte colde;
Wommannes counseil broghte us first to wo,
And made Adam fro paradys to go,
Ther-as he was ful mery, and wel at ese.—
But for I noot, to whom it mighte displese,
If I counseil of wommen wolde blame,
Passe over, for I seyde it in my game.
Rede auctours, wher they trete of swich matere,

And what thay seyn of wommen ye may here.
Thise been the cokkes wordes, and nat myne;
I can noon harm of no womman divyne.—

Faire in the sond, to bathe hir merily, Lyth Pertelote, and alle hir sustres by,
Agayn the sonne; and Chauntecleer so free
Song merier than the mermayde in the see;
For Physiologus<sup>3</sup> seith sikerly,
How that they singen wel and merily.
And so bifel that, as he caste his yē,
Among the wortes, on a boterflye,
He was war of this fox that lay ful lowe.
No-thing ne liste him thanne for to crowe,
But cryde anon, "cok, cok," and up he sterte,
As man that was affrayed in his herte.
For naturelly a beest desyareth flee
Fro his contrarie, if he may it see,
Though he never erst had seyn it with his yē.

This Chauntecleer, whan he gan him
espye,
He wolde han fled, but that the fox anon
Seyde, "Gentil sire, allas! wher wol ye gon?
Be ye affrayed of me that am your freend?
Now certes, I were worse than a feend,
If I to yow wolde harm or vileinye.
I am nat come your counseil for t'espye;
But trewely, the cause of my cominge
Was only for to herkne how that ye singe.

<sup>1</sup>A prose romance.

<sup>2</sup>The betrayer of Roland.

<sup>3</sup>The Bestiary, a popular collection containing moralized descriptions of animals.

For trewely ye have as mery a stevene
 As eny angel hath, that is in hevene;
 Therwith ye han in musik more felinge
 Than hadde Boëce, or any that can singe.
 My lord your fader (god his soule blesse!)
 And eek your moder, of hir gentilesse,
 Han in myn hous y-been, to my gret ese;
 And certes, sire, ful fayn wolde I yow
 plese.

But for men speke of singing, I wol saye,
 So mote I brouke wel myn eyen tweye,
 Save yow, I herde never man so singe,
 As dide your fader in the morweninge;
 Certes, it was of herte, al that he song.
 And for to make his voys the more strong,
 He wolde so payne him, that with bothe his yēn

He moste winke, so loude he wolde cryen,
 And stonden on his tiptoon ther-with-al,
 And strecche forth his nekke long and smal.
 And eek he was of swich discrecioun,
 That ther nas no man in no regioun
 That him in song or wisdom mighte passe.
 I have wel rad in daun Burnel the Asse,<sup>1</sup>
 Among his vers, how that ther was a cok,
 For that a preestes sone yaf him a knok
 Upon his leg, whyl he was yong and nyce,
 He made him for to lese his benefyce.
 But certeyn, ther nis no comparisoun
 Bitwix the wisdom and discrecioun
 Of youre fader, and of his subtiltee.
 Now singeth, sire, for seinte Charitee,
 Let see, conne ye your fader countrefete?"
 This Chauntecleer his winges gan to bete,
 As man that coude his tresoun nat espye,
 So was he ravished with his flaterye.

Allas! ye lordes, many a fals flatour
 Is in your courtes, and many a losengeour,
 That plesen yow wel more, by my feith,
 Than he that soothfastnesse unto yow seith.
 Redeth Ecclesiaste of flaterye;<sup>2</sup>
 Beth war, ye lordes, of hir trecherye.

This Chauntecleer stood hye up-on his toos,
 Strecching his nekke, and heeld his eyen
 cloos,

And gan to crowe loude for the nones;
 And daun Russel the fox sterte up at ones
 And by the gargat hente Chauntecleer,
 And on his bak toward the wode him beer,

<sup>1</sup>A Latin poem by Nigellus Wireker entitled Burnellus or the Mirror of Fools (written towards the close of the twelfth century).

<sup>2</sup>Ecclesiasticus (in Apocrypha), xii, 10, 11, 16.

For yet ne was ther no man that him sewed.
 O destinee, that mayst nat been eschewed!
 Allas, that Chauntecleer fleigh fro the
 bemes!

Allas, his wyf ne roghte nat of dremes!
 And on a Friday fil al this meschaunce.
 O Venus, that art goddesse of plesaunce,
 Sin that thy servant was this Chauntecleer,
 And in thy service dide al his poweer,
 More for delyt, than world to multiplie,
 Why woldestow suffre him on thy day to dye?

O Gaufred, dere mayster soverayn,
 That, whan thy worthy king Richard was slayn

With shot, compleynedest his deth so sore, Why ne hadde I now thy sentence and thy lore,

The Friday for to chyde, as diden ye?
 (For on a Friday soothly slayn was he.) Than wolde I shewe yow how that I coude
 pleyne

For Chauntecleres drede, and for his payne.

Certes, swich cry ne lamentacioun
 Was never of ladies maad, whan Ilioun
 Was wonne, and Pirrus with his streite
 swerd,

Whan he hadde hent king Priam by the berd,
 And slayn him (as saith us Eneydos),<sup>3</sup>
 As maden alle the hennes in the clos, Whan they had seyn of Chauntecleer the sighte.

But sovereynly dame Pertelote shrighite,
 Ful louder than dide Hasdrubales wyf,
 Whan that hir housbond hadde lost his lyf,
 And that the Romayns hadde brend Car-
 tage;

She was so ful of torment and of rage,
 That wilfully into the fyr she sterte,
 And brende hir-selven with a stedfast herte.
 O woful hennes, right so cryden ye,
 As, whan that Nero brende the citee
 Of Rome, cryden senatoures wyves,
 For that hir housbondes losten alle hir lyves;
 Withouten gilt this Nero hath hem slayn.
 Now wol I torne to my tale agayn:—

This sely widwe, and eek hir doghtres two,
 Herden thise hennes crye and maken wo,
 And out at dores sterten they anon,
 And syen the fox toward the grove goon,
 And bar upon his bak the cok away;
 And cryden, "Out! harrow! and weylaway!

<sup>3</sup>Æneid, II, 544.

Ha, ha, the fox!" and after him they ran,
 And eek with staves many another man;
 Ran Colle our dogge, and Talbot, and Ger-
 land,
 And Malkin, with a distaf in hir hand;
 Ran cow and calf, and eek the verray hogges
 So were they fered for berking of the dogges
 And shouting of the men and wimmen eke,
 They ronne so, hem thoughte hir herte breke.
 They yelleden as feendes doon in helle;
 The dokes cryden as men wolde hem quelle;
 The gees for fere flowen over the trees;
 Out of the hyve cam the swarm of bees;
 So hidous was the noyse, al benedicite!<sup>1</sup>
 Certes, he Jakke Straw,<sup>2</sup> and his meynee,
 Ne made never shoutes half so shrille,
 Whan that they wolden any Fleming kille,
 As thilke day was maad upon the fox.
 Of bras thay broghten bemes, and of box,
 Of horn, of boon, in whiche they blewe and
 pouped,
 And therewithal thay shryked and they houped;

It semed as that heven sholde falle.

Now, gode men, I pray yow herkneth alle!

Lo, how fortune turneth sodeinly
 The hope and pryde eek of hir enemy!
 This cok, that lay upon the foxes bak,
 In al his drede, un-to the fox he spak,
 And seyde, "sire, if that I were as ye,
 Yet sholde I seyn (as wis god helpe me),
 Turneth agayn, ye proude cherles alle!
 A verray pestilence up-on yow falle!
 Now am I come un-to this wodes syde,
 Maugree your heed, the cok shal heer abyde;
 I wol him ete in feith, and that anon."—
 The fox answerde, "in feith, it shal be don,"—
 And as he spak that word, al sodeinly
 This cok brak from his mouth deliverly,
 And heighe up-on a tree he fleigh anon.
 And whan the fox saugh that he was y-gon,
 "Allas!" quod he, "O Chauntecleer, alas!
 I have to yow," quod he, "y-doon trespas,
 In-as-muche as I maked yow aferd, Whan I yow hente, and broghte out of the yerd;

But, sire, I dide it in no wikke entente;
 Com down, and I shal telle yow what I mente.
 I shal seye sooth to yow, god help me so."
 "Nay than," quod he, "I shrewe us bothe two,

<sup>1</sup>Literally, "Blessings on you."

<sup>2</sup>Leader of an insurrection in 1381. Walsingham states that when he and his men killed Flemings they raised a "most horrible clamor."

And first I shrewe my-self, bothe blood and bones,

If thou bigyle me ofter than ones.

Thou shalt na-more, thurgh thy flaterye,

Do me to singe and winke with myn yē.

For he that winketh, whan he sholde see,

Al wilfully, god lat him never thee!"

"Nay," quod the fox, "but god yeve him
 meschaunce,

That is so undiscreet of governaunce,

That jangleth whan he sholde holde his pees."

Lo, swich it is for to be reccheles,

And necligent, and truste on flaterye.

But ye that holden this tale a folye,

As of a fox, or of a cok and hen,

Taketh the moralitee, good men.

For seint Paul seith, that al that writen is,

To our doctryne it is y-write, y-wis.<sup>3</sup>

Taketh the fruyt, and lat the chaf be stille.

Now, gode god, if that it be thy wille,

As seith my lord,<sup>4</sup> so make us alle good men;

And bringe us to his heighe blisse. Amen.

WORDS OF THE HOST<sup>5</sup>

OUR Hoste gan to swere as he were wood,

"Harrow!" quod he, "by nayles and by blood!

This was a fals cherl and a fals justyse!

As shamful deeth as herte may devyse

Come to thise juges and hir advocats!

Algate this sely mayde is slayn, allas!

Allas! to dere boghte she beautee!

Wherefore I seye al day, as men may see,

That yiftes of fortune or of nature

Ben cause of deeth to many a creature.

Hir beautee was hir deeth, I dar wel sayn;

Allas! so pitously as she was slayn!

Of bothe yiftes that I speke of now

Men han ful ofte more harm than prow.

But trewely, myn owene mayster dere,

This is a pitous tale for to here.

<sup>5</sup>Second Timothy, iii, 16.

<sup>4</sup>A note in one of the manuscripts explains this as referring to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

<sup>5</sup>Following the Nun's Priest's Tale there is an evident break, after which, in the now accepted arrangement of the tales, come the Physician's Tale (immediately preceding the above "words of the Host") and the Pardoner's Tale. The Physician's Tale, to which the Host refers, was one of afflicted innocence, the story of Appius and Virginia, in which the latter's father slays her as the only means of protecting her from shame at the hands of Appius.

But natheles, passe over, is no fors;
 I prey to god, so save thy gentil cors,
 And eek thyne urinals and thy jordanes,
 Thyn Ypocras, and eek thy Galianes,
 And every boist ful of thy letuarie;
 God blesse hem, and our lady seinte Marie!
 So mot I theen, thou art a propre man,
 And lyk a prelat, by seint Ronyan!<sup>1</sup>
 Seyde I nat wel? I can nat speke in terme;
 But wel I woot, thou doost my herte to erme,

That I almost have caught a cardiacle.
 By corpus bones! but I have triacle,
 Or elles a draught of moyste and corny ale,
 Or but I here anon a mery tale,
 Myn herte is lost for pitee of this mayde,
 Thou bel amy, thou Pardonere," he seyde,
 "Tel us som mirthe or japes right anon."
 "It shall be doon," quod he, "by seint Ron-yon!

But first," quod he, "heer at this ale-stake
 I wol both drinke, and eten of a cake."

But right anon thise gentils gonne to crye,
 "Nay! lat him telle us of no ribaudye;
 Tel us som moral thing, that we may lere
 Som wit, and thanne wol we gladly here."
 "I graunte, y-wis," quod he, "but I mot
 thinke

Up-on som honest thing, whyl that I drinke."

THE PROLOGUE OF THE PARDONERS TALE

Radix malorum est Cupiditas: Ad Thimotheum, sexto.<sup>2</sup>

"LORDINGS," quod he, "in chirches whan I
 preche,

I peyne me to han an hauteyn speche,
 And ringe it out as round as gooth a belle,
 For I can al by rote that I telle.
 My theme is alwey oon, and ever was—
 'Radix malorum est Cupiditas.'

First I pronounce whennes that I come,
 And than my bulles shewe I, alle and somme.
 Our lige lordes seel on my patente,
 That shewe I first, my body to warente,
 That no man be so bold, ne preest ne clerk,
 Me to destourbe of Cristes holy werk;
 And after that than telle I forth my tales,
 Bulles of popes and of cardinales,

Of patriarkes, and bishoppes I shewe;
 And in Latyn I speke a wordes fewe,
 To saffron with my predicacioun,
 And for to stire men to devocioun.
 Than shewe I forth my longe cristal stones,
 Y-crammed ful of cloutes and of bones;
 Reliks been they, as wenen they echoon.
 Than have I in latoun a sholder-boon
 Which that was of an holy Jewes shepe.
 'Good men,' seye I, 'tak of my wordes kepe;
 If that this boon be wasse in any welle,
 If cow, or calf, or sheep, or oxen swelle
 That any worm hath ete, or worm y-stonge,
 Tak water of that welle, and wash his tonge,
 And it is hool anon; and forthermore,
 Of pokkes and of scabbe, and every sore
 Shal every sheep be hool, that of this welle Drinketh a draughte; tak kepe eek what I telle.

If that the good-man, that the bestes oweth,
 Wol every wike, er that the cok him croweth,
 Fastinge, drinken of this welle a draughte,
 As thilke holy Jewe our eldres taughte,
 His bestes and his stoor shal multiplie.
 And, sirs, also it heleth jalousye;
 For, though a man be falle in jalous rage,
 Let maken with this water his potage,
 And never shal he more his wyf mistriste,
 Though he the sooth of hir defaute wiste;
 Al had she taken preestes two or three.

Heer is a miteyn eek, that ye may see.
 He that his hond wol putte in this miteyn,
 He shal have multiplying of his greyn,
 Whan he hath sowen, be it whete or otes,
 So that he offre pens, or elles grotes.

Good men and wommen, o thing warne
 I yow,

If any wight be in this chirche now,
 That hath doon sinne horrible, that he
 Dar nat, for shame, of it y-shriven be,
 Or any womman, be she yong or old,
 That hath y-maad hir housbond cokewold,
 Swich folk shul have no power ne no grace
 To offren to my reliks in this place.
 And who-so findeth him out of swich blame,
 He wol com up and offre in goddes name,
 And I assoille him by the auctoritee
 Which that by bulle y-graunted was to me.'

By this gaude have I wonne, yeer by yeer,
 An hundred mark sith I was Pardonere.
 I stonde lyk a clerk in my pulpet,
 And whan the lewed peple is doun y-set,
 I preche, so as ye han herd bifore,
 And telle an hundred false japes more.

<sup>1</sup>St. Ronan, whose name will be familiar to readers of Scott. Little besides his name is known of him.

<sup>2</sup>Greed is the root of all evil. First Timothy, vi, 10.

Than peyne I me to strecche forth the nekke,
 And est and west upon the peple I bekke,
 As doth a dowve sitting on a berne.
 Myn hondes and my tonge goon so yerne,
 That it is joye to see my bisnesse.
 Of avaryce and of swich cursednesse
 Is al my preching, for to make hem free
 To yeve her pens, and namely un-to me.
 For my entente is nat but for to winne,
 And no-thing for correccioun of sinne.
 I rekke never, whan that they ben beried,
 Though that her soules goon a-blake-beried!
 For certes, many a predicacioun
 Comth ofte tyme of yvel entencioun;
 Som for plesaunce of folk and flaterye,
 To been avaunced by ipocrisie,
 And som for veyne glorie, and som for hate.

For, whan I dar non other weyes debate,
 Than wol I stinge him with my tonge smerte
 In preching, so that he shal nat asterte
 To been defamed falsly, if that he Hath trespassed to my brethren or to me.
 For, though I telle noght his propre name,
 Men shal wel knowe that it is the same
 By signes and by othere circumstances.
 Thus quyte I folk that doon us displeances;
 Thus spitte I out my venim under hewe
 Of holynesse, to seme holy and trewe.

But shortly myn entente I wol devyse;
 I preche of no-thing but for coveitise.
 Therfor my theme is yet, and ever was—
'Radix malorum est cupiditas.'
 Thus can I preche agayn that same vyce
 Which that I use, and that is avaryce.
 But, though my-self be gilty in that sinne,
 Yet can I maken othere folk to twinne
 From avaryce, and sore to repente.
 But that is nat my principal entente.
 I preche no-thing but for coveitise;
 Of this matere it oughte y-nogh suffyse.

Than telle I hem ensamples many oon
 Of olde stories, longe tyme agoon:
 For lewed peple loven tales olde;
 Swich thinges can they wel reporte and holde.

What? trowe ye, the whyles I may preche,
 And winne gold and silver for I teche,
 That I wol live in povert wilfully?
 Nay, nay, I thoghte it never trewely!
 For I wol preche and begge in sondry londes;
 I wol not do no labour with myn hondes,
 Ne make baskettes, and live therby,
 Because I wol nat beggen ydelly.

I wol non of the apostles counterfete;
 I wol have money, wolles, chese, and whete,
 Al were it yeven of the povrest page,
 Or of the povrest widwe in a village,
 Al sholde hir children sterve for famyne.
 Nay! I wol drinke licour of the vyne,
 And have a joly wenche in every toun.
 But herkneth, lordings, in conclusioun;
 Your lyking is that I shal telle a tale.
 Now, have I dronke a draughte of corny ale,
 By god, I hope I shal yow telle a thing
 That shal, by resoun, been at your lyking.
 For, though myself be a ful vicious man,
 A moral tale yet I yow telle can,
 Which I am wont to preche, for to winne.
 Now holde your pees, my tale I wol beginne."

THE PARDONERS TALE<sup>1</sup>

IN FLAUNDRES whylom was a companye
 Of yonge folk, that haunteden folye,
 As ryot, hasard, stewes, and tavernes,
 Wher-as, with harpes, lutes, and giternes,
 They daunce and pleye at dees bothe day and night,

And ete also and drinken over hir might,
 Thurgh which they doon the devel sacrificyse
 With-in that develes temple, in cursed wyse,
 By superfluitee abhominable;
 Hir othes been so grete and so dampnable,
 That it is grisly for to here hem swere;
 Our blissed lordes body they to-tere;
 Hem thoughte Jewes rente him noght y-nough;

And ech of hem at othere sinne lough.
 And right anon than comen tombesteres
 Fetys and smale, and yonge fruyteteres,
 Singers with harpes, baudes, wafereres,
 Whiche been the verray develes officeres
 To kindle and blowe the fyr of lecherye,
 That is annexed un-to glotonye;
 The holy writ take I to my witnesse,
 That luxurie is in wyn and drunkenesse.

Lo, how that dronken Loth, unkindely,
 Lay by his doghtres two, unwittingly;
 So dronke he was, he niste what he wroghte.
 Herodes, (who-so wel the stories soghte),

<sup>1</sup>This story is of Eastern origin, and its theme has been often used from early times to the present day—for example by Boccaccio, Decameron, 6th Day, 10th Tale (apparently not Chaucer's source, which is unknown) and by Kipling, The King's Ankus. The Pardoner's final comment makes the tale a sort of sermon or exemplum of avarice.

Whan he of wyn was replet at his feste,
Right at his owene table he yaf his heste
To sleen the Baptist John ful giltelees.

Senek seith eek a good word doutelees;
He seith, he can no difference finde
Bitwix a man that is out of his minde
And a man which that is dronkelewe,
But that woodnesse, y-fallen in a shrewe,
Persevereth lenger than doth dronkenesse.

O glotonye, ful of cursednesse,
O cause first of our confusioun,
O original of our dampnacioun,
Til Crist had boght us with his blood agayn!
Lo, how dere, shortly for to sayn,
Aboght was thilke cursed vileinye;
Corrupt was al this world for glotonye!

Adam our fader, and his wyf also,
Fro Paradys to labour and to wo
Were driven for that vyce, it is no drede;
For whyl that Adam fasted, as I rede,
He was in Paradys; and whan that he Eet of the fruyt defended on the tree,
Anon he was out-cast to wo and peyne.
O glotonye, on thee wel oghte us pleyne!
O, wiste a man how many maladyes
Folwen of excesse and of glotonyes,
He wolde been the more mesurable
Of his diete, sittinge at his table.
Allas! the shorte throte, the tendre mouth, Maketh that, Est and West, and North and South,

In erthe, in eir, in water men to-swinke
To gete a glotoun deyntee mete and drinke!
Of this matere, o Paul, wel canstow trete,
"Mete un-to wombe, and wombe eek un-to mete,

Shal god destroyen bothe," as Paulus seith.<sup>1</sup>
Allas! a foul thing is it, by my feith,
To seye this word, and fouler is the dede,
Whan man so drinketh of the whyte and rede,
That of his throte he maketh his privee,
Thurgh thilke cursed superfluitee.

The apostel weping seith ful pitously,
"Ther walken many of whiche yow told have I,

I seye it now weping with pitous voys,
[That] they been enemys of Cristes croys,
Of whiche the ende is deeth, wombe is her god."<sup>2</sup>

O wombe! O bely! O stinking cod,
Fulfid of donge and of corrupcioun!

At either ende of thee foul is the soun.
How greet labour and cost is thee to finde!
Thise cokes, how they stampe, and streyne,
and grinde,

And turnen substaunce in-to accident,<sup>3</sup>
To fulfille al thy likerous talent!
Out of the harde bones knocke they
The mary, for they caste noght a-wey
That may go thurgh the golet softe and swote;

Of spicerye, of leef, and bark, and rote
Shal been his sauce y-maked by delyt,
To make him yet a newer appetyt.
But certes, he that haunteth swich delycles
Is deed, whyl that he liveth in tho vyces.

A lecherous thing is wyn, and dronkenesse
Is ful of stryving and of wrecchednesse.
O dronke man, disfigured is thy face,
Sour is thy breeth, foul artow to embrace,
And thurgh thy dronke nose semeth the soun
As though thou seydest ay "Sampsoun, Sampsoun";

And yet, god wot, Sampsoun drank never no
wyn.

Thou fallest, as it were a stiked swyn;
Thy tonge is lost, and al thyn honest cure;
For dronkenesse is verray sepulture
Of mannes wit and his discrecioun.
In whom that drinke hath dominacioun,
He can no conseil kepe, it is no drede.
Now kepe yow fro the whyte and fro the rede,
And namely fro the whyte wyn of Lepe,<sup>4</sup>
That is to selle in Fish-strete or in Chepe.<sup>5</sup>
This wyn of Spayne crepeth subtilly
In othere wynes, growing faste by,<sup>6</sup>
Of which ther ryseth swich fumositie,
That whan a man hath dronken draughtes
three,

And weneth that he be at hoom in Chepe,
He is in Spayne, right at the toun of Lepe,
Nat at the Rochel, ne at Burdeux toun;
And thanne wol he seye, "Sampsoun, Sampsoun."

<sup>1</sup>An allusion to disputes between the realists and the nominalists among medieval philosophers. The meaning is that cooks so changed the very nature of the things they prepared that those who ate them could not tell what they originally were.

<sup>4</sup>It was near Cadiz.

<sup>5</sup>Cheapside, London.

<sup>6</sup>The Pardoner says that the mixture must come from the closeness of the vineyards to each other, but means that it comes from the closeness of the casks in the vintners' cellars. The wines of La Rochelle and Bordeaux were milder than the Spanish wines.

<sup>1</sup>First Corinthians, vi, 13.

<sup>2</sup>Philippians, iii, 18-19.

But herkneþ, lordings, o word, I yow
preye,
That alle the sovereyn actes, dar I seye,
Of victories in th'olde testament,
Thurgh verray god, that is omnipotent,
Were doon in abstinence and in preyere;
Loketh the Bible, and ther ye may it lere.

Loke, Attila, the grete conquerour,
Deyde in his sleep, with shame and dishonour,
Bleding ay at his nose in dronkenesse;
A capitayn shoulde live in sobrenesse.
And over al this, avyseth yow right wel
What was comaunded un-to Lamuel—<sup>1</sup>
Nat Samuel, but Lamuel, seye I—Redeth the Bible, and finde it expresly
Of wyn-yeving to hem that han justyse.
Na-more of this, for it may wel suffyse.

And now that I have spoke of glotonye,
Now wol I yow defenden hasardrye.
Hasard is verray moder of lesinges,
And of deceite, and cursed forsweringes,
BlaspHEME of Crist, manslaughter, and wast also

Of catel and of tyme; and forthermo,
It is repreve and contrarie of honour
For to ben holde a commune hasardour.
And ever the hyer he is of estaat,
The more is he holden desolaat.
If that a prince useth hasardrye,
In alle governaunce and policye
He is, as by commune opinioun,
Y-holde the lasse in reputacioun.

Stilbon,<sup>2</sup> that was a wys embassadour,
Was sent to Corinthe, in ful greet honour,
Fro Lacidomie, to make hir alliaunce.
And whan he cam, him happede, par
chaunce,

That alle the grettest that were of that lord,
Pleyinge atte hasard he hem fond.
For which, as sone as it mighte be,
He stal him hoom agayn to his contree,
And seyde, "ther wol I nat lese my name;
N'I wol nat take on me so greet defame,
Yow for to allye un-to none hasardours.
Sendeth othere wyse embassadours;
For, by my trouthe, me were lever dye,
Than I yow sholde to hasardours allye.
For ye that been so glorious in honours
Shul nat allyen yow with hasardours
As by my wil, ne as by my trettee."
This wyse philosopre thus seyde he.

<sup>1</sup>Lemuel. Proverbs, xxxi, 1, 4, 5.

<sup>2</sup>Should be Chilon. The story is in John of Salisbury's Policraticus, bk. I, ch. 5.

Loke eek that, to the king Demetrius
The king of Parthes, as the book seith us,<sup>3</sup>
Sente him a paire of dees of gold in scorn,
For he hadde used hasard ther-biforn;
For which he heeld his glorie or his renoun
At no value or reputacioun.
Lordes may finden other maner pley
Honeste y-nough to dryve the day away.

Now wol I speke of othes false and grete
A word or two, as olde bokes trete.
Gret swering is a thing abhominable,
And false swering is yet more reprevable.
The heighe god forbad swering at al,
Witnesse on Mathew;<sup>4</sup> but in special
Of swering seith the holy Jeremye,<sup>5</sup>
"Thou shalt seye sooth thyn othes, and nat
lye,

And swere in dome, and eek in rightwis-
nesse;"

But ydel swering is a cursednesse.
Bihold and see, that in the firste table
Of heighe goddes hestes honourable,
How that the seconde heste of him is this—
"Tak nat my name in ydel or amis."<sup>6</sup>
Lo, rather he forbedeth swich swering
Than homicyde or many a cursed thing;
I seye that, as by ordre, thus it stondesth;
This knowen, that his hestes understondeth,
How that the second heste of god is that.
And forther over, I wol thee telle al plat,
That vengeance shal nat parten from his hous,

That of his othes is to outrageous.

"By goddes precious herte, and by his nayles,

And by the blode of Crist, that it is in Hayles,<sup>8</sup>

Seven is my chaunce, and thyn is cink and
treye;

By goddes armes, if thou falsly pleye,
This dagger shal thurgh-out thyn herte go"—
This fruyt cometh of the bicched bones two,

<sup>3</sup>Policraticus, bk. I, ch. 5.

<sup>4</sup>St. Matthew, v, 34.

<sup>5</sup>Jeremiah, iv, 2.

<sup>6</sup>Formerly the first and second commandments were considered as one, the tenth being divided into two to make up the number; hence the Pardoner refers to the third commandment as the second. It is in the first table, i. e., the group teaching man's duty to God; those in the second table teaching his duty to his neighbor.

<sup>7</sup>I. e., earlier in the list of commandments.

<sup>8</sup>The Abbey of Hailes, or Hales, in Gloucestershire.

Forswering, ire, falsnesse, homicyde.
Now, for the love of Crist that for us dyde,
Leveth your othes, bothe grete and smale;
But, sirs, now wol I telle forth my tale.

THISE ryotoures three, of whiche I telle, Longe erst er pryme rong of any belle,
Were set hem in a tavern for to drinke;
And as they satte, they herde a belle clinke
Biforn a cors, was caried to his grave;
That oon of hem gan callen to his knave,
"Go bet," quod he, "and axe redily,
What cors is this that passeth heer forby;
And look that thou reporte his name wel."
"Sir," quod this boy, "it nedeth never-adel.

It was me told, er ye cam heer, two houres;
He was, pardee, an old felawe of youres;
And sodeynly he was y-slayn to-night,
For-dronke, as he sat on his bench up-
right;

Ther cam a privee thief, men clepeth Deeth,
That in this contree al the peple sleeth,
And with his spere he smoot his herte a-two,
And wente his way with-outen wordes mo.
He hath a thousand slayn this pestilence:
And, maister, er ye come in his presence,
Me thinketh that it were necessarie
For to be war of swich an adversarie;
Beth redy for to mete him evermore.
Thus taughte me my dame, I sey na-more."
"By seinte Marie," seyde this taverner,
"The child seith sooth, for he hath slayn
this yeer,

Henne over a myle, with-in a greet village,
Both man and womman, child and hyne,
and page.

I trowe his habitacioun be there;
To been avysed greet wisdom it were,
Er that he dide a man a dishonour."
"Ye, goddes armes," quod this rytour,
"Is it swich peril with him for to mete?
I shal him seke by wey and eek by strete,
I make avow to goddes digne bones!
Herkneth, felawes, we three been al ones;
Lat ech of us holde up his hond til other,
And ech of us bicommen othres brother,
And we wol sleen this false traytour Deeth;
He shal be slayn, which that so many sleeth,
By goddes dignitee, er it be night."

Togidres han thise three her trouthes
plight,

To live and dyen ech of hem for other,
As though he were his owene y-boren brother.

And up they sterte al dronken, in this rage,
And forth they goon towardses that village,
Of which the taverner had spoke biforn,
And many a grisly ooth than han they sworn,
And Cristes blessed body they to-rente—
"Deeth shal be deed, if that they may him hente."

Whan they han goon nat fully half a myle,
Right as they wolde han troden over a style,
An old man and a povre with hem mette.
This olde man ful mekely hem grette,
And seyde thus, "now, lordes, god yow see!"

The proudest of thise ryotoures three Answerde agayn, "what? carl, with sory
grace,

Why artow al forwrapped save thy face?
Why livestow so longe in so greet age?"

This olde man gan loke in his visage,
And seyde thus, "for I ne can nat finde
A man, though that I walked in-to Inde,
Neither in citee nor in no village,
That wolde chaunge his youthe for myn
age;

And therefore moot I han myn age stille,
As longe time as it is goddes wille.

Ne deeth, allas! ne wol nat han my lyf;
Thus walke I, lyk a resteleees caityf,
And on the ground, which is my modres gate,
I knokke with my staf, bothe erly and late,
And seye, 'leve moder, leet me in!
Lo, how I vanish, flesh, and blood, and skin!
Allas! whan shul my bones been at reste?
Moder, with yow wolde I chaunge my cheste,
That in my chambre longe tyme hath be,
Ye! for an heyre clout to wrappe me!
But yet to me she wol nat do that grace,
For which ful pale and welked is my face.

But, sirs, to yow it is no curteisye
To speken to an old man vileinye,
But he trespasse in worde, or elles in dede.
In holy writ ye may your-self wel rede,
'Agayns an old man, hoor upon his heed,
Ye sholde aryse;"<sup>1</sup> wherfor I yeve yow reed,
Ne dooth un-to an old man noon harm now,
Na-more than ye wolde men dide to yow
In age, if that ye so longe abyde;
And god be with yow, wher ye go or ryde.
I moot go thider as I have to go."

"Nay, olde cherl, by god, thou shalt nat
so,"

Seyde this other hasardour anon;

"Thou partest nat so lightly, by seint John!

<sup>1</sup>Leviticus, xix, 32.

Thou spak right now of thilke traitour Deeth,
That in this contree alle our frendes sleeth.
Have heer my trouthe, as thou art his aspye,
Tel wher he is, or thou shalt it abyde,
By god, and by the holy sacrament!
For soothly thou art oon of his assent,
To sleen us yonge folk, thou false theef!"

"Now, sirs," quod he, "if that yow be so leef

To finde Deeth, turne up this croked wey,
For in that grove I lafte him, by my fey,
Under a tree, and ther he wol abyde;
Nat for your boost he wol him no-thing hyde.

See ye that ook? right ther ye shul him finde.
God save yow, that boghte agayn mankinde,
And yow amende!"—thus seyde this olde man.

And everich of thise ryotoures ran,
Til he cam to that tree, and ther they founde
Of florins fyne of golde y-coyned rounde
Wel ny an eighte bussshels, as hem thoughte.
No lenger thanne after Deeth they soughte,
But ech of hem so glad was of that sighte,
For that the florins been so faire and brighte,
That doun they sette hem by this precious hord.

The worste of hem he spake the firste word.
"Brethren," quod he, "tak kepe what I seye;

My wit is greet, though that I bourde and pleye.

This tresor hath fortune un-to us yiven,
In mirthe and jolitee our lyf to liven,
And lightly as it comth, so wol we spende.
Ey! goddes precious dignitee! who wende
To-day, that we sholde han so fair a grace?
But mighte this gold be caried fro this place
Hoom to myn hous, or elles un-to youre—
For wel ye woot that al this gold is oures—
Than were we in heigh felicitee.

But trewely, by daye it may nat be;
Men wolde seyn that we were theves stronge,
And for our owene tresor doon us honge.
This tresor moste y-caried be by nighte
As wysly and as slyly as it mighte.

Wherefore I rede that cut among us alle
Be drawe, and lat see wher the cut wol falle;
And he that hath the cut with herte blythe
Shal renne to the toun, and that ful swythe,
And bringe us breed and wyn ful prively.
And two of us shul kepen subtilly
This tresor wel; and, if he wol nat tarie,
Whan it is night, we wol this tresor carie

By oon assent, wher-as us thinketh best."
That oon of hem the cut broughte in his fest,
And bad hem drawe, and loke wher it wol falle;

And it fil on the yongeste of hem alle;
And forth toward the toun he wente anon.
And al-so sone as that he was gon,
That oon of hem spak thus un-to that other,
"Thou knowest wel thou art my sworne brother,

Thy profit wol I telle thee anon.
Thou woost wel that our felawe is agon;
And heer is gold, and that ful greet plentee,
That shal departed been among us thre.

But natheles, if I can shape it so
That it departed were among us two,
Hadde I nat doon a frendes torn to thee?"

That other answerde, "I noot how that may be;

He woot how that the gold is with us tweye,
What shal we doon, what shal we to him seye?"

"Shal it be conseil?" seyde the firste shrewe,

"And I shal tellen thee, in wordes fewe,
What we shal doon, and bringe it wel aboute."

"I graunte," quod that other, "out of doute,

That by my trouthe, I wol thee nat biwrewe."

"Now," quod the firste, "thou woost wel we be tweye,

And two of us shul strenger be than oon.
Look whan that he is set, and right anon
Arys, as though thou woldest with him pleye;
And I shal ryve him thurgh the sydes tweye
Why! that thou strogelest with him as in game,
And with thy dagger look thou do the same;
And than shal al this gold departed be,
My dere freend, bitwixen me and thee;
Than may we bothe our lustes al fulfile,
And pleye at dees right at our owene wille."
And thus acorded been thise shrewes tweye
To sleen the thridde, as ye han herd me seye.

This yongest, which that wente un-to the toun,

Ful ofte in herte he rolleth up and doun
The beautee of thise florins newe and brighte,
"O lord!" quod he, "if so were that I mighte
Have al this tresor to my-self alone,
Ther is no man that liveth under the trone
Of god, that sholde live so mery as I!"
And atte laste the feend, our enemy,

Putte in his thought that he shold poyson
 beye,
 With which he mighte sleen his felawes
 tweye;

For-why the feend fond him in swich lyvinge,
 That he had leve him to sorwe bringe,
 For this was outrely his fulle entente
 To sleen hem bothe, and never to repente.
 And forth he gooth, no lenger wolde he tarie,
 Into the toun, un-to a pothecarie,
 And preyed him, that he him wolde selle
 Som poyson, that he mighte his rattes quelle;
 And eek ther was a polcat in his hawe,
 That, as he seyde, his capouns hadde y-slawe,
 And fayn he wolde wreke him, if he mighte,
 On vermin, that detroyed him by nighte.

The pothecarie answerde, "and thou shalt have

A thing that, al-so god my soule save,
 In al this world ther nis no creature,
 That ete or dronke hath of this confiture
 Noght but the mountance of a corn of whete,
 That he ne shal his lyf anon forlete;
 Ye, sterve he shal, and that in lasse whyle
 Than thou wolt goon a paas nat but a myle;
 This poyson is so strong and violent."

This cursed man hath in his hond y-hent
 This poyson in a box, and sith he ran
 In-to the nexte strete, un-to a man,
 And borwed [of] him large botels three;
 And in the two his poyson poured he;
 The thridde he kepte clene for his drinke,
 For al the night he shoop him for to swinke
 In caryinge of the gold out of that place.
 And whan this ryotour, with sory grace,
 Had filled with wyn his grete botels three,
 To his felawes agayn repaireth he.

What nedeth it to sermone of it more?
 For right as they had cast his deeth bifore,
 Right so they han him slayn, and that anon.
 And whan that this was doon, thus spak that oon,

"Now lat us sitte and drinke, and make us
 merie,

And afterward we wol his body berie."
 And with that word it happed him, par cas,
 To take the botel ther the poyson was,
 And drank, and yaf his felawe drinke also,
 For which anon they storven bothe two.

But, certes, I suppose that Avicen<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup>Avicenna (A. D. 980-1037), celebrated Arabian physician and philosopher. As Chaucer (or the Pardoner) perhaps did not understand, "Canon" is the general title of Avicenna's treatise on medicine.

Wroot never in no canon, ne in no fen,
 Mo wonder signes of empoisoning
 Than hadde thise wrecches two, er hir ending.

Thus ended been thise homicydes two,
 And eek the false empoysoner also.

O cursed sinne, ful of cursednesse!
 O traytours homicyde, o wikkednesse!
 O glotonye, luxurie, and hasardrye!
 Thou blasphemour of Crist with vileinye
 And othes grete, of usage and of pryde!
 Allas! mankind, how may it bityde,
 That to thy creatour which that thee
 wroghte,
 And with his precious herte-blood thee
 boghte,

Thou art so fals and so unkinde, allas!

Now, goode men, god forgeve yow your trespas,

And ware yow fro the sinne of avaryce.
 Myn holy pardoun may yow alle waryce,
 So that ye offre nobles or sterlinges,
 Or elles silver broches, spones, ringes.
 Boweth your heed under this holy bulle!
 Cometh up, ye wyves, offreth of your wolle!

Your name I entre heer in my rolle anon;
 In-to the blisse of hevene shul ye gon;
 I yow assoile, by myn heigh power,
 Yow that wol offre, as clene and eek as cleer
 As ye were born; and, lo, sirs, thus I preche.

And Jesu Crist, that is our soules leche,
 So graunte yow his pardon to receyve;
 For that is best; I wol yow nat deceyve.

But sirs, o word forgat I in my tale,
 I have relikes and pardon in my male,
 As faire as any man in Engeland,
 Whiche were me yeven by the popes hond.
 If any of yow wol, of devocioun,
 Offren, and han myn absolucioun,
 Cometh forth anon, and kneleth heer adoun,
 And mekely receyvethe my pardoun:
 Or elles, taketh pardon as ye wende,
 Al newe and fresh, at every tounes ende,
 So that ye offren alwey newe and newe Nobles and pens, which that be gode and trewe.

It is an honour to everich that is heer,
 That ye mowe have a suffisant pardoneer
 T'assoile yow, in contree as ye ryde,
 For aventures which that may bityde.

Peraventure ther may falle oon or two
 Doun of his hors, and breke his nekke atwo.
 Look which a seuretee is it to yow alle
 That I am in your felaweship y-falle,
 That may assoille yow, bothe more and lasse,
 Whan that the soule shal fro the body passe.
 I rede that our hoste heer shal biginne,
 For he is most envoluped in sinne.
 Com forth, sir hoste, and offre first anon,
 And thou shalt kisse the reliks everichon,
 Ye, for a grote! unbokel anon thy purs.

"Nay, nay," quod he, "than have I Cristes curs!

Lat be," quod he, "it shal nat be, so thee'ch!
 Thou woldest make me kisse thyn old breech,
 And swere it were a relik of a seint,
 Thogh it were with thy fundement depeint!
 But by the croys which that seint Eleyne fond,

I wolde I hadde thy coillons in myn hond
 In stede of relikes or of seintuarie;
 Lat cutte hem of, I wol thee helpe hem carie;
 They shul be shryned in an hogges tord."

This pardoner answerde nat a word;
 So wrooth he was, no word ne wolde he seye.
 "Now," quod our host, "I wol no lenger
 pleye

With thee, ne with noon other angry man."
 But right anon the worthy Knight bigan,
 Whan that he saugh that al the peple lough,
 "Na-more of this, for it is right y-nough;
 Sir Pardoner, be glad and mery of chere;
 And ye, sir host, that been to me so dere,
 I prey yow that ye kisse the Pardoner.
 And Pardoner, I prey thee, drawe thee neer,
 And, as we diden, lat us laughe and pleye."
 Anon they kiste, and riden forth hir weye.<sup>1</sup>

CHAUCERS WORDES UNTO ADAM, HIS OWNE SCRIVEYN

ADAM scriveyn, if ever it thee bifalle
 Boece or Troilus to wryten newe,
 Under thy lokkes thou most have the scalle,
 But after my making thou wryte trewe.
 So ofte a daye I mot thy werk renewe,
 Hit to correcte and eek to rubbe and scrape;
 And al is through thy negligence and rape.

<sup>1</sup>The Pardoner's tale concludes what, in the present arrangement of the Canterbury Tales, is the third group. There follow six more groups, in which eleven stories are told.

TRUTH

BALADE DE BON CONSEYL

FLEE fro the prees, and dwelle with soth-fastnesse,

Suffyce unto thy good,<sup>2</sup> though hit be smal;
 For hord hath hate, and climbing tikelnesse,
 Prees hath envye, and wele blent overal;
 Savour no more than thee bihove shal;
 Werk wel thy-self, that other folk canst rede;
 And trouthe shal deliver, hit is no drede.

Tempest thee noght al croked to redresse,
 In trust of hir that turneth as a bal:
 Gret reste stant in litel besinesse;
 And eek be war to sporne ageyn an al;
 Stryve noght, as doth the crokke with the wal.
 Daunte thy-self, that dauntest others dede;
 And trouthe shal deliver, hit is no drede.

That thee is sent, receyve in buxumnesse,
 The wrastling for this worlde axeth a fal.
 Her nis non hoom, her nis but wildernesse:
 Forth, pilgrim, forth! Forth, beste, out of thy stall!

Know thy contree, look up, thank God of al;
 Hold the hye wey, and lat thy gost thee lede;
 And trouthe shal deliver, hit is no drede.

ENVOY

Therefore, thou vache,<sup>3</sup> leve thyn old wrecch-ednesse

Unto the worlde; leve now to be thral;
 Crye him mercy, that of his hy goodnesse
 Made thee of noght, and in especial
 Draw unto him, and pray in general
 For thee, and eek for other, hevenlich mede;
 And trouthe shal deliver, hit is no drede.

LAK OF STEDFASTNESSE

BALADE

SOM tyme this world was so stedfast and stable,

That mannes word was obligacioun,
 And now hit is so fals and deceivable,
 That word and deed, as in conclusioun,
 Ben no-thing lyk, for turned up so doun
 Is al this world for mede and wilfulnesse,
 That al is lost for lak of stedfastnesse.

<sup>2</sup>Be content with your property.

<sup>3</sup>It is now known that this poem was addressed to one of Chaucer's friends, Sir Philip la Vache; "vache" (beast) is therefore used with double meaning.

What maketh this world to be so variable,
 But lust that folk have in dissensioun?
 Among us now a man is holde unable,
 But-if he can, by som collusioun,
 Don his neighbour wrong or oppressioun.
 What causeth this, but wilful wrecchednesse,
 That al is lost, for lak of stedfastnesse?

Trouthe is put down, resoun is holden fable;
 Vertu hath now no dominacioun,
 Pitee exyled, no man is merciable.
 Through covetyse is blent discrecioun,
 The world hath mad a permutacioun
 Fro right to wrong, fro trouthe to fikelnesse,
 That al is lost, for lak of stedfastnesse.

LENVOY TO KING RICHARD

O prince, desyre to be honourable,
 Cherish thy folk and hate extorcioun!
 Suffre no thing, that may be reprevable
 To thyn estat, don in thy regioun.
 Shew forth thy swerd of castigacioun,
 Dred God, do law, love trouthe and worthi-
 nesse,
 And wed thy folk agein to stedfastnesse.

THE COMPLEINT OF CHAUCER TO HIS EMPTY PURSE<sup>1</sup>

To you, my purse, and to non other wight
 Compleyne I, for ye be my lady dere!
 I am so sory, now that ye be light;
 For certes, but ye make me hevychere,

Me were as leef be leyd up-on my bere;
 For whiche un-to your mercy thus I crye:
 Beth hevychere ageyn, or elles mot I dye!

Now voucheth sauf this day, or hit be night,
 That I of you the blisful soun may here,
 Or see your colour lyk the sonne bright,
 That of yelownesse hadde never pere.
 Ye be my lyf, ye be myn hertes sterc,
 Quene of comfort and of good companye:
 Beth hevychere ageyn, or elles mot I dye!

Now purs, that be to me my lyves light,
 And saveour, as down in this worlde here,
 Out of this toun help me through your
 might,

Sin that ye wole nat been my tresorere;
 For I am shave as nye as any frere.
 But yit I pray un-to your curtesye:
 Beth hevychere ageyn, or elles mot I dye!

LENVOY DE CHAUCER

O conquerour of Brutes Albioun!
 Which that by lyne and free eleccioun
 Ben verray king, this song to you I sende;
 And ye, that mowen al our harm amende,
 Have minde up-on my supplicacioun!

<sup>1</sup>This is probably one of the last poems Chaucer wrote, inasmuch as the envoy, at least, cannot have been written before 30 September, 1399, when Parliament formally acknowledged Henry IV's right to the English throne. The appeal, it may be added, was successful.

POPULAR BALLADS

A popular ballad is "a song that tells a story," and that has come out of the past through oral tradition. We do not know the authors of any true ballads; on the contrary, it has been contended that no true ballad was composed by an individual. Ballads are thought to have originated at a very early stage of culture when communities were still largely undifferentiated, when they acted spontaneously as groups, and when the individual had scarcely become conscious of himself. "Persons," in other words, had not yet appeared, although communities had, and the homogeneous members of these communities lived one collective life. So, it is thought, they danced and sang, and what they sang were ballads. Yet no one had composed a ballad, but around some refrain, perhaps beginning in a mere inarticulate cry, here a member of the group and there a member of the group had thrown a line or two which simply "came" on the spur of the moment, with the ultimate result that a song telling a connected story sprang into existence. It was thus unpremeditated, spontaneous, the composition not of a person but of a community. All this, however, evidently relates to a stage of life about which we know very little and may accordingly theorize with considerable freedom. The account just given has been widely accepted, but it has, too, been acutely challenged on the ground that while we know little enough about primitive life, what we do know hardly bears out these claims for the possibilities of spontaneous collective action. Consequently it is urged that ballads, like other and later kinds of literature, must have had individual authors. But, while the question of ballad-origins remains unsettled, it is of course true that, as long as a poem is handed from one generation to another orally, it is subject to change and thus does become in a real sense the product as well as the possession of a community; and so much we can safely say of the English and Scottish popular ballads. As we have them, they show no obvious signs of individual authorship; they are objective, impersonal, unreflective, and in many cases evidently had a long period of life before they attained a fixed form through being written down. More than three hundred popular ballads are extant. Of these only eleven come from manuscripts older than the seventeenth century, but the time when a ballad reached its final form through writing or printing is not significant of its real age. The oldest of the English and Scottish ballads probably had their origin in the thirteenth century, and others which are founded on historical events can be definitely assigned to the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries. There was no very serious interest in ballads among cultivated people until the middle of the eighteenth century. It was then that Bishop Percy discovered a folio manuscript, written about 1650, which remains still the most important collection of ballads. Percy printed his famous Reliques of Ancient English Poetry in 1765. The book was at once a sign of growing interest in ballad-literature and a stimulant to further search for additional ballads. A little later Sir Walter Scott became a notable collector of ballads from the mouths of people in whose families they had been handed down orally; and in the nineteenth century a definitive collection of the extant ballads was published by Professor F. J. Child (The English and Scottish Popular Ballads, 1882-1898).

Simplicity is the outstanding characteristic of the ballads. Their language is direct and unfigurative. Conventional epithets and standing phrases abound. Stanzas consist generally either of a couplet of verses of four accents with alternating refrain, or of four lines rhyming abcb, of which the first and third have four accents and the second and fourth three. The usual themes fall into a few broadly popular types—domestic tragedy, supernatural occurrences, the life of outlaws, riddles, historical events, and humorous incidents.

RIDDLES WISELY EXPOUNDED

THERE was a lady of the North Country,
Lay the bent to the bonny broom
And she had lovely daughters three.
Fa la la la, fa la la la ra re.

There was a knight of noble worth
Which also lived in the North.

The knight, of courage stout and brave,
A wife he did desire to have.

He knockéd at the ladie's gate
One evening when it was late.

The eldest sister let him in,
And pinned the door with a silver pin.

The second sister she made his bed,
And laid soft pillows under his head.

The youngest daughter that same night,
She went to bed to this young knight.

And in the morning, when it was day,
These words unto him she did say:

"Now you have had your will," quoth she,
"I pray, sir knight, will you marry me?"

The young brave knight to her replied,
"Thy suit, fair maid, shall not be denied.

"If thou canst answer me questions three,
This very day will I marry thee."

"Kind sir, in love, O then," quoth she,
"Tell me what your [three] questions be."

"O what is longer than the way,
Or what is deeper than the sea?

"Or what is louder than the horn,
Or what is sharper than a thorn?

"Or what is greener than the grass,
Or what is worse then a woman was?"

"O love is longer than the way,
And hell is deeper than the sea.

"And thunder is louder than the horn,
And hunger is sharper than a thorn.

"And poyson is greener than the grass,
And the Devil is worse than woman was."

When she these questions answered had,
The knight became exceeding glad.

And having [truly] tried her wit,
He much commended her for it.

And after, as it is verified,
He made of her his lovely bride.

So now, fair maidens all, adieu,
This song I dedicate to you.

I wish that you may constant prove Unto the man that you do love.

THE DOUGLAS TRAGEDY

"Rise up, rise up, now Lord Douglas," she says,

"And put on your armour so bright;
Let it never be said that a daughter of thine
Was married to a lord under night.

"Rise up, rise up, my seven bold sons,
And put on your armour so bright,
And take better care of your youngest sister,
For your eldest's awa the last night."

He's mounted her on a milk-white steed,
And himself on a dapple grey,
With a bugelet horn hung down his side;
And lightly they rode away.

Lord William look'd o'er his left shoulder,
To see what he could see,
And there he spy'd her seven brethren bold
Come riding over the lea.

"Light down, light down, Lady Margret,"
he said,
"And hold my steed in your hand,
Until that against your seven brethren bold,
And your father, I mak' a stand."

O, there she stood, and bitter she stood,
And never did shed one tear,
Until that she saw her seven brethren fa',
And her father, who lov'd her so dear.

"O hold your hand, Lord William!" she said,
"For your strokes they are wondrous sair;
True lovers I can get many an ane,
But a father I can never get mair."

O she's ta'en out her handkerchief,
It was o' the holland sae fine,
And aye she dighted her father's wounds,
That were redder than the wine.

"O chuse, O chuse, Lady Margret," he said,
"O whether will ye gang or bide?"
"I'll gang, I'll gang, Lord William," she said,
"For ye've left me no other guide."

He's lifted her on a milk-white steed,
And himself on a dapple grey,
With a bugelet horn hung down by his side;
And slowly they baith rade away.

O they rade on, and on they rade,
And a' by the light of the moon,
Until they came to yon wan water,
And there they lighted down.

They lighted down to tak' a drink
Of the spring that ran sae clear,
And doun the stream ran his gude heart's
blood,
And sair she gan to fear.

"Hold up, hold up, Lord William," she says,
"For I fear that you are slain."—
"Tis naething but the shadow of my scarlet cloak,
That shines in the water sae plain."

O they rade on, and on they rade,
And a' by the light of the moon,
Until they cam' to his mother's ha' door,
And there they lighted down.

"Get up, get up, lady mother," he says,
"Get up, and let me in!
Get up, get up, lady mother," he says,
"For this night my fair lady I've win."

"O mak my bed, lady mother," he says,
"O mak it braid and deep,
And lay Lady Margret close at my back,
And the sounder I will sleep."

Lord William was dead lang ere midnight,
Lady Margret lang ere day,
And all true lovers that go thegither,
May they have mair luck than they!

Lord William was buried in St. Mary's kirk,
Lady Margret in Mary's quire;
Out o' the lady's grave grew a bonny red rose,
And out o' the knight's a brier.

And they twa met, and they twa plat,
And fain they wad be near;
And a' the warld might ken right weel
They were twa lovers dear.

But bye and rade the Black Douglas,
And wow but he was rough!
For he pull'd up the bonny brier,
And flang 't in St. Mary's Lough.

ROBIN HOOD AND GUY OF GISBORNE<sup>1</sup>

WHEN shawes beene sheene, and shradds full
fayre,

And leeves both large and long,
Itt is merry, walking in the fayre forrest,
To heare the small birds songe.

The woodweele sang, and wold not cease,
Amongst the leaves a lyne:
And it is by two wight yeomen,
By deare God, that I meane.

* * * * *

"Me thought they did mee beate and binde,
And tooke my bow mee free;
If I bee Robin a-live in this lande,
I 'le be wrocken on both them towe."

"Sweavens are swift, master," quoth John,
"As the wind that blowes ore a hill;
Ffor if itt be never soe lowde this night,
To-morrow it may be still."

"Buske yee, bowne yee, my merry men all,
Ffor John shall goe with mee;
For I 'le goe seeke yond wight yeomen
In greenwood where the bee."

They cast on their gowne of greene,
A shooting gone are they,
Untill they came to the merry greenwood,
Where they had gladdest bee;
There were the ware of [a] wight yeoman,
His body leaned to a tree.

A sword and a dagger he wore by his side,
Had beene many a mans bane,
And he was cladd in his capull-hyde,
Topp, and tayle, and mayne.

<sup>1</sup>Tradition has it that Robin Hood was an historical character, an outlaw of the early fourteenth century. This is, to say the least, extremely improbable. As he is portrayed in the ballads, at any rate, he is a typical figure, an idealized outlaw, the champion of common folk against oppression. As such he was extremely popular, there being some 40 ballads about him. We know from a reference in the B-text of Piers Plowman that he was a familiar character at least as early as 1377.

A few verses are lost between stanzas 2 and 3, and the story itself has suffered some derangement. Robin dreams that two yeomen beat and bind him, and goes to seek them. One is Sir Guy, the other the sheriff of Nottingham; but we are not told how Robin knew that the sheriff was out against him, had attacked his camp, and had taken John prisoner.

"Stand you still, master," quoth Litle John,
 "Under this trusty tree,
 And I will goe to yond wight yeoman,
 "To know his meaning trulye."

"A, John, by me thou setts noe store,
 And that's a ffarley thinge;
 How oft send I my men beffore,
 And tarry my-selfe behinde?

"It is noe cunning a knave to ken,
 And a man but heare him speake;
 And itt were not for bursting of my bowe,
 John, I wold thy head breake."

But often words they breeden bale,
 That parted Robin and John;
 John is gone to Barn[e]sdale,
 The gates he knowes eche one.

And when hee came to Barnesdale,
 Great heavinesse there hee hadd;
 He ffound two of his fellowes
 Were slaine both in a slade,

And Scarlett a ffoote flyinge was,
 Over stockes and stone,
 For the sheriffe with seven score men
 Fast after him is gone.

"Yett one shoote I 'le shoote," sayes Litle
 John,
 "With Crist his might and mayne;
 I 'le make yond fellow that flies soe fast
 To be both glad and ffaine."

John bent up a good veiwe bow,
 And ffetted him to shoote;
 The bow was made of a tender boughe,
 And fell downe to his foote.

"Woe worth thee, wicked wood," sayd Litle
 John,
 "That ere thou grew on a tree!
 Ffor this day thou art my bale,
 My boote when thou shold bee!"

This shoote it was but looselye shott,
 The arrowe flew in vaine,
 And it mett one of the sheriffes men;
 Good William a Trent was slaine.

It had beene better for William a Trent
 To hange upon a gallowe
 Then for to lye in the greenwoode,
 There slaine with an arrowe.

And it is sayd, when men be mett,
 Six can doe more then three:
 And they have tane Litle John,
 And bound him ffast to a tree.

"Thou shalt be drawn by dale and downe," quoth the sheriffe,
 "And hanged hye on a hill:"
 "But thou may ffayle," quoth Litle John,
 "If itt be Christs owne will."

Let us leave talking of Litle John,
 For hee is bound fast to a tree,
 And talke of Guy and Robin Hood,
 In the green woode where they bee.

How these two yeomen together they mett,
 Under the leaves of lyne,
 To see what marchandise they made
 Even at that same time.

"Good morrow, good fellow," quoth Sir Guy;
 "Good morrow, good ffellow," quoth hee;
 "Methinkes by this bow thou beares in thy
 hand,
 A good archer thou seems to bee."

"I am wilfull of my way," quoth Sir Guye,
 "And of my morning tyde:"
 "I 'le lead thee through the wood," quoth Robin,
 "Good ffellow, I 'le be thy guide."

"I seeke an outlaw," quoth Sir Guye
 "Men call him Robin Hood;
 I had rather meet with him upon a day
 Then forty pound of golde."

"If you tow mett, itt wold be seene whether were better
 Afore yee did part awaye;
 Let us some other pastime find,
 Good ffellow, I thee pray.

"Let us some other masteryes make,
 And wee will walke in the woods even;
 Wee may chance meef[t] with Robin Hoode
 Att some unsett steven."

They cutt them downe the summer shroggs
Which grew both under a bryar,
And sett them three score rood in twinn,
To shoote the prickes full neare.

"Leade on, good ffellow," sayd Sir Guye,
"Lead on, I doe bidd thee:"
"Nay, by my faith," quoth Robin Hood,
"The leader thou shalt bee."

The first good shoot that Robin ledd
Did not shoote an inch the pricke ffroe;
Guy was an archer good enough,
But he cold neere shoote soe.

The second shoote Sir Guy shott,
He shott within the garlande;
But Robin Hoode shott it better then hee,
For he clove the good pricke-wande.

"Gods blessing on thy heart!" sayes Guye,
"Goode ffellow, thy shooting is goode;
For an thy hart be as good as thy hands,
Thou were better then Robin Hood.

"Tell me thy name, good ffellow," quoth
Guy,
"Under the leaves of lyne:"
"Nay, by my faith," quoth good Robin,
"Till thou have told me thine."

"I dwell by dale and downe," quoth Guye,
"And I have done many a curst turne;
And he that calles me by my right name
Calles me Guye of good Gysborne."

"My dwelling is in the wood," sayes Robin;
"By thee I set right nought;
My name is Robin Hood of Barnesdale,
A ffellow thou has long sought."

He that had neither beene a kithe nor kin
Might have seene a full fayre sight,
To see how together these yeomen went,
With blades both browne and bright.

To have seene how these yeomen together
foug[ht],
Two howers of a summers day;
Itt was neither Guy nor Robin Hood
That ffettled them to flye away.

Robin was reacheles on a roote,
And stumbled at that tyde,
And Guy was quicke and nimble withall,
And hitt him ore the left side.

"Ah, deere Lady!" sayd Robin Hoode,
"Thou art both mother and may!
I thinke it was never mans destinye
To dye before his day."

Robin thought on Our Lady deere,
And soone leapt up againe,
And thus he came with an awkarde stroke;
Good Sir Guy hee has slayne.

He tooke Sir Guys head by the hayre,
And sticked itt on his bowes end:
"Thou hast beene traytor all thy liffe,
Which thing must have an ende."

Robin pulled forth an Irish kniffe,
And nicked Sir Guy in the fface,
That hee was never on a woman borne Cold tell who Sir Guye was.

Saies, Lye there, lye there, good Sir Guye,
And with me be not wrothe;
If thou have had the worse stroakes at my
hand,
Thou shalt have the better cloathe.

Robin did off his gowne of greene,
Sir Guye hee did it throwe;
And hee put on that capull-hyde,
That cladd him topp to toe.

"The bowe, the arrowes, and litle horne,
And with me now I 'le beare;
Ffor now I will goe to Barn[e]sdale,
To see how my men doe ffare."

Robin sett Guyes horne to his mouth,
A lowd blast in it he did blow;
That beheard the sheriffe of Nottingham,
As he leaned under a lowe.

"Hearken! hearken!" sayd the sheriffe,
"I heard noe tydings but good;
For yonder I heare Sir Guyes horne blowe,
For he hath slaine Robin Hoode.

"For yonder I heare Sir Guyes horne blow,
Itt blowes soe well in tyde,
For yonder comes that wighty yeoman,
Cladd in his capull-hyde.

"Come hither, thou good Sir Guy, Aske of mee what thou wilt have:"
"I 'le none of thy gold," sayes Robin Hood,
"Nor I 'le none of itt have.

"But now I have slaine the master," he sayd,
 "Let me goe strike the knave;
 This is all the reward I aske, Nor noe other will I have."

"Thou art a madman," said the shiriffe,
 "Thou sholdest have had a knights ffee;
 Seeing thy asking [hath] beene soe badd,
 Well granted it shall be."

But Litle John heard his master speake,
 Well he knew that was his steven;
 "Now shall I be loset," quoth Litle John,
 "With Christs might in heaven."

But Robin hee hyed him towards Litle John,
 Hee thought hee wold loose him belive;
 The sheriffe and all his companye
 Fast after him did drive.

"Stand abacke! stand abacke!" sayd Robin;
 "Why draw you mee soe neere?
 Itt was never the use in our countrye
 One's shrift another shold heere."

But Robin pulled forth an Irysh kniffe,
 And losed John hand and ffoote,
 And gave him Sir Guyes bow in his hand,
 And bade it be his boote.

But John tooke Guyes bow in his hand—
 His arrowes were rawstye by the roote;
 The sherriffe saw Litle John draw a bow
 And fettle him to shoote.

Towards his house in Nottingham
 He fled full fast away,
 And soe did all his companye,
 Not one behind did stay.

But he cold neither soe fast goe,
 Nor away soe fast runn,
 But Litle John, with an arrow broade,
 Did cleave his heart in twinn.

ROBIN HOOD AND THE MONK<sup>1</sup>

IN SOMER, when the shawes be sheyne,
 And leves be large and long,
 Hit is full mery in feyre foreste
 To here the foulys song:

<sup>1</sup>This is the oldest of the extant Robin Hood ballads. It comes from a manuscript of about 1450 which is now in the Cambridge University Library.

To se the dere draw to the dale,
 And leve the hilles hee,
 And shadow hem in the levés grene,
 Under the grene-wode tre.

Hit befel on Whitsontide,
 Erly in a May mornying,
 The son up feyre can shyne,
 And the briddis mery can syng.

"This is a mery mornying," said Litull John,
 "Be hym that dyed on tre;
 A more mery man then I am one Lyves not in Cristianté.

"Pluk up thi hert, my dere mayster,"
 Litull John can sey,
 "And thynk hit is a full fayre tyme
 In a mornying of May."

"Ye, on thyng greves me," seid Robyn,
 "And does my hert mych woo;
 That I may not no solem day
 To mas nor matyns goo.

"Hit is a fourtnet and more," seid he,
 "Syn I my savvyour see;
 To day wil I to Notyngham," seid Robyn,
 "With the myght of mylde Marye."

Than spake Moche, the mylner sun,
 Ever more wel hym betyde!
 "Take twelve of thi wyght yemen,
 Well weppynd, be thi side.
 Such on wolde thi selfe slon,
 That twelve dar not abyde."

"Of all my mery men," seid Robyn,
 "Be my feith I wil non have,
 But Litull John shall beyre my bow,
 Til that me list to drawe."

"Thou shall beyre thin own," seid Litull Jon,
 "Maister, and I wyl beyre myne,
 And we well shete a peny," seid Litull Jon,
 "Under the grene-wode lyne."

"I wil not shete a peny," seyde Robyn Hode,
 "In feith, Litull John, with the,
 But ever for on as thou shetis," seide Robyn,
 "In feith I holde the thre."

Thus shet thei forth, these yemen too
 Bothe at buske and brome,
 Til Litull John wan of his maister
 Five shillings to hose and shone.

A ferly strife fel them betwene,
 As they went bi the wey;
 Litull John seid he had won five shillings,
 And Robyn Hode seid schortly nay.

With that Robyn Hode lyed Litul Jon,
 And smote hym with his hande;
 Litul Jon waxed wroth therwith,
 And pulled out his bright bronde.

"Were thou not my maister," seid Litull
 John,
 "Thou shuld is by hit ful sore;
 Get the a man wher thou w[il]t,
 For thou getis me no more."

Then Robyn goes to Notyngnam,
 Hym selfe mornyng allone,
 And Litull John to mery Scherwode,
 The pathes he knew ilkone.

Whan Robyn came to Notyngnam,
 Sertenly withouten layn,
 He prayed to God and myld Mary
 To bryng hym out save agayn.

He gos in to Seynt Mary church,
 And kneled down before the rode;
 Alle that ever were the church within Beheld wel Robyn Hode.

Beside hym stod a gret-hedid munke,
 I pray to God woo he be!
 Fful sone he knew gode Robyn,
 As sone as he hym se.

Out at the durre he ran,
 Fful sone and anon;
 Alle the gatis of Notyngnam
 He made to be sparred everychon.

"Rise up," he seid, "thou prowde schereff,
 Buske the and make the bowne;
 I have spyed the kynggis felon,
 Ffor sothe he is in this town.

"I have spyed the false felon,
 As he stondis at his masse;
 Hit is long of the," seide the munke,
 "And ever he fro us passe.

"This traytur name is Robyn Hode,
 Under the grene-wode lynde;
 He robbyt me onys of a hundred pound,
 Hit shalle never out of my mynde."

Up then rose this prowde shereff,
 And radly made hym gare;
 Many was the moder son
 To the kyrk with hym can fare.

In at the dures thei throlly thrast,
 With staves ful gode wone;
 "Alas, alas!" seid Robyn Hode,
 "Now mysse I Litull John."

But Robyn toke out a too-hond sworde,
 That hangit down be his kne;
 Ther as the schereff and his men stode
 thyckust,
 The thurwarde wolde he.

Thryes thorowout them he ran then,
 For sothe as I yow sey,
 And woundyt mony a moder son,
 And twelve he slew that day.

His sworde upon the schireff hed
 Sertainly he brake in too;
 "The smyth that the made," seid Robyn,
 "I pray to God wyрке hym woo!

"Ffor now am I weppynlesse," said Robyn,
 "Alasse! agayn my wyll;
 But if I may fle these traytors fro,
 I wot thei wil me kyll."

Robyn in to the churché ran,
 Throout hem everilkon,

* * * * *

Sum fel in swonyng as thei were dede,
 And lay stil as any stone;
 Non of theym were in her mynde
 But only Litull Jon.

"Let be your rule," seid Litull Jon,
 "Ffor his luf that dyed on tre,
 Ye that shulde be dugty men;
 Het is gret shame to se.

"Oure maister has been hard bystode
 And yet scapyd away;
 Pluk up your hertis, and leve this mone,
 And harkyn what I shal say.

"He has servyd Oure Lady many a day,
And yet wil, securly;
Therfor I trust in hir specialy
No wyckud deth shal he dye.

"Therfor be glad," seid Litul John,
"And let this mournyng be;
And I shal be the munkis gyde,
With the myght of mylde Mary.

"We will go but we too;
And I mete hym," seid Litul John,

"Loke that ye kepe wel owre tristil-tre,
Under the levys smale,
And spare non of this venyson,
That gose in thys vale."

Fforthe then went these yemen too,
Litul John and Moche on fere,
And lokid on Moch emys hows,
The hye way lay full nere.

Litul John stode at a wyndow in the mornyng,
And lokid forth at a stage;
He was war wher the munke came ridyng,
And with hym a litul page.

"Be my feith," seid Litul John to Moch,
"I can the tel tithyngus gode;
I se wher the munke cumys rydyng,
I know hym be his wyde hode."

They went in to the way, these yemen bothe,
As curtes men and hende;
Thei spyrrd tithyngus at the munke,
As they hade bene his frende.

"Ffro whens come ye?" seid Litull Jon,
"Tel us tithyngus, I yow pray,
Off a false owtlay, [callid Robyn Hode,]
Was takyn yisterday.

"He robbyt me and my felowes bothe
Of twenti marke in serten;
If that false owtlay be takyn,
Ffor sothe we wolde be fayn."

"So did he me," seid the munke,
"Of a hundred pound and more;
I layde furst hande hym apon,
Ye may thonke me therfore."

"I pray God thanke you," seid Litull John,
"And we will when we may;
We wil go with you, with your leve,
And bryng yow on your way.

"Ffor Robyn Hode hase many a wilde felow,
I tell you in certen;
If thei wist ye rode this way,
In feith ye shulde be slayn."

As thei went talking be the way,
The munke and Litull John,
John toke the munkis horse be the hede,
Fful sone and anon.

Johne toke the munkis horse be the hed,
Ffor sothe as I yow say;
So did Much the litull page,
Ffor he shulde not scape away.

Be the golett of the hode
John pulled the munke down;
John was nothyng of hym agast,
He lete hym falle on his crown.

Litul John was so[re] agrevyd,
And drew owt his swerde in hye;
This munke saw he shulde be ded,
Lowd mercy can he crye.

"He was my maister," seid Litull John,
"That thou hase browgt in bale;
Shalle thou never cum at our kyng,
Ffor to telle hym tale."

John smote of the munkis hed,
No longer wolde he dwell;
So did Moch the litull page,
Ffor ferd lest he wolde tell.

Ther thei beryed hem bothe,
In nouthur mosse nor lyng,
And Litull John and Much infere
Bare the letturs to oure kyng.

He knelid down upon his kne:
"God yow save, my lege lorde, Ihesus yow save and se!

"God yow save, my lege kyng!"
To speke John was full bolde;
He gaf hym the letturs in his hond,
The kyng did hit unfold.

The kyng red the letturs anon,
And seid, "So mot I the,
Ther was never yoman in mery Ingland
I longut so sore to se.

"Wher is the munke that these shuld have brought?"

Oure kyng can say:
"Be my trouth," seid Litull John,
"He dyed after the way."

The kyng gaf Moch and Litul Jon
Twenti pound in sertan,
And made them yemen of the crown,
And bade them go agayn.

He gaf John the seel in hand,
The sheref for to bere,
To bryng Robyn hym to,
And no man do hym dere.

John toke his leve at oure kyng,
The sothe as I yow say;
The next way to Notyngham
To take, he gede the way.

Whan John came to Notyngham
The gatis were sparred ychon;
John callid up the porter,
He answerid sone anon.

"What is the cause," seid Litul Jon,
"Thou sparris the gates so fast?"
"Because of Robyn Hode," seid [the] porter,
"In depe prison is cast.

"John and Moch and Wyll Scathlok,
Ffor sothe as I yow say,
Thei slew oure men upon our wallis,
And sawten us every day."

Litull John spyrrid after the schereff,
And sone he hym fonde;
He oppnyed the kyngus prive seell,
And gaf hym in his honde.

Whan the scheref saw the kyngus seell,
He did of his hode anon:
"Wher is the munke that bare the letturs?"
He seid to Litull John.

"He is so fayn of hym," seid Litul John,
"Ffor sothe as I yow say,
He has made hym abot of Westmynster,
A lorde of that abbay."

The scheref made John gode chere,
And gaf hym wyne of the best;
At nygt thei went to her bedde,
And every man to his rest.

When the scheref was on slepe,
Dronken of wyne and ale,
Litul John and Moch for sothe
Toke the way unto the jale.

Litul John callid up the jayler,
And bade hym rise anon:
He seyde Robyn Hode had brokyn prison,
And out of hit was gon.

The porter rose anon sertan,
As sone as he herd John calle;
Litul John was redy with a swerd,
And bare hym to the walle.

"Now wil I be porter," seid Litul John,
"And take the keyes in honde:"
He toke the way to Robyn Hode,
And sone he hym unbonde.

He gaf hym a gode swerd in his hond,
His hed [ther] with for to kepe,
And ther as the walle was lowyst
Anon down can thei lepe.

Be that the cok began to crow,
The day began to spryng;
The scheref fond the jaylier ded,
The comyn bell made he ryng.

He made a crye thoroout al the tow[n],
Wheder he be yoman or knave,
That cowthe bryng hym Robyn Hode,
His warison he shuld have.

"Ffor I dar never," said the scheref,
"Cum before oure kyng;
Ffor if I do, I wot serten
Ffor sothe he wil me heng."

The scheref made to seke Notyngham,
Bothe be strete and stye,
And Robyn was in mery Scherwode,
As ligt as lef on lynde.

Then bespake gode Litull John,
To Robyn Hode can he say,
I have done the a gode turne for an evyll,
Quyte the whan thou may.

"I have done the a gode turne," seid Litull John,

"Ffor sothe as I yow say;

I have brougt the under grene-wode lyne;
Ffare wel, and have gode day."

"Nay, be my trouth," seid Robyn Hode,

"So shall hit never be;

I make the maister," seid Robyn Hode,
"Off alle my men and me."

"Nay, be my trouth," seid Litull John,

"So shalle hit never be;

But lat me be a felow," seid Litull John,
"No noder kepe I be."

Thus John gate Robyn Hod out of prison,

Sertan withoutyn layn;

Whan his men saw hym hol and sounde,
Ffor sothe they were full fayne.

They filled in wyne, and made hem glad,

Under the levys smale,

And gete pastes of venyson,
That gode was with ale.

Than worde came to oure kyng

How Robyn Hode was gon,

And how the scheref of Notyngham
Durst never loke hym upon.

Then bespake oure cumly kyng,

In an angur hye:

"Litull John hase begyled the schereff,
In faith so hase he me.

"Litul John has begyled us bothe,

And that full wel I se;

Or ellis the schereff of Notyngham Hye hongut shulde he be.

"I made hem yemen of the crowne,

And gaf hem fee with my hond;

I gaf hem grith," seid oure kyng,
"Thorowout all mery Ingland.

"I gaf theym grith," then seid oure kyng;

"I say, so mot I the,

Ffor sothe soch a yeman as he is on
In all Ingland ar not thre.

"He is trew to his maister," seid our kyng;

"I sey, be swete Seynt John,

He lovys better Robyn Hode
Then he dose us ychon.

"Robyn Hode is ever bond to hym,
Bothe in strete and stalle;

Speke no more of this mater," seid oure kyng,
"But John has begyled us alle."

Thus endys the talkyng of the munke

And Robyn Hode i-wysse;

God, that is ever a crowned kyng,
Bryng us all to his blisse!

ROBIN HOOD'S DEATH

WHEN Robin Hood and Little John,

Down a down a down a down,

Went oer yon bank of broom,
Said Robin Hood bold to Little John,

We have shot for many a pound.
Hey, etc.

But I am not able to shoot one shot more,

My broad arrows will not flee;

But I have a cousin lives down below,
Please God, she will bleed me.

Now Robin he is to fair Kirkly gone,

As fast as he can win;

But before he came there, as we do hear,
He was taken very ill.

And when he came to fair Kirkly-hall,

He knockd all at the ring,

But none was so ready as his cousin herself
For to let bold Robin in.

"Will you please to sit down, cousin Robin,"
she said,

"And drink some beer with me?"

"No, I will neither eat nor drink, Till I am blooded by thee."

"Well, I have a room, cousin Robin," she
said,

"Which you did never see,

And if you please to walk therein,
You blooded by me shall be."

She took him by the lily-white hand,

And led him to a private room,

And there she blooded bold Robin Hood,
While one drop of blood would run down.

She blooded him in a vein of the arm,

And locked him up in the room;

Then did he bleed all the live-long day,
Until the next day at noon.

He then bethought him of a casement there,
Thinking for to get down;
But was so weak he could not leap,
He could not get him down.

He then bethought him of his buglehorn,
Which hung low down to his knee;
He set his horn unto his mouth,
And blew out weak blasts three.

Then Little John, when hearing him,
As he sat under a tree,
"I fear my master is now near dead,
He blows so wearily."

Then Little John to fair Kirkly is gone,
As fast as he can dree;
But when he came to Kirkly-hall,
He broke locks two or three:

Until he came bold Robin to see,
Then he fell on his knee;
"A boon, a boon," cries Little John,
"Master, I beg of thee."

"What is that boon," said Robin Hood,
"Little John, [thou] begs of me?"
"It is to burn fair Kirkly-hall,
And all their nunnery."

"Now nay, now nay," quoth Robin Hood,
"That boon I'll not grant thee;
I never hurt woman in all my life,
Nor men in woman's company.

"I never hurt fair maid in all my time,
Nor at mine end shall it be;
But give me my bent bow in my hand,
And a broad arrow I'll let flee
And where this arrow is taken up,
There shall my grave digged be.

"Lay me a green sod under my head,
And another at my feet;
And lay my bent bow by my side,
Which was my music sweet;
And make my grave of gravel and green,
Which is most right and meet.

"Let me have length and breadth enough,
With a green sod under my head;
That they may say, when I am dead,
Here lies bold Robin Hood."

These words they readily granted him,
Which did bold Robin please:
And there they buried bold Robin Hood,
Within the fair Kirkleys.

THE HUNTING OF THE CHEVIOT<sup>1</sup>

THE Persē owt off Northombarlonde, and avowe to God mayd he
That he wold hunte in the mowntayns off Chyviat within days thre,
In the magger of doughtē Dogles,
and all that ever with him be.

The fattiste hartes in all Cheviat
he sayd he wold kyll, and cary them away:
"Be my feth," sayd the dougheti Doglas
agayn,
"I wyll let that hontyng yf that I may."

The[n] the Persē owt off Banborowe cam,
with him a myghtee meany,
With fifteen hondrith archares bold off blood
and bone;
the wear chosen owt of shyars thre.

This begane on a Monday at morn,
in Cheviat the hillys so he;
The chylde may rue that ys un-born,
it wos the mor pittē.

The dryvars thorowe the woodēs went,
for to reas the dear;
Bomen byckarte uppone the bent with ther browd aros cleare.

Then the wyld thorowe the woodēs went,
on every sydē shear;
Greahondes thorowe the grevis glent,
for to kyll thear dear.

This begane in Chyviat the hyls abone,
yerly on a Monnyn-day;
Be that it drew to the oware off none,
a hondrith fat hartēs ded ther lay.

<sup>1</sup>This is probably a later and confused account of the fight dealt with in the ballad called The Battle of Otterburn. The battle took place in 1388. Sir Philip Sidney's famous praise is generally referred to this ballad, though it would fit Otterburn almost as well: "Certainly I must confess my own barbarousness. I never heard the old song of Percy and Douglas that I found not my heart moved more than with a trumpet," etc. (Defence of Poesie). Addison criticized with high praise a younger and more corrupted version (Chevy Chase) of The Hunting of the Cheviot, in Nos. 70 and 74 of the Spectator.

The blewe a mort uppone the bent,
the semblyde on sydis shear;
To the quyrry then the Persë went,
to se the brytlynge off the deare.

He sayd, It was the Duglas promys
this day to met me hear;
But I wyste he wolde faylle, verament;
a great oth the Persë swear.

At the laste a squyar off Northomberlonde
lokyde at his hand full ny;
He was war a the doughetie Doglas commynge,
with him a myghttë meany.

Both with spear, bylle, and brande,
yt was a myghtti sight to se;
Hardyar men, both off hart nor hande,
wear not in Cristiantë.

The wear twenti hondrith spear-men good,
withoute any feale;
The wear borne along be the watter a Twyde,
yth bowndës of Tividale.

"Leave of the brytlyng of the dear," he sayd,
"and to your boÿs lock ye tayk good hede;
For never sithe ye wear on your mothars borne had ye never so mickle nede."

The dougheti Dogglas on a stede,
he rode alle his men before;
His armor glytteryde as dyd a glede;
a boldar barne was never born.

"Tell me whos men ye ar," he says,
"or whos men that ye be:
Who gave youe leave to hunte in this Chyviat
chays,
in the spyt of myn and of me."

The first mane that ever him an answeare
mayd,
yt was the good lord Persë:
"We wyll not tell the whoys men we ar,"
he says,
"nor whos men that we be;
But we wyll hounte hear in this chays,
in the spyt of thyne and of the."

"The fattiste hartës in all Chyviat
we have kyld, and cast to carry them
away:"

"Be my troth," sayd the doughetë Dogglas
agay[n],
"therfor the ton of us shall de this day."

Then sayd the doughetë Doglas unto the lord Persë:

"To kyll alle these giltles men,
alas, it wear great pittë!

"But, Persë, thowe art a lord of lande,
I am a yerle callyd within my contrë;
Let all our men uppone a parti stande,
and do the battell off the and of me."

"Nowe Cristes cors on his crowne," sayd the lorde Persë,
"who-so-ever ther-to says nay!
Be my troth, doughetë Doglas," he says,
"thou shalt never se that day."

"Nethar in Ynglonde, Skottlonde, nar
France,
nor for no man of a woman born,
But, and fortune be my chance,
I dar met him, on man for on."

Then bespayke a squyar off Northombarlonde,
Richard Wytharyngton was his nam;
"It shall never be told in Sothe-Ynglonde,"
he says,
"To Kyng Herry the Fourth for sham."

"I wat youe byn great lordës twaw,
I am a poor squyar of lande;
I wylle never se my captayne fyght on a fylde,
and stande my selffe and loocke on,
But whylle I may my weppone welde,
I wylle not [fayle] both hart and hande."

That day, that day, that dredfull day!
the first fit here I fynde;
And youe wyll here any mor a the hountynge
a the Chyviat,
yet ys ther mor behynde.

The Yngglyshe men hade ther bowys yebent,
ther hartes wer good yenoughe;
The first off arros that the shote off,
seven skore spear-men the sloughe.

Yet byddys the yerle Doglas uppon the bent,
a captayne good yenoughe,
And that was sene verament,
for he wrought hom both woo and wouche.

The Dogglas partyd his ost in thre,
lyk a cheffe cheften off pryde;
With suar spears off myghttē tre,
the cum in on every syde;

Thrughe our Yngglyshe archery gave many a wounde fulle wyde;
Many a doughetē the garde to dy,
which ganyde them no pryde.

The Ynglyshe men let ther boÿs be,
and pulde owt brandes that wer brighte;
It was a hevye syght to se
bryght swordes on basnites lyght.

Thorowe ryche male and myneyeple,
many sterne the strocke done streght;
Many a freyke that was fulle fre,
ther undar foot dyd lyght.

At last the Douglas and the Persē met,
lyk to captayns of myght and of mayne;
The swapte togethar tylle the both swat,
with swordes that wear of fyn myllan.

Thes worthē freckys for to fyght,
ther-to the wear fulle fayne,
Tylle the bloode owte off thear basnetes
sprente,
as ever dyd heal or ra[y]n.

"Yelde the, Persē," sayde the Doglas,
"and i feth I shalle the brynge
Wher thowe shalte have a yerls wagis of Jamy our Skottish kynge.

"Thoue shalte have thy ransom fre,
I hight the hear this thinge;
For the manfullyste man yet art thowe
that ever I conquerd in filde fighttynge."

"Nay," sayd the lord Persē,
"I tolde it the beforne,
That I wolde never yeldyde be to no man of a woman born."

With that ther cam an arrowe hastely,
forthe off a myghttē wane;
Hir hathe strekene the yerle Douglas in at the brest-bane.

Thorowe lyvar and longēs bathe
the sharpe arrowe ys gane,
That never after in all his lyffe-days
he spayke mo wordēs but ane:
That was, "Fyghte ye, my myrry men,
whyllys ye may,
for my lyff-days ben gan."

The Persē leanyde on his brande,
and sawe the Douglas de;
He tooke the dede mane by the hande,
and sayd, "Wo ys me for the!

"To have savyde thy lyffe, I wolde have partyde with
my landes for years thre,
For a better man, of hart nare of hande,
was nat in all the north contrē."

Off all that se a Skottishe knyght,
was callyd Ser Hewe the Monggombyrry;
He sawe the Douglas to the deth was dyght,
he spendyd a spear, a trusti tre.

He rod uppone a corsiare
throughe a hondrith archery:
He never stynttyde, nar never blane,
tylle he came to the good lord Persē.

He set uppone the lorde Persē
a dynte that was full soare;
With a suar spear of a myghttē tre
clean thorow the body he the Persē ber,

A the tothar syde that a man myght se a large cloth-yard and mare:
Towe bettar captayns wear nat in Cristiantē
then that day slan wear ther.

An archar off Northomberlonde say slean was the lord Persē;
He bar a bende bowe in his hand,
was made off trusti tre.

An arow that a cloth-yarde was lang
to the harde stele halyde he;
A dynt that was both sad and soar
he sat on Ser Hewe the Monggombyrry.

The dynt yt was both sad and sar
that he of Monggomberry sete;
The swane-fethars that his arrowe bar
with his hart-blood the wear wete.

Ther was never a freake wone foot wolde fle,
 but still in stour dyd stand,
 Heawyng on yche othar, whylle the myghte
 dre,
 with many a balfull brande.

This battell begane in Chyviat
 an owar befor the none,
 And when even-songe bell was rang,
 the battell was nat half done.

The tocke . . . on ethar hande<sup>1</sup>
 be the lyght off the mone;
 Many hade no strength for to stande,
 in Chyviat the hillys abon.

Of fifteen hondrith archars of Ynglonde went away but seventi and thre;
 Of twenti hondrith spear-men of Skotlonde,
 but even five and fifti.

But all wear slayne Cheviat within;
 the hade no streng[th]e to stand on by;
 • The chylde may rue that ys unborne,
 it was the mor pittē.

Thear was slayne, withe the lord Persē,
 Ser Johan of Agerstone,
 Ser Rogar, the hinde Hartly,
 Ser Wyllyam, the bolde Hearone.

Ser Jorg, the worthē Loumle,
 a knyghte of great renowen,
 Ser Raff, the ryche Rugbe,
 with dyntes wear beaten dowene.

For Wetharryngton my harte was wo,
 that ever he slayne shulde be;
 For when both his leggis wear hewyne in to,
 yet he knyled and fought on hys kny.

Ther was slayne, with the dougheti Duglas,
 Ser Hewe the Monggombyrry, Ser Davy Lwdale, that worthē was,
 his sistars son was he.

Ser Charls a Murrē in that place,
 that never a foot wolde fle;
 Ser Hewe Maxwelle, a lorde he was,
 with the Doglas dyd he dey.

<sup>1</sup>Words are missing in the manuscript. "Rest" has been suggested to fill the gap; and also "them off"—i. e., "they took themselves off."

So on the morrowe the mayde them byears off birch and hasell so g[r]ay;
 Many wedous, with wepyng tears,
 cam to fache ther makys away.

Tivydale may carpe off care,
 Northombarlond may mayk great mon,
 For towe such captayns as slayne wear thear on the March-parti shall never be non.

Word ys comen to Eddenburrowe, to Jamy the Skottishe kyng,<sup>2</sup>
 That dougheti Duglas, lyff-tenant of the Marches,
 he lay sleen Chyviat within.

His handdēs dyd he weal and wryng,
 he sayd, Alas, and woe ys me!
 Such an othar captayn Skotland within,
 he sayd, ye-feth shuld never be.

Worde ys commyn to lovly Londone,
 till the fourth Harry our kyng,
 That lord Persē, leyff-tenante of the Marchis,
 he lay slayne Chyviat within.

"God have merci on his solle," sayde Kyng Harry,
 "good lord, yf thy will it be!
 I have a hondrith captayns in Ynglonde,"
 he sayd,
 "as good as ever was he:
 But, Persē, and I brook my lyffe, thy deth well quyte shall be."

As our noble kyng mayd his avowe,
 lyke a noble prince of renowen,
 For the deth of the lord Persē
 he dyde the battell of Hombylldown;

Wher syx and thrittē Skottishe knyghtes
 on a day wear beaten down;
 Glendale glytteryde on ther armor bryght,
 over castille, towar, and town.

This was the hontyng off the Cheviat,
 that tear begane this spurn;
 Old men that knowen the grownde well yenoughe
 call it the battell of Otterburn.

<sup>2</sup>James I.

At Otterburn begane this spurne,
 uppone a Monnynday;
 Ther was the doughtē Douglas slean,
 the Persē never went away.

Ther was never a tym on the Marche-partēs
 sen the Douglas and the Persē met,
 But yt ys mervale and the rede blude ronne
 not,
 as the reane doys in the stret.

Ihesue Crist our balys bete,
 and to the blys us brynge!
 Thus was the hountynge of the Chivvat:
 God send us alle good endyng!

SIR PATRICK SPENS

THE king sits in Dunfermlin town,
 Sae merrily drinkin the wine:
 "Whare will I get a mariner,
 Will sail this ship o mine?"

Then up bespak a bonny boy,
 Sat just at the king's knee:
 "Sir Patrick Spence is the best seaman,
 That eer set foot on sea."

The king has written a braid letter,
 Seald it wi his ain hand;
 He has sent word to Sir Patrick,
 To come at his command.

"O wha is this, or wha is that,
 Has tald the king o me?
 For I was never a good seaman,
 Nor ever intend to be."

They mounted sail on Munenday morn,
 Wi a' the haste they may,
 And they hae landed in Norraway,
 Upon the Wednesday.

They hadna been a month, a month
 In Norraway but three,
 Till lads o Norraway began to say,
 Ye spend a' our white monie.

"Ye spend a' our good kingis goud,
 But and our queenis fee:"
 "Ye lie, ye lie, ye liars loud,
 Sae weel's I hear you lie.

"For I brought as much white money
 As will gain my men and me;
 I brought half a fou o good red goud
 Out oer the sea with me.

"Be 't wind or weet, be 't snaw or sleet,
 Our ships maun sail the morn:"
 "O ever alack! my master dear,
 I fear a deadly storm.

"I saw the new moon late yestreen,
 Wi the auld moon in her arm;
 And if we gang to sea, master,
 I fear we 'll suffer harm."

They hadna sailed a league on sea,
 A league but barely ane,
 Till anchors brak, and tap-masts lap;
 There came a deadly storm.

"Whare will I get a bonny boy
 Will tak thir sails in hand,
 That will gang up to the tap-mast,
 See an he ken dry land?"

Laith, laith were our good Scots lords
 To weet their leathern shoon;
 But or the morn at fair day-light,
 Their hats were wat aboon.

Mony was the feather bed,
 That flotterd on the faem,
 And mony was the good Scots lord
 Gaed awa that neer cam hame,
 And mony was the fatherless bairn
 That lay at hame greetin.

It's forty miles to Aberdeen,
 And fifty fathoms deep;
 And there lyes a' our good Scots lords,
 Wi Sir Patrick at their feet.

The ladies crackt their fingers white,
 The maidens tore their hair,
 A' for the sake o their true loves,
 For them they neer saw mair.

Lang, lang may our ladies stand,
 Wi their fans in their hand,
 Ere they see Sir Patrick and his men
 Come sailing to the land.

THE THREE RAVENS

There were three ravens sat on a tree,
 Downe a downe, hay down, hay downe,
 There were three ravens sat on a tree,
 With a downe,
 There were three ravens sat on a tree,
 They were as blacke as they might be.
 With a downe derrie, derrie, derrie, downe,
 downe.

The one of them said to his mate,
 "Where shall we our breakefast take?"

"Downe in yonder greene field,
 There lies a knight slain under his shield.

"His hounds they lie downe at his feete,
 So well they can their master keepe.

"His haukes they flie so eagerly,
 There's no fowle dare him come nie."

• Downe there comes a fallow doe,
 As great with yong as she might goe.

She lift up his bloody hed,
 And kist his wounds that were so red.

She got him up upon her backe,
 And carried him to earthen lake.

She buried him before the prime,
 She was dead herself ere even-song time.

God send every gentleman,
 Such haukes, such hounds, and such a leman.

EDWARD

"WHY dois your brand sae drap wi bluid,
 Edward, Edward,

Why dois your brand sae drap wi bluid,
 And why sae sad gang yee O?"

"O I hae killed my hauke sae guid,
 Mither, mither,

O I hae killed my hauke sae guid,
 And I had nae mair bot hee O."

"Your haukis bluid was nevir sae reid,
 Edward, Edward,

Your haukis bluid was nevir sae reid,
 My deir son I tell thee O."

"O I hae killed my reid-roan steid,
 Mither, mither,
 O I hae killed my reid-roan steid,
 That erst was sae fair and frie O."

"Your steid was auld, and ye hae gat mair,
 Edward, Edward,
 Your steid was auld, and ye hae gat mair,
 Sum other dule ye drie O."
 "O I hae killed my fadir deir,
 Mither, mither,
 O I hae killed my fadir deir,
 Alas, and wae is mee O!"

"And whatten penance wul ye drie for that,
 Edward, Edward?
 And whatten penance will ye drie for that?
 My deir son, now tell me O."
 "Ile set my feit in yonder boat,
 Mither, mither,
 Ile set my feit in yonder boat,
 And Ile fare ovir the sea O."

"And what wul ye doe wi your towirs and your ha,
 Edward, Edward?
 And what wul ye doe wi your towirs and your ha,
 That were sae fair to see O?"
 "Ile let thame stand tul they doun fa,
 Mither, mither,
 Ile let thame stand tul they doun fa,
 For here nevir mair maun I bee O."

"And what wul ye leive to your bairns and
 your wife,
 Edward, Edward?
 And what wul ye leive to your bairns and
 your wife,
 Whan ye gang ovir the sea O?"
 "The warldis room, late them beg thrae life,
 Mither, mither,
 The warldis room, late them beg thrae life,
 For thame nevir mair wul I see O."

"And what wul ye leive to your ain mither
 deir,
 Edward, Edward?
 And what wul ye leive to your ain mither
 deir?
 My deir son, now tell me O."

"The curse of hell frae me sall ye beir,
 Mither, mither,
 The curse of hell frae me sall ye beir,
 Sic counseils ye gave to me O."

THE TWA SISTERS

THERE was twa sisters in a bowr,
 Edinburgh, Edinburgh,
 There was twa sisters in a bowr,
 Stirling for ay.
 There was twa sisters in a bowr,
 There came a knight to be their wooer;
 Bonny Saint Johnston stands upon Tay.

He courted the eldest wi glove an ring,
 But he lovd the youngest above a' thing.

He courted the eldest wi brotch an knife,
 But lovd the youngest as his life.

The eldest she was vexéd sair,
 An much envi'd her sister fair.

Into her bowr she could not rest,
 Wi grief an spite she almos brast.

Upon a morning fair an clear,
 She cried upon her sister dear:

"O sister, come to yon sea stran,
 An see our father's ships come to lan."

She 's taen her by the milk-white han,
 And led her down to yon sea stran.

The younges[t] stood upon a stane,
 The eldest came an threw her in.

She tooke her by the middle sma,
 An dashd her bonny back to the jaw.

"O sister, sister, tak my han,
 An Ise mack you heir to a' my lan.

"O sister, sister, tak my middle,
 An yes get my goud and my gouden girdle.

"O sister, sister, save my life,
 An I swear Ise never be nae man's wife."

"Foul fa the han that I should tacke,
 It twin'd me an my wardles make.

"Your cherry cheeks an yallow hair
 Gars me gae maiden for evermair."

Sometimes she sank, an sometimes she swam,
 Till she came down yon bonny mill-dam.

O out it came the miller's son,
 An saw the fair maid swimmin in.

"O father, father, draw your dam,
 Here's either a mermaid or a swan."

The miller quickly drew the dam,
 An there he found a drownd woman.

You coudna see her yallow hair
 For gold and pearle that were so rare.

You coudna see her middle sma
 For gouden girdle that was sae brow.

You coudna see her fingers white,
 For gouden rings that was sae gryte.

An by there came a harper fine,
 That harpéd to the king at dine.

When he did look that lady upon,
 He sighd and made a heavy moan.

He's taen three locks o her yallow hair,
 An wi them strung his harp sae fair.

The first tune he did play and sing,
 Was, "Farewell to my father the king."

The nextin tune that he playd syne,
 Was, "Farewell to my mother the queen."

The lasten tune that he playd then,
 Was, "Wae to my sister, fair Ellen."

THE TWA BROTHERS

THERE were twa brethren in the north,
 They went to school thegithar;
 The one unto the other said,
 Will you try a warse afore?

They wrestled up, they wrestled down,
 Till Sir John fell to the ground,
 And there was a knife in Sir Willie's pouch,
 Gied him a deadlie wound.

"Oh brither dear, take me on your back,
 Carry me to yon burn clear,
 And wash the blood from off my wound,
 And it will bleed nae mair."

He took him up upon his back,
Carried him to yon burn clear,
And washd the blood from off his wound,
And aye it bled the mair.

"Oh brother dear, take me on your back,
Carry me to yon kirk-yard,
And dig a grave baith wide and deep.
And lay my body there."

He's taen him up upon his back,
Carried him to yon kirk-yard,
And dug a grave both deep and wide,
And laid his body there.

"But what will I say to my father dear,
Should he chance to say, Willie, whar's
John?"

"Oh say that he's to England gone,
To buy him a cask of wine."

"And what shall I say to my mother dear,
Should she chance to say, Willie, whar's
John?"

"Oh say that he's to England gone,
To buy her a new silk gown."

"And what will I say to my sister dear,
Should she chance to say, Willie, whar's
John?"

"Oh say that he's to England gone,
To buy her a wedding ring."

"What will I say to her you loe dear, Should she cry, Why tarries my John?"
"Oh tell her I lie in fair Kirk-land,
And home will never come."

THE CRUEL BROTHER

THERE was three ladies playd at the ba,
With a hey ho and a lillie gay,
There came a knight and played oer them a',
As the primrose spreads so sweetly.

The eldest was baith tall and fair,
But the youngest was beyond compare.

The midmost had a graceful mien,
But the youngest lookd like beautie's queen.

The knight bowd low to a' the three,
But to the youngest he bent his knee.

The ladie turned her head aside,
The knight he woo'd her to be his bride.

The ladie blushd a rosy red,
And sayd, "Sir knight, I'm too young to wed."

"O ladie fair, give me your hand,
And I'll make you ladie of a' my land."

"Sir knight, ere ye my favor win,
You maun get consent frae a' my kin."

He's got consent frae her parents dear,
And likewise frae her sisters fair.

He's got consent frae her kin each one,
But forgot to spiek to her brother John.

Now, when the wedding day was come,
The knight would take his bonny bride
home.

And many a lord and many a knight
Came to behold that ladie bright.

And there was nae man that did her see,
But wishd himself bridegroom to be.

Her father dear led her down the stair,
And her sisters twain they kissd her there.

Her mother dear led her thro the closs,
And her brother John set her on her horse.

She leand her oer the saddle-bow,
To give him a kiss ere she did go.

He has taen a knife, baith lang and sharp,
And stabbd that bonny bride to the heart.

She hadno ridden half thro the town,
Until her heart's blude staind her gown.

"Ride softly on," says the best young man,
"For I think our bonny bride looks pale and wan."

"O lead me gently up yon hill,
And I'll there sit down, and make my will."

"O what will you leave to your father dear?"
"The silver-shode steed that brought me
here."

"What will you leave to your mother dear?"

"My velvet pall and my silken gear."

"What will you leave to your sister Anne?"

"My silken scarf and my gowden fan."

"What will you leave to your sister Grace?"

"My bloody cloaths to wash and dress."

"What will you leave to your brother John?"

"The gallows-tree to hang him on."

"What will you leave to your brother John's wife?"

"The wilderness to end her life."

This ladie fair in her grave was laid,
And many a mass was oer her said.

But it would have made your heart right sair,
To see the bridegroom rive his haire.

THE WIFE OF USHER'S WELL

THERE lived a wife at Usher's Well,
And a wealthy wife was she;
She had three stout and stalwart sons,
And sent them oer the sea.

They hadna been a week from her,
A week but barely ane,
Whan word came to the carline wife
That her three sons were gane.

They hadna been a week from her,
A week but barely three,
Whan word came to the carlin wife
That her sons she'd never see.

"I wish the wind may never cease,
Nor fashes in the flood,
Till my three sons come hame to me,
In earthly flesh and blood."

It fell about the Martinmass,
When nights are lang and mirk,
The carlin wife's three sons came hame,
And their hats were o the birk.

It neither grew in syke nor ditch,
Nor yet in ony sheugh;
But at the gates o Paradise,
That birk grew fair enough.

* * * *

"Blow up the fire, my maidens,
Bring water from the well;
For a' my house shall feast this night,
Since my three sons are well."

And she has made to them a bed,
She's made it large and wide,
And she's taen her mantle her about,
Sat down at the bed-side.

* * * *

Up then crew the red, red cock,
And up and crew the gray;
The eldest to the youngest said,
'Tis time we were away.

The cock he hadna crawd but once,
And clappd his wings at a',
When the youngest to the eldest said,
Brother, we must awa.

"The cock doth craw, the day doth daw,
The channerin worm doth chide;
Gin we be mist out o our place,
A sair pain we maun bide.

"Fare ye weel, my mother dear!
Fareweel to barn and byre!
And fare ye weel, the bonny lass
That kindles my mother's fire!"

KEMP OWYNE<sup>1</sup>

HER mother died when she was young,
Which gave her cause to make great moan;
Her father married the warst woman
That ever lived in Christendom.

She servéd her with foot and hand,
In every thing that she could dee,
Till once, in an unlucky time,
She threw her in ower Craigy's sea.

Says, "Lie you there, dove Isabel,
And all my sorrows lie with thee;
Till Kemp Owyne come ower the sea,
And borrow you with kisses three,
Let all the world do what they will,
Oh borrowed shall you never be!"

<sup>1</sup>Owyne is Owain or Ywain, one of King Arthur's knights. Disenchantment by a kiss is common in romance, but none is known in which Ywain has this adventure.

Her breath grew strang, her hair grew lang,
And twisted thrice about the tree,
And all the people, far and near,
Thought that a savage beast was she.

These news did come to Kemp Owyne,
Where he lived, far beyond the sea;
He hasted him to Craigy's sea,
And on the savage beast lookd he.

Her breath was strang, her hair was lang,
And twisted was about the tree,
And with a swing she came about:
"Come to Craigy's sea, and kiss with me.

"Here is a royal belt," she cried,
"That I have found in the green sea;
And while your body it is on,
Drawn shall your blood never be;
But if you touch me, tail or fin,
I vow my belt your death shall be."

He steppéd in, gave her a kiss,
The royal belt he brought him wi;
Her breath was strang, her hair was lang,
And twisted twice about the tree,
And with a swing she came about:
"Come to Craigy's sea, and kiss with me.

"Here is a royal ring," she said,
"That I have found in the green sea;
And while your finger it is on,
Drawn shall your blood never be;
But if you touch me, tail or fin,
I swear my ring your death shall be."

He steppéd in, gave her a kiss,
The royal ring he brought him wi;
Her breath was strang, her hair was lang,
And twisted ance about the tree,
And with a swing she came about:
"Come to Craigy's sea, and kiss with me.

"Here is a royal brand," she said,
"That I have found in the green sea;
And while your body it is on,
Drawn shall your blood never be;
But if you touch me, tail or fin,
I swear my brand your death shall be."

He steppéd in, gave her a kiss,
The royal brand he brought him wi;
Her breath was sweet, her hair grew short,

And twisted nane about the tree,
And smilingly she came about,
As fair a woman as fair could be.

THOMAS RYMER<sup>1</sup>

TRUE THOMAS lay oer yond grassy bank,
And he beheld a ladie gay,
A ladie that was brisk and bold,
Come riding oer the fernie brae.

Her skirt was of the grass-green silk,
Her mantel of the velvet fine,
At ilka tett of her horse's mane
Hung fifty silver bells and nine.

True Thomas he took off his hat,
And bowed him low down till his knee:
"All hail, thou mighty Queen of Heaven!
For your peer on earth I never did see."

"O no, O no, True Thomas," she says,
"That name does not belong to me;
I am but the queen of fair Elfland,
And I'm come here for to visit thee.

* * * * *

"But ye maun go wi me now, Thomas,
True Thomas, ye maun go wi me,
For ye maun serve me seven years,
Thro weel or wae as may chance to be."

She turned about her milk-white steed,
And took True Thomas up behind,
And aye whenever her bridle rang,
The steed flew swifter than the wind.

For forty days and forty nights
He wade thro red blude to the knee,
And he saw neither sun nor moon,
But heard the roaring of the sea.

O they rade on, and further on,
Until they came to a garden green:
"Light down, light down, ye ladie free,
Some of that fruit let me pull to thee."

"O no, O no, True Thomas," she says,
"That fruit maun not be touched by thee,
For a' the plagues that are in hell
Light on the fruit of this countrie.

<sup>1</sup>This story is told in fuller detail in the poem called Thomas of Erceldoune, a fifteenth-century romance and probably the source of the ballad. Thomas of Erceldoune is an historical character; he lived in southern Scotland in the thirteenth century.

"But I have a loaf here in my lap,
Likewise a bottle of claret wine,
And now ere we go farther on,
We'll rest a while, and ye may dine."

When he had eaten and drunk his fill,
"Lay down your head upon my knee,"
The lady said, "ere we climb yon hill,
And I will show you fairlies three."

"O see not ye yon narrow road,
So thick beset wi thorns and briers?
That is the path of righteousness,
Tho after it but few enquires."

"And see not ye that braid braid road,
That lies across yon lillie leven?
That is the path of wickedness,
Tho some call it the road to heaven."

"And see not ye that bonny road,
Which winds about the fernie brae?
That is the road to fair Elfland,
Whe[re] you and I this night maun gae."

"But Thomas, ye maun hold your tongue,
Whatever you may hear or see,
For gin ae word you should chance to speak,
You will neer get back to your ain coun-trie."

He has gotten a coat of the even cloth,
And a pair of shoes of velvet green,
And till seven years were past and gone
True Thomas on earth was never seen.

SIR HUGH, OR, THE JEW'S DAUGHTER<sup>1</sup>

Four and twenty bonny boys
Were playing at the ba,
And by it came him sweet Sir Hugh,
And he playd oer them a'.

He kicked the ba with his right foot,
And catchd it wi his knee,
And through-and-thro the Jew's window
He gard the bonny ba flee.

<sup>1</sup>This is based on an alleged murder which took place in 1255. The popularity of such stories in the Middle Ages has been mentioned in the note to Chaucer's Prioress's Tale, which has the same theme. As has been said, these stories are as credible as the miracles asserted to have been worked by the relics of the young saints.

He's doen him to the Jew's castell,
And walkd it round about;
And there he saw the Jew's daughter,
At the window looking out.

"Throw down the ba, ye Jew's daughter, Throw down the ba to me!"
"Never a bit," says the Jew's daughter,
"Till up to me come ye."

"How will I come up? How can I come up?
How can I come to thee?
For as ye did to my auld father,
The same ye'll do to me."

She's gane till her father's garden,
And pu'd an apple red and green;
'T was a' to wyle him sweet Sir Hugh,
And to entice him in.

She's led him in through ae dark door,
And sae has she thro nine;
She's laid him on a dressing-table,
And stickit him like a swine.

And first came out the thick, thick blood,
And syne came out the thin,
And syne came out the bonny heart's blood;
There was nae mair within.

She's rowd him in a cake o lead,
Bade him lie still and sleep;
She's thrown him in Our Lady's draw-well,
Was fifty fathom deep.

When bells were rung, and mass was sung,
And a' the bairns came hame,
When every lady gat hame her son,
The Lady Maisry gat nane.

She's taen her mantle her about,
Her coffer by the hand,
And she's gane out to seek her son,
And wanderd oer the land.

She's doen her to the Jew's castell,
Where a' were fast asleep:
"Gin ye be there, my sweet Sir Hugh,
I pray you to me speak."

She's doen her to the Jew's garden,
Thought he had been gathering fruit:
"Gin ye be there, my sweet Sir Hugh,
I pray you to me speak."

She neard Our Lady's deep draw-well,
 Was fifty fathom deep:
 "Whareer ye be, my sweet Sir Hugh,
 I pray you to me speak."

"Gae hame, gae hame, my mither dear,
 Prepare my winding sheet,
 And at the back o merry Lincoln
 The morn I will you meet."

Now Lady Maisry is gane hame,
 Made him a winding sheet,
 And at the back o merry Lincoln
 The dead corpse did her meet.

And a' the bells o merry Lincoln
 Without men's hands were rung,
 And a' the books o merry Lincoln
 Were read without man's tongue,
 And neer was such a burial
 Sin Adam's days begun.

GET UP AND BAR THE DOOR

IT FELL about the Martinmas time,
 And a gay time it was then,
 When our goodwife got puddings to make,
 And she's boild them in the pan.

The wind sae cauld blew south and north,
 And blew into the floor;
 Quoth our goodman to our goodwife,
 "Gae out and bar the door."

"My hand is in my hussyfskap,
 Goodman, as ye may see;
 An it should nae be barrd this hundred year,
 It's no be barrd for me."

They made a paction tween them twa,
 They made it firm and sure,
 That the first word whaeer shoud speak,
 Shoud rise and bar the door.

Then by there came two gentlemen,
 At twelve o clock at night,
 And they could neither see house nor hall,
 Nor coal nor candle-light.

"Now whether is this a rich man's house,
 Or whether is it a poor?"
 But neer a word wad ane o them speak,
 For barring of the door.

And first they ate the white puddings,
 And then they ate the black;
 Tho muckle thought the goodwife to hersel,
 Yet neer a word she spake.

Then said the one unto the other,
 "Here, man, tak ye my knife;
 Do ye tak aff the auld man's beard,
 And I'll kiss the goodwife."

"But there's nae water in the house,
 And what shall we do than?"
 "What ails ye at the pudding-broo,
 That boils into the pan?"

O up then started our goodman,
 An angry man was he:
 "Will ye kiss my wife before my een,
 And scad me wi pudding-bree?"

Then up and started our goodwife,
 Gied three skips on the floor:
 "Goodman, you've spoken the foremost
 word,
 Get up and bar the door."

EVERYMAN

The authorship of Everyman is not known. The play made its appearance some time during the fifteenth century. Its text is preserved in four early editions, none of which is dated, though all must have appeared between 1493 and 1537—dates which mark the limits of the period during which the two printers of the editions, Pynson and Skot, did their work. It is considered probable by many scholars that Everyman is a translation of a Dutch play, Elckerlijck (ascribed to Dorlandus), which was in print before the earliest edition of Everyman. This, however, is by no means certain, as Everyman may be really the earlier of the two, or both may go back to some common source now unknown. The importance of this unsettled question, moreover, may easily be exaggerated, inasmuch as Everyman as it now stands is a thoroughly English play, with none of the earmarks of a mere translation, and has its inherent right to the place it has won in English literature.

Everyman is a morality;—that is, it is a dramatized moral allegory, a form of play which was one of the results of the one-time great popularity of allegory. In allegory inanimate things or abstract qualities—generally the latter—are personified in order to give them greater reality and interest. The English moralities were in the beginning vehicles of religious and moral instruction; later the type was made the instrument of religious controversy and was also used in exhibiting the value of learning. The great theme of the earlier moralities was the life of man conceived as a conflict between good and evil, a conflict which begins with birth and ends only with death. In its entirety this is a practically endless subject and the writers of moralities tended to narrow its scope, with proportionate gain in simplicity of plan, directness, and power. Thus some moralities exhibit a crucial conflict between two groups, virtues and vices, for possession of the soul of man. Another plan was to picture the coming of death, and this is done in Everyman. The play shows the measure of dramatic quality and power which the morality was capable of attaining when it was at its best.

CHARACTERS

EVERYMAN	STRENGTH
GOD: ADONAI	DISCRETION
DEATH	FIVE-WITS
MESSENGER	BEAUTY
FELLOWSHIP	KNOWLEDGE
COUSIN	CONFESSION
KINDRED	ANGEL
GOODS	DOCTOR
GOOD-DEEDS

Here beginneth a treatise how the High Father of Heaven sendeth death to summon every creature to come and give account of their lives in this world and is in manner of a moral play.

Messenger. I pray you all give your audience, And hear this matter with reverence, By figure a moral play—
The Summoning of Everyman called it is,
That of our lives and ending shows
How transitory we be all day.
This matter is wondrous precious,
But the intent of it is more gracious,
And sweet to bear away.

The story saith,—Man, in the beginning,
Look well, and take good heed to the ending,
Be you never so gay!
Ye think sin in the beginning full sweet,
Which in the end causeth thy soul to weep,
When the body lieth in clay.
Here shall you see how Fellowship and Jollity,
Both Strength, Pleasure, and Beauty,
Will fade from thee as flower in May.
For ye shall hear, how our Heaven King
Calleth Everyman to a general reckoning:
Give audience, and hear what he doth say.
God. I perceive here in my majesty,
How that all creatures be to me unkind,
Living without dread in worldly prosperity:
Of ghostly sight the people be so blind,
Drowned in sin, they know me not for their God;
In worldly riches is all their mind,
They fear not my rightwiseness, the sharp rod;
My law that I showed, when I for them died,

They forget clean, and shedding of my blood red;

I hanged between two, it cannot be denied;
To get them life I suffered to be dead;
I healed their feet, with thorns hurt was my head:

I could do no more than I did truly,
And now I see the people do clean forsake me.

They use the seven deadly sins damnable;
As pride, covetise, wrath, and lechery,
Now in the world be made commendable;
And thus they leave of angels the heavenly company;

Everyman liveth so after his own pleasure,
And yet of their life they be nothing sure:
I see the more that I them forbear

The worse they be from year to year;

All that liveth appaireth<sup>1</sup> fast,

Therefore I will in all the haste

Have a reckoning of Everyman's person;

For and I leave the people thus alone

In their life and wicked tempests,

Verily they will become much worse than beasts;

For now one would by envy another up eat;
Charity they all do clean forget.

I hoped well that Everyman

In my glory should make his mansion,

And thereto I had them all elect;

But now I see, like traitors deject,

They thank me not for the pleasure that I to them meant,

Nor yet for their being that I them have lent;

I proffered the people great multitude of mercy,

And few there be that asketh it heartily;

They be so cumbered with worldly riches,

That needs on them I must do justice,

On Everyman living without fear.

Where art thou, Death, thou mighty messenger?

Death. Almighty God, I am here at your will,

Your commandment to fulfil.

God. Go thou to Everyman,

And show him in my name

A pilgrimage he must on him take,

Which he in no wise may escape;

And that he bring with him a sure reckoning

Without delay or any tarrying.

Death. Lord, I will in the world go run over all,

And cruelly outsearch both great and small;

Every man will I beset that liveth beastly
Out of God's laws, and dreadeth not folly:

He that loveth riches I will strike with my dart,

His sight to blind, and from heaven to depart,

Except that alms be his good friend,
In hell for to dwell, world without end.

Lo, yonder I see Everyman walking;

Full little he thinketh on my coming;

His mind is on fleshly lusts and his treasure,

And great pain it shall cause him to endure
Before the Lord Heaven King.

Everyman, stand still; whither art thou going

Thus gaily? Hast thou thy Maker forget?

Everyman. Why askst thou?

Wouldest thou wete?<sup>2</sup>

Death. Yea, sir, I will show you;

In great haste I am sent to thee

From God out of his majesty.

Everyman. What, sent to me?

Death. Yea, certainly.

Though thou have forgot him here,

He thinketh on thee in the heavenly sphere,

As, or we depart, thou shalt know.

Everyman. What desireth God of me?

Death. That shall I show thee;

A reckoning he will needs have

Without any longer respite.

Everyman. To give a reckoning longer leisure I crave;

This blind matter troubleth my wit.

Death. On thee thou must take a long journey:

Therefore thy book of count with thee thou bring;

For turn again thou cannot by no way,

And look thou be sure of thy reckoning:

For before God thou shalt answer, and show

Thy many bad deeds and good but a few;

How thou hast spent thy life, and in what wise,

Before the chief lord of paradise.

<sup>1</sup>Is impaired.

<sup>2</sup>Know.

Have ado that we were in that way,
For, wete thou well, thou shalt make none
attournay.<sup>1</sup>

Everyman. Full unready I am such reckoning to give.

I know thee not: what messenger art thou?

Death. I am Death, that no man dreadeth.
For every man I rest and no man spareth;
For it is God's commandment
That all to me should be obedient.

Everyman. O Death, thou comest when I had thee least in mind;

In thy power it lieth me to save,
Yet of my good will I give thee, if ye will be kind,

Yea, a thousand pound shalt thou have,
And defer this matter till another day.

Death. Everyman, it may not be by no way;
I set not by gold, silver, nor riches,
Nor by pope, emperor, king, duke, nor princes.

For and I would receive gifts great,
All the world I might get;
But my custom is clean contrary.

I give thee no respite: come hence, and not tarry.

Everyman. Alas, shall I have no longer respite?

I may say Death giveth no warning:
To think on thee, it maketh my heart sick,
For all unready is my book of reckoning.
But twelve year and I might have abid-
ing,

My counting book I would make so clear,
That my reckoning I should not need to fear.

Wherefore, Death, I pray thee, for God's mercy,

Spare me till I be provided of remedy.

Death. Thee availeth not to cry, weep, and pray:

But haste thee lightly that you were gone
the journey,

And prove thy friends if thou can.

For, wete thou well, the tide abideth no
man,

And in the world each living creature

For Adam's sin must die of nature.

Everyman. Death, if I should this pilgrimage
take,

And my reckoning surely make,

Show me, for saint charity,
Should I not come again shortly?

Death. No, Everyman; and thou be once
there,

Thou mayst never more come here,
Trust me verily.

Everyman. O gracious God, in the high seat celestial,

Have mercy on me in this most need;
Shall I have no company from this vale terrestrial

Of mine acquaintance that way me to lead?

Death. Yea, if any be so hardy,
That would go with thee and bear thee company.

Hie thee that you were gone to God's magnificence,

Thy reckoning to give before his presence.
What, weenest thou thy life is given thee,
And thy worldly goods also?

Everyman. I had wend so, verily.

Death. Nay, nay; it was but lent thee;

For as soon as thou art go,
Another awhile shall have it, and then go therefro

Even as thou hast done.

Everyman, thou art mad; thou hast thy wits five,

And here on earth will not amend thy life,
For suddenly I do come.

Everyman. O wretched caitiff, whither shall I flee,

That I might scape this endless sorrow!

Now, gentle Death, spare me till tomorrow,

That I may amend me

With good advisement.

Death. Nay, thereto I will not consent,

Nor no man will I respite,

But to the heart suddenly I shall smite
Without any advisement.

And now out of thy sight I will me hie;

See thou make thee ready shortly,

For thou mayst say this is the day

That no man living may scape away.

Everyman. Alas, I may well weep with sighs
deep;

Now have I no manner of company

To help me in my journey, and me to keep;

And also my writing is full unready.

How shall I do now for to excuse me?

I would to God I had never be gete!<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup>Mediator.

<sup>2</sup>Been born.

To my soul a full great profit it had be;
 For now I fear pains huge and great.
 The time passeth; Lord, help that all
 wrought;
 For though I mourn it availeth nought.
 The day passeth, and is almost a-go;
 I wot not well what for to do.
 To whom were I best my complaint to
 make?

What, and I to Fellowship thereof spake,
 And showed him of this sudden chance?
 For in him is all mine affiance;
 We have in the world so many a day
 Be on good friends in sport and play.
 I see him yonder, certainly;
 I trust that he will bear me company;
 Therefore to him will I speak to ease my sorrow.

Well met, good Fellowship, and good
 morrow!

Fellowship speaketh. Everyman, good morrow
 by this day.

Sir, why lookest thou so piteously?
 If any thing be amiss, I pray thee, me say,
 That I may help to remedy.

Everyman. Yea, good Fellowship, yea,
 I am in great jeopardy.

Fellowship. My true friend, show to me your
 mind;

I will not forsake thee, unto my life's end,
 In the way of good company.

Everyman. That was well spoken, and lovingly.

Fellowship. Sir, I must needs know your heaviness;

I have pity to see you in any distress;
 If any have you wronged ye shall revenged
 be,

Though I on the ground be slain for thee,— Though that I know before that I should die.

Everyman. Verily, Fellowship, gramercy.

Fellowship. Tush! by thy thanks I set not a straw.

Show me your grief, and say no more.

Everyman. If I my heart should to you break,
 And then you to turn your mind from me,
 And would not me comfort, when you hear me speak,

Then should I ten times sorrier be.

Fellowship. Sir, I say as I will do in deed.

Everyman. Then be you a good friend at
 need:

I have found you true here before.

Fellowship. And so ye shall evermore;
 For, in faith, and thou go to Hell,
 I will not forsake thee by the way!

Everyman. Ye speak like a good friend; I believe you well;

I shall deserve it, and I may.

Fellowship. I speak of no deserving, by this
 day.

For he that will say and nothing do
 Is not worthy with good company to go;
 Therefore show me the grief of your
 mind,

As to your friend most loving and kind.

Everyman. I shall show you how it is;
 Commanded I am to go a journey,
 A long way, hard and dangerous,
 And give a strait count without delay
 Before the high judge Adonai.<sup>1</sup>

Wherefore I pray you, bear me company,
 As ye have promised, in this journey.

Fellowship. That is matter indeed! Promise is duty,

But, and I should take such a voyage on
 me,

I know it well, it should be to my pain:

Also it make me afeard, certain.

But let us take counsel here as well as we can,

For your words would fear a strong man.

Everyman. Why, ye said, If I had need, Ye would me never forsake, quick nor
 dead,

Though it were to hell truly.

Fellowship. So I said, certainly,

But such pleasures be set aside, thee sooth
 to say:

And also, if we took such a journey,

When should we come again?

Everyman. Nay, never again till the day of doom.

Fellowship. In faith, then will not I come
 there!

Who hath you these tidings brought?

Everyman. Indeed, Death was with me here.

Fellowship. Now, by God that all hath bought,

If Death were the messenger,

For no man that is living to-day

I will not go that loath journey—

Not for the father that begat me!

Everyman. Ye promised other wise, pardie.

Fellowship. I wot well I say so truly;

<sup>1</sup>God.

And yet if thou wilt eat, and drink, and
make good cheer,
Or haunt to women, the lusty company,
I would not forsake you, while the day is clear,

Trust me verily!

Everyman. Yea, thereto ye would be ready;
To go to mirth, solace, and play,
Your mind will sooner apply
Than to bear me company in my long journey.

Fellowship. Now, in good faith, I will not that way.

But and thou wilt murder, or any man kill,
In that I will help thee with a good will!

Everyman. O that is a simple advice indeed!
Gentle fellow, help me in my necessity;
We have loved long, and now I need,
And now, gentle Fellowship, remember me.

Fellowship. Whether ye have loved me or no,
By Saint John, I will not with thee go.

Everyman. Yet I pray thee, take the labor,
and do so much for me

To bring me forward, for saint charity,
And comfort me till I come without the town.

Fellowship. Nay, and thou would give me a new gown,

I will not a foot with thee go;

But and you had tarried I would not have left thee so.

And as now, God speed thee in thy journey,

For from thee I will depart as fast as I
may.

Everyman. Whither away, Fellowship? will you forsake me?

Fellowship. Yea, by my fay, to God I betake thee.

Everyman. Farewell, good Fellowship; for this my heart is sore;

Adieu for ever, I shall see thee no more.

Fellowship. In faith, Everyman, farewell
now at the end;

For you I will remember that parting is mourning.

Everyman. Alack! shall we thus depart
indeed?

Our Lady, help, without any more comfort,

Lo, Fellowship forsaketh me in my most
need:

For help in this world whither shall I resort?

Fellowship herebefore with me would merry make;

And now little sorrow for me doth he
take.

It is said, in prosperity men friends may
find,

Which in adversity be full unkind.

Now whither for succor shall I flee,

Since that Fellowship hath forsaken me?

To my kinsmen I will truly,

Praying them to help me in my necessity;

I believe that they will do so,

For kind will creep where it may not go.

I will go say, for yonder I see them go.

Where be ye now, my friends and kins-
men?

Kindred. Here be we now at your command-
ment.

Cousin, I pray you show us your intent

In any wise, and not spare.

Cousin. Yea, Everyman, and to us declare

If ye be disposed to go any whither,

For wete you well, we will live and die together.

Kindred. In wealth and woe we will with you hold,

For over his kin a man may be bold.

Everyman. Gramercy, my friends and kinsmen kind.

Now shall I show you the grief of my mind:

I was commanded by a messenger,

That is an high king's chief officer;

He bade me go a pilgrimage to my pain,

And I know well I shall never come again;

Also I must give a reckoning straight,

For I have a great enemy, that hath me in wait,

Which intendeth me for to hinder.

Kindred. What account is that which ye must render?

That would I know.

Everyman. Of all my works I must show

How I have lived and my days spent;

Also of ill deeds, that I have used

In my time, since life was me lent;

And of all virtues that I have refused.

Therefore I pray you go thither with me,

To help to make mine account, for saint charity.

Cousin. What, to go thither? Is that the matter?

Nay, Everyman, I had liefer fast bread and water

All this five year and more.

Everyman. Alas, that ever I was bore!<sup>1</sup>

For now shall I never be merry

If that you forsake me.

Kindred. Ah, sir; what, ye be a merry man!

Take good heart to you, and make no moan.

But one thing I warn you, by Saint Anne,

As for me, ye shall go alone.

Everyman. My Cousin, will you not with me go?

Cousin. No, by our Lady; I have the cramp in my toe.

Trust not to me, for, so God me speed,

I will deceive you in your most need.

Kindred. It availeth not us to tice.

Ye shall have my maid with all my heart;

She loveth to go to feasts, there to be nice,

And to dance, and abroad to start:

I will give her leave to help you in that journey,

If that you and she may agree.

Everyman. Now show me the very effect of your mind.

Will you go with me, or abide behind?

Kindred. Abide behind? yea, that I will and I may!

Therefore farewell until another day.

Everyman. How should I be merry or glad?

For fair promises to me make,

But when I have most need, they me forsake.

I am deceived; that maketh me sad.

Cousin. Cousin Everyman, farewell now,

For verily I will not go with you;

Also of mine own an unready reckoning

I have to account; therefore I make tarrying.

Now, God keep thee, for now I go.

Everyman. Ah, Jesus, is all come hereto?

Lo, fair words maketh fools feign;

They promise and nothing will do certain.

My kinsmen promised me faithfully

For to abide with me steadfastly,

And now fast away do they flee:

Even so Fellowship promised me.

What friend were best me of to provide?

I lose my time here longer to abide.

Yet in my mind a thing there is;—

All my life I have loved riches;

If that my good now help me might,

He would make my heart full light.

I will speak to him in this distress.—

Where art thou, my Goods and riches?

Goods. Who calleth me? Everyman? what haste thou hast.

I lie here in corners, trussed and piled so high,

And in chests I am locked so fast,

Also sacked in bags, thou mayst see with thine eye,

I cannot stir; in packs low I lie.

What would ye have, lightly me say.

Everyman. Come hither, Good, in all the haste thou may,

For of counsel I must desire thee.

Goods. Sir, and ye in the world have trouble or adversity,

That can I help you to remedy shortly.

Everyman. It is another disease that grieveth me;

In this world it is not, I tell thee so.

I am sent for another way to go,

To give a straight account general

Before the highest Jupiter of all;

And all my life I have had joy and pleasure in thee.

Therefore I pray thee go with me,

For, peradventure, thou mayst before God Almighty

My reckoning help to clean and purify;

For it is said ever among,

That money maketh all right that is wrong.

Goods. Nay, Everyman, I sing another song,

I follow no man in such voyages;

For and I went with thee

Thou shouldst fare much the worse for me;

For because on me thou did set thy mind,

Thy reckoning I have made blotted and blind,

That thine account thou cannot make truly;

And that hast thou for the love of me.

Everyman. That would grieve me full sore,

When I should come to that fearful answer.

Up, let us go thither together.

Goods. Nay, not so, I am too brittle, I may not endure;

I will follow no man one foot, be ye sure.

Everyman. Alas, I have thee loved, and had great pleasure

All my life-days on good and treasure.

Goods. That is to thy damnation without lesing,

For my love is contrary to the love everlasting.

But if thou had me loved moderately during,

<sup>1</sup>Born.

As, to the poor give part of me,
Then shouldst thou not in this dolor be,
Nor in this great sorrow and care.

Everyman. Lo, now was I deceived or I was ware,

And all I may wyte<sup>1</sup> my spending of time.

Goods. What, weenest thou that I am thine?

Everyman. I had wend so.

Goods. Nay, Everyman, I say no;

As for a while I was lent thee,

A season thou hast had me in prosperity;

My condition is man's soul to kill;

If I save one, a thousand I do spill;

Weenest thou that I will follow thee?

Nay, from this world, not verily.

Everyman. I had wend otherwise.

Goods. Therefore to thy soul Good is a thief;

For when thou art dead, this is my guise

Another to deceive in the same wise

As I have done thee, and all to his soul's reproof.

Everyman. O false Good, cursed thou be!

Thou traitor to God, that hast deceived
me,

And caught me in thy snare.

Goods. Marry, thou brought thyself in care,

Whereof I am glad,

I must needs laugh, I cannot be sad.

Everyman. Ah, Good, thou hast had long
my hearty love;

I gave thee that which should be the Lord's above.

But wilt thou not go with me in deed?

I pray thee truth to say.

Goods. No, so God me speed,

Therefore farewell, and have good day.

Everyman. O, to whom shall I make my moan

For to go with me in that heavy journey?

First Fellowship said he would with me
gone;

His words were very pleasant and gay,

But afterward he left me alone.

Then spake I to my kinsmen all in despair,

And also they gave me words fair,

They lacked no fair speaking,

But all forsake me in the ending.

Then went I to my Goods that I loved best,

In hope to have comfort, but there had I least;

For my Goods sharply did me tell

That he bringeth many into hell.

Then of myself I was ashamed,
And so I am worthy to be blamed;
Thus may I well myself hate.

Of whom shall I now counsel take?

I think that I shall never speed

Till that I go to my Good-Deed,

But alas, she is so weak,

That she can neither go nor speak;

Yet will I venture on her now.—

My Good-Deeds, where be you?

Good-Deeds. Here I lie cold in the ground;

Thy sins hath me sore bound,

That I cannot stir.

Everyman. O, Good-Deeds, I stand in fear;

I must you pray of counsel,

For help now should come right well.

Good-Deeds. Everyman, I have understand-
ing

That ye be summoned account to make

Before Messias, of Jerusalem King;

And you do by me<sup>2</sup> that journey with you will I take.

Everyman. Therefore I come to you, my moan to make;

I pray you, that ye will go with me.

Good-Deeds. I would full fain, but I cannot stand verily.

Everyman. Why, is there anything on you
fall?

Good-Deeds. Yea, sir, I may thank you of
all;

If ye had perfectly cheered me,

Your book of account now full ready had
be.

Look, the books of your works and deeds
eke;

Oh, see how they lie under the feet,

To your soul's heaviness.

Everyman. Our Lord Jesus, help me!

For one letter here I cannot see.

Good-Deeds. There is a blind reckoning in time of distress!

Everyman. Good-Deeds, I pray you, help me
in this need,

Or else I am for ever damned indeed;

Therefore help me to make reckoning

Before the redeemer of all things,

That king is, and was, and ever shall.

Good-Deeds. Everyman, I am sorry of your
fall,

And fain would I help you, and I were able.

<sup>1</sup>Blame.

<sup>2</sup>If you take my counsel.

Everyman. Good-Deeds, your counsel I pray
you give me.

Good-Deeds. That shall I do verily;

* Though that on my feet I may not go.

I have a sister, that shall with you also,
Called Knowledge, which shall with you abide,

To help you to make that dreadful reckon-
ing.

Knowledge. Everyman, I will go with thee,
and be thy guide,

In thy most need to go by thy side.

Everyman. In good condition I am now in every thing,

And am wholly content with this good thing;

Thanked be God my Creator.

Good-Deeds. And when he hath brought thee
there,

Where thou shalt heal thee of thy smart,

Then go you with your reckoning and your

Good-Deeds together

For to make you joyful at heart

Before the blessed Trinity.

Everyman. My Good-Deeds, gramercy;

I am well content, certainly,

With your words sweet.

Knowledge. Now go we together lovingly,
To Confession, that cleansing river.

Everyman. For joy I weep; I would we were
there;

But, I pray you, give me cognition

Where dwelleth that holy man, Confession.

Knowledge. In the house of salvation:

We shall find him in that place,

That shall us comfort by God's grace.

Lo, this is Confession; kneel down and ask
mercy,

For he is in good conceit with God Almighty.

Everyman. O glorious fountain that all un-
cleanness doth clarify,

Wash from me the spots of vices unclean,

That on me no sin may be seen;

I come with Knowledge for my redemption,

Repent with hearty and full contrition;

For I am commanded a pilgrimage to take,

And great accounts before God to make.

Now, I pray you, Shrift, mother of salvation,

Help my good deeds for my piteous exclamation.

Confession. I know your sorrow well, *Every-
man*;

Because with Knowledge ye come to me,

I will you comfort as well as I can,

And a precious jewel I will give thee,

Called penance, wise voider of adversity;

Therewith shall your body chastised be,

With abstinence and perseverance in God's service:

Here shall you receive that scourge of me
Which is penance strong, that ye must endure,

To remember thy Savior was scourged for
thee

With sharp scourges, and suffered it patiently;

So must thou, or thou scape that painful pilgrimage;

Knowledge, keep him in this voyage,

And by that time Good-Deeds will be with
thee.

But in any wise, be sure of mercy,

For your time draweth fast, and ye will saved be;

Ask God mercy, and He will grant truly,

When with the scourge of penance man
doth him bind,

The oil of forgiveness then shall he find.

Everyman. Thanked be God for his gracious
work!

For now I will my penance begin;

This hath rejoiced and lighted my heart,

Though the knots be painful and hard
within.

Knowledge. Everyman, look your penance that ye fulfil,

What pain that ever it to you be,

And Knowledge shall give you counsel at
will,

How your accounts ye shall make clearly.

Everyman. O eternal God, O heavenly figure,

O way of rightwiseness, O goodly vision,

Which descended down in a virgin pure

Because he would Everyman redeem,

Which Adam forfeited by his disobedience;

O blessed Godhead, elect and high-divine,

Forgive my grievous offence;

Here I cry thee mercy in this presence.

O ghostly treasure, O ransomer and redeemer

Of all the world, hope and conductor,

Mirror of joy, and founder of mercy.

Which illumineth heaven and earth
thereby,
Hear my clamorous complaint, though it late be;
Receive my prayers; unworthy in this heavy life,
Though I be, a sinner most abominable,
Yet let my name be written in Moses'
table;
O Mary, pray to the Maker of all thing,
Me for to help at my ending,
And save me from the power of my enemy,
For Death assaileth me strongly;
And, Lady, that I may by means of thy prayer
Of your Son's glory to be partaker,
By the means of his passion I it crave,
I beseech you, help my soul to save.—
Knowledge, give me the scourge of penance;
My flesh therewith shall give a quittance:
I will now begin, if God give me grace.
Knowledge. Everyman, God give you time and space:
Thus I bequeath you in the hands of our Savior,
Thus may you make your reckoning sure.
Everyman. In the name of the Holy Trinity,
My body sore punished shall be:
Take this body for the sin of the flesh;
Also thou delightest to go gay and fresh,
And in the way of damnation thou did me
bring;
Therefore suffer now strokes and punish-
ing.
Now of penance I will wade the water clear
To save me from purgatory, that sharp
fire.
Good-Deeds. I thank God, now I can walk and go;
And am delivered of my sickness and
woe.
Therefore with Everyman I will go, and not spare;
His good works I will help him to declare.
Knowledge. Now, Everyman, be merry and glad;
Your Good-Deeds cometh now; ye may not be sad;
Now is your Good-Deeds whole and sound,
Going upright upon the ground.
Everyman. My heart is light, and shall be evermore;
Now will I smite faster than I did before.

Good-Deeds. Everyman, pilgrim, my special friend,
Blessed be thou without end;
For thee is prepared the eternal glory.
Ye have me made whole and sound,
Therefore I will bide by thee in every stound.<sup>1</sup>
Everyman. Welcome, my Good-Deeds; now
I hear thy voice,
I weep for very sweetness of love.
Knowledge. Be no more sad, but ever rejoice,
God seeth thy living in his throne above;
Put on this garment to thy behove,
Which is wet with your tears,
Or else before God you may it miss,
When you to your journey's end come shall.
Everyman. Gentle Knowledge, what do you it call?
Knowledge. It is a garment of sorrow:
From pain it will you borrow;
Contrition it is,
That getteth forgiveness;
It pleaseth God passing well.
Good-Deeds. Everyman, will you wear it for your heal?
Everyman. Now blessed be Jesu, Mary's Son!
For now have I on true contrition.
And let us go now without tarrying;
Good-Deeds, have we clear our reckoning?
Good-Deeds. Yea, indeed I have it here.
Everyman. Then I trust we need not fear;
Now, friends, let us not part in twain.
Knowledge. Nay, Everyman, that will we not, certain.
Good-Deeds. Yet must thou lead with thee
Three persons of great might.
Everyman. Who should they be?
Good-Deeds. Discretion and Strength they hight,<sup>2</sup>
And thy Beauty may not abide behind.
Knowledge. Also ye must call to mind
Your Five-Wits as for your counselors.
Good-Deeds. You must have them ready at all hours.
Everyman. How shall I get them hither?
Knowledge. You must call them all together,
And they will hear you incontinent.
Everyman. My friends, come hither and be present

<sup>1</sup>Season.<sup>2</sup>Are called.

Discretion, Strength, my Five-Wits, and Beauty.

Beauty. Here at your will we be all ready.
What will ye that we should do?

Good-Deeds. That ye would with Everyman go,

And help him in his pilgrimage,
Advise you, will ye with him or not in that voyage?

Strength. We will bring him all thither,
To his help and comfort, ye may believe me.

Discretion. So will we go with him all together.

Everyman. Almighty God, loved thou be,
I give thee laud that I have hither brought
Strength, Discretion, Beauty, and Five-Wits; lack I nought;

And my Good-Deeds, with Knowledge clear,
All be in my company at my will here;
I desire no more to my business.

Strength. And I, Strength, will by you stand in distress,

Though thou would in battle fight on the ground.

Five-Wits. And though it were through the world round,

We will not depart for sweet nor sour.

Beauty. No more will I unto death's hour,
Whatsoever thereof befall.

Discretion. Everyman, advise you first of all;
Go with a good advisement and deliberation;

We all give you virtuous monition
That all shall be well.

Everyman. My friends, hearken what I will tell:

I pray God reward you in his heavenly sphere.

Now hearken, all that be here,

For I will make my testament

Here before you all present.

In alms half my good I will give with my hands twain

In the way of charity, with good intent,

And the other half still shall remain

In quiet to be returned there it ought to be.

This I do in despite of the fiend of hell

To go quite out of his peril

Ever after and this day.

Knowledge. Everyman, hearken what I say;

Go to priesthood, I you advise,

And receive of him in any wise

The holy sacrament and ointment together;

Then shortly see ye turn again hither;

We will all abide you here.

Five-Wits. Yea, Everyman, hie you that ye ready were,

There is no emperor, king, duke, nor baron,

That of God hath commission,

As hath the least priest in the world being;

For of the blessed sacraments pure and benign,

He beareth the keys and thereof hath the cure

For man's redemption, it is ever sure;

Which God for our soul's medicine

Gave us out of his heart with great pine;

Here in this transitory life, for thee and me

The blessed sacraments seven there be,

Baptism, confirmation, with priesthood good,

And the sacrament of God's precious flesh and blood,

Marriage, the holy extreme unction, and penance;

These seven be good to have in remembrance,

Gracious sacraments of high divinity.

Everyman. Fain would I receive that holy body

And meekly to my ghostly father I will go.

Five-Wits. Everyman, that is the best that ye can do:

God will you to salvation bring,

For priesthood exceedeth all other thing;

To us Holy Scripture they do teach,

And converteth man from sin heaven to reach;

God hath to them more power given,

Than to any angel that is in heaven;

With five words he may consecrate

God's body in flesh and blood to make,

And handleth his maker between his hands;

The priest bindeth and unbindeth all bands,

Both in earth and in heaven;

Thou ministers all the sacraments seven;

Though we kissed thy feet thou were worthy;

Thou art surgeon that cureth sin deadly:

No remedy we find under God

But all only priesthood.

Everyman, God gave priests that dignity,

And setteth them in his stead among us to be;
 Thus be they above angels in degree.
Knowledge. If priests be good it is so surely;
 But when Jesus hanged on the cross with great smart
 There he gave, out of his blessed heart,
 The same sacrament in great torment:
 He sold them not to us, that Lord Omnipotent.
 Therefore Saint Peter the apostle doth say That Jesu's curse hath all they
 Which God their Savior do buy or sell,
 Or they for any money do take or tell.
 Sinful priests giveth the sinners example bad;
 Their children sitteth by other men's fires,
 I have heard;
 And some haunteth women's company,
 With unclean life, as lusts of lechery:
 These be with sin made blind.
Five-Wits. I trust to God no such may we find;
 Therefore let us priesthood honor,
 And follow their doctrine for our souls' succor;
 We be their sheep, and they shepherds be
 By whom we all be kept in surety.
 Peace, for yonder I see Everyman come,
 Which hath made true satisfaction.
Good-Deeds. Methinketh it is he indeed.
Everyman. Now Jesu be our alder speed.<sup>1</sup>
 I have received the sacrament for my redemption,
 And then mine extreme unction:
 Blessed be all they that counseled me to take it!
 And now, friends, let us go without longer respite;
 I thank God that ye have tarried so long.
 Now set each of you on this rod your hand,
 And shortly follow me:
 I go before, there I would be; God be our guide.
Strength. Everyman, we will not from you go,
 Till ye have gone this voyage long.
Discretion. I, Discretion, will bide by you also.
Knowledge. And though this pilgrimage be never so strong,
 I will never part you fro:
Everyman, I will be as sure by thee
 As ever I did by Judas Maccabee.

<sup>1</sup>Help in all things.

Everyman. Alas, I am so faint I may not stand,
 My limbs under me do fold;
 Friends, let us not turn again to this land,
 Not for all the world's gold.
 For into this cave must I creep
 And turn to the earth and there to sleep
Beauty. What, into this grave? alas!
Everyman. Yea, there shall you consume more and less.
Beauty. And what, should I smother here?
Everyman. Yea, by my faith, and never more appear.
 In this world live no more we shall,
 But in heaven before the highest Lord of all.
Beauty. I cross out all this; adieu by Saint John;
 I take my tap in my lap and am gone.<sup>2</sup>
Everyman. What, Beauty, whither will ye?
Beauty. Peace, I am deaf; I look not behind me,
 Not and thou would give me all the gold in thy chest.
Everyman. Alas, whereto may I trust?
Beauty goeth fast away hie;
 She promised with me to live and die.
Strength. Everyman, I will thee also forsake and deny;
 Thy game liketh me not at all.
Everyman. Why, then ye will forsake me all.
 Sweet Strength, tarry a little space.
Strength. Nay, sir, by the rod of grace
 I will hie me from thee fast,
 Though thou weep till thy heart brast.<sup>3</sup>
Everyman. Ye would ever bide by me, ye said.
Strength. Yea, I have you far enough conveyed;
 Ye be old enough, I understand,
 Your pilgrimage to take on hand;
 I repent me that I hither came.
Everyman. Strength, you to displease I am to blame;
 Will you break promise that is debt?
Strength. In faith, I care not;

<sup>2</sup>A proverbial expression used to describe a hasty departure. In the beginning it was used literally of a woman taking her tap—a quantity of flax for spinning—and distaff in her lap or apron, in going to or from a friend's house.

<sup>3</sup>Burst.

Thou art but a fool to complain,
You spend your speech and waste your brain;

* Go thrust thee into the ground.

Everyman. I had wend surer I should you have found.

He that trusteth in his Strength

She him deceiveth at the length.

Both Strength and Beauty forsaketh me,

Yet they promised me fair and lovingly.

Discretion. Everyman, I will after Strength
be gone,

As for me I will leave you alone.

Everyman. Why, Discretion, will ye forsake
me?

Discretion. Yea, in faith, I will go from
thee,

For when Strength goeth before

I follow after evermore.

Everyman. Yet, I pray thee, for the love of the Trinity,

Look in my grave once piteously.

Discretion. Nay, so nigh will I not come.

* Farewell, every one!

Everyman. O all thing faileth, save God
alone;

Beauty, Strength, and Discretion;

For when Death bloweth his blast,

They all run from me full fast.

Five-Wits. Everyman, my leave now of thee
I take;

I will follow the other, for here I thee forsake.

Everyman. Alas! then may I wail and weep,

For I took you for my best friend.

Five-Wits. I will no longer thee keep;

Now farewell, and there an end.

Everyman. O Jesu, help, all hath forsaken
me!

Good-Deeds. Nay, Everyman, I will bide with
thee,

I will not forsake thee indeed;

Thou shalt find me a good friend at need.

Everyman. Gramercy, Good-Deeds; now may
I true friends see;

They have forsaken me every one;

I loved them better than my Good-Deeds
alone.

Knowledge, will ye forsake me also?

Knowledge. Yea, Everyman, when ye to death
do go:

But not yet for no manner of danger.

Everyman. Gramercy, Knowledge, with all my heart.

Knowledge. Nay, yet I will not from hence depart,

Till I see where ye shall be come.

Everyman. Methinketh, alas, that I must be
gone,

To make my reckoning and my debts pay,

For I see my time is nigh spent away.

Take example, all ye that this do hear or
see,

How they that I loved best do forsake me,

Except my Good-Deeds that bideth truly.

Good-Deeds. All earthly things is but vanity:
Beauty, Strength, and Discretion, do man forsake,

Foolish friends and kinsmen, that fair
spake,

All fleeth save Good-Deeds, and that am I.

Everyman. Have mercy on me, God most mighty;

And stand by me, thou Mother and Maid,
holy Mary.

Good-Deeds. Fear not, I will speak for thee.

Everyman. Here I cry God mercy.

Good-Deeds. Short our end, and minish our pain;

Let us go and never come again.

Everyman. Into thy hands, Lord, my soul I commend;

Receive it, Lord, that it be not lost;

As thou me boughtest, so me defend,

And save me from the fiend's boast,

That I may appear with that blessed host
That shall be saved at the day of doom.

In manus tuas—of might's most

For ever—commendo spiritum meum.<sup>1</sup>

Knowledge. Now hath he suffered that we all shall endure;

The Good-Deeds shall make all sure.

Now hath he made ending;

Methinketh that I hear angels sing

And make great joy and melody,

Where Everyman's soul received shall be.

Angel. Come, excellent elect spouse to Jesu:

Hereabove thou shalt go

Because of thy singular virtue:

Now the soul is taken the body fro;

Thy reckoning is crystal-clear.

Now shalt thou into the heavenly sphere.

Unto the which all ye shall come

That liveth well before the day of doom.

Doctor. This moral men may have in mind;

Ye hearers, take it of worth, old and young,

<sup>1</sup>To thy hands I commend my soul.

And forsake pride, for he deceiveth you in the end,
 And remember Beauty, Five-Wits, Strength,
 and Discretion,
 They all at the last do Everyman forsake,
 Save his Good-Deeds, there doth he take.
 But beware, and they be small
 Before God, he hath no help at all.
 None excuse may be there for Everyman:
 Alas, how shall he do then?
 For after death amends may no man
 make,
 For then mercy and pity do him forsake.

If his reckoning be not clear when he do
 come,
 God will say—*ite maledicti in ignem
 æternum.*<sup>1</sup>
 And he that hath his account whole and
 sound,
 High in heaven he shall be crowned;
 Unto which place God bring us all thither
 That we may live body and soul together.
 Thereto help the Trinity,
 Amen, say ye, for saint charity.

---

<sup>1</sup>Hence, accursed one, into eternal fire.

SIR THOMAS MALORY (c. 1400-1471)

Very little is known about the life of Malory. The year generally given as that of his birth is approximate only. He lived at Newbold Revell, in Warwickshire. He served in the French wars with Richard Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, a renowned representative of the chivalric ideal. Malory was also conspicuous on the Lancastrian side in the wars of the Roses. In 1445 he was a member of Parliament for Warwickshire. He was "a gentleman of an ancient house, and a soldier"—a man whose career, as far as we know anything about it, seems eminently appropriate to the compiler of the Morte d'Arthur. This book Malory finished in 1469, and it was first printed in 1485 by William Caxton (c. 1421-1491), the earliest English printer. Caxton issued the first book printed in English from his press at Bruges about 1475—the Recuyell of the Histories of Troy. In 1476 he returned to England, set up a press near Westminster, and in 1477 printed there the Dictes and Seyings of the Philosophers. Caxton deserves a place in the history of English literature not only because he was the earliest English printer, but also because he himself translated many of the books he printed (for example, the Recuyell of the Histories of Troy just mentioned and The Golden Legend) and carefully edited the books not written by himself and supplied them with prefaces.

Caxton tells us in his Preface printed below that Malory took the Morte d'Arthur "out of certain books of French, and reduced it into English." This is so; Malory translated from a number of French romances, whose volume is said to be about ten times as great as that of the Morte d'Arthur itself. These French romances told no connected story; on the contrary, they were frequently inconsistent with each other, and this, together with their number, probably accounts sufficiently for the incongruities in Malory's book. Malory seems to have chosen the stories that pleased him best, with the general design of giving an account of Arthur's life from birth to death. This is done only in the loosest fashion, but it is a mark of originality on Malory's part, inasmuch as Arthur is thus given an importance which he does not have in the French romances.

LE MORTE D'ARTHUR

CAXTON'S PREFACE

AFTER that I had accomplished and finished divers histories, as well of contemplation as of other historical and worldly acts of great conquerors and princes, and also certain books of ensamples and doctrine, many noble and divers gentlemen of this realm of England came and demanded me, many and oftentimes, wherefore that I have not do made<sup>1</sup> and imprinted the noble history of the Sangreal, and of the most renowned Christian king, first and chief of the three best Christian and worthy, King Arthur, which ought most to be remembered among us English men tofore all other Christian kings. For it is notoriously known through the universal world that there be nine worthy and the best that ever were. That is to wit three paynims, three Jews, and three Christian men. As for the paynims they were tofore the Incarnation of Christ, which were named, the first Hector of Troy, of whom the history is come both in ballad and in prose; the second Alexander the Great; and the third Julius Cæsar, Emperor of Rome, of whom the histories be well-known and had. And as for the three Jews which also were tofore the Incarnation of our Lord, of whom the first was Duke Joshua which brought the children of Israel into the land of behest; the second David, King of Jerusalem; and the third Judas Maccabæus; of these three the Bible rehearseth all their noble histories and acts. And sith the said Incarnation have been three noble Christian men stalled<sup>2</sup> and admitted through the universal world into the number of the nine best and worthy, of whom was first the noble Arthur, whose noble acts I purpose to write in this present book here following. The second was Charlemagne or Charles the Great, of whom the history is had in many places both in French and English; and the third and last was Godfrey of Bouillon, of whose acts and life I made a book unto the excellent prince and king of

<sup>2</sup>Installed.

<sup>1</sup>Had made.

noble memory, King Edward the Fourth. The said noble gentlemen instantly required me to imprint the history of the said noble king and conqueror, King Arthur, and of his knights, with the history of the Sangreal, and of the death and ending of the said Arthur; affirming that I ought rather to imprint his acts and noble feats, than of Godfrey of Bouillon, or any of the other eight, considering that he was a man born within this realm, and king and emperor of the same; and that there be in French divers and many noble volumes of his acts, and also of his knights. To whom I answered, that divers men hold opinion that there was no such Arthur, and that all such books as be made of him be but feigned and fables, by cause that some chronicles make of him no mention nor remember him no thing, nor of his knights. Whereto they answered and one in special said, that in him that should say or think that there was never such a king called Arthur, might well be credited great folly and blindness; for he said that there were many evidences of the contrary: first ye may see his sepulture in the Monastery of Glastonbury. And also in Polichronicon,<sup>1</sup> in the fifth book the sixth chapter, and in the seventh book the twenty-third chapter, where his body was buried and after found and translated into the said monastery. Ye shall see also in the history of Bochas,<sup>2</sup> in his book De Casu Principum, part of his noble acts, and also of his fall. Also Galfridus<sup>3</sup> in his British book recounteth his life; and in divers places of England many remembrances be yet of him and shall remain perpetually, and also of his knights. First in the Abbey of Westminster, at Saint Edward's shrine, remaineth the print of his seal in red wax closed in beryl, in which is written Patricius Arthurus, Britannie, Gallie, Germanie, Dacie, Imperator.<sup>4</sup> Item in the castle of Dover ye may see Gawaine's skull and Craddock's mantle: at Winchester the Round Table: at other places Launcelot's sword and many other things. Then all these things considered, there can no man reasonably gainsay but there was a king of this land named Arthur. For in all places, Christian and heathen, he is reputed and taken for one of the nine worthy, and the first of the three Christian men. And also he is more spoken of beyond the sea, more books made of his noble acts than there be in England, as well in Dutch, Italian, Spanish, and Greek, as in French. And yet of record remain in witness of him in Wales, in the town of Camelot,<sup>5</sup> the great stones and marvelous works of iron, lying under the ground, and royal vaults, which divers now living hath seen. Wherefore it is a marvel why he is no more renowned in his own country, save only it accordeth to the Word of God, which saith that no man is accept for a prophet in his own country. Then all these things foresaid alleged, I could not well deny but that there was such a noble king named Arthur, and reputed one of the nine worthy, and first and chief of the Christian men; and many noble volumes be made of him and of his noble knights in French, which I have seen and read beyond the sea, which be not had in our maternal tongue, but in Welsh be many and also in French, and some in English, but no where nigh all. Wherefore, such as have late been drawn out briefly into English I have after the simple conning that God hath sent to me, under the favor and correction of all noble lords and gentlemen, emprised<sup>6</sup> to imprint a book of the noble histories of the said King Arthur, and of certain of his knights, after a copy unto me delivered, which copy Sir Thomas Malory did take out of certain books of French, and reduced it into English. And I, according to my copy, have done set it in imprint, to the intent that noble men may see and learn the noble acts of chivalry, the gentle and virtuous deeds that some knights used in those days, by which they came to honor; and how they that were vicious were punished and oft put to shame and rebuke; humbly beseeching all noble lords and ladies, with all other estates, of what estate or degree they be of, that

<sup>1</sup>A history of the world, written in Latin by Ranulph Higden (died c. 1364).

<sup>2</sup>Boccaccio. The book (On the Fall of Princes) tells of the misfortunes of illustrious men.

<sup>3</sup>Geoffrey of Monmouth, whose History of the Kings of Britain (written in Latin, probably about 1140) contains much fabulous matter.

<sup>4</sup>Noble Arthur, Emperor of Britain, Gaul, Germany, and Dacia.

<sup>5</sup>A legendary town, where Arthur held his court.

<sup>6</sup>Undertaken.

shall see and read in this said book and work that they take the good and honest acts in their remembrance, and to follow the same. Wherein they shall find many joyous and pleasant histories, and noble and renowned acts of humanity, gentleness, and chivalries. For herein may be seen noble chivalry, courtesy, humanity, friendliness, hardiness, love, friendship, cowardice, murder, hate, virtue, and sin. Do after the good and leave the evil, and it shall bring you to good fame and renown. And for to pass the time this book shall be pleasant to read in; but for to give faith and believe that all is true that is contained herein, ye be at your liberty; but all is written for our doctrine, and for to beware that we fall not to vice nor sin; but to exercise and follow virtue; by which we may come and attain to good fame and renown in this life, and after this short and transitory life, to come unto everlasting bliss in heaven, the which he grant us that reigneth in heaven, the blessed Trinity. Amen.

Then to proceed forth in this said book, which I direct unto all noble princes, lords and ladies, gentlemen or gentlewomen, that desire to read or hear read of the noble and joyous history of the great conqueror and excellent king, King Arthur, sometime king of this noble realm, then called Britain. I, William Caxton, simple person, present this book following, which I have emprised to imprint; and treateth of the noble acts, feats of arms of chivalry, prowess, hardiness, humanity, love, courtesy and very gentleness, with many wonderful histories and adventures. And for to understand briefly the content of this volume, I have divided it into twenty-one books, and every book chaptered as hereafter shall by God's grace follow. The first book shall treat how Uther Pendragon gat the noble conqueror King Arthur, and containeth twenty-eight chapters. The second book treateth of Balin the noble knight, and containeth nineteen chapters. The third book treateth of the marriage of King Arthur to Queen Guenever, with other matters, and containeth fifteen chapters. The fourth book, how Merlin was assotted,<sup>1</sup> and of war made to King Arthur, and containeth twenty-nine chapters. The fifth book treateth of the conquest of Lucius the emperor, and containeth twelve chapters. The sixth book treateth of Sir Launcelot and Sir Lionel, and marvelous adventures, and containeth eighteen chapters. The seventh book treateth of a noble knight called Sir Gareth, and named by Sir Kay, Beaumains, and containeth thirty-six chapters. The eighth book treateth of the birth of Sir Tristram the noble knight, and of his acts, and containeth forty-one chapters. The ninth book treateth of a knight named by Sir Kay, La Cote Male Taile, and also of Sir Tristram, and containeth forty-four chapters. The tenth book treateth of Sir Tristram and other marvelous adventures, and containeth eighty-eight chapters. The eleventh book treateth of Sir Launcelot and Sir Galahad, and containeth fourteen chapters. The twelfth book treateth of Sir Launcelot and his madness, and containeth fourteen chapters. The thirteenth book treateth how Galahad came first to King Arthur's court, and the quest how the Sangreal was begun, and containeth twenty chapters. The fourteenth book treateth of the quest of the Sangreal, and containeth ten chapters. The fifteenth book treateth of Sir Launcelot, and containeth six chapters. The sixteenth book treateth of Sir Bors and Sir Lionel his brother, and containeth seventeen chapters. The seventeenth book treateth of the Sangreal, and containeth twenty-three chapters. The eighteenth book treateth of Sir Launcelot and the queen, and containeth twenty-five chapters. The nineteenth book treateth of Queen Guenever and Launcelot, and containeth thirteen chapters. The twentieth book treateth of the piteous death of Arthur, and containeth twenty-two chapters. The twenty-first book treateth of his last departing, and how Sir Launcelot came to revenge his death, and containeth thirteen chapters. The sum is twenty-one books, which contain the sum of five hundred and seven chapters, as more plainly shall follow hereafter.

<sup>1</sup>Besotted.

BOOK XXI

CHAPTER I

HOW SIR MORDRED PRESUMED AND TOOK ON HIM TO BE KING OF ENGLAND, AND WOULD HAVE MARRIED THE QUEEN, HIS UNCLE'S WIFE.

AS SIR MORDRED was ruler of all England, he did do make<sup>1</sup> letters as though that they came from beyond the sea, and the letters specified that King Arthur was slain in battle with Sir Launcelot. Wherefore Sir Mordred made a parliament, and called the lords together, and there he made them to choose him king; and so was he crowned at Canterbury, and held a feast there fifteen days; and afterward he drew him unto Winchester, and there he took the Queen Guenever, and said plainly that he would wed her which was his uncle's wife and his father's wife. And so he made ready for the feast, and a day prefixed that they should be wedded; wherefore Queen Guenever was passing heavy. But she durst not discover her heart, but spake fair, and agreed to Sir Mordred's will. Then she desired of Sir Mordred for to go to London, to buy all manner of things that longed unto the wedding. And by cause of her fair speech Sir Mordred trusted her well enough, and gave her leave to go. And so when she came to London she took the Tower of London, and suddenly in all haste possible she stuffed it with all manner of victual, and well garnished it with men, and so kept it. Then when Sir Mordred wist<sup>2</sup> and understood how he was beguiled, he was passing wroth out of measure. And a short tale for to make, he went and laid a mighty siege about the Tower of London, and made many great assaults thereat, and threw many great engines unto them, and shot great guns. But all might not prevail<sup>3</sup> Sir Mordred, for Queen Guenever would never for fair speech nor for foul, would never trust to come in his hands again. Then came the Bishop of Canterbury, the which was a noble clerk and an holy man, and thus he said to Sir Mordred: Sir, what will ye do? will ye first displease God and

sithen<sup>4</sup> shame yourself and all knighthood? Is not King Arthur your uncle, no farther but your mother's brother, and on her himself King Arthur begat you upon his own sister, therefore how may you wed your father's wife? Sir, said the noble clerk, leave this opinion or I shall curse you with book and bell and candle. Do thou thy worst, said Sir Mordred, wit thou well I shall defy thee. Sir, said the Bishop, and wit you well I shall not fear me to do that me ought to do. Also where ye noise where my lord Arthur is slain, and that is not so, and therefore ye will make a foul work in this land. Peace, thou false priest, said Sir Mordred, for an thou chafe me any more I shall make strike off thy head. So the Bishop departed and did the cursing in the most orgulist<sup>5</sup> wise that might be done, and then Sir Mordred sought the Bishop of Canterbury, for to have slain him. Then the Bishop fled, and took part of his goods with him, and went nigh unto Glastonbury; and there he was as priest hermit in a chapel, and lived in poverty and in holy prayers, for well he understood that mischievous war was at hand. Then Sir Mordred sought on Queen Guenever by letters and sondes,<sup>6</sup> and by fair means and foul means, for to have her to come out of the Tower of London; but all this availed not, for she answered him shortly, openly and privily, that she had lever slay herself than to be married with him. Then came word to Sir Mordred that King Arthur had araised the siege for Sir Launcelot, and he was coming homeward with a great host, to be avenged upon Sir Mordred; wherefore Sir Mordred made write<sup>7</sup> writs to all the barony of this land, and much people drew to him. For then was the common voice among them that with Arthur was none other life but war and strife, and with Sir Mordred was great joy and bliss. Thus was Sir Arthur depraved,<sup>8</sup> and evil said of. And many there were that King Arthur had made up of nought, and given them lands, might not then say him a good word. Lo ye all Englishmen, see ye not what a mischief here was!

<sup>1</sup>Have made.

<sup>2</sup>Heard.

<sup>3</sup>Avail.

<sup>4</sup>Afterwards.

<sup>5</sup>Insolent.

<sup>6</sup>Messages.

<sup>7</sup>Had written.

<sup>8</sup>Slandered.

for he that was the most king and knight of the world, and most loved the fellowship of noble knights, and by him they were all upholden, now might not these Englishmen hold them content with him. Lo thus was the old custom and usage of this land; and also men say that we of this land have not yet lost nor forgotten that custom and usage. Alas, this is a great default of us Englishmen, for there may no thing please us no term. And so fared the people at that time, they were better pleased with Sir Mordred than they were with King Arthur; and much people drew unto Sir Mordred, and said they would abide with him for better and for worse. And so Sir Mordred drew with a great host to Dover, for there he heard say that Sir Arthur would arrive, and so he thought to beat his own father from his lands; and the most part of all England held with Sir Mordred, the people were so new fangle.

CHAPTER II

HOW AFTER THAT KING ARTHUR HAD TIDINGS, HE RETURNED AND CAME TO DOVER, WHERE SIR MORDRED MET HIM TO LET<sup>1</sup> HIS LANDING; AND OF THE DEATH OF SIR GAWAINE.

AND so as Sir Mordred was at Dover with his host, there came King Arthur with a great navy of ships, and galleys, and carracks. And there was Sir Mordred ready awaiting upon his landing, to let<sup>1</sup> his own father to land upon the land that he was king over. Then there was launching of great boats and small, and full of noble men of arms; and there was much slaughter of gentle knights, and many a full bold baron was laid full low, on both parties. But King Arthur was so courageous that there might no manner of knights let him to land, and his knights fiercely followed him; and so they landed maugre<sup>2</sup> Sir Mordred and all his power, and put Sir Mordred aback, that he fled and all his people. So when this battle was done, King Arthur let bury his people that were dead. And then was noble Sir Gawaine found in a great boat, lying more than half dead. When Sir Arthur wist that Sir Gawaine was laid so low, he went unto him; and there the king made sorrow out of measure, and took Sir Gawaine in his arms, and thrice he there swooned. And then when he awaked, he said: Alas, Sir Gawaine, my sister's son, here now thou liest, the man in the world that I loved most; and now is my joy gone, for now, my nephew Sir Gawaine, I will discover me unto your person: in Sir Launcelot and you I most had my joy, and mine affiance,<sup>3</sup> and now have I lost my joy of you both; wherefore all mine earthly joy is gone from me. Mine uncle King Arthur, said Sir Gawaine, wit you well my death day is come, and all is through mine own hastiness and willfulness; for I am smitten upon the old wound the which Sir Launcelot gave me, on the which I feel well I must die; and had Sir Launcelot been with you as he was, this unhappy war had never begun; and of all this am I causer, for Sir Launcelot and his blood, through their prowess, held all your cankered enemies in subjection and danger. And now, said Sir Gawaine, ye shall miss Sir Launcelot. But alas, I would not accord with him, and therefore, said Sir Gawaine, I pray you, fair uncle, that I may have paper, pen, and ink, that I may write to Sir Launcelot a cedle<sup>4</sup> with mine own hands. And then when paper and ink was brought, then Gawaine was set up weakly by King Arthur, for he was shriven a little tofore; and then he wrote thus, as the French book maketh mention: Unto Sir Launcelot, flower of all noble knights that ever I heard of or saw by my days, I, Sir Gawaine, King Lot's son of Orkney, sister's son unto the noble King Arthur, send thee greeting, and let thee have knowledge that the tenth day of May I was smitten upon the old wound that thou gavest me afore the city of Benwick, and through the same wound that thou gavest me I am come to my death day. And I will that all the world wit, that I, Sir Gawaine, knight of the Table Round, sought my death, and not through thy deserving, but it was mine own seeking; wherefore I beseech thee, Sir Launcelot, to return again unto this realm, and see my tomb, and pray some prayer more or less for my soul. And this same day that I wrote this cedle, I was hurt to the death in the same wound, the which

<sup>1</sup>Prevent.

<sup>2</sup>Despite.

<sup>3</sup>Trust.

<sup>4</sup>Note.

I had of thy hand, Sir Launcelot; for of a more nobler man might I not be slain. Also Sir Launcelot, for all the love that ever was betwixt us, make no tarrying, but come over the sea in all haste, that thou mayst with thy noble knights rescue that noble king that made thee knight, that is my lord Arthur; for he is full staitly bestad<sup>1</sup> with a false traitor, that is my half-brother, Sir Mordred; and he hath let crown him king, and would have wedded my lady Queen Guenever, and so had he done had she not put herself in the Tower of London. And so the tenth day of May last past, my lord Arthur and we all landed upon them at Dover; and there we put that false traitor, Sir Mordred, to flight, and there it misfortuned me to be stricken upon thy stroke. And at the date of this letter was written, but two hours and a half afore my death, written with mine own hand, and so subscribed with part of my heart's blood. And I require thee, most famous knight of the world, that thou wilt see my tomb. And then Sir Gawaine wept, and King Arthur wept; and then they swooned both. And when they awakened both, the king made Sir Gawaine to receive his Savior. And then Sir Gawaine prayed the king for to send for Sir Launcelot, and to cherish him above all other knights. And so at the hour of noon Sir Gawaine yielded up the spirit; and then the king let inter him in a chapel within Dover Castle; and there yet all men may see the skull of him, and the same wound is seen that Sir Launcelot gave him in battle. Then was it told the king that Sir Mordred had pyghte a new field<sup>2</sup> upon Barham Down. And upon the morn the king rode thither to him, and there was a great battle betwixt them, and much people was slain on both parties; but at the last Sir Arthur's party stood best, and Sir Mordred and his party fled unto Canterbury.

CHAPTER III

HOW AFTER, SIR GAWAINE'S GHOST APPEARED TO KING ARTHUR, AND WARNED HIM THAT HE SHOULD NOT FIGHT THAT DAY

AND then the king let search all the towns for his knights that were slain, and interred them; and salved them with soft salves that so sore were wounded. Then much people drew unto King Arthur. And then they said that Sir Mordred warred upon King Arthur with wrong. And then King Arthur drew him with his host down by the seaside westward toward Salisbury; and there was a day assigned betwixt King Arthur and Sir Mordred, that they should meet upon a down beside Salisbury, and not far from the seaside; and this day was assigned on a Monday after Trinity Sunday, whereof King Arthur was passing glad, that he might be avenged upon Sir Mordred. Then Sir Mordred araised much people about London, for they of Kent, Southsex, and Surrey, Estsex, and of Southfolk, and of Northfolk, held the most part with Sir Mordred; and many a full noble knight drew unto Sir Mordred and to the king: but they loved Sir Launcelot drew unto Sir Mordred. So upon Trinity Sunday at night, King Arthur dreamed a wonderful dream, and that was this: that him seemed he sat upon a chafet<sup>3</sup> in a chair, and the chair was fast to a wheel, and thereupon sat King Arthur in the richest cloth of gold that might be made; and the king thought there was under him, far from him, an hideous deep black water, and therein were all manner of serpents, and worms, and wild beasts foul and horrible; and suddenly the king thought the wheel turned up so down, and he fell among the serpents, and every beast took him by a limb; and then the king cried as he lay in his bed and slept: Help. And then knights, squires, and yeomen awaked the king; and then he was so amazed that he wist not where he was; and then he fell on slumbering again, not sleeping nor thoroughly waking. So the king seemed verily that there came Sir Gawaine unto him with a number of fair ladies with him. And when King Arthur saw him, then he said: Welcome, my sister's son; I weened thou hadst been dead, and now I see thee on live, much am I beholding unto almighty Jesu. O fair nephew and my sister's son, what be these ladies that hither be come with you? Sir, said Sir Gawaine, all these be ladies for whom I have foughten when I was man living, and all these are those that I did battle for in righteous quarrel; and God hath given them that grace at their great prayer, by cause I did battle for them, that they should bring me hither unto you: thus much hath God given me leave, for to warn you of your death; for an ye fight as tomorn with Sir Mordred, as ye both have assigned, doubt ye not ye must be slain, and the most part of your people on both parties. And for the great grace and goodness that almighty Jesu hath unto you, and for pity of you, and many more other good men there shall be slain, God hath sent me to you of his special grace, to give you warning that in no wise ye do battle as tomorn, but that ye take a treaty for a month day; and proffer you largely,<sup>1</sup> so as tomorn to be put in a delay. For within a month shall come Sir Launcelot with all his noble knights, and rescue you worshipfully, and slay Sir Mordred, and all that ever will hold with him. Then Sir Gawaine and all the ladies vanished. And anon the king called upon his knights, squires, and yeomen, and charged them wightly<sup>2</sup> to fetch his noble lords and wise bishops unto him. And when they were come, the king told them his avision, what Sir Gawaine had told him, and warned him that if he fought on the morn he should be slain. Then the king commanded Sir Lucan the Butler, and his brother Sir Bedivere, with two bishops with them, and charged them in any wise, an they might, Take a treaty for a month day with Sir Mordred, and spare not, proffer him lands and goods as much as ye think best. So then they departed, and came to Sir Mordred, where he had a grim host of an hundred thousand men. And there they entreated Sir Mordred long time; and at the last Sir Mordred was agreed for to have Cornwall and Kent, by Arthur's days: after, all England, after the days of King Arthur.

<sup>1</sup>Hard pressed.

<sup>2</sup>Taken up a new position.

<sup>3</sup>Platform.

CHAPTER IV

HOW BY MISADVENTURE OF AN ADDER THE BATTLE BEGAN, WHERE MORDRED WAS SLAIN, AND ARTHUR HURT TO THE DEATH

THEN were they condescended that King Arthur and Sir Mordred should meet betwixt both their hosts, and every each of them should bring fourteen persons; and they came with this word unto Arthur. Then said he: I am glad that this is done: and so he went into the field. And when Arthur should depart, he warned all his host that an they see any sword drawn: Look ye come on fiercely, and slay that traitor, Sir Mordred, for I in no wise trust him. In likewise Sir Mordred warned his host that: An ye see any sword drawn, look that ye come on fiercely, and so slay all that ever before you standeth; for in no wise I will not trust for this treaty, for I know well my father will be avenged on me. And so they met as their appointment was, and so they were agreed and accorded thoroughly; and wine was fetched, and they drank. Right soon came an adder out of a little heath bush, and it stung a knight on the foot. And when the knight felt him stung, he looked down and saw the adder, and then he drew his sword to slay the adder, and thought of none other harm. And when the host on both parties saw that sword drawn, then they blew beamous,<sup>3</sup> trumpets, and horns, and shouted grimly. And so both hosts dressed them together. And King Arthur took his horse, and said: Alas this unhappy day! and so rode to his party. And Sir Mordred in likewise. And never was there seen a more dolefuller battle in no Christian land; for there was but rushing and riding, foining<sup>4</sup> and striking, and many a grim word was there spoken either to other, and many a deadly stroke. But ever King Arthur rode throughout the battle of Sir Mordred many times, and did full nobly as a noble king should, and at all times he fainted never; and Sir Mordred that day put him in devoir,<sup>5</sup> and in great peril. And thus they fought all the long day, and never stinted till the noble knights were laid to the cold earth; and ever they fought still till it was near night, and by that time was there an hundred thousand laid dead upon the down. Then was Arthur wood<sup>6</sup> wroth out of measure, when he saw his people so slain from him. Then the king looked about him, and then was he ware, of all his host and of all his good knights, were left no

<sup>1</sup>Make generous proposals.

<sup>2</sup>Quickly.

<sup>3</sup>Horns.

<sup>4</sup>Thrusting.

<sup>5</sup>Duty.

<sup>6</sup>Mad.

more on live but two knights; that one was Sir Lucan the Butler, and his brother Sir Bedivere, and they were full sore wounded. Jesu mercy, said the king, where are all my noble knights become? Alas that ever I should see this doleful day, for now, said Arthur, I am come to mine end. But would to God that I wist where were that traitor Sir Mordred, that hath caused all this mischief. Then was King Arthur ware where Sir Mordred leaned upon his sword among a great heap of dead men. Now give me my spear, said Arthur unto Sir Lucan, for yonder I have espied the traitor that all this woe hath wrought. Sir, let him be, said Sir Lucan, for he is unhappy; and if ye pass this unhappy day ye shall be right well revenged upon him. Good lord, remember ye of your night's dream, and what the spirit of Sir Gawaine told you this night, yet God of his great goodness hath preserved you hitherto. Therefore for God's sake, my lord, leave off by this, for blessed be God ye have won the field, for here we be three on live, and with Sir Mordred is none on live; and if ye leave off now this wicked day of destiny is past. Tide me death, betide me life, saith the king, now I see him yonder alone he shall never escape mine hands, for at a better avail shall I never have him. God speed you well, said Sir Bedivere. Then the king gat his spear in both his hands, and ran toward Sir Mordred, crying: Traitor, now is thy death day come. And when Sir Mordred heard Sir Arthur, he ran until him with his sword drawn in his hand. And there King Arthur smote Sir Mordred under the shield, with a foin of his spear, throughout the body, more than a fathom. And when Sir Mordred felt that he had his death wound he thrust himself with the might that he had up to the bur of King Arthur's spear. And right so he smote his father Arthur, with his sword holden in both his hands, on the side of the head, that the sword pierced the helmet and the brain pan, and therewithal Sir Mordred fell stark dead to the earth; and the noble Arthur fell in a swoon to the earth, and there he swooned oftentimes. And Sir Lucan the Butler and Sir Bedivere oftentimes heaved him up. And so weakly they led him betwixt them both, to a little chapel not far from the seaside. And when the king was there he thought him well eased. Then heard they people cry in the field. Now go thou, Sir Lucan, said the king, and do me to wit what betokens that noise in the field. So Sir Lucan departed, for he was grievously wounded in many places. And so as he yede,<sup>1</sup> he saw and hearkened by the moonlight, how that pillars,<sup>2</sup> and robbers were come into the field, to pill and to rob many a full noble knight of brooches, and beads, of many a good ring, and of many a rich jewel; and who that weren not dead all out, there they slew them for their harness and their riches. When Sir Lucan understood this work, he came to the king as soon as he might, and told him all what he had heard and seen. Therefore by my rede,<sup>3</sup> said Sir Lucan, it is best that we bring you to some town. I would it were so, said the king.

CHAPTER V

HOW KING ARTHUR COMMANDED TO CAST HIS SWORD EXCALIBUR INTO THE WATER, AND HOW HE WAS DELIVERED TO LADIES IN A BARGE

BUT I may not stand, mine head works so. Ah Sir Launcelot, said King Arthur, this day have I sore missed thee; alas, that ever I was against thee, for now have I my death, whereof Sir Gawaine me warned in my dream. Then Sir Lucan took up the king the one part, and Sir Bedivere the other part, and in the lifting the king swooned; and Sir Lucan fell in a swoon with the lift, that the part of his guts fell out of his body, and therewith the noble knight's heart brast.<sup>4</sup> And when the king awoke, he beheld Sir Lucan, how he lay foaming at the mouth, and part of his guts lay at his feet. Alas, said the king, this is to me a full heavy sight, to see this noble duke so die for my sake, for he would have holpen me, that had more need of help than I. Alas, he would not complain him, his heart was so set to help me: now Jesu have mercy upon his soul! Then Sir Bedivere wept for the death of his brother. Leave this mourning and weeping, said the king, for all this will not avail me, for wit thou well an I might live myself, the

<sup>1</sup>Went.

<sup>2</sup>Pillagers.

<sup>3</sup>Counsel.

<sup>4</sup>Burst.

death of Sir Lucan would grieve me evermore; but my time hieth fast, said the king. Therefore, said Arthur unto Sir Bedivere, take thou Excalibur, my good sword, and go with it to yonder water side, and when thou comest there I charge thee throw my sword in that water, and come again and tell me what thou there seest. My lord, said Bedivere, your commandment shall be done, and lightly<sup>1</sup> bring you word again. So Sir Bedivere departed, and by the way he beheld that noble sword, that the pommel and the haft was all of precious stones; and then he said to himself: If I throw this rich sword in the water, thereof shall never come good, but harm and loss. And then Sir Bedivere hid Excalibur under a tree. And so, as soon as he might, he came again unto the king, and said he had been at the water, and had thrown the sword in the water. What saw thou there? said the king. Sir, he said, I saw nothing but waves and winds. That is untruly said of thee, said the king, therefore go thou lightly again, and do my commandment; as thou art to me lief and dear, spare not, but throw it in. Then Sir Bedivere returned again, and took the sword in his hand; and then him thought sin and shame to throw away that noble sword, and so ofte<sup>2</sup> he hid the sword, and returned again, and told to the king that he had been at the water, and done his commandment. What saw thou there? said the king. Sir, he said, I saw nothing but the waters wappe<sup>3</sup> and waves wanne.<sup>4</sup> Ah, traitor untrue, said King Arthur, now hast thou betrayed me twice. Who would have weened that, thou hast been to me so lief and dear? and thou art named a noble knight, and would betray me for the richness of the sword. But now go again lightly, for thy long tarrying putteth me in great jeopardy of my life, for I have taken cold. And but if thou do now as I bid thee, if ever I may see thee, I shall slay thee with mine own hands; for thou wouldst for my rich sword see me dead. Then Sir Bedivere departed, and went to the sword, and lightly took it up, and went to the water side; and there he bound the girdle about the hilt, and then he threw the sword as far into the water as he might; and there came an arm and an hand above the water and met it, and caught it, and so shook it thrice and brandished, and then vanished away the hand with the sword in the water. So Sir Bedivere came again to the king, and told him what he saw. Alas, said the king, help me hence, for I dread me I have tarried over long. Then Sir Bedivere took the king upon his back, and so went with him to that water side. And when they were at the water side, even fast by the bank hove a little barge with many fair ladies in it, and among them all was a queen, and all they had black hoods, and all they wept and shrieked when they saw King Arthur. Now put me into the barge, said the king. And so he did softly; and there received him three queens with great mourning; and so they set them down, and in one of their laps King Arthur laid his head. And then that queen said: Ah, dear brother, why have ye tarried so long from me? alas, this wound on your head hath caught over-much cold. And so then they rowed from the land, and Sir Bedivere beheld all those ladies go from him. Then Sir Bedivere cried: Ah my lord Arthur, what shall become of me, now ye go from me and leave me here alone among mine enemies? Comfort thyself, said the king, and do as well as thou mayest, for in me is no trust for to trust in; for I will into the vale of Avilion<sup>5</sup> to heal me of my grievous wound: and if thou hear never more of me, pray for my soul. But ever the queens and ladies wept and shrieked, that it was pity to hear. And as soon as Sir Bedivere had lost the sight of the barge, he wept and wailed, and so took the forest; and so he went all that night, and in the morning he was ware betwixt two holts hoar, of a chapel and an hermitage.

CHAPTER VI

HOW SIR BEDIVERE FOUND HIM ON THE MORROW DEAD IN AN HERMITAGE, AND HOW HE ABODE THERE WITH THE HERMIT

THEN was Sir Bedivere glad, and thither he went; and when he came into the chapel, he saw where lay an hermit groveling on all

<sup>1</sup>Swiftly.

<sup>2</sup>Afterwards.

<sup>3</sup>Ripple.

<sup>4</sup>Grow dark.

<sup>5</sup>Avalon, home of spirits of the departed.

four, there fast by a tomb was new graven.<sup>1</sup> When the hermit saw Sir Bedivere he knew him well, for he was but little tofore Bishop of Canterbury, that Sir Mordred flemed.<sup>2</sup> Sir, said Bedivere, what man is there interred that ye pray so fast for? Fair son, said the hermit, I wot not verily, but by deeming. But this night, at midnight, here came a number of ladies, and brought hither a dead corpse, and prayed me to bury him; and here they offered an hundred tapers, and they gave me an hundred besants.<sup>3</sup> Alas, said Sir Bedivere, that was my lord King Arthur, that here lieth buried in this chapel. Then Sir Bedivere swooned; and when he awoke he prayed the hermit he might abide with him still there, to live with fasting and prayers. For from hence will I never go, said Sir Bedivere, by my will, but all the days of my life here to pray for my lord Arthur. Ye are welcome to me, said the hermit, for I know ye better than ye ween that I do. Ye are the bold Bedivere, and the full noble duke, Sir Lucan the Butler, was your brother. Then Sir Bedivere told the hermit all as ye have heard tofore. So there bode Sir Bedivere with the hermit that was tofore Bishop of Canterbury, and there Sir Bedivere put upon him poor clothes, and served the hermit full lowly in fasting and in prayers. Thus of Arthur I find never more written in books that be authorized nor more of the very certainty of his death heard I never read, but thus was he led away in a ship wherein were three queens; that one was King Arthur's sister, Queen Morgan le Fay; the other was the Queen of Northgalis; the third was the Queen of the Waste Lands. Also there was Nimue, the chief lady of the lake, that had wedded Pelleas the good knight; and this lady had done much for King Arthur, for she would never suffer Sir Pelleas to be in no place where he should be in danger of his life; and so he lived to the uttermost of his days with her in great rest. More of the death of King Arthur could I never find, but that ladies brought him to his burials; and such one was buried there, that the hermit bare witness that sometime was Bishop of Canterbury, but yet the hermit knew not in certain that he was verily the body of King Arthur: for this tale Sir Bedivere, knight of the Table Round, made it to be written.

CHAPTER VII

OF THE OPINION OF SOME MEN OF THE DEATH OF KING ARTHUR; AND HOW QUEEN GUENEVER MADE HER A NUN IN ALMESBURY

YET some men say in many parts of England that King Arthur is not dead, but had by the will of our Lord Jesu into another place; and men say that he shall come again, and he shall win the holy cross. I will not say it shall be so, but rather I will say, here in this world he changed his life. But many men say that there is written upon his tomb this verse: Hic jacet Arthurus Rex, quondam Rex que futurus.<sup>4</sup> Thus leave I here Sir Bedivere with the hermit, that dwelled that time in a chapel beside Glastonbury, and there was his hermitage. And so they lived in their prayers, and fastings, and great abstinence. And when Queen Guenever understood that King Arthur was slain, and all the noble knights, Sir Mordred and all the remnant, then the queen stole away, and five ladies with her, and so she went to Almesbury; and there she let make herself a nun, and ware white clothes and black, and great penance she took, as ever did sinful lady in this land, and never creature could make her merry; but lived in fasting, prayers, and alms-deeds, that all manner of people marveled how virtuously she was changed. Now leave we Queen Guenever in Almesbury, a nun in white clothes and black, and there she was abbess and ruler as reason would; and turn we from her, and speak we of Sir Launcelot du Lake.

CHAPTER VIII

HOW WHEN SIR LAUNCELOT HEARD OF THE DEATH OF KING ARTHUR, AND OF SIR GALWAINE, AND OTHER MATTERS, HE CAME INTO ENGLAND

AND when he heard in his country that Sir Mordred was crowned king in England, and made war against King Arthur, his own father, and would let him to land in his own

<sup>4</sup>Here lies King Arthur, King formerly and so to be in the future.

<sup>1</sup> Dug.

<sup>2</sup> Put to flight.

<sup>3</sup> Coin first made at Byzantium (Constantinople).

land; also it was told Sir Launcelot how that Sir Mordred had laid siege about the Tower of London, by cause the queen would not wed him; then was Sir Launcelot wroth out of measure, and said to his kinsmen: Alas, that double traitor Sir Mordred, now me repenteth that ever he escaped my hands, for much shame hath he done unto my lord Arthur; for all I feel by the doleful letter that my lord Sir Gawaine sent me, on whose soul Jesu have mercy, that my lord Launcelot is full hard bestad. Alas, said Sir Launcelot, that ever I should live to hear that most noble king that made me knight thus to be overset with his subject in his own realm. And this doleful letter that my lord, Sir Gawaine, hath sent me afore his death, praying me to see his tomb, wit you well his doleful words shall never go from mine heart, for he was a full noble knight as ever was born; and in an unhappy hour was I born that ever I should have that unhap to slay first Sir Gawaine, Sir Gaheris the good knight, and mine own friend Sir Gareth, that full noble knight. Alas, I may say I am unhappy, said Sir Launcelot, that ever I should do thus unhappily, and, alas, yet might I never have hap to slay that traitor, Sir Mordred. Leave your complaints, said Sir Bors, and first revenge you of the death of Sir Gawaine; and it will be well done that ye see Sir Gawaine's tomb, and secondly that ye revenge my lord Arthur, and my lady, Queen Guenever. I thank you, said Sir Launcelot, for ever ye will my worship. Then they made them ready in all the haste that might be, with ships and galleys, with Sir Launcelot and his host to pass into England. And so he passed over the sea till he came to Dover, and there he landed with seven kings, and the number was hideous to behold. Then Sir Launcelot spered<sup>1</sup> of men of Dover where was King Arthur become. Then the people told him how that he was slain, and Sir Mordred and an hundred thousand died on a day; and how Sir Mordred gave King Arthur there the first battle at his landing, and there was good Sir Gawaine slain; and on the morn Sir Mordred fought with the king upon Barham Down, and there the king put Sir Mordred to the worse. Alas, said Sir Launcelot, this is the heaviest tidings that ever came to me. Now, fair sirs, said Sir Launcelot, show me the tomb of Sir Gawaine. And then certain people of the town brought him into the Castle of Dover, and showed him the tomb. Then Sir Launcelot kneeled down and wept, and prayed heartily for his soul. And that night he made a dole, and all they that would come had as much flesh, fish, wine and ale, and every man and woman had twelve pence, come who would. Thus with his own hand dealt he this money, in a mourning gown; and ever he wept, and prayed them to pray for the soul of Sir Gawaine. And on the morn all the priests and clerks that might be gotten in the country were there, and sang mass of requiem,<sup>2</sup> and there offered first Sir Launcelot, and he offered an hundred pound; and then the seven kings offered forty pound apiece; and also there was a thousand knights, and each of them offered a pound; and the offering dured from morn till night, and Sir Launcelot lay two nights on his tomb in prayers and weeping. Then on the third day Sir Launcelot called the kings, dukes, earls, barons, and knights, and said thus: My fair lords, I thank you all of your coming into this country with me, but we came too late, and that shall repent me while I live, but against death may no man rebel. But sithen<sup>3</sup> it is so, said Sir Launcelot, I will myself ride and seek my lady, Queen Guenever, for as I hear say she hath had great pain and much disease; and I heard say that she is fled into the west. Therefore ye all shall abide me here, and but if I come again within fifteen days, then take your ships and your fellowship, and depart into your country, for I will do as I say to you.

CHAPTER IX

HOW SIR LAUNCELOT DEPARTED TO SEEK THE QUEEN GUENEVER, AND HOW HE FOUND HER AT ALMESBURY

THEN came Sir Bors de Ganis, and said: My lord Sir Launcelot, what think ye for to do, now to ride in this realm? wit ye well ye shall find few friends. Be as be may, said Sir Launcelot, keep you still here, for I will

<sup>2</sup>Mass for the dead.

<sup>3</sup>Since.

<sup>1</sup>Asked.

forth on my journey, and no man nor child shall go with me. So it was no boot to strive, but he departed and rode westerly, and there he sought a seven or eight days; and at the last he came to a nunnery, and then was Queen Guenever ware of Sir Launcelot as he walked in the cloister. And when she saw him there she swooned thrice, that all the ladies and gentlewomen had work enough to hold the queen up. So when she might speak, she called ladies and gentlewomen to her, and said: Ye marvel, fair ladies, why I make this fare. Truly, she said, it is for the sight of yonder knight that yonder standeth; wherefore I pray you all call him to me. When Sir Launcelot was brought to her, then she said to all the ladies: Through this man and me hath all this war been wrought, and the death of the most noblest knights of the world; for through our love that we have loved together is my most noble lord slain. Therefore, Sir Launcelot, wit thou well I am set in such a plight to get my soul heal; and yet I trust through God's grace that after my death to have a sight of the blessed face of Christ, and at domesday to sit on his right side, for as sinful as ever I was are saints in heaven. Therefore, Sir Launcelot, I require thee and beseech thee heartily, for all the love that ever was betwixt us, that thou never see me more in the visage; and I command thee, on God's behalf, that thou forsake my company, and to thy kingdom thou turn again, and keep well thy realm from war and wrake;<sup>1</sup> for as well as I have loved thee, mine heart will not serve me to see thee, for through thee and me is the flower of kings and knights destroyed; therefore, Sir Launcelot, go to thy realm, and there take thee a wife, and live with her with joy and bliss; and I pray thee heartily, pray for me to our Lord that I may amend my misliving. Now, sweet madam, said Sir Launcelot, would ye that I should now return again unto my country, and there to wed a lady? Nay, madam, wit you well that shall I never do, for I shall never be so false to you of that I have promised; but the same destiny that ye have taken you to, I will take me unto, for to please Jesu, and ever for you I cast me specially to pray. If thou wilt do so, said the queen, hold thy promise, but

I may never believe but that thou wilt turn to the world again. Well, madam, said he, ye say as pleaseth you, yet wist you me never false of my promise, and God defend but I should forsake the world as ye have done. For in the quest of the Sangreal I had forsaken the vanities of the world had not your lord been. And if I had done so at that time, with my heart, will, and thought, I had passed all the knights that were in the Sangreal except Sir Galahad, my son. And therefore, lady, sithen ye have taken you to perfection, I must needs take me to perfection, of right. For I take record of God, in you I have had mine earthly joy; and if I had found you now so disposed, I had cast to have you into mine own realm.

CHAPTER X

HOW SIR LAUNCELOT CAME TO THE HERMITAGE WHERE THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY WAS, AND HOW HE TOOK THE HABIT ON HIM

BUT sithen I find you thus disposed, I ensure you faithfully, I will ever take me to penance, and pray while my life lasteth, if I may find any hermit, either gray or white, that will receive me. Wherefore, madam, I pray you kiss me and never no more. Nay, said the queen, that shall I never do, but abstain you from such works: and they departed. But there was never so hard an hearted man but he would have wept to see the dolor that they made; for there was lamentation as they had been stung with spears; and many times they swooned, and the ladies bare the queen to her chamber. And Sir Launcelot awoke and went and took his horse, and rode all that day and all night in a forest, weeping. And at the last he was ware of an hermitage and a chapel stood betwixt two cliffs; and then he heard a little bell ring to mass, and thither he rode and alit, and tied his horse to the gate, and heard mass. And he that sang mass was the Bishop of Canterbury. Both the Bishop and Sir Bedivere knew Sir Launcelot, and they spake together after mass. But when Sir Bedivere had told his tale all whole, Sir Launcelot's heart almost brast for sorrow, and Sir Launcelot threw his arms abroad, and said: Alas, who may trust this world. And then he kneeled down on his knee, and prayed the Bishop to shrive him and assoil<sup>1</sup> him. And then he besought the Bishop that he might be his brother. Then the Bishop said: I will gladly; and there he put an habit upon Sir Launcelot, and there he served God day and night with prayers and fastings. Thus the great host abode at Dover. And then Sir Lionel took fifteen lords with him, and rode to London to seek Sir Launcelot; and there Sir Lionel was slain and many of his lords. Then Sir Bors de Ganis made the great host for to go home again; and Sir Bors, Sir Ector de Maris, Sir Blamore, Sir Bleoberis, with more other of Sir Launcelot's kin, took on them to ride all England overthwart and endlong, to seek Sir Launcelot. So Sir Bors by fortune rode so long till he came to the same chapel where Sir Launcelot was; and so Sir Bors heard a little bell knell, that rang to mass; and there he alit and heard mass. And when mass was done, the Bishop, Sir Launcelot, and Sir Bedivere, came to Sir Bors. And when Sir Bors saw Sir Launcelot in that manner clothing, then he prayed the Bishop that he might be in the same suit. And so there was an habit put upon him, and there he lived in prayers and fasting. And within half a year, there was come Sir Galihud, Sir Galihodin, Sir Blamore, Sir Bleoberis, Sir Villiers, Sir Clarras, and Sir Gahalantine. So all these seven noble knights there abode still. And when they saw Sir Launcelot had taken him to such perfection, they had no list to depart, but took such an habit as he had. Thus they endured in great penance six year; and then Sir Launcelot took the habit of priesthood of the Bishop, and a twelvemonth he sang mass. And there was none of these other knights but they read in books, and help for to sing mass, and rang bells, and did bodily all manner of service. And so their horses went where they would, for they took no regard of no worldly riches. For when they saw Sir Launcelot endure such penance, in prayers, and fastings, they took no force<sup>2</sup> what pain they endured, for to see the noblest knight of the world take such abstinence that he waxed full lean. And thus upon a night, there came a vision to Sir Launcelot, and charged him, in remission of his sins, to haste him unto Almesbury: And by then thou come there, thou shalt find Queen Guenever dead. And therefore take thy fellows with thee, and purvey them of an horse bier, and fetch thou the corpse of her, and bury her by her husband, the noble King Arthur. So this advision came to Sir Launcelot thrice in one night.

<sup>1</sup>Ruin.

CHAPTER XI

HOW SIR LAUNCELOT WENT WITH HIS SEVEN FELLOWS TO ALMESBURY, AND FOUND THERE QUEEN GUENEVER DEAD, WHOM THEY BROUGHT TO GLASTONBURY

THEN Sir Launcelot rose up or<sup>3</sup> day, and told the hermit. It were well done, said the hermit, that ye made you ready, and that you disobey not the advision. Then Sir Launcelot took his seven fellows with him, and on foot they yede<sup>4</sup> from Glastonbury to Almesbury, the which is little more than thirty mile. And thither they came within two days, for they were weak and feeble to go. And when Sir Launcelot was come to Almesbury within the nunnery, Queen Guenever died but half an hour afore. And the ladies told Sir Launcelot that Queen Guenever told them all or she passed, that Sir Launcelot had been priest near a twelvemonth, And hither he cometh as fast as he may to fetch my corpse; and beside my lord, King Arthur, he shall bury me. Wherefore the queen said in hearing of them all: I beseech Almighty God that I may never have power to see Sir Launcelot with my worldly eyen; and thus, said all the ladies, was ever her prayer these two days, till she was dead. Then Sir Launcelot saw her visage, but he wept not greatly, but sighed. And so he did all the observance of the service himself, both the dirge at night, and on the morn he sang mass. And there was ordained an horse bier; and so with an hundred torches ever burning about the corpse of the queen, and ever Sir Launcelot with his seven fellows went about the horse bier, singing and reading many an holy orison, and frankincense upon the corpse incensed. Thus Sir Launcelot and his seven fellows went on foot from Almesbury unto Glaston-

<sup>1</sup>Absolve.

<sup>2</sup>Account.

<sup>3</sup>Before.

<sup>4</sup>Went.

bury. And when they were come to the chapel and the hermitage, there she had a dirge, with great devotion. And on the morn the hermit that sometime was Bishop of Canterbury sang the mass of requiem with great devotion. And Sir Launcelot was the first that offered, and then also his seven fellows. And then she was wrapped in cered cloth of Raines,<sup>1</sup> from the top to the toe, in thirtyfold; and after she was put in a web of lead, and then in a coffin of marble. And when she was put in the earth Sir Launcelot swooned, and lay long still, while the hermit came and awaked him, and said: Ye be to blame, for ye displease God with such manner of sorrow making. Truly, said Sir Launcelot, I trust I do not displease God, for He knoweth mine intent. For my sorrow was not, nor is not, for any rejoicing of sin, but my sorrow may never have end. For when I remember of her beauty, and of her noblesse, that was both with her king and with her, so when I saw his corpse and her corpse so lie together, truly mine heart would not serve to sustain my careful<sup>2</sup> body. Also when I remember me how by my default, mine orgulity<sup>3</sup> and my pride, that they were both laid full low, that were peerless that ever was living of Christian people, wit you well, said Sir Launcelot, this remembered, of their kindness and mine unkindness, sank so to mine heart, that I might not sustain myself. So the French book maketh mention.

CHAPTER XII

HOW SIR LAUNCELOT BEGAN TO SICKEN, AND AFTER DIED, WHOSE BODY WAS BORNE TO JOYOUS GARD FOR TO BE BURIED

THEN Sir Launcelot never after ate but little meat, ne drank, till he was dead. For then he sickened more and more, and dried, and dwined<sup>4</sup> away. For the Bishop nor none of his fellows might not make him to eat, and little he drank, that he was waxen by a cubit shorter than he was, that the people could not know him. For evermore, day and night, he prayed, but sometime he slumbered a broken sleep; ever he was lying groveling on the tomb of King Arthur and Queen Guenever. And there was no comfort that the Bishop, nor Sir Bors, nor none of his fellows, could make him, it availed not. So within six weeks after, Sir Launcelot fell sick, and lay in his bed; and then he sent for the Bishop that there was hermit, and all his true fellows. Then Sir Launcelot said with dreary steven:<sup>5</sup> Sir Bishop, I pray you give to me all my rites that longeth to a Christian man. It shall not need you, said the hermit and all his fellows, it is but heaviness of your blood, ye shall be well mended by the grace of God to-morn. My fair lords, said Sir Launcelot, wit you well my careful body will into the earth, I have warning more than now I will say; therefore give me my rites. So when he was houseled and enelid,<sup>6</sup> and had all that a Christian man ought to have, he prayed the Bishop that his fellows might bear his body to Joyous Gard. Some men say it was Alnwick, and some men say it was Bamborough. Howbeit, said Sir Launcelot, me repenteth sore, but I made mine avow sometime, that in Joyous Gard I would be buried. And by cause of breaking of mine avow, I pray you all, lead me thither. Then there was weeping and wringing of hands among his fellows. So at a season of the night they all went to their beds, for they all lay in one chamber. And so after midnight, against day, the Bishop that was hermit, as he lay in his bed asleep, he fell upon a great laughter. And therewithal the fellowship awoke, and came to the Bishop, and asked him what he ailed. Ah Jesu mercy, said the Bishop, why did ye awake me? I was never in all my life so merry and so well at ease. Wherefore? said Sir Bors. Truly, said the Bishop, here was Sir Launcelot with me with more angels than ever I saw men in one day. And I saw the angels heave up Sir Launcelot unto heaven, and the gates of heaven opened against him. It is but dretching of swevens,<sup>7</sup> said Sir Bors, for I doubt not Sir Launcelot aileth nothing but good. It may well be, said the Bishop; go ye to his bed, and then shall ye prove the sooth. So when Sir Bors and his fellows came to his bed they found him stark dead, and he lay as he had smiled, and

<sup>1</sup>Waxed cloth from Raines, in Brittany.

<sup>2</sup>Distressed.

<sup>3</sup>Arrogance.

<sup>4</sup>Dwindled.

<sup>5</sup>Voice.

<sup>6</sup>Given the Holy Sacrament and anointed.

<sup>7</sup>The troubling of dreams.

the sweetest savor about him that ever they felt. Then was there weeping and wringing of hands, and the greatest dole they made that ever made men. And on the morn the Bishop did his mass of requiem; and after, the Bishop and all the nine knights put Sir Launcelot in the same horse bier that Queen Guenever was laid in tofore that she was buried. And so the Bishop and they all together went with the body of Sir Launcelot daily, till they came to Joyous Gard; and ever they had an hundred torches burning about him. And so within fifteen days they came to Joyous Gard. And there they laid his corpse in the body of the quire, and sang and read many psalters and prayers over him and about him. And ever his visage was laid open and naked, that all folks might behold him. For such was the custom in those days, that all men of worship should so lie with open visage till that they were buried. And right thus as they were at their service, there came Sir Ector de Maris, that had seven years sought all England, Scotland, and Wales, seeking his brother, Sir Launcelot.

CHAPTER XIII

HOW SIR ECTOR FOUND SIR LAUNCELOT HIS BROTHER DEAD, AND HOW CONSTANTINE REIGNED NEXT AFTER ARTHUR; AND OF THE END OF THIS BOOK

AND when Sir Ector heard such noise and light in the quire of Joyous Gard, he alit and put his horse from him, and came into the quire, and there he saw men sing and weep. And all they knew Sir Ector, but he knew not them. Then went Sir Bors unto Sir Ector, and told him how there lay his brother, Sir Launcelot, dead; and then Sir Ector threw his shield, sword, and helm from him. And when he beheld Sir Launcelot's visage, he fell down in a swoon. And when he waked it were hard any tongue to tell the doleful complaints that he made for his brother. Ah Launcelot, he said, thou were head of all Christian knights, and now I dare say, said Sir Ector, thou Sir Launcelot, there thou liest, that thou were never matched of earthly knight's hand. And thou were the courteoust knight that ever bare shield. And thou were the truest friend to thy lover that ever bestrad horse.

And thou were the truest lover of a sinful man that ever loved woman. And thou were the kindest man that ever struck with sword. And thou were the goodliest person that ever came among press of knights. And thou was the meekest man and the gentlest that ever ate in hall among ladies. And thou were the sternest knight to thy mortal foe that ever put spear in the rest. Then there was weeping and dolor out of measure. Thus they kept Sir Launcelot's corpse on loft fifteen days, and then they buried it with great devotion. And then at leisure they went all with the Bishop of Canterbury to his hermitage, and there they were together more than a month. Then Sir Constantine, that was Sir Cadour's son of Cornwall, was chosen king of England. And he was a full noble knight, and worshipfully he ruled this realm. And then this King Constantine sent for the Bishop of Canterbury, for he heard say where he was. And so he was restored unto his Bishopric, and left that hermitage. And Sir Bedivere was there ever still hermit to his life's end. Then Sir Bors de Ganis, Sir Ector de Maris, Sir Gahalantine, Sir Galihud, Sir Galihodin, Sir Blamore, Sir Bleoberis, Sir Villiards le Valiant, Sir Clarrus of Clermont, all these knights drew them to their countries. Howbeit King Constantine would have had them with him, but they would not abide in this realm. And there they all lived in their countries as holy men. And some English books make mention that they went never out of England after the death of Sir Launcelot, but that was but favor of makers.<sup>1</sup> For the French book maketh mention, and is authorized, that Sir Bors, Sir Ector, Sir Blamore, and Sir Bleoberis, went into the Holy Land whereas Jesu Christ was quick and dead, and anon as they had stablished their lands. For the book saith, so Sir Launcelot commanded them for to do, or ever he passed out of this world. And these four knights did many battles upon the miscreants or Turks. And there they died upon a Good Friday for God's sake.

Here is the end of the book of King Arthur, and of his noble knights of the Round Table, that when they were whole together there was ever an hundred and forty. And here is the end of the death of Arthur. I pray you all, gentlemen and gentlewomen that readeth this book of Arthur and his knights, from the beginning to the ending, pray for me while I am on live, that God send me good deliverance, and when I am dead, I pray you all pray for my soul. For this book was ended the ninth year of the reign of King Edward the Fourth, by Sir Thomas Maleore, knight, as Jesu help him for his great might, as he is the servant of Jesu both day and night.

<sup>1</sup>The fiction of poets.

Thus endeth this noble and joyous book entitled Le Morte Darthur. Notwithstanding it treateth of the birth, life, and acts of the said King Arthur, of his noble knights of the Round Table, their marvelous enquests and adventures, the achieving of the Sangreal, and in the end the dolorous death and departing out of this world of them all. Which book was reduced into English by Sir Thomas Malory, knight, as afore is said, and by me divided into twenty-one books, chaptered and imprinted, and finished in the abbey Westminster the last day of July the year of our Lord MCCCCLXXXV.

Caxton me fieri fecit.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup>Caxton caused me to be made.

JOHN LYLY (1554?-1606)

Of Lyly's life not much is known. He was born in either 1553 or 1554. In the spring of 1569 he entered Magdalen College, Oxford, taking his bachelor's degree in 1573 and his master's degree in 1575. In the following year he was perhaps at Cambridge; he became a master of arts of Cambridge in 1579. In 1578 he published the book for which he is still most widely known, Euphues, the Anatomy of Wit, the immediate success of which led to the publication of a second part, Euphues and his England, in 1580. Lyly was in point of time the first of a group of men known, from their education, as "university wits," who attempted to make their way in London by what they could earn from their pens. With the exception of Euphues their best remembered work lies in the field of the drama. In the decade from 1580 to 1590 they managed practically to effect the transition from mediæval to Elizabethan play-writing, and so cleared the way for Shakespeare and his contemporaries and successors. Lyly's comedies, though now perhaps not very frequently read, are from this point of view of great importance, the chief ones being Endimion, Sapho and Phao, Campaspe, and Gallathea. As these titles serve to indicate, Lyly drew his subject-matter from pastoral tradition or classical myth; though this, in many of his plays, he used to veil political or social allegory bearing on current events. In 1588 Lyly obtained a minor post in the Revels Office which he held until 1604. He made repeated attempts to gain the Mastership of the Revels, but failed to do so and was apparently embittered by his failure. He sat in Parliament four times between 1589 and 1601.

To the modern reader the style of Euphues seems frigid, as indeed it is, and one concedes that its interest is chiefly historical. Yet the book will hardly be read except because of its style. It is a tale, and it has been called "the earliest English novel," but this unduly stretches the meaning of "novel," for the story is slight and of secondary importance, serving really as a framework to hold together a collection of letters and moral discussions. Moreover, the content of the book as a whole is primarily a means to an end. That is to say, it was meant as a vehicle for a certain kind of style, which had indeed been known for several centuries in Latin prose, but was more artistic and elaborate than anything yet attempted in English. Lyly's book gave a new life to this old fashion, but only a temporary one, and Euphuism, as the style was called, soon became a proper subject for jokes. But Euphuism is misunderstood if it is thought of as a mere affectation in speech. The truth is that Lyly was a pioneer. He was in effect the discoverer of English literary prose, and we owe it to him probably more than to any other one man that prose came to be regarded equally with verse as an artistic medium. If his style now seems merely quaint and curious, it should be remembered that Lyly was one who showed the way, and that our better standards have been made possible by the fact that later writers were able to take advantage of his successes as well as of his failures.

EUPHUES,
THE ANATOMY OF WIT

VERY pleasant for all Gentlemen to read, and most necessary to remember: wherein are contained the delights that Wit followeth in his youth by the pleasantness of Love, and the happiness he reapeth in age by the perfectness of Wisdom.

A COOLING CARD FOR PHILAUTUS AND ALL
FOND LOVERS.<sup>1</sup>

Musing with myself, being idle, how I might be well employed, friend Philautus, I could find nothing either more fit to continue

<sup>1</sup>A "pamphlet" written by Euphues to "bridle the overlashings affections" of his friend Philautus, "yet generally to be applied to all lovers."

our friendship, or of greater force to dissolve our folly, than to write a remedy for that which many judge past cure; for love, Philautus, with the which I have been so tormented that I have lost my time, thou so troubled that thou hast forgot reason, both so mangled with repulse, inveigled by deceit, and almost murdered by disdain, that I can neither remember our miseries without grief, nor redress our mishaps without groans. How wantonly, yea, and how willingly have we abused our golden time and misspent our gotten treasure! How curious were we to please our lady, how careless to displease our Lord! How devout in serving our goddess, how desperate in forgetting our God! Ah, my Philautus, if the wasting of our money might not dehort us, yet the wounding of our minds should deter us; if reason might nothing persuade us to wisdom, yet shame should provoke us to wit. If Lucilla<sup>1</sup> read this trifle, she will straight proclaim Euphues for a traitor, and, seeing me turn my tippet,<sup>2</sup> will either shut me out for a wrangler, or cast me off for a wiredrawer;<sup>3</sup> either convince me of malice in bewraying their sleights, or condemn me of mischief in arming young men against fleeting minions. And what then? Though Curio be as hot as a toast, yet Euphues is as cold as a clock; though he be a cock of the game, yet Euphues is content to be craven and cry creek;<sup>4</sup> though Curio be old huddle, and twang "ipse, he,"<sup>5</sup> yet Euphues had rather shrink in the wetting than waste in the wearing. I know Curio to be steel to the back, standard-bearer in Venus's camp, sworn to the crew, true to the crown, knight marshal to Cupid, and heir apparent to his kingdom. But by that time that he hath eaten but one bushel of salt with Lucilla, he shall taste ten quarters<sup>6</sup> of sorrow in his love; then shall he find for every pint of honey a gallon of gall, for every dram of pleasure an ounce of pain, for every inch of mirth an ell of moan. And yet, Philautus, if there be any man in despair to obtain his purpose, or so obstinate in his opinion that, having lost his freedom by folly, would also lose his life for love, let him repair hither, and he shall reap such profit as will either quench his flames or assuage his fury; either cause him to renounce his lady as most pernicious, or redeem his liberty as most precious. Come, therefore, to me, all ye lovers that have been deceived by fancy, the glass of pestilence, or deluded by women, the gate to perdition; be as earnest to seek a medicine as you were eager to run into a mischief; the earth bringeth forth as well endive to delight the people as hemlock to endanger the pa-

<sup>1</sup>Lucilla was betrothed to Philautus, but, when she saw Euphues, fell in love with him, he returning her love. This broke the friendship of Euphues and Philautus; but a little later Lucilla fell in love anew with one Curio and married him, whereupon Euphues and Philautus renewed their friendship.

<sup>2</sup>Proverbial expression meaning to change sides.

<sup>3</sup>Precisian.

<sup>4</sup>Confess himself beaten.

<sup>5</sup>Though Curio be embraced as her loved one and sing "I am the man."

<sup>6</sup>There are 8 bushels to the quarter.

tient; as well the rose to distill as the nettle to sting; as well the bee to give honey as the spider to yield poison.

If my lewd life, gentlemen, have given you offence, let my good counsel make amends; if by my folly any be allured to lust, let them by my repentance be drawn to continency. Achilles's spear could as well heal as hurt; the Scorpion, though he sting, yet he stints the pain; though the herb Nerius poison the sheep, yet is it a remedy to man against poison; though I have infected some by example, yet I hope I shall comfort many by repentance. Whatsoever I speak to men, the same also I speak to women; I mean not to run with the hare and hold with the hound, to carry fire in the one hand and water in the other; neither to flatter men as altogether faultless, neither to fall out with women as altogether guilty; for, as I am not minded to pick a thank with the one, so am I not determined to pick a quarrel with the other; if women be not perverse, they shall reap profit by remedy of pleasure. If Phyllis were now to take counsel, she would not be so foolish to hang herself, neither Dido so fond to die for Æneas, neither Pasiphaë so monstrous to love a bull, nor Phedra so unnatural to be enamored of her son.

This is, therefore, to admonish all young imps and novices in love not to blow the coals of fancy with desire, but to quench them with disdain. When love tickleth thee, decline it, lest it stifle thee; rather fast than surfeit; rather starve than strive to exceed. Though the beginning of love bring delight, the end bringeth destruction. For, as the first draught of wine doth comfort the stomach, the second inflame the liver, the third fume into the head, so the first sip of love is pleasant, the second perilous, the third pestilential. If thou perceive thyself to be enticed with their wanton glances or allured with their wicked guiles, either enchanted with their beauty or enamored with their bravery, enter with thyself into this meditation: What shall I gain if I obtain my purpose? nay, rather, what shall I lose in winning my pleasure? If my lady yield to be my lover, is it not likely she will be another's leman? and if she be a modest matron, my labor is lost. This, therefore, remaineth; that either I must pine in cares or perish with curses.

If she be chaste, then is she coy; if light, then is she impudent; if a grave matron, who can woo her? if a lewd minion, who would wed her? if one of the Vestal Virgins, they have vowed virginity; if one of Venus's court, they have vowed dishonesty. If I love one that is fair, it will kindle jealousy; if one that is foul, it will convert me into frenzy. If fertile to bear children, my care is increased; if barren, my curse is augmented; if honest, I shall fear her death; if immodest, I shall be weary of her life.

To what end, then, shall I live in love, seeing always it is a life more to be feared than death? for all my time wasted in sighs and worn in sobs, for all my treasure spent on jewels and spilled in jollity, what recompense shall I reap besides repentance? What other reward shall I have than reproach? What other solace than endless shame? But haply thou wilt say, "If I refuse their courtesy I shall be accounted a meacock,<sup>1</sup> a milk-sop, taunted and retaunted with check and checkmate, flouted and reflouted with intolerable glee."

Alas, fond fool, art thou so pinned to their sleeves that thou regardest more their babble than thine own bliss, more their frumps than thine own welfare? Wilt thou resemble the kind spaniel,<sup>2</sup> which, the more he is beaten the fonder he is, or the foolish eyas,<sup>3</sup> which will never away? Dost thou not know that women deem none valiant unless he be too venturesome?—that they account one a dastard if he be not desperate, a pinch-penny if he be not prodigal; if silent, a sot, if full of words, a fool? Perversely do they always think of their lovers and talk of them scornfully, judging all to be clowns which be no courtiers, and all to be pingers<sup>4</sup> that be not coursers.

Seeing therefore the very blossom of love is sour, the bud cannot be sweet. In time prevent danger, lest untimely thou run into a thousand perils. Search the wound while it is green; too late cometh the salve when the sore festereth, and the medicine bringeth double care when the malady is past cure.

Beware of delays. What less than the grain of mustard seed?—in time, almost what thing is greater than the stalk thereof? The slender twig groweth to a stately tree, and that which with the hand might easily have been pulled up will hardly with the ax be hewn down. The least spark, if it be not quenched, will burst into a flame; the least moth in time eateth the thickest cloth; and I have read that, in a short space, there was a town in Spain undermined with conies, in Thessaly with moles, with frogs in France, in Africa with flies. If these silly worms in tract of time overthrow so stately towns, how much more will love, which creepeth secretly into the mind (as the rust doth into the iron and is not perceived), consume the body, yea, and confound the soul. Defer not from hour to day, from day to month, from month to year, and always remain in misery.

He that to-day is not willing will to-morrow be more willful. But, alas, it is no less common than lamentable to behold the tottering estate of lovers, who think by delays to prevent dangers, with oil to quench fire, with smoke to clear the eyesight. They flatter themselves with a feinting farewell, deferring ever until to-morrow, whenas their morrow doth always increase their sorrow. Let neither their amiable countenances, neither their painted protestations, neither their deceitful promises, allure thee to delays. Think this with thyself, that the sweet songs of Calypso were subtle snares to entice Ulysses; that the crab then catcheth the oyster when the sun shineth; that hyena, when she speaketh like a man, deviseth most mischief; that women when they be most pleasant pretend most treachery.

Follow Alexander, which, hearing the commendation and singular comeliness of the wife of Darius, so courageously withstood the assaults of fancy that he would not so much as take a view of her beauty. Imitate Cyrus, a king endowed with such continency that he loathed to look on the heavenly hue of Panthea; and, when Araspus told him that she excelled all mortal wights in amiable show, "By so much the more," said Cyrus, "I ought to abstain from her sight; for if I follow thy counsel in going to her, it may be I shall desire to continue with her, and by my light affection neglect my serious affairs." Learn of Romulus to refrain from

<sup>1</sup>A tame-spirited man.

<sup>2</sup>True-bred spaniel.

<sup>3</sup>Nestling or unfledged bird.

<sup>4</sup>Loiterers.

wine, be it never so delicate; of Agesilaus to despise costly apparel, be it never so curious; of Diogenes to detest women, be they never so comely. He that toucheth pitch shall be defiled; the sore eye infecteth the sound; the society with women breedeth security in the soul, and maketh all the senses senseless. Moreover, take this counsel as an article of thy creed, which I mean to follow as the chief argument of my faith, that idleness is the only nurse and nourisher of sensual appetite, the sole maintenance of youthful affection, the first shaft that Cupid shooteth into the hot liver of a heedless lover. I would to God I were not able to find this for a truth by mine own trial, and I would the example of others' idleness had caused me rather to avoid that fault than experience of mine own folly. How dissolute have I been in striving against good counsel, how resolute in standing in mine own conceit, how forward to wickedness, how wanton with too much cockering,<sup>1</sup> how wayward in hearing correction! Neither was I much unlike these abbey lubbers in my life (though far unlike them in belief) which labored till they were cold, ate till they sweat, and lay in bed till their bones ached. Hereof cometh it, gentlemen, that love creepeth into the mind by privy craft, and keepeth his hold by main courage.

The man being idle, the mind is apt to all uncleanness; the mind being void of exercise, the man is void of honesty. Doth not the rust fret the hardest iron if it be not used? Doth not the moth eat the finest garment if it be not worn? Doth not moss grow on the smoothest stone if it be not stirred? Doth not impiety infect the wisest wit if it be given to idleness? Is not the standing water sooner frozen than the running stream? Is not he that sitteth more subject to sleep than he that walketh? Doth not common experience make this common unto us, that the fattest ground bringeth forth nothing but weeds if it be not well tilled, that the sharpest wit inclineth only to wickedness if it be not exercised? Is it not true which Seneca reporteth, that as too much bending breaketh the bow, so too much remission spoileth the mind? Besides this, immoderate sleep, immodest play, unsatiable swilling of wine doth so weaken the senses and bewitch the soul that, before we feel the motion of love, we are resolved into lust. Eschew idleness, my Philautus, so shalt thou easily unbend the bow and quench the brands of Cupid. Love gives place to labor; labor, and thou shalt never love. Cupid is a crafty child, following those at an inch that study pleasure, and flying those swiftly that take pains. Bend thy mind to the law, whereby thou mayest have understanding of old and ancient customs; defend thy clients; enrich thy coffers; and carry credit in thy country. If law seem loathsome unto thee, search the secrets of physic, whereby thou mayest know the hidden natures of herbs; whereby thou mayest gather profit to thy purse and pleasure to thy mind. What can be more exquisite in human affairs than for every fever, be it never so hot, for every palsy, be it never so cold, for every infection, be it never so strange, to give a remedy? The old verse standeth as yet in his old virtue: That Galen giveth goods, Justinian honors. If thou be so nice that thou canst no way brook the practice of physic, or so unwise that thou wilt not beat thy brains about the institutes of the law, confer all thy study, all thy time, all thy treasure to the attaining of the sacred and sincere knowledge of divinity; by this mayest thou bridle thine incontinency, rein thine affections, restrain thy lust. Here shalt thou behold, as it were in a glass, that all the glory of man is as the grass; that all things under heaven are but vain; that our life is but a shadow, a warfare, a pilgrimage, a vapor, a bubble, a blast; of such shortness that David saith it is but a span long; of such sharpness that Job noteth it replenished with all miseries; of such uncertainty that we are no sooner born but we are subject to death; the one foot no sooner on the ground but the other ready to slip into the grave. Here shalt thou find ease for thy burden of sin, comfort for the conscience pined with vanity, mercy for thine offences by the martyrdom of thy sweet Savior. By this thou shalt be able to instruct those that be weak, to confute those that be obstinate, to confound those that be erroneous, to confirm the faithful, to comfort the desperate, to cut off the presumptuous, to save thine own soul by thy sure faith, and edify the hearts of many by thy sound doctrine.

<sup>1</sup>Coddling.

If this seem too strait a diet for thy straining disease, or too holy a profession for so hollow a person, then employ thyself to martial feats, to jousts, to tourneys, yea, to all torments, rather than to loiter in love and spend thy life in the laps of ladies; what more monstrous can there be than to see a young man abuse those gifts to his own shame which God hath given him for his own preferment? What greater infamy than to confer the sharp wit to the making of lewd sonnets, to the idolatrous worshiping of their ladies, to the vain delights of fancy, to all kind of vice, as it were against kind and course of nature? Is it not folly to show wit to women, which are neither able nor willing to receive fruit thereof? Dost thou not know that the tree Silvacenda beareth no fruit in Pharos?<sup>1</sup> That the Persian trees in Rhodes do only wax green but never bring forth apple?<sup>2</sup>

That amomus and nardus will only grow in India, balsamum only in Syria; that in Rhodes no eagle will build her nest, no owl live in Crete, no wit spring in the will of women? Mortify, therefore, thy affections, and force not nature against nature to strive in vain. Go into the country, look to thy grounds, yoke thine oxen, follow thy plow, graft thy trees, behold thy cattle, and devise with thyself how the increase of them may increase thy profit. In autumn pull thine apples, in summer ply thy harvest, in the spring trim thy gardens, in the winter, thy woods, and thus, beginning to delight to be a good husband, thou shalt begin to detest to be in love with an idle housewife; when profit shall begin to fill thy purse with gold, then pleasure shall have no force to defile thy mind with love. For honest recreation after thy toil, use hunting or hawking; either rouse the deer, or unperch the pheasant; so shalt thou root out the remembrance of thy former love, and repent thee of thy foolish lust. And, although thy sweetheart bind thee by oath always to hold a candle at her shrine, and to offer thy devotion to thine own destruction, yet go, run, fly into the country; neither water thou thy plants, in that thou departest from thy pigny,<sup>3</sup> neither stand in a mammering<sup>4</sup> whether it be best to depart or not; but by how much the more thou art unwilling to go, by so much the more hasten thy steps, neither feign for thyself any sleeveless excuse whereby thou mayest tarry. Neither let rain nor thunder, neither lightning nor tempest, stay thy journey; and reckon not with thyself how many miles thou hast gone—that showeth weariness; but how many thou hast to go—that proveth manliness. But foolish and frantic lovers will deem my precepts hard, and esteem my persuasions haggard;<sup>5</sup> I must of force confess that it is a corrosive to the stomach of a lover, but a comfort to a godly liver to run through a thousand pikes to escape ten thousand perils. Sour potions bring sound health; sharp purgations make short diseases; and the medicine, the more bitter it is, the more better it is in working. To heal the body we try physic, search cunning, prove sorcery, venture through fire and water, leaving nothing unsought that may be gotten for money, be it never so much or procured by any means, be they never so unlawful. How much more ought we to hazard all things for the safeguard of mind, and quiet of conscience! And, certes, easier will the remedy be when the reason is espied; do you not know the nature of women, which is grounded only upon extremities?

Do they think any man to delight in them unless he dote on them? Any to be zealous except they be jealous? Any to be fervent in case he be not furious? If he be cleanly, then term they him proud; if mean in apparel, a sloven; if tall, a longis; if short, a dwarf; if bold, blunt; if shamefaced, a coward; inso-much as they have neither mean in their frumps, nor measure in their folly. But at the first the ox wieldeth not the yoke, nor the colt the snaffle, nor the lover good counsel; yet time causeth the one to bend his neck, the other to open his mouth, and should enforce the third to yield his right to reason. Lay before thine eyes the slights and deceits of thy lady, her snatching in jest and keeping in earnest, her perjury, her impiety, the countenance she showeth to thee of course,

<sup>1</sup>The island near Alexandria on which Ptolemy I built a lighthouse.

<sup>2</sup>Lyly has in mind Pliny's statement (Natural History, xvi, 58) that in general trees do not bear except where they are indigenous.

<sup>3</sup>Thy loved one.

<sup>4</sup>Hesitation.

<sup>5</sup>Wild? A haggard is a wild hawk.

the love she beareth to others of zeal, her open malice, her dissembled mischief.

O, I would in repeating their vices thou couldst be as eloquent as in remembering them thou oughtst to be penitent! Be she never so comely, call her counterfeit; be she never so straight, think her crooked. And wrest all parts of her body to the worst, be she never so worthy. If she be well set, then call her a boss; if slender, a hazel twig; if nutbrown, as black as a coal; if well colored, a painted wall; if she be pleasant, then is she a wanton; if sullen, a clown; if honest, then is she coy; if impudent, a harlot.

Search every vein and sinew of their disposition; if she have no sight in descant, desire her to chant it; if no cunning to dance, request her to trip it; if no skill in music, proffer her the lute; if an ill gait, then walk with her; if rude in speech, talk with her; if she be jag-toothed, tell her some merry jest to make her laugh; if pink-eyed, some doleful history to cause her weep: in the one her grinning will show her deformed; in the other her whining, like a pig half roasted.

It is a world to see how commonly we are blinded with the collusions of women, and more enticed by their ornaments being artificial than their proportion being natural. I loathe almost to think on their ointments and apothecary drugs, the sleeeking of their faces, and all their slibber<sup>1</sup> sauces which bring queasiness to the stomach and disquiet to the mind.

Take from them their periwigs, their paintings, their jewels, their rolls, their bolsterings, and thou shalt soon perceive that a woman is the least part of herself. When they be once robbed of their robes, then will they appear so odious, so ugly, so monstrous, that thou wilt rather think them serpents than saints; and so like hags that thou wilt fear rather to be enchanted than enamored. Look in their closets, and there shalt thou find an apothecary's shop of sweet confections, a surgeon's box of sundry salves, a pedlar's pack of new fangles. Besides all this, their shadows,<sup>2</sup> their spots,<sup>3</sup> their lawns, their lyfkies,<sup>4</sup> their ruffs, their rings, show them rather cardinals' courtesans than modest matrons, and more carnally affected than moved in conscience. If every one of these things severally be not of force to move thee, yet all of them jointly shall mortify thee.

Moreover, to make thee the more stronger to strive against these sirens, and more subtle to deceive these tame serpents, my counsel is that thou have more strings to thy bow than one; it is safe riding at two anchors; a fire divided in twain burneth slower; a fountain running into many rivers is of less force; the mind enamored on two women is less affected with desire and less infected with despair: one love expelleth another, and the remembrance of the latter quencheth the concupiscence of the first.

Yet, if thou be so weak, being bewitched with their wiles that thou hast neither will to eschew nor wit to avoid their company, if thou be either so wicked that thou wilt not, or so wedded that thou canst not abstain from their glances, yet at the least dissemble thy grief. If thou be as hot as the mount Etna, feign thyself as cold as the hill Caucasus; carry two faces in one hood; cover thy flaming fancy with feigned ashes; show thyself sound when thou art rotten; let thy hue be merry when thy heart is melancholy; bear a pleasant countenance with a pined<sup>5</sup> conscience, a painted sheath with a leaden dagger.<sup>6</sup> Thus, dissembling thy grief, thou mayest recure thy disease. Love creepeth in by stealth, and by stealth slideth away.

If she break promise with thee in the night, or absent herself in the day, seem thou careless, and then will she be careful; if thou languish, then will she be lavish of her honor, yea, and of the other strange beast, her honesty. Stand thou on thy pantofles,<sup>7</sup> and she will veil bonnet. Lie thou aloof, and she will seize on the lure; if thou pass by her door and be called back, either seem deaf and not to hear, or desperate, and not to care. Fly the places, the parlors, the portals wherein thou hast been conversant with thy lady; yea, Philautus, shun the street where Lucilla doth dwell, lest the sight of her window renew the sum of thy sorrow.

<sup>1</sup>Dirty.

<sup>2</sup>Borders attached to bonnets to shield complexion.

<sup>3</sup>Patches.

<sup>4</sup>Bodices.

<sup>5</sup>Tortured.

<sup>6</sup>A proverbial expression for false appearances.

<sup>7</sup>A proverbial expression for pride.

Yet, although I would have thee precise in keeping these precepts, yet would I have thee to avoid solitariness—that breeds melancholy; melancholy, madness; madness, mischief and utter desolation. Have ever some faithful fere<sup>1</sup> with whom thou mayest communicate thy counsels: some Pylades to encourage Orestes, some Damon to release Pythias, some Scipio to recure<sup>2</sup> Lælius. Phyllis in wandering the woods hanged herself; Asiarchus, forsaking company, spoiled himself with his own bodkin;<sup>3</sup> Biarus, a Roman, more wise than fortunate, being alone, destroyed himself with a potsherd. Beware solitariness. But, although I would have thee use company for thy recreation, yet would I have thee always to leave the company of those that accompany thy lady; yea, if she have any jewel of thine in her custody, rather lose it than go for it, lest in seeking to recover a trifle thou renew thine old trouble. Be not curious to curl thy hair, nor careful to be neat in thine apparel; be not prodigal of thy gold nor precise in thy going; be not like the Englishman, which preferreth every strange fashion before the use of his country; be thou dissolute,<sup>4</sup> lest thy lady think thee foolish in framing thyself to every fashion for her sake. Believe not their oaths and solemn protestations, their exorcisms and conjurations, their tears which they have at commandment, their alluring looks, their treading on the toe, their unsavory toys.

Let every one loathe his lady and be ashamed to be her servant. It is riches and ease that nourisheth affection; it is play, wine, and wantonness that feedeth a lover as fat as a fool; refrain from all such meats as shall provoke thine appetite to lust, and all such means as may allure thy mind to folly. Take clear water for strong wine, brown bread for fine manchet,<sup>5</sup> beef and brewis<sup>6</sup> for quails and partridge; for ease, labor; for pleasure, pain; for surfeiting, hunger; for sleep, watching; for the fellowship of ladies, the company of philosophers. If thou say to me, "Physician, heal thyself," I answer that I am meetly well purged of that disease; and yet was I never more willing to cure myself than to comfort my friend. And, seeing the cause that made in me so cold a devotion should make in thee also as frozen a desire, I hope thou wilt be as ready to provide a salve as thou wast hasty in seeking a sore. And yet, Philautus, I would not that all women should take pepper in the nose,<sup>7</sup> in that I have disclosed the legerdemains of a few, for well I know none will wince unless she be galled, neither any be offended unless she be guilty. Therefore I earnestly desire thee that thou show this cooling card to none except thou show also this my defence to them all. For, although I weigh nothing the ill will of light housewives, yet would I be loath to lose the good will of honest matrons. Thus, being ready to go to Athens, and ready there to entertain thee whensoever thou shalt repair thither, I bid thee farewell, and fly women.

Thine ever,

EUPHUES.

<sup>1</sup>Comrade.

<sup>2</sup>Recover.

<sup>3</sup>Small dagger.

<sup>4</sup>Disheveled.

<sup>5</sup>The finest white bread.

<sup>6</sup>Broth obtained from boiling salted beef.

<sup>7</sup>Take offense.

CHRISTOPHER MARLOWE (1564-1593)

Marlowe was born at Canterbury on 6 February, 1564. In 1579 he entered the King's School at Canterbury, and two years later passed thence to Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. He was graduated B. A. in 1584, M. A. in 1587. Beyond these few external facts our knowledge of his life is confused and uncertain. A considerable structure has been built on the foundation of some contemporary allusions, but the right interpretation of these is in reality a delicate matter which perhaps will always be open to question. It is possible that he served for a short time as a soldier in the Low Countries. It is known that he was associated more or less closely with a small group of men who were interested in the new birth of science which was one phase of the Renaissance, and interested in religious problems turned up by the revolt of philosophy and science against scholasticism. After his death he was charged with atheism, perhaps because of his connection with this group of men, perhaps because of wild utterances of his own such as, one supposes, would have been characteristic of his temperament. It is probable enough that Marlowe held opinions which in his day would have been regarded as heterodox; the charge of atheism, however, rests on no conclusive evidence and should not be taken very seriously. Tradition has it that Marlowe's life was pronouncedly dissolute and that the manner of his death was in keeping with his life. According to some reports he was stabbed by a servant at a tavern in Deptford in the course of a quarrel over a mistress. But though he did die of a wound received at Deptford, the attendant circumstances are not really known.

Marlowe's Tamburlaine, Part I, was performed in 1587, Doctor Faustus probably in 1588, and The Jew of Malta in 1589. In these three plays and in Tamburlaine, Part II, and Edward II he wrote such poetry as England had not before known. To a lofty and intense imagination he united a command of language and a skill in versification which put him easily above the other dramatists who preceded Shakespeare. He wrote his plays in blank verse, and with such mastery that he established it as the verse of Elizabethan tragedy. And in the pictures he drew, in Tamburlaine of the craving for universal political power, in Doctor Faustus of the craving for unlimited power got through knowledge, in The Jew of Malta of the craving for boundless wealth, he exhibited an important—if not indeed the central—aspect of the Renaissance, with its sudden accession of unbounded confidence in human capacity and its corresponding expansion of desires.

THE TRAGICAL HISTORY OF DOCTOR FAUSTUS<sup>1</sup>

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ

THE POPE.	SCHOLARS, FRIARS,
CARDINAL OF LOR-	and ATTENDANTS.
RAIN.
THE EMPEROR OF	DUCHESS OF VAN-
GERMANY.	HOLT.

DUKE OF VANHOLT.	LUCIFER.
FAUSTUS.	BELZEBUB.
VALDES,	MEPHISTOPHILIS.
} friends	GOOD ANGEL.
} to	EVIL ANGEL.
} FAUS-	THE SEVEN DEADLY
CORNELIUS,	SINS.
WAGNER, servant to	DEVILS.
FAUSTUS.	SPIRITS in the shapes
CLOWN.	of ALEXANDER THE
ROBIN.	GREAT, of his PARA-
RALPH.	MOUR, and of
VINTNER.	HELEN.
HORSE-COURSER.	CHORUS.
A KNIGHT.
AN OLD MAN.

Enter CHORUS

Chorus. Not marching now in fields of Thrasymene,
Where Mars did mate<sup>2</sup> the Carthaginians;

<sup>2</sup>Pit himself against.

<sup>1</sup>The earliest edition of Doctor Faustus extant is the quarto of 1604, on which the present reprint is based. In 1616 and in 1663 appeared versions which differ widely from the text of 1604, but the generally accepted opinion is that the earliest version of the play is the one nearest to what Marlowe wrote. The German Faustbuch, as it is usually called, in which the legend of Faustus first appeared in print, was published at Frankfurt in 1587. It instantly attained wide popularity, and from it Marlowe drew the material for his play. There is difficulty in the question whether he used the German book or had access to a manuscript translation (the English translation was apparently not printed before 1590 at the earliest); the latter supposition, however, is the more probable one.

Nor sporting in the dalliance of love,
 In courts of kings where state is over-
 turned;
 Nor in the pomp of proud audacious deeds,
 Intends our Muse to vaunt her heavenly
 verse:
 Only this, gentlemen,—we must perform
 The form of Faustus' fortunes, good or bad:
 To patient judgments we appeal our
 plaud,
 And speak for Faustus in his infancy.
 Now is he born, his parents base of stock,
 In Germany, within a town called Rhodes:<sup>1</sup>
 Of riper years, to Wertenberg he went,
 Whereas his kinsmen chiefly brought him
 up.
 So soon he profits in divinity,
 The fruitful plot of scholarship graced,<sup>2</sup>
 That shortly he was graced with doctor's
 name,
 Excelling all whose sweet delight disputes
 In heavenly matters of theology;
 Till swol'n with cunning, of a self-conceit,
 His waxen wings did mount above his reach,
 And, melting, heavens conspired his overthrow;
 For, falling to a devilish exercise,
 And glutt[ed] [now] with learning's golden gifts,
 He surfeits upon curséd necromancy;
 Nothing so sweet as magic is to him,
 Which he prefers before his chiefest bliss:
 And this the man that in his study sits.

[Exit.

FAUSTUS discovered in his study.

Faust. Settle thy studies, Faustus, and begin To sound the depth of that thou wilt profess:<sup>3</sup>
 Having commenced, be a divine in show,
 Yet level at the end of every art,
 And live and die in Aristotle's works.
 Sweet Analytics,<sup>4</sup> 'tis thou hast ravished
 me!

Bene disserere est finis logices.<sup>5</sup>

Is to dispute well logic's chiefest end?

<sup>1</sup>Roda, not far from Jena.

<sup>2</sup>I. e., gracing.

<sup>3</sup>Teach.

<sup>4</sup>Logic.

<sup>5</sup>To argue well is the end of logic.

Affords this art no greater miracle?
 Then read no more; thou hast attained
 that end:

A greater subject fitteth Faustus' wit:
 Bid ὄν και μὴ ὄν<sup>6</sup> farewell; Galen come,
 Seeing, Ubi desinit philosophus, ibi incipit
medicus.<sup>7</sup>

Be a physician, Faustus; heap up gold,
 And be eternized for some wondrous cure:
Summum bonum medicinæ sanitas,<sup>8</sup>

The end of physic is our body's health.
 Why, Faustus, hast thou not attained that end?

Is not thy common talk sound aphorisms?
 Are not thy bills<sup>9</sup> hung up as monuments, Whereby whole cities have escaped the plague,

And thousand desperate maladies been eased?

Yet art thou still but Faustus, and a man.
 Couldst thou make men to live eternally,
 Or, being dead, raise them to life again,
 Then this profession were to be esteemed.
 Physic, farewell! Where is Justinian?

[Reads.

Si una eademque res legatur duobus, alter
rem, alter valorem rei, etc.<sup>10</sup>

A pretty case of paltry legacies! [Reads.
Exhereditare filium non potest pater, nisi,
etc.<sup>11</sup>

Such is the subject of the institute,
 And universal body of the law:
 This study fits a mercenary drudge,
 Who aims at nothing but external trash;
 Too servile and illiberal for me.
 When all is done, divinity is best:
 Jerome's Bible, Faustus, view it well.

[Reads.

Stipendium peccati mors est. Ha! Stipen- dium, etc.

The reward of sin is death: that's hard.

[Reads.

Si peccasse negamus, fallimur, et nulla est
in nobis veritas;

<sup>6</sup>Being and not being (an Aristotelian phrase).

<sup>7</sup>Where the philosopher leaves off the physician begins.

<sup>8</sup>Translated in the following line. Other passages in Latin translated in the text are left without note.

<sup>9</sup>Pronouncements.

<sup>10</sup>If one and the same thing is willed to two persons, one receives the thing, the other the value of the thing,
etc.

<sup>11</sup>A father cannot disinherit his son, unless, etc.

If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and there's no truth in us.
Why, then, belike we must sin, and so consequently die:

Ay, we must die an everlasting death.
What doctrine call you this, Che sera, sera,
What will be, shall be? Divinity, adieu!
These metaphysics of magicians,
And necromantic books are heavenly;
Lines, circles, scenes, letters, and characters;

Ay, these are those that Faustus most desires.

O, what a world of profit and delight,
Of power, of honor, of omnipotence,
Is promised to the studious artisan!
All things that move between the quiet poles

Shall be at my command: emperors and kings

Are but obeyed in their several provinces,
Nor can they raise the wind, or rend the clouds;

But his dominion that exceeds in this,
Stretcheth as far as doth the mind of man;
A sound magician is a mighty god:

Here, Faustus, try thy brains to gain a deity.

Enter WAGNER.

Wagner, commend me to my dearest friends,

The German Valdes and Cornelius;
Request them earnestly to visit me.

Wag. I will, sir. [Exit.]

Faust. Their conference will be a greater help to me

Than all my labors, plod I ne'er so fast.

Enter GOOD ANGEL and EVIL ANGEL.

G. Ang. O, Faustus, lay thy damnéd book aside,

And gaze not on it, lest it tempt thy soul,
And heap God's heavy wrath upon thy head!

Read, read the Scriptures:—that is blasphemy.

E. Ang. Go forward, Faustus, in that famous art

Wherein all Nature's treasure is contained:
Be thou on earth as Jove is in the sky,
Lord and commander of these elements.

[Exeunt Angels.]

Faust. How am I glutted with conceit of this!
Shall I make spirits fetch me what I please,

Resolve me of all ambiguities,
Perform what desperate enterprise I will?
I'll have them fly to India for gold,
Ransack the ocean for orient pearl,
And search all corners of the new-found world

For pleasant fruits and princely delicates;
I'll have them read me strange philosophy,
And tell the secrets of all foreign kings;
I'll have them wall all Germany with brass,
And make swift Rhine circle fair Wertenberg;

I'll have them fill the public schools with silk,

Wherewith the students shall be bravely clad;

I'll levy soldiers with the coin they bring,
And chase the Prince of Parma from our land,

And reign sole king of all the provinces;
Yea, stranger engines for the brunt of war,
Than was the fiery keel at Antwerp's bridge,

I'll make my servile spirits to invent.

Enter VALDES and CORNELIUS.

Come, German Valdes and Cornelius,
And make me blest with your sage conference.

Valdes, sweet Valdes, and Cornelius,
Know that your words have won me at the last

To practise magic and concealed arts:
Yet not your words only, but mine own fantasy,

That will receive no object; for my head
But ruminates on necromantic skill.
Philosophy is odious and obscure;

Both law and physic are for petty wits;
Divinity is basest of the three,

Unpleasant, harsh, contemptible, and vile:
'Tis magic, magic, that hath ravished me.
Then, gentle friends, aid me in this attempt;

And I, that have with concise syllogisms
Graveled the pastors of the German church,
And made the flowering pride of Wertenberg

Swarm to my problems, as the infernal spirits

On sweet Musæus when he came to hell,

Will be as cunning as Agrippa was,
Whose shadow made all Europe honor him.
Vald. Faustus, these books, thy wit, and our experience,

Shall make all nations to canonize us.
As Indian Moors<sup>1</sup> obey their Spanish lords,

So shall the subjects of every element
Be always serviceable to us three;
Like lions shall they guard us when we
please;

Like Almain rutters<sup>2</sup> with their horsemen's staves.

Or Lapland giants, trotting by our sides;
Sometimes like women, or unwedded
maids,

Shadowing more beauty in their airy
brows

Than have the white breasts of the queen
of love:

From Venice shall they drag huge argosies,
And from America the golden fleece

That yearly stuffs old Philip's treasury;
If learn'd Faustus will be resolute.

* Faust. Valdes, as resolute am I in this
As thou to live: therefore object it not.

Corn. The miracles that magic will perform
Will make thee vow to study nothing else.
He that is ground in astrology,
Enriched with tongues, well seen in minerals,

Hath all the principles magic doth require:
Then doubt not, Faustus, but to be renowned,

And more frequented for this mystery
Than heretofore the Delphian oracle.

The spirits tell me they can dry the sea,
And fetch the treasure of all foreign wrecks,

Ay, all the wealth that our forefathers hid
Within the massy entrails of the earth:

Then tell me, Faustus, what shall we three want?

Faust. Nothing, Cornelius. O, this cheers
my soul!

Come, show me some demonstrations
magical,

That I may conjure in some lusty grove,
And have these joys in full possession.

Vald. Then haste thee to some solitary
grove,

And bear wise Bacon's<sup>3</sup> and Albertus'
works,

The Hebrew Psalter, and New Testament;
And whatsoever else is requisite

We will inform thee ere our conference cease.

Corn. Valdes, first let him know the words
of art;

And then, all other ceremonies learned,
Faustus may try his cunning by himself.

Vald. First I'll instruct thee in the rudiments,

And then wilt thou be perfecter than I.

Faust. Then come and dine with me, and,
after meat,

We'll canvass every quiddity thereof;

For, ere I sleep, I'll try what I can do:

This night I'll conjure, though I die therefore.

[Exeunt.]

Enter two SCHOLARS.

First Schol. I wonder what's become of Faustus, that was wont to make our schools ring with sic probo.<sup>4</sup>

Sec. Schol. That shall we know, for see, here comes his boy.

Enter WAGNER.

First Schol. How now, sirrah! where's thy master?

Wag. God in heaven knows.

Sec. Schol. Why, dost not thou know?

Wag. Yes, I know; but that follows not.

First Schol. Go to, sirrah! leave your jesting,
and tell us where he is.

Wag. That follows not necessary by force of argument, that you, being licentiates, should stand upon; therefore acknowledge your error, and be attentive.

Sec. Schol. Why, didst thou not say thou knewest?

Wag. Have you any witness on't?

First Schol. Yes, sirrah, I heard you.

Wag. Ask my fellow if I be a thief.

Sec. Schol. Well, you will not tell us?

Wag. Yes, sir, I will tell you; yet, if you were not dunces, you would never ask me such a question, for is not he corpus naturale?<sup>5</sup> and is not that mobile?<sup>6</sup>

<sup>1</sup>American Indians.

<sup>2</sup>Troopers.

<sup>3</sup>Roger Bacon.

<sup>4</sup>Thus I demonstrate.

<sup>5</sup>Natural body.

<sup>6</sup>Movable.

then wherefore should you ask me such a question? But that I am by nature phlegmatic, slow to wrath, and prone to lechery (to love, I would say), it were not for you to come within forty foot of the place of execution, although I do not doubt to see you both hanged the next sessions. Thus having triumphed over you, I will set my countenance like a precisian,<sup>1</sup> and begin to speak thus:—Truly, my dear brethren, my master is within at dinner, with Valdes and Cornelius, as this wine, if it could speak, would inform your worships: and so, the Lord bless you, preserve you, and keep you, my dear brethren, my dear brethren! [Exit.

First Schol. Nay, then, I fear he has fallen into that damned art for which they two are infamous through the world.

Sec. Schol. Were he a stranger, and not allied to me, yet should I grieve for him. But, come, let us go and inform the Rector, and see if he by his grave counsel can reclaim him.

First Schol. O, but I fear me nothing can reclaim him!

Sec. Schol. Yet let us try what we can do. [Exeunt.

Enter FAUSTUS to conjure.

Faust. Now that the gloomy shadow of the earth,

Longing to view Orion's drizzling look,
Leaps from th' antarctic world unto the sky,

And dims the welkin with her pitchy breath,

Faustus, begin thine incantations,
And try if devils will obey thy hest,
Seeing thou hast prayed and sacrificed to them.

Within this circle is Jehovah's name,
Forward and backward anagrammatized,
Th' abbreviated names of holy saints,
Figures of every adjunct to the heavens,
And characters of signs and erring stars,
By which the spirits are enforced to rise:
Then fear not, Faustus, but be resolute,
And try the uttermost magic can perform.—

Sint mihi dei Acherontis propitii! Valeat

<sup>1</sup>I.e., a puritan.

numen triplex Jehovah! Ignei, aërii, aquatani spiritus, salvete! Orientis princeps Belzebub, inferni ardentis monarcha, et Demogorgon, propitiamus vos, ut appareat et surgat Mephistophilis; quid tu moraris? Per Jehovah, Gehennam, et consecratam aquam quam nunc spargo, signumque crucis quod nunc facio, et per vota nostra, ipse nunc surgat nobis dicatus Mephistophilis!<sup>2</sup>

Enter MEPHISTOPHILIS.

I charge thee to return. and change thy shape;

Thou art too ugly to attend on me:
Go, and return an old Franciscan friar;
That holy shape becomes a devil best.

[Exit Mephistophilis.

I see there's virtue in my heavenly words:
Who would not be proficient in this art?
How pliant is this Mephistophilis,
Full of obedience and humility!
Such is the force of magic and my spells:
Now, Faustus, thou art conjurer laureate,
That canst command great Mephistophilis:

Quin regis Mephistophilis fratris imagine.<sup>3</sup>

Re-enter MEPHISTOPHILIS like a Franciscan friar.

Meph. Now, Faustus, what wouldst thou have me do?

Faust. I charge thee wait upon me whilst I live,

To do whatever Faustus shall command,
Be it to make the moon drop from her sphere,

Or the ocean to overwhelm the world.

Meph. I am a servant to great Lucifer,
And may not follow thee without his leave:
No more than he commands must we perform.

Faust. Did not he charge thee to appear to me?

Meph. No, I came hither of mine own accord.

<sup>2</sup>Gods of Acheron, grant me your aid! The triple deity of Jehovah assist me! Spirits of fire, air, water, all hail! Belzebub, Prince of the East, ruler of the fiery realms, and Demogorgon, I supplicate you, that Mephistophilis may rise and appear; why do you delay? By Jehovah, Gehenna, and the holy water I now sprinkle, and the sign of the cross I now make, and by my prayer, may Mephistophilis now called by me arise!

<sup>3</sup>Verily you have power in the image of your brother Mephistophilis.

Faust. Did not my conjuring speeches raise thee? speak.

Meph. That was the cause, but yet per accidens;<sup>1</sup>

For, when we hear one rack the name of God,

Abjure the Scriptures and his Savior Christ,

We fly, in hope, to get his glorious soul; Nor will we come, unless he use such means

Whereby he is in danger to be damned.

Therefore the shortest cut for conjuring Is stoutly to abjure the Trinity,

And pray devoutly to the prince of hell.

Faust. So Faustus hath Already done; and holds this principle,

There is no chief but only Belzebub;

To whom Faustus doth dedicate himself.

This word "damnation" terrifies not him,

For he confounds hell in Elysium:

His ghost be with the old philosophers!

But, leaving these vain trifles of men's souls,

Tell me what is that Lucifer thy lord?

Meph. Arch-regent and commander of all spirits.

Faust. Was not that Lucifer an angel once?

Meph. Yes, Faustus, and most dearly loved of God.

Faust. How comes it, then, that he is prince of devils?

Meph. O, by aspiring pride and insolence;

For which God threw him from the face of heaven.

Faust. And what are you that live with Lucifer?

Meph. Unhappy spirits that fell with Lucifer,

Conspired against our God with Lucifer, And are for ever damned with Lucifer.

Faust. Where are you damned?

Meph. In hell.

Faust. How comes it, then, that thou art out of hell?

Meph. Why, this is hell, nor am I out of it. Think'st thou that I, who saw the face of God,

And tasted the eternal joys of heaven,

Am not tormented with ten thousand hells,

In being deprived of everlasting bliss?

O, Faustus, leave these frivolous demands, Which strike a terror to my fainting soul!

Faust. What, is great Mephistophilis so passionate

For being deprived of the joys of heaven?

Learn thou of Faustus manly fortitude,

And scorn those joys thou never shalt possess.

Go bear these tidings to great Lucifer:

Seeing Faustus hath incurred eternal death

By desperate thoughts against Jove's deity,

Say, he surrenders up to him his soul,

So he will spare him four-and-twenty years,

Letting him live in all voluptuousness;

Having thee ever to attend on me,

To give me whatsoever I shall ask,

To tell me whatsoever I demand,

To slay mine enemies, and aid my friends,

And always be obedient to my will.

Go and return to mighty Lucifer,

And meet me in my study at midnight,

And then resolve me of thy master's mind.

Meph. I will, Faustus. [Exit.]

Faust. Had I as many souls as there be stars,

I'd give them all for Mephistophilis.

By him I'll be great emperor of the world,

And make a bridge thorough the moving air,

To pass the ocean with a band of men;

I'll join the hills that bind the Afric shore,

And make that country continent to Spain,

And both contributory to my crown:

The Emperor shall not live but by my leave,

Nor any potentate of Germany.

Now that I have obtained what I desired,

I'll live in speculation<sup>2</sup> of this art,

Till Mephistophilis return again. [Exit.]

Enter WAGNER and CLOWN.

Wag. Sirrah boy, come hither.

Clown. How, boy! swowns, boy! I hope you have seen many boys with such pickadevaunts<sup>3</sup> as I have: boy, quotha!

Wag. Tell me, sirrah, hast thou any comings in?

Clown. Ay, and goings out too; you may see else.

Wag. Alas, poor slave! see how poverty jesteth in his nakedness! the villain is bare and out of service, and so hungry that I know he would give his soul to the devil for a shoulder of mutton, though it were blood-raw.

<sup>2</sup>Study.

<sup>3</sup>Beards trimmed to a sharp point.

<sup>1</sup>By accident.

Clown. How! my soul to the devil for a shoulder of mutton, though 'twere blood-raw! not so, good friend: by'r lady, I had need have it well roasted, and good sauce to it, if I pay so dear.

Wag. Well, wilt thou serve me, and I'll make thee go like Qui mihi discipulus?<sup>1</sup>

Clown. How, in verse?

Wag. No, sirrah; in beaten silk and staves-acre.<sup>2</sup>

Clown. How, how, knaves-acre!<sup>3</sup> ay, I thought that was all the land his father left him. Do you hear? I would be sorry to rob you of your living.

Wag. Sirrah, I say in staves-acre.

Clown. Oho, oho, staves-acre! why, then, belike, if I were your man I should be full of vermin.

Wag. So thou shalt, whether thou beest with me or no. But, sirrah, leave your jesting, and bind yourself presently unto me for seven years, or I'll turn all the lice about thee into familiars, and they shall tear thee in pieces.

Clown. Do you hear, sir? you may save that labor; they are too familiar with me already: swowns, they are as bold with my flesh as if they had paid for their meat and drink.

Wag. Well, do your hear, sirrah? hold, take these guilders. [Gives money.]

Clown. Gridirons! what be they?

Wag. Why, French crowns.

Clown. Mass, but for the name of French crowns, a man were as good have as many English counters. And what should I do with these?

Wag. Why, now, sirrah, thou art at an hour's warning, whensoever and wheresoever the devil shall fetch thee.

Clown. No, no; here, take your gridirons again.

Wag. Truly, I'll none of them.

Clown. Truly, but you shall.

Wag. Bear witness I gave them him.

Clown. Bear witness I give them you again.

<sup>1</sup>Who will be my pupil?

<sup>2</sup>Species of larkspur, used for destroying vermin.

<sup>3</sup>Name given to Poultney Street, London.

Wag. Well, I will cause two devils presently to fetch thee away—Baliol and Belcher!

Clown. Let your Baliol and your Belcher come here, and I'll knock them, they were never so knocked since they were devils: say I should kill one of them, what would folks say? "Do ye see yonder tall fellow in the round slop?<sup>4</sup> he has killed the devil." So I should be called Kill-devil all the parish over.

Enter two DEVILS; and the CLOWN runs up and down crying.

Wag. Baliol and Belcher,—spirits, away! [Exeunt Devils.]

Clown. What, are they gone? a vengeance on them! they have vile long nails. There was a he-devil and a she-devil: I'll tell you how you shall know them; all he-devils has horns, and all she-devils has clifts and cloven feet.

Wag. Well, sirrah, follow me.

Clown. But, do you hear? if I should serve you, would you teach me to raise up Banios and Belcheos?

Wag. I will teach thee to turn thyself to anything, to a dog, or a cat, or a mouse, or a rat, or anything.

Clown. How! a Christian fellow to a dog, or a cat, a mouse, or a rat! no, no, sir; if you turn me into anything, let it be in the likeness of a little pretty frisking flea, that I may be here and there and everywhere: O, I'll tickle the pretty wenches' plackets! I'll be amongst them, i'faith.

Wag. Well, sirrah, come.

Clown. But, do you hear, Wagner?

Wag. How!—Baliol and Belcher!

Clown. O Lord! I pray, sir, let Baliol and Belcher go sleep.

Wag. Villain, call me Master Wagner, and let thy left eye be diametarily<sup>5</sup> fixed upon my right heel, with quasi vestigiis nostris insistere.<sup>6</sup> [Exit.]

Clown. God forgive me, he speaks Dutch fustian.

Well, I'll follow him; I'll serve him, that's flat. [Exit.]

<sup>4</sup>Wide knickerbockers.

<sup>5</sup>Diametrically.

<sup>6</sup>As if to follow in my footsteps.

FAUSTUS discovered in his study.

Faust. Now, Faustus, must

Thou needs be damned, and canst thou not be saved:

What boots it, then, to think of God or
heaven?

Away with such vain fancies, and despair;
Despair in God, and trust in Belzebub:

Now go not backward; no, Faustus, be resolute:

Why waver'st thou? O, something soundeth in mine ears,

"Abjure this magic, turn to God again!"

Ay, and Faustus will turn to God again.

To God? he loves thee not;

The god thou serv'st is thine own appetite,
Wherein is fixed the love of Belzebub:

To him I'll build an altar and a church,
And offer lukewarm blood of new-born babes.

Enter GOOD ANGEL and EVIL ANGEL.

G. Ang. Sweet Faustus, leave that execrable
art.

Faust. Contrition, prayer, repentance—what
of them?

G. Ang. O, they are means to bring thee unto
heaven!

E. Ang. Rather illusions, fruits of lunacy,
That make men foolish that do trust them
most.

G. Ang. Sweet Faustus, think of heaven and heavenly things.

E. Ang. No, Faustus; think of honor and of wealth. [Exeunt Angels.]

Faust. Of Wealth!

Why, the signiory of Emden shall be mine.
When Mephistophilis shall stand by me,
What god can hurt thee, Faustus? thou art safe:

Cast no more doubts.—Come, Mephisto-
philis,

And bring glad tidings from great Lucifer;—

Is't not midnight?—come, Mephistophilis,
Veni, veni Mephistophile!<sup>1</sup>

Enter MEPHISTOPHILIS.

Now tell me what says Lucifer, thy lord?

Meph. That I shall wait on Faustus whilst he lives,

So he will buy my service with his soul.

Faust. Already Faustus hath hazarded that for thee.

Meph. But, Faustus, thou must bequeath it solemnly,

And write a deed of gift with thine own
blood;

For that security craves great Lucifer.

If thou deny it, I will back to hell.

Faust. Stay, Mephistophilis, and tell me,
what good will my soul do thy lord?

Meph. Enlarge his kingdom.

Faust. Is that the reason why he tempts us
thus?

Meph. Solamen miseris socios habuisse doloris.<sup>2</sup>

Faust. Why, have you any pain, that torture others?

Meph. As great as have the human souls of
men.

But, tell me, Faustus, shall I have thy soul?

And I will be thy slave, and wait on thee,
And give thee more than thou hast wit to ask.

Faust. Ay, Mephistophilis, I give it thee.

Meph. Then, Faustus, stab thy arm courageously,

And bind thy soul, that at some certain
day

Great Lucifer may claim it as his own;
And then be thou as great as Lucifer.

Faust. [Stabbing his arm] Lo, Mephistophilis, for love of thee,

I cut mine arm, and with my proper blood
Assure my soul to be great Lucifer's,

Chief lord and regent of perpetual night!

View here the blood that trickles from mine arm,

And let it be propitious for my wish.

Meph. But, Faustus, thou must Write it in manner of a deed of gift.

Faust. Ay, so I will [Writes]. But, Mephis-
tophilis,

My blood congeals, and I can write no
more.

Meph. I'll fetch thee fire to dissolve it straight. [Exit.]

Faust. What might the staying of my blood portend?

Is it unwilling I should write this bill?

Why streams it not, that I may write afresh?

<sup>1</sup>Come, come Mephistophilis!

<sup>2</sup>Misery loves company.

Faustus gives to thee his soul: ah, there it stayed!

Why shouldst thou not? is not thy soul thine own?

Then write again, Faustus gives to thee his soul.

Re-enter MEPHISTOPHILIS with a chafer of coals.

Meph. Here's fire; come, Faustus, set it on.

Faust. So, now the blood begins to clear again;

Now will I make an end immediately.

[Writes.

Meph. O, what will not I do to obtain his soul!

[Aside.

Faust. Consummatum est,<sup>1</sup> this bill is ended, And Faustus hath bequeathed his soul to Lucifer.

But what is this inscription on mine arm?

Homo, fuge,<sup>2</sup> whither should I fly?

If unto God, he'll throw me down to hell.

My senses are deceived; here's nothing writ:—

I see it plain; here in this place is writ,

Homo, fuge: yet shall not Faustus fly.

Meph. I'll fetch him somewhat to delight his mind.

[Aside, and then exit.

Re-enter MEPHISTOPHILIS with DEVILS, who give crowns and rich apparel to FAUSTUS, dance, and then depart.

Faust. Speak, Mephistophilis, what means this show?

Meph. Nothing, Faustus, but to delight thy mind withal,

And to show thee what magic can perform.

Faust. But may I raise up spirits when I please?

Meph. Ay, Faustus, and do greater things than these.

Faust. Then there's enough for a thousand souls.

Here, Mephistophilis, receive this scroll,

A deed of gift of body and of soul:

But yet conditionally that thou perform

All articles prescribed between us both.

Meph. Faustus, I swear by hell and Lucifer To effect all promises between us made!

Faust. Then hear me read them. [Reads.]

On these conditions following. First that Faustus may be a spirit in form and substance. Secondly, that Mephistophilis shall be his servant, and at his command. Thirdly, that Mephistophilis shall do for him, and bring him whatsoever he desires. Fourthly, that he shall be in his chamber or house invisible. Lastly, that he shall appear to the said John Faustus, at all times, in what form or shape soever he please. I, John Faustus, of Wertenberg, Doctor, by these presents, do give both body and soul to Lucifer, prince of the East, and his minister Mephistophilis; and furthermore grant unto them, that, twenty-four years being expired, the articles above-written inviolate, full power to fetch or carry the said John Faustus, body and soul, flesh, blood, or goods, into their habitation wheresoever. By me, John Faustus.

Meph. Speak, Faustus, do you deliver this as your deed?

Faust. Ay, take it, and the devil give thee good on't!

Meph. Now, Faustus, ask what thou wilt.

Faust. First will I question with thee about hell.

Tell me, where is the place that men call hell?

Meph. Under the heavens.

Faust. Ay, but whereabouts?

Meph. Within the bowels of these elements, Where we are tortured and remain for ever:

Hell hath no limits, nor is circumscribed In one self place; for where we are is hell, And where hell is, there must we ever be:

And, to conclude, when all the world dissolves,

And every creature shall be purified,

All places shall be hell that are not heaven.

Faust. Come, I think hell's a fable.

Meph. Ay, think so still, till experience change thy mind.

Faust. Why, think'st thou, then, that Faustus shall be damned?

Meph. Ay, of necessity, for here's the scroll Wherein thou hast given thy soul to Lucifer.

Faust. Ay, and body too: but what of that?

Think'st thou that Faustus is so fond<sup>3</sup> to imagine

<sup>1</sup>It is finished.

<sup>2</sup>O man, flee!

<sup>3</sup>Foolish.

That, after this life, there is any pain?
Tush, these are trifles and mere old wives' tales.

Meph. But, Faustus, I am an instance to prove the contrary,

For I am damned, and am now in hell.

Faust. How! now in hell!

Nay, an this be hell, I'll willingly be damned here:

What! walking, disputing, etc.

But, leaving off this, let me have a wife,

The fairest maid in Germany;

For I am wanton and lascivious,

And cannot live without a wife.

Meph. How! a wife!

I prithee, Faustus, talk not of a wife.

Faust. Nay, sweet Mephistophilis, fetch me one, for I will have one.

Meph. Well, thou wilt have one? Sit there till I come: I'll fetch thee a wife in the devil's name. [Exit.]

Re-enter MEPHISTOPHILIS with a DEVIL dressed like a WOMAN, with fireworks.

• Meph. Tell me, Faustus, how dost thou like thy wife?

Faust. A plague on her for a hot whore!

Meph. Tut, Faustus,

Marriage is but a ceremonial toy;

If thou lovest me, think no more of it.

I'll cull thee out the fairest courtesans,

And bring them every morning to thy bed:

She whom thine eye shall like, thy heart shall have,

Be she as chaste as was Penelope,

As wise as Saba,<sup>1</sup> or as beautiful

As was bright Lucifer before his fall.

Hold, take this book, peruse it thoroughly:

[Gives book.]

The iterating of these lines brings gold;

The framing of this circle on the ground

Brings whirlwinds, tempests, thunder, and lightning;

Pronounce this thrice devoutly to thyself,

And men in armor shall appear to thee,

Ready to execute what thou desir'st.

Faust. Thanks, Mephistophilis: yet fain would I have a book wherein I might behold all spells and incantations, that I might raise up spirits when I please.

Meph. Here they are in this book.

[Turns to them.]

Faust. Now would I have a book where I might see all characters and planets of the heavens, that I might know their motions and dispositions.

Meph. Here they are too. [Turns to them.]

Faust. Nay, let me have one book more,—and then I have done,—wherein I might see all plants, herbs, and trees, that grow upon the earth.

Meph. Here they be.

Faust. O, thou art deceived.

Meph. Tut, I warrant thee. [Turns to them.]

Faust. When I behold the heavens, then I repent,

And curse thee, wicked Mephistophilis, Because thou hast deprived me of those joys.

Meph. Why, Faustus,

Thinkest thou heaven is such a glorious thing?

I tell thee, 'tis not half so fair as thou,

Or any man that breathes on earth.

Faust. How prov'st thou that?

Meph. 'Twas made for man, therefore is man more excellent.

Faust. If it were made for man, 'twas made for me:

I will renounce this magic and repent.

Enter GOOD ANGEL and EVIL ANGEL.

G. Ang. Faustus, repent; yet God will pity thee.

E. Ang. Thou art a spirit; God cannot pity thee.

Faust. Who buzzeth in mine ears I am a spirit?

Be I a devil, yet God may pity me;

Ay, God will pity me, if I repent.

E. Ang. Ay, but Faustus never shall repent.

[Exeunt Angels.]

Faust. My heart's so hardened, I cannot repent:

Scarce can I name salvation, faith, or heaven,

But fearful echoes thunder in mine ears,

"Faustus, thou art damned!" then swords, and knives,

Poison, guns, halters, and envenomed steel

Are laid before me to despatch myself;

And long ere this I should have slain myself,

Had not sweet pleasure conquered deep despair.

<sup>1</sup>Queen of Sheba.

Have not I made blind Homer sing to me
Of Alexander's love and Cænon's death?
And hath not he, that built the walls of Thebes

With ravishing sound of his melodious
harp,

Made music with my Mephistophilis?
Why should I die, then, or basely despair!
I am resolved; Faustus shall ne'er repent.—

Come, Mephistophilis, let us dispute again,
And argue of divine astrology.

Tell me, are there many heavens above
the moon?

Are all celestial bodies but one globe,
As is the substance of this centric earth?

Meph. As are the elements, such are the spheres,

Mutually folded in each other's orb,

And, Faustus,

All jointly move upon one axletree,

Whose terminus is termed the world's wide pole;

Nor are the names of Saturn, Mars, or Jupiter

Feigned, but are erring stars.

Faust. But, tell me, have they all one motion, both situ et tempore?<sup>1</sup>

Meph. All jointly move from east to west in twenty-four hours upon the poles of the world; but differ in their motion
upon the poles of the zodiac.

Faust. Tush,

These slender trifles Wagner can decide:

Hath Mephistophilis no greater skill?

Who knows not the double motion of the planets?

The first is finished in a natural day;

The second thus; as Saturn in thirty years;
Jupiter in twelve; Mars in four; the Sun, Venus, and Mercury in a year; the Moon in twenty-eight days. Tush, these are freshmen's suppositions. But,
tell me, hath every sphere a dominion or intelligentia?

Meph. Ay.

Faust. How many heavens or spheres are
there?

Meph. Nine; the seven planets, the firmament, and the empyreal heaven.

Faust. Well resolve me in this question; why have we not conjunctions, oppositions,

aspects, eclipses, all at one time, but in some years we have more, in some less?

Meph. Per inæqualem motum respectu totius.<sup>2</sup>

Faust. Well, I am answered. Tell me who made the world?

Meph. I will not.

Faust. Sweet Mephistophilis, tell me.

Meph. Move me not, for I will not tell thee.

Faust. Villain, have I not bound thee to tell me anything?

Meph. Ay, that is not against our kingdom;
but this is.

Think thou on hell, Faustus, for thou art damned.

Faust. Think, Faustus, upon God that made
the world.

Meph. Remember this. [Exit.]

Faust. Ay, go, accurséd spirit, to ugly hell!
'Tis thou hast damned distressed Faustus'
soul.

Is't not too late?

Re-enter GOOD ANGEL and EVIL ANGEL.

E. Ang. Too late.

G. Ang. Never too late, if Faustus can repent.

E. Ang. If thou repent, devils shall tear thee in pieces.

G. Ang. Repent, and they shall never raze thy skin. [Exeunt Angels.]

Faust. Ah, Christ, my Savior,

Seek to save distressed Faustus' soul!

Enter LUCIFER, BELZEBUB, and MEPHIS-TOPHILIS.

Luc. Christ cannot save thy soul, for he is just:

There's none but I have interest in the same.

Faust. O, who art thou that look'st so terrible?

Luc. I am Lucifer,

And this is my companion-prince in hell.

Faust. O, Faustus, they are come to fetch away thy soul!

Luc. We come to tell thee thou dost injure
us;

Thou talk'st of Christ, contrary to thy promise:

Thou shouldst not think of God: think of
the devil,

And of his dam too.

<sup>1</sup>In direction and time.

<sup>2</sup>On account of their unequal motion in relation to the whole.

Faust. Nor will I henceforth: pardon me in this,
And Faustus vows never to look to heaven,
Never to name God, or to pray to Him,
To burn his Scriptures, slay his ministers,
And make my spirits pull his churches down.

Luc. Do so, and we will highly gratify thee.
Faustus, we are come from hell to show thee some pastime: sit down, and thou shalt see all the Seven Deadly Sins appear in their proper shapes.

Faust. That sight will be as pleasing unto me,
As Paradise was to Adam, the first day Of his creation.

Luc. Talk not of Paradise nor creation; but mark this show: talk of the devil, and nothing else.—Come away!

Enter the SEVEN DEADLY SINS.

Now, Faustus, examine them of their several names and dispositions.

Faust. What art thou, the first?

Pride. I am Pride. I disdain to have any parents. I am like to Ovid's flea; I can creep into every corner of a wench; sometimes, like a periwig, I sit upon her brow; or, like a fan of feathers, I kiss her lips; indeed, I do—what do I not? But, fie, what a scent is here! I'll not speak another word, except the ground were perfumed, and covered with cloth of arras.

Faust. What art thou, the second?

Covet. I am Covetousness, begotten of an old churl, in an old leathern bag; and, might I have my wish, I would desire that this house and all the people in it were turned to gold, that I might lock you up in my good chest: O, my sweet gold!

Faust. What art thou, the third?

Wrath. I am Wrath. I had neither father nor mother: I leaped out of a lion's mouth when I was scarce half an hour old; and ever since I have run up and down the world with this case of rapiers, wounding myself when I had nobody to fight withal. I was born in hell; and look to it, for some of you shall be my father.<sup>1</sup>

Faust. What art thou, the fourth?

Envy. I am Envy, begotten of a chimneysweeper and an oyster-wife. I cannot read, and therefore wish all books were burned. I am lean with seeing others eat. O, that there would come a famine through all the world, that all might die, and I live alone! then thou shouldst see how fat I would be. But must thou sit, and I stand? come down, with a vengeance!

Faust. Away, envious rascal!—What art thou, the fifth?

Glut. Who I, sir? I am Gluttony. My parents are all dead, and the devil a penny they have left me, but a bare pension, and that is thirty meals a day, and ten bevers,<sup>2</sup>—a small trifle to suffice nature. O, I come of a royal parentage! my grandfather was a Gammon of Bacon, my grandmother a Hogshead of Claret-wine; my godfathers were these, Peter Pickle-herring and Martin Martlemas-beef; O, but my godmother, she was a jolly gentlewoman, and well-beloved in every good town and city; her name was Mistress Margery March-beer. Now, Faustus, thou hast heard all my progeny; wilt thou bid me to supper?

Faust. No, I'll see thee hanged: thou wilt eat up all my victuals.

Glut. Then the devil choke thee!

Faust. Choke thyself, glutton!—What art thou, the sixth?

Sloth. I am Sloth. I was begotten on a sunny bank, where I have lain ever since; and you have done me great injury to bring me from thence: let me be carried thither again by Gluttony and Lechery. I'll not speak another word for a king's ransom.

Faust. What are you, Mistress Minx, the seventh and last?

Lechery. Who I, sir? I am one that loves an inch of raw mutton better than an ell of fried stock-fish; and the first letter of my name begins with L.

Faust. Away, to hell, to hell!

[Exeunt the Sins.]

Luc. Now, Faustus, how dost thou like this?

Faust. O, this feeds my soul!

Luc. Tut, Faustus, in hell is all manner of delight.

<sup>1</sup>I. e., one of the devils must be my father.

<sup>2</sup>Refreshments between breakfast and dinner.

Faust. O, might I see hell, and return agān,
How happy were I then!

Luc. Thou shalt; I will send for thee at mid-
night.

In meantime take this book; peruse it thoroughly,

And thou shalt turn thyself into what shape thou wilt.

Faust. Great thanks, mighty Lucifer!

This will I keep as chary as my life.

Luc. Farewell, Faustus, and think on the devil.

Faust. Farewell, great Lucifer.

[Exeunt Lucifer and Belzebub.]

Come, Mephistophilis. [Exeunt.]

Enter CHORUS.

Chor. Learnéd Faustus,

To know the secrets of astronomy
Graven in the book of Jove's high firma-
ment,

Did mount himself to scale Olympus' top,
Being seated in a chariot burning bright,
Drawn by the strength of yoky dragons'
necks.

He now is gone to prove cosmography,
And, as I guess, will first arrive in Rome,
To see the Pope and manner of his
court,

And take some part of holy Peter's feast,
That to this day is highly solemnized.

[Exit.]

Enter FAUSTUS and MEPHISTOPHILIS.

Faust. Having now, my good Mephistophilis, Passed with delight the stately town of Trier,<sup>1</sup>

Environed round with airy mountain-tops,
With walls of flint, and deep-entrenchéd lakes,

Not to be won by any conquering prince;
From Paris next, coasting the realm of France,

We saw the river Maine fall into Rhine,
Whose banks are set with groves of fruitful
vines;

Then up to Naples, rich Campania, Whose buildings fair and gorgeous to the eye,

The streets straight forth, and paved with finest brick,

Quarter the town in four equivalents:

There saw we learnéd Maro's<sup>2</sup> golden
tomb,

The way he cut, an English mile in length, Thorough a rock of stone, in one night's space;

From thence to Venice, Padua, and the
rest,

In one of which a sumptuous temple
stands,

That threatens the stars with her aspiring top.
Thus hitherto hath Faustus spent his
time:

But tell me now what resting-place is this?
Hast thou, as erst I did command,

Conducted me within the walls of Rome?

Meph. Faustus, I have; and, because we will not be unprovided, I have taken up his Holiness' privy-chamber for our use.

Faust. I hope his Holiness will bid us welcome.

Meph. Tut, 'tis no matter, man; we'll be bold with his good cheer.

And now, my Faustus, that thou mayst perceive

What Rome containeth to delight thee with,

Know that this city stands upon seven hills

That underprop the groundwork of the
same:

[Just through the midst runs flowing Tiber's stream

With winding banks that cut it in two parts;]

Over the which four stately bridges lean,
That make safe passage to each part of Rome:

Upon the bridge called Ponte Angelo

Erected is a castle passing strong,

Within whose walls such store of ordnance are,

And double cannons framed of carvéd
brass,

As match the days within one complete
year;

Besides the gates, and high pyramidés,
Which Julius Cæsar brought from Africa.

Faust. Now, by the kingdoms of infernal rule,

Of Styx, of Acheron, and the fiery lake

Of ever-burning Phlegethon, I swear

That I do long to see the monuments

<sup>1</sup>Treves.

<sup>2</sup>Virgil, who in the Middle Ages was thought to have been a magician.

And situation of bright-splendent Rome:
Come, therefore, let's away.

Meph. Nay, Faustus, stay: I know you'd fain see the Pope

And take some part of holy Peter's feast,
Where thou shalt see a troop of bald-pate friars,

Whose summum bonum<sup>1</sup> is in belly-cheer.

Faust. Well, I'm content to compass then some sport,

And by their folly make us merriment.

Then charm me, that I

May be invisible, to do what I please,

Unseen of any whilst I stay in Rome.

[Mephistophilis charms him.]

Meph. So, Faustus; now

Do what thou wilt, thou shalt not be discerned.

Sound a Sennet.<sup>2</sup> Enter the POPE and the CARDINAL OF LORRAIN to the banquet, with FRIARS attending.

Pope. My lord of Lorrain, will't please you draw near?

Faust. Fall to, and the devil choke you, an you spare!

Pope. How now! who's that which spake?— Friars, look about.

First Friar. Here's nobody, if it like your Holiness.

Pope. My lord, here is a dainty dish was sent me from the Bishop of Milan.

Faust. I thank you, sir. [Snatches the dish.]

Pope. How now! who's that which snatched the meat from me? will no man look?—
My lord, this dish was sent me from the Cardinal of Florence.

Faust. You say true; I'll ha't.

[Snatches the dish.]

Pope. What, again!—My lord, I'll drink to your grace.

Faust. I'll pledge your grace.

[Snatches the cup.]

C. of Lor. My lord, it may be some ghost, newly crept out of purgatory, come to beg a pardon of your Holiness.

Pope. It may be so.—Friars, prepare a dirge to lay the fury of this ghost.—Once again,
my lord, fall to.

[The Pope crosses himself.]

Faust. What, are you crossing of yourself?

Well, use that trick no more, I would advise you.

[The Pope crosses himself again.]

Well, there's the second time. Aware the third;

I give you fair warning.

[The Pope crosses himself again, and Faustus hits him a box of the ear; and they all run away.]

Come on, Mephistophilis; what shall we do?

Meph. Nay, I know not: we shall be cursed with bell, book, and candle.

Faust. How! bell, book, and candle,—candle, book, and bell,—

Forward and backward, to curse Faustus
to hell!

Anon you shall hear a hog grunt, a calf
bleat, and an ass bray,

Because it is Saint Peter's holiday.

Re-enter all the FRIARS to sing the Dirge.

First Friar. Come, brethren, let's about our business with good devotion.

They sing:

Cursed be he that stole away his Holiness' meat from the table!

maledicat Dominus!<sup>3</sup>

Cursed be he that struck his Holiness a blow on the face!

maledicat Dominus!

Cursed be he that took Friar Sandelo a blow on the pate!

maledicat Dominus!

Cursed be he that disturbeth our holy dirge!
maledicat Dominus!

Cursed be he that took away his Holiness' wine!
maledicat Dominus! Et omnes Sancti!<sup>4</sup>
Amen!

[*Mephistophilis and Faustus beat the Friars, and fling fireworks among them; and so
exeunt.*]

Enter CHORUS.

Chor. When Faustus had with pleasure ta'en
the view

Of rarest things, and royal courts of kings,
He stayed his course, and so returned
home;

Where such as bear his absence but with grief,

<sup>1</sup>Highest good.

<sup>2</sup>Set of notes on trumpet or cornet.

<sup>3</sup>May the Lord curse him.

<sup>4</sup>And all the saints.

I mean his friends and near'st companions,

Did gratulate his safety with kind words,
And in their conference of what befell,
Touching his journey through the world
and air,

They put forth questions of astrology,
Which Faustus answered with such learned
skill

As they admired and wondered at his wit.
Now is his fame spread forth in every land:

Amongst the rest the Emperor is one,
Carolus the Fifth, at whose palace now
Faustus is feasted 'mongst his noblemen.

What there he did, in trial of his art,
I leave untold; your eyes shall see ['t] performed. [Exit.]

Enter ROBIN THE OSTLER, with a book in his
hand.

Robin. O, this is admirable! here I ha' stolen one of Doctor Faustus' conjuring books, and, i'faith, I mean to search some circles for my own use. Now will I make all the maidens in our parish dance at my pleasure, stark naked, before me; and so by that means I shall see more than e'er I felt or saw yet.

Enter RALPH, calling ROBIN.

Ralph. Robin, prithee, come away; there's a gentleman tarries to have his horse, and he would have his things rubbed and made clean: he keeps such a chafing with my mistress about it; and she has set me to look thee out; prithee, come
away.

Robin. Keep out, keep out, or else you are blown up, you are dismembered, Ralph:
keep out, for I am about a roaring piece of work.

Ralph. Come, what doest thou with that same book? thou canst not read?

Robin. Yes, my master and mistress shall find that I can read, he for his forehead, she for her private study; she's born to bear with me, or else my art fails.

Ralph. Why, Robin, what book is that?

Robin. What book! why, the most intolerable book for conjuring that e'er was invented by any brimstone devil.

Ralph. Canst thou conjure with it?

Robin. I can do all these things easily with it; first, I can make thee drunk with hippocras<sup>1</sup> at any tavern in Europe for nothing; that's one of my conjuring

works.

Ralph. Our Master Parson says that's nothing.

Robin. True, Ralph: and more, Ralph, if thou hast any mind to Nan Spit, our kitchen-maid, then turn her and wind her to thy own use, as often as thou wilt,
and at midnight.

Ralph. O, brave, Robin! shall I have Nan Spit, and to mine own use? On that condition I'll feed thy devil with horse-bread as long as he lives, of free cost.

Robin. No more, sweet Ralph: let's go and make clean our boots, which lie foul upon our hands, and then to our conjuring in the devil's name. [Exeunt.]

Enter ROBIN and RALPH with a silver goblet.

Robin. Come, Ralph: did not I tell thee, we were for ever made by this Doctor Faustus' book? ecce, signum!<sup>2</sup> here's a simple purchase<sup>3</sup> for horse-keepers:
our horses shall eat no hay as long as this lasts.

Ralph. But, Robin, here comes the Vintner.

Robin. Hush! I'll gull him supernaturally.

Enter VINTNER.

Drawer, I hope all is paid; God be with you!—Come, Ralph.

Vint. Soft, sir; a word with you. I must yet have a goblet paid from you, ere you
go.

Robin. I a goblet, Ralph, I a goblet!—I scorn you; and you are but a, etc.<sup>4</sup> I a goblet! search me.

Vint. I mean so, sir, with your favor.

[Searches Robin.]

Robin. How say you now?

Vint. I must say somewhat to your fellow.—
You, sir!

Robin. Me, sir! me, sir! search your fill.
[Vintner searches him.] Now, sir, you may be ashamed to burden honest men with a matter of truth.

Vint. Well, one of you hath this goblet about you.

<sup>1</sup>Wine sweetened and spiced.

<sup>2</sup>Behold, the proof!

<sup>3</sup>A clear gain.

<sup>4</sup>The actor was expected to speak the abuse extemporaneously.

Robin. You lie, drawer, 'tis afore me [Aside].
Sirrah you, I'll teach you to impeach honest men;—stand by;—I'll scour you for a goblet;—stand aside you had best, I charge you in the name of Belzebub.—Look to the goblet, Ralph [Aside to Ralph].

Vint. What mean you, sirrah?

Robin. I'll tell you what I mean. [Reads from a book] Sanctobulorum Periphrasticon—nay, I'll tickle you, Vintner.—Look to the goblet, Ralph [Aside to Ralph]. [Reads] Polypragmos Belseborams framanto pacostiphos tostu, Mephistophilis, etc.

Enter MEPHISTOPHILIS, sets squibs at their backs, and then exit. They run about.

Vint. O, nomine Domini!<sup>1</sup> what meanest thou, Robin? thou hast no goblet.

Ralph. Peccatum peccatorum!<sup>2</sup>—Here's thy goblet, good Vintner.

[Gives the goblet to Vintner, who exit.]

Robin. Misericordia pro nobis!<sup>3</sup> what shall I do? Good devil, forgive me now, and I'll never rob thy library more.

Re-enter MEPHISTOPHILIS.

Meph. Monarch of hell, under whose black survey

Great potentates do kneel with awful fear,
Upon whose altars thousand souls do lie,
How am I vexèd with these villains' charms?

From Constantinople am I hither come,
Only for pleasure of these damnèd slaves.

Robin. How, from Constantinople! you have had a great journey: wilt thou take sixpence in your purse to pay for your supper and be gone?

Meph. Well, villains, for your presumption, I transform thee into an ape, and thee into a dog; and so be gone! [Exit.]

Robin. How, into an ape! that's brave: I'll have fine sport with the boys; I'll get nuts and apples enow.

Ralph. And I must be a dog.

Robin. I'faith, thy head will never be out of the pottage-pot.

[Exeunt.]

Enter EMPEROR, FAUSTUS, and a KNIGHT, with ATTENDANTS.

Emp. Master Doctor Faustus, I have heard strange report of thy knowledge in the black art, how that none in my empire nor in the whole world can compare with thee for the rare effects of magic: they say thou hast a familiar spirit, by whom thou canst accomplish what thou list. This, therefore, is my request, that thou let me see some proof of thy skill, that mine eyes may be witnesses to confirm what mine ears have heard reported: and here I swear to thee, by the honor of mine imperial crown, that, whatever thou doest, thou shalt be no ways prejudiced or endamaged.

Knight. I'faith, he looks much like a conjurer. [Aside.]

Faust. My gracious sovereign, though I must confess myself far inferior to the report men have published, and nothing answerable to the honor of your imperial majesty, yet, for that love and duty binds me thereunto, I am content to do whatsoever your majesty shall command me.

Emp. Then, Doctor Faustus, mark what I shall say.

As I was sometime solitary set Within my closet, sundry thoughts arose
About the honor of mine ancestors,
How they had won by prowess such exploits,

Got such riches, subdued so many kingdoms,

As we that do succeed, or they that shall Hereafter possess our throne, shall

(I fear me) ne'er attain to that degree
Of high renown and great authority:

Amongst which kings is Alexander the Great,

Chief spectacle of the world's pre-eminence,

The bright shining of whose glorious acts
Lightens the world with his reflecting beams,

As when I hear but motion<sup>4</sup> made of him,
It grieves my soul I never saw the man:
If, therefore, thou, by cunning of thine art,
Canst raise this man from hollow vaults below,

<sup>1</sup>In the name of the Lord.

<sup>2</sup>Sin of sins.

<sup>3</sup>Mercy upon us.

<sup>4</sup>Mention.

Where lies entombed this famous conqueror,

And bring with him his beauteous paramour,

Both in their right shapes, gesture, and attire

They used to wear during their time of life,

Thou shalt both satisfy my just desire,

And give me cause to praise thee whilst I live.

Faust. My gracious lord, I am ready to accomplish your request, so far forth as by art and power of my spirit I am able to perform.

Knight. I'faith, that's just nothing at all.

[Aside.]

Faust. But, if it like your grace, it is not in my ability to present before your eyes the true substantial bodies of those two deceased princes, which long since are consumed to dust.

Knight. Ay, marry, Master Doctor, now there's a sign of grace in you, when you will confess the truth.

[Aside.]

Faust. But such spirits as can lively resemble Alexander and his paramour shall appear before your grace, in that manner that they both lived in, in their most flourishing estate; which I doubt not shall sufficiently content your imperial majesty.

Emp. Go to, Master Doctor; let me see them presently.

Knight. Do you hear, Master Doctor? you bring Alexander and his paramour before the Emperor!

Faust. How then, sir?

Knight. I'faith, that's as true as Diana turned me to a stag.

Faust. No, sir; but, when Actæon died, he left the horns for you.—Mephistophilis, be gone.

[Exit Mephistophilis.]

Knight. Nay, an you go to conjuring, I'll be gone.

[Exit.]

Faust. I'll meet with you anon for interrupting me so.—

Here they are, my gracious lord.

Re-enter MEPHISTOPHILIS with SPIRITS in the shapes of ALEXANDER and his PARAMOUR.

Emp. Master Doctor, I heard this lady, while she lived, had a wart or mole in her neck: how shall I know whether it be so or no?

Faust. Your highness may boldly go and see.

Emp. Sure, these are no spirits, but the true substantial bodies of those two deceased princes.

[Exeunt Spirits.]

Faust. Wilt please your highness now to send for the knight that was so pleasant with me here of late?

Emp. One of you call him forth.

[Exit Attendant.]

Re-enter the KNIGHT with a pair of horns on his head.

How now, sir knight! why, I had thought thou hadst been a bachelor, but now I see thou hast a wife, that not only gives thee horns, but makes thee wear them. Feel on thy head.

Knight. Thou damned wretch and execrable dog,

Bred in the concave of some monstrous rock,

How dar'st thou thus abuse a gentleman?

Villain, I say, undo what thou hast done!

Faust. O, not so fast, sir! there's no haste: but, good, are you remembered how you crossed me in my conference with the Emperor? I think I have met with you for it.

Emp. Good Master Doctor, at my entreaty release him: he hath done penance sufficient.

Faust. My gracious lord, not so much for the injury he offered me here in your presence, as to delight you with some mirth, hath Faustus worthily requited this injurious knight; which being all I desire, I am content to release him of his horns:—and, sir knight, hereafter speak well of scholars.—Mephistophilis, transform him straight. [Mephistophilis removes the horns.—] Now, my good lord, having done my duty, I humbly take my leave.

Emp. Farewell, Master Doctor: yet, ere you go,

Expect from me a bounteous reward.

[Exeunt Emperor, Knight, and attendants.]

Faust. Now, Mephistophilis, the restless course

That time doth run with calm and silent foot,

Shortening my days and thread of vital life,

Calls for the payment of my latest years:

Therefore, sweet Mephistophilis, let us
Make haste to Wertenberg.

Meph. What, will you go on horse-back or on foot?

Faust. Nay, till I'm past this fair and pleasant green, I'll walk on foot.

Enter a HORSE-COURSER.

Horse-c. I have been all this day seeking one Master Fustian: mass, see where he is!— God save you Master Doctor!

Faust. What, horse-courser! you are well
met.

Horse-c. Do you hear, sir? I have brought you forty dollars for your horse.

Faust. I cannot sell him so: if thou likest him
for fifty, take him.

Horse-c. Alas, sir, I have no more!—I pray
you, speak for me.

Meph. I pray you, let him have him: he is an honest fellow, and he has a great charge,
neither wife nor child.

Faust. Well, come, give me your money [Horse-courser gives Faustus the money]:
my boy will deliver him to you. But I must tell you one thing before you have him; ride him not into the water, at any
hand.

Horse-c. Why, sir, will he not drink of all waters?

Faust. O, yes, he will drink of all waters; but ride him not into the water; ride him over hedge or ditch, or where thou wilt, but not into the water.

Horse-c. Well, sir.—Now am I made man for ever: I'll not leave my horse for forty:
if he had but the quality of hey-ding-ding,
hey-ding-ding, I'd make a brave living on him: he has a buttock as slick as an eel [Aside.—Well, God b'w'i'ye, sir: your boy will deliver him me: but, hark you, sir;
if my horse be sick or ill at ease, if I bring his water to you, you'll tell me what it is?

Faust. Away, you villain! what, dost think I am a horse-doctor?

[Exit Horse-courser.]

What art thou, Faustus, but a man condemned to die?

Thy fatal time doth draw to final end;
Despair doth drive distrust into my thoughts:

Confound these passions with a quiet
sleep:

Tush, Christ did call the thief upon the Cross;

Then rest thee, Faustus, quiet in conceit.
[Sleeps in his chair.]

Re-enter HORSE-COURSER, all wet, crying.

Horse-c. Alas, alas! Doctor Fustian, quotha? mass, Doctor Lopus<sup>1</sup> was never such a doctor: has given me a purgation, has purged me of forty dollars; I shall never see them more. But yet, like an ass as I was, I would not be ruled by him, for he bade me I should ride him into no water; now I, thinking my horse had had some rare quality that he would not have had me known of, I, like a venturous youth, rid him into the deep pond at the town's end. I was no sooner in the middle of the pond, but my horse vanished away, and I sat upon a bottle<sup>2</sup>
of hay, never so near drowning in my life.
But I'll seek out my doctor, and have my forty dollars again, or I'll make it the dearest horse!—O, yonder is his snipper-snapper. Do you hear? you hey-pass,<sup>3</sup> where's your master?

Meph. Why, sir, what would you? you cannot speak with him.

Horse-c. But I will speak with him.

Meph. Why, he's fast asleep: come some other time.

Horse-c. I'll speak with him now, or I'll break his glass-windows about his ears.

Meph. I tell thee, he has not slept this eight nights.

Horse-c. An he have not slept this eight weeks, I'll speak with him.

Meph. See, where he is, fast asleep.

Horse-c. Ay, this is he.—God save you,
Master Doctor, Master Doctor, Master Doctor Fustian! forty dollars, forty dollars for a bottle of hay!

Meph. Why, thou seest he hears thee not.

Horse-c. So-ho, ho! so-ho, ho! [Hollows in his ear.] No, will you not wake? I'll make you wake ere I go. [Pulls Faustus by the leg, and pulls it away.] Alas, I am undone! what shall I do?

Faust. O, my leg, my leg!—Help, Mephistophilis! call the officers.—My leg, my leg!

<sup>1</sup>Roderigo Lopez, private physician to Queen Elizabeth, hanged in 1594 for conspiring to poison her.

<sup>2</sup>Bundle.

<sup>3</sup>Juggler.

Meph. Come, villain, to the constable.

Horse-c. O, Lord, sir, let me go, and I'll give you forty dollars more!

Meph. Where be they?

Horse-c. I have none about me: come to my ostry<sup>1</sup> and I'll give them you.

Meph. Be gone quickly.

[Horse-courser runs away.]

Faust. What, is he gone? farewell he! Faustus has his leg again, and the Horse-courser, I take it, a bottle of hay for his labor: well, this trick shall cost him forty dollars more.

Enter WAGNER.

How now, Wagner! what's the news with thee?

Wag. Sir, the Duke of Vanholt doth earnestly entreat your company.

Faust. The Duke of Vanholt! an honorable gentleman, to whom I must be no nig-gard of my cunning.—Come, Mephistophilis, let's away to him. [Exeunt.]

Enter the DUKE OF VANHOLT, the DUCHESS, and FAUSTUS.

Duke. Believe me, Master Doctor, this merriment hath much pleased me.

Faust. My gracious lord, I am glad it contents you so well.—But it may be, madam, you take no delight in this. I have heard that great-bellied women do long for some dainties or other: what is it, madam? tell me, and you shall have it.

Duchess. Thanks, good Master Doctor: and, for I see your courteous intent to pleasure me, I will not hide from you the thing my heart desires; and, were it now summer, as it is January and the dead time of the winter, I would desire no better meat than a dish of ripe grapes.

Faust. Alas, madam, that's nothing!—Mephistophilis, be gone. [Exit Mephistophilis.] Were it a greater thing than this, so it would content you, you should have it.

Re-enter MEPHISTOPHILIS with grapes.

Here they be, madam: wilt please you taste on them?

Duke. Believe me, Master Doctor, this makes me wonder above the rest, that being in the dead time of winter and in the month of January, how you should come by these grapes.

Faust. If it like your grace, the year is divided into two circles over the whole world, that, when it is here winter with us, in the contrary circle it is summer with them, as in India, Saba, and farther countries in the east; and by means of a swift spirit that I have, I had them brought hither, as you see.—How do you like them, madam? be they good?

Duchess. Believe me, Master Doctor, they be the best grapes that e'er I tasted in my life before.

Faust. I am glad they content you so, madam.

Duke. Come, madam, let us in, where you must well reward this learned man for the great kindness he hath showed to you.

Duchess. And so I will, my lord; and, whilst I live, rest beholding for this courtesy.

Faust. I humbly thank your grace.

Duke. Come, Master Doctor, follow us, and receive your reward. [Exeunt.]

Enter WAGNER.

Wag. I think my master means to die shortly,

For he hath given to me all his goods:

And yet, methinks, if that death were near, He would not banquet, and carouse, and swill

Amongst the students, as even now he doth,

Who are at supper with such belly-cheer As Wagner ne'er beheld in all his life.

See, where they come! belike the feast is ended. [Exit.]

Enter FAUSTUS with two or three SCHOLARS, and MEPHISTOPHILIS.

First Schol. Master Doctor Faustus, since our conference about fair ladies, which was the beautifullest in all the world, we have determined with ourselves that Helen of Greece was the admirablist lady that ever lived: therefore, Master Doctor, if you will do us that favor, as to let us see that peerless dame of Greece, whom all the world admires for majesty, we should think ourselves much beholding unto you.

<sup>1</sup>Inn.

Faust. Gentlemen,
 For that I know your friendship is un-
 feigned,
 And Faustus' custom is not to deny
 The just requests of those that wish him
 well
 You shall behold that peerless dame of Greece,
 No otherways for pomp and majesty
 Than when Sir Paris crossed the seas with
 her,
 And brought the spoils to rich Dardania.
 Be silent, then, for danger is in words.
[Music sounds, and Helen passeth over the stage.]
Sec. Schol. Too simple is my wit to tell her praise,
 Whom all the world admires for majesty.
Third Schol. No marvel though the angry Greeks pursued
 With ten years' war the rape of such a
 queen,
 Whose heavenly beauty passeth all compare.
First Schol. Since we have seen the pride of Nature's works,
 And only paragon of excellence,
 Let us depart; and for this glorious deed
 Happy and blest be Faustus evermore!
Faust. Gentlemen, farewell: the same I wish to you. [Exeunt Scholars.]

Enter an OLD MAN.

Old Man. Ah, Doctor Faustus, that I might prevail
 To guide thy steps unto the way of life,
 By which sweet path thou mayst attain
 the goal
 That shall conduct thee to celestial rest!
 Break heart, drop blood, and mingle it
 with tears,
 Tears falling from repentant heaviness
 Of thy most vile and loathsome filthi-
 ness,
 The stench whereof corrupts the inward
 soul
 With such flagitious crimes of heinous sin
 As no commiseration may expel,
 But mercy, Faustus, of thy Savior sweet, Whose blood alone must wash away thy guilt.
Faust. Where art thou, Faustus? wretch,
 what hast thou done?
 Damned art thou, Faustus, damned;
 despair and die!

Hell calls for right, and with a roaring voice
 Says, "Faustus, come; thine hour is almost come;"
 And Faustus now will come to do thee
 right.
[Mephistophilis gives him a dagger.]
Old Man. Ah, stay, good Faustus, stay thy desperate steps!
 I see an angel hovers o'er thy head,
 And, with a vial full of precious grace,
 Offers to pour the same into thy soul:
 Then call for mercy, and avoid despair.
Faust. Ah, my sweet friend, I feel
 Thy words to comfort my distressed soul!
 Leave me a while to ponder on my sins.
Old Man. I go, sweet Faustus; but with heavy cheer,
 Fearing the ruin of thy hopeless soul. [Exit.]
Faust. Accurséd Faustus, where is mercy
 now?
 I do repent; and yet I do despair:
 Hell strives with grace for conquest in my breast:
 What shall I do to shun the snares of
 death?
Meph. Thou traitor, Faustus, I arrest thy soul
 For disobedience to my sovereign lord:
 Revolt, or I'll in piece-meal tear thy flesh.
Faust. Sweet Mephistophilis, entreat thy
 lord
 To pardon my unjust presumption,
 And with my blood again I will confirm
 My former vow I made to Lucifer.
Meph. Do it, then, quickly, with unfeigned
 heart,
 Lest greater danger do attend thy drift.
Faust. Torment, sweet friend, that base and crooked age,<sup>1</sup>
 That durst dissuade me from thy Lucifer,
 With greatest torments that our hell affords.
Meph. His faith is great; I cannot touch his
 soul;
 But what I may afflict his body with
 I will attempt, which is but little worth.
Faust. One thing, good servant, let me
 crave of thee,
 To glut the longing of my heart's desire,—
 That I might have unto my paramour

<sup>1</sup>The Old Man.

That heavenly Helen which I saw of late,
Whose sweet embracings may extinguish clean

Those thoughts that do dissuade me from my vow,

And keep mine oath I made to Lucifer.

Meph. Faustus, this, or what else thou shalt desire,

Shall be performed in twinkling of an eye.

Re-enter HELEN.

Faust. Was this the face that launched a thousand ships,

And burnt the topless towers of Ilium?— Sweet Helen, make me immortal with a kiss.— [Kisses her.

Her lips suck forth my soul: see, where it flies!

Come, Helen, come, give me my soul
again.

Here will I dwell, for heaven is in these lips,

And all is dross that is not Helena.

I will be Paris, and for love of thee,

Instead of Troy, shall Wertenberg be sacked;

And I will combat with weak Menelaus,

And wear thy colors on my pluméd crest;

Yes, I will wound Achilles in the heel,

And then return to Helen for a kiss.

O, thou art fairer than the evening air

Clad in the beauty of a thousand stars;

Brighter art thou than flaming Jupiter

When he appeared to hapless Semele;

More lovely than the monarch of the sky

In wanton Arethusa's azured arms;

And none but thou shalt be my paramour!

[Exeunt.

Enter the OLD MAN.

Old Man. Accurséd Faustus, miserable man, That from thy soul exclud'st the grace of
heaven,

And fly'st the throne of his tribunal-seat!

Enter DEVILS.

Satan begins to sift me with his pride:

As in this furnace God shall try my faith,

My faith, vile hell, shall triumph over thee,

Ambitious fiends, see how the heavens
smile

At your repulse, and laugh your state to scorn!

Hence, hell! for hence I fly unto my God.

[*Exeunt—on one side, Devils, on the other,
Old Man.*

Enter FAUSTUS, with SCHOLARS.

Faust. Ah, gentlemen!

First Schol. What ails Faustus?

Faust. Ah, my sweet chamber-fellow, had I lived with thee, then had I lived still!
but now I die eternally. Look, comes he not? comes he not?

Sec. School. What means Faustus?

Third Schol. Belike he is grown into some sickness by being over-solitary.

First Schol. If it be so, we'll have physicians to cure him.—'Tis but a surfeit; never fear, man.

Faust. A surfeit of deadly sin, that hath damned both body and soul.

Sec. Schol. Yet, Faustus, look up to heaven;
remember God's mercies are infinite.

Faust. But Faustus' offence can ne'er be pardoned: the serpent that tempted Eve may be saved, but not Faustus. Ah, gentlemen, hear me with patience, and tremble not at my speeches! Though my heart pants and quivers to remember that I have been a student here these thirty years, O, would I had never seen Wertenberg, never read book! and what wonders I have done, all Germany can witness, yea, all the world; for which Faustus hath lost both Germany and the world, yea, heaven itself, heaven,
the seat of God, the throne of the blessed,
the kingdom of joy; and must remain
in hell for ever, hell, ah, hell, for ever!
Sweet friends, what shall become of Faustus, being in hell for ever?

Third Schol. Yet, Faustus, call on God.

Faust. On God, whom Faustus hath abjured!
on God, whom Faustus hath blas-phemed! Ah, my God, I would weep!
but the devil draws in my tears. Gush forth blood, instead of tears! yea, life and soul! O, he stays my tongue! I would lift up my hands; but see, they hold them, they hold them!

All. Who, Faustus?

Faust. Lucifer and Mephistophilis. Ah, gentlemen, I gave them my soul for my cunning!

All. God forbid!

Faust. God forbade it, indeed; but Faustus hath done it: for vain pleasure of twenty-four years hath Faustus lost eternal joy and felicity. I writ them a bill with mine own blood: the date is expired; the time will come, and he will fetch me.

First Schol. Why did not Faustus tell us of this before, that divines might have prayed for thee?

Faust. Oft have I thought to have done so; but the devil threatened to tear me in pieces, if I named God, to fetch both body and soul, if I once gave ear to divinity: and now 'tis too late. Gentlemen, away, lest you perish with me.

Sec. Schol. O, what shall we do to save Faustus?

Faust. Talk not of me, but save yourselves, and depart.

Third Schol. God will strengthen me; I will stay with Faustus.

First Schol. Tempt not God, sweet friend; but let us into the next room, and there pray for him.

Faust. Ay, pray for me, pray for me; and what noise soever ye hear, come not unto me, for nothing can rescue me.

Sec. Schol. Pray thou, and we will pray that God may have mercy upon thee.

Faust. Gentlemen, farewell: if I live till morning, I'll visit you; if not, Faustus is gone to hell.

All. Faustus, farewell.

[Exeunt Scholars.—The clock strikes eleven.]

Faust. Ah, Faustus,

Now hast thou but one bare hour to live,
And then thou must be damned perpetually!

Stand still, you ever-moving spheres of heaven,

That time may cease, and midnight never come;

Fair Nature's eye, rise, rise again, and make

Perpetual day; or let this hour be but
A year, a month, a week, a natural day,
That Faustus may repent and save his soul!

O lente, lente currite, noctis equi!<sup>1</sup>

The stars move still, time runs, the clock will strike,

The devil will come, and Faustus must be damned.

O, I'll leap up to my God!—Who pulls me down?—

See, see, where Christ's blood streams in the firmament!

One drop would save my soul, half a drop: ah, my Christ!—

Ah, rend not my heart for naming of my Christ!

Yet will I call on him: O, spare me, Lucifer!—

Where is it now? 'tis gone: and see, where God

Stretcheth out his arm, and bends his ireful brows!

Mountains and hills, come, come, and fall on me,

And hide me from the heavy wrath of God! No, no!

Then will I headlong run into the earth: Earth, gape! O, no, it will not harbor me!

You stars that reigned at my nativity,
Whose influence hath allotted death and hell,

Now draw up Faustus, like a foggy mist,
Into the entrails of yon laboring clouds,
That, when you vomit forth into the air,
My limbs may issue from your smoky mouths,

So that my soul may but ascend to heaven!

[The clock strikes the half-hour.]

Ah, half the hour is past! 'twill all be past anon.

O God,

If thou wilt not have mercy on my soul,
Yet for Christ's sake, whose blood hath ransomed me,

Impose some end to my incessant pain;
Let Faustus live in hell a thousand years,
A hundred thousand, and at last be saved;
O, no end is limited to damned souls!

Why wert thou not a creature wanting soul?

Or why is this immortal that thou hast?
Ah, Pythagoras' metempsychosis, were that true,

This soul should fly from me, and I be changed

Unto some brutish beast! all beasts are happy,

For, when they die,
Their souls are soon dissolved in elements;
But mine must live still to be plagued in hell.

<sup>1</sup>Run slowly, slowly, horses of night (Ovid, Amores, i, 13).

Curst be the parents that engendered me!
 No, Faustus, curse thyself, curse Lucifer That hath deprived thee of the joys of
 heaven.

[The clock strikes twelve.

O, it strikes, it strikes! Now, body, turn to air,

Or Lucifer will bear thee quick to hell!

[Thunder and lightning.

O soul, be changed into little water-drops,
 And fall into the ocean—ne'er be found!

Enter DEVILS.

My God, my God, look not so fierce on me!
 Adders and serpents, let me breathe a
 while!

Ugly hell, gape not! come not, Lucifer!

I'll burn my books!—Ah, Mephistophilis!
 [Exeunt Devils with Faustus.

Enter CHORUS.

Chor. Cut is the branch that might have grown full straight,
 And burnéd is Apollo's laurel-bough,
 That sometime grew within this learned
 man.

Faustus is gone: regard his hellish fall, Whose fiendful fortune may exhort the
 wise,

Only to wonder at unlawful things,
 Whose deepness doth entice such forward
 wits

To practice more than heavenly power permits. [Exit.

EDMUND SPENSER (1552?-1599)

The year of Spenser's birth is known only by inference from a sonnet which he wrote in 1593. His father came of a northern family and was a gentleman by birth; he was, however, a man in humble circumstances and followed the trade of cloth-making in London. Spenser was sent to the Merchant Tailors' School, then newly founded, where he was fortunate in being trained by Richard Mulcaster. Thence he proceeded in 1569 to Pembroke Hall, Cambridge. He took his B. A. in 1573 and his M. A. in 1576. At Cambridge Spenser formed a lasting friendship with Gabriel Harvey, a Fellow of Pembroke and one of the notable figures of the University; there too, of course, he came under strong puritan influences which also were lasting in their effects. When he left Cambridge Spenser went for a time among his kinsmen in the north of England. In 1578 he was a secretary in the household of John Young, Bishop of Rochester. In 1579 he was back in London, in the household of Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester, where he became acquainted with Sir Philip Sidney who, there is reason to believe, inspired in Spenser the same admiration which all others who came in contact with him felt for him. These new attachments were made possible through Spenser's friendship with Gabriel Harvey. In 1579, too, Spenser published The Shepherd's Calendar, a series of twelve pastoral eclogues, in which he clearly announced himself as a significant new force in English poetry. But poetry, of course, as Ben Jonson complained, brought in no money, and Spenser was perforce at this time seeking public office. In 1580 he was successful in a manner which, it has generally been thought, was little to his taste. He went to Ireland as secretary to Lord Grey of Wilton, then Lord Deputy of Ireland. And in Ireland Spenser stayed, save for two lengthy visits to London, until within a few months of his death. In 1589 he came to London with Sir Walter Raleigh, who had been in Ireland, to publish the first three books of the Faerie Queene in 1590. Again in 1595 Spenser came back to London and published, in 1596, a new edition of the Faerie Queene containing three additional books, and his Four Hymns, and Prothalamion. In publishing the Faerie Queene Spenser sought, if not a more substantial recognition than the pension which Elizabeth gave him, at any rate a more important one—and he was disappointed. What he wanted was a place at Court and the end of his exile in Ireland. It is probable, however, that Spenser's disappointment has been exaggerated. His eyes were open to the corruption which surrounded life at Court, and at the same time his career in Ireland was at once honorable and successful. He filled several offices there, and in 1588 was granted an estate of some 3000 acres in the County of Cork. He found congenial friends in Ireland, and there he met and married Elizabeth Boyle (1594). Certainly also his virtual retirement from the larger world was conducive to that soberly meditative life which was his true life, and which found great expression in the Faerie Queene and in such shorter poems as the Four Hymns. And to this, one thinks, Spenser himself can hardly have been blind, however much at times he may have yearned for a life which would have made his achievement as a poet immeasurably more difficult, if not impossible. In 1598 there occurred an insurrection in Ireland in the course of which Spenser's castle of Kilcolman was pillaged and burned, he and his family escaping to Cork. In December he was sent thence to London with dispatches, and there he fell ill, and died on 16 January, 1599. He was buried in Westminster Abbey. According to tradition Spenser died not only broken-hearted over the loss of a child in the burning of Kilcolman, but also in the direst poverty, unable to buy necessary food. Contemporaries, among them Ben Jonson and Camden, gave countenance to the story, and it may well be that Spenser was suffering a temporary lack of ready money. No definite evidence, however, supports this legend, and it is extremely difficult to reconcile it with known facts concerning Spenser's general circumstances.

Spenser is in his poetry what Sidney was in his life, the English embodiment of the Renaissance ideal. He aimed in the Faerie Queene to write an heroic poem, in emulation of Ariosto and Tasso, thought in his day to be the legitimate inheritors of Homer and Virgil; and as an Englishman he aimed to write an English poem which should follow national tradition both in language and in content. Hence he modeled himself upon Chaucer and drew on Arthurian legend, while at the same time he attempted to connect his country's heroic past with the great figures of his own day. The poem he wrote was, to be sure, an allegory, in this as in the life it pictured different enough from the Iliad and the Æneid, but it should be remembered that in Spenser's day practically everybody supposed that the classical epics were allegories. The plan Spenser formed for his poem, typical of the Renaissance in its ambitious largeness and left uncompleted, he explains himself in the letter to Sir Walter Raleigh which is printed below.

Spenser is, as has been well said, "among the very greatest of our poets, but the significance of his poetry in the history of our literature is even greater than its intrinsic value. He recreated English prosody, giving back to our verse the fluidity and the grace that it had lost since the days of Chaucer, and extending the range of its achievement; he created English poetic diction, lifting it from anarchy and stiffness, daring greatly, but triumphing whether in the simple or the ornate, widening its scope, but at the same time never failing to give it ease and flexibility, so that language became to him a willing servant, and could voice the subtlest shades of mood or fancy. By means of this rich and varied style, fully expressive of his high seriousness, his spirituality, his inexhaustible sense of beauty, he has exercised a spell that has been potent for three centuries, and none has called so many poets to their vocation" (E. de Sélincourt, Introduction to Spenser's Poetical Works, pp. xxxix-xl).

THE FAERIE QUEENE

A LETTER OF THE AUTHOR'S,

EXPOUNDING his whole intention in the course of this worke: which, for that it giveth great light to the reader, for the better understanding is hereunto annexed.

To the Right Noble and Valorous SIR
WALTER RALEIGH, KNIGHT; Lord Wardein of the Stanneryes, and Her Majesties Liefetenaunt of the County of Cornewayll.

Sir, knowing how doubtfully all allegories may be construed, and this booke of mine, which I have entituled the Faery Queene, being a continued allegory, or darke conceit, I have thought good, as well for avoyding of gealous opinions and misconstructions, as also for your better light in reading thereof (being so by you commanded), to discover unto you the general intention and meaning, which in the whole course thereof I have fashioned, without expressing of any particular purposes, or by-accidents therein occasioned. The generall end therefore of all the booke is to fashion a gentleman or noble person in vertuous and gentle discipline: which for that I conceived shoulde be most plausible and pleasing, being coloured with an historicall fiction, the which the most part of men delight to read, rather for variety of matter than for profite of the ensample, I chose the historye of King Arthure, as most fitte for the excellency of his person, being made famous by many men's former workes, and also furthest from the daunger of envy, and suspition of present time. In which I have followed all the antique Poets historicall: first Homere, who in the Persons of Agamemnon and Ulysses hath ensampled a good governour and a vertuous man, the one in his Ilias, the other in his Odysseis; then Virgil, whose like intention was to doe in the person of Aeneas; after him Ariosto comprised them both in his Orlando: and lately Tasso dissevered them againe, and formed both parts in two persons, namely that part which they in Philosophy call Ethice, or vertues of a private man, coloured in his Rinaldo; the other named Politice in his Godfredo. By ensample of which excellent poets, I labour to pourtraict in Arthure, before he was king, the image of a brave knight, perfected in the twelve private morall vertues, as Aristotle hath devised; the which is the purpose of these first twelve bookes:<sup>1</sup> which if I finde to be well accepted, I may be perhaps encouraged to frame the other part of polliticke vertues in his person, after that hee came to be king.

To some, I know, this methode will seeme displeasaut, which had rather have good discipline delivered plainly in way of precepts, or sermoned at large, as they use, than thus clowdily enwrapped in Allegoricall devises. But such, me seeme, should be satisfide with the use of these dayes, seeing all things accounted by their shoves, and nothing esteemed of, that is not delightfull and pleasing to commune sence.<sup>2</sup> For this cause is Xenophon preferred before Plato, for that the one, in the exquisite depth of his judgement, formed a commune welth, such as it should be; but the other in the person of Cyrus, and the Persians, fashioned a government, such as might best be: so much more profitable and gracious is doctrine by ensample, than by rule. So have I laboured to doe in the person of Arthure: whome I conceive, after his long education by Timon, to whom he was by Merlin delivered to be brought up, so soone as he was borne of the Lady Igrayne, to have seene in a dream or vision the Faery Queen, with whose excellent beauty ravished, he awaking resolved to seeke her out; and so being by Merlin armed, and by Timon thoroughly instructed, he went to seeke her forth in Faerye Land. In that Faery Queene I meane glory in my generall intention, but in my particular I conceive the most excellent and glorious person of our soveraine the Queene, and her kingdome in Faery Land. And yet, in some places els, I doe otherwise shadow her. For considering she beareth two persons, the one of a most royall queene or empresse, the other of a most vertuous and beautifull Lady, this latter part in some places I doe expresse in Belphebe, fashioning her name according to your owne excellent concept of Cynthia (Phoebe and Cynthia being both names of Diana). So in the person of Prince Arthure I sette forth magnificence in particular, which vertue, for that (according to Aristotle and the rest) it is the perfection of all the rest, and containeth in it them all, therefore in the whole course I mention the deedes of Arthure applyable to that vertue which I write of in that booke. But of the xii. other vertues, I make xii. other knights the patrones, for the more variety of the history: of which these three bookes contain three.<sup>1</sup> The first of the Knight of the Redcrosse, in whome I expresse Holynes: The seconde of Sir Guyon, in whome I sette forth Temperaunce: The third of Britomartis, a lady knight, in whome I picture Chastity. But, because the beginning of the whole worke seemeth abrupte, and as depending upon other antecedents, it needs that ye know the occasion of these three knights severall adventures. For the methode of a poet historical is not such as of an historiographer. For an historiographer discourseth of affayres orderly as they were donne, accounting as well the times as the actions; but a poet thrusteth into the middest, even where it most concerneth him, and there recouring to the thinges forepaste, and divining of thinges to come, maketh a pleasing analysis of all.

<sup>1</sup>Of these Spenser completed only six, and a fragment probably designed for the seventh.

<sup>2</sup>I. e., the senses, in opposition to the reason.

The beginning therefore of my history, if it were to be told by an historiographer, should be the twelfth booke, which is the last; where I devise that the Faery Queene kept her annuall feaste xii. dayes; upon which xii. severall dayes, the occasions of the xii. severall adventures happed, which, being undertaken by xii. severall knights, are in these xii. books severally handled and discoursed. The first was this. In the beginning of the feast, there presented himselfe a tall clownishe younge man, who, falling before the Queene of Faries, desired a boone (as the manner then was) which during that feast she might not refuse: which was that hee might have the atchievement of any adventure, which during that feaste should happen: that being graunted, he rested him on the floore, unfitte through his rusticity for a better place. Soone after entred a faire ladye in mourning weedes, riding on a white asse, with a dwarfe behind her leading a warlike steed, that bore the armes of a knight, and his speare in the dwarfes hand. Shee, falling before the Queene of Faeries, complayned that her father and mother, an ancient king and queene, had bene by an huge dragon many years shut up in a brasen castle, who thence suffred them not to yssew; and therefore besought the Faery Queene to assygne her some one of her knights to take on him that exployt. Presently that clownish person, upstarting, desired that adventure: whereat the Queene much wondering, and the lady much gaine-saying, yet he earnestly importuned his desire. In the end the lady told him, that unlesse that armour which she brought, would serve him (that is, the armour of a Christian man specified by Saint Paul, vi. Ephes.), that he could not succeed in that enterprise: which being forthwith put upon him with dewe furnitures thereunto, he seemed the goodliest man in al that company, and was well liked of the lady. And efts-sones taking on him knighthood, and mounting on that straunge courser, he went forth with her on that adventure: where beginneth the first booke, viz.,

A gentle knight was pricking on the playne, etc.

The second day there came in a palmer, bearing an infant with bloody hands, whose parents he complained to have bene slayn by an enchaunteresse called Acrasia; and therefore craved of the Faery Queene, to appoint him some knight to performe that adventure; which being assigned to Sir Guyon, he presently went forth with that same palmer: which is the beginning of the second booke and the whole subject thereof. The third day there came in a groome, who complained before the Faery Queene, that a vile enchaunter, called Busirane, had in hand a most faire lady, called Amoretta, whom he kept in most grievous torment, because she would not yield him the pleasure of her body. Whereupon Sir Scudamour, the lover of that lady, presently tooke on him that adventure. But being unable to performe it by reason of the hard enchaunments, after long sorrow, in the end met with Britomartis, who succoured him, and reskewed his love.

<sup>1</sup>This letter was first published in the edition of 1590, which contained only the first three books.

But by occasion hereof many other adventures are intermedled, but rather as accidents then intendments: as the love of Britomart, the overthrow of Marinell, the misery of Florimell, the vertuousness of Belphebe, the lasciviousnes of Hellenora, and many the like.

Thus much, Sir, I have briefly overronne, to direct your understanding to the wel-head of the history, that from thence gathering the whole intention of the conceit ye may, as in a handfull, gripe al the discourse, which otherwise may happily seeme tedious and confused. So, humbly craving the continuance of your honourable favour towards me, and th' eternall establishment of your happines, I humbly take leave.

23 January, 1589.

Yours most humbly affectionate,

ED. SPENSER.

THE FIRST BOOKE OF THE FAERIE QUEENE

CONTAYNING
THE LEGENDE OF THE KNIGHT OF THE RED CROSSE, OR OF HOLINESSE

I

Lo I the man, whose Muse whilome did maske,
As time her taught, in lowly Shepheards weeds,<sup>1</sup>

Am now enforst a far unfitter taske,
For trumpets sterne to chaunge mine Oaten reeds,

<sup>1</sup>In the Shepherd's Calendar (1579).

And sing of Knights and Ladies gentle deeds;
Whose prayses having slept in silence long,
Me, all too meane, the sacred Muse areeds
To blazon broad amongst her learnéd throng:
Fierce warres and faithfull loves shall moral-ize my song.

2

Helpe then, O holy Virgin chiefe of nine,<sup>2</sup>
Thy weaker Novice to performe thy will,
Lay forth out of thine everlasting scryne
The antique rolles, which there lye hidden still,

Of Faerie knights and fairest Tanaquill,<sup>3</sup>
Whom that most noble Briton Prince<sup>4</sup> so long Sought through the world, and suffered so much ill,

That I must rue his undeservéd wrong:
O helpe thou my weake wit, and sharpen my dull tong.

3

And thou most dreaded impe of highest Jove,
Faire Venus sonne, that with thy cruell dart
At that good knight so cunningly didst rove,
That glorious fire it kindled in his hart,
Lay now thy deadly Heben bow apart,
And with thy mother milde come to mine ayde:

Come both, and with you bring triumphant
Mart,<sup>5</sup>

In loves and gentle jollities arrayd,
After his murderous spoiles and bloudy rage allayd.

4

And with them eke, O Goddesse heavenly bright,<sup>6</sup>

Mirroure of grace and Majestie divine,
Great Lady of the greatest Isle, whose light
Like Phæbus lampe throughout the world doth shine,

Shed thy faire beames into my feeble eyne,
And raise my thoughts too humble and too vile,

To thinke of that true glorious type of thine,
The argument of mine afflicted stile:
The which to heare, vouchsafe, O dearest dred a-while.

<sup>2</sup>Calliope, muse of heroic poetry; though according to some Spenser means Clio, the muse of history.

<sup>3</sup>A British princess, representing Queen Elizabeth.

<sup>4</sup>Prince Arthur.

<sup>5</sup>Mars.

<sup>6</sup>Queen Elizabeth.

CANTO I

*The Patron of true Holinesse, Foule Errour doth defeate:
Hypocrisie him to entrape,
Doth to his home entreate.*

1

A Gentle Knight was pricking on the plaine,
Y-cladd in mightie armes and silver shielde,
Wherein old dints of deepe wounds did re-
maine,
The cruell markes of many' a bloody felde;
Yet armes till that time did he never wield:
His angry steede did chide his foming bitt,
As much disdayning to the curbe to yield:
Full jolly knight he seemd, and faire did sitt,
As one for knightly giusts and fierce encounters fitt.

2

But on his brest a bloudie Crosse he bore,
The deare remembrance of his dying Lord,
For whose sweete sake that glorious badge
he wore,
And dead as living ever him ador'd:
Upon his shield the like was also scor'd,
For soveraine hope, which in his helpe he had:
Right faithfull true he was in deede and
word,
But of his cheere did seeme too solemne sad;
Yet nothing did he dread, but ever was ydrad.

3

Upon a great adventure he was bond,
That greatest Gloriana<sup>1</sup> to him gave,
That greatest Glorious Queene of Faerie lond,
To winne him worship, and her grace to have,
Which of all earthly things he most did
crave;
And ever as he rode, his hart did earne
To prove his puissance in battell brave
Upon his foe, and his new force to learne;
Upon his foe, a Dragon horrible and stearne.<sup>2</sup>

4

A lovely Ladie<sup>3</sup> rode him faire beside,
Upon a lowly Asse more white then snow,
Yet she much whiter, but the same did hide
Under a vele, that wimpled was full low,

<sup>1</sup>Queen Elizabeth.

<sup>2</sup>The dragon typifies sin.

<sup>3</sup>Una, who typifies truth.

And over all a blacke stole she did throw,
As one that inly mournd: so was she sad,
And heavie sat upon her palfrey slow;
Seeméd in heart some hidden care she had,
And by her in a line<sup>4</sup> a milke white lambe she lad.

5

So pure and innocent, as that same lambe,
She was in life and every vertuous lore,
And by descent from Royall lynage came
Of ancient Kings and Queenes, that had of yore
Their scepters stretcht from East to West-
erne shore,
And all the world in their subjection held;
Till that infernall feend with foule upore
Forwasted all their land, and them expeld:
Whom to avenge, she had this Knight from far compeld.

6

Behind her farre away a Dwarf<sup>5</sup> did lag,
That lasie seemd in being ever last,
Or wearied with bearing of her bag
Of needments at his backe. Thus as they past,
The day with cloudes was suddeine over-
cast,
And angry Jove an hideous storme of raine
Did poure into his Lemans lap so fast,
That every wight to shrowd it did constrain,
And this fair couple eke to shroud themselves were fain.

7

Enforst to seeke some covert nigh at hand,
A shadie grove not far away they spide,
That promist ayde the tempest to withstand:
Whose loftie trees yclad with sommers
pride,
Did spred so broad, that heavens light did
hide,
Not perceable with power of any starre:
And all within were pathes and alleies wide,
With footing worne, and leading inward
farre:
Faire harbour that them seemes; so in they entred arre.

<sup>4</sup>By a cord.

<sup>5</sup>Typifying prudence.

8

And forth they passe, with pleasure forward
led,
Joying to heare the birdes sweete harmony,
Which therein shrouded from the tempest
dred,
Seemd in their song to scorne the cruell
sky.
Much can they prayse the trees so straight and hy,
The sayling Pine,<sup>1</sup> the Cedar proud and tall,
The vine-prop Elme, the Poplar never dry,<sup>2</sup>
The builder Oake, sole king of Forrests all,
The Aspine good for staves, the Cypresse
funerall.<sup>3</sup>

9

The Laurell, meed of mightie Conquerours
And Poets sage, the Firre that weepeth still,<sup>4</sup>
The Willow worne of forlorne Paramours,
The Eugh obedient to the benders will,
The Birch for shaftes, the Sallow for the mill,
The Mirrhe sweete bleeding in the bitter wound,<sup>5</sup>
The warlike Beech,<sup>6</sup> the Ash for nothing ill,
The fruitful Olive, and the Platane round,
The carver Holme, the Maple seeldom inward sound.

10

Led with delight, they thus beguile the way,
Untill the blustering storme is overblowne;
When weening to returne, whence they did
stray,
They cannot finde that path, which first was
showne,
But wander too and fro in wayes unknowne,
Furthest from end then, when they neerest
weene,
That makes them doubt, their wits be not
their owne:
So many pathes, so many turnings seene,
That which of them to take, in diverse doubt they been.

<sup>1</sup>Used for the masts of ships.

<sup>2</sup>Because it grows best in moist soil.

<sup>3</sup>Symbolic of death.

<sup>4</sup>It exudes resin.

<sup>5</sup>Myrrh is fragrant though bitter.

<sup>6</sup>"There is a tradition that the war chariots of the ancients were made of beech" (Winstanley).

11

At last resolving forward still to fare,
Till that some end they finde or in or out,
That path they take, that beaten seemd
most bare,
And like to lead the labyrinth about;<sup>7</sup>
Which when by tract they hunted had throughout,
At length it brought them to a hollow cave,
Amid the thickest woods. The Champion stout
Eftsoones dismounted from his courser brave,
And to the Dwarfe awhile his needlesse spere
he gave.

12

Be well aware, quoth then that Ladie milde,
Least suddaine mischiefe ye too rash provoke:
The danger hid, the place unknowne and
wilde,
Breedes dreadfull doubts: Oft fire is without smoke,
And perill without show: therefore your
stroke
Sir knight with-hold, till further triall made.
Ah Ladie (said he) shame were to revoke
The forward footing for an hidden shade:<sup>8</sup> Vertue gives her selfe light, through darke-nesse for to wade.

13

Yea but (quoth she) the perill of this place
I better wot then you, though now too late,
To wish you backe returne with foule dis-
grace,
Yet wisdomes warnes, whilest foot is in the gate,
To stay the steppe, ere forcéd to retrate.
This is the wandring wood, this Errours den,
A monster vile, whom God and man does
hate:
Therefore I read beware. Fly fly (quoth then The fearefull Dwarfe:) this is no place for living men.

14

But full of fire and greedy hardiment,
The youthfull knight could not for ought be staide,
But forth unto the darksome hole he went,
And lookéd in: his glistring armor made

<sup>7</sup>Out of.

<sup>8</sup>It were a shame to turn back because of an imagined danger.

A little glooming light, much like a shade,
By which he saw the ugly monster plaine,
Halfe like a serpent horribly displaide,
But th'other halfe did womans shape re-
taine,
Most lothsom, filthie, foule, and full of vile disdaine.

15

And as she lay upon the durtie ground,
Her huge long taile her den all overspred,
Yet was in knots and many boughtes up-
wound,
Pointed with mortall sting. Of her there bred<sup>1</sup>

A thousand yong ones, which she dayly fed,
Sucking upon her poisonous dugs, each one
Of sundry shapes, yet all ill favoréd:
Soone as that uncouth light upon them shone,
Into her mouth they crept, and suddain all were gone.

16

Their dam upstart, out of her den effraide,
And rushéd forth, hurling her hideous taile
About her curséd head, whose folds displaid

Were stretcht now forth at length without entraile.

She lookt about, and seeing one in mayle
Arméd to point, sought backe to turne
again;

For light she hated as the deadly bale,
Ay wont in desert darknesse to remaine,
Where plaine none might her see, nor she see any plaine.

17

Which when the valiant Elfe<sup>2</sup> perceiv'd, he lept

As Lyon fierce upon the flying pray,
And with his trenchand blade her boldly kept
From turning backe, and forcéd her to stay:
Therewith enrag'd she loudly gan to bray,
And turning fierce, her speckled taile ad-
vaunst,

Threatning her angry sting, him to dismay:
Who nought aghast, his mightie hand en-haunst:

The stroke down from her head unto her shoulder glaunst.

18

Much daunted with that dint, her sence was dazd,

Yet kindling rage, her selfe she gathered
round,

And all attonce her beastly body raizd
With doubled forces high above the ground:
Tho wrapping up her wretched sterne arownd, Lept fierce upon his shield, and her huge
traîne

All suddenly about his body wound,
That hand or foot to stirre he strove in vaine:
God helpe the man so wrapt in Errours endlesse traîne.

19

His Lady sad to see his sore constraint, Cride out, Now now Sir Knight, shew what ye bee,

Add faith unto your force, and be not faint:
Strangle her, else she sure will strangle thee.
That when he heard, in great perplexitie,
His gall did grate for grieve and high disdaine,<sup>3</sup>

And knitting all his force got one hand free, Wherewith he grypt her gorge with so great
paine,

That soone to loose her wicked bands did her constraine.

20

Therewith she spewd out of her filthy maw
A floud of poyson horrible and blacke,
Full of great lumpes of flesh and gobbets raw,

Which stunck so vildly, that it forst him
slacke

His grasping hold, and from her turne him
backe:

Her vomit full of bookes and papers was,<sup>4</sup>
With loathly frogs and toades, which eyes
did lacke,

And creeping sought way in the weedy gras:
Her filthy parbreake all the place defiléd has.

21

As when old father Nilus gins to swell
With timely pride above the Aegyptian vale,
His fattie waves do fertile slime outwell,
And overflow each plaine and lowly dale:

<sup>1</sup>His anger was kindled by his pain and great disgust.

<sup>2</sup>The allusion is to pamphlets written by Catholics against protestantism.

<sup>1</sup>There were born.

<sup>2</sup>The Knight is so called because he is a fairy knight.

But when his later spring gins to avale,
Huge heapes of mudd he leaves, wherein there breed
Ten thousand kindes of creatures, partly male
And partly female of his fruitfull seed;
Such ugly monstrous shapes elsewhere may no man reed.

22

The same so sore annoyéd has the knight,
That welnigh chokéd with the deadly stinke,
His forces faile, ne can no longer fight.
Whose corage when the feend perceiv'd to shrinke,
She pouréd forth out of her hellish sinke
Her fruitfull curséd spawne of serpents
small,
Deforméd monsters, fowle, and blacke as inke,
Which swarming all about his legs did
crall,
And him encombred sore, but could not hurt
at all.

23

As gentle Shepheard in sweete even-tide,
When ruddy Phæbus gins to welke in west,
High on an hill, his flocke to wewen wide,
Markes which do byte their hasty supper
best;

A cloud of combrous gnattes do him molest,
All striving to infixe their feeble stings,
That from their noyance he no where can
rest,

But with his clownish hands their tender
wings

He brusheth oft, and oft doth mar their murmurings.

24

Thus ill bestedd, and fearefull more of
shame,

Then of the certaine perill he stood in,
Halfe furious unto his foe he came,
Resolv'd in minde all suddenly to win,
Or soone to lose, before he once would lin;
And strooke at her with more then manly force,

That from her body full of filthie sin
He raft her hatefull head without remorse;
A streame of cole black bloud forth gushéd
from her corse.

25

Her scattred brood, soone as their Parent
deare

They saw so rudely falling to the ground,
Groning full deadly, all with troublous feare,
Gathred themselves about her body round, Weening their wonted entrance to have
found

At her wide mouth: but being there withstood

They flockéd all about her bleeding wound,
And suckéd up their dying mothers blood,
Making her death their life, and eke her hurt their good.

26

That detestable sight him much amaze,
To see th'unkindly Impes of heaven accurst, Devoure their dam; on whom while so he gazed,

Having all satisfide their bloody thirst,
Their bellies swolne he saw with fulnesse
burst,

And bowels gushing forth: well worthy end
Of such as drunke her life, the which them
nurst;

Now needeth him no lenger labour spend,
His foes have slaine themselves, with whom he should contend.

27

His Ladie seeing all, that chaunst, from farre
Approcht in hast to greet his victorie,
And said, Faire knight, borne under happy
starre,

Who see your vanquisht foes before you lye:
Well worthy be you of that Armorie,<sup>1</sup>

Wherein ye have great glory wonne this day,
And prov'd your strength on a strong
enimie,

Your first adventure: many such I pray,
And henceforth ever wish, that like succeed
it may.

28

Then mounted he upon his Steede againe,
And with the Lady backward sought to wend;

That path he kept, which beaten was most
plaine.

Ne ever would to any by-way bend,

<sup>1</sup>The armor of a Christian man.

But still did follow one unto the end,
The which at last out of the wood them
brought.

So forward on his way (with God to frend)
He passeth forth, and new adventure sought;
Long way he travelléd, before he heard of ought.

29

At length they chaunst to meet upon the way
An agéd Sire,<sup>1</sup> in long blacke weedes yclad,
His feete all bare, his beard all hoarie gray,
And by his belt his booke he hanging had;
Sober he seemde, and very sagely sad,
And to the ground his eyes were lowly bent,
Simple in shew, and voyde of malice bad,
And all the way he prayéd, as he went,
And often knockt his brest, as one that did repent.

30

He faire the knight saluted, louting low,
Who faire him quited, as that courteous was:
And after askéd him, if he did know

Of straunge adventures, which abroad did pas.

Ah my deare Sonne (quoth he) how should,
alas,

Silly old man, that lives in hidden cell,
Bidding his beades all day for his trespas,
Tydings of warre and worldly trouble tell?
With holy father fits not with such things to mell.

31

But if of daunger which hereby doth dwell,
And homebred evill ye desire to heare,
Of a straunge man I can you tidings tell,
That wasteth all this countrey farre and
neare.

Of such (said he) I chiefly do inquire,
And shall you well reward to shew the place,
In which that wicked wight his dayes doth weare

For to all knighthood it is foule disgrace,
That such a curséd creature lives so long a space.

32

Far hence (quoth he) in wastfull wilderness
His dwelling is, by which no living wight
May ever passe, but thorough great distresse.
Now (sayd the Lady) draweth toward night,

<sup>1</sup>Archimago, a disguised enchanter, who typifies hypocrisy.

And well I wote, that of your later fight
Ye all forwearied be: for what so strong,
But wanting rest will also want of might?
The Sunne that measures heaven all day
long,
At night doth baite his steedes the Ocean
waves emong.

33

Then with the Sunne take Sir, your timely
rest,

And with new day new worke at once begin:
Untroubled night they say gives counsell
best.

Right well Sir knight ye have adviséd bin,
(Quoth then that aged man;) the way to win
Is wisely to advise: now day is spent;
Therefore with me ye may take up your In<sup>2</sup>
For this same night. The knight was well content:

So with that godly father to his home they went.

34

A little lowly Hermitage it was,
Downe in a dale, hard by a forests side,
Far from resort of people, that did pas
In travell to and froe: a little wyde<sup>3</sup>
There was an holy Chappell edifyde,
Wherein the Hermite dewly wont to say
His holy things each morne and eventyde:
Thereby a Christall streame did gently play,
Which from a sacred fountaine welléd forth
alway.

35

Arrivéd there, the little house they fill,
Ne looke for entertainment, where none
was:

Rest is their feast, and all things at their will;
The noblest mind the best contentment
has.

With faire discourse the evening so they
pas:

For that old man of pleasing wordes had
store,

And well could file his tongue as smooth as
glas;

He told of Saintes and Popes, and evermore
He strowd an Ave-Mary<sup>4</sup> after and before.

<sup>2</sup>Your resting-place.

<sup>3</sup>A short distance away.

<sup>4</sup>A prayer to the Virgin Mary.

36

The drouping Night thus creepeth on them
fast,
And the sad humour loading their eye liddes,
As messenger of Morpheus on them cast
Sweet slombring deaw, the which to sleepe them biddes.
Unto their lodgings then his guesstes he rid-des:
Where when all drownd in deadly sleepe he findes,
He to his study goes, and there amiddes
His Magick bookes and artes of sundry kindes,
He seekes out mighty charmes, to trouble
sleepe mindes.

37

Then choosing out few wordes most horrible, (Let none them read) thereof did verses frame,
With which and other spelles like terrible,
He bad awake blacke Plutoes griesly Dame,<sup>1</sup>
And curséd heaven, and spake reprochfull
shame
Of highest God, the Lord of life and light;
A bold bad man, that dar'd to call by name
Great Gorgon, Prince of darknesse and dead
night,
At which Cocytus quakes, and Styx is put to flight.<sup>2</sup>

38

And forth he cald out of deepe darknesse
dred
Legions of Sprights, the which like little flies
Fluttering about his ever damnéd hed,
A-waite whereto their service he applyes,
To aide his friends, or fray his enimies:
Of those he chose out two, the falsest twoo,
And fittest for to forge true-seeming lyes;
The one of them he gave a message too,
The other by him selfe staide other worke to doo.

39

He making speedy way through sperséd ayre,
And through the world of waters wide and
deepe,
To Morpheus house doth hastily repaire.
Amid the bowels of the earth full steepe,

<sup>1</sup>Proserpine.<sup>2</sup>Two rivers in Hades.

And low, where dawning day doth never peepe,
His dwelling is; there Tethys<sup>3</sup> his wet bed
Doth ever wash, and Cynthia<sup>4</sup> still doth
steepe
In silver deaw his ever-drouping hed, Whiles sad Night over him her mantle black doth spred.

40

Whose double gates he findeth lockéd fast,
The one faire fram'd of burnisht Yvory,
The other all with silver overcast;
And wakefull dogges before them farre do lye,
Watching to banish Care their enemy,
Who oft is wont to trouble gentle sleepe.
By them the Sprite doth passe in quietly,
And unto Morpheus comes, whom drownéd
deepe
In drowsie fit he findes: of nothing he takes keepe.

41

And more, to lulle him in his slumber soft,
A trickling streame from high rocke tumbling
downe
And ever-drizling raine upon the loft,
Mixt with a murmuring winde, much like the sowne
Of swarming Bees, did cast him in a swowne:
No other noyse, nor peoples troublous cryes,
As still are wont t'annoy the walléd towne,
Might there be heard: but carelesse Quiet
lyes,
Wrapt in eternall silence farre from enemyes.

42

The messenger approaching to him spake,
But his wast wordes returnd to him in vaine:
So sound he slept, that nought mought him
awake.
Then rudely he him thrust, and pusht with
paine,
Whereat he gan to stretch: but he againe Shooke him so hard, that forcéd him to speake.
As one then in a dreame, whose dryer braine<sup>5</sup>
Is tost with troubled sights and fancies weake,
He mumbled soft, but would not all his silence breake.

<sup>3</sup>The ocean.<sup>4</sup>The moon.<sup>5</sup>It was once supposed that the brain, when too dry, gave rise to troubled dreams.

43

The Sprite then gan more boldly him to wake,

And threatned unto him the dreaded name
Of Hecate:<sup>1</sup> whereat he gan to quake,
And lifting up his lumpish head, with blame

Halfe angry askéd him, for what he came.
Hither (quoth he) me Archimago sent,
He that the stubborne Sprites can wisely
tame,
He bids thee to him send for his intent
A fit false dreame, that can delude the sleepers sent.

44

The God obeyde, and calling forth straight
way

A diverse dreame out of his prison darke,
Delivered it to him, and downe did lay
His heaue head, deuoid of carefull carke, Whose sences all were straight benumbd and starke.

He backe returning by the Yvorie dore,
Remounted up as light as chearefull Larke,
And on his litle winges the dreame he
bore

In hast unto his Lord, where he him left afore.

45

Who all this while with charmes and hidden artes,

Had made a Lady of that other Spright,
And fram'd of liquid ayre her tender partes
So lively, and so like in all mens sight,
That weaker sence it could have ravisht
quight:

The maker selfe for all his wondrous witt,
Was nigh beguiled with so goodly sight:
Her all in white he clad, and over it
Cast a blacke stole, most like to seeme for Una fit.

46

Now when that ydle dreame was to him
brought,

Unto that Elfin knight he bad him fly,
Where he slept soundly void of evill thought,
And with false shewes abuse his fantasy,

<sup>1</sup>Goddess of Hades, the patroness of witches.

In sort as he him schooléd privily:
And that new creature borne without her dew,<sup>2</sup>

Full of the makers guile, with usage sly
He taught to imitate that Lady trew, Whose semblance she did carrie under feignéd hew.

47

Thus well instructed, to their worke they
hast,

And comming where the knight in slomber
lay,

The one upon his hardy head him plast,
And made him dreame of loves and lustfull
play,

That nigh his manly hart did melt away,
Bathéd in wanton blis and wicked joy:
Then seeméd him his Lady by him lay,
And to him playnd, how that false wingéd boy,<sup>3</sup>

Her chast hart had subdewd, to learne Dame pleasures toy.

48

And she her selfe of beautie soveraigne
Queene,

Faire Venus seemde unto his bed to bring
Her, whom he waking evermore did weene,
To be the chastest flowre, that ay did spring
On earthly braunch, the daughter of a
king,

Now a loose Leman to vile service bound:
And eke the Graces seeméd all to sing,
Hymen Iö Hymen,<sup>4</sup> dauncing all around,
Whilst freshest Flora<sup>5</sup> her with Yvie girdond crownd.

49

In this great passion of unwonted lust,
Or wonted feare of doing ought amis,
He started up, as seeming to mistrust,
Some secret ill, or hidden foe of his:
Lo there before his face his Lady is,
Under blake stole hyding her bayted hooke,
And as halfe blushing offred him to kis,
With gentle blandishment and lovely looke,
Most like that virgin true, which for her knight him took.

<sup>2</sup>Born unnaturally.

<sup>3</sup>Cupid.

<sup>4</sup>Hymen was the god of marriage.

<sup>5</sup>Goddess of flowers.

50

All cleane dismayd to see so uncouth sight,
And halfe enragéd at her shamelesse guise,
He thought have slaine her in his fierce despight:

But hasty heat tempring with sufferance
wise,

He stayde his hand, and gan himselfe advise
To prove his sense, and tempt her faignéd
truth.

Wringing her hands in wemens pitteous wise,
Tho can she weepe, to stirre up gentle ruth,
Both for her noble bloud, and for her tender youth.

51

And said, Ah Sir, my liege Lord and my love,
Shall I accuse the hidden cruell fate,
And mightie causes wrought in heaven
above,

Or the blind God, that doth me thus amate,
For hopéd love to winne me certaine hate?

Yet thus perforce he bids me do, or die.

Die is my dew: yet rew my wretched state

You, whom my hard avenging destinie

Hath made judge of my life or death indif-ferently.

52

Your owne deare sake forst me at first to leave

My Fathers kingdome, There she stopt with
teares;

Her swollen hart her speach seemd to be-reave,

And then againe begun, My weaker yeares Captiv'd to fortune and frayle worldly feares,

Fly to your faith for succour and sure ayde:
Let me not dye in languor and long teares.

Why Dame (quoth he) what hath ye thus dismayd?

What frayes ye, that were wont to comfort me affrayd?

53

Love of your selfe, she said, and deare constraint

Lets me not sleepe, but wast the wearie
night

In secret anguish and unpittied plaint,

Whiles you in carelesse sleepe are drownéd
quight.

Her doubtfull words made that redoubted
knight

Suspect her truth: yet since no'untruth he knew,

Her fawning love with foule disdainefull
spight

He would not shend, but said, Deare dame
I rew,

That for my sake unknowne such grieve unto you grew.

54

Assure your selfe, it fell not all to ground;

For all so deare as life is to my hart,

I deeme your love, and hold me to you
bound;

Ne let vaine feares procure your needlesse
smart,

Where cause is none, but to your rest depart.

Not all content, yet seemd she to appease

Her mournfull plaintes, beguiled of her art,<sup>1</sup>

And fed with words, that could not chuse but
please,

So slyding softly forth, she turnd as to her
ease.

55

Long after lay he musing at her mood,

Much griev'd to thinke that gentle Dame so
light,

For whose defence he was to shed his blood.

At last dull wearinesse of former fight

Having yrockt asleepe his irkesome spright,

That troublous dreame gan freshly tosse his
braine,

With bowres, and beds, and Ladies deare
delight:

But when he saw his labour all was vaine,

With that misforméd spright he backe
returnd againe.

CANTO II

The guilefull great Enchaunter parts

The Redcrosse Knight from Truth:

Into whose stead faire falshood steps,

And workes him wofull ruth.

I

By this the Northerne wagoner<sup>2</sup> had set His sevenfold teme<sup>3</sup> behind the stedfast
starre,<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup>Disappointed in her art.

<sup>2</sup>Boötes.

<sup>3</sup>Charles's Wain, or the Great Bear.

<sup>4</sup>The pole star.

That was in Ocean waves yet never wet,
But firme is fixt, and sendeth light from farre
To all, that in the wide deepe wandring arre:
And chearefull Chaunticlere with his note shrill

Had warnéd once, that Phæbus fiery carre<sup>1</sup>
In hast was climbing up the Easterne hill, Full envious that night so long his roome did fill.

2

When those accurséd messengers of hell,
That feigning dreame, and that faire-forgéd
Spright

Came to their wicked maister, and gan tell Their bootelesse paines, and ill succeeding
night:

Who all in rage to see his skilfull might Deluded so, gan threaten hellish paine
And sad Proserpines wrath, them to affright.
But when he saw his threatning was but
vaine,

He cast about, and searcht his balefull
bookes againe.

3

Eftsoones he tooke that miscreated faire,
And that false other Spright, on whom he
spred

A seeming body of the subtile aire,
Like a young Squire, in loves and lusty-hed
His wanton dayes that ever loosely led,
Without regard of armes and dreaded fight:
Those two he tooke, and in a secret bed,
Covered with darknesse and misdeeming
night,

Them both together laid, to joy in vaine
delight.

4

Forthwith he runnes with feignéd faithfull hast
Unto his guest, who after troublous sights
And dreames, gan now to take more sound
repat,

Whom suddenly he wakes with fearefull
frights,

As one aghast with feends or damnéd sprights,
And to him cals, Rise rise unhappy Swaine,
That here wex old in sleepe, whiles wicked
wights

Have knit themselves in Venus shamefull
chaine;

Come see, where your false Lady doth her honour staine.

<sup>1</sup>The sun.

5

All in amaze he suddenly up start
With sword in hand, and with the old man
went;

Who soone him brought into a secret part,
Where that false couple were full closely
ment

In wanton lust and lewd embracément:
Which when he saw, he burnt with gealous
fire,

The eye of reason was with rage yblent,
And would have slaine them in his furious
ire,

But hardly was restrained of that agéd sire.

6

Returning to his bed in torment great,
And bitter anguish of his guiltie sight,
He could not rest, but did his stout heart
eat,

And wast his inward gall with deepe despight,
Yrkesome of life, and too long lingring night.
At last faire Hesperus in highest skie
Had spent his lampe,<sup>2</sup> and brought forth
dawning light,

Then up he rose, and clad him hastily;
The Dwarfe him brought his steed: so both away do fly.

7

Now when the rosy-fingred Morning faire,
Weary of agéd Tithones saffron bed,
Had spred her purple robe through deawy aire,

And the high hils Titan<sup>3</sup> discoveréd,
The royall virgin shooke off drowsy-hed,
And rising forth out of her baser bowre, Lookt for her knight, who far away was
fled,

And for her Dwarfe, that wont to wait each
houre;

Then gan she waile and weepe, to see that woefull stowre.

8

And after him she rode with so much speede
As her slow beast could make, but all in
vaine;

For him so far had borne his light-foot steede,
Prickéd with wrath and fiery fierce disdaine,

<sup>2</sup>The morning star had yielded place to dawn.

<sup>3</sup>The sun.

That him to follow was but fruitlesse paine;
 Yet she her weary limbes would never rest,
 But every hill and dale, each wood and
     plaine
 Did search, sore grievéd in her gentle brest,
 He so ungently left her, whom she lovéd best.

9

But subtile Archimago, when his guests
 He saw divided into double parts,
 And Una wandring in woods and forrests,
 Th'end of his drift,<sup>1</sup> he praised his divelish arts,
 That had such might over true meaning
     harts;
 Yet rests not so, but other meanes doth
     make,
 How he may worke unto her further smarts:
 For her he hated as the hissing snake,
 And in her many troubles did most pleasure
     take.

10

He then devisde himselfe how to disguise;
 For by his mightie science<sup>2</sup> he could take
 As many formes and shapes in seeming wise,
 As ever Proteus<sup>3</sup> to himselfe could make:
 Sometime a fowle, sometime a fish in lake,
 Now like a foxe, now like a dragon fell,
 That of himselfe he oft for feare would quake,
 And oft would flie away. O who can tell
 The hidden power of herbes, and might of Magicke spell?

11

But now seemde best, the person to put on
 Of that good knight, his late beguiléd guest:
 In mighty armes he was yclad anon:
 And silver shield: upon his coward brest
 A bloudy crosse, and on his craven crest
 A bounch of haire discoloured diversly:
 Full jolly knight he seemde, and well adrest,
 And when he sate upon his courser free,
Saint George himself ye would have deeméd him to be.

12

But he the knight, whose semblaunt he did
     beare,
 The true Saint George was wandred far away,
 Still flying from his thoughts and gealous
     feare;
 Will was his guide, and grieve led him astray.

<sup>1</sup>The end he aimed at.

<sup>2</sup>His magic.

<sup>3</sup>A sea-god.

At last him chaunst to meete upon the way
 A faithlesse Sarazin<sup>4</sup> all arm'd to point,
 In whose great shield was writ with letters gay
Sans foy:<sup>5</sup> full large of limbe and every joint
 He was, and caréd not for God or man a point.

13

He had a faire companion of his way,
 A goodly Lady<sup>6</sup> clad in scarlot red,
 Purpled with gold and pearle of rich assay,
 And like a Persian mitre<sup>7</sup> on her hed.
 She wore, with crownes and owches garnished,
 The which her lavish lovers to her gave;
 Her wanton palfrey all was overspred
 With tinsell trappings, woven like a wave, Whose bridle rung with golden bells and bosses brave.

14

With faire disport and courting dalliaunce
 She intertaine her lover all the way:
 But when she saw the knight his speare
     advance,
 She soone left off her mirth and wanton play,
 And bad her knight addresse him to the fray:
 His foe was nigh at hand. He, prickt with
     pride
 And hope to winne his Ladies heart that day,
 Forth spurred fast: adowne his coursers side
 The red blood trickling stained the way, as he did ride.

15

The knight of the Redcrosse when him he spide,
 Spurring so hote with rage despiteous, Gan fairely couch his speare, and towards ride:
 Soone meete they both, both fell and furious,
 That daunted with their forces hideous,
 Their s:eedes do stagger, and amazéd stand,
 And eke themselves too rudely rigorous,
 Astonied with the stroke of their owne hand,
 Do backe rebut, and each to other yeeldeth
     land.

<sup>4</sup>Used as a generic term for pagans.

<sup>5</sup>Faithless.

<sup>6</sup>Duessa, typifying falsehood, who calls herself Fidessa. She probably represents Mary, Queen of Scots—though it has also been suggested that she represents Mary Tudor—and the Roman Catholic Church.

<sup>7</sup>The papal crown is meant.

16

As when two rams stird with ambitious
pride,
Fight for the rule of the rich fleecéd flocke,
Their hornéd fronts so fierce on either side
Do meete, that with the terrour of the shocke
Astonied both, stand sencelesse as a blocke,
Forgetfull of the hanging victory:
So stood these twaine, unmovéd as a rocke,
Both staring fierce, and holding idely,
The broken reliques<sup>1</sup> of their former cruelty.

17

The Sarazin sore daunted with the buffe Snatcheth his sword, and fiercely to him
flies;
Who well it wards, and quytesth cuff with cuff:
Each others equall puissance envies,
And through their iron sides with cruelties
Does seeke to perce: repining courage yields
No foote to foe. The flashing fier flies
As from a forge out of their burning shields,
And streames of purple blood new dies the verdant fields.

18

Curse on that Crosse (quoth then the Sarazin)
That keepes thy body from the bitter fit;<sup>2</sup>
Dead long ygoe I wote thou haddest bin,
Had not that charme from thee forwarnéd
it:
But yet I warne thee now assuréd sitt,
And hide thy head. Therewith upon his crest
With rigour so outrageous he smitt,
That a large share it hewd out of the rest,
And glauncing downe his shield, from blame him fairely blest.<sup>3</sup>

19

Who thereat wondrous wroth, the sleeping spark
Of native vertue gan eftsoones revive,
And at his haughtie helmet making mark,
So hugely stroke, that it the steele did rive,

And cleft his head. He tumbling downe
alive,
With bloody mouth his mother earth did kis,
Greeting his grave: his grudging ghost did
strive
With the fraile flesh; at last it flitted is,
Whither the soules do fly of men, that live amis.

20

The Lady when she saw her champion fall,
Like the old ruines of a broken towre,
Staid not to waile his woefull funerall,
But from him fled away with all her powre;
Who after her as hastily gan scowre,
Bidding the Dwarfes with him to bring away
The Sarazins shield, signe of the conqueroure.

Her soone he overtooke, and bad to stay,
For present cause was none of dread her to dismay.

21

She turning backe with ruefull countenance,
Cride, Mercy mercy Sir vouchsafe to show
On silly Dame, subject to hard mischaunce,
And to your mighty will. Her humblesse low
In so rich weedes and seeming glorious show,
Did much emmove his stout heroïcke heart,
And said, Deare dame, your suddein overthrow

Much rueth me; but now put feare apart,
And tell, both who ye be, and who that tooke your part.

22

Melting in teares, then gan she thus lament;
The wretched woman, whom unhappy howre
Hath now made thrall to your commande-
ment,

Before that angry heavens list to lowre,
And fortune false betraide me to your powre,
Was (O what now availeth that I was!)
Borne the sole daughter of an Emperour,
He that the wide West under his rule has,
And high hath set his throne, where Tiberis
doth pas.<sup>4</sup>

23

He in the first flowre of my freshest age, Betrothéd me unto the onely haire
Of a most mighty king, most rich and sage;
Was never Prince so faithfull and so faire,

<sup>1</sup>The broken shafts of their lances.

<sup>2</sup>Death.

<sup>3</sup>Delivered him from harm.

<sup>4</sup>The Pope, at Rome, where the river Tiber passes.

Was never Prince so meeke and debonaire;
 But ere my hopéd day of spousall shone,
 My dearest Lord fell from high honours
 staire,
 Into the hands of his accurséd fone,
 And cruelly was slaine, that shall I ever mone.

24

His blessed body spoild of lively breath,
 Was afterward, I know not how, convoid
 And from me hid: of whose most innocent
 death
 When tidings came to me unhappy maid,
 O how great sorrow my sad soule assaid.
 Then forth I went his woefull corse to find,
 And many yeares throughout the world I straid,
 A virgin widow, whose deepe wounded mind
 With love, long time did languish as the stricken hind.

25

At last it chauncéd this proud Sarazin,
 To meete me wandring, who perforce me
 led
 With him away, but yet could never win
 The Fort, that Ladies hold in soveraigne
 dread.
 There lies he now with foule dishonour dead,
 Who whiles he liv'de, was calléd proud Sans
foy,
 The eldest of three brethren, all three bred
 Of one bad sire, whose youngest is Sans
joy,<sup>1</sup>
 And twixt them both was borne the bloudy bold Sans loy.<sup>2</sup>

26

In this sad plight, friendlesse, unfortunate,
 Now miserable I Fidessa dwell,
 Craving of you in pitty of my state,
 To do none ill, if please ye not do well.
 He in great passion all this while did dwell,
 More busying his quicke eyes, her face to view,
 Then his dull eares, to heare what she did
 tell;
 And said, faire Lady hart of flint would rew
 The undeservéd woes and sorrowes, which ye shew.

<sup>1</sup>Without happiness.<sup>2</sup>Lawless.

27

Henceforth in safe assuraunce may ye rest, Having both found a new friend you to aid,
 And lost an old foe, that did you molest:
 Better new friend then an old foe is said.
 With chaunge of cheare the seeming simple maid
 Let fall her eyen, as shamefast to the earth,
 And yeelding soft, in that she nought gain-
 said,
 So forth they rode, he feining seemely merth,
 And she coy lookes: so dainty they say maketh derth.<sup>3</sup>

28

Long time they thus together traveiléd,
 Till weary of their way, they came at last,
 Where grew two goodly trees, that faire did
 spred
 Their armes abroad, with gray mosse over-
 cast,
 And their greene leaves trembling with every blast,
 Made a calme shadow far in compasse
 round:
 The fearefull Shepheard often there aghast
 Under them never sat, ne wont there sound
 His mery oaten pipe, but shund th'unlucky ground.

29

But this good knight soone as he them can
 spie,
 For the coole shade him thither hastily got:
 For golden Phæbus now ymounted hie,
 From fiery wheeles of his faire chariot
 Hurléd his beame so scorching cruell hot,
 That living creature mote it not abide;
 And his new Lady it enduréd not.
 There they alight, in hope themselves to hide
 From the fierce heat, and rest their weary limbs a tide.

30

Faire seemely pleasaunce each to other makes,
 With goodly purposes there as they sit:
 And in his falséd fancy he her takes
 To be the fairest wight, that livéd yit;

<sup>3</sup>Coyneess causes desire.

Which to expresse, he bends his gentle wit,
And thinking of those braunches greene to
frame

A girlond for her dainty forehead fit,
He pluckt a bough: out of whose rift there
came

Small drops of gory bloud, that trickled downe the same.

31

Therewith a piteous yelling voyce was heard,
Crying, O spare with guilty hands to teare
My tender sides in this rough rynd embard,
But fly, ah fly far hence away, for feare
Least to you hap, that happened to me heare,
And to this wretched Lady, my deare love,
O too deare love, love bought with death too
deare.

Astond he stood, and up his haire did hove,
And with that suddein horror could no member move.

32

At last whenas the dreadfull passion
Was overpast, and manhood well awake,
Yet musing at the straunge occasion,
And doubting much his sence, he thus be-
spake;

What voyce of damnéd Ghost from Limbo
lake,<sup>1</sup>

Or guilefull spright wandring in empty aire,
Both which fraile men do oftentimes mistake,
Sends to my doubtfull eares these speeches
rare,<sup>2</sup>

And ruefull plaints, me bidding guiltlesse
bloud to spare?

33

Then groning deepe, Nor damnéd Ghost (quoth he),

Nor guilefull sprite to thee these wordes doth
speake,

But once a man Fradubio,<sup>3</sup> now a tree,
Wretched man, wretched tree; whose nature
weake,

A cruell witch her curséd will to wreake,
Hath thus transformd, and plast in open plaines,

Where Boreas<sup>4</sup> doth blow full bitter bleake,

And scorching Sunne does dry my secret
vaines:

For though a tree I seeme, yet cold and heat
me paines.

34

Say on Fradubio then, or man, or tree,
Quoth then the knight, by whose mischievous
arts

Art thou misshapéd thus, as now I see?
He oft finds med'cine, who his grieft imparts;
But double griefs afflict concealing harts,
As raging flames who striveth to suppress.
The author then (said he) of all my smarts,
Is one Duessa a false sorceresse,
That many errant knights hath brought to wretchednesse.

35

In prime of youthly yeares, when corage hot
The fire of love and joy of chevalree
First kindled in my brest, it was my lot
To love this gentle Lady, whom ye see,
Now not a Lady, but a seeming tree;
With whom as once I rode accompanyde,
Me chauncéd of a knight encountred bee,
That had a like faire Lady by his syde,
Like a faire Lady, but did fowle Duessa
hyde.

36

Whose forgéd beauty he did take in hand,<sup>5</sup>
All other Dames to have exceeded farre;
I in defence of mine did likewise stand,
Mine, that did then shine as the Morning
starre:

So both to battell fierce arraungéd arre,
In which his harder fortune was to fall
Under my speare: such is the dye of warre:
His Lady left as a prise martiall,
Did yield her comely person, to be at my call.

37

So doubly lov'd of Ladies unlike faire,
Th'one seeming such, the other such indeede,
One day in doubt I cast for to compare,
Whether in beauties glorie did exceede;<sup>6</sup>
A Rosy girlond was the victors meede:
Both seemde to win, and both seemde won
to bee,

So hard the discord was to be agreede.

<sup>1</sup>Hades.

<sup>2</sup>Speech thin and faint.

<sup>3</sup>One of doubtful faith.

<sup>4</sup>The north wind.

<sup>5</sup>Did maintain.

<sup>6</sup>Which of the two excelled.

Fredissa<sup>1</sup> was as faire, as faire mote bee,
And ever false Duessa seemde as faire as shee.

38

The wicked witch now seeing all this while
The doubtfull ballaunce equally to sway,
What not by right, she cast to win by guile,
And by her hellish science raisd streightway
A foggy mist, that overcast the day,
And a dull blast, that breathing on her face,
Dimméd her former beauties shining ray,
And with foule ugly forme did her disgrace:
Then was she faire alone, when none was faire in place.

39

Then cride she out, Fye, fye, deforméd wight, Whose borrowed beautie now appeareth
plaine
To have before bewitchéd all mens sight;
O leave her soone, or let her soone be slaine.
Her loathly visage viewing with disdaine, Eftsoones I thought her such, as she me
told,
And would have kild her; but with faigné
paine,
The false witch did my wrathfull hand withhold;
So left her, where she now is turnd to treen mould.<sup>2</sup>

40

Thenceforth I tooke Duessa for my Dame,
And in the witch unweening joyd long time,
Ne ever wist, but that she was the same,
Till on a day (that day is every Prime,
When Witches wont do penance for their crime)
I chaunst to see her in her proper hew,
Bathing her selfe in origane and thyme:
A filthy foule old woman I did vew,
That ever to have toucht her, I did deadly rew.

41

Her neather partes misshapen, monstrous,
Were hidd in water, that I could not see,
But they did seeme more foule and hideous,
Then womans shape man would beleve to
bee.

<sup>1</sup>Typifies such faith as is possible to a doubter.

<sup>2</sup>To the shape of a tree.

Thenceforth from her most beastly companie
I gan refraine, in minde to slip away,
Soone as appeard safe opportunitie:
For danger great, if not assur'd decay
I saw before mine eyes, if I were knowne to stray.

42

The divelish hag by chaunges of my cheate<sup>3</sup>
Perceiv'd my thought, and drown'd in sleepe
night,
With wicked herbes and ointments did besmeare
My bodie all, through charmes and magicke
might,
That all my senses were bereavéd quight:
Then brought she me into this desert waste,
And by my wretched lovers side me pight,
Where now enclosed in wooden wals full faste,
Banisht from living wights, our wearie dayes
we waste.

43

But how long time, said then the Elán
knight,
Are you in this misforméd house to dwell?
We may not chaunge (quoth he) this evil
plight,
Till we be bathéd in a living well:
That is the terme prescribed by the spell.
O how, said he, mote I that well out find,
That may restore you to your wonted well?<sup>4</sup>
Time and suffiséd fates to former kynd Shall us restore,<sup>5</sup> none else from hence may us unbynd.

44

The false Duessa, now Fidessa hight,
Heard how in vaine Fradubio did lament,
And knew well all was true. But the good
knight
Full of sad feare and ghastly dreriment,
When all this spech the living tree had spent,
The bleeding bough did thrust into the
ground,
That from the bloud he might be innocent,
And with fresh clay did close the wooden
wound:
Then turning to his Lady, dead with feare
her found.

<sup>3</sup>By the change in my countenance.

<sup>4</sup>Accustomed well-being.

<sup>5</sup>Time and the fitting hour shall restore 'us to our former nature.

45

Her seeming dead he found with feignéd
 feare,
 As all unweeting of that well she knew,
 And paynd himselfe with busie care to reare
 Her out of carelesse swowne. Her eylyds blew
 And dimméd sight with pale and deadly hew
 At last she up gan lift: with trembling cheare
 Her up he tooke, too simple and too trew,
 And oft her kist. At length all passéd
 feare,
 He set her on her steede, and forward forth
 did beare.

CANTO III

*Forsaken Truth long seekes her love,
 And makes the Lyon mylde,
 Marres blind Devotions mart, and fals
 In hand of leachour vylde.*

I

• Nought is there under heav'ns wide hollow-
 nesse,
 That moves more deare compassion of mind,
 Then beautie brought t'unworthy wretched-
 nesse
 Through envies snares or fortunes freakes
 unkind:
 I, whether lately through her brightnessse
 blind,
 Or through alleageance and fast fealtie,
 Which I do owe unto all woman kind,
 Feele my heart perst with so great agonie,
 When such I see, that all for pittie I could die.

2

And now it is empassionéd so deepe,
 For fairest *Una*s sake, of whom I sing,
 That my fraile eyes these lines with teares do
 steepe,
 To thinke how she through guilefull hande-
 ling,
 Though true as touch,<sup>1</sup> though daughter of a
 king,
 Though faire as ever living wight was faire,
 Though nor in word nor deede ill meriting,
 Is from her knight divorcéd in despaire
 And her due loves deriv'd to that vile witches share.

<sup>1</sup>Touchstone, used to test gold.

3

Yet she most faithfull Ladie all this while Forsaken, wofull, solitarie mayd
 Farre from all peoples prease, as in exile,
 In wildernesse and wastfull deserts strayd,
 To seeke her knight; who subtilly betrayd
 Through that late vision, which th'Enchaunter wrought,
 Had her abandond. She of nought affrayd,
 Through woods and wastnesse wide him
 daily sought;
 Yet wishéd tydings none of him unto her
 brought.

4

One day nigh wearie of the yrkesome way,
 From her unhastie beast she did alight,
 And on the grasse her daintie limbes did
 lay
 In secret shadow, farre from all mens sight:
 From her faire head her fillet she undight,
 And laid her stole aside. Her angels face
 As the great eye of heaven shynéd bright,
 And made a sunshine in the shadie place;
 Did never mortall eye behold such heavenly
 grace.

5

It fortunéd out of the thickest wood
 A ramping Lyon<sup>2</sup> rushéd suddainly,
 Hunting full greedie after salvage blood;
 Soone as the royall virgin he did spy,
 With gaping mouth at her ran greedily,
 To have attonce devour'd her tender corse:
 But to the pray when as he drew more ny,
 His bloudie rage asswagéd with remorse,
 And with the sight amazd, forgat his furious
 forse.

6

In stead thereof he kist her wearie feet,
 And lickt her lilly hands with fawning tong,
 As he her wrongéd innocence did weat.
 O how can beautie maister the most strong,
 And simple truth subdue avenging wrong?
 Whose yeelded pride and proud submission,
 Still dreading death, when she had markéd
 long,
 Her hart gan melt in great compassion,
 And drizling teares did shed for pure affection.

<sup>2</sup>Probably typifying reason.

7

The Lyon Lord of every beast in field
 Quoth she, his princely puissance doth abate,
 And mightie proud to humble weake does yield,

Forgetfull of the hungry rage, which late
 Him prickt, in pittie of my sad estate:
 But he my Lyon, and my noble Lord
 How does he find in cruell hart to hate
 Her that him lov'd, and ever most adord,
 As the God of my life? why hath he me
 abhord?

8

Redounding teares did choke th'end of her
 plaint,

Which softly ecchoed from the neighbour
 wood;

And sad to see her sorrowfull constraint
 The kingly beast upon her gazing stood;
 With pittie calmd, downe fell his angry mood.
 At last in close hart shutting up her paine,
 Arose the virgin borne of heavenly brood,
 And to her snowy Palfrey got againe,
 To seeke her strayed Champion, if she might attaine.

9

The Lyon would not leave her desolate,
 But with her went along, as a strong gard
 Of her chaste person, and a faithfull mate
 Of her sad troubles and misfortunes hard:
 Still when she slept, he kept both watch and
 ward,

And when she wakt, he waited diligent,
 With humble service to her will prepad:
 From her faire eyes he tooke commaunde-
 ment,

And ever by her lookes conceiv'd her intent.

10

Long she thus travel'd through deserts wyde,

By which she thought her wandring knight
 shold pas,

Yet never shew of living wight espyde;
 Till that at length she found the troden gras,
 In which the tract of peoples footing was,
 Under the steepe foot of a mountaine hore;
 The same she followes, till at last she has
 A damzell spyde<sup>1</sup> slow footing her before,
 That on her shoulders sad a pot of water
 bore.

<sup>1</sup>Abessa, representing superstition.

11

To whom approching she to her gan call,
 To weet, if dwelling place were nigh at hand;
 But the rude wench her answer'd nought at
 all,

She could not heare, nor speake, nor understand;

Till seeing by her side the Lyon stand,
 With suddaine feare her pitcher downe she threw,

And fled away: for never in that land
 Face of faire Ladie she before did vew,<sup>2</sup>
 And that dread Lyons looke her cast in deadly hew.<sup>3</sup>

12

Full fast she fled, ne ever lookt behynd,
 As if her life upon the wager lay,
 And home she came, whereas her mother
 bylnd<sup>4</sup>

Sate in eternall night: nought could she say,
 But suddaine catching hold, did her dismay
 With quaking hands, and other signes of feare:
 Who full of ghastly fright and cold affray,
 Gan shut the dore. By this arriv'd there Dame Una, wearie Dame, and entrance did requere.

13

Which when none yeelded, her unruly Page
 With his rude clawes the wicket open rent,
 And let her in; where of his cruell rage
 Nigh dead with feare, and faint astonishment,
 She found them both in darkesome corner
 pent;

Where that old woman day and night did pray
 Upon her beades devoutly penitent;
 Nine hundred Pater noster<sup>5</sup> every day,
 And thrise nine hundred Aves<sup>6</sup> she was wont
 to say.

14

And to augment her painefull pennance
 more,

Thrise every weeke in ashes she did sit,
 And next her wrinkled skin rough sackcloth
 wore,

And thrise three times did fast from any bit:<sup>7</sup>

<sup>2</sup>Abessa has never beheld Truth, whose very appearance now terrifies her.

<sup>3</sup>Made her as pale as death.

<sup>4</sup>Corceca, representing blind devotion.

<sup>5</sup>Our Father; the Lord's Prayer.

<sup>6</sup>Prayer to the Virgin.

<sup>7</sup>She fasted three whole days of each week.

But now for feare her beads she did forget.
Whose needlesse dread for to remove away,
Faire Una framéd words and count'nance
fit:

Which hardly doen, at length she gan them
pray,

That in their cotage small, that night she rest her may.

15

The day is spent, and commeth drowsie
night,

When every creature shrowded is in sleepe;
Sad Una downe her laies in wearie plight,
And at her feet the Lyon watch doth
keepe:

In stead of rest, she does lament, and weepe
For the late losse of her deare lovéd knight,
And sighes, and grones, and evermore does
steepe

Her tender brest in bitter teares all night,
All night she thinks too long, and often looks for light.

16

Now when Aldeboran<sup>1</sup> was mounted hie
Above the shynie Cassiopeiæ chaire,<sup>2</sup>
And all in deadly sleepe did drownéd lie,
One<sup>3</sup> knockéd at the dore, and in would fare;
He knockéd fast, and often curst, and sware,
That readie entrance was not at his call:
For on his backe a heavy load he bare
Of nightly stelths and pillage severall,<sup>4</sup>
Which he had got abroad by purchase criminall.<sup>5</sup>

17

He was to weet a stout and sturdie thiefe,
Wont to robbe Churches of their ornaments,
And poore mens boxes of their due reliefe,
Which given was to them for good intents;
The holy Saints of their rich vestiments
He did disrobe, when all men carelesse
slept,

And spoild the Priests of their habiliments, Whiles none the holy things in safety kept;
Then he by cunning sleights in at the window crept.

<sup>1</sup>A star of the constellation of Taurus.

<sup>2</sup>The constellation called by this name.

<sup>3</sup>Kirkrapine, or Church-Robber.

<sup>4</sup>Thefts by night and pillage in various places.

<sup>5</sup>By criminal means.

18

And all that he by right or wrong could find,
Unto this house he brought, and did bestow
Upon the daughter of this woman blind,
Abessa daughter of Corceca slow,
With whom he whoredome usd, that few did
know,

And fed her fat with feast of offerings,
And plentie, which in all the land did grow;
Ne sparéd he to give her gold and rings:
And now he to her brought part of his stolen things.

19

Thus long the dore with rage and threats he bet,

Yet of those fearefull women none durst rize,
The Lyon frayéd them, him in to let:
He would no longer stay him to advize,
But open breakes the dore in furious wize,
And entring is; when that disdainfull beast
Encountering fierce, him suddaine doth sur-
prize,

And seizing cruell clawes on trembling brest,
Under his Lordly foot him proudly hath supprest.

20

Him booteth not resist, nor succour call,
His bleeding hart is in the vengers hand,
Who streight him rent in thousand peeces
small,

And quite dismembred hath: the thirstie land Drunke up his life; his corse left on the strand.

His fearefull friends weare out the wofull
night,

Ne dare to weepe, nor seeme to understand
The heavie hap, which on them is alight, Affraid, least to themselves the like mishap-pen might.

21

Now when broad day the world discoveréd
has,

Up Una rose, up rose the Lyon eke,
And on their former journey forward pas,
In wayes unknowne, her wandring knight to seeke,

With paines farre passing that long wandring
Greeke,<sup>6</sup>

That for his love refuséd deitie;
Such were the labours of this Lady meeke,

<sup>6</sup>Ulysses.

Still seeking him, that from her still did flie,
Then furthest from her hope, when most she weenéd nie.

22

Soone as she parted thence, the fearefull
twaine,
That blind old woman and her daughter
deare
Came forth, and finding Kirrapine there
slaine,
For anguish great they gan to rend their
heare,
And beat their brests, and naked flesh to
teare.
And when they both had wept and wayld
their fill,
Then forth they ranne like two amazéd
deare,
Halfe mad through malice, and revenging
will,
To follow her, that was the causer of their ill.

23

Whom overtaking, they gan loudly bray,
With hollow howling, and lamenting cry,
Shamefully at her rayling all the way,
And her accusing of dishonesty,
That was the flowre of faith and chastity;
And still amidst her rayling, she did pray,
That plagues, and mischiefs, and long misery
Might fall on her, and follow all the way,
And that in endlesse error she might ever stray.

24

But when she saw her prayers nought pre-vaile,
She backe returnéd with some labour lost;
And in the way as she did weepe and waile,
A knight her met in mighty armes embost,
Yet knight was not for all his bragging bost,
But subtyll Archimag, that Una sought
By traynes<sup>1</sup> into new troubles to have tost:
Of that old woman tydings he besought,
If that of such a Ladie she could tellen ought.

25

Therewith she gan her passion to renew,
And cry, and curse, and raile, and rend her
heare,
Saying, that harlot she too lately knew,
That caud her shed so many a bitter teare,

<sup>1</sup>By tricks.

And so forth told the story of her feare:
Much seeméd he to mone her haplesse
chaunce,
And after for that Ladie did inquire;
Which being taught, he forward gan advaunce
His faire enchaunted steed, and eke his charméd launce.

26

Ere long he came, where Una traveild slow,
And that wilde Champion wayting her be-
syde:
Whom seeing such, for dread he durst not
show
Himselfe too nigh at hand, but turnéd wyde<sup>2</sup> Unto an hill; from whence when she him
spyde,
By his like seeming shield, her knight by
name
She weend it was, and towards him gan
ryde:
Approching nigh, she wist it was the same,
And with faire fearefull humblesse towards him shee came.

27

And weeping said, Ah my long lackéd Lord, Where have ye bene thus long out of my
sight?
Much fearéd I to have bene quite abhord,
Or ought have done,<sup>3</sup> that ye displeasen
might,
That should as death unto my deare hart
light:
For since mine eye your joyous sight did mis,
My chearefull day is turnd to chearelesse
night,
And eke my night of death the shadow is;
But welcome now my light, and shining lampe of blis.

28

He thereto meeting said, My dearest Dame, Farre be it from your thought, and fro my
will,
To thinke that knighthood I so much should
shame,
As you to leave, that have me lovéd still,

<sup>2</sup>Turned aside.<sup>3</sup>Or to have done something.

And chose in Faery court of meere goodwill,
Where noblest knights were to be found on earth:

The earth shall sooner leave her kindly
skill

To bring forth fruit, and make eternall derth.
Then I leave you, my liefe, yborne of heavenly berth.

29

And sooth to say, why I left you so long,
Was for to seeke adventure in strange place,
Where Archimago said a felon strong
To many knights did daily worke disgrace;
But knight he now shall never more deface:
Good cause of mine excuse; that mote ye
please

Well to accept, and evermore embrace
My faithfull service, that by land and seas
Have vowd you to defend, now then your plaint appease.

30

His lovely words her seemd due recompence
Of all her passéd paines: one loving howre
For many yeares of sorrow can dispence:
A dram of sweet is worth a pound of sowre:
She has forgot, how many a wofull stowre
For him she late endur'd; she speakes no
more

Of past: true is, that true love hath no
powre

To looken backe; his eyes be fixt before.
Before her stands her knight, for whom she toyl'd so sore.

31

Much like, as when the beaten marinere,
That long hath wandred in the Ocean wide.
Oft soust in swelling Tethys<sup>1</sup> saltish teare,
And long time having tand his tawney hide
With blustering breath of heaven, that none
can bide,

And scorching flames of fierce Orions hound,<sup>2</sup>
Soone as the port from farre he has espide,
His chearefull whistle merrily doth sound,
And Nereus<sup>3</sup> crownes with cups;<sup>4</sup> his mates him pledg around.

<sup>1</sup>Sea-goddess, wife of Oceanus.

<sup>2</sup>Sirius, the dog star.

<sup>3</sup>The sea-god.

<sup>4</sup>Salutes with cups full of wine.

32

Such joy made Una, when her knight she
found;

And eke th'enchauter joyous seemd no lesse,
Then the glad marchant, that does vew from
ground

His ship farre come from watrie wilderness,
He hurles out vowes, and Neptune oft doth
blesse:

So forth they past, and all the way they spent Discoursing of her dreadfull late distresse,
In which he askt her, what the Lyon ment:
Who told her all that fell in journey as she went.<sup>5</sup>

33

They had not ridden farre, when they might
see

One pricking towards them with hastie heat,
Full strongly armd, and on a courser free,
That through his fiercenesse foméd all with sweat,

And the sharpe yron did for anger eat,
When his hot ryder spurd his chaufféd side;
His looke was sterne, and seeméd still to threat

Cruell revenge, which he in hart did hyde,
And on his shield Sans loy in bloudie lines was dyde.

34

When nigh he drew unto this gentle payre
And saw the Red-crosse, which the knight
did beare,

He burnt in fire, and gan eftsoones prepare
Himselfe to battell with his couchéd speare.
Loth was that other, and did faint through
feare,

To taste th'untryéd dint of deadly steele;
But yet his Lady did so well him cheare,
That hope of new goodhap he gan to feele;
So bent his speare, and spurd his horse with yron heele.

35

But that proud Paynim forward came so fierce,

And full of wrath, that with his sharp-head
speare

Through vainely crosséd shield he quite did
pierce,

And had his staggering steede not shrunke
for feare,

<sup>5</sup>I.e., who told all that befell her, etc. Possibly the line should be amended to read, "Who told all that her fell," etc.

Through shield and bodie eke he should him
beare:

Yet so great was the puissance of his push,
That from his saddle quite he did him beare:
He tombling rudely downe to ground did rush,

And from his goréd wound a well of bloud did gush.

36

Dismounting lightly from his loftie steed,
He to him lept, in mind to reave his life,
And proudly said, Lo there the worthie
meed

Of him, that slew Sansfoy with bloudie knife;
Henceforth his ghost freed from repining
strife,

In peace may passen over Lethe lake,<sup>1</sup>
When morning altars purgd with enemies
life,

The blacke infernall Furies doen aslake:
Life from Sansfoy thou tookst, Sansloy shall from thee take.

37

Therewith in haste his helmet gan unlace,
Till Una cride, O hold that heavie hand,
Deare Sir, what ever that thou be in place:
Enough is, that thy foe doth vanquisht
stand

Now at thy mercy: Mercie not withstand:
For he is one the truest knight alive,
Though conquered now he lie on lowly land,
And whilst him fortune favoured, faire did
thrive

In bloudie field: therefore of life him not deprive.

38

Her piteous words might not abate his rage,
But rudely rending up his helmet, would Have slaine him straight: but when he sees his age,

And hoarie head of Archimago old,
His hastie hand he doth amazéd hold,
And halfe ashamed, wondred at the sight:
For the old man well knew he, though untold,

<sup>1</sup>Lethe: river of forgetfulness in Hades. The lines mean that Sansfoy's soul had been kept from entering Hades because of his desire that he be revenged, and that now he may enter because the Furies, who demand vengeance for the slain, will be appeased by the death of the (supposed) Red Cross Knight.

In charmes and magicke to have wondrous
might,

Ne ever wont in field, ne in round lists<sup>2</sup>
to fight.

39

And said, Why Archimago, lucklesse syre,
What doe I see? what hard mishap is this,
That hath thee hither brought to taste mine
yre?

Or thine the fault, or mine the error is,
In stead of foe to wound my friend amis?
He answered nought, but in a traunce still
lay,

And on those guilefull dazéd eyes of his
The cloud of death did sit. Which doen
away,

He left him lying so, ne would no lenger
stay.

40

But to the virgin comes, who all this while Amaséd stands, her selfe so mockt to see
By him, who has the guerdon of his guile,
For so misfeigning her true knight to bee:
Yet is she now in more perplexitie,
Left in the hand of that same Paynim bold,
From whom her booteth not at all to flie;
Who by her cleanly garment catching hold,
Her from her Palfrey pluckt, her visage to behold.

41

But her fierce servant full of kingly awe
And high disdaine, when as his souveraine
Dame

So rudely handled by her foe he sawe,
With gaping jawes full greedy at him came,
And ramping on his shield, did weene the
same

Have reft away with his sharpe rending
clawes:

But he was stout, and lust did now inflame
His corage more, that from his griping pawes
He hath his shield redeem'd, and forth his sward he drawes.

42

O then too weake and feeble was the forse
Of salvage beast, his puissance to withstand:
For he was strong, and of so mightie corse,
As ever wielded speare in warlike hand,

<sup>2</sup>In tournaments.

And feates of armes did wisely understand.
Eftsoones he percéd through his chauféd chest

With thrilling point of deadly yron brand,
And launcht his Lordly hart: with death op-
prest

He roar'd aloud, whiles life forsooke his stub-borne brest.

43

Who now is left to keepe the forlorne maid
From raging spoile of lawlesse victors will?
Her faithfull gard remov'd, her hope dismaid,
Her selfe a yeelded pray to save or spill.
He now Lord of the field, his pride to fill,
With foule reproches, and disdainfull spight
Her vildly entertaines, and will or nill,<sup>1</sup>
Beares her away upon his courser light:
Her prayers nought prevaile, his rage is more of might.

44

And all the way, with great lamenting paine,
And piteous plaints she filleth his dull eares,
That stony hart could riven have in twaine,
And all the way she wets with flowing teares:
But he enrag'd with rancor, nothing heares.
Her servile beast yet would not leave her so,
But followes her farre off, ne ought he feares,
To be partaker of her wandring woe,
More mild in beastly kind,<sup>2</sup> then that her beastly foe.

CANTO IV

*To sinfull house of Pride, Duessa guides the faithfull knight,
Where brothers death to wreak Sansjoy doth challenge him to fight.*

I

Young knight, what ever that dost armes
professe,

And through long labours hunttest after fame,
Beware of fraud, beware of ficklenesse,
In choice, and change of thy deare lovéd
Dame,

Least thou of her beleewe too lightly blame,
And rash misweening doe thy hart remove:
For unto knight there is no greater shame,
Then lightnesse and inconstancie in love;
That doth this Rederosse knights ensample plainly prove.

<sup>1</sup>Whether she will or not.

<sup>2</sup>In his nature as a beast.

2

Who after that he had faire Una lorne,
Through light misdeeming of her loialtie,
And false Duessa in her sted had borne,
Calléd Fidess', and so supposed to bee;
Long with her traveild, till at last they see
A goodly building,<sup>3</sup> bravely garnishéd,
The house of mightie Prince it seemd to
bee:

And towards it a broad high way that led,
All bare through peoples feet, which thither
traveilé.

3

Great troupes of people traveild thitherward Both day and night, of each degree and place,<sup>4</sup>

But few returnéd, having scapéd hard,
With balefull beggerie, or foule disgrace,
Which ever after in most wretched case,
Like loathsome lazars, by the hedges lay.
Thither Duessa bad him bend his pace:
For she is wearie of the toilesome way,
And also nigh consuméd is the lingring day.

4

A stately Pallace built of squaréd bricke,
Which cunningly was without mortar laid,
Whose wals were high, but nothing strong,
nor thick,
And golden foile all over them displaid,
That purest skye with brightnesse they dismaid:

High lifted up were many loftie towres,
And goodly galleries farre over laid,
Full of faire windowes, and delightfull
bowres;

And on the top a Diall told the timely howres.

5

It was a goodly heape for to behould,
And spake the praises of the workmans wit;
But full great pittie, that so faire a mould
Did on so weake foundation ever sit:
For on a sandie hill, that still did flit,
And fall away, it mounted was full hie,
That every breath of heaven shakéd it:
And all the hinder parts, that few could spie,
Were ruinous and old, but painted cunningly.

<sup>3</sup>The House of Pride.

<sup>4</sup>Of every rank and fortune.

6

Arrivéd there they passéd in forth right;<sup>1</sup>
 For still to all the gates stood open wide,
 Yet charge of them was to a Porter hight
 Cald Malvenù,<sup>2</sup> who entrance none denide:
 Thence to the hall, which was on every side
 With rich array and costly arras dight:
 Infinite sorts of people did abide
 There waiting long, to win the wishéd sight
 Of her, that was the Lady of that Pallace bright.

7

By them they passe, all gazing on them
 round,
 And to the Presence mount; whose glorious
 vew
 Their frayle amazéd senses did confound:
 In living Princes court none ever knew Such endlesse riches, and so sumptuous
 shew;
 Ne Persia selfe, the nourse of pompous pride
 Like ever saw. And there a noble crew
 Of Lordes and Ladies stood on every side,
 Which with their presence faire, the place much beautifide.

8

High above all a cloth of State was spred,
 And a rich throne, as bright as sunny day,
 On which there sate most brave embellishéd
 With royall robes and gorgeous array,
 A mayden Queene, that shone as Titans ray,<sup>3</sup>
 In glistring gold, and peerelesse pretious
 stone:
 Yet her bright blazing beautie did assay
 To dim the brightnesse of her glorious
 throne,
 As envying her selfe, that too exceeding shone.

9

Exceeding shone, like Phæbus fairest childe,<sup>4</sup>
 That did presume his fathers frie wayne,
 And flaming mouthes of steedes unwonted
 wilde
 Through highest heaven with weaker hand
 to rayne;

<sup>1</sup>Passed straight in.

<sup>2</sup>Ill-come.

<sup>3</sup>As the sun's rays.

<sup>4</sup>Phaethon, Apollo's son.

Proud of such glory and advancement vaine,
 While flashing beames do daze his feeble
 eyen,
 He leaves the welkin way most beaten plaine,
 And rapt with whirling wheelles, inflames the
 skyen,
 With fire not made to burne, but fairely for
 to shyne.

10

So proud she shynéd in her Princely state,
 Looking to heaven, for earth she did dis-
 dayne;
 And sitting high, for lowly she did hate:
 Lo underneath her scornfull feete, was layne
 A dreadfull Dragon with an hideous trayne,
 And in her hand she held a mirrhour bright,
 Wherein her face she often vewéd fayne,
 And in her selfe-lov'd semblance tooke de-
 light;
 For she was wondrous faire, as any living
 wight.

11

Of griesly Pluto she the daughter was,
 And sad Proserpina the Queene of hell;
 Yet did she thinke her pearelesse worth to
 pas
 That parentage, with pride so did she swell,
 And thundring Jove, that high in heaven
 doth dwell,
 And wield the world, she clayméd for her
 syre,
 Of if that any else did Jove excell:
 For to the highest she did still aspyre,
 Or if ought higher were then that, did it desyre.

12

And proud Lucifera men did her call,
 That made her selfe Queene, and crownd to
 be,
 Yet rightfull kingdome she had none at all,
 Ne heritage of native soveraintie,
 But did usurpe with wrong and tyrannie
 Upon the scepter, which she now did hold:
 Ne ruld her Realmes with lawes, but pollicie,<sup>5</sup>
 And strong advizement of six wizards old,<sup>6</sup>
 That with their counsels bad her kingdome did uphold.

<sup>5</sup>Tricks, Macchiavellian tactics.

<sup>6</sup>The rest of the Seven Deadly Sins, of which Pride (Lucifera) is the chief.

13

Soone as the Elfin knight in presence came,
And false Duessa seeming Lady faire,
A gentle Husher, Vanitie by name Made rowme, and passage for them did prepaire:

So goodly brought them to the lowest staire
Of her high throne, where they on humble
knee

Making obeysaunce, did the cause declare,
Why they were come, her royall state to see,
To prove the wide report of her great Majestee.

14

With loftie eyes, halfe loth to looke so low,
She thanked them in her disdainfull wise,
Ne other grace vouchsaféd them to show
Of Princesse worthy, scarce them bad arise.
Her Lordes and Ladies all this while devise Themselves to setten forth to straungers
sight:

Some frounce their curléd haire in courtly
guise,

Some prancke their ruffes, and others trimly
dight

Their gay attire: each others greater pride does spight.

15

Goodly they all that knight do enttaine, Right glad with him to have increast their
crew:

But to Duessa<sup>2</sup> each one himselfe did paine
All kindnesse and faire courtesie to shew;
For in that court whylome her well they
knew:

Yet the stout Faerie mongst the middest crowd

Thought all their glorie vaine in knightly
vew,

And that great Princesse too exceeding
prowd,

That to strange knight no better countenance
allowd.

16

Suddein upriseth from her stately place
The royall Dame, and for her coche doth call:
All hurtlen forth,<sup>1</sup> and she with Princely
pace,

As faire Aurora in her purple pall,

<sup>1</sup>Rush forth jostling each other.

Out of the East the dawning day doth call:
So forth she comes: her brightnesse brode
doth blaze;

The heapes of people thronging in the hall,
Do ride each other, upon her to gaze:
Her glorious glitterand light doth all mens eyes amaze.

17

So forth she comes, and to her coche does
clyme,

Adornéd all with gold, and girlonds gay,
That seemd as fresh as Flora in her prime,
And strove to match, in royall rich array,
Great Juno's golden chaire, the which they say
The Gods stand gazing on, when she does ride
To Joves high house through heavens braspavéd way

Drawne of faire Pecoocks, that excell in pride,
And full of Argus eyes<sup>2</sup> their tailes dispredden wide.

18

But this was drawne of six unequall beasts,
On which her six sage Counsellours did ryde,
Taught to obay their bestiall beheasts,
With like conditions to their kinds applyde:<sup>3</sup>
Of which the first, that all the rest did guyde,
Was sluggish Idlenesse the nourse of sin;
Upon a slouthfull Asse he chose to ryde,
Arayd in habit blacke, and amis thin,
Like to an holy Monck, the service to begin.

19

And in his hand his Portesse still he bare,
That much was worne, but therein little red,
For of devotion he had little care,
Still drownd in sleepe, and most of his dayes
ded;

Scarse could he once uphold his heavie hed,
To looken, whether it were night or day:
May seeme the wayne was very evill led,
When such an one had guiding of the way,
That knew not, whether right he went, or else astray.

20

From worldly cares himselfe he did esloyne,
And greatly shunnéd manly exercise,
From every worke he chalengéd essoyne,
For contemplation sake: yet otherwise,

<sup>2</sup>Argus, who had a hundred eyes, perished in Juno's service. She placed his eyes in the tail of her peacock as a memorial to him.

<sup>3</sup>The animals are of like nature with their riders.

His life he led in lawlesse riotise;
By which he grew to grievous malady;
For in his lustlesse limbs through evill guise
A shaking fever raignd continually:
Such one was Idlennesse, first of this company.

21

And by his side rode loathsome Gluttony,
Deformed creature, on a filthie swyne,
His belly was up-blowne with luxury,
And eke with fatnesse swollen were his eyne,
And like a Crane his necke was long and fyne,
With which he swallowd up excessive feast,
For want whereof poore people oft did pyne;
And all the way, most like a brutish beast,
He spuéd up his gorge, that all did him deteast.

22

In greene vine leaves he was right fitly clad;
For other clothes he could not weare for heat,
And on his head an yvie girland had,
From under which fast trickled downe the
sweat:

Still as he rode, he somewhat still did eat,
And in his hand did beare a bouzing can,
Of which he supt so oft, that on his seat
His drunken corse he scarce upholden can,
In shape and life more like a monster, then a
man.

23

Unfit he was for any worldly thing,
And eke unhable once to stirre or go,
Not meet to be of counsell to a king,
Whose mind in meat and drinke was drownéd
so,

That from his friend he seldome knew his fo:

Full of diseases was his carcas blew,
And a dry dropsie<sup>1</sup> through his flesh did flow:
Which by misdiet daily greater grew;
Such one was Gluttony, the second of that crew.

24

And next to him rode lustfull Lechery,
Upon a bearded Goat, whose rugged haire,
And whally eyes (the signe of gelosy)
Was like the person selfe, whom he did
beare:

Who rough, and blacke, and filthy did
appeare,
Unseemely man to please faire Ladies eye;
Yet he of Ladies oft was lovéd deare,
When fairer faces were bid standen by:
O who does know the bent of womens fantasy?

25

In a greene gowne he clothéd was full
faire,
Which underneath did hide his filthinesse,
And in his hand a burning hart he bare,
Full of vaine follies, and new fanglenesse:
For he was false, and fraught with fickle-
nesse,
And learnéd had to love with secret looks,
And well could daunce, and sing with rueful-
nesse,
And fortunes tell, and read in loving bookes,
And thousand other wayes, to bait his fleshly
hookes.

26

Inconstant man, that lovéd all he saw,
And lusted after all, that he did love,
Ne would his looser life be tide to law,
But joyd weake wemens hearts to tempt and prove

If from their loyall loves he might them
move;

Which lewdnesse fild him with reprochfull
paine

Of that fowle evill, which all men re-
prove,

That rots the marrow, and consumes the
braine:

Such one was Lecherie, the third of all this traine.

27

And greedy Avarice by him did ride,
Upon a Camell loaden all with gold;
Two iron coffers hong on either side,
With precious mettall full, as they might
hold,

And in his lap an heape of coine he told;
For of his wicked pelfe his God he made,
And unto hell him selfe for money sold;
Accurséd usurie was all his trade,
And right and wrong ylike in equall ballaunce waide.

<sup>1</sup>Perhaps Spenser means a dropsy causing thirst.

28

His life was nigh unto deaths doore yplast,
And thred-bare cote, and cobled shoes he
ware,

Ne scarce good morsell all his life did tast,
But both from backe and belly still did spare,
To fill his bags, and richesse to compare;<sup>1</sup>
Yet chylde ne kinsman living had he none
To leave them to; but thorough daily care
To get, and nightly feare to lose his owne,
He led a wretched life unto him selfe un-knowne.

29

Most wretched wight, whom nothing might suffise,

Whose greedy lust did lacke in greatest store,<sup>2</sup>

Whose need had end, but no end covetise, Whose wealth was want, whose plenty made him pore,

Who had enough, yet wishéd ever more;
A vile disease, and eke in foote and hand
A grievous gout tormented him full sore,
That well he could not touch, nor go, nor
stand:

Such was one Avarice, the fourth of this faire band.

30

And next to him malicious Envie rode,
Upon a ravenous wolfe, and still did chaw
Betweene his cankered teeth a venomous tode,
That all the poison ran about his chaw;
But inwardly he chawéd his owne maw
Atneighbours wealth, that made him ever sad;
For death it was, when any good he saw,
And wept, that cause of weeping none he had,
But when he heard of harme, he wexéd wondrous glad.

31

All in a kirtle of discoloured say
He clothéd was, ypainted full of eyes;
And in his bosome secretly there lay
An hatefull Snake, the which his taile uptyes
In many folds, and mortall sting implies.
Still as he rode, he gnasht his teeth, to see
Those heapes of gold with griple Covetyse,
And grudgéd at the great felicitie
Of proud Lucifera, and his owne companie.

<sup>1</sup>To gather riches.

<sup>2</sup>He was greedy, yet amidst wealth denied his desires.

32

He hated all good workes and vertuous deeds,
And him no lesse, that any like did use,<sup>3</sup>
And who with gracious bread the hungry
feede,

His almes for want of faith he doth accuse;
So every good to bad he doth abuse:
And eke the verse of famous Poets witt
He does backebite, and spightfull poison spues
From leprous mouth on all, that ever writt:
Such one vile Envie was, that fite in row did sitt.

33

And him beside rides fierce revenging Wrath, Upon a Lion, loth for to be led;
And in his hand a burning brond he hath,
The which he brandisheth about his hed;
His eyes did hurle forth sparkles fiery red,
And staréd sterne on all, that him beheld,
As ashes pale of hew and seeming ded;
And on his dagger still his hand he held,
Trembling through hasty rage, when choler in him sweld.

34

His ruffin raiment all was stained with blood,
Which he had spilt, and all to rags yrent,
Through unadvizéd rashnesse woxen wood;
For of his hands he had no government,
Ne car'd for<sup>4</sup> bloud in his avengement:
But when the furious fit was overpast,
His cruell facts he often would repent;
Yet wilfull man he never would forecast,<sup>5</sup>
How many mischieves should ensue his heed-lesse hast.

35

Full many mischiefes follow cruell Wrath:
Abhorréd bloudshed, and tumultuous strife,
Unmanly murder, and unthrifty scath,<sup>6</sup>
Bitter despight, with rancours rusty knife,
And fretting grieve the enemy of life;
All these, and many evils moe haunt ire,
The swelling Splene,<sup>7</sup> and Frenzy raging rife,
The shaking Palsey, and Saint Fraunces fire:<sup>8</sup>
Such one was Wrath, the last of this ungodly tire.

<sup>3</sup>He hated not only good deeds but also any who performed them.

<sup>4</sup>Shrank from.

<sup>5</sup>He never would pause to reflect.

<sup>6</sup>Destructive damage.

<sup>7</sup>The spleen was thought to be the seat of anger.

<sup>8</sup>Probably erysipelas.

36

And after all, upon the wagon beame
 Rode Satan, with a smarting whip in hand,
 With which he forward lasht the laesie
 teme,
 So oft as Slowth still in the mire did
 stand.
 Huge routs of people did about them
 band,
 Showing for joy, and still before their way
 A foggy mist had covered all the land;
 And underneath their feet, all scattered lay Dead sculs and bones of men, whose life had gone astray.

37

So forth they marchen in this goodly sort,
 To take the solace of the open aire,
 And in fresh flowring fields themselves to sport;
 Emongst the rest rode that false Lady faire,
 The fowle Duessa, next unto the chaire
 Of proud Lucifera, as one of the traine:
 But that good knight would not so nigh
 repaire,
 Him selfe estraunging from their joyaunce
 vaine,
 Whose fellowship seemd far unfit for warlike
 swaine.

38

So having solacéd themselves a space
 With pleasaunce of the breathing fields yfed,
 They backe returnéd to the Princely Place;
 Whereas an errant knight in armes cycled,
 And heathnish shield, wherein with letters
 red
 Was writ Sans joy, they new arrivéd find:
 Enflam'd with fury and fiers hardy-hed,
 He seemd in hart to harbour thoughts un-
 kind,
 And nourish bloody vengeance in his bitter
 mind.

39

Who when the shaméd shield of slaine Sans
foy
 He spoke with that same Faery champions
 page,
 Bewraying him, that did of late destroy
 His eldest brother, burning all with rage
 He to him leapt, and that same envious<sup>1</sup>
 gage

<sup>1</sup>T. e., envied.

Of victors glory from him snatcht away:
 But th'Elfin knight, which ought<sup>2</sup> that warlike wage,
 Disdained to loose the meed he wonne in fray,
 And him rencounting fierce, reskewed the noble pray.

40

Therewith they gan to hurtlen greedily,
 Redoubted battaile ready to darrayne,
 And clash their shields, and shake their swords on hy,
 That with their sturre they troubled all the
 traine;
 Till that great Queene upon eternall paine
 Of high displeasure, that ensewen might,
 Commaunded them their fury to refraine,
 And if that either to that shield had right,
 In equall lists they should the morrow next it fight.

41

Ah dearest Dame (quoth then the Paynim
 bold),
 Pardon the errour of enragéd wight, Whom great grieve made forget the raines to
 hold
 Of reasons rule, to see this recreant knight,
 No knight, but treachour full of false de-
 spight
 And shamefull treason, who through guile
 hath slayn
 The prowtest knight, that ever field did fight, Even stout Sans foy (O who can then re-frayn?)
 Whose shield he beares renverst, the more to heape disdayn.

42

And to augment the glorie of his guile,
 His dearest love the faire Fidessa loe
 Is there possesséd of the traytour vile,
 Who reapes the harvest sowed by his foe,
 Sowed in bloody field, and bought with woe:
 That brothers hand shall dearely well re-
 quight
 So be, O Queene, you equall favour showe.
 Him litle answerd th'angry Elfin knight;
 He never meant with words, but swords to plead his right.

<sup>2</sup>Owened.

43

But threw his gauntlet as a sacred pledge,
His cause in combat the next day to try:
So been they parted both, with harts on edge,<sup>1</sup>

To be aveng'd each on his enemy.
That night they pas in joy and jollity,
Feasting and courting both in bowre and
hall;

For Steward was excessive Gluttonie,
That of his plenty pouréd forth to all;
Which doen, the Chamberlain Slowth did to rest them call.

44

Now whenas darkesome night had all dis-
playd

Her coleblacke curtein over brightest skye,
The warlike youthes on dayntie couches
layd,

Did chace away sweet sleepe from sluggish
eye,

To muse on meanes of hopéd victory.

But whenas Morpheus<sup>2</sup> had with leaden mace

Arrested all that courtly company,
Up-rose *Duess*a from her resting place,
And to the Paynims lodging comes with silent pace.

45

Whom broad awake she finds, in troublous
fit,

Forecasting, how his foe he might annoy,
And him amoves with speaches seeming
fit:

Ah deare Sans joy, next dearest to Sans
foy,

Cause of my new griefe, cause of my new joy,
Joyous, to see his ymage in mine eye,
And greev'd, to thinke how foe did him destroy,

That was the flowre of grace and chevalrye;
Lo his Fidessa to thy secret faith I flye.

46

With gentle wordes he can her fairely greet,
And bad say on the secret of her hart.
Then sighing soft, I learne that litle sweet Oft tempred is (quoth she) with muchell
smart:

<sup>1</sup>In furious anger.

<sup>2</sup>God of sleep.

For since my brest was launcht with lovely
dart

Of deare Sansfoy, I never joyéd howre,
But in eternall woes my weaker hart
Have wasted, loving him with all my powre,
And for his sake have felt full many an heavie stowre.

47

At last when perils all I weenéd past,
And hop'd to reape the crop of all my care,<sup>3</sup>
Into new woes unweeting I was cast,
By this false faytor, who unworthy ware
His worthy shield, whom he with guilefull snare

Entrappéd slew, and brought to shameful grave.

Me silly maid away with him he bare,
And ever since hath kept in darksome cave,
For that I would not yeeld, that to Sans-foy
I gave.

48

But since faire Sunne hath sperst that low-ring clowd,

And to my loathéd life now shewes some
light,

Under your beames I will me safely shrowd,
From dreaded storme of his disdainfull
spight:

To you th'inheritance belongs by right
Of brothers prayse, to you eke longs his love.
Let not his love, let not his restlesse spright
Be unreveng'd, that calles to you above
From wandring Stygian shores,<sup>4</sup> where it doth endlesse move.

49

Thereto said he, faire Dame be nought dis-
maid

For sorrowes past; their griefe is with them
gone:

Ne yet of present perill be affraid;
For needlesse feare did never vantage none,
And helplesse hap it booteth not to mone,<sup>5</sup>
Dead is Sans-foy, his vitall paines are past, Though greevéd ghost for vengeance deepe
do grone:

<sup>3</sup>The reward for all my trouble.

<sup>4</sup>Shores of the Styx where ghosts wander till they are carried across that river.

<sup>5</sup>It is of no use to lament what cannot be helped.

He lives, that shall him pay his dewties last,<sup>1</sup>
And guiltie Elfin blood shall sacrifice in hast.

50

O but I feare the fickle freakes (quoth shee)
Of fortune false, and oddes of armes in field.
Why dame (quoth he) what oddes can ever
bee,

Where both do fight alike, to win or yield?
Yea but (quoth she) he beares a charméd
shield,

And eke enchaunted armes, that none can perce,

Ne none can wound the man, that does them
wield.

Charmd or enchaunted (answerd he then ferce)

I no whit reck, ne you the like need to re-herce.

51

But faire Fidessa, sithens fortunes guile,
Or enimes powre hath now captivéd you,
Returne from whence ye came, and rest a
while

Till morrow next, that I the Elfe subdew,
And with Sans-foyes dead dowry you endew.
Ay me, that is a double death (she said)
With proud foes sight my sorrow to renew:
Where ever yet I be, my secret aid Shall follow you, So passing forth she him obaid.

CANTO V

*The faithfull knight in equall field
subdewes his faithlesse foe.*

Whom false Duessa saves, and for his cure to hell does goe.

I

The noble hart, that harbours vertuous
thought,

And is with child of glorious great intent,
Can never rest, untill it forth have brought Th'eternall brood of glorie excellent:
Such restlesse passion did all night torment
The flaming corage of that Faery knight,
Devizing, how that doughtie tournament
With greatest honour he atchieven might;
Still did he wake, and still did watch for dawning light.

<sup>1</sup>Pay him his last dues.

2

At last the golden Orientall gate,
Of greatest heaven gan to open faire,
And Phæbus fresh, as bridegrome to his mate,
Came dauncing forth, shaking his deawie
haire:

And hurld his glistring beames through gloomy aire.

Which when the wakeful Elfe perceiv'd,
streight way

He started up, and did him selfe prepaire,
In sun-bright armes, and battailous array:
For with that Pagan proud he combat will that day.

3

And forth he comes into the commune
hall,

Where earely waite him many a gazing eye,
To weet what end to straunger knights may
fall.

There many Minstrales maken melody,
To drive away the dull melancholy,
And many Bardes, that to the trembling
chord

Can tune their timely voyces cunningly,
And many Chroniclers, that can record Old loves, and warres for Ladies doen by many a Lord.

4

Soone after comes the cruell Sarazin,
In woven maile all arméd warily,
And sternly looks at him, who not a pin
Does care for looke of living creatures eye.
They bring them wines of Greece and Araby,
And daintie spices fetcht from furthest Ynd,
To kindle heat of corage privily:
And in the wine a solemne oth they bynd
T'observe the sacred lawes of armes, that are assynd.

5

At last forth comes that far renownéd
Queene,

With royall pomp and Princely majestie;
She is ybrought unto a paléd greene,<sup>2</sup>
And placéd under stately canapee,
The warlike feates of both those knights to
see.

On th'other side in all mens open vew
Duessa placéd is, and on a tree

<sup>2</sup>A grassed plot enclosed by palings.

Sans-foy his shield is hangd with bloudy hew:
Both those the lawrell girdonds<sup>1</sup> to the victor dew.

6

A shrilling trompet sowned from on hye,
And unto battaill bad them selves addresse:
Their shining shieldes about their wrestes
they tye,
And burning blades about their heads do
blesse,
The instruments of wrath and heavinesse:
With greedy force each other doth assayle,
And strike so fiercely, that they do impresse
Deepe dinted furrowes in the battred mayle;
The yron walles to ward their blowes are weake and fraile.

7

The Sarazin was stout, and wondrous strong,
And heapéd blowes like yron hammers great:
For after bloud and vengeance he did long.
The knight was fiers, and full of youthly
heat:
And doubled strokes, like dreaded thunders
threat:
For all for prayse and honour he did fight.
Both stricken strike, and beaten both do beat,
That from their shields forth flyeth fire light,
And helmets hewen deepe, shew marks of eithers might.

8

So th'one for wrong, the other strives for
right:

As when a Gryfon seizéd of his pray,
A Dragon fiers encountreth in his flight,
Through widest ayre making his ydle way,
That would his rightfull ravine rend away:
With hideous horroure both together smight,
And souce so sore, that they the heavens
affray:

The wise Southsayer seeing so, sad sight,
Th'amazéd vulgar tels of warres and mortall
fight.

9

So th'one for wrong, the other strives for
right,

And each to deadly shame would drive his foe:
The cruell steele so greedily doth bight
In tender flesh, that streames of bloud down
flow,

With which the armes, that earst so bright
did show

Into a pure vermilion now are dyde:
Great ruth in all the gazers harts did grow,
Seeing the goréd woundes to gape so wyde,
That victory they dare not wish to either side.

10

At last the Paynim chaunst to cast his eye,
His suddein eye, flaming with wrathfull fyre,
Upon his brothers shield, which hong
thereby:

Therewith redoubled was his raging yre,
And said, Ah wretched sonne of wofull syre,
Dost thou sit wayling by black Stygian lake, Whilest here thy shield is hangd for victors
hyre,

And sluggish german doest thy forces slake,
To after-send his foe, that him may overtake?

11

Goe caytive Elfe, him quickly overtake,
And soone redeeme from his long wandring
woe;

Goe guiltie ghost, to him my message make,
That I his shield have quit from dying foe.
Therewith upon his crest he stroke him so,
That twice he reeléd, readie twice to fall;
End of the doubtfull battell deeméd tho
The lookers on, and lowd to him gan call
The false Duessa, Thine the shield, and I,
and all.

12

Soone as the Faerie heard his Ladie speake,
Out of his swowning dreame he gan awake,
And quickning faith, that earst was woxen
weake,

The creeping deadly cold away did shake:
Tho mov'd with wrath, and shame, and Ladies sake,

Of all attonce he cast avengd to bee,
And with so' exceeding furie at him strake,
That forcéd him to stoupe upon his knee;
Had he not stoupéd so, he should have cloven bee.

13

And to him said, Goe now proud Miscreant,
Thy selfe thy message doe to german deare,
Alone he wandring thee too long doth want:
Goe say, his foe thy shield with his doth
beare.

<sup>1</sup>I. e., both Duessa and the shield are to be the victor's rewards.

Therewith his heaue hand he high gan reare,
Him to haue slaine; when loe a darkesome
clowd

Upon him fell: he no where doth appeare,
But vanisht is. The Elfe him cald alowd,
But answer none receiues; the darknes him does shrowd.

14

In haste Duessa from her place arose,
And to him running said, O prowest knight,
That ever Ladie to her love did chose,
Let now abate the terror of your might,
And quench the flame of furious despight,
And bloudie vengeance; lo th'infernall powres Covering your foe with cloud of deadly
night,

Have borne him hence to Plutoes balefull
bowres.

The conquest yours, I yours, the shield, and glory yours.

15

Not all so satisfide, with greedie eye
He sought all round about his thirstie blade
To bath in bloud of faithlesse enemy;
Who all that while lay hid in secret shade:
He standes amazéd, how he thence should fade.

At last the trumpets, Triumph sound on hie,

And running Heralds humble homage made,
Greeting him goodly with new victorie,
And to him brought the shield, the cause of enmitie.

16

Wherewith he goeth to that soveraine
Queene,

And falling her before on lowly knee,
To her makes present of his service seene:
Which she accepts, with thanks, and goodly
gree,

Greatly aduancing<sup>1</sup> his gay chevalree.
So marcheth home, and by her takes the
knight,

Whom all the people follow with great glee,

Shouting, and clapping all their hands on
hight,

That all the aire it fils, and flyes to heaven
bright.

<sup>1</sup>Courteously praising.

17

Home is he brought, and laid in sumptuous
bed:

Where many skilfull leaches him abide,
To salve his hurts, that yet still freshly bled.
In wine and oyle they wash his woundés wide,
And softly can embalme<sup>2</sup> on every side.
And all the while, most heavenly melody
About the bed sweet musicke did diuide,<sup>3</sup>
Him to beguile of grieve and agony:
And all the while Duessa wept full bitterly.

18

As when a wearie traveller that strays
By muddy shore of broad seven-mouthéd
Nile,

Unweeting of the perillous wandring wayes,
Doth meet a cruell craftie Crocodile,
Which in false grieve hyding his harmefull
guile,

Doth weepe full sore, and sheddeth tender
teares:

The foolish man, that pitties all this while His mournefull plight, is swallowd up un-wares,

Forgetfull of his owne, that mindes anothers cares.

19

So wept Duessa untill eventide,
That shyning lampes in Joves high house
were light:

Then forth she rose, ne lenger would abide,
But comes unto the place, where th'Hethen
knight

In slombring swownd nigh voyd of vitall
spright,

Lay cover'd with inchaunted cloud all day:
Whom when she found, as she him left in plight,<sup>4</sup>

To wayle his woefull case she would not stay,
But to the easterne coast of heaven makes speedy way.

20

Where griesly Night, with visage deadly sad,
That Phæbus chearefull face durst never vew,
And in a foule blacke pitchie mantle clad,
She findes forth comming from her darke-
some mew,

<sup>2</sup>And gently they anointed him.

<sup>3</sup>Did play elaborately.

<sup>4</sup>She found him in the same condition as when she had left him.

Where she all day did hide her hated hew,
Before the dore her yron charet stood,
Alreadie harnesséd for journey new;
And coleblacke steedes yborne of hellish
brood,
That on their rustie bits did champ, as they were wood.

21

Who when she saw Duessa sunny bright,
Adorn'd with gold and jewels shining cleare,
She greatly grew amazéd at the sight,
And th' unacquainted light<sup>1</sup> began to feare:
For never did such brightnesse there appeare,
And would have backe retyréd to her cave,
Untill the witches speech she gan to heare,
Saying, Yet O thou dreaded Dame, I crave Abide, till I have told the message, which I have.

22

She stayd, and forth Duessa gan proceede,
O thou most auncient Grandmother of all,<sup>2</sup>
More old then Jove, whom thou at first didst
breede,
Or that great house of Gods cælestiall,
Which wast begot in Dæmogorgons hall,
And sawst the secrets of the world unmade,<sup>3</sup>
Whysuffredst thou thy Nephewes deare to fall
With Elfin sword, most shamefully betrade?
Lo where the stout Sansjoy doth sleepe in deadly shade.

23

And him before,<sup>4</sup> I saw with bitter eyes
The bold Sansfoy shrinke underneath his
speare;
And now the pray of fowles in field he lyes,
Nor wayld of friends, nor laid on groning
beare,
That whylome was to me too dearely deare.
O what of Gods then boots it to be borne,
If old Aveugles<sup>5</sup> sonnes so evill heare?<sup>6</sup>
Or who shall not great Nightés children
scorne,
When two of three her Nephewes are so fowle forlorne?

<sup>1</sup>The unaccustomed light.<sup>2</sup>Night and Earth were daughters of Chaos and older than the Olympian gods.<sup>3</sup>The secrets of Chaos, existing when the world was yet unmade.<sup>4</sup>And before this happened to him.<sup>5</sup>Spiritual Blindness.<sup>6</sup>Are brought to such disgrace.

24

Up then, up dreary Dame, of darknesse
Queene,
Go gather up the reliques of thy race,
Or else goe them avenge, and let be seene,
That dreaded Night in brightest day hath
place,
And can the children of faire light deface.
Her feeling speeches some compassion moved
In hart, and chaunge in that great mothers
face:
Yet pittie in her hart was never proved Till then: for evermore she hated, never loved.

25

And said, Deare daughter rightly may I rew
The fall of famous children borne of mee,
And good successes, which their foes ensew:<sup>7</sup>
But who can turne the streame of destinee,
Or breake the chayne of strong necessitee,
Which fast is tyde to Joves eternall seat?
The sonnes of Day he favoureth, I see,
And by my ruines thinkes to make them
great:
To make one great by others losse, is bad
excheat.

26

Yet shall they not escape so freely all;
For some shall pay the price of others guilt:
And he the man that made Sansfoy to fall,
Shall with his owne bloud price that he hath spilt.
But what art thou, that telst of Nephewes
kilt?
I that do seeme not I, Duessa am,
(Quoth she) how ever now in garments gilt,
And gorgeous gold arayd I to thee came;
Duessa I, the daughter of Deceipt and Shame.

27

Then bowing downe her agéd backe, she kist
The wicked witch, saying; In that faire face
The false resemblance of Deceipt, I wist
Did closely lurke; yet so true-seeming grace
It carried, that I scarce in darkesome place
Could it discern, though I the mother bee
Of falshood, and root of Duessaes race.
O welcome child, whom I have longd to see,
And now have seene unwares. Lo now I go with thee.

<sup>7</sup>Which befall their foes.

28

Then to her yron wagon she betakes,
 And with her beares the fowle welfavourd
 witch:
 Through mirkesome aire her readie way she
 makes.
 Her twyfold Teme, of which two blacke as pitch,
 And two were browne, yet each to each
 unlich,
 Did softly swim away, ne ever stampe,
 Unlesse she chaunst their stubborne mouths
 to twitch;
 Then foming tarre, their bridles they would champe,
 And trampling the fine element,<sup>1</sup> would fiercely rampe.

29

So well they sped, that they be come at length
 Unto the place, whereas the Paynim lay, Devoid of outward sense,<sup>2</sup> and native
 strength,
 Coverd with charméd cloud from vew of day,
 And sight of men, since his late luckelesse fray.
 His cruell wounds with cruddy bloud con-
 gealéd,
 They binden up so wisely, as they may,
 And handle softly, till they can be healéd:
 So lay him in her charet, close in night concealéd.

30

And all the while she stood upon the ground,
 The wakefull dogs did never cease to bay,
 As giving warning of th'unwonted sound,
 With which her yron wheelles did them affray,
 And her darke griesly looke them much
 dismay;

The messenger of death, the ghastly Owle
 With drearie shriekes did also her bewray;
 And hungry Wolves continually did howle,
 At her abhorred face, so filthy and so fowle.

31

Thence turning backe in silence soft they stole,
 And brought the heavie corse with easie pace
 To yawning gulfe of deepe Avernus hole.
 By that same hole an entrance darke and bace

<sup>1</sup>The air.<sup>2</sup>Unconscious.

With smoake and sulphure hiding all the
 place,

Descends to hell: there creature never past,
 That backe returned without heavenly grace;
 But dreadfull Furies, which their chaines
 have brast,

And damnéd sprights sent forth to make ill
 men aghast.

32

By that same way the direfull dames doe
 drive

Their mournfull charet, fild with rusty
 blood,

And downe to Plutoes house are come bilive:
 Which passing through, on every side them
 stood

The trembling ghosts with sad amazed
 mood,

Chattering their yron teeth, and staring wide
 With stonie eyes; and all the hellish brood
 Of feends infernall flockt on every side,
 To gaze on earthly wight, that with the Night durst ride.

33

They pas the bitter waves of Acheron,<sup>3</sup>
 Where many soules sit wailing woefully,
 And come to fiery flood of Phlegeton,<sup>3</sup>
 Whereas the damnéd ghosts in torments
 fry,

And with sharpe shrilling shriekes doe boot-
 lesse cry,

Cursing high Jove, the which them thither
 sent.

The house of endlesse paine is built thereby,
 In which ten thousand sorts of punish-
 ment

The curséd creatures doe eternally torment.

34

Before the threshold dreadfull Cerberus<sup>4</sup>
 His three deformed heads did lay along,
 Curléd with thousand adders venomous,
 And lilléd forth his bloudie flaming tong:
 At them he gan to reare his bristles strong,
 And felly gnarre, untill dayes enemy Did him appease; then downe his taile he hong

And suffered them to passen quietly:
 For she in hell and heaven had power equally.

<sup>3</sup>River of Hades.<sup>4</sup>The dog who guarded Hades.

35

There was Ixion turnéd on a wheele,
For daring tempt the Queene of heaven<sup>1</sup> to sin;

And Sisyphus an huge round stone did reele
Against an hill, ne might from labour lin;
There thirstie Tantalus hong by the chin;<sup>2</sup>
And Tityus fed a vulture on his maw;
Typhæus joynts were stretchéd on a gin,
Theseus condemned to endlesse slouth by law,

And fifty sisters<sup>3</sup> water in leake vessels draw.

36

They all beholding worldly wights in place,<sup>4</sup> Leave off their worke, unmindfull of their
smart,

To gaze on them; who forth by them doe
pace,

Till they be come unto the furthest part:
Where was a Cave ywrought by wondrous
art,

Deepe, darke, uneasie, dolefull, comfortlesse,
In which sad Æsculapius farre apart
Emprisond was in chaines remedillesse,
For that Hippolytus rent corse he did redresse.<sup>5</sup>

37

Hippolytus a jolly huntsman was,
That wont in charet chace the foming Bore;
He all his Peeres in beautie did surpas,
But Ladies love as losse of time forbore:
His wanton stepdame<sup>6</sup> lovéd him the more,
But when she saw her offred sweets refused
Her love she turnd to hate, and him before
His father fierce of treason false accused,
And with her gealous termes his open cares abused.

38

Who all in rage his Sea-god syre besought,
Some curséd vengeance on his sonne to cast:
From surging gulf two monsters straight were brought,
With dread whereof his chasing steedes
aghast,

<sup>1</sup>Hera.

<sup>2</sup>Tantalus was punished with the sight of food and water which he could never reach.

<sup>3</sup>The Danaides, who slew their husbands.

<sup>4</sup>Beholding living creatures there.

<sup>5</sup>Did heal,

<sup>6</sup>Phaedra,

Both charet swift and huntsman overcast.
His goodly corps on ragged cliffs yrent,
Was quite maimed, and his members
chast

Scattered on every mountaine, as he went,
That of Hippolytus was left no monument.

39

His cruell stepdame seeing what was donne,
Her wicked dayes with wretched knife did
end,

In death avowing th'innocence of her sonne.
Which hearing, his rash Syre began to rend
His haire, and hastie tongue, that did offend:
Tho gathering up the relicks of his smart<sup>7</sup>
By Dianes meanes, who was Hippolyts frend,
Them brought to Æsculape, that by his art
Did heale them all againe, and joynéd every part.

40

Such wondrous science in mans wit to raine
When Jove avizd, that could the dead revive,
And fates expiréd could renew againe,
Of endlesse life he might him not deprive,
But unto hell did thrust him downe alive,
With flashing thunderbolt ywounded sore:
Where long remaining, he did alwaies strive Himselfe with salves to health for to restore,
And slake the heavenly fire, that ragéd ever-
more.

41

There auncient Night arriving, did alight
From her nigh wearie waine, and in her armes
To Æsculapius brought the wounded knight:
Whom having softly disarayd of armes,
Tho gan to him discover all his harmes,
Beseeching him with prayer, and with praise,
If either salves, or oyles, or herbes, or charmes

A fardonne wight from dore of death mote
raise,

He would at her request prolong her nephews
daies.

42

Ah Dame (quoth he) thou temptest me in
vaine,

To dare the thing, which daily yet I rew,
And the old cause of my continued paine
With like attempt to like end to renew.

<sup>7</sup>The fragments of Hippolytus's body.

Is not enough, that thrust from heaven dew
Here endlesse penance for one fault I pay,
But that redoubled crime with vengeance
new

Thou biddest me to eeke? Can Night defray
The wrath of thundring Jove, that rules both night and day?

43

Not so (quoth she) but sith that heavens king
From hope of heaven hath thee excluded
quight,

Why fearest thou, that canst not hope for
thing,

And fearest not, that more thee hurten
might,

Now in the powre of everlasting Night?
Goe to then, O thou farre renownéd sonne
Of great Apollo, shew thy famous might
In medicine, that else hath to thee wonne Great paines, and greater praise, both never to be donne.<sup>1</sup>

44

Her words prevaild: And then the learned leach

His cunning hand gan to his wounds to
lay,

And all things else, the which his art did
teach:

Which having seene, from thence arose away
The mother of dread darknesse, and let stay
Aveugles sonne there in the leaches cure,
And backe returning tooke her wonted way,
To runne her timely race, whilst Phæbus pure
In westerne waves his wearie wagon did recure.

45

The false Duessa leaving noyous Night,
Returnd to stately pallace of dame Pride;
Where when she came, she found the Faery
knight

Departed thence, albe his woundés wide
Not thoroughly heald, unreadie were to ride.<sup>2</sup>
Good cause he had to hasten thence away;
For on a day his wary Dwarf had spide,
Where in a dongeon deepe huge numbers lay
Of caytive wretched thrals, that wayléd
night and day.

46

A ruefull sight, as could be seene with eie;
Of whom he learned had in secret wise
The hidden cause of their captivitie,
How mortgaging their lives to Covetise,
Through wastfull Pride, and wanton Riotise,
They were by law of that proud Tyrannesse Provokt with Wrath, and Envies false surmise,

Condemnéd to that Dongeon mercilesse,
Where they should live in woe, and die in wretchednesse.

47

There was that great proud king of Babylon,<sup>3</sup>
That would compell all nations to adore,
And him as onely God to call upon,
Till through celestiall doome throwne out of
dore,

Into an Oxe he was transform'd of yore:
There also was king Cræsus, that enhaunst
His heart too high through his great riches
store;

And proud Antiochus, the which advaunst
His curséd hand gainst God, and on his altars daunst.

48

And them long time before, great Nimrod
was,

That first the world with sword and fire
warrayd;

And after him old Ninus<sup>4</sup> farre did pas
In princely pompe, of all the world obayd;
There also was that mightie Monarch<sup>5</sup> layd
Low under all, yet above all in pride,
That name of native syre did fowle upbrayd,
And would as Ammons sonne be magnifide,
Till scornd of God and man a shamefull death he hided.<sup>6</sup>

49

All these together in one heape were throwne,
Like carkases of beasts in butchers stall.
And in another corner wide were strowne
The antique ruines of the Romaines fall:

<sup>3</sup>Nebuchadnezzar.

<sup>4</sup>According to legend the founder of Nineveh.

<sup>5</sup>Alexander the Great, who dishonored the name of his father Philip, in allowing himself to be called the son of Jupiter Ammon.

<sup>6</sup>It was believed that Alexander died of drunkenness

<sup>1</sup>Never to be ended.

<sup>2</sup>For riding.

Great Romulus<sup>1</sup> the Grandsyre of them all,
Proud Tarquín, and too lordly Lentulus,
Stout Scipio, and stubborne Hanniball,
Ambitious Sylla, and sterne Marius,
High Cæsar, great Pompey, and fierce
Antonius.<sup>2</sup>

50

Amongst these mighty men were wemen
mixt,
Proud wemen, vaine, forgetfull of their yoke;<sup>3</sup>
The bold Semiramis,<sup>4</sup> whose sides transfixt
With sonnes owne blade, her fowle reproches spoke;
Faire Sthenobæa,<sup>5</sup> that her selfe did choke
With wilfull cord, for wanting of her will;
High minded Cleopatra, that with stroke
Of Aspès sting her selfe did stoutly kill:
And thousands moe the like, that did that dongeon fill.

51

Besides the endlesse routs of wretched
thralls,
Which thither were assembled day by day,
From all the world after their wofull falles,
Through wicked pride, and wasted wealthes
decay.
But most of all, which in that Dungeon lay Fell from high Princes courts, or Ladies
bowres,
Where they in idle pompe, or wanton play,
Consuméd had their goods, and thriftlesse
howres,
And lastly throwne themselves into these heavy stowres.

52

Whose case when as the carefull Dwarfe had
tould,
And made ensample of their mournfull sight Unto his maister, he no longer would
There dwell in perill of like painefull plight,
But early rose, and ere that dawning light
Discovered had the world to heaven wyde,
He by a privie Posterne tooke his flight,

<sup>1</sup>Legendary founder of Rome.

<sup>2</sup>Mark Antony.

<sup>3</sup>Forgetful of the subordination proper to their sex.

<sup>4</sup>According to legend the wife of Ninus.

<sup>5</sup>Slew herself because of love for Bellerophon.

That of no envious eyes he mote be spyde:
For doubtlesse death ensewd, if any him descryde.

53

Scarce could 'he footing find in that fowle
way,
For many corses, like a great Lay-stall
Of mured men which therein strowéd lay,
Without remorse, or decent funerall:
Which all through that great Princesse pride
did fall
And came to shamefull end. And them beside
Forth ryding underneath the castell wall,
A donghill of dead carkases he spide,
The dreadfull spectacle of that sad house of
Pride.

CANTO VI

*From lawlesse lust by wondrous grace
fayre Una is releast:
Whom salvage nation does adore,
and learnes her wise beheast.*

1

As when a ship, that flyes faire under saile,
An hidden rocke escapéd hath unwares,
That lay in waite her wrack for to bewaile,<sup>6</sup>
The Marriner yet halfe amazéd stares
At perill past, and yet in doubt ne dares
To joy at his foole-happie oversight.<sup>7</sup>
So doubly is distrest twixt joy and cares
The dreadlesse courage of this Elfin knight,
Having escapt so sad ensamples in his sight.

2

Yet sad he was that his too hastie speed
The faire Duess' had forst him leave behind;
And yet more sad, that Una his deare dreed
Her truth had staind with treason so un-
kind;
Yet crime in her could never creature find,
But for his love, and for her owne selfe sake,
She wandred had from one to other Ynd,<sup>8</sup>
Him for to seeke, ne ever would forsake,
Till her unwares the fierce Sansloy did over-
take.

<sup>6</sup>To cause her wreck to be bewailed.

<sup>7</sup>At his blindly lucky escape.

<sup>8</sup>From the East to the West Indies, figurative expression for a great distance.

3

Who after Archimagoes fowle defeat,
 Led her away into a forrest wilde,
 And turning wrathfull fire to lustfull heat,
 With beastly sin thought her to have defilde,
 And made the vassall of his pleasures vilde.
 Yet first he cast by treatie, and by traynes,
 Her to perswade, that stubborne fort to yilde:
 For greater conquest of hard love he gaynes,
 That workes it to his will, then he that it constraines.

4

With fawning wordes he courted her a while,
 And looking lovely, and oft sighing sore,
 Her constant hart did tempt with diverse
 guile:
 But wordes and lookes, and sighes she did
 abhore,
 As rocke of Diamond stedfast evermore.
 Yet for to feed his fyrie lustfull eye,
 He snatcht the vele, that hong her face
 before;
 Then gan her beautie shine, as brightest skye,
 And burnt his beastly hart t'efforce her chastitye.

5

So when he saw his flatt'ring arts to fayle,
 And subtile engines bet from batteree,
 With greedy force he gan the fort assaile,
 Whereof he weend possesséd soone to bee,
 And win rich spoile of ransackt chastetee.
 Ah heavens, that do this hideous act behold,
 And heavenly virgin thus outragéd see,
 How can ye vengeance just so long withhold,
 And hurle not flashing flames upon that Paynim bold?

6

The pitteous maiden carefull comfortlesse,
 Does throw out thrilling shriekes, and shrieking
 cries,
 The last vaine helpe of womens great distresse,
 And with loud plaints importuneth the skyes,
 That molten starres do drop like weeping
 eyes;
 And Phæbus flying so most shamefull sight,
 His blushing face in foggy cloud implyes,
 And hides for shame. What wit of mortall
 wight
 Can now devise to quit a thrall from such a plight?

7

Eternall providence exceeding thought,
 Where none appeares can make her selfe a
 way:
 A wondrous way it for this Lady wrought,
 From Lyons clawes to pluck the gripéd pray.
 Her shrill outcryes and shriekes so loud did bray,
 That all the woodes and forestes did re-
 sownd;
 A troupe of Faunes and Satyres<sup>1</sup> far away
 Within the wood were dauncing in a rownd, Whiles old Sylvanus<sup>2</sup> slept in shady arber
 sownd.

8

Who when they heard that pitteous strained
 voice,
 In hast forsooke their rurall meriment,
 And ran towards the far rebownded noyce,
 To weet, what wight so loudly did lament.
 Unto the place they come incontinent:
 Whom when the raging Sarazin espide,
 A rude, mishapen, monstrous rablement,
 Whose like he never saw, he durst not bide,
 But got his ready steed, and fast away gan
 ride.

9

The wyld woodgods arrivéd in the place,
 There find the virgin dolefull desolate,
 With ruffled rayments, and faire blubbred
 face,
 As her outrageous foe had left her late,
 And trembling yet through feare of former
 hate;
 All stand amazéd at so uncouth sight,
 And gin to pittie her unhappie state;
 All stand astonied at her beautie bright,
 In their rude eyes unworthie of so wofull
 plight.

10

She more amaz'd, in double dread doth dwell;
 And every tender part for feare does shake:
 As when a greedie Wolfe through hunger fell
 A seely Lambe farre from the flocke does
 take,

<sup>1</sup>The Latin and Greek wood-gods. Here, however, they represent unenlightened mankind, "common people."

<sup>2</sup>Roman woodland deity, here simply the chief figure among the fauns and satyrs.

Of whom he meanes his bloudie feast to
make,

A Lyon spies fast running towards him,
The innocent pray in hast he does forsake,
Which quit from death yet quakes in every lim

With change of feare, to see the Lyon looke
so grim.

11

Such fearefull fit assaid her trembling hart,
Ne word to speake, ne joynt to move she had:
The salvage nation feele her secret smart,
And read her sorrow in her count'nance sad;
Their frowning foreheads with rough hornes
yclad,

And rusticke horror<sup>1</sup> all aside doe lay,
And gently grenning, shew a semblance glad
To comfort her, and feare to put away,
Their backward bent knees teach her humbly to obay.<sup>2</sup>

12

The doubtfull Damzell dare not yet commit
Her single person to their barbarous truth,
But still twixt feare and hope amazd does sit,
Late leard what harme to hastie trust en-
su'th,

They in compassion of her tender youth,
And wonder of her beautie souveraine,
Are wonne with pittie and unwonted ruth,
And all prostrate upon the lowly plaine,
Do kisse her feete, and fawne on her with count'nance faire.

13

Their harts she ghesseth by their humble
guise,

And yielde her to extremitie of time;<sup>3</sup>
So from the ground she fearelesse doth arise,
And walketh forth without suspect of crime:<sup>4</sup>
They all as glad, as birdes of joyous Prime,
Thence lead her forth, about her dauncing
round,

Shouting, and singing all a shepheards ryme
And with greene branches strowing all the
ground,
Do worship her, as Queene, with olive girlond cround.

<sup>1</sup>Country roughness.

<sup>2</sup>They teach their knees (backward-bent like those of a goat) to obey her humbly—i. e., they kneel or bow low to her.

<sup>3</sup>Accommodates herself to the extremity she is in.

<sup>4</sup>Without fear of the satyrs.

14

And all the way their merry pipes they
sound,

That all the woods with doubled Eccho ring,
And with their hornéd feet<sup>5</sup> do weare the
ground,

Leaping like wanton kids in pleasant Spring.
So towards old Sylvanus they her bring;
Who with the noyse awakéd, commeth out,
To weet the cause, his weake steps governing,
And agéd limbs on Cypresse stadle stout,
And with an yvie twyne his wast is girt
about.

15

Far off he wonders, what them makes so glad,
Or Bacchus merry fruit they did invent,
Or Cybeles franticke rites have made them
mad;

They drawing nigh, unto their God present
That flowre of faith and beautie excellent.
The God himselve vewing that mirrhour
rare,<sup>6</sup>

Stood long amazd, and burnt in his intent;<sup>7</sup>
His owne faire Dryope now he thinkes not
faire,

And Pholoe fowle, when her to this he doth compaire.

16

The woodborne people fall before her flat,
And worship her as Goddesses of the wood:
And old Sylvanus selfe bethinkes not, what
To thinke of wight so faire, but gazing stood,
In doubt to deeme her borne of earthly
brood;

Sometimes Dame Venus selfe he seemes to
see,

But Venus never had so sober mood;
Sometimes Diana he her takes to bee,
But misseth bow, and shaftes, and buskins to her knee.

17

By vew of her he ginneth to revive
His ancient love, and dearest Cyparisse,
And calles to mind his pourtraiture alive,
How faire he was, and yet not faire to this,<sup>8</sup>

<sup>5</sup>Horny feet.

<sup>6</sup>Una is a mirror in the sense that in her appearance she reflects the heavenly beauty.

<sup>7</sup>In his gaze.

<sup>8</sup>In comparison with Una.

And how he slew with glauncing dart amisse
A gentle Hynd, the which the lovely boy
Did love as life, above all wordly blisse;
For griefe whereof the lad n'ould after joy,<sup>1</sup>
But pynd away in anguish and selfe-wild annoy.<sup>2</sup>

18

The wooddy Nymphes, faire Hamadryades<sup>3</sup>
Her to behold do thither runne apace,
And all the troupe of light-foot Naiades,<sup>4</sup>
Flocke all about to see her lovely face:
But when they vewéd have her heavenly
grace,
They envie her in their malicious mind,
And fly away for feare of fowle disgrace:
But all the Satyres scorne their woody kind,
And henceforth nothing faire, but her on earth they find.

19

Glad of such lucke, the luckelesse lucky maid,<sup>5</sup>
Did her content to please their feeble eyes,<sup>6</sup>
And long time with that salvage people staid,
To gather breath in many miseries.
During which time her gentle wit she plyes,
To teach them truth, which worshipt her in
vaine,
And made her th'Image of Idolatryes;
But when their bootlesse zeale she did re-
straine
From her own worship, they her Asse would worship fayn.

20

It fortunéd a noble warlike knight,<sup>7</sup>
By just occasion to that forrest came,
To seeke his kindred, and the lignage right,
From whence he tooke his well deservéd
name:

<sup>1</sup>Would not thereafter be joyous

<sup>2</sup>Self-willed distress.

<sup>3</sup>Spirits of the trees.

<sup>4</sup>Water-nymphs.

<sup>5</sup>Both unlucky, in her wanderings, and lucky, in her new-found friends.

<sup>6</sup>Feeble to discern spiritual things. As immediately appears, they cannot distinguish between truth and its symbols.

<sup>7</sup>Sir Satyrane, who typifies natural morality, not enlightened by revealed truth.

He had in armes abroad wonne muchell fame,
And fild far landes with glorie of his might,
Plaine, faithfull, true, and enemy of shame,
And ever lov'd to fight for Ladies right,
But in vaine glorious frayes he litle did delight.

21

A Satyres sonne yborne in forrest wyld,
By straunge adventure as it did betyde,
And there begotten of a Lady myld,
Faire Thyamis the daughter of Labryde,
That was in sacred bands of wedlocke tyde
To Therion, a loose unruly swayne;
Who had more joy to raunge the forrest
wyde,
And chase the salvage beast with busie
payne,
Then serve his Ladies love, and wast in pleasures vayne.

22

The forlorne mayd did with loves longing
burne,
And could not lacke her lovers company,
But to the wood she goes, to serve her turne,
And seeke her spouse, that from her still does
fly,
And followes other game and venery:
A Satyre chaunst her wandring for to find,
And kindling coles of lust in brutish eye,
The loyall links of wedlocke did unbind,
And made her person thrall unto his beastly
kind.

23

So long in secret cabin there he held
Her captive to his sensuall desire,
Till that with timely fruit her belly sweld,
And bore a boy unto that salvage sire:
Then home he suffred her for to retire,
For ransome leaving him the late borne
childe;
Whom till to ryper yeares he gan aspire,
He noursled up in life and manners wilde,
Emongst wild beasts and woods, from lawes of men exile.

24

For all he taught the tender ymp, was but
To banish cowardize and bastard feare;
His trembling hand he would him force to put
Upon the Lyon and the rugged Beare,

And from the she Beares teats her whelps to
teare;
And eke wyld roring Buls he would him
make
To tame, and ryde their backes not made to
beare;
And the Robuckes in flight to overtake,
That every beast for feare of him did fly and quake.

25

Thereby so fearelesse, and so fell he grew,
That his owne sire and maister of his guise
Did often tremble at his horrid vew,
And oft for dread of hurt would him advise,
The angry beasts not rashly to despise,
Not too much to provoke; for he would learne
The Lyon stoup to him in lowly wise,
(A lesson hard) and make the Libbard sterne Leave roaring, when in rage he for revenge did earne.

26

And for to make his powre approvéd more,
Wyld beasts in yron yokes he would compell;
The spotted Panther, and the tuskéd Bore,
The Pardale swift, and the Tigre cruell;
The Antelope, and Wolfe both fierce and fell;
And them constraine in equall teme to draw.
Such joy he had, their stubborne harts to quell,
And sturdie courage tame with dreadfull aw,
That his beheast they fearéd, as a tyrans
law.

27

His loving mother came upon a day
Unto the woods, to see her little sonne;
And chaunst unwares to meet him in the
way,
After his sportes, and cruell pastime donne,
When after him a Lyonesse did runne,
That roaring all with rage, did lowd requere
Her children deare, whom he away had
wonne:
The Lyon whelpes she saw how he did beare,
And lull in rugged armes, withouten childish
feare.

28

The fearefull Dame all quakéd at the sight,
And turning backe, gan fast to fly away,
Untill with love revokt from vaine affright
She hardly yet perswaded was to stay,

And then to him these womanish words gan
say;
Ah Satyrane, my dearling, and my joy,
For love of me leave off this dreadfull
play,
To dally thus with death, is no fit toy,
Go find some other play-fellowes, mine own sweet boy.

29

In these and like delights of bloody game
He traynéd was, till ryper yeares he raught,
And there abode, whilst any beast of name
Walkt in that forest, whom he had not taught
To feare his force: and then his courage
haught
Desird of forreine foemen to be knowne,
And far abroad for straunge adventures
sought:
In which his might was never overthrowne,
But through all Faery lond his famous worth was blown.

30

Yet evermore it was his manner faire,
After long labours and adventures spent,
Unto those native woods for to repaire,
To see his sire and offspring auncient.<sup>1</sup>
And now he thither came for like intent;
Where he unwares the fairest Una found,
Straunge Lady, in so straunge habiliment,
Teaching the Satyres, which her sat around,
Trew sacred lore,<sup>2</sup> which from her sweet lips
did redound.

31

He wondred at her wisdom heavenly rare,
Whose like in womens wit he never knew;
And when her curteous deeds he did compare,<sup>3</sup>
Gan her admire, and her sad sorrowes rew,
Blaming of Fortune, which such troubles
threw,
And joyd to make prooffe of her crueltie
On gentle Dame, so hurtlesse, and so trew:
Thenceforth he kept her goodly company,
And leard her discipline of faith and veritie.

<sup>1</sup>And his ancient lineage—the satyrs.

<sup>2</sup>The Gospel as interpreted by the protestant reformers.

<sup>3</sup>Compare with her present surroundings?

32

But she all vowd unto the Redcrosse knight,
His wandering perill closely did lament,
Ne in this new acquaintance could delight,
But her deare heart with anguish did torment,

And all her wit in secret counsels spent,
How to escape. At last in privie wise
To Satyrane she shewed her intent;
Who glad to gain such favour, gan devise,
How with that pensive Maid he best might thence arise.<sup>1</sup>

33

So on a day when Satyres all were gone,
To do their service to Sylvanus old,
The gentle virgin left behind alone
He led away with courage stout and bold.
Too late it was, to Satyres to be told,<sup>2</sup>
Or ever hope recover her againe:
In vaine he seekes that having cannot hold.
So fast he carried her with carefull paine,
That they the woods are past, and come now
to the plaine.

34

The better part now of the lingring day,
They traveild had, when as they farre espide
A wearie wight forwandring by the way,
And towards him they gan in hast to ride,
To weet of newes, that did abroad betide,
Or tydings of her knight of the Redcrosse.
But he them spying, gan to turne aside,
For feare as seemd, or for some feignéd
losse;
More greedy they of newes, fast towards him
do crosse.

35

A silly man, in simple weedes forworne,
And soild with dust of the long driéd way;
His sandales were with toilesome travell
torne,
And face all tand with scorching sunny ray,
As he had traveild many a sommers day,
Through boyling sands of Arabie and Ynde;
And in his hand a Jacobs staffe,<sup>3</sup> to stay
His wearie limbes upon: and eke behind,
His scrip did hang, in which his needments
he did bind.

<sup>1</sup>Depart thence.

<sup>2</sup>It was too late now for the satyrs to hear of it.

<sup>3</sup>A pilgrim's staff.

36

The knight approching nigh, of him inquerd Tydings of warre, and of adventures new;
But warres, nor new adventures none he herd.

Then Una gan to aske, if ought he knew,
Or heard abroad of that her champion trew,
That in his armour bare a croslet red.
Aye me, Deare dame (quoth he) well may I
rew

To tell the sad sight, which mine eies have
red:

These eyes did see that knight both living and eke ded.

37

That cruell word her tender hart so thrild,
That suddain cold did runne through every
vaine,

And stony horror all her sences fild
With dying fit, that downe she fell for paine.
The knight her lightly rearéd up againe,
And comforted with curteous kind reliefe:
Then wonne from death, she bad him tellen
plaine

The further processe of her hidden grieve;<sup>4</sup>
The lesser pangs can beare, who hath endur'd
the chiefe.

38

Then gan the Pilgrim thus, I chaunst this
day,

This fatall day, that shall I ever rew,
To see two knights in travell on my way
(A sory sight) arraung'd in battell new,
Both breathing vengeaunce, both of wrath-
full hew;

My fearefull flesh did tremble at their strife,
To see their blades so greedily imbrew,
That drunke with bloud, yet thirsted after
life:

What more? the Redcrosse knight was slaine with Paynim knife.

39

Ah dearest Lord (quoth she) how might that
bee,

And he the stoutest knight, that ever wonne?
Ah dearest dame (quoth he) how might I
see

The thing, that might not be, and yet was donne?

<sup>4</sup>The details as yet unknown to her.

Where is (said Satyrane) that Paynims sonne,
That him of life, and us of joy hath reft?
Not far away (quoth he) he hence doth
wonne
Foreby a fountaine, where I late him left Washing his bloody wounds, that through the steele were cleft.

40

Therewith the knight thence marchéd forth
in hast,
Whiles Una with huge heavinesse opprest,
Could not for sorrow follow him so fast;
And soone he came, as he the place had ghest,
Whereas that Pagan proud him selfe did rest,
In secret shadow by a fountaine side:
Even he it was, that earst would have sup-
prest
Faire Una: whom when Satyrane espide,
With fowle reprochfull words he boldly him defide.

41

• And said, Arise thou curséd Miscreant, That hast with knightlesse guile and trecher-
ous train
Faire knighthood fowly shamed, and doest
vaunt
That good knight of the Redcrosse to have
slain:
Arise, and with like treason now maintain
Thy guilty wrong, or else thee guilty yield.
The Sarazin this hearing, rose amain,
And catching up in hast his three square
shield,<sup>1</sup>
And shining helmet, soone him buckled to the field.

42

And drawing nigh him said, Ah misborne Elfe,
In evill houre thy foes thee hither sent,
Anothers wrongs to wreake upon thy selfe:
Yet ill thou blamest me, for having blent
My name with guile and traiterous intent;
That Redcrosse knight, perdie, I never slew,
But had he beene, where earst his armes
were lent,
Th'enchauter vaine his errour should not
rew:
But thou his errour shalt, I hope now proven
trew.

<sup>1</sup>Shield with three equal sides.

43

Therewith they gan, both furious and fell,
To thunder blowes, and fiersly to assaile
Each other bent his enemy to quell,
That with their force they perst both plate
and maile,
And made wide furrowes in their fleshes
fraile,
That it would pittie any living eie.
Large floods of bloud adowne their sides did raile;
But floods of bloud could not them satis-
fie:
Both hungred after death: both chose to win,
or die.

44

So long they fight, and fell revenge pursue,
That fainting each, themselves to breathen
let,
And oft refreshéd, battell oft renue:
As when two Bores with rancling malice met,
Their gory sides fresh bleeding fiercely fret,
Till breathlesse both them selves aside retire,
Where foming wrath, their cruell tuskes they
whet,
And trample th'earth, the whiles they may respire;
Then backe to fight againe, new breathéd and entire.

45

So fiersly, when these knights had breathéd
once,
They gan to fight returne, increasing more
Their puissant force, and cruell rage attonce, With heaped strokes more hugely, then before,
That with their drerie wounds and bloody gore
They both deforméd, scarsely could be known.
By this sad Una fraught with anguish sore,
Led with their noise, which through the aire was thrown,
Arriv'd, where they in erth their fruitles
bloud had sown.

46

Whom all so soone as that proud Sarazin
Espide, he gan revive the memory
Of his lewd lusts, and late attempted sin,
And left the doubtfull battell hastily,

To catch her, newly offred to his eie:
But Satyrane with strokes him turning, staid,
And sternely bad him other businesse plie,
Then hunt the steps of pure unspotted Maid:
Wherewith he all enrag'd, these bitter speeches said.

47

O foolish faeries sonne, what furie mad
Hath thee incenst, to hast thy dolefull fate?
Were it not better, I that Lady had,
Then that thou hadst repented it too late?
Most sencelesse man he, that himselfe doth
hate,

To love another. Lo then for thine ayd
Here take thy lovers token on thy pate.
So they two fight; the whiles the royall Mayd Fled farre away, of that proud Paynim sore
afrayd.

48

But that false Pilgrim, which that leasing
told,
Being in deed old Archimage, did stay
In secret shadow, all this to behold,
And much rejoycéd in their bloudy fray:
But when he saw the Damsell passe away
He left his stond, and her pursewd apace,
In hope to bring her to her last decay.
But for to tell her lamentable cace,
And eke this battels end, will need another place.<sup>1</sup>

CANTO VII

The Redcrosse knight is captive made by Gyaunt proud opprest, Prince Arthur meets with Una greatly with those newes distrest.

I

What man so wise, what earthly wit so ware,
As to descry the crafty cunning traine,
By which deceit doth maske in visour faire,
And cast her colours dyéd deepe in graine,
To seeme like Truth, whose shape she well
can faine,
And fitting gestures to her purpose frame;
The guiltlesse man with guile to entertaine?
Great maistresse of her art was that false
Dame,
The false Duessa, clokéd with Fidessaes
name.

<sup>1</sup>But Spenser never told the outcome of this battle.

2

Who when returning from the dreary Night,
She fownd not in that perilous house of Pryde,
Where she had left, the noble Redcrosse
knight,
Her hopéd pray, she would no lenger bide,
But forth she went, to seeke him far and wide.
Ere long she fownd, whereas he wearie sate,
To rest him selfe, foreby a fountaine side,
Disarméd all of yron-coted Plate,
And by his side his steed the grassy forage ate.

3

He feedes upon the cooling shade, and bayes
His sweatie forehead in the breathing wind,
Which through the trembling leaves full gently playes
Wherein the cherefull birds of sundry kind
Do chaunt sweet musick, to delight his mind:
The Witch approching gan him fairely greet,
And with reproch of carelesnesse unkind
Upbrayd, for leaving her in place unmeet,
With fowle words tempering faire, soure gall with hony sweet.

4

Unkindnesse past, they gan of solace treat,
And bathe in pleasaunce of the joyous shade,
Which shielded them against the boyling
heat,
And with greene boughes decking a gloomy
glade,
About the fountaine like a girlond made;
Whose bubbling wave did ever freshly well,
Ne ever would through fervent sommer fade:
The sacred Nymph, which therein wont to dwell,
Was out of Dianes favour, as it then befell.

5

The cause was this: one day when Phæbe<sup>2</sup>
fayre
With all her band was following the chace,
This Nymph, quite tyr'd with heat of scorching ayre,
Sat downe to rest in midst of the race:
The goddesse wroth gan fowly her disgrace,
And bad the waters, which from her did
flow,
Be such as she her selfe was then in place.

<sup>2</sup>Artemis.

Thenceforth her waters waxéd dull and slow,
And all that drunke thereof, did faint and feeble grow.

6

Hereof this gentle knight unweeting was,
And lying downe upon the sandie graile,
Drunke of the streame, as cleare as cristall
glas;

Eftsoones his manly forces gan to faile,
And mightie strong was turnd to feeble fraile.
His chaungéd powres at first them selves not felt,

Till crudled cold his corage gan assaile,
And chearefull bloud in faintnesse chill did melt,

Which like a fever fit through all his body
swelt.

7

Yet goodly court he made still to his Dame,
Poured out in loosnesse on the grassy grownd,
Both carelesse of his health, and of his fame:
Till at the last he heard a dreadful sownd,
Which through the wood loud bellowing, did rebownd,

That all the earth for terrour seemd to shake,
And trees did tremble. Th'Elfe therewith
astownd,

Upstartd lightly from his looser make,
And his unready weapons gan in hand to take.

8

But ere he could his armour on him dight,
Or get his shield, his monstrous enimy
With sturdie steps came stalking in his sight,
An hideous Geant<sup>1</sup> horrible and hye,
That with his talnesse seemd to threat the
skye,

The ground eke gronéd under him for dreed;
His living like saw never living eye,
Ne durst behold: his stature did exceed
The hight of three the tallest sonnes of mortall seed.

9

The greatest Earth his uncouth mother was,
And blustering Æolus his boasted sire,
Who with his breath, which through the world doth pas,

Her hollow womb did secretly inspire,

<sup>1</sup>Orgoglio, typifying pride; not the pride of life typified by Lucifera, but the pride of a corrupt church immersed in temporal affairs—the Roman Catholic Church as Spenser saw it.

And fild her hidden caves with stormie yre,
That she conceiv'd; and trebling the dew
time,

In which the wombes of women do expire, Brought forth this monstrous masse of earthly slime,

Puft up with emptie wind, and fild with sinfull crime.

10

So growen great through arrogant delight
Of th'high descent, whereof he was yborne,
And through presumption of his matchlesse
might,

All other powres and knighthood he did
scorne.

Such now he marcheth to this man forlorne,
And left to losse: his stalking steps are stayde

Upon a snaggy Oke, which he had torne
Out of his mothers bowelles, and it made His mortall mace, wherewith his foemen he dismayde

11

That when the knight he spide, he gan advance

With huge force and insupportable mayne,
And towards him with dreadfull fury
prounce;

Who haplesse, and eke hopelesse, all in
vaine

Did to him pace, sad battaile to darrayne,
Disarmd, disgrast, and inwardly dismayde,
And eke so faint in every joynt and vaine,
Through that fraile fountaine, which him feeble made,

That scarcely could he weeld his bootlesse single blade.

12

The Geaunt strooke so maynly mercilesse,
That could have overthrowne a stony towre.
And were not heavenly grace, that him did
blesse,

He had beene pouldred all, as thin as flowre:

But he was wary of that deadly stowre,
And lightly lept from underneath the blow:

Yet so exceeding was the villeins powre,
That with the wind it did him overthrow,
And all his sences stound, that still he lay full low.

13

As when that divelish yron Engin wrought
 In deepest Hell, and framd by Furies skill,
 With windy Nitre and quick Sulphur fraught
 And ramd with bullet round, ordaind to kill,
 Conceivd fire, the heavens it doth fill
 With thundring noyse, and all the ayre doth choke,
 That none can breath, nor see, nor heare at
 will,
 Through smouldry cloud of duskish stincking
 smoke,
 That th'onely breath him daunts, who hath escapt the stroke.

14

So daunted when the Geaunt saw the knight
 His heavie hand he heavéd up on hye,
 And him to dust thought to have battred
 quight,
 Untill Duessa loud to him gan crye;
 O great Orgoglio, greatest under skye,
 O hold thy mortall hand for Ladies sake,
 Hold for my sake, and do him not to dye,
 But vanquisht thine eternall bondslave
 make,
 And me thy worthy meed unto thy Leman
 take.

15

He hearkned, and did stay from further
 harmes,
 To gayne so goodly guerdon, as she spake:
 So willingly she came into his armes,
 Who her as willingly to grace did take,
 And was possesséd of his new found make,
 Then up he tooke the slombred sencelesse
 corse,
 And ere he could out of his swowne awake,
 Him to his castle brought with hastie forse,
 And in a Doungeon deepe him threw without remorse.

16

From that day forth Duessa was his deare,
 And highly honourd in his haughtie eye,
 He gave her gold and purple pall to weare,
 And triple crowne set on her head full hye,
 And her endowd with royall majesty:
 Then for to make her dreaded more of men,
 And peoples harts with awfull terror tye,
 A monstrous beast<sup>1</sup> ybred in filthy fen
 He chose, which he had kept long time in darksome den.

17

Such one it was, as that renoméd Snake<sup>2</sup>
 Which great Alcides in Stremona slew,
 Long fostred in the filth of Lerna lake,
 Whose many heads out budding ever new,
 Did breed him endlesse labour to subdew:
 But this same Monster much more ugly
 was;
 For seven great heads out of his body
 grew,
 An yron brest, and backe of scaly bras,
 And all embrewd in bloud, his eyes did shine
 as glas.

18

His tayle was stretchéd out in wondrous
 length,
 That to the house of heavenly gods it raught,
 And with extorted powre, and borrow'd
 strength,
 The ever-burning lamps from thence it
 brought,
 And proudly threw to ground, as things of
 nought;
 And underneath his filthy feet did tread
 The sacred things, and holy heasts fore-
 taught.
 Upon this dreadful Beast with sevenfold
 head
 He set the false Duessa, for more aw and dread.

19

The wofull Dwarf, which saw his maisters
 fall,
 Whiles he had keeping of his grasing steed,
 And valiant knight become a caytive thrall,
 When all was past, tooke up his forlorne
 weed,
 His mightie armour, missing most at need;
 His silver shield, now idle maisterlesse;
 His poynant speare, that many made to bleed,
 The ruefull monuments of heavinesse,
 And with them all departes, to tell his great distresse.

20

He had not travaild long, when on the way
 He wofull Ladie, wofull Una met,
 Fast flying from the Paynims greedy pray,
 Whilest Satyrane him from pursuit did let:

<sup>1</sup>Cf. Revelation, xvii, 3.

<sup>2</sup>The Lernean Hydra, slain by Hercules.

Who when her eyes she on the Dwarfe had set,
And saw the signes, that deadly tydings
spake,
She fell to ground for sorrowfull regret,
And lively breath her sad brest did forsake,
Yet might her pittieus hart be seene to pant and quake.

21

The messenger of so unhappie newes,
Would faine have dyde: dead was his hart
within,
Yet outwardly some little comfort shewes:
At last recovering hart, he does begin
To rub her temples, and to chaufe her chin,
And every tender part does tosse and turne:
So hardly he the flitted life does win,
Unto her native prison to retourne:
Then gins her grievéd ghost thus to lament and mourne.

22

Ye dreary instruments of dolefull sight,
That doe this deadly spectacle behold,
Why do ye lenger feed on loathéd light,
Or liking find to gaze on earthly mould,
Sith cruell fates the carefull threeds unfould,
The which my life and love together tyde?
Now let the stony dart of senselesse cold
Perce to my hart, and pas through every side,
And let eternall night so sad sight fro me
hide.

23

O lightsome day, the lampe of highest Jove,
First made by him, mens wandring wayes to guyde,
When darkenesse he in deepest dongeon drove,
Henceforth thy hated face for ever hyde,
And shut up heavens windowes shyning wyde:
For earthly sight can nought but sorrow
breed,
And late repentance, which shall long abyde.
Mine eyes no more on vanitie shall feed,
But seeléd up with death, shall have their deadly meed.

24

Then downe againe she fell unto the ground;
But he her quickly reared up againe:
Thrise did she sinke adowne in deadly swownd,
And thrise he her reviv'd with busie paine:

At last when life recover'd had the raine,
And over-wrestled his strong enemy,
With foltring tong, and trembling every
vaine,
Tell on (quoth she) the wofull Tragedie,
The which these reliques sad present unto mine eie.

25

Tempestuous fortune hath spent all her
spight,
And thrilling sorrow throwne his utmost
dart;
Thy sad tongue cannot tell more heavy
plight,
Then that I feele, and harbour in mine hart:
Who hath endur'd the whole, can beare each
part.
If death it be, it is not the first wound,
That launchéd hath my brest with bleeding
smart.
Begin, and end the bitter balefull stound;
If lesse, then that I feare, more favour I
have found.

26

Then gan the Dwarfe the whole discourse
declare,
The subtile traines of Archimago old;
The wanton loves of false Fidessa faire,
Bought with the bloud of vanquisht Paynim
bold:
The wretched payre transform'd to treen
mould;
The house of Pride, and perils round about;
The combat, which he with Sansjoy did hould;
The lucklesse conflict with the Gyant stout, Wherein captiv'd, of life or death he stood in doubt.<sup>1</sup>

27

She heard with patience all unto the end,
And strove to maister sorrowfull assay,<sup>2</sup>
Which greater grew, the more she did contend,
And almost rent her tender hart in tway;
And love fresh coles unto her fire did lay:
For greater love, the greater is the losse.
Was never Ladie lovéd dearer day,

<sup>1</sup>Since the knight had been carried off a captive, the dwarf did not know whether he was still alive or dead.

<sup>2</sup>The attack of sorrow.

Then she did love the knight of the Redcrosse,<sup>1</sup>
For whose deare sake so many troubles her did tosse.

28

At last when fervent sorrow slakéd was,
She up arose, resolving him to find
Alive or dead: and forward forth doth pas,
All as the Dwarfes the way to her assynd:
And evermore in constant carefull mind
She fed her wound with fresh renewéd bale;
Long tost with stormes, and bet with bitter
wind.

High over hils, and low adowne the dale,
She wandred many a wood, and measurd
many a vale.

29

At last she chauncéd by good hap to meet
A goodly knight,<sup>2</sup> faire marching by the way
Together with his Squire, arayéd meet:
His glitterand armour shinéd farre away,
Like glauncing light of Phæbus brightest ray;
From top to toe no place appearéd bare,
That deadly dint of steele endanger may:
Athwart his brest a bauldrick brave he ware,
That shynd, like twinkling stars, with stons
most pretious rare.

30

And in the midst thereof one pretious stone
Of wondrous worth, and eke of wondrous
might,

Shapt like a Ladies head, exceeding shone,
Like Hesperus emongst the lesser lights,
And strove for to amaze the weaker sights;
Thereby his mortall blade full comely hong
In yvory sheath, ycarv'd with curious slights;

Whose hilts were burnisht gold, and handle
strong

Of mother pearle, and buckled with a golden tong.

31

His haughtie helmet, horrid all with gold,
Both glorious brightnesse, and great terrour
bred;

For all the crest a Dragon did enfold
With greedie pawes, and over all did spred

<sup>1</sup>Lady never loved daylight more than she loved the Red Cross Knight.

<sup>2</sup>Prince Arthur, typifying that virtue which compre-hends all the rest, magnanimity, and, in this book of the Faerie Queene, Heavenly Grace.

His golden wings: his dreadfull hideous hed
Close couchéd on the bever, seem'd to throw
From flaming mouth bright sparkles fierie red,
That suddaine horror to faint harts did show;
And scaly tayle was stretcht adowne his backe full low.

32

Upon the top of all his loftie crest,
A bunch of haire discoloured diversly,
With sprinkled pearle, and gold full richly
drest,

Did shake, and seem'd to daunce for jollity,
Like to an Almond tree ymounted hye
On top of greene Selinis all alone,
With blossomes brave bedeckéd daintily;
Whose tender locks do tremble every one
At every little breath, that under heaven is blowne.

33

His warlike shield all closely cover'd was,
Ne might of mortall eye be ever seene;
Not made of steele, nor of enduring bras,
Such earthly mettals soone consuméd bene:
But all of Diamond perfect pure and cleene
It framéd was, one massie entire mould, Hewen out of Adamant rocke with engines
keene,

That point of speare it never percen could,
Ne dint of direfull sword divide the substance would.

34

The same to wight he never wont disclose,
But when as monsters huge he would dismay,
Or daunt unequall armies of his foes,
Or when the flying heavens he would affray;
For so exceeding shone his glistring ray,
That Phæbus golden face it did attain,<sup>3</sup>
As when a cloud his beames doth over-lay;
And silver Cynthia wexéd pale and faint,
As when her face is staynd with magicke arts constraint.<sup>4</sup>

35

No magicke arts hereof had any might,
Nor bloudie wordes of bold Enchaunters call,
But all that was not such, as seemd in sight,
Before that shield did fade, and suddaine fall:

<sup>3</sup>It was more brilliant than the sun. The light of truth outshines all others.

<sup>4</sup>It was believed that witches caused eclipses of the moon.

And when him list the raskall routes appall,
Men into stones therewith he could transmew,

And stones to dust, and dust to nought at all;
And when him list the prouder looks sub-
dew,

He would them gazing blind, or turne to other hew.

36

Ne let it seeme, that credence this ex-
ceedes,

For he that made the same, was knowne right
well

To have done much more admirable deedes.
It Merlin was, which whylome did excell
All living wightes in might of magicke spell:
Both shield, and sword, and armour all he
wrought

For this young Prince, when first to armes he fell;

But when he dyde, the Faerie Queene it
brought

To Faerie lond, where yet it may be seene, if sought.

37

A gentle youth, his dearly lovéd Squire
His speare of heben wood behind him bare, Whose harmefull head, thrice heated in the
fire,

Had riven many a brest with pikehead
square;

A goodly person, and could menage faire,
His stubborne steed with curbéd canon bit,
Who under him did trample as the aire,
And chaufft, that any on his backe should
sit;

The yron rowels into frothy fome he bit.

38

When as this knight nigh to the Ladie drew,
With lovely court he gan her entertaïne;
But when he heard her answeres loth, he knew

Some secret sorrow did her heart distraîne:
Which to allay, and calme her storming
paine,

Faire feeling words he wisely gan display,
And for her humour fitting purpose faîne,
To tempt the cause it selfe for to bewray;
Wherewith emmov'd, these bleeding words
she gan to say.

39

What worlds delight, or joy of living speach
Can heart, so plung'd in sea of sorrowes deepe,
And heaped with so huge misfortunes, reach?
The carefull cold<sup>1</sup> beginneth for to creepe,
And in my heart his yron arrow steepe,
Soone as I thinke upon my bitter bale:
Such helplesse harmes yts better hidden keepe,<sup>2</sup>

Then rip up griefe, where it may not availe,
My last left comfort is, my woes to weepe and waile.

40

Ah Ladie deare, quoth then the gentle knight,
Well may I weene, your griefe is wondrous
great;

For wondrous great griefe groneth in my
spright,

Whiles thus I heare you of your sorrowes treat.

But wofull Ladie let me you intrete,
For to unfold the anguish of your hart:
Mishaps are maistred by advice discrete,
And counsell mittigates the greatest smart;
Found never helpe, who never would his hurts impart.

41

O but (quoth she) great griefe will not be
tould,

And can more easily be thought, then said.
Right so; (quoth he) but he, that never
would,

Could never: will to might gives greatest aid.
But griefe (quoth she) does greater grow displaid,

If then it find not helpe, and breeds de-
paire.

Despaire breeds not (quoth he) where faith is staid.

No faith so fast (quoth she) but flesh does
paire.

Flesh may empaire (quoth he) but reason can repaire.

42

His goodly reason, and well guided speach
So deepe did settle in her gracious thought,
That her perswaded to disclose the breach,
Which love and fortune in her heart had
wrought,

<sup>1</sup>The chill of grief.

<sup>2</sup>Misfortunes which cannot be helped it is better to keep hidden.

And said; Faire Sir, I hope good hap hath
brought
You to inquire the secrets of my griefe,
Or that your wisdom will direct my
thought,
Or that your prowess can me yield reliefe:
Then heare the storie sad, which I shall tell you brieife.

43

The forlorne Maiden, whom your eyes have
seene
The laughing stocke of fortunes mockeries,
Am th'only daughter of a King and Queene,
Whose parents deare, whilst equall destinies
Did runne about,<sup>1</sup> and their felicities
The favourable heavens did not envy,
Did spread their rule through all the territories,
Which Phison and Euphrates floweth by,
And Gehons<sup>2</sup> golden waves doe wash continually.

44

Till that their cruell curséd enemy,
An huge great Dragon horrible in sight,
Bred in the loathly lakes of Tartary,<sup>3</sup>
With murderous ravine, and devouring might Their kingdome spoild, and countrey wasted
quight:
Themselves, for feare into his jawes to fall,
He forst to castle strong to take their flight,
Where fast embard in mightie brasen wall,
He has them now foure yeres besieged to make them thrall.

45

Full many knights adventurous and stout
Have enterprizd that Monster to subdew;
From every coast that heaven walks about,<sup>4</sup>
Have thither come the noble Martiall crew,
That famous hard atchievements still pur-
sew,
Yet never any could that girlond win,
But all still shronke, and still he greater grew:
All they for want of faith, or guilt of sin,
The pitteous pray of his fierce crueltie have bin.

<sup>1</sup>While the destinies moved equably.

<sup>2</sup>The three rivers of the Garden of Eden. Una's parents represent mankind, and were dispossessed of their territory by the dragon of sin.

<sup>3</sup>Tartarus, or hell.

<sup>4</sup>Spenser speaks in terms of the Ptolemaic astronomy,
according to which the heavens revolve about the earth.

46

At last yledd with farre reported praise,
Which flying fame throughout the world had
spred,
Of doughtie knights, whom Faery land did
raise,
That noble order high of Maidenhed,
Forthwith to court of Gloriane I sped,
Of Gloriane great Queene of glory bright,
Whose kingdomes seat Cleopolis<sup>5</sup> is red,
There to obtaine some such redoubted
knight,
That Parents deare from tyrants powre deliver might.

47

It was my chance (my chance was faire and
good)
There for to find a fresh unprovéd knight,
Whose manly hands imbrew'd in guiltie
blood
Had never bene, ne ever by his might Had throwne to ground the unregarded
right:
Yet of his prowess prooffe he since hath made
(I witnesse am) in many a cruell fight;
The groning ghosts of many one dismaide
Have felt the bitter dint of his avenging blade.

48

And ye the forlorne reliques of his powre,
His byting sword, and his devouring speare,
Which have enduréd many a dreadfull
stowre,
Can speake his prowess, that did earst you
beare,
And well could rule: now he hath left you
heare,
To be the record of his ruefull losse,
And of my dolefull disaventurous deare:<sup>6</sup>
O heavie record of the good Redcrosse, Where have you left your Lord, that could so well you tosse?

49

Well hopéd I, and faire beginnings had,
That he my captive langour should redeeme,
Till all unweeting, an Enchaunter bad
His sence abusd, and made him to misdeeme

<sup>5</sup>The city of glory.

<sup>6</sup>My grievous unfortunate injury.

My loyalty, not such as it did seeme;
That rather death desire, then such despight.
Be judge ye heavens, that all things right
esteeme,
How I him lov'd, and love with all my might,
So thought I eke of him, and thinke I thought aright.

50

Thenceforth me desolate he quite forsooke,
Towander, where wilde fortune would me lead,
And other bywaies he himselfe betooke,
Where never foot of living wight did tread,
That brought not backe the balefull body
dead;

In which him chauncéd false Duessa meete,
Mine onely foe, mine onely deadly dread,
Who with her witchcraft and misseeming
sweete,

Inveigled him to follow her desires unmeete.

51

At last by subtile sleights she him betrayd
Unto his foe, a Gyant huge and tall,
Who him disarméd, dissolute, dismayd,
Unwares surprised, and with mightie mall
The monster mercilesse him made to fall,
Whose fall did never foe before behold;
And now in darkesome dungeon, wretched
thrall,

Remedilesse, for aie he doth him hold;
This is my cause of griefe, more great, then may be told.

52

Ere she had ended all, she gan to faint:
But he her comforted and faire bespake, Certes, Madame, ye have great cause of
plaint,
That stoutest heart, I weene, could cause to quake.

But be of cheare, and comfort to you take:
For till I have acquit your captive knight,
Assure your selfe, I will you not forsake.
His chearefull words reviv'd her chearelesse
spright,
So forth they went, the Dwarfes them guiding ever right.

CANTO VIII

*Faire virgin to redeeme her deare brings Arthur to the fight:
Who slayes that Gyant, wounds the beast,
and strips Duessa quight.*

I

Ay me, how many perils doe enfold
The righteous man, to make him daily fall?
Were not, that heavenly grace doth him up-
hold,
And stedfast truth acquite him out of all.
Her love is firme, her care continuall,
So oft as he through his owne foolish pride,
Or weaknesse is to sinfull bands made thrall:
Else should this Redcrosse knight in bands
have dyde,
For whose deliverance she this Prince doth thither guide.

2

They sadly traveild thus, untill they came Nigh to a castle builded strong and hie:
Then cryde the Dwarfes, lo yonder is the
same,
In which my Lord my liege doth lucklesse lie,
Thrall to that Gyants hatefull tyrannie:
Therefore, deare Sir, your mightie powres
assay.
The noble knight alighted by and by
From loftie steede, and bad the Ladie stay,
To see what end of fight should him befall
that day.

3

So with the Squire, th'admirer of his might,
He marchéd forth towards that castle wall;
Whose gates he found fast shut, ne living
wight
To ward the same, nor answer commers call.
Then tooke that Squire an horne of bugle
small,
Which hong adowne his side in twisted gold,
And tassels gay. Wyde wonders over all
Of that same hornes great vertues weren told,
Which had approvéd bene in uses manifold.

4

Was never wight, that heard that shrilling
sound,
But trembling feare did feele in every vaine;
Three miles it might be easie heard around,
And Echoes three answerd it selfe againe:
No false enchauntment, nor deceitfull
traîne
Might once abide the terror of that blast,
But presently was voide and wholly vaine:
No gate so strong, no locke so firme and fast,
But with that percing noise flew open quite,
or brast.

5

The same before the Geants gate he blew,
 That all the castle quakéd from the ground,
 And every dore of freewill open flew.
 The Gyant selfe dismaïéd with that sownd,
 Where he with his Duessa dalliance fownd,
 In hast came rushing forth from inner bowre,
 With staring countenance sterne, as one
 astownd,
 And staggering steps, to weet, what suddein
 stowre,
 Had wrought that horror strange, and dar'd his dreaded powre.

6

And after him the proud Duessa came,
 High mounted on her manyheaded beast,
 And every head with fyrie tongue did flame,
 And every head was crownéd on his creast,
 And bloudie mouthéd with late cruell feast.
 That when the knight beheld, his mightie
 shield
 Upon his manly arme he soone addrest,
 And at him fiercely flew, with courage fild,
 And eger greedinesse through every member thrild.

7

Therewith the Gyant buckled him to fight, Inflam'd with scornefull wrath and high dis-
 daïne,
 And lifting up his dreadfull club on hight,
 All arm'd with ragged snubbes and knottie
 graine,
 Him thought at first encounter to have
 slaine.
 But wise and warie was that noble Pere,
 And lightly leaping from so monstrous maine,
 Did faire avoide the violence him nere;
 It booted nought, to thinke, such thunderbolts to beare.

8

Ne shame he thought to shunne so hideous
 might:
 The idle stroke, enforcing furious way,
 Missing the marke of his misayméd sight
 Did fall to ground, and with his heavie
 sway
 So deeply dinted in the driven clay,
 That three yardes deepe a furrow up did
 throw:
 The sad earth wounded with so sore assay,

Did grone full grievous underneath the blow,
 And trembling with strange feare, did like an earthquake show.

9

As when almightie Jove in wrathfull mood,
 To wreake the guilt of mortall sins is bent,
 Hurles forth his thundring dart with deadly food,
 Enrold in flames, and smouldring dreriment,
 Through riven cloudes and molten firmament;
 The fierce threeforkéd engin making way,
 Both loftie towres and highest trees hath rent,
 And all that might his angrie passage stay,
 And shooting in the earth, casts up a mount of clay.

10

His boystrous club, so buried in the ground,
 He could not rearen up againe so light,<sup>1</sup>
 But that the knight him at advantage found,
 And whiles he strove his combred clubbe to
 quight
 Out of the earth, with blade all burning
 bright
 He smote off his left arme, which like a blocke
 Did fall to ground, depriv'd of native might;
 Large streames of bloud out of the trunckéd
 stocke Forth gushéd, like fresh water streame from riven rocke.

11

Dismaïéd with so desperate deadly wound,
 And eke impatient of unwonted paine,
 He loudly brayd with beastly yelling sound,
 That all the fields rebellowéd againe;
 As great a noyse, as when in Cymbrian
 plaine<sup>2</sup>
 An heard of Bulles, whom kindly rage doth sting,
 Do for the milkie mothers want complaine,
 And fill the fields with troublous bellowing,
 The neighbour woods around with hollow murmur ring.

12

That when his deare Duessa heard, and saw
 The evill stownd, that dangerd her estate,
 Unto his aide she hastily did draw
 Her dreadfull beast, who swolne with bloud of late

<sup>1</sup>So quickly.

<sup>2</sup>Possibly the modern Crimea.

Came ramping forth with proud presumptuous gate,
 And threatned all his heads like flaming brands.
 But him the Squire made quickly to retrate,
 Encountering fierce with single sword in hand,
 And twixt him and his Lord did like a bulwarke stand.

13

The proud Duessa full of wrathfull spight,
 And fierce disdaine, to be affronted so,
 Enforst her purple beast with all her might
 That stop out of the way to overthroe,
 Scorning the let of so unequall foe:
 But nathemore would that courageous swayne
 To her yeeld passage, gainst his Lord to goe,
 But with outrageous strokes did him restraine,
 And with his bodie bard the way atwixt them twaine.

14

Then tooke the angrie witch her golden cup,<sup>1</sup>
 Which still she bore, replete with magick artes;
 Death and despayre did many thereof sup,
 And secret poyson through their inner parts,
 Th'eternall bale of heauie wounded harts;
 Which after charmes and some enchauntments said,
 She lightly sprinkled on his weaker parts;
 Therewith his sturdie courage soone was quayed,
 And all his senses were with suddeine dread dismayd.

15

So downe he fell before the cruell beast,
 Who on his necke his bloudie clawes did seize,
 That life nigh crusht out of his panting brest:
 No powre he had to stirre, nor will to rize.
 That when the carefull knight gan well avise,
 He lightly left the foe, with whom he fought,
 And to the beast gan turne his enterprise:
 For wondrous anguish in his hart it wrought,
 To see his lovéd Squire into such thraldome brought.

16

And high advauncing his bloud-thirstie blade,
 Stroke one of those deforméd heads so sore,
 That of his puissance proud ensample made;
 His monstrous scalpe downe to his teeth it tore,
 And that misforméd shape mis-shapéd more:
 A sea of bloud gusht from the gaping wound,
 That her gay garments staynd with filthy gore,
 And overflowéd all the field around;
 That over shoes in bloud he waded on the ground.

17

Thereat he roaréd for exceeding paine,
 That to have heard, great horror would have bred,
 And scourging th'emptie ayre with his long traine,
 Through great impatience of his grievéd hed
 His gorgeous ryder from her loftie sted
 Would have cast downe, and trod in durtie myre,
 Had not the Gyant soone her succouréd;
 Who all enrag'd with smart and franticke yre,
 Came hurtling in full fierce, and forst the knight retyre.

18

The force, which wont in two to be disperst,
 In one alone left hand he now unites,
 Which is through rage more strong then both were erst;
 With which his hideous club aloft he dites,
 And at his foe with furious rigour smites,
 That strongest Oake might seeme to overthrow:
 The stroke upon his shield so heauie lites,
 That to the ground it doubleth him full low
 What mortall wight could ever beare so monstrous blow?

19

And in his fall his shield, that covered was,
 Did loose his vele by chaunce, and open flew:
 The light whereof, that heavens light did pas,
 Such blazing brightnesse through the aier threw,
 That eye mote not the same endure to vew.

<sup>1</sup>Cf. Revelation, xvii, 4.

Which when the Gyaunt spyde with staring
eye,
He downe let fall his arme, and soft withdrew
His weapon huge, that heavéd was on hie
For to have slaine the man, that on the ground did lye.

20

And eke the fruitfull-headed beast, amaz'd
At flashing beames of that sunshiny shield,
Became starke blind, and all his senses daz'd,
That downe he tumbled on the durty field,
And seem'd himselfe as conqueréd to yield.
Whom when his maistresse proud perceiv'd
to fall,

Whiles yet his feeble feet for faintnesse reeld,
Unto the Gyant loudly she gan call,
O helpe Orgoglio, helpe, or else we perish all.

21

At her so pitteous cry was much amov'd
Her champion stout, and for to ayde his friend,
Againe his wonted angry weapon prov'd:
But all in vaine: for he has read his end
In that bright shield, and all their forces<sup>1</sup>
spend

Themselves in vaine: for since that glaunc-
ing sight,

He hath no powre to hurt, nor to defend;
As where th'Almighties lightning brond does
light,

It dimmes the dazéd eyen, and daunts the senses quight.

22

Whom when the Prince, to battell new ad-
drest,

And threatning high his dreadfull stroke did
see,

His sparkling blade about his head he blest,
And smote off quite his right leg by the
knee,

That downe he tombled; as an agéd tree,
High growing on the top of rocky clift,
Whose hartstrings with keene steele nigh
hewen be,

The mightie trunck halfe rent, with ragged
rift

Doth roll adowne the rocks, and fall with fearefull drift.

23

Or as a Castle rearéd high and round,
By subtile engins and malicious slight
Is underminéd from the lowest ground,
And her foundation forst, and feebled quight,
At last downe falles, and with her heapéd
hight

Her hastie ruine does more heavie make,
And yields it selfe unto the victours might;
Such was this Gyaunts fall, that seemd to shake

The stedfast globe of earth, as it for feare did quake.

24

The knight then lightly leaping to the pray,
With mortall steele him smot againe so sore,
That headlesse his unwelody bodie lay,
All wallowd in his owne fowle bloudy gore,
Which flowéd from his wounds in wondrous
store,

But soone as breath out of his breast did pas,
That huge great body, which the Gyaunt
bore,

Was vanisht quite, and of that monstrous
mas

Was nothing left, but like an emptie bladder
was.

25

Whose grievous fall, when false Duessa spide,
Her golden cup she cast unto the ground,
And crownéd mitre rudely threw aside;
Such percing griefe her stubborne hart did
wound,

That she could not endure that dolefull
stound,

But leaving all behind her, fled away:

The light-foot Squire her quickly turnd
around,

And by hard meanes enforcing her to stay,
So brought unto his Lord, as his servéd
pray.

26

The royall Virgin, which beheld from farre,
In pensive plight, and sad perplexitie,
The whole atchievement of this doubtfull
warre,

Came running fast to greet his victorie,
With sober gladnesse, and myld modestie,
And with sweet joyous cheare him thus be-
spake;

Faire branch of noblesse, flowre of chevalrie,

<sup>1</sup>Referring to Duessa as well as Orgoglio?

That with your worth the world amazed
make,
How shall I quite the paines, ye suffer for my sake?

27

And you fresh bud of vertue springing fast,<sup>1</sup>
Whom these sad eyes saw nigh unto deaths
dore,
What hath poore Virgin for such perill past, Wherewith you to reward? Accept therefore
My simple selfe, and service evermore;
And he that high does sit, and all things see
With equall eyes,<sup>2</sup> their merites to restore,
Behold what ye this day have done for mee,
And what I cannot quite, requite with usuree.

28

But sith the heavens, and your faire hande-
ling
Have made you maister of the field this
day,
Your fortune maister eke with governing,
And well begun end all so well, I pray,
Ne let that wicked woman scape away;
For she it is, that did my Lord bethrall,
My dearest Lord, and deepe in dongeon lay,
Where he his better dayes hath wasted all.
O heare, how piteous he to you for ayd does
call.

29

Forthwith he gave in charge unto his Squire,
That scarlot whore to keepeen carefully;
Whiles he himselfe with greedie great desire
Into the Castle entred forcibly.
Where living creature none he did espye;
Then gan he lowdly through the house to call:
But no man car'd<sup>3</sup> to answer to his crye.
There raignd a solemne silence over all,
Nor voice was heard, nor wight was seene
in bowre or hall.

30

At last with creeping crooked pace forth
came
An old old man, with beard as white as snow,
That on a staffe his feeble steps did frame,
And guide his wearie gate both too and fro:

<sup>1</sup>The Squire.<sup>2</sup>With impartial eyes.<sup>3</sup>Took the trouble.

For his eye sight him failéd long ygo,
And on his arme a bounch of keyes he bore,
The which unuséd rust did overgrow:
Those were the keyes of every inner dore,
But he could not them use, but kept them
still in store.

31

But very uncouth sight was to behold,
How he did fashion his untoward pace,
For as he forward moov'd his footing oid,
So backward still was turned his wrinckled
face,
Unlike to men, who ever as they trace,
Both feet and face one way are wont to lead.
This was the auncient keeper of that place,
And foster father of the Gyant dead;
His name Ignaro<sup>4</sup> did his nature right aread.

32

His reverend haire and holy gravitie
The knight much honord, as beseeméd well,
And gently askt, where all the people bee,
Which in that stately building wont to dwell.
Who answerd him full soft, he could not tell.
Againe he askt, where that same knight was
layd,
Whom great Orgoglio with his puissance fell
Had made his caytive thrall, againe he sayde,
He could not tell: ne ever other answer
made.

33

Then askéd he, which way he in might pas:
He could not tell, againe he answeréd.
Thereat the curteous knight displeaséd was,
And said, Old sire, it seemes thou hast not
red
How ill it fits with that same silver hed
In vaine to mocke, or mockt in vaine to bee:
But if thou be, as thou art pourtrahéd
With natures pen, in ages grave degree, Aread in graver wise,<sup>5</sup> what I demaund of
thee.

34

His answer likewise was, he could not tell.
Whose sencelesse speach, and doted ignorance
When as the noble Prince had markéd well,
He ghest his nature by his countenance,

<sup>4</sup>Ignorance.<sup>5</sup>Answer more seriously.

And calmd his wrath with goodly temperance.

Then to him stepping, from his arme did
reach

Those keyes, and made himselfe free enter-
ance.

Each dore he opened without any breach;
There was no barre to stop, nor foe him to emepeach.

35

There all within full rich arayd he found,
With royall arras and resplendent gold.
And did with store of every thing abound,
That greatest Princes presence might be-
hold.

But all the floore (too filthy to be told)
With blood of guiltlesse babes, and innocents
trew,

Which there were slaine, as sheepe out of the fold,

Defiled was, that dreadfull was to vew,
And sacred ashes over it was strowéd new.

36

And there beside of marble stone was built
An Altare, carv'd with cunning imagery,
On which true Christians blood was often
spilt,

And holy Martyrs often doen to dye,
With cruell malice and strong tyranny:
Whose blessed sprites from underneath the
stone

To God for vengeance cryde continually,
And with great grieve were often heard to grone,

That hardest heart would bleede, to heare their piteous mone.

37

Through every rowme he sought, and every bowr,

But no where could he find that wofull
thrall:

At last he came unto an yron doore,
That fast was lockt, but key found not at
all

Emongst that bounch, to open it withall;
But in the same a little grate was pight,
Through which he sent his voyce, and lowd
did call

With all his powre, to weet, if living wight
Were houséd there within, whom he enlargen
might.

38

Therewith an hollow, dreary, murmuring
voyce

These piteous plaints and dolours did resound:
O who is that, which brings me happy choyce
Of death, that here lye dying every stound,
Yet live perforce in balefull darkenesse
bound?

For now three Moones have changéd thrice
their hew,

And have beene thrice hid underneath the
ground,

Since I the heavens chearefull face did vew,
O welcome thou, that doest of death bring tydings trew.

39

Which when that Champion heard, with percing point

Of pitty deare his hart was thrilléd sore,
And trembling horror ran through every joynt,

For ruth of gentle knight so fowle forlore:
Which shaking off, he rent that yron dore,
With furious force, and indignation fell;
Where entred in, his foot could find no flore,
But all a deepe descent, as darke as hell,
That breathéd ever forth a filthie banefull smell.

40

But neither darkenesse fowle, nor filthy
bands,

Nor noyous smell his purpose could withhold,
(Entire affection hateth nicer hands<sup>1</sup>)

But that with constant zeale, and courage
bold,

After long paines and labours manifold,
He found the meanes that Prisoner up to reare;

Whose feeble thighes, unhable to uphold
His pinéd corse, him scarce to light could
beare.

A ruefull spectacle of death and ghastly
drere.

41

His sad dull eyes deepe sunck in hollow pits,
Could not endure th'unwonted sunne to
view;

His bare thin cheekes for want of better bits,<sup>2</sup>
And empty sides deceivéd of their dew,<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup>Hands too dainty.

<sup>2</sup>Better food.

<sup>3</sup>Cheated of their due.

Could make a stony hart his hap to rew;
His rawbone armes, whose mighty brawnéd
bowrs
Were wont to rive steele plates, helmets
hew,
Were cleane consum'd, and all his vitall
powres
Decayd, and all his flesh shronk up like withered flowres.

42

Whom when his Lady saw, to him she ran
With hasty joy: to see him made her glad,
And sad to view his visage pale and wan,
Who earst in flowres of freshest youth was clad.

Tho when her well of teares she wasted had,
She said, Ah dearest Lord, what evill starre
On you hath fround, and pourd his influence
bad,

That of your selfe ye thus berobbéd arre,
And this misseeming hew your manly looks doth marre?

43

But welcome now my Lord, in wele or woe, Whose presence I have lackt too long a
day;

And fie on Fortune mine avowèd foe,
Whose wrathfull wreaques them selves do now
alay.

And for these wrongs shall treble penance
pay

Of treble good; good growes of evils priefe.
The chearelesse man, whom sorrow did dis-
may,

Had no delight to treaten of his griefe;
His long enduréd famine needed more reliefe.

44

Faire Lady, then said that victorious knight,
The things, that grievous were to do, or
beare,

Them to renew, I wote, breeds no delight;
Best musicke breeds delight in loathing
eare:

But th'onely good, that growes of passéd
feare,

Is to be wise, and ware of like agein.

This dayes ensample hath this lesson deare
Deepe written in my heart with yron pen,
That blisse may not abide in state of mortall
men.

45

Henceforth sir knight, take to you wonted
strength,

And maister these mishaps with patient
might;

Loe where your foe lyes stretcht in monstrous
length,

And loe that wicked woman in your sight,
The roote of all your care, and wretched
plight,

Now in your powre, to let her live, or dye.

To do her dye (quoth Una) were despight,

And shame t'avenge<sup>1</sup> so weake an enemy;

But spoile her of her scarlot robe, and let her
fly.

46

So as she bad, that witch they disaraid,

And robd of royall robes, and purple pali,

And ornaments that richly were displaid;

Ne spared they to strip her naked all.

Then when they had despoild her tire and
call,

Such as she was, their eyes might her behold,

That her mishapéd parts did them appall,

A loathly, wrinckled hag, ill favoured, old,

Whose secret filth good manners biddeth not be told.

47

Her craftie head was altogether bald,

And as in hate of honorable eld,

Was overgrowne with scurfe and filthy scald;

Her teeth out of her rotten gummies were feld,

And her sowre breath abhominably smeld;

Her driéd dug, like bladders lacking wind,

Hong downe, and filthy matter from them
weld;

Her wrizled skin as rough, as maple rind,

So scabby was, that would have loathd all womankind.

48

Her neather parts, the shame of all her kind,
My chaster Muse for shame doth blush to write;

But at her rompe she growing had behind

A foxes taile, with dong all fowly dight;

And eke her feete most monstrous were in
sight;

For one of them was like an Eagles claw,

With griping talaunts armd to greedy fight,

<sup>1</sup>To take vengeance on.

The other like a Beares uneven paw:
More ugly shape yet never living creature saw.

49

Which when the knights beheld, amazd they
were,

And wondred at so fowle deforméd wight.
Such then (said Una) as she seemeth here,
Such is the face of falshood, such the sight
Of fowle Duessa, when her borrowed light
Is laid away, and counterfesaunce knowne.
Thus when they had the witch disrobéd
quight,

And all her filthy feature open showne,
They let her goe at will, and wander wayes unknowne.

50

She flying fast from heavens hated face,
And from the world that her discovered
wide,

Fled to the wastfull wilderness apace,
From living eyes her open shame to hide,
And lurkt in rocks and caves long unespide.
But that faire crew of knights, and Una
faire

Did in that castle afterwards abide,
To rest them selves, and weary powres re-
paire,

Where store they found of all, that dainty was and rare.

CANTO IX

*His loves and lignage Arthur tells,
The knights knit friendly bands:
Sir Trevisan flies from Despayre,
Whom Redcrosse knight withstands*

I

O goodly golden chaine,<sup>1</sup> wherewith yfere
The vertues linkéd are in lovely wize:
And noble minds of yore allyéd were,
In brave pursuit of chevalrous emprise,
That none did others safétý despize,
Nor aid envy to him, in need that stands,
But friendly each did others prayse devise,
How to advaunce with favourable hands,
As this good Prince redeemd the Redcrosse
knight from bands.

<sup>1</sup>The quality typified by Arthur, "magnificence," or magnanimity, in which all other virtues meet.

2

Who when their powres, empaird through labour long,

With dew repast they had recuréd well,
And that weake captive wight now wexéd
strong,

Them list no lenger there at leasure dwell,
But forward fare, as their adventures fell,
But ere they parted, Una faire besought
That straunger knight his name and nation
tell;

Least so great good, as he for her had
wrought,
Should die unknown, and buried be in thanklesse thought.

3

Faire virgin (said the Prince) ye me require
A thing without the compas of my wit:
For both the lignage and the certain Sire,
From which I sprong, from me are hidden yit.

For all so soone as life did me admit
Into this world, and shewéd heavens light,
From mothers pap I taken was unfit:
And streight delivered to a Faery knight,
To be upbrought in gentle thewes and mar-tiall might.

4

Unto old Timon he me brought bylive, Old Timon, who in youthly yeares hath beene

In warlike feates th'expertest man alive,
And is the wisest now on earth I weene;
His dwelling is low in a valley greene,
Under the foot of Rauran mossy hore,
From whence the river Dee as silver cleene
His tomling billowes rolls with gentle rore:
There all my dayes he traird me up in vertuous lore.

5

Thither the great Magicien Merlin came,
As was his use, ofttimes to visit me:
For he had charge my discipline to frame,
And Tutours nouriture to oversee.<sup>2</sup>
Him oft and oft I askt in privitie,
Of what loines and what lignage I did spring:
Whose aunswere bad me still assuréd bee,
That I was sonne and heire unto a king,
As time in her just terme the truth to light should bring.

<sup>2</sup>And to supervise the training imposed by my tutor.

6

Well worthy impe, said then the Lady gent,
And Pupill fit for such a Tutours hand.
But what adventure, or what high intent
Hath brought you hither into Faery land, Aread Prince Arthur, crowne of Martiall
band?

Full hard it is (quoth he) to read aright
The course of heavenly cause, or understand
The secret meaning of th'eternall might,
That rules mens wayes, and rules the thoughts of living wight.

7

For whither he through fatal deepe foresight<sup>1</sup>
Me hither sent, for cause to me unghest,
Or that fresh bleeding wound, which day and
night

Whilome doth rangle in my riven brest,
With forcéd fury following his<sup>2</sup> behest,
Me hither brought by wayes yet never found,
You to have helpt I hold my selfe yet blest.
Ah curteous knight (quoth she) what secret
wound

Could ever find,<sup>3</sup> to grieve the gentlest hart on ground?

8

Deare Dame (quoth he) you sleeping sparkes
awake,

Which troubled once, into huge flames will grow,

Ne ever will their fervent fury slake,
Till living moysture into smoke do flow,
And wasted life do lye in ashes low.

Yet sithens silence lesseneth not my fire,
But told it flames, and hidden it does glow,
I will revele, what ye so much desire:

Ah Love, lay downe thy bow, the whiles I may respire.

9

It was in freshest flowre of youthly yeares,
When courage first does creepe in manly
chest,

Then first the coale of kindly heat appears
To kindle love in every living brest;
But me had warnd old Timons wise behest,
Those creeping flames by reason to subdew,
Before their rage grew to so great unrest,

<sup>1</sup>Deep prophetic foresight.

<sup>2</sup>Its.

<sup>3</sup>Choose.

As miserable lovers use to rew,
Which still wex old in woe, whiles woe still wexeth new.

10

That idle name of love, and lovers life,
As losse of time, and vertues enemy
I ever scornd, and joyd to stirre up strife,
In middest of their mournfull Tragedy,
Ay wont to laugh, when them I heard to cry,
And blow the fire, which them to ashes brent:
Their God himselfe, griev'd at my libertie,
Shot many a dart at me with fiers intent,
But I them warded all with wary government.<sup>4</sup>

11

But all in vaine: no fort can be so strong,
Ne fleshly brest can arméd be so sound,
But will at last be wonne with battrie long,
Or unawares at disadvantage found;
Nothing is sure, that growes on earthly
ground:

And who most trustes in arme of fleshly
might,

And boasts, in beauties chaine not to be
bound,

Doth soonest fall in disaventrous fight,
And yeeldes his caytive neck to victours
most despight.

12

Ensamble make of him your haplesse joy,<sup>5</sup>
And of my selfe now mated, as ye see;
Whose prouder<sup>6</sup> vaunt that proud avenging boy

Did soone pluck downe, and curbd my libertie.

For on a day prickt forth with jollitie
Of looser life, and heat of hardiment,
Raunging the forest wide on courser free,
The fields, the floods, the heavens with one consent

Did seeme to laugh on me, and favour mine intent.<sup>7</sup>

13

For-wearied with my sports, I did alight
From loftie steed, and downe to sleepe me layd;
The verdant gras my couch did goodly dight,
And pillow was my helmet faire displayd:

<sup>4</sup>Self-control.

<sup>5</sup>The Red Cross Knight.

<sup>6</sup>Too proud.

<sup>7</sup>Join in my pleasure.

Whiles every sence the humour sweet em-
bayd,
And slombring soft my hart did steale away,
Me seeméd, by my side a royall Mayd
Her daintie limbes full softly down did lay:
So faire a creature yet saw never sunny day.

14

Most goodly glee and lovely blandishment
She to me made, and bad me love her deare,
For dearly sure her love was to me bent,
As when just time expired<sup>1</sup> should appeare.
But whether dreames delude, or true it were,
Was never hart so ravisht with delight,
Ne living man like words did ever heare,
As she to me delivered all that night;
And at her parting said, She Queene of Faeries hight.

15

When I awoke, and found her place devoyd,
And nought but presséd gras, where she had lyen,
I sorrowed all so much, as earst I joyd,
And washéd all her place with watry eyen.
From that day forth I lov'd that face divine;
From that day forth I cast in carefull mind,
To seeke her out with labour, and long tyne,
And never vow to rest,<sup>2</sup> till her I find,
Nine monethes I seeke in vaine yet ni'll that vow unbind.

16

Thus as he spake, his visage wexéd pale,
And change of hew great passion did bewray;
Yet still he strove to cloke his inward bale,
And hide the smoke, that did his fire display,
Till gentle Una thus to him gan say;
O happy Queene of Faeries, that hast found Mongst many, one that with his prowesse
may
Defend thine honour, and thy foes confound:
True Loves are often sown, but seldom grow on ground.<sup>3</sup>

17

Thine, O then, said the gentle Redcrosse
knight,
Next to that Ladies love, shalbe the place,
O fairest virgin, full of heavenly light,
Whose wondrous faith, exceeding earthly race,

Was firmest fixt in mine extremest case.
And you, my Lord, the Patrone<sup>4</sup> of my life,
Of that great Queene may well gaine worthy
Grace:
For onely worthy you through prowes priefe Yf living man mote worthy be, to be her liefe.

18

So diversly discoursing of their loves,
The golden Sunne his glistring head gan
shew,
And sad remembraunce now the Prince
amoves,
With fresh desire his voyage to pursew:
Als Una earnd her travell to renew.
Then those two knights, fast friendship for
to bynd,
And love establish each to other trew,
Gave goodly gifts, the signes of gratefull
mynd,
And eke the pledges firme, right hands together joynd.

19

Prince Arthur gave a boxe of Diamond sure,
Embowd with gold and gorgeous ornament,
Wherein were cload few drops of liquor
pure,
Of wondrous worth, and vertue excellent,
That any wound could heale incontinent:
Which to requite, the Redcrosse knight him gave
A booke, wherein his Saveours testament
Was writ with golden letters rich and brave;
A worke of wondrous grace, and able soules
to save.

20

Thus beene they parted, Arthur on his way
To seeke his love, and th'other for to fight
With Unaes foe, that all her realme did pray.<sup>5</sup>
But she now weighing the decayéd plight,
And shrunken synewes of her chosen knight,
Would not a while her forward course pur-
sew,
Ne bring him forth in face of dreadfull
fight,
Till he recovered had his former hew:
For him to be yet weake and wearie well she knew.

<sup>4</sup>Preserver.<sup>5</sup>Did ravage.<sup>1</sup>As in due course of time.<sup>2</sup>And vow never to rest.<sup>3</sup>On earth.

21

So as they traveild, lo they gan espy
 An arméd knight towards them gallop fast,
 That seeméd from some fearéd foe to fly,
 Or other griesly thing, that him agast.
 Still as he fled, his eye was backward cast,
 As if his feare<sup>1</sup> still followed him behind;
 Als flew his steed, as he his bands had brast,
 And with his wingéd heeles did tread the
 wind,
 As he had beene a fole of Pegasus his kind.<sup>2</sup>

22

Nigh as he drew, they might perceive his
 head
 To be unarmd, and curld uncombéd heares Upstaring stiffe, dismayd with uncouth
 dread;
 Nor drop of blood in all his face appeares
 Nor life in limbe: and to increase his feares,
 In fowle reproch of knighthoods faire degree,
 About his neck an hempen rope he weares,
 That with his glistring armes does ill agree;<sup>3</sup>
 But he of rope or armes has now no memoree.

23

The Redcrosse knight toward him crosséd fast,
 To weet, what mister wight was so dismayd:
 There him he finds all sencelesse and aghast,
 That of him selfe he seemd to be afrayd;
 Whom hardly he from flying forward stayd,
 Till he these wordes to him deliver might;
 Sir knight, aread who hath ye thus arayd,
 And eke from whom make ye this hasty
 flight:
 For never knight I saw in such misseeming
 plight.

24

He answerd nought at all, but adding new Feare to his first amazment, staring wide
 With stony eyes, and hartlesse hollow hew,
 Astonisht stood, as one that had aspide
 Infernall furies, with their chaines untide.
 Him yet againe, and yet againe bespake
 The gentle knight; who nought to him replide,
 But trembling every joynt did inly quake,
 And foltring tongue at last these words
 seemd forth to shake.

<sup>1</sup>The object of his fear.

<sup>2</sup>Of the race of Pegasus.

<sup>3</sup>Hanging was a punishment reserved for common criminals. A knight if executed would be beheaded.

25

For Gods deare love, Sir knight, do me not
 stay;
 For loe he comes, he comes fast after mee.
 Eft looking backe would faine have runne
 away;
 But he him forst to stay, and tellen free
 The secret cause of his perplexitie:
 Yet nathemore by his bold hartie speach,
 Could his bloud-frozen hart emboldned bee,
 But through his boldnesse rather feare did
 reach,
 Yet forst, at last he made through silence
 suddein breach.

26

And am I now in safetie sure (quoth he)
 From him, that would have forcéd me to dye?
 And is the point of death now turnd fro mee,
 That I may tell this haplesse history?
 Feare nought (quoth he), no daunger now is nye.
 Then shall I you recount a ruefull cace
 (Said he), the which with this unlucky eye
 I late beheld, and had not greater grace Me reft from it, had bene partaker of the place.

27

I lately chaunst (Would I had never chaunst)
 With a faire knight to keepen companee,
 Sir Terwin hight, that well himselfe advaunst
 In all affaires, and was both bold and free,
 But not so happie as mote happie bee:
 He lov'd, as was his lot, a Ladie gent,
 That him againe lov'd in the least degree:<sup>4</sup>
 For she was proud, and of too high intent,
 And joyd to see her lover languish and la-
 ment.

28

From whom returning sad and comfortlesse,
 As on the way together we did fare,
 We met that villen (God from him me
 blesse)
 That curséd wight, from whom I scapt whyleare,
 A man of hell, that cals himselfe Despaire:
 Who first us greets, and after faire areedes
 Of tydings strange, and of adventures rare:
 So creeping close, as Snake in hidden weedes,
 Inquireth of our states, and of our knightly
 deedes.

<sup>4</sup>Not at all.

29

Which when he knew, and felt our feeble harts
 Embost with bale, and bitter byting grieffe,
 Which love had launchéd with his deadly darts,
 With wounding words and termes of foule
 reprieffe,
 He pluckt from us all hope of due reliefe,
 That earst us held in love of lingring life;
 Then hopelesse hartlesse, gan the cunning
 thiefe
 Perswade us die, to stint all further strife:
 To me he lent this rope, to him a rustie knife.

30

With which sad instrument of hastie death,
 That wofull lover, loathing lenger light,
 A wide way made to let forth living breath.
 But I more fearefull, or more luckie wight,
 Dismayd with that deforméd dismall sight,
 Fled fast away, halfe dead with dying feare:
 Ne yet assur'd of life by you, Sir knight,
 Whose like infirmitie like chaunce may beare:
 But God you never let his charméd speeches
 heare.

31

How may a man (said he) with idle speach
 Be wonne, to spoyle the Castle of his health?
 I wote (quoth he) whom triall late did teach,
 That like would not for all this worldés wealth:
 His subtrill tongue, like dropping honny,
 mealt' th<sup>1</sup>
 Into the hart, and searcheth every vaine,
 That ere one be aware, by secret stealth
 His powre is reft, and weaknesse doth re-
 maine.
 O never Sir desire to try his guilefull traine.

32

Certes (said he) hence shall I never rest, Till I that treachours art have heard and tride;
 And you Sir knight, whose name mote I
 request,
 Of grace do me unto his cabin guide.
 I that hight Trevisan (quoth he) will ride
 Against my liking backe, to doe you grace:
 But not for gold nor glee will I abide
 By you, when ye arrive in that same place;
 For lever had I die, then see his deadly face.

<sup>1</sup>Meltech.

33

Ere long they come, where that same wicked
 wight
 His dwelling has, low in an hollow cave,
 Farre underneath a craggie clift ypight,
 Darke, dolefull, drearie, like a greedie grave,
 That still for carrion carcases doth crave:
 On top whereof aye dwelt the ghastly Owle,
 Shrieking his balefull note, which ever drave
 Farre from that haunt all other chearefull
 fowle;
 And all about it wandring ghostes did waile
 and howle.

34

And all about old stockes and stubs of trees,
 Whereon nor fruit, nor leafe was ever seene,
 Did hang upon the ragged rocky knees;<sup>2</sup>
 On which had many wretches hangéd beene,
 Whose carcases were scattered on the greene,
 And throwne about the cliffs. Arrivéd
 there,
 That bare-head knight for dread and dolefull
 teene,
 Would faine have fled, ne durst approchen
 neare,
 But th'other forst him stay, and comforted
 in feare.

35

That darkesome cave they enter, where they find
 That curséd man, low sitting on the ground,
 Musing full sadly in his sullein mind;
 His griesie lockes, long growén, and un-
 bound,
 Disordred hong about his shoulders round,
 And hid his face; through which his hollow
 eyne
 Lookt deadly dull, and staréd as astound;
 His raw-bone cheekes through penurie and pine,
 Were shronke into his jawes as he did never dine.

36

His garment nought but many ragged clouts,
 With thornes together pind and patchéd
 was,
 The which his naked sides he wrapt abouts;
 And him beside there lay upon the gras

<sup>2</sup>Jagged projections of the rock.

A drearie corse, whose life away did pas,
 All wallowd in his owne yet luke-warme
 blood,
 That from his wound yet welléd fresh alas;
 In which a rustie knife fast fixé stood,
 And made an open passage for the gushing flood.

37

Which piteous spectacle, approving trew
 The wofull tale that Trevisan had told,
 When as the gentle Redcrosse knight did
 vew,

With firie zeale he burnt in courage bold,
 Him to avenge, before his bloud were cold,
 And to the villein said, Thou damnéd wight,
 The author of this fact, we here behold,
 What justice can but judge against thee
 right,

With thine owne bloud to price his bloud,
 here shed in sight?

38

What franticke fit (quoth he) hath thus distraught

Thee, foolish man, so rash a doome to give?
 What justice ever other judgement taught,
 But he should die, who merites not to live?
 None else to death this man despayring
 drive,

But his owne guiltie mind deserving death.
 Is then unjust to each his due to give?
 Or let him die, that loatheth living breath?
 Or let him die at ease, that liveth here uneath?

39

Who travels by the wearie wandring way,
 To come unto his wishéd home in haste,
 And meetes a flood, that doth his passage
 stay,

Is not great grace to helpe him over past,
 Or free his feet, that in the myre sticke
 fast?

Most envious man, that grieves at neighbours good,

And fond, that joyest in the woe thou
 hast,

Why wilt not let him passe, that long hath
 stood

Upon the banke, yet wilt thy selfe not<sup>1</sup> passe
 the flood?

<sup>1</sup>Even if you yourself will not.

40

He there does now enjoy eternall rest
 And happie ease, which thou doest want and
 crave,

And further from it daily wanderest:
 What if some litle paine the passage have,
 That makes fraile flesh to feare the bitter
 wave?

Is not short paine well borne, that brings
 long ease,

And layes the soule to sleepe in quiet grave?
 Sleepe after toyle, port after stormie seas,
 Ease after warre, death after life does greatly
 please.

41

The knight much wondred at his suddeine
 wit,

And said, The terme of life is limited,
 Ne may a man prolong, nor shorten it;
 The souldier may not move from watchfull
 sted,

Nor leave his stand, untill his Captaine bed.
 Who life did limit by almightie doome, (Quoth he) knowes best the termes es-tablishéd;

And he, that points the Centonell<sup>2</sup> his roome, Doth license him depart at sound of morning droom.

42

Is not his deed, what ever thing is donne,
 In heaven and earth? did not he all create
 To die againe? all ends that was begonne.
 Their times in his eternall booke of fate
 Are written sure, and have their certaine
 date.

Who then can strive with strong necessitie,
 That holds the world in his still chaunging
 state,

Or shunne the death ordaynd by destinie?
 When houre of death is come, let none aske whence, nor why.

43

The lenger life, I wote the greater sin,
 The greater sin, the greater punishment:
 All those great battels, which thou boasts to win,

Through strife, and bloud-shed, and avengé-
 ment,

<sup>2</sup>Sentinel.

Now praysd, hereafter deare thou shalt
repent:
For life must life, and bloud must bloud re-
pay.

Is not enough thy evill life forespent?<sup>1</sup>
For he, that once hath missed the right way,
The further he doth goe, the further he doth stray.

44

Then do no further goe, no further stray,
But here lie downe, and to thy rest betake,
Th'ill to prevent, that life ensewen may.
For what hath life, that may it lovéd make,
And gives not rather cause it to forsake?
Feare, sicknesse, age, losse, labour, sorrow,
strife,
Paine, hunger, cold, that makes the hart to
quake;
And ever fickle fortune rageth rife,
All which, and thousands mo do make a loathsome life.

45

Thou wretched man, of death hast greatest
need,
If in true ballance thou wilt weigh thy state:
For never knight, that daréd warlike deede,
More lucklesse disaventures did amate:
Witnesse the dongeon deepe, wherein of late
Thy life shut up, for death so oft did call;
And though good lucke prolongéd hath thy
date,
Yet death then, would the like mishaps forestall,
Into the which hereafter thou maiest happen
fall.

46

Why then doest thou, O man of sin, desire To draw thy dayes forth to their last degree?

Is not the measure of thy sinfull hire<sup>2</sup>
High heapéd up with huge iniquitie,
Against the day of wrath, to burden thee?
Is not enough, that to this Ladie milde
Thou falséd hast thy faith with perjurie,
And sold thy selfe to serve Duessa vilde,
With whom in all abuse thou hast thy selfe deilde?

<sup>1</sup>Is not enough of your life spent in evil-doing?

<sup>2</sup>Service to sin.

47

Is not he just, that all this doth behold
From highest heaven, and beares an equall
eye?

Shall he thy sins up in his knowledge fold,
And guiltie be of thine impietie?
Is not his law, Let every sinner die:
Die shall all flesh? what then must needs be
donne,

Is it not better to doe willinglie,
Then linger, till the glasse be all out ronne?
Death is the end of woes: die soone, O faeries
sonne.

48

The knight was much enmovéd with his speech,
That as a swords point through his hart did
perse,
And in his conscience made a secret breach,
Well knowing true all, that he did reherse,
And to his fresh remembrance did reverse
The ugly vew of his deforméd crimes,
That all his manly powres it did disperse,
As he were charméd with inchaunted rimes,
That oftentimes he quakt, and fainted oftentimes.

49

In which amazement, when the Miscreant
Perceivéd him to waver weake and fraile,
Whiles trembling horror did his conscience
dant,
And hellish anguish did his soule assaile,
To drive him to despaire, and quite to quaille,
He shew'd him painted in a table<sup>3</sup> plaine,
The damnéd ghosts, that doe in torments
waile,
And thousand feends that doe them endlesse
paine
With fire and brimstone, which for ever shall remaine.

50

The sight whereof so throughly him dismaid, That nought but death before his eyes he
saw,
And ever burning wrath before him laid,
By righteous sentence of th'Almighties law:
Then gan the villen him to overcraw,
And brought unto him swords, ropes, poison,
fire,
And all that might him to perdition draw;

<sup>3</sup>Picture.

And bad him choose, what death he would
desire:
For death was due to him, that had provokt Gods ire.

51

But when as none of them he saw him take,
He to him raught a dagger sharpe and keene,
And gave it him in hand: his hand did quake,
And tremble like a leafe of Aspin greene,
And troubled bloud through his pale face was
seene

To come, and goe with tydings from the hart,
As it a running messenger had beene.
At last resolv'd to worke his finall smart,
He lifted up his hand, that backe againe did start.

52

Which when as Una saw, through every vaine

The crudled cold ran to her well of life,
As in a swowne: but soone reliv'd againe;
Out of his hand she snatcht the curséd knife,
And threw it to the ground, enragéd rife,
And to him said, Fie, fie, faint harted knight,
What meanest thou by this reprochfull strife?
Is this the battell, which thou vauntst to
fight

With that fire-mouthéd Dragon, horrible and bright?

53

Come, come away, fraile, feeble, fleshly
wight,
Ne let vaine words bewitch thy manly hart,
Ne divelish thoughts dismay thy constant
spright.

In heavenly mercies hast thou not a part?
Why shouldst thou then despeire, that chosen art?

Where justice growes, there grows eke greater
grace,

The which doth quench the brond of hellish
smart,

And that accurst hand-writing doth deface;
Arise, Sir knight arise, and leave this curséd place.

54

So up he rose, and thence amounted streight.
Which when the carle beheld, and saw his guest

Would safe depart, for all his subtill sleight,
He chose an halter from among the rest,

And with it hung himselfe, unbid unblest.<sup>1</sup>
But death he could not worke himselfe
thereby;
For thousand times he so himselfe had drest,
Yet nathelesse it could not doe him die,
Till he should die his last, that is eternally.

CANTO X

Her faithfull knight faire Una brings to house of Holinesse, Where he is taught repentance, and the way to heavenly blessed.

I

What man is he, that boasts of fleshly might,
And vaine assurance of mortality,
Which all so soone, as it doth come to fight,
Against spirituall foes, yeelds by and by,
Or from the field most cowardly doth fly?
Ne let the man ascribe it to his skill,
That thorough grace hath gainéd victory.
If any strength we have, it is to ill,
But all the good is Gods, both power and eke
will.

2

By that, which lately happed, Una saw,
That this her knight was feeble, and too
faint;

And all his sinews woxen weake and raw,
Through long enprisonment, and hard con-
straint,

Which he enduréd in his late restraint,
That yet he was unfit for bloudie fight:
Therefore to cherish him with diets daint,
She cast to bring him, where he chearen
might,

Till he recovered had his late decayéd plight.

3

There was an auntient house not farre away,
Renowmd throughout the world for sacred
lore,

And pure unspotted life: so well they say
It governd was, and guided evermore, Through wisdom of a matrone grave and hore;

Whose onely joy was to relieve the needes
Of wretched soules, and helpe the helpelesse
pore:

All night she spent in bidding of her bedes,
And all the day in doing good and godly
deedes.

<sup>1</sup>Without prayer or blessing.

4

Dame Calia<sup>1</sup> men did her call, as thought
From heaven to come, or thither to arise,
The mother of three daughters, well up-
brought

In goodly thewes, and godly exercise:
The eldest two most sober, chaste, and wise,
Fidelia and Speranza<sup>2</sup> virgins were Though spoused, yet wanting wedlocks solemnize;

But faire Charissa<sup>3</sup> to a lovely fere
Was linckéd, and by him had many pledges dere.

5

Arrivé there, the dore they find fast lockt;
For it was warely watchéd night and day,
For feare of many foes: but when they knockt,

The Porter opened unto them streight way:
He was an agéd syre, all hory gray,
With looks full lowly cast, and gate full
slow,

Wont on a staffe his feeble steps to stay,
Hight Humiltá.<sup>4</sup> They passe in stouping
low;

For streight and narrow was the way, which he did show.

6

Each goodly thing is hardest to begin,
But entred in a spacious court they see,
Both plaine, and pleasant to be walkéd in,
Where them does meete a francklin faire and
free,

And entertaines with comely courteous glee,
His name was Zelee, that him right well became,

For in his speeches and behaviour hee
Did labour lively to expresse the same,
And gladly did them guide, till to the Hall
they came.

7

There fairely them receives a gentle Squire,
Of milde demeanure, and rare courtesie,
Right cleanly clad in comely sad attire;
In word and deede that shew'd great mod-
estie,

<sup>1</sup>Knowledge of heavenly things.

<sup>2</sup>Faith and Hope.

<sup>3</sup>Charity.

<sup>4</sup>Humility.

And knew his good to all of each degree,<sup>5</sup>
Hight Reverence. He them with speeches meet

Does faire entreat; no courting nicetie,
But simple true, and eke unfainéd sweet,
As might become a Squire so great persons to greet.

8

And afterwards them to his Dame he leades,
That agéd Dame, the Ladie of the place:
Who all this while was busie at her beades:
Which doen, she up arose with seemely grace,
And toward them full matronely did pace.
Where when that fairest Una she beheld,
Whom well she knew to spring from heavenly
race,

Her hart with joy unwonted inly sweld,
As feeling wondrous comfort in her weaker eld.

9

And her embracing said, O happie earth,
Whereon thy innocent feet doe ever tread,<sup>1</sup>
Most vertuous virgin borne of heavenly berth,

That to redeeme thy woefull parents head,
From tyrans rage, and ever-dying dread,<sup>6</sup>
Hast wandered through the world now long a
day;

Yet ceasest not thy wearie soles to lead,
What grace hath thee now hither brought this way?

Or doen thy feeble feet unweeting hither
stray?

10

Strange thing it is an errant knight to see
Here in this place, or any other wight,
That hither turnes his steps. So few there
bee,

That chose the narrow path, or seeke the
right:

All keepe the broad high way, and take
delight

With many rather for to go astray,
And be partakers of their evill-plight,
Then with a few to walke the rightest way;
O foolish men, why haste ye to your owne
decay?

<sup>5</sup>Knew how to bear himself towards men of every rank.

<sup>6</sup>Constant fear of death.

11

Thy selfe to see, and tyréd limbs to rest,
O matrone sage (quoth she) I hither came,
And this good knight his way with me ad-
drest,

Led with thy prayses and broad-blazéd fame,
That up to heaven is blowne. The auncient
Dame

Him goodly greeted in her modest guise,
And entertaynd them both, as best became,
With all the court'sies, that she could devise,
Ne wanted ought, to shew her bounteous or wise.

12

Thus as they gan of sundry things devise,
Loe two most goodly virgins came in place,
Ylinkéd arme in arme in lovely wise,
With countenance demure, and modest grace,
They numbred even steps and equall pace:
Of which the eldest, that Fidelia hight,
Like sunny beames threw from her Christall
face,

That could have dazd the rash beholders
sight,
And round about her head did shine like heavens light.

13

She was araiéd all in lilly white,
And in her right hand bore a cup of gold,
With wine and water fild up to the hight,
In which a Serpent did himselfe enfold,<sup>1</sup>
That horrour made to all, that did behold;
But she no whit did chaunge her constant
mood:

And in her other hand she fast did hold
A booke,<sup>2</sup> that was both signd and seald with blood,
Wherein darke things were writ, hard to be understood.

14

Her younger sister, that Speranza hight,
Was clad in blew,<sup>3</sup> that her beseeméd well;
Not all so chearefull seeméd she of sight,<sup>4</sup>
As was her sister; whether dread did dwell,

Or anguish in her hart, is hard to tell:
Upon her arme a silver anchor lay,<sup>5</sup>
Whereon she leanéd ever, as befell:
And ever up to heaven, as she did pray,
Her stedfast eyes were bent, ne swarvéd other way.

15

They seeing Una, towards her gan wend,
Who them encounters with like courtesie;
Many kind speeches they betwene them
spend,
And greatly joy each other well to see:
Then to the knight with shamefast mod-
estie

They turne themselves, at Unas meeke
request,
And him salute with well beseeming glee;
Who faire them quites, as him beseeméd
best,
And goodly gan discourse of many a noble
gest.

16

Then Una thus; But she your sister deare,
The deare Charissa where is she become?
Or wants she health, or busie is elsewhere?
Ah no, said they, but forth she may not
come:

For she of late is lightned of her wombe,
And hath encreast the world with one sonne
more,
That her to see should be but troublesome.
Indeede (quoth she) that should be trouble
sore,
But thank be God, and her encrease so ever-
more.

17

Then said the agéd Cælia, Deare dame,
And you good Sir, I wote that of your toyle,
And labours long, through which ye hither
came,
Ye both forwearied be: therefore a while I read you rest, and to your bowres recoyle.
Then calléd she a Groome, that forth him
led

Into a goodly lodge, and gan despoile
Of puissant armes, and laid in easie bed;
His name was meeke Obedience rightfully ared.

<sup>1</sup>The serpent, because it casts off its skin, has sometimes been taken as a type of immortality.

<sup>2</sup>The New Testament, signed and sealed with Christ's blood.

<sup>3</sup>The color of constancy.

<sup>4</sup>In appearance.

<sup>5</sup>Another symbol of constancy.

18

Now when their wearie limbes with kindly
rest,
And bodies were refresht with due repast,
Faure Una gan Fidelia faire request,
To have her knight into her schoolehouse
plaste,
That of her heavenly learning he might taste,
And heare the wisdom of her words divine.
She graunted, and that knight so much agrate,
That she him taught celestiall discipline,
And opened his dull eyes, that light mote in them shine.

19

And that her sacred Booke, with bloud ywrit,
That none could read, except she did them
teach,
She unto him discloséd every whit,
And heavenly documents<sup>1</sup> thereout did preach,
That weaker wit of man could never reach,
Of God, of grace, of justice, of free will,
That wonder was to heare her goodly speach:
For she was able, with her words to kill,
And raise againe to life the hart, that she did thrill.

20

And when she list poure out her larger sprint,
She would commaund the hastie Sunne to
stay,
Or backward turne his course from heavens
hight;
Sometimes great hostes of men she could
dismay,
Dry-shod to passe, she parts the fouds in tway;
And eke huge mountaines from their native
seat
She would commaund, themselves to beare
away,
And throw in raging sea with roaring threat.
Almightie God her gave such powre, and puissance great.

21

The faithfull knight, now grew in litle space,
By hearing her, and by her sisters lore,
To such perfection of all heavenly grace,
That wretched world he gan for to abhore,

<sup>1</sup>Instructions.

And mortall life gan loath, as thing forlore,
Greev'd with remembrance of his wicked
wayes,
And prickt with anguish of his sinnes so
sore,
That he desirde, to end his wretched dayes:
So much the dart of sinfull guilt the soule
dismayes.

22

But wise Speranza gave him comfort sweet,
And taught him how to take assuréd hold
Upon her silver anchor, as was meet;
Else had his sinnes so great, and manifold
Made him forget all that Fidelia told.
In this distressed doubtfull agonie,
When him his dearest Una did behold,
Disdeining life, desiring leave to die,
She found her selfe assayld with great perplexitie.

23

And came to Calia to declare her smart,
Who well acquainted with that commune
plight,
Which sinfull horror workes in wounded hart,
Her wisely comforted all that she might,
With goodly counsell and advisement right;
And streightway sent with carefull diligence,
To fetch a Leach, the which had great in-
sight
In that disease of grievéd conscience,
And well could cure the same; His name was Patience.

24

Who coming to that soule-diseaséd knight,
Could hardly him intreat, to tell his griefe:
Which knowne, and all that noyd his heavie
sprint,
Well searcht, eftsoones he gan apply reliefe
Of salves and med'cines, which had passing priebe,
And thereto added words of wondrous might:
By which to ease he him recuréd briefe,
And much asswag'd the passion of his plight,
That he his paine endur'd, as seeming now more light.

25

But yet the cause and root of all his ill,
Inward corruption, and infected sin,
Not purg'd nor heald, behind remainéd still,
And festring sore did rankle yet within,

Close creeping twixt the marrow and the skin.

Which to extirpe, he laid him privily
Downe in a darkesome lowly place farre in,
Whereas he meant his corrosives to apply,
And with streight diet tame his stubborne malady.

26

In ashes and sackcloth he did array
His daintie corse, proud humors to abate,
And dieted with fasting every day,
The swelling of his wounds to mitigate,
And made him pray both earely and eke
late:

And ever as superfluous flesh did rot
Amendment readie still at hand did wayt,
To pluck it out with pincers frie whot,
That soone in him was left no one corrupted
jot.

27

And bitter Penance with an yron whip,
Was wont him once to disple every day:
And sharpe Remorse his hart did pricke and nip,
That drops of bloud thence like a well did
play;
And sad Repentance uséd to embay,
His bodie in salt water smarting sore,
The filthy blots of sinne to wash away.
So in short space they did to health restore
The man that would not live, but earst lay at deathes dore.

28

In which his torment often was so great,
That like a Lyon he would cry and rore,
And rend his flesh, and his owne synewes
eat.

His owne deare Una hearing evermore
His ruefull shriekes and gronings, often tore Her guiltlesse garments, and her golden
heare,

For pittie of his paine and anguish sore;
Yet all with patience wisely she did beare;
For well she wist, his crime could else be never cleare.

29

Whom thus recover'd by wise Patience,
And trew Repentance they to Una brought:
Who joyous of his curéd conscience,
Him dearely kist, and fairely eke besought

Himselfe to chearish, and consuming thought
To put away out of his carefull brest.
By this Charissa, late in child-bed brought,
Was woxen strong, and left her fruitfull nest:
To her faire Una brought this unacquainted
guest.

30

She was a woman in her freshest age,
Of wondrous beauty, and of bountie rare,
With goodly grace, and comely personage,
That was on earth not easie to compare;
Full of great love, but Cupids wanton snare
As hell she hated, chast in worke and will;
Her necke and breasts were ever open bare,
That ay thereof her babes might sucke their
fill;

The rest was all in yellow robes<sup>1</sup> arayéd still.

31

A multitude of babes about her hong,
Playing their sports, that joyd her to behold,
Whom still she fed, whiles they were weake
and young,
But thrust them forth still, as they wexéd old:
And on her head she wore a tyre of gold,
Adorn'd with gemmes and owches wondrous
faire,
Whose passing price uneath was to be told;
And by her side there sate a gentle paire
Of turtle doves, she sitting in an yvorie
chaire.

32

The knight and Una entring, faire her greet,
And bid her joy of that her happie brood;
Who them requites with court'sies seeming meet,<sup>2</sup>

And entertaines with friendly chearefull
mood.

Then Una her besought, to be so good,
As in her vertuous rules to schoole her knight,
Now after all his torment well withstood,
In that sad house of Penaunce, where his
spright

Had past the paines of hell, and long enduring night.

33

She was right joyous of her just request,
And taking by the hand that Faeries sonne,
Gan him instruct in every good behest,
Of love, and righteousnessse, and well to donne,<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup>Symbolic of maternity.

<sup>2</sup>With proper courtesie.

<sup>3</sup>Well-doing.

And wrath, and hatred warély to shonne,
That drew on men Gods hatred, and his wrath,

And many soules in dolours had fordonne:
In which when him she well instructed hath,
From thence to heaven she teacheth him the ready path.

34

Wherein his weaker wandering steps to guide,
An auncient matrone she to her does call,
Whose sober lookes her wisdom well describe:<sup>1</sup>

Her name was Mercie, well knowne over all,
To be both gracious, and eke liberall:
To whom the carefull charge of him she gave,
To lead aright, that he should never fall
In all his wayes through this wide worldés
wave,

That Mercy in the end his righteous soule might save.

35

The godly Matrone by the hand him beares
Forth from her presence, by a narrow way, Scattered with bushy thornes, and ragged
breares,

Which still before him she remov'd away,
That nothing might his ready passage stay:
And ever when his feet encombréd were,
Or gan to shrink, or from the right to stray,
She held him fast, and firmly did upbeare,
As carefull Nourse her child from falling oft does reare.

36

Eftsoones unto an holy Hospitall,
That was fore by the way, she did him bring,
In which seven Bead-men<sup>2</sup> that had vowéd
all

Their life to service of high heavens king
Did spend their dayes in doing godly thing:
There gates to all were open evermore,
That by the wearie way were travelling,
And one sate wayting ever them before,
To call in commers-by, that needy were and pore.

37

The first of them that eldest was, and best,
Of all the house had charge and government,
As Guardian and Steward of the rest:
His office was to give entertainment

<sup>1</sup>Revealed.<sup>2</sup>Men of prayer.

And lodging, unto all that came, and went:
Not unto such, as could him feast againe,
And double quite, for that he on them spent,
But such, as want of harbour did constraine:
Those for Gods sake his dewty was to enter-
taine.

38

The second was as Almner of the place,
His office was, the hungry for to feed,
And thirsty give to drinke, a worke of grace:
He feard not once him selfe to be in need,
Ne car'd to hoord for those, whom he did
breede:

The grace of God he layd up still in store,
Which as a stocke he left unto his seede:
He had enough, what need him care for
more?

And had he lesse, yet some he would give to the pore.

39

The third had of their wardrobe custodie,
In which were not rich tyres, nor garments
gay,

The plumes of pride, and wings of vanitie,
But clothes meet to keepe keene could away,
And naked nature seemely to aray;
With which bare wretched wights he dayly
clad,

The images of God in earthly clay;
And if that no spare cloths to give he had,
His owne coate he would cut, and it distribute glad.

40

The fourth appointed by his office was,
Poore prisoners to relieve with gracious ayd,
And captives to redeeme with price of bras,
From Turkes and Sarazins, which them had stayd;

And though they faultie were, yet well he
wayd,

That God to us forgiveth every howre
Much more then that, why they in bands
were layd,

And he<sup>3</sup> that harrowd hell with heavie
stowre,

The faultie soules from thence brought to his heavenly bowre.

<sup>3</sup>Christ who, when he descended into hell, redeemed the souls of the patriarchs and of others.

41

The fift had charge sicke persons to attend,
And comfort those, in point of death which
lay;

For them most needeth comfort in the end,
When sin, and hell, and death do most dis-
may

The feeble soule departing hence away.
All is but lost, that living we bestow,
If not well ended at our dying day.
O man have mind of that last bitter throw;
For as the tree does fall, so lyes it ever low.

42

The sixt had charge of them now being dead,
In seemely sort their corsos to engrave,<sup>1</sup>
And deck with dainty flowres their bridall bed,
That to their heavenly spouse both sweet and
brave

They might appeare, when he their soules shall save.

The wondrous workemanship of Gods owne
mould,

Whose face he made, all beasts to feare, and
gave

All in his hand, even dead we honour should.
Ah dearest God me graunt, I dead be not defould.

43

The seventh now after death and buriall done,

Had charge the tender Orphans of the dead
And widowes ayd,<sup>2</sup> least they should be undone:

In face of judgement he their right would
plead,

Ne ought the powre of mighty men did dread
In their defence, nor would for gold or fee
Be wonne their rightfull causes downe to tread:

And when they stood in most necessitee,
He did supply their want, and gave them ever free.

44

There when the Elfin knight arrivéd was,
The first and chiefest of the seven, whose care
Was guests to welcome, towards him did
pas:

Where seeing Mercie, that his steps up bare,

<sup>1</sup>To bury.

<sup>2</sup>And widowes to aid.

And alwayes led, to her with reverence rare
He humbly louted in meeke lowlinesse,
And seemely welcome for her did prepare:
For of their order she was Patronesse,
Albe Charissa were their chiefest founderesse.

45

There she awhile him stayes, him selfe to rest,
That to the rest more able he might bee:
During which time, in every good behest
And godly worke of Almes and charitee
She him instructed with great industree;
Shortly therein so perfect he became,
That from the first unto the last degree,
His mortall life he learnéd had to frame
In holy righteousness, without rebuke or blame.

46

Thence forward by that painfull way they
pas,

Forth to an hill, that was both steepe and
hy;

On top whereof a sacred chappell was,
And eke a litle Hermitage thereby,
Wherein an aged holy man did lye,
That day and night said his devotion,
Ne other worldly busines did apply;
His name was heavenly Contemplation;
Of God and goodnesse was his meditation.

47

Great grace that old man to him given had;
For God he often saw from heavens hight,
All were his earthly eyen both blunt and
bad,

And through great age had lost their kindly
sight,

Yet wondrous quick and persant was his
spright,

As Eagles eye, that can behold the Sunne:
That hill they scale with all their powre and
might,

That his frayle thighes nigh wearie and for-
donne

Gan faile, but by her helpe the top at last he wonne.

48

There they do finde that godly agéd Sire,
With snowy lockes adowne his shoulders
shed,

As hoarie frost with spangles doth attire
The mossy braunches of an Oke halfe ded.

Each bone might through his body well be
red,
And every sinew seene through his long fast:
For nought he car'd<sup>1</sup> his carcas long unfed;
His mind was full of spirituall repast,
And pyn'd his flesh, to keepe his body low and chast.

49

Who when these two approching he aspide,
At their first presence grew agrievéd sore,
That forst him lay his heavenly thoughts
aside;
And had he not that Dame respected more,
Whom highly he did reverence and adore,
He would not once have movéd for the
knight.
They him saluted standing far afore;
Who well them greeting, humbly did re-
quight,
And asked, to what end they clomb that tedious height.

50

What end (quoth she) should cause us take such paine,
But that same end, which every living wight Should make his marke, high heaven to attaine?
Is not from hence the way, that leadeth right
To that most glorious house, that glistreth
bright
With burning starres, and everliving fire,
Whereof the keyes are to thy hand beight
By wise Fidelia? she doth thee require,
To shew it to this knight, according his desire.

51

Thrise happy man, said then the father-
grave,
Whose staggering steps thy steady hand doth
lead,
And shewes the way, his sinfull soule to save.
Who better can the way to heaven aread,
Then thou thy selfe, that was both borne and bred
In heavenly throne, where thousand Angels shine?
Thou doest the prayers of the righteous sead
Present before the majestie divine,
And his avenging wrath to clemencie incline.

<sup>1</sup>Cared for.

52

Yet since thou bidst, thy pleasure shalbe
donne.
Then come thou man of earth, and see the
way,
That never yet was seene of Faeries sonne,
That never leads the traveiler astray,
But after labours long, and sad delay,
Brings them to joyous rest and endlesse blis.
But first thou must a season fast and pray,
Till from her bands the spright assoiléd is,
And have her strength recur'd from fraile infirmities.

53

That done, he leads him to the highest Mount;
Such one, as that same mighty man of God,<sup>2</sup>
That bloud-red billowes like a walléd front
On either side disparted with his rod,
Till that his army dry-foot through them
yod,
Dwelt fortie dayes upon; where writ in stone
With bloody letters by the hand of God,
The bitter doome of death and balefull mone
He did receive, while flashing fire about him shone.

54

Or like that sacred hill,<sup>3</sup> whose head full hie, Adorn'd with fruitfull Olives all arownd,
Is, as it were for endlesse memory
Of that deare Lord, who oft thereon was fownd,
For ever with a flowring girlond crownd:
Or like that pleasaunt Mount,<sup>4</sup> that is for ay
Through famous Poets verse each where renownd,
On which the thrise three learnéd Ladies<sup>5</sup>
play
Their heavenly notes, and make full many a lovely lay.

55

From thence, far off he unto him did shew
A litle path, that was both steepe and long,
Which to a goodly Citie led his vew;
Whose wals and towres were builded high and strong

<sup>2</sup>Moses.<sup>3</sup>The Mount of Olives.<sup>4</sup>Parnassus.<sup>5</sup>The nine muses.

Of perle and precious stone, that earthly tong
Cannot describe, nor wit of man can tell;
Too high a ditty for my simple song;
The Citie of the great king hight it well,
Wherein eternall peace and happinesse doth dwell.

56

As he thereon stood gazing, he might see
The blessed Angels to and fro descend
From highest heaven, in gladsome companee,
And with great joy into that Citie wend,
As commonly<sup>1</sup> as friend does with his frend.
Whereat he wondred much, and gan enquire,
What stately building durst so high extend
Her loftie towres unto the starry sphere,
And what unknown nation there empeopled
were.

57

Faire knight (quoth he) Hierusalem that is,
The new Hierusalem, that God has built
For those to dwell in, that are chosen his,
His chosen people purg'd from sinfull guilt,
With piteous blood, which cruelly was spilt
On curséd tree, of that unspotted lam,
That for the sinnes of all the world was
kilt:
Now are they Saints all in that Citie sam,
More deare unto their God, then younglings to their dam.

58

Till now, said then the knight, I weenéd well,
That great Cleopolis, where I have beene,
In which that fairest Faerie Queene doth
dwell
The fairest Citie was, that might be seene;
And that bright towre all built of christall
cleene,
Panthea, seemd the brightest thing, that
was:
But now by prooffe all otherwise I weene;
For this great Citie that does far surpas,
And this bright Angels towre quite dims that towre of glas.

59

Most trew, then said the holy agéd man;
Yet is Cleopolis for earthly fame,
The fairest peece, that eye beholden can:
And well besemes all knights of noble name,

<sup>1</sup>Sociably.

That covet in th'immortall booke of fame
To be eternizéd, that same to haunt,
And doen their service to that soveraigne
Dame,
That glorie does to them for guerdon graunt:
For she is heavenly borne, and heaven may justly vaunt.

60

And thou faire ymp, sprong out from English
race,
How ever now accompted Elfin's sonne,
Well worthy doest thy service for her grace,
To aide a virgin desolate foredonne.
But when thou famous victorie hast wonne,
And high emongst all knights hast hong thy
shield,
Thenceforth the suit of earthly conquest
shonne,
And wash thy hands from guilt of bloudy
field:
For bloud can nought but sin, and wars but sorrowes yield.

61

Then seeke this path, that I to thee presage,<sup>2</sup>
Which after all to heaven shall thee send;
Then peaceably thy painefull pilgrimage
To yonder same Hierusalem do bend,
Where is for thee ordaind a blessed end:
For thou emongst those Saints, whom thou
doest see,
Shalt be a Saint, and thine owne nations
frend
And Patrone: thou Saint George shalt calléd
bee,
Saint George of mery England, the signe of victoree.

62

Unworthy wretch (quoth he) of so great
grace,
How dare I thinke such glory to attaine?
These that have it attained, were in like cace (Quoth he) as wretched, and liv'd in like
paine.
But deeds of armes must I at last be faine,
And Ladies love to leave so dearly bought?
What need of armes, where peace doth ay
remaine,
(Said he) and battailes none are to be fought?
As for loose loyes are vaine, and vanish into nought.

<sup>2</sup>Point out.

63

O let me not (quoth he) then turne againe
Backe to the world, whose joyes so fruitlesse
are;

But let me here for aye in peace remaine,
Or streight way on that last long voyage fare,
That nothing may my present hope empare.
That may not be (said he) ne maist thou yit
Forgo that royall maides bequeathéd care,
Who did her cause into thy hand commit,
Till from her curséd foe thou have her freely quit.

64

Then shall I soone, (quoth he) so God me
grace,
Abet that virgins cause disconsolate,
And shortly backe returne unto this place,
To walke this way in Pilgrims poore estate.
But now aread, old father, why of late Didst thou behight me borne of English
blood,
Whom all a Faeries sonne doen nominate?
That word shall I (said he) avouchen good, Sith to thee is unknowne the cradle of thy brood.

65

For well I wote, thou springst from ancient
race
Of Saxon kings, that have with mightie hand
And many bloudie battailes fought in place
High reard their royall throne in Britane
land,
And vanquisht them, unable to withstand:
From thence a Faerie thee unweeting reft,
There as thou slepst in tender swadling band,
And her base Elfin brood there for thee left.
Such men do Chaungelings call, so chaunged
by Faeries theft.

66

Thence she thee brought into this Faerie
lond,
And in an heapéd furrow did thee hyde,
Where thee a Ploughman all unweeting fond,
As he his toylesome teme that way did guyde,
And brought thee up in ploughmans state to byde,
Whereof Georgos<sup>1</sup> he thee gave to name;
Till prickt with courage, and thy forces
pryde,

<sup>1</sup>Greek γεωργός, meaning husbandman.

To Faery court thou cam'st to seeke for fame,
And prove thy puissaunt armes, as seemes thee best became.

67

O holy Sire (quoth he) how shall I quight
The many favours I with thee have found,
That hast my name and nation red aright,
And taught the way that does to heaven
bound?

This said, adowne he lookéd to the ground,
To have returnd, but dazéd were his eyne,
Through passing brightnessse, which did quite confound

His feeble sence, and too exceeding shyne.
So darke are earthly things comparéd to things divine.

68

At last whenas himselfe he gan to find,
To Una back he cast him to retire;
Who him awaited still with pensive mind.
Great thanks and goodly meed to that good
syre,

He thence departing gave for his paines
hyre.<sup>2</sup>

So came to Una, who him joyd to see,
And after little rest, gan him desire,
Of her adventure mindfull for to bee.
So leave they take of Calia, and her daughters three.

CANTO XI

*The knight with that old Dragon fights
two dayes incessantly:*

*The third him overthrowes, and gayns
most glorious victory.*

I

High time now gan it wex for Una faire,
To thinke of those her captive Parents deare,
And their forwasted kingdome to repaire:
Whereto whenas they now approchéd neare,
With hartie words her knight she gan to
cheare,

And in her modest manner thus bespake;
Deare knight, as deare, as ever knight was
deare,

That all these sorrowes suffer for my sake,
High heaven behold the tedious toyle, ye for me take.

<sup>2</sup>As a reward for his trouble.

2

Now are we come unto my native soyle,
And to the place, where all our perils dwell;
Here haunts that feend, and does his dayly
spoyle,
Therefore henceforth be at your keeping well,<sup>1</sup>

And ever ready for your foeman fell.
The sparke of noble courage now awake,
And strive your excellent selfe to excell;
That shall ye evermore renownéd make,
Above all knights on earth, that batteill undertake.

3

And pointing forth, lo yonder is (said she)
The brasen towre in which my parents deare
For dread of that huge feend emprisond
be,

Whom I from far see on the walls appeare, Whose sight my feeble soule doth greatly
cheare:

And on the top of all I do espye
The watchman wayting tydings glad to
heare,
That O my parents might I happily
Unto you bring, to ease you of your misery.

4

With that they heard a roaring hideous
sound,
That all the ayre with terrour filléd wide,
And seemd uneath<sup>2</sup> to shake the stedfast
ground.

Eftsoones that dreadfull Dragon they espide,
Where stretcht he lay upon the sunny side,
Of a great hill, himselfe like a great hill.
But all so soone, as he from far descride
Those glistring armes, that heaven with light
did fill,

He rousd himselfe full blith, and hastned them untill.

5

Then bad the knight his Lady yede aloofe,
And to an hill her selfe withdraw aside,
From whence she might behold that bat-tailles proof

And eke be safe from daunger far descryde:

<sup>1</sup>Be carefully on your guard.

<sup>2</sup>Almost.

She him obayd, and turnd a little wyde.
Now O thou sacred Muse,<sup>3</sup> most learnéd
Dame,
Faire ympe of Phæbus, and his agéd bride,<sup>4</sup>
The Nourse of time, and everlasting fame,
That warlike hands ennoblest with immor-
tall name;

6

O gently come into my feeble brest,
Come gently, but not with that mighty
rage,
Wherewith the martiall troupes thou doest
infest,
And harts of great Heroës doest enrage,
That nought their kindled courage may aswage, Soone as thy dreadfull trompe begins to
sownd;
The God of warre with his fiers equipage
Thou doest awake, sleepe never he so sownd,
And fearéd nations doest with horroure sterne
astownd.

7

Faire Goddess lay that furious fit aside,
Till I of warres and bloudy Mars do sing,
And Briton fields with Sarazin bloud bedyde, Twixt that great faery Queene and Paynim king,<sup>5</sup>
That with their horroure heaven and earth
did ring,
A worke of labour long, and endlesse prayse:
But now a while let downe that haughtie
string,
And to my tunes thy second tenor rayse,
That I this man of God his godly armes may blaze.

8

By this the dreadfull Beast drew nigh to
hand,
Halfe flying, and halfe footing in his hast,
That with his largenesse measuréd much
land,
And made wide shadow under his huge wast;
As mountaine doth the valley overcast.
Approching nigh, he rearéd high afore
His body monstrous, horrible, and vast,

<sup>3</sup>Calliope (but see note above, Intro. Stanzas, 2).

<sup>4</sup>The muses were the children of Apollo and Mnemosyne, or Memory.

<sup>5</sup>Spenser here refers to a later part of the Faerie Queene which was never written.

Which to increase his wondrous greatnesse
more,
Was swolne with wrath, and poyson, and with bloody gore.

9

And over, all with brasen scales was armd,
Like plated coate of steele, so couchéd neare,<sup>1</sup>
That nought mote perce, ne might his corse be harmd
With dint of sword, nor push of pointed
speare;
Which as an Eagle, seeing pray appeare,
His aery plumes doth rouze, full rudely dight,
So shakéd he, that horreur was to heare,
For as the clashing of an Armour bright,
Such noyse his rouzéd scales did send unto the knight.

10

His flaggy wings when forth he did display,
Were like two sayles, in which the hollow
wynd
Is gathered full, and worketh speedy way:
And eke the pennes, that did his pineons bynd,
Were like mayne-yards, with flying canvas
lynd,
With which whenas him list the ayre to beat,
And there by force unwonted passage find,
The cloudes before him fled for terrour great,
And all the heavens stood still amazéd with his threat.

11

His huge long tayle wound up in hundred folds,
Does overspred his long bras-scaly backe,
Whose wreathéd boughts when ever he un-
folds,
And thicke entangled knots adown does
slacke,
Bespotted all with shields of red and blacke,
It sweepeth all the land behind him farre,
And of three furlongs does but litle lacke;
And at the point two stings in-fixéd arre,
Both deadly sharpe, that sharpest steele exceeden farre.

12

But stings and sharpest steele did far exceed
The sharpnesse of his cruell rending clawes;
Dead was it sure, as sure as death in deed,
What ever thing does touch his ravenous
pawes,

<sup>1</sup>So closely placed,

Or what within his reach he ever drawes.
But his most hideous head my tounge to tell,
Does tremble: for his deepe devouring jawes
Wide gapéd, like the griesly mouth of hell,
Through which into his darke abisse all ravin fell.

13

And that more wondrous was, in either jaw
Three ranckes of yron teeth enraungéd were,
In which yet trickling blood and gobbets raw
Of late devouréd bodies did appeare,
That sight thereof bred cold congealéd feare:
Which to increase, and all atonce to kill,
A cloud of smothering smoke and sulphur
seare
Out of his stinking gorge forth steeméd still,
That all the ayre about with smoke and stench did fill.

14

His blazing eyes, like two bright shining
shields,
Did burne with wrath, and sparkled living
fyre;
As two broad Beacons, set in open fields,
Send forth their flames farre off to every shyre,
And warning give, that enemies conspyre,
With fire and sword the region to invade;
So flam'd his eyne with rage and rancorous
yre:
But farre within, as in a hollow glade,
Those glaring lampes were set, that made a dreadfull shade.

15

So dreadfully he towards him did pas,
Forelifting up aloft his speckled brest,
And often bounding on the bruséd gras,
As for great joyance of his newcome guest.
Eftswoones he gan advance his haughtie crest,
As chaufféd Bore his bristles doth upreare,
And shoke his scales to battell readie drest;
That made the Redcrosse knight nigh quake
for feare,
As bidding bold defiance to his foeman neare.

16

The knight gan fairely couch his steadie
speare,
And fiercely ran at him with rigorous might:
The pointed steele arrivng rudely theare,
His harder hide would neither perce, nor bight,

But glauncing by forth passéd forward right;
Yet sore amovéd with so puissant push,
The wrathfull beast about him turnéd light,
And him so rudely passing by, did brush
With his long tayle, that horse and man to ground did rush.

17

Both horse and man up lightly rose againe,
And fresh encounter towards him address:
But th'idle stroke yet backe recoyld in vaine,
And found no place his deadly point to rest.
Exceeding rage enflam'd the furious beast,
To be avengéd of so great despight;
For never felt his imperceable brest
So wondrous force, from hand of living wight;
Yet had he prov'd the powre of many a puissant knight.

18

Then with his waving wings displayéd wyde,
Himselfe up high he lifted from the ground,
And with strong flight did forcibly divide
The yielding aire, which nigh too feeble found
Her flitting partes, and element unsound,
To beare so great a weight: he cutting way
With his broad sayles, about him soaréd round:
At last low stouping with unweldie sway,
Snatcht up both horse and man, to beare them quite away.

19

Long he them bore above the subject plaine,<sup>1</sup>
So farre as Ewghen bow a shaft may send,
Till struggling strong did him at last con-
straine,
To let them downe before his flightés end:
As hagaré hauke presuming to contend
With hardie fowle, above his hable might,<sup>2</sup>
His wearie pounces all in vaine doth spend,
To trusse the pray too heave for his flight;
Which comming downe to ground, does free
it selfe by fight.

20

He so disseizéd of his gryping grosse,<sup>3</sup>
The knight his thrillant speare againe
assayd
In his bras-plated body to embosse,
And three mens strength unto the stroke he
layd;

<sup>1</sup>I. e., the plain lying below.

<sup>2</sup>Above the capacity of his ability.

<sup>3</sup>So dispossessed of his awkward handfull.

Wherewith the stiffe beame quakéd, as affrayd,
And glauncing from his scaly necke, did glyde
Close under his left wing, then broad dis-
playd.
The percing steele there wrought a wound
full wyde,
That with the uncouth smart the Monster
lowdly cryde.

21

He cryde, as raging seas are wont to rore,
When wintry storme his wrathfull wreck
does threat,
The rolling billowes beat the ragged shore,
As they the earth would shoulder from her
seat,
And greedie gulfe does gape, as he would eat
His neighbour element in his revenge:
Then gin the blustering brethren boldly
threat,
To move the world from off his stedfast
henge,
And boystrous battell make, each other to avenge.<sup>4</sup>

22

The steely head stucke fast still in his flesh, Till with his cruell clawes he snatcht the
wood,
And quite asunder broke. Forth flowéd fresh
A gushing river of blacke goarie blood,
That drownéd all the land, whereon he stood;
The streame thereof would drive a water-
mill.
Treble augmented was his furious mood
With bitter sense of his deepe rooted ill,
That flames of fire he threw forth from his large nosethrill.

23

His hideous tayle then hurléd he about,
And therewith all enwrapt the nimble thyes
Of his froth-fomy steed, whose courage
stout
Striving to loose the knot, that fast him tyes, Himselfe in streighter bandes too rash implies,
That to the ground he is perforce constraynd
To throw his rider: who can quickly ryse

<sup>4</sup>To take vengeance on each other.

From off the earth, with durty bloud distaynd,
For that reprochfull fall right fowly he distaynd.

24

And fiercely tooke his trenchand blade in hand,
With which he stroke so furious and so fell,
That nothing seemd the puissance could withstand:

Upon his crest the hardned yron fell,
But his more hardned crest was armd so well,
That deeper dint therein it would not make;
Yet so extremely did the buffe him quell,
That from thenceforth he shund the like to take,
But when he saw them come, he did them still forsake.

25

The knight was wrath to see his stroke beguyld,
And smote againe with more outrageous might;

But backe againe the sparckling steele recoyld,

And left not any marke, where it did light;
As if in Adamant rocke it had bene pight.
The beast impatient of his smarting wound,
And of so fierce and forcible despight,
Thought with his wings to styie above the ground;

But his late wounded wing unserviceable found.

26

Then full of grieve and anguish vehement,
He lowdly brayd, that like was never heard,
And from his wide devouring oven sent
A flake of fire, that flashing in his beard,
Him all amazd, and almost made affeard:
The scorching flame sore swingéd all his face,
And through his armour all his bodie seard,
That he could not endure so cruell cace,
But thought his armes to leave, and helmet to unlace.

27

Now that great Champion of the antique world,<sup>1</sup>

Whom famous Poetes verse so much doth daunt,

And hath for twelve huge labours high extold,
So many furies and sharpe fits did haunt,

<sup>1</sup>Hercules.

When him the poysoned garment did enchaunt

With Centaures bloud, and bloudie verses charm'd,

As did this knight twelve thousand dolours daunt,

Whom fyrie steele now burnt, that earst him arm'd,

That erst him goodly arm'd, now most of all him harm'd.

28

Faint, wearie, sore, emboyléd, grievéd,<sup>3</sup> brent
With heat, toyle, wounds, armes, smart, and inward fire

That never man such mischiefes did torment;
Death better were, death did he oft desire,
But death will never come, when needes require.

Whom so dismayd when that his foe beheld,
He cast to suffer him no more respire,
But gan his sturdie sterne about to weld,
And him so strongly stroke, that to the ground him feld.

29

It fortunéd (as faire it then befell)
Behind his backe unweeting, where he stood,
Of auncient time there was a springing well,
From which fast trickled forth a silver flood,
Full of great vertues, and for med'cine good.
Whylome, before that curséd Dragon got
That happie land, and all with innocent blood
Defyld those sacred waves, it rightly hot
The well of life,<sup>2</sup> ne yet his vertues had forgot.

30

For unto life the dead it could restore,
And guilt of sinfull crimes cleane wash away;
Those that with sicknesse were infected sore,
It could recure, and agéd long decay
Renew, as one were borne that very day.
Both Silo<sup>3</sup> this, and Jordan<sup>4</sup> did excell,
And th'English Bath, and eke the german Spau,

Ne can Cephise,<sup>5</sup> nor Hebrus<sup>6</sup> match this well:
Into the same the knight backe overthrowen, fell.

<sup>2</sup>Cf. Revelation, xxii, 1. The well represents divine grace.<sup>3</sup>The pool of Siloam (St. John, ix, 7).<sup>4</sup>Naaman was healed in the Jordan (2 Kings, v, 14).<sup>5</sup>The river Cephisus, near Athens.<sup>6</sup>A river in Thrace.

31

Now gan the golden Phæbus for to steepe
His fierie face in billowes of the west,
And his faint steedes watred in Ocean deepe, Whiles from their journall labours they did
rest,

When that infernall Monster, having kest
His wearie foe into that living well,
Can high advance his broad discoloured
brest,

Above his wonted pitch, with countenance
fell,

And clapt his yron wings, as victor he did dwell.

32

Which when his pensive Ladie saw from
farre,

Great woe and sorrow did her soule assay,
As weening that the sad end of the warre,
And gan to highest God entirely pray,
That fearéd chance from her to turne away;
With folded hands and knees full lowly bent
All night she watcht, ne once adowne would
lay

Her daintie limbs in her sad dreriment,
But praying still did wake, and waking did lament.

33

The morrow next gan early to appeare,
That Titan rose to runne his daily race;
But early ere the morrow next gan reare
Out of the sea faire Titans deawy face,
Up rose the gentle virgin from her place,
And lookéd all about, if she might spy
Her lovéd knight to move his manly pace:
For she had great doubt of his saféty,
Since late she saw him fall before his enemy.

34

At last she saw, where he upstartéd brave
Out of the well, wherein he drenchéd lay;
As Eagle fresh out of the Ocean wave,
Where he hath left his plumes all hoary gray,
And deckt himselfe with feathers youthly gay,<sup>1</sup>

Like Eyas hauke up mounts unto the skies,
His newly budded pineons to assay,
And marveiles at himselfe, still as he flies:
So new this new-borne knight to battell new did rise.

<sup>1</sup>The tradition that the eagle could renew its youth is an old one. Cf. Psalms, ciii, 5.

35

Whom when the damnéd feend so fresh did spy,

No wonder if he wondred at the sight,
And doubted, whether his late enemy
It were, or other new suppliéd knight.
He, now to prove his late renewéd might,
High brandishing his bright deaw-burning<sup>2</sup>
blade,

Upon his crested scalpe so sore did smite,
That to the scull a yawning wound it made:
The deadly dint his dulléd senses all dismaid.

36

I wote not, whether the revenging steele
Were hardned with that holy water dew,
Wherein he fell, or sharper edge did feele,
Or his baptizéd hands now greater grew;
Or other secret vertue did ensew;
Else never could the force of fleshly arme,
Ne molten mettall<sup>3</sup> in his bloud embrew:
For till that stownd could never wight him
harme,
By subtilty, nor slight, nor might, nor mighty charme.

37

The cruell wound enragéd him so sore,
That loud he yelléd for exceeding paine;
As hundred ramping Lyons seem'd to rore,
Whom ravenous hunger did thereto con-
straine:
Then gan he tosse aloft his stretchéd traine,
And therewith scourge the buxome aire so
sore,
That to his force to yeelden it was faine;
Ne ought his sturdie strokes might stand
afore,
That high trees overthrew, and rocks in peesces tore.

38

The same advauncing high above his head,
With sharpe intended sting so rude him
smot,
That to the earth him drove, as stricken dead,
Ne living wight would have him life behot:
The mortall sting his angry needle shot
Quite through his shield, and in his shoulder
seasd,
Where fast it stucke, ne would there out be got:

<sup>2</sup>Shining with the dew of the well.

<sup>3</sup>Nor any metal that ever was melted.

The grieve thereof him wondrous sore dis-
eased,
Ne might his ranckling paine with patience be appeasd.

39

But yet more mindfull of his honour deare,
Then of the grievous smart, which him did wring,

From loathéd soile he can him lightly reare,
And strove to loose the farre infixéd string:
Which when in vaine he tryde with struggel-
ing,

Inflam'd with wrath, his raging blade he heft,
And strooke so strongly, that the knotty
string

Of his huge taile he quite asunder cleft, Five joynts thereof he hewd, and but the stump him left.

40

Hart cannot thinke, what outrage, and what cryes,

With foule enfouldred smoake and flashing
fire,

The hell-bred beast threw forth unto the
skyes,

That all was coveréd with darknesse dire:
Then fraught with rancour, and engorgéd
ire,

He cast at once him to avenge for all,
And gathering up himselfe out of the mire,
With his uneven wings did fiercely fall,
Upon his sunne-bright shield, and gript it fast withall.

41

Much was the man encombred with his hold,
In feare to lose his weapon in his paw,
Ne wist yet, how his talants to unfold;
Nor harder was from Cerberus greedie jaw
To plucke a bone, then from his cruell claw

To reave by strength the gripéd gage away:
Thrise he assayd it from his foot to draw,
And thrise in vaine to draw it did assay,
It booted nought to thinke, to robbe him of his pray.

42

Tho when he saw no power might prevaile,
His trustie sword he cald to his last aid,
Wherewith he fiercely did his foe assaile,
And double blowes about him stoutly laid,

That glauncing fire out of the yron plaid;
As sparkles from the Andvile use to fly,
When heavie hammers on the wedge are swaid;

Therewith at last he forst him to unty<sup>1</sup>
One of his grasping feete, him to defend thereby.

43

The other foot, fast fixéd on his shield
Whenas no strength, nor stroks mote him
constraine

To loose, ne yet the warlike pledge to yield,
He smot theareat with all his might and
maine,

That nought so wondrous puissance might sustaine;

Upon the joynt the lucky steele did light,
And made such way, that hewd it quite in
twaine;

The paw yet misséd not his minisht might,
But hong still on the shield, as it at first was pight.

44

For grieve thereof, and divelish despight,
From his infernall founnace forth he threw Huge flames, that dimméd all the heavens
light,

Enrold in duskish smoke and brimstone blew;
As burning Aetna from his boyling stew
Doth belch out flames, and rockes in peeces broke,

And ragged ribs of mountaines molten new,
Enwrapt in coleblacke clouds and filthy
smoke,

That all the land with stench, and heaven
with horror choke.

45

The heate whereof, and harmefull pestilence
So sore him noyd, that forst him to retire
A little backward for his best defence,
To save his bodie from the scorching fire,
Which he from hellish entrailes did expire.
It chaunst (eternall God that chaunce did guide)

As he recoyléd backward, in the mire
His nigh forwearied feeble feet did slide,
And downe he fell, with dread of shame sore
terrifide.

<sup>1</sup>To loosen.

46

There grew a goodly tree him faire beside,
 Loaden with fruit and apples rosie red,
 As they in pure vermilion had beene dide,
 Whereof great vertues over all were red:
 For happie life to all, which thereon fed,
 And life eke everlasting did befall:
 Great God it planted in that blessed sted
 With his almightie hand, and did it call
 The tree of life, the crime of our first fathers fall.<sup>1</sup>

47

In all the world like was not to be found,
 Save in that soile, where all good things did
 grow,
 And freely sprong out of the fruitfull ground,
 As incorrupted Nature did them sow,
 Till that dread Dragon all did overthrow.
 Another like faire tree eke grew thereby,
 Whereof who so did eat, eftsoones did know
 Both good and ill:<sup>2</sup> O mornefull memory:
 That tree through one mans fault hath doen
 us all to dy.

48

From that first tree forth flowd, as from a
 well,
 A trickling streame of Balme,<sup>3</sup> most soveraine
 And daintie deare,<sup>4</sup> which on the ground
 still fell,
 And overflowéd all the fertill plaine,
 As it had deawéd bene with timely raine:
 Life and long health that gracious ointment
 gave,
 And deadly woundes could heale and reare
 againe
 The senselesse corse appointed for the grave.
 Into that same he fell: which did from death
 him save.

49

For nigh thereto the ever damnéd beast
 Durst not approach, for he was deadly made,
 And all that life preservéd, did detest:
 Yet he it oft adventur'd to invade.

<sup>1</sup>The cause of reproach to Adam. Cf. Genesis, iii, 22-23.

<sup>2</sup>Cf. Genesis, ii, 9.

<sup>3</sup>Suggested by Revelation, xxii, 2.

<sup>4</sup>Very precious.

By this the drouping day-light gan to fade,
 And yeeld his roome to sad succeeding night,
 Who with her sable mantle gan to shade
 The face of earth, and wayes of living wight,
 And high her burning torch<sup>5</sup> set up in heaven
 bright.

50

When gentle Una saw the second fall
 Of her deare knight, who wearie of long fight,
 And faint through losse of bloud, mov'd not
 at all,
 But lay as in a dreame of deepe delight,
 Besmeard with pretious Balme, whose ver-tuous might
 Did heale his wounds, and scorching heat alay,
 Againe she stricken was with sore affright,
 And for his safetie gan devoutly pray;
 And watch the noyous night, and wait for joyous day.

51

The joyous day gan early to appeare,
 And faire Aurora from the deawy bed
 Of aged Tithone gan her selfe to reare,
 With rosie cheekes, for shame as blushing red;
 Her golden lockes for haste were loosely shed
 About her eares, when Una her did marke
 Clymbe to her charet, all with flowers spred;
 From heaven high to chase the chearelesse
 darke,
 With merry note her loud salutes the mounting larke.

52

Then freshly up arose the doughtie knight,
 All healéd of his hurts and woundés wide,
 And did himselfe to battell readie dight;
 Whose early foe awaiting him beside
 To have devourd, so soone as day he spyde,
 When now he saw himselfe so freshly reare,
 As if late fight had nought him damnifyde,
 He woxe dismayd, and gan his fate to feare;
 Nathlesse with wonted rage he him advauncéd neare.

53

And in his first encounter, gaping wide,
 He thought attonce him to have swallowd
 quight,
 And rusht upon him with outrageous pride;
 Who him r'encountering fierce, as hauke in
 flight,

<sup>5</sup>The moon.

Perforce rebutted backe. The weapon bright
 Taking advantage of his open jaw, Ran through his mouth with so importune
 might,
 That deepe emperst his darksome hollow
 maw,
 And back retyrd,<sup>1</sup> his life blood forth with all did draw.

54

So downe he fell, and forth his life did breath,
 That vanisht into smoke and cloudés swift;
 So downe he fell, that th'earth him underneath

Did grone, as feeble so great load to lift;
 So downe he fell, as an huge rockie clift,
 Whose false foundation waves have washt
 away,

With dreadfull poyse is from the mayneland
 rift,

And rolling downe, great Neptune doth
 dismay;

So downe he fell, and like an heapéd moun-taine lay.

55

The knight himselfe even trembled at his
 fall,

So huge and horrible a masse it seem'd;
 And his deare Ladie, that beheld it all,
 Durst not approach for dread, which she misdeem'd,<sup>2</sup>

But yet at last, when as the direfull feend
 She saw not stirre, off-shaking vaine affright,
 She nigher drew, and saw that joyous end:
 Then God she prayds, and thankt her faith-
 full knight,

That had atchiev'd so great a conquest by his might.

CANTO XII

*Faire Una to the Redcrosse knight
 betrouthéd is with joy:*

*Though false Duessa it to barre
 her false sleights doe imploy.*

I

Behold I see the haven nigh at hand,
 To which I meane my wearie course to bend;
 Vere the maine shete, and beare up with the
 land,

The which afore is fairely to be kend,

<sup>1</sup>When it was withdrawn.

<sup>2</sup>In which she was mistaken.

And seemeth safe from stormes, that may offend;

There this faire virgin wearie of her way
 Must landed be, now at her journeyes end:
 There eke my feeble barke a while may stay, Till merry wind and weather call her thence
 away.

2

Scarsely had Phæbus in the glooming East
 Yet harnesséd his frie-footed teeme,
 Ne reard above the earth his flaming creast,
 When the last deadly smoke aloft did
 steeme,

That signe of last outbreathéd life did seeme,
 Unto the watchman on the castle wall;
 Who thereby dead that balefull Beast did
 deeme,

And to his Lord and Ladie lowd gan call,
 To tell, how he had seene the Dragons fatall
 fall.

3

Uprose with hastie joy, and feeble speed
 That agéd Sire, the Lord of all that land,
 And lookéd forth, to weet, if true indeede
 Those tydings were, as he did understand,
 Which whenas true by tryall he out fond,
 He bad to open wyde his brazen gate,
 Which longtime had bene shut, and out of hond Proclayméd joy and peace through all his
 state;

For dead now was their foe, which them
 forrayéd late.

4

Then gan triumphant Trompets sound on hie,
 That sent to heaven the ecchoéd report
 Of their new joy, and happie victorie Gainst him, that had them long opprest with tort,

And fast imprisonéd in siegéd fort.

Then all the people, as in solemne feast,
 To him assembled with one full consort,
 Rejoycing at the fall of that great beast,
 From whose eternall bondage now they were releast.

5

Forth came that auncient Lord and agéd
 Queene,

Arayd in antique robes downe to the ground,
 And sad habiliments right well beseeue;<sup>3</sup>
 A noble crew about them waited round

<sup>3</sup>Sober garments which well became them.

Of sage and sober Peres, all gravely gownd;
Whom farre before did march a goodly band
Of tall young men, all hable armes to sownd,<sup>1</sup>
But now they laurell braunches bore in hand;
Glad signe of victorie and peace in all their land.

6

Unto that doughtie Conquerour they came,
And him before themselves prostrating low,
Their Lord and Patrone loud did him pro-
clame,
And at his feet their laurell boughes did
throw.

Soone after them all dauncing on a row
The comely virgins came, with girlands dight,
As fresh as flowres in meadow greene do grow,
When morning deaw upon their leaves doth
light:
And in their hands sweet Timbrels all upheld
on hight.

7

And them before, the fry of children young
Their wanton sports and childish mirth did
play,
And to the Maydens sounding tymbrels sung
In well attuned notes, a joyous lay,
And made delightfull musicke all the way,
Untill they came, where that faire virgin
stood;
As faire Diana in fresh sommers day,
Beholds her Nymphes, enraung'd in shadie
wood,
Some wrestle, some do run, some bathe in christall flood.

8

So she beheld those maydens meriment
With chearefull vew; who when to her they
came,
Themselves to ground with gracious hum-
blesse bent,
And her ador'd by honorable name,
Lifting to heaven her everlasting fame:
Then on her head they set a girland greene,
And crownéd her twixt earnest and twixt game;
Who in her selfe-resemblance well beseene,<sup>2</sup>
Did seeme such, as she was, a goodly maiden Queene.

9

And after, all the raskall many ran,
Heapéd together in rude rablement,
To see the face of that victorious man:
Whom all admiréd, as from heaven sent,
And gazd upon with gaping wonderment.
But when they came, where that dead
Dragon lay,
Stretcht on the ground in monstrous large extent,
The sight with idle feare did them dismay, Ne durst approch him nigh, to touch, or once assay.

10

Some feard, and fled; some feard and well it
faynd;
One that would wiser seeme, then all the
rest,
Warnd him not touch, for yet perhaps re-maynd
Some lingring life within his hollow brest,
Or in his wombe might lurke some hidden nest
Of many Dragonets, his fruitfull seed;
Another said, that in his eyes did rest
Yet sparckling fire, and bad thereof take
heed;
Another said, he saw him move his eyes
indeed.

11

One mother, when as her foolehardie chyld
Did come too neare, and with his talants
play,
Halfe dead through feare, her litle babe
revyld,
And to her gossips gan in counsell say;
How can I tell, but that his talants may Yet scratch my sonne, or rend his tender
hand?
So diversly themselves in vaine they fray;
Whiles some more bold, to measure him nigh
stand,
To prove how many acres he did spread of land.

12

Thus flockéd all the folke him round about,
The whiles that hoarie king, with all his
traîne,
Being arrivéd, where that champion stout
After his foes defeasance did remaine,

<sup>1</sup>Able to bear arms.

<sup>2</sup>I. e., she now looked like her real self.

Him goodly greetes, and faire does enter-
taine,
With princely gifts of yvorie and gold,
And thousand thanks him yeelds for all his paine.
Then when his daughter deare he does be-
hold,
Her dearely doth imbrace, and kisseth manifold.

13

And after to his Pallace he them brings,
With shaumes, and trompets, and with Clarions sweet;
And all the way the joyous people sings,
And with their garments strowes the pavéd
street:
Whence mounting up, they find purveyance
meet
Of all, that royall Princes court became,
And all the floore was underneath their feet
Bespred with costly scarlot of great name,<sup>1</sup>
On which they lowly sit, and fitting purpose frame.

14

What needs me tell their feast and goodly
guize,
In which was nothing riotous nor vaine?
What needs of daintie dishes to devise,
Of comely services, or courtly trayne?
My narrow leaves cannot in them containe
The large discourse of royall Princes state.
Yet was their manner then but bare and
plaine:
For th'antique world excesse and pride did
hate;
Such proud luxurious pompe is swollen up but late.

15

Then when with meates and drinkes of every kinde
Their fervent appetites they quenched had,
That auncient Lord gan fit occasion finde,
Of straunge adventures, and of perils sad,
Which in his travell him befallen had,
For to demand of his renownéd guest:
Who then with utt'rance grave, and count-
'nance sad,
From point to point, as is before exprest,
Discourst his voyage long, according his request.

<sup>1</sup>Of great value.

16

Great pleasure mixt with pittifull regard,
That godly King and Queene did passionate,
Whiles they his pittifull adventures heard,
That oft they did lament his lucklesse state,
And often blame the too importune fate,
That heaped on him so many wrathfull
wreakes:
For never gentle knight, as he of late,
So tosséd was in fortunes cruell freakes;
And all the while salt teares bedewd the hearers cheeks.

17

Then said the royall Pere in sober wise;
Deare Sonne, great beene the evils, which ye
bore
From first to last in your late enterprise,
That I note, whether prayse, or pitty more:
For never living man, I weene, so sore
In sea of deadly daungers was distrest;
But since now safe ye seised have the shore,
And well arrivéd are (high God be blest),
Let us devise of ease and everlasting rest.

18

Ah dearest Lord, said then that doughty
knight,
Of ease or rest I may not yet devise;
For by the faith, which I to armes have
plight,
I bounden am streight after this emprise,
As that your daughter can ye well advize,
Backe to returne to that great Faerie Queene,
And her to serve six yeares in warlike wize,
Gainst that proud Paynim king, that workes
her teene:
Therefore I ought crave pardon, till I there have beene.

19

Unhappie falles that hard necessitie,
(Quoth he) the troubler of my happie peace,
And vowed foe of my felicitie;
Ne I against the same can justly preace:
But since that band ye cannot now release, Nor doen undo (for vowes may not be vaine);
Soone as the terme of those six yeares shall
cease,
Ye then shall hither backe returne againe,
The marriage to accomplish vovd betwixt
you twain.

20

Which for my part I covet to performe,
 In sort as through the world I did proclame,
 That who so kild that monster most deforme,
 And him in hardy battaile overcame,
 Should have mine onely daughter to his
     Dame,
 And of my kingdome heire apparaunt bee:
 Therefore since now to thee pertaines the
     same,
 By dew desert of noble chevalree,
 Both daughter and eke kingdome, lo I yield to thee.

21

Then forth he calléd that his daughter faire,
 The fairest Un' his onely daughter deare,
 His onely daughter, and his onely heyre;
 Who forth proceeding with sad sober cheare,
 As bright as doth the morning starre ap-peare
 Out of the East, with flaming lockes be-
     dight,
 To tell that dawning day is drawing neare,
 And to the world does bring long wishéd
     light;
 So faire and fresh that Lady shewd her selfe
     in sight.

22

So faire and fresh, as freshest flowre in May;
 For she had layd her mournfull stole aside,
 And widow-like sad wimple throwne away,
 Wherewith her heavenly beautie she did hide,
 Whiles on her wearie journey she did ride;
 And on her now a garment she did weare,
 All lilly white, withoutten spot, or pride,
 That seemd like silke and silver woven neare,
 But neither silke nor silver therein did
     appeare.

23

The blazing brightnesse of her beauties
     beame,
 And glorious light of her sunshyny face
 To tell, were as to strive against the streame.
 My ragged rimes are all too rude and bace,
 Her heavenly lineaments for to enchace.
 Ne wonder; for her owne deare lovéd knight,
 All were she dayly with himselfe in place,
 Did wonder much at her celestiall sight:
 Oft had he seene her faire, but never so faire
     dight.

24

So fairely dight, when she in presence came,
 She to her Sire made humble reverence,
 And bowéd low, that her right well became,
 And added grace unto her excellence:
 Who with great wisdom, and grave eloquence
 Thus gan to say. But eare he thus had said,
 With flying speede, and seeming great pretence,
 Came running in, much like a man dismaid,
 A Messenger with letters, which his message
     said.

25

All in the open hall amazéd stood,
 At suddeinnesse of that unwarie<sup>1</sup> sight,
 And wondred at his breathlesse hastie mood.
 But he for nought would stay his passage right,<sup>2</sup>
 Till fast<sup>3</sup> before the king he did alight;
 Where falling flat, great humblesse he did
     make,
 And kist the ground, whereon his foot was
     pight;
 Then to his hands that writ he did betake,
 Which he disclosing, red thus, as the paper
     spake.

26

To thee, most mighty king of Eden faire,
 Her greeting sends in these sad lines address,
 The wofull daughter, and forsaken heire
 Of that great Emperour of all the West;<sup>4</sup>
 And bids thee be advizéd for the best,
 Ere thou thy daughter linck in holy band
 Of wedlocke to that new unknownen guest:
 For he already plighted his right hand
 Unto another love, and to another land.

27

To me sad mayd, or rather widow sad,
 He was affiauncéd long time before,
 And sacred pledges he both gave, and had,
 False erraunt knight, infamous, and for-
     swore:
 And guiltie heavens of<sup>5</sup> his bold perjury,
 Which though he hath polluted oft of yore,

<sup>1</sup>Unexpected.<sup>2</sup>His passage straight ahead.<sup>3</sup>Close.<sup>4</sup>The pope.<sup>5</sup>Heavens infected by.

Yet I to them for judgement just do fly,
And them conjure t'avenge this shamefull injury.

28

Therefore since mine he is, or free or bond,
Or false or trew, or living or else dead,
Withhold, O soveraine Prince, your hasty
hond

From knitting league with him, I you aread;
Ne weene my right with strength adowne to
tread,

Through weakenesse of my widowed, or woe:
For truth is strong, her rightfull cause to
plead,

And shall find friends, if need requireth soe,
So bids thee well to fare, Thy neither friend,
nor foe, Fidessa.

29

When he these bitter byting words had red,
The tydings straunge did him abashéd make,
That still he sate long time astonishéd
As in great muse, ne word to creature spake.
At last his solemne silence thus he brake,
With doubtfull eyes fast fixé on his guest;
Redoubted knight, that for mine onely sake
Thy life and honour late adventuress, Let nought be hid from me, that ought to be expressed.

30

What meane these bloody vowes, and idle
threats,

Throwne out from womanish impatient
mind?

What heavens? what altars? what enraged
heates

Here heapéd up with termes of love unkind,
My conscience cleare with guilty bands would bind?

High God be wnesse, that I guiltlesse ame.
But if your selfe, Sir knight, ye faultie find,
Or wrappéd be in loves of former Dame,
With crime do not it cover, but disclose the same.

31

To whom the Redcrosse knight this answer
sent,

My Lord, my King, be nought hereat dis-
mayd,

Till well ye wote by grave intendiment,
What woman, and wherefore doth me up-
brayd

With breach of love, and loyalty betrayd.
It was in my mishaps, as hitherward
I lately traveild, that unwares I strayd
Out of my way, through perils straunge and
hard;

That day should faile me, ere I had them all declard.

32

There did I find, or rather I was found
Of this false woman, that Fidessa hight,
Fidessa hight the falsest Dame on ground,
Most false Duessa, royall richly dight,
That easie was to invegle weaker sight:
Who by her wicked arts, and wylie skill,
Too false and strong for earthly skill or
might,

Unwares me wrought unto her wicked will,
And to my foe betrayd, when least I fearéd ill.

33

Then steppéd forth the goodly royall Mayd,
And on the ground her selfe prostrating low,
With sober countenance thus to him sayd;
O pardon me, my soveraigne Lord, to show
The secret treasons, which of late I know
To have bene wrought by that false sorceresse.
She onely she it is, that earst did throw
This gentle knight into so great distresse,
That death him did awaite in dayly wretch-
ednesse.

34

And now it seemes, that she subornéd hath
This craftie messenger with letters vaine,
To worke new woe and improvidéd scath,<sup>1</sup>
By breaking of the band betwixt us twaine;
Wherein she uséd hath the practicke paine<sup>2</sup>
Of this false footman, clokt with simplenesse,
Whom if ye please for to discover plaine,
Ye shall him Archimago find, I ghesse,
The falsest man alive; who tries shall find no
lesse.

35

The king was greatly movéd at her speech,
And all with suddain indignation fraight,
Bad on that Messenger rude hands to reach.
Eftsoones the Gard, which on his state did
wait,

<sup>1</sup>Unforeseen harm.

<sup>2</sup>Artful pains.

Attacht that faylor false, and bound him strait:

Who seeming sorely chaufféd at his band,
As chainéd Beare, whom cruell dogs do bait,
With idle force did faine them to withstand,
And often semblaunce made to scape out of their hand.

36

But they him layd full low in dungeon deepe,
And bound him hand and foote with yron
chains.

And with continuall watch did warely keepe;
Who then would thinke, that by his subtile
trains

He could escape fowle death or deadly paines?

Thus when that Princes wrath was pacifide,
He gan renew the late forbidden banes,
And to the knight his daughter deare he tyde,
With sacred rites and vowes for ever to abyde.

37

His owne two hands the holy knots did knit,
That none but death for ever can deuide;
His owne two hands, for such a turne most
fit,

The housling fire did kindle and provide,
And holy water thereon sprinkled wide;
At which the bushy Teade a groome did light,
And sacred lampe in secret chamber hide,
Where it should not be quenched day nor
night,

For feare of evill fates, but burnen ever
bright.

38

Then gan they sprinkle all the posts with
wine,
And made great feast to solemnize that
day;

They all perfumde with frankencense divine,
And precious odours fetcht from far away,
That all the house did sweat with great aray:

And all the while sweete Musicke did apply

Her curious skill, the warbling notes to
play,

To drive away the dull Melancholy;
The whiles one sung a song of love and jollity.

39

During the which there was an heavenly noise

Heard sound through all the Pallace pleasantly,

Like as it had bene many an Angels voice,
Singing before th'eternall majesty,

In their trinall triplicities<sup>1</sup> on hye;

Yet wist no creature, whence that heavenly
sweet

Proceeded, yet each one felt secretly
Himselfe thereby reft of his sences meet,
And ravished with rare impression in his sprite.

40

Great joy was made that day of young and old,

And solemne feast proclaimd throughout
the land,

That their exceeding merth may not be
told:

Suffice it heare by signes to understand
The usuall joyes at knitting of loves band.

Thrise happy man the knight himselfe did
hold,

Possessed of his Ladies hart and hand,
And ever, when his eye did her behold,
His heart did seeme to melt in pleasures manifold.

41

Her joyous presence and sweet company

In full content he there did long enjoy,

Ne wicked envie, ne vile gealosy

His deare delights were able to annoy:

Yet swimming in that sea of blisfull joy,

He nought forgot, how he whilome had sworne,

In case he could that monstrous beast
destroy,

Unto his Farie Queene backe to returne:

The which he shortly did, and Una left to mourne.

42

Now strike your sailes ye jolly Mariners,

For we be come unto a quiet rode,

Where we must land some of our passengers,

And light this wearie vessell of her lode.

<sup>1</sup>It was believed that there were nine orders of angels, grouped in three ranks of three each.

Here she a while may make her safe abode,
Till she repaired have her tackles spent,<sup>1</sup>
And wants supplide. And then againe abroad

On the long voyage whereto she is bent:
Well may she speede and fairely finish her intent.

EPITHALAMION<sup>2</sup>

Ye learned sisters,<sup>3</sup> which have oftentimes Beene to me ayding, others to adorne,
Whom ye thought worthy of your gracefull
rymes,

That even the greatest did not greatly scorne
To heare theyr names sung in your simple layes,

But joyéd in theyr praise;
And when ye list your owne mishaps to
mourne,

Which death, or love, or fortunes wreck did
rayse,

Your string could soone to sadder tenor
turne,

And teach the woods and waters to lament
Your dolefull dreriment:

Now lay those sorrowfull complaints aside,
And having all your heads with girland
crownd,

Helpe me mine owne loves prayses to re-
sound;

Ne let the same of any be envie:
So Orpheus did for his owne bride:

So I unto my selfe alone will sing;
The woods shall to me answer, and my eccho
ring.

Early, before the worlds light giving lampe
His golden beame upon the hils doth spred,
Having disperst the nights unchearefull
dampe,

Doe ye awake, and, with fresh lustyhed,
Go to the bowre of my beloved love,
My truest turtle dove:

Bid her awake; for Hymen<sup>4</sup> is awake,
And long since ready forth his maske to move,
With his bright tead<sup>5</sup> that flames with many
a flake,

<sup>1</sup>Her worn-out tackle.

<sup>2</sup>Written, as Spenser tells in the poem, for his own marriage in 1594.

<sup>3</sup>The muses.

<sup>4</sup>God of marriage.

<sup>5</sup>Torch.

And many a bachelor to waite on him,
In theyr fresh garments trim.
Bid her awake therefore, and soone her
dight,

For lo! the wished day is come at last,
That shall, for al the paynes and sorrowes
past,

Pay to her usury of long delight:
And whylest she doth her dight,
Doe ye to her of joy and solace sing,
That all the woods may answer, and your
eccho ring.

Bring with you all the nymphes that you can heare,

Both of the rivers and the forrests greene,
And of the sea that neighbours to her neare,
Al with gay girlands goodly wel beseene.<sup>6</sup>

And let them also with them bring in hand
Another gay girland,
For my fayre love, of lillyes and of roses,
Bound truelove wize with a blew silke rib-
and.

And let them make great store of bridale
poses,

And let them eeke bring store of other
flowers,

To deck the bridale bowers.
And let the ground whereas her foot shall
tread,

For feare the stones her tender foot should
wrong,

Be strewed with fragrant flowers all along,
And diaped<sup>7</sup> lyke the discolored mead.

Which done, doe at her chamber dore awayt,
For she will waken strait;

The whiles doe ye this song unto her sing,
The woods shall to you answer, and your
eccho ring.

Ye nymphes of Mulla,<sup>8</sup> which with carefull
heed

The silver scaly trouts doe tend full well,
And greedy pikes which use therein to feed, (Those trouts and pikes all others doo ex-cell)

And ye likewise which keepe the rushy lake,<sup>9</sup>
Where none doo fishes take,

<sup>6</sup>Well arrayed.

<sup>7</sup>Variegated.

<sup>8</sup>The river Awbeg, south of Kilcolman.

<sup>9</sup>Kilcolman was beside a lake.

Bynd up the locks the which hang scatterd
light,
And in his waters, which your mirror
make,
Behold your faces as the christall bright,
That when you come whereas my love doth lie,
No blemish she may spie.
And eke ye lightfoot mayds which keepe
the dere
That on the hoary mountayne use to towre,
And the wyld wolves, which seeke them to devoure,
With your steele darts doo chace from com-
ming neer,
Be also present heere,
To helpe to decke her, and to help to sing,
That all the woods may answer, and your
eccho ring.

Wake now, my love, awake! for it is time:
The rosy Morne long since left Tithones
bed,
All ready to her silver coche to clyme,
And Phœbus gins to shew his glorious hed.
Hark how the cheerefull birds do chaunt
their laies,
And carroll of loves praise!
The merry larke hir mattins sings aloft,
The thrush replyes, the mavis<sup>1</sup> descant
playes,
The ouzell<sup>2</sup> shrills, the ruddock<sup>3</sup> warbles soft,
So goodly all agree, with sweet consent,<sup>4</sup>
To this dayes merriment.
Ah! my deere love, why doe ye sleepe thus
long,
When meeter were that ye should now
awake,
T'awayt the comming of your joyous make,<sup>5</sup>
And hearken to the birds love-learnéd song,
The dewy leaves among?
For they of joy and pleasance to you sing,
That all the woods them answer, and theyr
eccho ring.

My love is now awake out of her dreame,
And her fayre eyes, like stars that dimméd
were

With darksome cloud, now shew theyr goodly beams

More bright then Hesperus,<sup>6</sup> his head doth rere.

Come now, ye damzels, daughters of de-
light,

Helpe quickly her to dight.

But first come ye, fayre Houtes, which were begot,

In Joves sweet paradise, of Day and Night,
Which doe the seasons of the year allot,

And al that ever in this world is fayre

Do make and still repayre.

And ye three handmayds<sup>7</sup> of the Cyprian
Queene,

The which doe still adorne her beauties
pride,

Helpe to adorne my beautifullest bride:

And as ye her array, still throw betweene

Some graces to be seene:

And as ye use to Venus, to her sing,

The whiles the woods shal answer, and your
eccho ring.

Now is my love all ready forth to come:

Let all the virgins therefore well awayt,

And ye fresh boyes, that tend upon her
groome,

Prepare your selves, for he is comming strayt.

Set all your things in seemely good aray,

Fit for so joyfull day,

The joyfult day that ever sunne did see.

Faire Sun, shew forth thy favourable ray,

And let thy lifull heat not fervent be,

For feare of burning her sunshyny face,

Her beauty to disgrace.

O fayrest Phœbus, father of the Muse,

If ever I did honour thee aright,

Or sing the thing that mote<sup>8</sup> thy mind
delight,

Doe not thy servants simple boone refuse,

But let this day, let this one day be myne,

Let all the rest be thine.

Then I thy soverayne prayses loud wil sing,

That all the woods shal answer, and theyr
eccho ring.

<sup>1</sup>Song-thrush.

<sup>2</sup>Blackbird.

<sup>3</sup>Robin.

<sup>4</sup>Harmony.

<sup>5</sup>Mate.

<sup>6</sup>The morning star.

<sup>7</sup>The Graces.

<sup>8</sup>Might.

Harke how the minstrels gin to shrill aloud
 Their merry musick that resounds from far,
 The pipe, the tabor,<sup>1</sup> and the trembling
 croud,<sup>2</sup>

That well agree withouten breach or jar,
 But most of all the damzels doe delite,
 When they their tymbrels smyte,
 And thereunto doe daunce and carrol sweet,
 That all the sences they doe ravish quite,
 The whyles the boyes run up and downe the
 street,

Crying aloud with strong confuséd noyce,
 As if it were one voyce.

Hymen, Iö Hymen, Hymen,<sup>3</sup> they do shout,
 That even to the heavens theyr shouting shrill
 Doth reach, and all the firmament doth fill;
 To which the people, standing all about,
 As in approvance doe thereto applaud,
 And loud advaunce her laud,
 And evermore they Hymen, Hymen sing,
 That al the woods them answer, and theyr
 eccho ring.

Loe! where she comes along with portly pace,
 Lyke Phœbe, from her chamber of the east,
 Arysing forth to run her mighty race,
 Clad all in white, that seemes a virgin best.
 So well it her beemes, that ye would weene
 Some angell she had beene.

Her long loose yellow locks lyke golden wyre,
 Sprinkled with perle, and perling flowres
 atweene,

Doe lyke a golden mantle her attyre,
 And being crownéd with a girland greene,
 Seeme lyke some mayden queene.
 Her modest eyes, abashéd to behold
 So many gazers as on her do stare,
 Upon the lowly ground affixéd are;
 Ne dare lift up her countenance too bold,
 But blush to heare her prayses sung so loud,
 So farre from being proud.
 Nathlesse doe ye still loud her prayses sing,
 That all the woods may answer, and your
 eccho ring.

Tell me, ye merchants daughters, did ye see
 So fayre a creature in your towne before,
 So sweet, so lovely, and so mild as she,
 Adorned with beautyes grace and vertues
 store?

<sup>1</sup>Drum.

<sup>2</sup>Fiddle.

<sup>3</sup>Refrain of Roman nuptial song. Spenser in this poem follows in a general way the Latin tradition exemplified in Catullus LXI and LXII.

Her goodly eyes lyke saphyres shining bright,
 Her forehead yvory white,
 Her cheekes lyke apples which the sun hath rudded,

Her lips lyke cherries charming men to byte,
 Her brest like to a bowle of creame uncrud-ded,<sup>4</sup>

Her paps lyke lyllyes budded,
 Her snowie necke lyke to a marble towre,
 And all her body like a pallace fayre,
 Ascending uppe, with many a stately stayre,
 To honors seat and chastities sweet bowre.
 Why stand ye still, ye virgins, in amaze,
 Upon her so to gaze,
 Whiles ye forget your former lay to sing,
 To which the woods did answer, and your
 eccho ring.

But if ye saw that which no eyes can see,
 The inward beauty of her lively spright,<sup>5</sup>
 Garnisht with heavenly guifts of high degree, Much more then would ye wonder at that
 sight,

And stand astonisht lyke to those which red<sup>6</sup>
 Medusaes mazedful hed.<sup>7</sup>

There dwels sweet Love and constant Chas-
 tity,

Unspotted Fayth, and comely Womanhood,
 Regard of Honour, and mild Modesty;
 There Vertue raynes as queene in royal
 throne,

And giveth lawes alone,
 The which the base affections doe obey,
 And yeeld theyr services unto her will;
 Ne thought of thing uncomely ever may Thereto approach to tempt her mind to ill.
 Had ye once seene these her celestial threasures,

And unrevealéd pleasures,
 Then would ye wonder, and her prayses sing,
 That al the woods should answer, and your
 eccho ring.

Open the temple gates unto my love,
 Open them wide that she may enter in,
 And all the postes adorne as doth behove,
 And all the pillours deck with girlands trim,
 For to receyve this saynt with honour dew,
 That commeth in to you.

<sup>4</sup>Uncurdled.

<sup>5</sup>Spirit.

<sup>6</sup>Saw.

<sup>7</sup>Medusa's hair was turned into serpents.

With trembling steps and humble reverence,
 She commeth in before th' Almighties vew:
 Of her, ye virgins, learne obedience,
 When so ye come into those holy places,
 To humble your proud faces.
 Bring her up to th' high altar, that she may
 The sacred ceremonies there partake,
 The which do endlesse matrimony make;
 And let the roring organs loudly play
 The praises of the Lord in lively notes,
 The whiles with hollow throates
 The choristers the joyous antheme sing,
 That al the woods may answer, and their
 eccho ring.

Behold, whiles she before the altar stands,
 Hearing the holy priest that to her speakes,
 And blesseth her with his two happy hands,
 How the red roses flush up in her cheekes,
 And the pure snow with goodly vermill
 stayne,

Like crimsin dyde in grayne:<sup>1</sup>
 That even th' angels, which continually
 About the sacred altare doe remaine,
 Forget their service and about her fly,
 Ofte peeping in her face, that seemes more
 fayre,

The more they on it stare.
 But her sad<sup>2</sup> eyes, still fastened on the ground,
 Are governéd with goodly modesty,
 That suffers not one looke to glaunce awry,
 Which may let in a little thought unsownd.
 Why blush ye, love, to give to me your hand,
 The pledge of all our band?<sup>3</sup>
 Sing, ye sweet angels, Alleluya sing,
 That all the woods may answer, and your
 eccho ring.

Now al is done; bring home the bride againe,
 Bring home the triumph of our victory,
 Bring home with you the glory of her gaine,
 With joyance bring her and with jollity.
 Never had man more joyfull day then this,
 Whom heaven would heape with blis.
 Make feast therefore now all this live long
 day;

This day for ever to me holy is;
 Poure out the wine without restraint or stay,
 Poure not by cups, but by the belly full,
 Poure out to all that wull,

And sprinkle all the postes and wals with
 wine,
 That they may sweat, and drunken be with-
 all.

Crowne ye God Bacchus with a coronall.
 And Hymen also crowne with wreathes of vine;
 And let the Graces daunce unto the rest,
 For they can doo it best:
 The whiles the maydens doe theyr carroll
 sing,
 The which the woods shal answer, and theyr
 eccho ring.

Ring ye the bells, ye yong men of the towne,
 And leave your wonted labors for this day:
 This day is holy; doe ye write it downe,
 That ye for ever it remember may.
 This day<sup>4</sup> the sunne is in his chiefest hight,
 With Barnaby the bright,
 From whence declining daily by degrees,
 He somewhat loseth of his heat and light,
 When once the Crab<sup>5</sup> behind his back he sees.
 But for this time it ill ordainéd was,
 To chose the longest day in all the yeare,
 And shortest night, when longest fitter
 weare:

Yet never day so long, but late would passe.

Ring ye the bells, to make it weare away,
 And bonefires make all day,
 And daunce about them, and about them
 sing:
 That all the woods may answer, and your
 eccho ring.

Ah! when will this long weary day have end,
 And lende me leave to come unto my love?
 How slowly do the houres their numbers
 spend!

How slowly does sad Time his feathers move!
 Haste thee, O fayrest planet,<sup>6</sup> to thy home
 Within the westerne fome:
 Thy tyréd steedes long since have need of
 rest.

Long though it be, at last I see it gloome,
 And the bright evening star with golden creast
 Appeare out of the east.

<sup>4</sup>St. Barnabas's day is 11 June. The old calendar being ten days out, it was also the longest day.

<sup>5</sup>One of the signs of the zodiac.

<sup>6</sup>The sun.

<sup>1</sup>In scarlet dye.

<sup>2</sup>Sober.

<sup>3</sup>Tie.

Fayre childe of beauty, glorious lampe of
love,
That all the host of heaven in rankes doost
lead,
And guydest lovers through the nightés
dread,
How chearefully thou lookest from above,
And seemst to laugh atweene thy twinkling
light,
As joying in the sight
Of these glad many, which for joy doe sing,
That all the woods them answer, and their echo ring!

Now cease, ye damsels, your delights fore-
past;
Enough is it that all the day was youres:
Now day is doen, and night is nighing fast:
Now bring the bryde into the brydall boures.
The night is come, now soone her disaray,
And in her bed her lay;
Lay her in lillies and in violets,
And silken courteins over her display,
And odour'd sheetes, and Arras<sup>1</sup> coverlets.
Behold how goodly my faire love does ly
In proud humility!
Like unto Maia, when as Jove her tooke
In Tempe, lying on the flowry gras, Twixt sleepe and wake, after she weary was
With bathing in the Acidalian brooke.
Now it is night, ye damsels may be gon,
And leave my love alone,
And leave likewise your former lay to sing:
The woods no more shal answere, nor your
echo ring.

Now welcome, night! thou night so long expected,
That long daies labour doest at last defray,
And all my cares, which cruell Love collected,
Hast sund in one, and cancelléd for aye:
Spread thy broad wing over my love and
me,
That no man may us see,
And in thy sable mantle us enwrap,
From feare of perrill and foule horror free.
Let no false treason seeke us to entrap,
Nor any dread disquiet once annoy
The safety of our joy:
But let the night be calme and quiet some,
Without tempestuous storms or sad afay:
Lyke as when Jove with fayre Alcmena lay,

<sup>1</sup>Coverlets from Arras.

When he begot the great Tiryntian
groome:<sup>2</sup>
Or lyke as when he with thy selfe did lie,
And begot Majesty.
And let the mayds and yongmen cease to
sing:
Ne let the woods them answer, nor theyr
eccho ring.

Let no lamenting cryes, nor dolefull teares,
Be heard all night within, nor yet without:
Ne let false whispers, breeding hidden feares,
Breake gentle sleepe with misconceivéd
dout.

Let no deluding dreames, nor dreadful sights,
Make sudden sad affrights;
Ne let house-fyres, nor lightnings helplesse<sup>3</sup>
harmes,
Ne let the Pouke,<sup>4</sup> nor other evill sprights, Ne let mischivous witches with theyr
charmes,
Ne let hob goblins, names whose sense we see
not,

Fray us with things that be not.
Let not the shriech oule, nor the storke be heard,
Nor the night raven that still deadly yels,
Nor damnéd ghosts cald up with mighty
spels,
Nor griesly vultures make us once affeard:
Ne let th' unpleasant quyre of frogs still croking

Make us to wish theyr choking.
Let none of these theyr dreary accents sing;
Ne let the woods them answer, nor theyr
eccho ring.

But let stil Silence trew night watches
keepe,
That sacred Peace may in assurance rayne,
And tymely Sleep, when it is tyme to sleepe,
May poure his limbs forth on your pleasant
playne,
The whiles an hundred little wingéd loves,
Like divers fethered doves,
Shall fly and flutter round about our bed,
And in the secret darke that none reproves,
Their pretty stealthes shall worke, and snares
shal spread
To filch away sweet snatches of delight,
Conceald through covert night.

<sup>2</sup>Hercules.

<sup>3</sup>Irreparable.

<sup>4</sup>Puck, Robin Goodfellow.

Ye sonnes of Venus, play your sports at will:

For greedy Pleasure, careless of your toyes,
Thinks more upon her paradise of joyes,
Then what ye do, albe it good or ill.

All night therefore attend your merry play,
For it will soone be day:

Now none doth hinder you, that say or sing,
Ne will the woods now answer, nor your
eccho ring.

Who is the same which at my window
peepes?

Or whose is that faire face that shines so
bright?

Is it not Cinthia,<sup>1</sup> she that never sleeps,
But walkes about high heaven al the night?
O fayrest goddesse, do thou not envy

My love with mè to spy:

For thou likewise didst love, though now
unthought,

And for a fleece of woll, which privily

The Latmian shephard<sup>2</sup> once unto thee
brought,

His pleasures with thee wrought.

Therefore to us be favorable now;

And sith of wemens labours thou hast charge,

And generation goodly dost enlarge,

Encline thy will t' effect our wishfull vow,

And the chaste wombe informe with timely
seed,

That may our comfort breed:

Till which we cease our hopefull hap<sup>3</sup> to sing,

Ne let the woods us answere, nor our eccho
ring.

And thou, great Juno, which with awful
might

The lawes of wedlock still dost patronize,

And the religion of the faith first plight

With sacred rites hast taught to solemnize,

And eeke for comfort often calléd art

Of women in their smart,

Eternally bind thou this lovely band,

And all thy blessings unto us impart.

And thou, glad Genius, in whose gentle hand

The bridale bowre and geniall bed remaine,
Without blemish or staine,

And the sweet pleasures of theyr loves delight

With secret ayde doest succour and supply,

Till they bring forth the fruitfull progeny,

Send us the timely fruit of this same night.

And thou, fayre Hebe,<sup>4</sup> and thou, Hymen
free,

Grant that it may so be.

Till which we cease your further prayse to
sing,

Ne any woods shal answer, nor your eccho
ring.

And ye high heavens, the temple of the gods,

In which a thousand torches flaming bright

Doe burne, that to us wretched earthly clods

In dreadful darknesse lend desiréd light,

And all ye powers which in the same remayne,

More then we men can fayne,<sup>5</sup>

Poure out your blessing on us plentifully,

And happy influence upon us raine,

That we may raise a large posterity,

Which from the earth, which they may long possesse

With lasting happinesse,

Up to your haughty pallaces may mount,

And for the guerdon<sup>6</sup> of theyr glorious merit,

May heavenly tabernacles there inherit,

Of blessed saints for to increase the count.

So let us rest, sweet love, in hope of this,

And cease till then our tymely joyes to sing:

The woods no more us answer, nor our eccho
ring.

Song, made in lieu of many ornaments

With which my love should duly have bene
dect,

Which cutting off through hasty accidents,<sup>7</sup>

Ye would not stay your dew time to expect,<sup>8</sup>

But promist both to recompens,

Be unto her a goodly ornament,

And for<sup>9</sup> short time an endlesse monument.

<sup>1</sup>The moon.

<sup>2</sup>Endymion.

<sup>3</sup>Fortune.

<sup>4</sup>Cup-bearer to the gods.

<sup>5</sup>Imagine.

<sup>6</sup>Reward.

<sup>7</sup>Accidents of haste.

<sup>8</sup>Await.

<sup>9</sup>Instead of.

THE AUTHORIZED VERSION OF THE BIBLE (1611)

The so-called Authorized Version of the Bible—there is no evidence that it was formally authorized nor does the word anywhere appear in the edition of 1611—was not a new and independent translation, but a revision. It was the culmination of a long series of efforts to produce an English Bible which all men could agree to use. Before the Norman Conquest these efforts to reproduce the Bible in the vernacular had begun, and we have, or know of, prose translations and metrical paraphrases of certain parts of the Bible in Anglo-Saxon. These, however, had no later influence, nor was there after the Conquest any complete translation of the Bible until the latter part of the fourteenth century. About 1380, as a result of the reforming activities of Wyclif, Nicholas of Hereford translated part of the Bible, and his translation was completed by another hand. It has been contended that Wyclif himself bore a part in this translation which, indeed, generally goes by his name; but this is improbable. A few years later this version was revised and largely rewritten in a simpler style, perhaps by John Purvey, one of Wyclif's followers, perhaps by John of Trevisa, or perhaps by some one unknown to us. Throughout the fifteenth century there were no further translations of the Bible, and even the circulation of the Wyclifite versions was restricted, owing to fears that if the Bible were put into the hands of unlearned folk, and its interpretation thus in a manner entrusted to them, harm rather than good would result. But in the early years of the sixteenth century William Tyndale (1484–1536) rebelled against this repressive attitude and managed under difficulties to translate the New Testament and parts of the Old. His New Testament was published at Worms in 1526. Some resemblances have been found between Tyndale's translation and the Wyclifite versions, but Tyndale did his work without consulting either of those versions, so that he really made a new and independent start towards an English Bible. But he did more than that, for his work definitely fixed the style and tone of the English Bible, and the books which he translated were merely revised, not retranslated, in all later versions. Hence to Tyndale more than to any other one man we owe the Bible as English-speaking people have known it from the sixteenth century to the present day. Tyndale, however, had not been able to complete his translation, and it was left to Miles Coverdale, a man of greatly inferior scholarship though with as remarkable a command of English, to produce the earliest printed version of the whole Bible, at Zurich in 1535. From that time on through the century the work of revision went ahead, notable new versions being the Geneva Bible of 1557, the Bishops' Bible of 1568, and the Rheims New Testament of 1582; the last a translation made by English Jesuits of the College of Douay.

There was still, however, at the accession of James no English version which all parties of the church were willing to use, and in 1604, at an informal conference which had been called by James, the spokesman of the Puritans, Dr. John Reynolds, asked that there might be a new translation. James immediately took up the demand with genuine interest, and appears to have had much to do with the plan in accordance with which about forty-eight scholars, the best qualified men that could then be found in England, set to work to produce the Bible of 1611, "the best translation in the world," as Selden called it without exaggeration. These men may best say in the words of their spokesman what their aim was. "Truly, good Christian reader," says the author of the Preface of the Authorized Version, "we never thought from the beginning that we should need to make a new translation, nor yet to make of a bad one a good one (for then the imputation of Sixtus had been true in some sort, that our people had been fed with gall of dragons instead of wine, with whey instead of milk); but to make a good one better, or out of many good ones one principal good one, not justly to be excepted against; that hath been our endeavor, that our mark."

THE BOOK OF RUTH<sup>1</sup>

Now it came to pass in the days when the judges ruled, that there was a famine in the land. And a certain man of Bethlehem-Judah went to sojourn in the country of Moab, he, and his wife, and his two sons. And the name of the man was Elimelech, and the name of his wife Naomi, and the name of his two sons Mahlon and Chilion, Ephrathites of Bethlehem-Judah. And they came into the country of Moab, and continued there.

<sup>1</sup>If this story has any ulterior purpose, commentators are not agreed as to what it may be. It may be safely regarded as an example of the kind of popular tale which flourished among the Jews in the last centuries before the Christian era. It was perhaps written in its present form as early as 500–400 B. C.

And Elimelech Naomi's husband died;

and she was left, and her two sons. And they took them wives of the women of Moab; the name of the one was Orpah, and the name of the other Ruth: and they dwelled there about ten years. And Mahlon and Chilion died also both of them; and the woman was left of her two sons and her husband.

Then she arose with her daughters-in-law, that she might return from the country of Moab: for she had heard in the country of Moab how that the Lord had visited his people in giving them bread. Wherefore she went forth out of the place where she was, and her two daughters-in-law with her; and they went on the way to return unto the land of Judah.

And Naomi said unto her two daughters-in-law, "Go, return each to her mother's house. The Lord deal kindly with you, as ye have dealt with the dead, and with me; the Lord grant you that ye may find rest, each of you in the house of her husband." Then she kissed them; and they lifted up their voice and wept. And they said unto her, "Surely we will return with thee unto thy people."

And Naomi said, "Turn again, my daughters: why will ye go with me? are there yet any more sons in my womb, that they may be your husbands? Turn again, my daughters, go your way; for I am too old to have an husband. If I should say, I have hope; if I should have an husband also to-night, and should also bear sons; would ye tarry for them till they were grown? would ye stay for them from having husbands? nay, my daughters; for it grieveth me much for your sakes that the hand of the Lord is gone out against me."

And they lifted up their voice, and wept again: and Orpah kissed her mother-in-law; but Ruth clave unto her. And she said, "Behold, thy sister-in-law is gone back unto her people, and unto her gods: return thou after thy sister-in-law." And Ruth said, "Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee: for whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge: thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God: where thou diest, will I die, and there will I be buried: the Lord do so to me, and more also, if aught but death part thee and me."

When she saw that she was steadfastly minded to go with her, then she left speaking unto her. So they two went until they came to Bethlehem. And it came to pass, when they were come to Bethlehem, that all the city was moved about them, and they said, "Is this Naomi?" And she said unto them, "Call me not Naomi, call me Mara: for the Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me. I went out full, and the Lord hath brought me home again empty: why then call ye me Naomi, seeing the Lord hath testified against me, and the Almighty hath afflicted me?"

So Naomi returned, and Ruth the Moabite, her daughter-in-law, with her, which returned out of the country of Moab: and they came to Bethlehem in the beginning of barley harvest.

And Naomi had a kinsman of her husband's, a mighty man of wealth, of the family of Elimelech; and his name was Boaz. And Ruth the Moabite said unto Naomi, "Let me now go to the field, and glean ears of corn after him in whose sight I shall find grace." And she said unto her, "Go, my daughter." And she went, and came, and gleaned in the field after the reapers: and her hap was to light on a part of the field belonging unto Boaz, who was of the kindred of Elimelech.

And, behold, Boaz came from Bethlehem, and said unto the reapers, "The Lord be with you." And they answered him, "The Lord bless thee." Then said Boaz unto his servant that was set over the reapers, "Whose damsel is this?" And the servant that was set over the reapers answered and said, "It is the Moabitish damsel that came back with Naomi out of the country of Moab: and she said, I pray you, let me glean and gather after the reapers among the sheaves: so she came and hath continued even from the morning until now, that she tarried a little in the house."

Then said Boaz unto Ruth, "Hearest thou not, my daughter? Go not to glean in another field, neither go from hence, but abide here fast by my maidens: let thine eyes be on the field that they do reap, and go thou after them: have I not charged the young men that they shall not touch thee? and when thou art athirst, go unto the vessels, and drink of that which the young men have drawn." Then she fell on her face, and bowed herself to the ground, and said unto him, "Why have I found grace in thine eyes, that thou shouldest take knowledge of me, seeing I am a stranger?" And Boaz answered and said unto her, "It hath fully been showed me, all that thou hast done unto thy mother-in-law since the death of thine husband: and how thou hast left thy father and thy mother, and the land of thy nativity, and art come unto a people which thou knewest not heretofore. The Lord recompense thy work, and a full reward be given thee of the Lord God of Israel, under whose wings thou art come to trust."

Then she said, "Let me find favor in thy sight, my lord; for that thou hast comforted me, and for that thou hast spoken friendly unto thine handmaid, though I be not like unto one of thine handmaidens." And Boaz said unto her, "At mealtime come thou hither, and eat of the bread, and dip thy morsel in the vinegar." And she sat beside the reapers: and he reached her parched corn, and she did eat, and was sufficed, and left. And when she was risen up to glean, Boaz commanded his young men, saying, "Let her glean even among the sheaves, and reproach her not: and let fall also some of the handfuls of purpose for her, and leave them, that she may glean them, and rebuke her not."

So she gleaned in the field until even, and beat out that she had gleaned: and it was about an ephah<sup>1</sup> of barley. And she took it up, and went into the city: and her mother-in-law saw what she had gleaned: and she brought forth, and gave to her that she had reserved after she was sufficed. And her mother-in-law said unto her, "Where hast thou gleaned to-day? and where wroughtest thou? blessed be he that did take knowledge of thee."

And she showed her mother-in-law with whom she had wrought, and said, "The man's name with whom I wrought to-day is Boaz." And Naomi said unto her daughter-in-law, "Blessed be he of the Lord, who hath not left off his kindness to the living and to the dead." And Naomi said unto her, "The man is near of kin unto us, one of our next kinsmen." And Ruth the Moabitess said, "He said unto me also, Thou shalt keep fast by my young men, until they have ended all my harvest." And Naomi said unto Ruth her daughter-in-law, "It is good, my daughter, that thou go out with his maidens, that they meet thee not in any other field."

So she kept fast by the maidens of Boaz to glean unto the end of barley harvest and of wheat harvest; and dwelt with her mother-in-law. Then Naomi her mother-in-law said unto her, "My daughter, shall I not seek rest for thee, that it may be well with thee? And now is not Boaz of our kindred, with whose maidens thou wast? Behold, he winnoweth barley to-night in the threshing-floor. Wash thyself therefore, and anoint thee, and put thy raiment upon thee, and get thee down to the floor: but make not thyself known unto the man, until he shall have done eating and drinking. And it shall be, when he lieth down, that thou shalt mark the place where he shall lie, and thou shalt go in, and uncover his feet, and lay thee down; and he will tell thee what thou shalt do."

And she said unto her, "All that thou sayest unto me I will do." And she went down unto the floor, and did according to all that her mother-in-law bade her. And when Boaz had eaten and drunk, and his heart was merry, he went to lie down at the end of the heap of corn: and she came softly, and uncovered his feet, and laid her down.

And it came to pass at midnight, that the man was afraid, and turned himself: and, behold, a woman lay at his feet. And he said, "Who art thou?" And she answered, "I am Ruth thine handmaid: spread therefore thy skirt over thine handmaid; for thou art a near kinsman." And he said, "Blessed be thou of the Lord, my daughter: for thou hast showed more kindness in the latter end than at the beginning, inasmuch as thou followedst not young men, whether poor or rich. And now, my daughter, fear not; I will do to thee all that thou requirest: for all the city of my people doth know that thou art a virtuous woman. And now it is true that I am thy near kinsman: howbeit there is a kinsman nearer than I. Tarry this night, and it shall be in the morning, that if he will perform unto thee the part of a kinsman, well; let him do the kinsman's part: but if he will not do the part of a kinsman to thee, then will I do the part of a kinsman to thee, as the Lord liveth: lie down until the morning."

<sup>1</sup>Hebrew dry measure; perhaps about three-fourths of a bushel.

And she lay at his feet until the morning: and she rose up before one could know another. And he said, "Let it not be known that a woman came into the floor." Also he said, "Bring the veil that thou hast upon thee, and hold it." And when she held it, he measured six measures<sup>1</sup> of barley, and laid it on her: and she went into the city.

And when she came to her mother-in-law, she said, "Who art thou, my daughter?" And she told her all that the man had done to her. And she said, "These six measures of barley gave he me; for he said to me, Go not empty unto thy mother-in-law." Then said she, "Sit still, my daughter, until thou know how the matter will fall: for the man will not be in rest, until he have finished the thing this day."

Then went Boaz up to the gate, and sat him down there: and, behold, the kinsman of whom Boaz spake came by; unto whom he said, "Ho, such a one! turn aside, sit down here." And he turned aside, and sat down. And he took ten men of the elders of the city, and said, "Sit ye down here." And they sat down. And he said unto the kinsman, "Naomi, that is come again out of the country of Moab, selleth a parcel of land, which was our brother Elimelech's: and I thought to advertise thee, saying, Buy it before the inhabitants, and before the elders of my people. If thou wilt redeem it, redeem it: but if thou wilt not redeem it, then tell me, that I may know: for there is none to redeem it beside thee: and I am after thee." And he said, "I will redeem it."

Then said Boaz, "What day thou buyest the field of the hand of Naomi, thou must buy it also of Ruth the Moabitess, the wife of the dead, to raise up the name of the dead upon his inheritance." And the kinsman said, "I cannot redeem it for myself, lest I mar mine own inheritance: redeem thou my right to thyself; for I cannot redeem it."

Now this was the manner in former time in Israel concerning redeeming and concerning changing, for to confirm all things; a man plucked off his shoe, and gave it to his neighbor: and this was a testimony in Israel.

Therefore the kinsman said unto Boaz, "Buy it for thee." So he drew off his shoe. And Boaz said unto the elders, and unto all the people, "Ye are witnesses this day, that I have bought all that was Elimelech's and all that was Chilion's and Mahlon's, of the hand of Naomi. Moreover Ruth the Moabitess, the wife of Mahlon, have I purchased to be my wife, to raise up the name of the dead upon his inheritance, that the name of the dead be not cut off from among his brethren, and from the gate of his place: ye are witnesses this day." And all the people that were in the gate, and the elders, said, "We are witnesses. The Lord make the woman that is come into thine house like Rachel and like Leah, which two did build the house of Israel: and do thou worthily in Ephratah, and be famous in Bethlehem: and let thy house be like the house of Pharez, whom Tamar bare unto Judah, of the seed which the Lord shall give thee of this young woman."

So Boaz took Ruth, and she was his wife: and when he went in unto her, the Lord gave her conception, and she bare a son.

And the women said unto Naomi, "Blessed be the Lord, which hath not left thee this day without a kinsman, that his name may be famous in Israel. And he shall be unto thee a restorer of thy life, and a nourisher of thine old age: for thy daughter-in-law, which loveth thee, which is better to thee than seven sons, hath born him."

And Naomi took the child, and laid it in her bosom, and became nurse unto it. And the women her neighbors gave it a name, saying, "There is a son born to Naomi;" and they called his name Obed: he is the father of Jesse, the father of David.

Now these are the generations of Pharez: Pharez begat Hezron, and Hezron begat Ram, and Ram begat Amminadab, and Amminadab begat Nahshon, and Nahshon begat Salmon, and Salmon begat Boaz, and Boaz begat Obed, and Obed begat Jesse, and Jesse begat David.

<sup>1</sup>This word is used in the Authorized Version to translate several Hebrew terms (bath, seah, and cor). It is impossible to tell exactly how much is here indicated.

THE SONG OF SOLOMON<sup>1</sup>

THE SONG OF SONGS, WHICH IS SOLOMON'S

I

Let him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth: for thy love is better than wine.

Because of the savor of thy good ointments thy name is as ointment poured forth, therefore do the virgins love thee.

Draw me, we will run after thee: the king hath brought me into his chambers.

We will be glad and rejoice in thee, we will remember thy love more than wine: the upright love thee.

I am black, but comely, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, as the tents of Kedar, as the curtains of Solomon.

Look not upon me, because I am black, because the sun hath looked upon me: my mother's children were angry with me; they made me the keeper of the vineyards; but mine own vineyard have I not kept.

Tell me, O thou whom my soul loveth, where thou feedest, where thou makest thy flock to rest at noon: for why should I be as one that turneth aside by the flocks of thy companions?

If thou know not, O thou fairest among women, go thy way forth by the footsteps of the flock, and feed thy kids beside the shepherds' tents.

II

I have compared thee, O my love, to a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariots.

Thy cheeks are comely with rows of jewels, thy neck with chains of gold.

We will make thee borders of gold with studs of silver.

While the king sitteth at his table, my spikenard sendeth forth the smell thereof.

A bundle of myrrh is my wellbeloved unto me; he shall lie all night betwixt my breasts.

<sup>1</sup>This is a collection of nuptial songs such as were probably sung or recited in the ancient Hebrew wedding ceremony. There is no reason for supposing that they were necessarily written by a single author. It was long supposed that they had an allegorical significance. The language of the songs indicates that they were probably written about 225-200 B. C.

My beloved is unto me as a cluster of camphire in the vineyards of En-gedi.

Behold, thou art fair, my love; behold, thou art fair; thou hast doves' eyes.

Behold, thou art fair, my beloved, yea, pleasant: also our bed is green.

The beams of our house are cedar, and our rafters of fir.

I am the rose of Sharon, and the lily of the valleys.

As the lily among thorns, so is my love among the daughters.

As the apple tree among the trees of the wood, so is my beloved among the sons.

III

I sat down under his shadow with great delight, and his fruit was sweet to my taste.

He brought me to the banquetting house, and his banner over me was love.

Stay me with flagons, comfort me with apples: for I am sick of love.

His left hand is under my head, and his right hand doth embrace me.

I charge you, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, by the roes, and by the hinds of the field, that ye stir not up, nor awake my love, till he please.

The voice of my beloved! behold, he cometh leaping upon the mountains, skipping upon the hills.

My beloved is like a roe or a young hart: behold, he standeth behind our wall, he looketh forth at the windows, showing himself through the lattice.

My beloved spake, and said unto me, "Rise up, my love, my fair one, and come away.

"For, lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle<sup>2</sup> is heard in our land.

"The fig tree putteth forth her green figs, and the vines with the tender grape give a good smell. Arise, my love, my fair one, and come away."

<sup>2</sup>The turtle-dove.

O my dove, that art in the clefts of the rock, in the secret places of the stairs, let me see thy countenance, let me hear thy voice; for sweet is thy voice, and thy countenance is comely.

Take us the foxes, the little foxes, that spoil the vines: for our vines have tender grapes.

My beloved is mine, and I am his: he feedeth among the lilies.

Until the day break, and the shadows flee away, turn, my beloved, and be thou like a roe or a young hart upon the mountains of Bethel.

By night on my bed I sought him whom my soul loveth: I sought him, but I found him not.

I will rise now, and go about the city in the streets, and in the broad ways I will seek him whom my soul loveth: I sought him, but I found him not.

The watchmen that go about the city found me: to whom I said, "Saw ye him whom my soul loveth?"

It was but a little that I passed from them, but I found him whom my soul loveth.

I held him, and would not let him go, until I had brought him into my mother's house, and into the chamber of her that conceived me.

I charge you, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, by the roes, and by the hinds of the field, that ye stir not up, nor awake my love, till he please.

IV

Who is this that cometh out of the wilderness like pillars of smoke, perfumed with myrrh and frankincense, with all powders of the merchant?

Behold his bed, which is Solomon's; three-score valiant men are about it, of the valiant of Israel: they all hold swords, being expert in war; every man hath his sword upon his thigh because of fear in the night.

King Solomon made himself a chariot of the wood of Lebanon: he made the pillars thereof of silver, the bottom thereof of gold, the covering of it of purple, the midst thereof being paved with love, for the daughters of Jerusalem.

Go forth, O ye daughters of Zion, and behold king Solomon with the crown wherewith his mother crowned him in the day of his espousals, and in the day of the gladness of his heart.

V

Behold, thou art fair, my love; behold, thou art fair; thou hast doves' eyes within thy locks.

Thy hair is as a flock of goats, that appear from mount Gilead.

Thy teeth are like a flock of sheep that are even shorn, which came up from the washing; whereof every one bear twins, and none is barren among them.

Thy lips are like a thread of scarlet, and thy speech is comely.

Thy temples are like a piece of pomegranate within thy locks.

Thy neck is like the tower of David builded for an armory, whereon there hang a thousand bucklers, all shields of mighty men.

Thy two breasts are like two young roes that are twins, which feed among the lilies.

Until the day break, and the shadows flee away, I will get me to the mountain of myrrh, and to the hill of frankincense.

Thou art all fair, my love; there is no spot in thee.

Come with me from Lebanon, my spouse, with me from Lebanon: look from the top of Amana, from the top of Shenir and Hermon, from the lions' dens, from the mountains of the leopards.

Thou hast ravished my heart, my sister, my spouse; thou hast ravished my heart with one of thine eyes, with one chain of thy neck.

How fair is thy love, my sister, my spouse! how much better is thy love than wine! and the smell of thine ointments than all spices!

Thy lips, O my spouse, drop as the honeycomb: honey and milk are under thy tongue; and the smell of thy garments is like the smell of Lebanon.

A garden inclosed is my sister, my spouse; a spring shut up, a fountain sealed.

Thy plants are an orchard of pomegranates, with pleasant fruits; camphire, with spikenard, spikenard and saffron; calamus and cinnamon, with all trees of frankincense; myrrh and aloes, with all the chief spices:

A fountain of gardens, a well of living waters, and streams from Lebanon.

VI

Awake, O north wind; and come, thou south; blow upon my garden, that the spices thereof may flow out! let my beloved come into his garden, and eat his pleasant fruits.

I am come into my garden, my sister, my spouse: I have gathered my myrrh with my spice; I have eaten my honeycomb with my honey; I have drunk my wine with my milk.

Eat, O friends; drink, yea, drink abundantly, O beloved.

VII

I sleep, but my heart waketh: it is the voice of my beloved that knocketh, saying, "Open to me, my sister, my love, my dove, my undefiled: for my head is filled with dew, and my locks with the drops of the night."

I have put off my coat; how shall I put it on? I have washed my feet; how shall I defile them?

My beloved put in his hand by the hole of the door, and my bowels were moved for him.

I rose up to open to my beloved; and my hands dropped with myrrh, and my fingers with sweet smelling myrrh, upon the handles of the lock.

I opened to my beloved; but my beloved had withdrawn himself, and was gone.

My soul failed when he spake: I sought him, but I could not find him; I called him, but he gave me no answer.

The watchmen that went about the city found me, they smote me, they wounded me; the keepers of the walls took away my veil from me.

I charge you, O daughters of Jerusalem, if ye find my beloved, that ye tell him, that I am sick of love.

What is thy beloved more than another beloved, O thou fairest among women? what is thy beloved more than another beloved, that thou dost so charge us?

My beloved is white and ruddy, the chiefest among ten thousand.

His head is as the most fine gold; his locks are bushy, and black as a raven.

His eyes are as the eyes of doves by the rivers of waters, washed with milk, and fitly set.

His cheeks are as a bed of spices, as sweet flowers: his lips like lilies, dropping sweet smelling myrrh.

His hands are as gold rings set with the beryl: his belly is as bright ivory overlaid with sapphires.

His legs are as pillars of marble, set upon sockets of fine gold: his countenance is as Lebanon, excellent as the cedars.

His mouth is most sweet: yea, he is altogether lovely.

This is my beloved, and this is my friend, O daughters of Jerusalem.

Whither is thy beloved gone, O thou fairest among women? whither is thy beloved turned aside, that we may seek him with thee?

My beloved is gone down into his garden, to the beds of spices, to feed in the gardens, and to gather lilies.

I am my beloved's, and my beloved is mine: he feedeth among the lilies.

VIII

Thou art beautiful, O my love, as Tirzah, comely as Jerusalem, terrible as an army with banners: turn away thine eyes from me, for they have overcome me.

Thy hair is as a flock of goats that appear from Gilead.

Thy teeth are as a flock of sheep which go up from the washing, whereof every one beareth twins, and there is not one barren among them.

As a piece of a pomegranate are thy temples within thy locks.

There are threescore queens, and fourscore concubines, and virgins without number: my dove, my undefiled, is but one.

She is the only one of her mother, she is the choice one of her that bare her; the daughters saw her, and blessed her; yea, the queens and the concubines, and they praised her.

Who is she that looketh forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners?

I went down into the garden of nuts to see the fruits of the valley, and to see whether the vine flourished, and the pomegranates budded.

Or ever I was aware, my soul made me like the chariots of Amminadib.

Return, return, O Shulamite; return, return, that we may look upon thee.

What will ye see in the Shulamite? As it were the company of two armies.

How beautiful are thy feet with shoes, O prince's daughter! the joints of thy thighs are like jewels, the work of the hands of a cunning workman.

Thy navel is like a round goblet, which wanteth not liquor: thy belly is like an heap of wheat set about with lilies.

Thy two breasts are like two young roes that are twins: thy neck is as a tower of ivory.

Thine eyes like the fishpools in Heshbon, by the gate of Bath-rabbim: thy nose is as the tower of Lebanon which looketh toward Damascus.

Thine head upon thee is like Carmel, and the hair of thine head like purple; the king is held in the galleries.

How fair and how pleasant art thou, O love, for delights!

This thy statue is like to a palm tree, and thy breasts to clusters of grapes.

I said, "I will go up to the palm tree, I will take hold of the boughs thereof:" now also thy breasts shall be as clusters of the vine, and the smell of thy nose like apples;

And the roof of thy mouth like the best wine for my beloved, that goeth down sweetly, causing the lips of those that are asleep to speak.

IX

I am my beloved's, and his desire is toward me.

Come, my beloved, let us go forth into the field; let us lodge in the villages.

Let us get up early to the vineyards; let us see if the vine flourish, whether the tender grape appear, and the pomegranates bud forth: there will I give thee my loves.

The mandrakes give a smell, and at our gates are all manner of pleasant fruits, new and old, which I have laid up for thee, O my beloved.

Oh that thou wert as my brother, that sucked the breasts of my mother! when I should find thee without, I would kiss thee; yea, I should not be despised.

I would lead thee, and bring thee into my mother's house, who would instruct me: I would cause thee to drink of spiced wine of the juice of my pomegranate.

His left hand should be under my head, and his right hand should embrace me.

I charge you, O daughters of Jerusalem, that ye stir not up, nor awake my love, until he please.

X

Who is this that cometh up from the wilderness, leaning upon her beloved?

I raised thee up under the apple tree: there thy mother brought thee forth: there she brought thee forth that bare thee.

Set me as a seal upon thine heart, as a seal upon thine arm: for love is strong as death; jealousy is cruel as the grave: the coals thereof are coals of fire, which hath a most vehement flame.

Many waters cannot quench love, neither can the floods drown it: if a man would give all the substance of his house for love, it would utterly be contemned.

We have a little sister, and she hath no breasts: what shall we do for our sister in the day when she shall be spoken for? If she be a wall, we will build upon her a palace of silver: and if she be a door, we will inclose her with boards of cedar.

I am a wall, and my breasts like towers: then was I in his eyes as one that found favor.

Solomon had a vineyard at Baal-hamon; he let out the vineyard unto keepers; every one for the fruit thereof was to bring a thousand pieces of silver.

My vineyard, which is mine, is before me: thou, O Solomon, must have a thousand, and those that keep the fruit thereof two hundred.

Thou that dwellest in the gardens, the companions hearken to thy voice: cause me to hear it.

Make haste, my beloved, and be thou like to a roe or to a young hart upon the mountains of spices.

FRANCIS BACON (1561-1626)

Francis Bacon was the son of Sir Nicholas Bacon, lord keeper of the great seal under Queen Elizabeth. His mother was the sister-in-law of Lord Burghley, long Elizabeth's trusted adviser, so that it may fairly be said that Bacon was born a member of the governing class of England; and as one destined for public service he was brought up. In 1573 he went to Trinity College, Cambridge, staying there until the end of 1575. In 1576 he entered Gray's Inn to study the law, leaving, however, in 1577 for two years' residence in France in the household of the English ambassador. The death of his father left him to shift largely for himself, and he turned immediately to the law. He was admitted an utter barrister in 1582. In 1584 he entered Parliament and thus actively began his long political career. He persistently sought advancement through the friendship of the great—through Lord Burghley, then through the Earl of Essex, and then through Sir Robert Cecil, Burghley's son—and he sought to deserve friendship by his statesmanlike advice. His abilities were striking and his advice was good, yet the opening he wanted to a great career was long denied him. He was knighted in 1603, at the accession of James; in 1607 he was made solicitor-general, in 1613 attorney-general, in 1616 privy councillor, in 1617 lord keeper of the great seal, and in 1618 lord chancellor. In the same year he was created Baron Verulam, and in 1621 Viscount St. Alban. Later in 1621, however, came his sudden and complete downfall. He was impeached on the charge of bribery, confessed his guilt, and was sentenced by the House of Lords to a fine of £40,000 and to imprisonment in the Tower during the king's pleasure, while he was disabled from sitting in Parliament and from coming within the verge of the Court, i. e., within twelve miles of the Court. The fine was immediately converted into a trust fund for Bacon's use and his imprisonment lasted only a few days; within a year, too, he was allowed again to present himself at Court, but his exclusion from Parliament was not relaxed and Bacon was politically a broken man. The remaining years of his life were devoted to study and writing.

Pope called Bacon "the wisest, brightest, meanest of mankind," and the line has stuck. Yet, while no one would for a moment contend that Bacon had either the elevation of character or the detachment of a saint, it is no less certain that he has suffered from grave misunderstanding. While not condoning his moral obtuseness, one should in justice remember that he simply suffered from the defects, as he enjoyed the advantages, of the clearly marked type of mind to which we owe the achievements of modern science. Morality is concerned with imperfectly realized ideals, it seeks to bend men to the commands of an invisible kingdom. Bacon, on the other hand, saw things and men as they are, and viewed his world as a field for the realization of human purposes. In politics he was simply consistent in following out the point of view which, as enunciated in the Novum Organum, has caused him to be heralded—not as the founder, as some mistakenly have said, but—as the great prophet of modern science. In politics Bacon undoubtedly wished to find a place for himself, and in this took, not a mean, but a common-sense view of his situation. Not less clearly, however, he wanted to use his power when he obtained it for public ends, for furthering the greatness of his country and bettering the condition of its members. And for the achievement of his personal and public purposes he followed what, as things were in his day, was the only practicable method—the method of rising through favor of the great. If he was blind to the loss of dignity involved in seeking such favor, this was because his mind was centered on his end and because he judged means simply in relation to their probable efficacy. Again, in accepting gifts as a judge, Bacon merely followed the common custom of his day, and he was more scrupulous than other judges in that he appears not to have allowed the gifts to bias his judgments. If we may smile at the naïveté which blinded him to the enmities this was bound to arouse, still, we cannot avoid agreement with his own statement. "I was," he said, "the justest judge that was in England these fifty years, but it was the justest sentence in Parliament that was these two hundred years."

When he was a young man Bacon wrote, "I have as vast contemplative ends as I have moderate civil ends; for I have taken all knowledge to be my province." This was the second of the two related purposes of his life. A child of the Renaissance both in the vastness of his outlook and in his confidence in human powers, he saw the importance of knowledge in life as he understood it. And as he sought in public life an opportunity for the application of knowledge to the betterment of the condition of his country and its inhabitants, so he sought also to map out the field of knowledge and to elaborate a right method for its discovery. The former he attempted to achieve in The Advancement of Learning (1605) and, more fully, in the amplified Latin version of that book published in 1623. His imperfect formulation of scientific method is contained in his Novum Organum (1620). His fragmentary New Atlantis is a literary picture of the advantages to man which he saw in the pursuit of science. His History of Henry VII, one of the fruits of his retirement after 1621, is a masterly historical work which deservedly also occupies a high place in literature. But to most readers Bacon will always be known chiefly through his Essays, those "dispersed meditations," "set down rather significantly than curiously," on which, in all probability, he never supposed that his fame would largely depend. Ten essays were published in 1597; in the second edition of 1612 they had grown to thirty-eight, and in the third edition of 1625 there were fifty-eight, while many of the earlier essays were amplified. They probably take their title from Montaigne's Essais (1580), though the two books have little in common save that both consist of dispersed notes on life set down by a man of the world. Bacon's Essays introduced a new form into English literature, and they represent the man as he was, shrewd, incisive, somewhat hard, and yet on occasion finely imaginative.

ESSAYS OR COUNSELS CIVIL AND MORAL

I.—OF TRUTH

"WHAT is truth?" said jesting Pilate,<sup>1</sup> and would not stay for an answer. Certainly there be that delight in giddiness, and count it a bondage to fix a belief; affecting free-will in thinking, as well as in acting. And though the sects of philosophers of that kind be gone, yet there remain certain discoursing wits which are of the same veins, though there be not so much blood in them as was in those of the ancients. But it is not only the difficulty and labor which men take in finding out of truth, nor again that when it is found it imposeth upon men's thoughts, that doth bring lies in favor; but a natural though corrupt love of the lie itself. One of the later school of the Grecians examineth the matter, and is at a stand to think what should be in it, that men should love lies; where neither they make for pleasure, as with poets; nor for advantage, as with the merchant; but for the lie's sake. But I cannot tell: this same truth is a naked and open day-light, that doth not show the masques and mummeries and triumphs of the world, half so stately and daintily as candle-lights. Truth may perhaps come to the price of a pearl, that showeth best by day; but it will not rise to the price of a diamond or carbuncle, that showeth best in varied lights. A mixture of a lie doth ever add pleasure. Doth any man doubt, that if there were taken out of men's minds vain opinions, flattering hopes, false valuations, imaginations as one would, and the like, but it would leave the minds of a number of men poor shrunken things, full of melancholy and indisposition, and unpleasing to themselves? One of the fathers, in great severity, called poesy vinum dæmonum,<sup>2</sup> because it fillet the imagination, and yet it is but with the shadow of a lie. But it is not the lie that passeth through the mind, but the lie that sinketh in and setteth in it, that doth the hurt, such as we spake of before. But howsoever these things are thus in men's depraved judgments and affections, yet truth, which only doth judge itself, teacheth that the inquiry of truth, which is the love-making or wooing of it, the knowledge of truth, which is the presence of it, and the belief of truth, which is the enjoying of it, is the sovereign good of human nature. The first creature of God, in the works of the days, was the light of the sense; the last was the light of reason; and his sabbath work, ever since, is the illumination of his Spirit. First he breathed light upon the face of the matter or chaos; then he breathed light into the face of man; and still he breatheth and inspireth light into the face of his chosen. The poet<sup>3</sup> that beautified the sect<sup>4</sup> that was otherwise inferior to the rest, saith yet excellently well: "It is a pleasure to stand upon the shore, and to see ships tossed upon the sea: a pleasure to stand in the window of a castle, and to see a battle and the adventures thereof below: but no pleasure is comparable to the standing upon the vantage ground of truth"(a hill not to be commanded, and where the air is always clear and serene), "and to see the errors, and wanderings, and mists, and tempests, in

<sup>2</sup>Wine of devils. The phrase is used by Augustine (Confessions, I, xvi, 26).

<sup>3</sup>Lucretius. Bacon paraphrases a passage at the beginning of Bk. II of Lucretius's poem On the Nature of Things.

<sup>4</sup>The Epicureans.

<sup>1</sup>Cf. St. John, xviii, 38.

the vale below": so always that this prospect be with pity, and not with swelling or pride. Certainly, it is heaven upon earth, to have a man's mind move in charity, rest in providence, and turn upon the poles of truth.

To pass from theological and philosophical truth, to the truth of civil business: it will be acknowledged, even by those that practise it not, that clear and round<sup>1</sup> dealing is the honor of man's nature; and that mixture of falsehood is like alloy in coin of gold and silver; which may make the metal work the better, but it embaseth it. For these winding and crooked courses are the goings of the serpent; which goeth basely upon the belly, and not upon the feet. There is no vice that doth so cover a man with shame as to be found false and perfidious. And therefore Montaigne saith prettily, when he inquired the reason, why the word of the lie should be such a disgrace and such an odious charge? saith he: "If it be well weighed, to say that a man lieth, is as much to say as that he is brave towards God and a coward towards men."<sup>2</sup> For a lie faces God, and shrinks from man. Surely the wickedness of falsehood and breach of faith cannot possibly be so highly expressed, as in that it shall be the last peal to call the judgments of God upon the generations of men; it being foretold, that when Christ cometh, "he shall not find faith upon the earth."<sup>3</sup>

5.—OF ADVERSITY

IT WAS an high speech of Seneca (after the manner of the Stoics), "That the good things which belong to prosperity are to be wished; but the good things that belong to adversity are to be admired." Bona rerum secundarum optabilia, adversarum mirabilia. Certainly, if miracles be the command over nature, they appear most in adversity. It is yet a higher speech of his than the other (much too high for a heathen), "It is true greatness to have in one the frailty of a man, and the security of a god." Vere magnum, habere fragilitatem hominis, securitatem dei.<sup>4</sup> This would have done better in poesy,

<sup>1</sup>Straightforward.

<sup>2</sup>Essays, II, 18.

<sup>3</sup>St. Luke, xviii, 8.

<sup>4</sup>Both passages are inexactly quoted from Seneca's Epistles.

where transcendences are more allowed. And the poets indeed have been busy with it; for it is in effect the thing which is figured in that strange fiction of the ancient poets, which seemeth not to be without mystery; nay, and to have some approach to the state of a Christian: that "Hercules, when he went to unbind Prometheus (by whom human nature is represented), sailed the length of the great ocean in an earthen pot or pitcher": lively describing Christian resolution, that saileth in the frail bark of the flesh through the waves of the world. But to speak in a mean.<sup>5</sup> The virtue of prosperity is temperance; the virtue of adversity is fortitude; which in morals is the more heroical virtue. Prosperity is the blessing of the Old Testament; adversity is the blessing of the New; which carrieth the greater benediction, and the clearer revelation of God's favor. Yet even in the Old Testament, if you listen to David's harp, you shall hear as many hearse-like airs as carols; and the pencil of the Holy Ghost hath labored more in describing the afflictions of Job than the felicities of Solomon. Prosperity is not without many fears and distastes; and adversity is not without comforts and hopes. We see in needleworks and embroideries, it is more pleasing to have a lively work upon a sad and solemn ground, than to have a dark and melancholy work upon a lightsome ground: judge therefore of the pleasure of the heart by the pleasure of the eye. Certainly virtue is like precious odors, most fragrant when they are incensed or crushed: for prosperity doth best discover vice; but adversity doth best discover virtue.

6.—OF SIMULATION AND DISSIMULATION

DISSIMULATION is but a faint kind of policy or wisdom; for it asketh a strong wit and a strong heart to know when to tell truth, and to do it. Therefore it is the weaker sort of politics that are the great dissemblers.

Tacitus saith: "Livia sorted well with the arts of her husband and dissimulation of her son";<sup>6</sup> attributing arts or policy to Augustus, and dissimulation to Tiberius. And again, when Mucianus encourageth Vespasian to take arms against Vitellius, he saith: "We rise not against the piercing judgment of Augustus, nor the extreme caution or closeness of Tiberius."<sup>1</sup> These properties, of arts or policy, and dissimulation or closeness, are indeed habits and faculties several and to be distinguished. For if a man have that penetration of judgment as he can discern what things are to be laid open, and what to be secreted, and what to be showed at half lights, and to whom, and when (which indeed are arts of state and arts of life, as Tacitus well calleth them), to him a habit of dissimulation is a hindrance and a poorness. But if a man cannot obtain to that judgment, then it is left to him, generally, to be close, and a dissembler. For where a man cannot choose or vary in particulars, there it is good to take the safest and wariest way in general; like the going softly by one that cannot well see. Certainly the ablest men that ever were have had all an openness and frankness of dealing, and a name of certainty and veracity; but then they were like horses well managed; for they could tell passing well when to stop or turn; and at such times when they thought the case indeed required dissimulation, if then they used it, it came to pass that the former opinion spread abroad of their good faith and clearness of dealing made them almost invisible.

<sup>5</sup>To speak temperately.

<sup>6</sup>Annals, V, 1.

There be three degrees of this hiding and veiling of a man's self. The first, closeness, reservation, and secrecy; when a man leaveth himself without observation, or without hold to be taken, what he is. The second, dissimulation, in the negative; when a man lets fall signs and arguments, that he is not that he is. And the third, simulation, in the affirmative; when a man industriously and expressly feigns and pretends to be that he is not.

For the first of these, secrecy: it is indeed the virtue of a confessor; and assuredly the secret man heareth many confessions; for who will open himself to a blab or a babler? But if a man be thought secret, it inviteth discovery; as the more close air sucketh in the more open: and as in confession the revealing is not for worldly use, but for the easing of a man's heart, so secret men come to the knowledge of many things in that kind; while men rather discharge their minds than impart their minds. In few words, mysteries are due to secrecy. Besides (to say truth) nakedness is uncomely, as well in mind as body; and it addeth no small reverence to men's manners and actions, if they be not altogether open. As for talkers and futile persons, they are commonly vain and credulous withal. For he that talketh what he knoweth, will also talk what he knoweth not. Therefore set it down, that an habit of secrecy is both politic and moral. And in this part, it is good that a man's face give his tongue leave to speak. For the discovery of a man's self by the tracts<sup>2</sup> of his countenance is a great weakness and betraying; by how much it is many times more marked and believed than a man's words.

For the second, which is dissimulation: it followeth many times upon secrecy by a necessity; so that he that will be secret must be a dissembler in some degree. For men are too cunning to suffer a man to keep an indifferent<sup>3</sup> carriage between both, and to be secret, without swaying the balance on either side. They will so beset a man with questions, and draw him on, and pick it out of him, that, without an absurd silence, he must show an inclination one way; or if he do not, they will gather as much by his silence as by his speech. As for equivocations, or oraculous speeches, they cannot hold out long. So that no man can be secret, except he give himself a little scope of dissimulation; which is, as it were, but the skirts or train of secrecy.

But for the third degree, which is simulation and false profession: that I hold more culpable, and less politic; except it be in great and rare matters. And therefore a general custom of simulation (which is this last degree) is a vice, rising either of a natural falseness or fearfulness, or of a mind that hath some main faults, which because a man must needs disguise, it maketh him practise simulation in other things, lest his hand should be out of use.

The great advantages of simulation and dissimulation are three. First, to lay asleep opposition, and to surprise. For where a man's intentions are published, it is an alarm to call up all that are against them. The second is, to reserve to a man's self a fair retreat. For if a man engage himself by a manifest declaration, he must go through, or take a fall. The third is, the better to discover the mind of another. For to him that opens himself men will hardly show themselves adverse; but will (fair)<sup>1</sup> let him go on, and turn their freedom of speech to freedom of thought. And therefore it is a good shrewd proverb of the Spaniard, "Tell a lie and find a truth"; as if there were no way of discovery but by simulation. There be also three disadvantages, to set it even. The first, that simulation and dissimulation commonly carry with them a show of fearfulness, which in any business doth spoil the feathers of round<sup>2</sup> flying up to the mark. The second, that it puzzleth and perplexeth the conceits<sup>3</sup> of many that perhaps would otherwise co-operate with him, and makes a man walk almost alone to his own ends. The third and greatest is, that it depriveth a man of one of the most principal instruments for action, which is trust and belief. The best composition and temperature<sup>4</sup> is to have openness in fame and opinion; secrecy in habit; dissimulation in seasonable use; and a power to feign, if there be no remedy.

<sup>2</sup>Features.

<sup>3</sup>Impartial.

<sup>1</sup>Hist., II, 76.

7.—OF PARENTS AND CHILDREN

THE joys of parents are secret, and so are their griefs and fears: they cannot utter the one, nor they will not utter<sup>5</sup> the other. Children sweeten labors, but they make misfortunes more bitter: they increase the cares of life, but they mitigate the remembrance of death. The perpetuity by generation is common to beasts; but memory, merit, and noble works are proper to men: and surely a man shall see the noblest works and foundations have proceeded from childless men, which have sought to express the images of their minds, where those of their bodies have failed: so the care of posterity is most in them that have no posterity. They that are the first raisers of their houses are most indulgent towards their children; beholding them as the continuance not only of their kind but of their work; and so both children and creatures.

The difference in affection of parents towards their several children is many times unequal, and sometimes unworthy, especially in the mother; as Solomon saith: "A wise son rejoiceth the father, but an ungracious son shames the mother."<sup>6</sup> A man shall see, where there is a house full of children, one or two of the eldest respected, and the youngest made wantons; but in the midst some that are as it were forgotten, who many times nevertheless prove the best. The illiberality of parents in allowance towards their children is an harmful error; makes them base; acquaints them with shifts;<sup>7</sup> makes them sort with mean company; and makes them surfeit more when they come to plenty; and therefore the proof is best, when men keep their authority towards their children, but not their purse. Men have a foolish manner (both parents and schoolmasters and servants) in creating and breeding an emulation between brothers during childhood, which many times sorteth to discord when they are men, and disturbeth families. The Italians make little difference between children and nephews or near kinsfolks; but so they be of the lump, they care not though they pass not through their own body. And, to say truth, in nature it is much a like matter; insomuch that we see a nephew sometimes resembleth an uncle or a kinsman more than his own parents, as the blood happens. Let parents choose betimes the vocations and courses they mean their children should take; for then they are most flexible; and let them not too much apply themselves to the disposition of their children, as thinking they will take best to that which they have most mind to. It is true, that if the affection or aptness of the children be extraordinary, then it is good not to cross it; but generally the precept is good, Optimum elige, suave et facile illud faciet consuetudo.<sup>8</sup> Younger brothers are

<sup>1</sup>Rather.

<sup>2</sup>I. e., swiftly.

<sup>3</sup>Thoughts.

<sup>4</sup>Temperament.

<sup>5</sup>Nor will they utter.

<sup>6</sup>Proverbs, x, 1.

<sup>7</sup>Deceptions.

<sup>8</sup>Choose the best; habit will make it pleasant and easy. Plutarch attributes this saying to Pythagoras.

commonly fortunate, but seldom or never where the elder are disinherited.

8.—OF MARRIAGE AND SINGLE LIFE

HE THAT hath wife and children hath given hostages to fortune; for they are impediments to great enterprises, either of virtue or mischief. Certainly, the best works, and of greatest merit for the public, have proceeded from the unmarried or childless men, which both in affection and means have married and endowed the public. Yet it were great reason that those that have children should have greatest care of future times; unto which they know they must transmit their dearest pledges. Some there are, who though they lead a single life, yet their thoughts do end with themselves, and account future times impertinences. Nay, there are some other that account wife and children but as bills of charges. Nay more, there are some foolish rich covetous men that take a pride in having no children, because they may be thought so much the richer. For perhaps they have heard some talk: "Such an one is a great rich man," and another except to it: "Yea, but he hath a great charge of children"; as if it were an abatement to his riches. But the most ordinary cause of a single life is liberty; especially in certain self-pleasing and humorous<sup>1</sup> minds, which are so sensible of every restraint, as they will go near to think their girdles and garters to be bonds and shackles. Unmarried men are best friends, best masters, best servants; but not always best subjects; for they are light to run away; and almost all fugitives are of that condition. A single life doth well with churchmen; for charity will hardly water the ground where it must first fill a pool. It is indifferent for judges and magistrates; for if they be facile and corrupt, you shall have a servant five times worse than a wife. For soldiers, I find the generals commonly in their hortatives put men in mind of their wives and children; and I think the despising of marriage amongst the Turks maketh the vulgar soldier more base. Certainly wife and children are a kind of discipline of humanity; and single men, though they be many times more charitable, because their means are less exhaust,<sup>2</sup> yet, on the other side, they are more cruel and hard-hearted (good to make severe inquisitors), because their tenderness is not so oft called upon. Grave natures, led by custom, and therefore constant, are commonly loving husbands; as was said of Ulysses, Vetulam suam prætulit immortalitati.<sup>3</sup> Chaste women are often proud and froward, as presuming upon the merit of their chastity. It is one of the best bonds both of chastity and obedience in the wife, if she think her husband wise; which she will never do if she find him jealous. Wives are young men's mistresses; companions for middle age; and old men's nurses. So as a man may have a quarrel<sup>4</sup> to marry when he will. But yet he was reputed one of the wise men, that made answer to the question, when a man should marry? "A young man not yet, an elder man not at all."<sup>5</sup> It is often seen that bad husbands have very good wives; whether it be that it raiseth the price of their husband's kindness when it comes; or that the wives take a pride in their patience. But this never fails, if the bad husbands were of their own choosing, against their friends' consent; for then they will be sure to make good their own folly.

10.—OF LOVE

THE stage is more beholding to love than the life of man. For as to the stage, love is ever matter of comedies, and now and then of tragedies: but in life it doth much mischief; sometimes like a siren, sometimes like a fury. You may observe, that amongst all the great and worthy persons (whereof the memory remaineth, either ancient or recent), there is not one that hath been transported to the mad degree of love; which shows that great spirits and great business do keep out this weak passion. You must except, nevertheless, Marcus Antonius,<sup>6</sup> the half partner of the empire of Rome, and Appius Claudius,<sup>7</sup> the decemvir and lawgiver: whereof the

<sup>2</sup>Exhausted.

<sup>3</sup>He preferred his aged wife to immortality (which had been offered him by Calypso).

<sup>4</sup>An excuse.

<sup>5</sup>The saying is ascribed by Plutarch to Thales, one of the "seven wise men" of Greece.

<sup>6</sup>Cleopatra's lover.

<sup>7</sup>The lover of Virginia.

<sup>1</sup>Whimsical.

former was indeed a voluptuous man, and inordinate; but the latter was an austere and wise man: and therefore it seems (though rarely) that love can find entrance not only into an open heart, but also into a heart well fortified, if watch be not well kept. It is a poor saying of Epicurus, Satis magnum alteri theatrum sumus:<sup>1</sup> as if man, made for the contemplation of heaven and all noble objects, should do nothing but kneel before a little idol, and make himself subject, though not of the mouth (as beasts are), yet of the eye, which was given them for higher purposes. It is a strange thing to note the excess of this passion, and how it braves the nature and value of things, by this, that the speaking in a perpetual hyperbole is comely in nothing but in love. Neither is it merely in the phrase; for whereas it hath been well said<sup>2</sup> that the arch-flatterer, with whom all the petty flatterers have intelligence, is a man's self, certainly the lover is more. For there was never proud man thought so absurdly well of himself as the lover doth of the person loved: and therefore it was well said: "That it is impossible to love and to be wise."<sup>3</sup> Neither doth this weakness appear to others only, and not to the party loved, but to the loved most of all, except the love be reciprocal. For it is a true rule, that love is ever rewarded either with the reciproque<sup>4</sup> or with an inward and secret contempt. By how much the more men ought to beware of this passion, which loseth not only other things, but itself. As for the other losses, the poet's relation doth well figure them: That he<sup>5</sup> that preferred Helena, quitted the gifts of Juno and Pallas. For whosoever esteemeth too much of amorous affection, quitteth both riches and wisdom. This passion hath his floods in the very times of weakness; which are great prosperity and great adversity (though this latter hath been less observed): both which times kindle love, and make it more fervent, and therefore show it to be the child of folly. They do best, who, if they cannot but admit love, yet make it keep quarter,<sup>6</sup> and sever it wholly from their serious affairs and actions of life; for if it check<sup>7</sup> once with business, it troubleth men's fortunes, and maketh men that they can no ways be true to their own ends. I know not how, but martial men are given to love: I think it is but as they are given to wine; for perils commonly ask to be paid in pleasures. There is in man's nature a secret inclination and motion towards love of others, which, if it be not spent upon some one or a few, doth naturally spread itself towards many, and maketh men become humane and charitable; as it is seen sometime in friars. Nuptial love maketh mankind; friendly love perfecteth it; but wanton love corrupteth and embaseth it.

II.—OF GREAT PLACE

MEN in great places are thrice servants: servants of the sovereign or state; servants of fame; and servants of business. So as they have no freedom, neither in their persons, nor in their actions, nor in their times. It is a strange desire, to seek power and to lose liberty; or to seek power over others and to lose power over a man's self. The rising unto place is laborious, and by pains men come to greater pains; and it is sometimes base, and by indignities men come to dignities. The standing is slippery; and the regress is either a downfall, or at least an eclipse, which is a melancholy thing. Cum non sis qui fueris, non esse cur velis vivere.<sup>8</sup> Nay, retire men cannot when they would; neither will they when it were reason; but are impatient of privateness, even in age and sickness, which require the shadow:<sup>9</sup> like old townsmen, that will be still sitting at their street door, though thereby they offer age to scorn. Certainly, great persons had need to borrow other men's opinions, to think themselves happy; for if they judge by their own feeling, they cannot find it: but if they think with themselves what other men think of them, and that other men would fain be as they are, then they are happy as it were by report, when perhaps they find the contrary <sup>1</sup>We are to one another an ample spectacle (quoted by Seneca, Epistles, I, vii, 11).

<sup>2</sup>By Plutarch.

<sup>3</sup>Publius Syrus.

<sup>4</sup>Returned affection.

<sup>5</sup>Paris.

<sup>6</sup>Keep within bounds.

<sup>7</sup>Interfere.

<sup>8</sup>When you are no longer what you were, there is no reason why you should wish to keep<sup>1</sup> on living (Cicero).

<sup>9</sup>Retirement.

within. For they are the first that find their own griefs, though they be the last that find their own faults. Certainly, men in great fortunes are strangers to themselves, and while they are in the puzzle of business they have no time to tend their health, either of body or mind. Illi mors gravis incubat, qui notus nimis omnibus, ignotus moritur sibi.<sup>1</sup> In place there is license to do good and evil; whereof the latter is a curse: for in evil the best condition is not to will, the second not to can.<sup>2</sup> But power to do good is the true and lawful end of aspiring. For good thoughts (though God accept them) yet towards men are little better than good dreams, except they be put in act; and that cannot be without power and place, as the vantage and commanding ground. Merit and good works is the end of man's motion; and conscience<sup>3</sup> of the same is the accomplishment of man's rest. For if a man can be partaker of God's theater, he shall likewise be partaker of God's rest. Et conversus Deus ut aspiceret opera quæ fecerunt manus suæ, vidit quod omnia essent bona nimis;<sup>4</sup> and then the Sabbath. In the discharge of thy place, set before thee the best examples; for imitation is a globe of precepts. And after a time set before thee thine own example; and examine thyself strictly, whether thou didst not best at first. Neglect not also the examples of those that have carried themselves ill in the same place; not to set off thyself by taxing their memory, but to direct thyself what to avoid. Reform, therefore, without bravery or scandal of former times and persons; but yet set it down to thyself as well to create good precedents as to follow them. Reduce things to the first institution, and observe wherein and how they have degenerate; but yet ask counsel of both times; of the ancient time, what is best; and of the latter time, what is fittest. Seek to make thy course regular, that men may know beforehand what they may expect; but be not too positive and peremptory; and express thyself well when thou digressest from thy rule. Preserve the right of thy place, but stir not questions of jurisdiction: and rather assume thy right in silence and de facto,<sup>5</sup> than voice it with claims and challenges. Preserve likewise the rights of inferior places; and think it more honor to direct in chief than to be busy in all. Embrace and invite helps and advices touching the execution of thy place; and do not drive away such as bring thee information as meddlers, but accept of them in good part. The vices of authority are chiefly four: delays, corruption, roughness, and facility.<sup>6</sup> For delays; give easy access; keep times appointed; go through with that which is in hand; and interlace not business but of necessity. For corruption; do not only bind thine own hands or thy servants' hands from taking, but bind the hands of suitors also from offering. For integrity used doth the one; but integrity professed, and with a manifest detestation of bribery, doth the other. And avoid not only the fault, but the suspicion. Whosoever is found variable, and changeth manifestly without manifest cause, giveth suspicion of corruption. Therefore always when thou changest thine opinion or course, profess it plainly and declare it, together with the reasons that move thee to change; and do not think to steal<sup>7</sup> it. A servant or a favorite, if he be inward,<sup>8</sup> and no other apparent cause of esteem, is commonly thought but a by-way to close corruption. For roughness, it is a needless cause of discontent: severity breedeth fear, but roughness breedeth hate. Even reproofs from authority ought to be grave, and not taunting. As for facility, it is worse than bribery. For bribes come but now and then; but if importunity or idle respects<sup>9</sup> lead a man, he shall never be without. As Solomon saith: "To respect persons is not good; for such a man will transgress for a piece of bread."<sup>10</sup> It is most true that was anciently spoken, "A place sheweth the man": and it sheweth some to the better,

<sup>1</sup>Sad is the fate of him who ends his days all too well known to others, but a stranger to himself (Seneca, Thyestes).

<sup>2</sup>To know.

<sup>3</sup>Consciousness.

<sup>4</sup>And God, turning back to look upon the works which his hands had made, saw that all were very good (Genesis, i, 31, quoted inexactly from the Vulgate).

<sup>5</sup>As a matter of fact.

<sup>6</sup>Lack of firmness.

<sup>7</sup>Hide.

<sup>8</sup>Intimate.

<sup>9</sup>Considerations.

<sup>10</sup>Proverbs, xxviii, 21.

and some to the worse. Omnium consensu capax imperii, nisi imperasset,<sup>1</sup> saith Tacitus of Galba; but of Vespasian he saith, Solus imperantium Vespasianus mutatus in melius:<sup>2</sup> though the one was meant of sufficiency,<sup>3</sup> the other of manners and affection. It is an assured sign of a worthy and generous spirit, whom honor amends. For honor is, or should be, the place of virtue; and as in nature things move violently to their place, and calmly in their place; so virtue in ambition is violent, in authority settled and calm. All rising to great place is by a winding stair; and if there be factions, it is good to side a man's self whilst he is in the rising, and to balance himself when he is placed. Use the memory of thy predecessor fairly and tenderly; for if thou dost not, it is a debt will sure be paid when thou art gone. If thou have colleagues, respect them, and rather call them when they look not for it, than exclude them when they have reason to look to be called. Be not too sensible or too remembering of thy place in conversation and private answers to suitors; but let it rather be said, "When he sits in place he is another man."

12.—OF BOLDNESS

It is a trivial grammar-school text, but yet worthy a wise man's consideration. Question was asked of Demosthenes, "What was the chief part of an orator?" he answered "Action": what next? "Action": what next again? "Action." He said it that knew it best, and had by nature himself no advantage in that he commended. A strange thing, that that part of an orator which is but superficial, and rather the virtue of a player, should be placed so high above those other noble parts of invention, elocution, and the rest; nay, almost alone, as if it were all in all. But the reason is plain. There is in human nature generally more of the fool than of the wise; and therefore those faculties by which the foolish part of men's minds is taken are most potent. Wonderful like is the case of boldness in civil business: what first? "Boldness": what second and third? "Boldness." And yet boldness is a child of ignorance and baseness, far inferior to other parts. But nevertheless it doth fascinate and bind hand and foot those that are either shallow in judgment or weak in courage, which are the greatest part; yea, and prevaleth with wise men at weak times. Therefore we see it hath done wonders in popular<sup>4</sup> states, but with senates and princes less; and more ever upon the first entrance of bold persons into action than soon after; for boldness is an ill keeper of promise. Surely, as there are mountebanks for the natural body, so are there mountebanks for the politic body; men that undertake great cures, and perhaps have been lucky in two or three experiments, but want the grounds<sup>5</sup> of science, and therefore cannot hold out. Nay, you shall see a bold fellow many times do Mahomet's miracle. Mahomet made the people believe that he would call an hill to him, and from the top of it offer up his prayers for the observers of his law. The people assembled; Mahomet called the hill to come to him, again and again; and when the hill stood still, he was never a whit abashed, but said: "If the hill will not come to Mahomet, Mahomet will go to the hill." So these men, when they have promised great matters and failed most shamefully, yet (if they have the perfection of boldness) they will but slight it over, and make a turn, and no more ado. Certainly, to men of great judgment, bold persons are a sport to behold; nay, and to the vulgar also, boldness hath somewhat of the ridiculous. For if absurdity be the subject of laughter, doubt you not but great boldness is seldom without some absurdity. Especially it is a sport to see, when a bold fellow is out of countenance; for that puts his face into a most shrunken and wooden posture; as needs it must; for in bashfulness the spirits do a little go and come; but with bold men, upon like occasion, they stand at a stay; like a stale<sup>6</sup> at chess, where it is no mate, but yet the game cannot stir. But this last were fitter for a satire than for a serious observation. This is well to be weighed, that boldness is ever blind; for it seeth not dangers

<sup>1</sup>All men would have thought him competent to rule if they had not seen him as a ruler.

<sup>2</sup>Of all the emperors Vespasian alone changed for the better.

<sup>3</sup>Ability.

<sup>4</sup>Democratic.

<sup>5</sup>Foundations.

<sup>6</sup>Stale-mate, where the king cannot move, save into check.

and inconveniences. Therefore it is ill in counsel, good in execution; so that the right use of bold persons is, that they never command in chief, but be seconds, and under the direction of others. For in counsel it is good to see dangers; and in execution not to see them, except they be very great.

14.—OF NOBILITY

WE WILL speak of nobility first as a portion of an estate;<sup>1</sup> then as a condition of particular persons. A monarchy where there is no nobility at all, is ever a pure and absolute tyranny; as that of the Turks. For nobility attempts sovereignty, and draws the eyes of the people somewhat aside from the line royal. But for democracies, they need it not; and they are commonly more quiet and less subject to sedition, than where there are stirps<sup>2</sup> of nobles. For men's eyes are upon the business, and not upon the persons; or if upon the persons, it is for the business' sake, as fittest, and not for flags and pedigree. We see the Switzers last well, notwithstanding their diversity of religion and of cantons. For utility is their bond, and not respects.<sup>3</sup> The united provinces of the Low Countries in their government excel; for where there is an equality, the consultations are more indifferent, and the payments and tributes more cheerful. A great and potent nobility addeth majesty to a monarch, but diminisheth power; and putteth life and spirit into the people, but presseth their fortune. It is well when nobles are not too great for sovereignty, nor for justice; and yet maintained in that height, as the insolency of inferiors may be broken upon them before it come on too fast upon the majesty of kings. A numerous nobility causeth poverty and inconvenience in a state; for it is a surcharge of expense; and besides, it being of necessity that many of the nobility fall in time to be weak in fortune, it maketh a kind of disproportion between honor and means.

As for nobility in particular persons; it is a reverend thing to see an ancient castle or building not in decay, or to see a fair timber-tree sound and perfect: how much more to behold an ancient noble family, which hath stood against the waves and weathers of time. For new nobility is but the act of power; but ancient nobility is the act of time. Those that are first raised to nobility are commonly more virtuous, but less innocent, than their descendants; for there is rarely any rising but by a commixture of good and evil arts. But it is reason<sup>4</sup> the memory of their virtues remain to their posterity, and their faults die with themselves. Nobility of birth commonly abateth industry; and he that is not industrious envieth him that is. Besides, noble persons cannot go much higher; and he that standeth at a stay, when others rise, can hardly avoid motions<sup>5</sup> of envy. On the other side, nobility extinguisheth the passive envy from others towards them; because they are in possession of honor. Certainly, kings that have able men of their nobility shall find ease in employing them, and a better slide in their business; for people naturally bend to them, as born in some sort to command.

16.—OF ATHEISM

I HAD rather believe all the fables in the Legend, and the Talmud, and the Alcoran,<sup>6</sup> than that this universal frame is without a mind. And therefore God never wrought miracle to convince<sup>7</sup> atheism, because his ordinary works convince it. It is true, that a little philosophy<sup>8</sup> inclineth man's mind to atheism; but depth in philosophy bringeth men's minds about to religion: for while the mind of man looketh upon second causes scattered, it may sometimes rest in them, and go no further; but when it beholdeth the chain of them, confederate and linked together, it must needs fly to Providence and Deity. Nay, even that school which is most accused of atheism doth most demonstrate religion; that is, the school of Leucippus and Democritus and Epicurus. For it is a thousand times more credible, that four mutable elements and one immutable fifth essence, duly and eternally placed, need no God, than that an army of infinite small <sup>1</sup>State.

<sup>2</sup>Families.

<sup>3</sup>Personal considerations.

<sup>4</sup>Reasonable that.

<sup>5</sup>Impulses.

<sup>6</sup>Or Koran.

<sup>7</sup>Confute.

<sup>8</sup>Natural philosophy, or science.

portions or seeds unplaced should have produced this order and beauty without a divine marshal. The Scripture saith: "The fool hath said in his heart, there is no God";<sup>1</sup> it is not said, "The fool hath thought in his heart": so as he rather saith it by rote to himself, as that he would have, than that he can thoroughly believe it, or be persuaded of it. For none deny there is a God but those for whom it maketh that there were no God. It appeareth in nothing more, that atheism is rather in the lip than in the heart of man, than by this; that atheists will ever be talking of that their opinion, as if they fainted in it within themselves, and would be glad to be strengthened by the consent of others: nay more, you shall have atheists strive to get disciples, as it fareth with other sects: and, which is most of all, you shall have of them that will suffer for atheism, and not recant; whereas, if they did truly think that there were no such thing as God, why should they trouble themselves? Epicurus is charged that he did but dissemble for his credit's sake, when he affirmed there were blessed natures, but such as enjoyed themselves without having respect to the government of the world. Wherein they say he did temporize, though in secret he thought there was no God. But certainly he is traduced; for his words are noble and divine: Non deos vulgi negare profanum, sed vulgi opiniones diis applicare profanum.<sup>2</sup> Plato could have said no more. And although he had the confidence to deny the administration, he had not the power to deny the nature. The Indians of the West have names for their particular gods, though they have no name for God: as if the heathens should have had the names Jupiter, Apollo, Mars, etc., but not the word Deus; which shows that even those barbarous people have the notion, though they have not the latitude and extent of it. So that against atheists the very savages take part with the very subtlest philosophers. The contemplative atheist is rare; a Diagoras, a Bion, a Lucian perhaps, and some others; and yet they seem to be more than they are; for that all that impugn a received religion, or superstition, are, by the adverse part, branded with the name of atheists. But the great atheists indeed are hypocrites; which are ever handling holy things, but without feeling; so as they must needs be cauterized in the end. The causes of atheism are: divisions in religion, if they be many; for any one main division addeth zeal to both sides, but many divisions introduce atheism. Another is, scandal of priests; when it is come to that which S. Bernard saith: Non est jam dicere, ut populus, sic sacerdos; quia nec sic populus, ut sacerdos.<sup>3</sup> A third is, custom of profane scoffing in holy matters, which doth by little and little deface the reverence of religion. And lastly, learned times, specially with peace and prosperity; for troubles and adversities do more bow men's minds to religion. They that deny a God destroy man's nobility; for certainly man is of kin to the beasts by his body; and if he be not of kin to God by his spirit, he is a base and ignoble creature. It destroys likewise magnanimity, and the raising of human nature; for take an example of a dog, and mark what a generosity and courage he will put on when he finds himself maintained by a man, who to him is in stead of a god, or melior natura;<sup>4</sup> which courage is manifestly such as that creature, without that confidence of a better nature than his own, could never attain. So man, when he resteth and assureth himself upon divine protection and favor, gathereth a force and faith which human nature in itself could not obtain. Therefore, as atheism is in all respects hateful, so in this, that it depriveth human nature of the means to exalt itself above human frailty. As it is in particular persons, so it is in nations: never was there such a state for magnanimity as Rome: of this state hear what Cicero saith: Quam volumus licet, patres conscripti, nos amemus, tamen nec numero Hispanos, nec robore Gallos, nec calliditate Pœnos, nec artibus Græcos, nec denique hoc ipso hujus gentis et terræ domestico nativæque sensu Italos ipsos et Latinos; sed pietate, ac religione, atque hâc unâ sapientiâ, quod Deorum immortalium numine

<sup>1</sup>Psalms, xiv, 1, and liii, 1.

<sup>2</sup>It is not impious to say that the gods of men do not exist; it is impious rather to apply to the gods the foolish notions of men (Diogenes Laertius).

<sup>3</sup>It can no longer be said, as the people are so is the priest, because the people are not now like the priest (i. e., the priest is worse).

<sup>4</sup>Better nature.

omnia regi gubernarique perspeximus, omnes gentes nationesque superavimus.<sup>1</sup>

17.—OF SUPERSTITION

IT WERE better to have no opinion of God at all, than such an opinion as is unworthy of him: for the one is unbelief, the other is contumely: and certainly superstition is the reproach of the Deity. Plutarch saith well to that purpose: "Surely (saith he) I had rather a great deal men should say there was no such man at all as Plutarch, than that they should say that there was one Plutarch that would eat his children as soon as they were born"; as the poets speak of Saturn. And as the contumely is greater towards God, so the danger is greater towards men. Atheism leaves a man to sense, to philosophy, to natural piety, to laws, to reputation; all which may be guides to an outward moral virtue, though religion were not; but superstition dismounts all these, and erecteth an absolute monarchy in the minds of men. Therefore atheism did never perturb states; for it makes men wary of themselves, as looking no further; and we see the times inclined to atheism (as the time of Augustus Cæsar) were civil<sup>2</sup> times. But superstition hath been the confusion of many states, and bringeth in a new primum mobile,<sup>3</sup> that ravisheth all the spheres of government. The master of superstition is the people; and in all superstition wise men follow fools; and arguments are fitted to practice, in a reversed order. It was gravely said by some of the prelates in the Council of Trent,<sup>4</sup> where the doctrine of the schoolmen<sup>5</sup> bare great sway, "that the schoolmen were like astronomers, which did feign eccentrics and epicycles, and such engines of orbs, to save the phenomena, though they knew there were no such things"; and in like manner, that the schoolmen had framed a number of subtle and intricate axioms and theorems, to save the practice of the church. The causes of superstition are: pleasing and sensual rites and ceremonies; excess of outward and pharisaical holiness; over-great reverence of traditions, which cannot but load the church; the stratagems of prelates for their own ambition and lucre; the favoring too much of good intentions, which openeth the gate to conceits and novelties; the taking an aim at divine matters by human, which cannot but breed mixture of imaginations; and lastly, barbarous times, especially joined with calamities and disasters. Superstition, without a veil, is a deformed thing; for, as it addeth deformity to an ape to be so like a man, so the similitude of superstition to religion makes it the more deformed. And as wholesome meat corrupteth to little worms, so good forms and orders corrupt into a number of petty observances. There is a superstition in avoiding superstition, when men think to do best if they go furthest from the superstition formerly received: therefore care would be had that (as it fareth in ill purgings) the good be not taken away with the bad; which commonly is done, when the people is the reformer.

23.—OF WISDOM FOR A MAN'S SELF

AN ANT is a wise creature for itself, but it is a shrewd<sup>6</sup> thing in an orchard or garden. And certainly men that are great lovers of themselves waste the public. Divide with reason between self-love and society; and be so true to thyself, as thou be not false to others, specially to thy king and country. It is a poor center of a man's actions, himself. It is right earth. For that only stands fast upon his own center; whereas all things that have affinity with the heavens move upon the center of another, which they benefit.<sup>7</sup> The referring of all to a man's self is more

<sup>1</sup>We may plume ourselves as we will, O senators, yet we have not conquered the Spaniards by force of numbers, nor the Gauls by superior might, nor the Carthaginians by strategy, nor the Greeks by our culture, nor lastly the Italians and Latins by the power of internal organization which is peculiar to this people and this land; but it is because of our devotion and our piety and, above all, our realization that human events are ruled and guided by the power of the immortal gods that we have conquered all nations and all peoples.

<sup>2</sup>Tranquil.

<sup>3</sup>First-moved; in the Ptolemaic astronomy, the outermost of the spheres surrounding the earth, which was first moved and which carried along by its momentum the spheres within.

<sup>4</sup>Council of the Roman Catholic Church whose meetings began in 1545.

<sup>5</sup>Medieval philosophers.

<sup>6</sup>Mischievous.

<sup>7</sup>Bacon writes in terms of the Ptolemaic astronomy which he accepted, and according to which the earth is the center of the universe.

tolerable in a sovereign prince; because themselves are not only themselves, but their good and evil is at the peril of the public fortune. But it is a desperate evil in a servant to a prince, or a citizen in a republic. For whatsoever affairs pass such a man's hands, he crooketh them to his own ends; which must needs be often eccentric to the ends of his master or state. Therefore let princes, or states, choose such servants as have not this mark; except they mean their service should be made but the accessory. That which maketh the effect more pernicious is that all proportion is lost. It were disproportion enough for the servant's good to be preferred before the master's; but yet it is a greater extreme, when a little good of the servant shall carry things against a great good of the master's. And yet that is the case of bad officers, treasurers, ambassadors, generals, and other false and corrupt servants; which set a bias upon their bowl,<sup>2</sup> of their own petty ends and envies, to the overthrow of their master's great and important affairs. And for the most part, the good such servants receive is after the model of their own fortune; but the hurt they sell for that good is after the model of their master's fortune. And certainly it is the nature of extreme self-lovers, as they will set an house on fire, and it were but to roast their eggs; and yet these men many times hold credit with their masters, because their study is but to please them and profit themselves; and for either respect<sup>3</sup> they will abandon the good of their affairs.

Wisdom for a man's self is, in many branches thereof, a depraved thing. It is the wisdom of rats, that will be sure to leave a house somewhat before it fall. It is the wisdom of the fox, that thrusts out the badger, who digged and made room for him. It is the wisdom of crocodiles, that shed tears when they would devour. But that which is specially to be noted is, that those which (as Cicero says of Pompey) are sui amantes sine rivali,<sup>4</sup> are many times unfortunate. And whereas they have all their time sacrificed to themselves, they become in the end themselves sacrifices to the inconstancy of fortune, whose wings they thought by their self-wisdom to have pinioned.

25.—OF DISPATCH

AFFECTED dispatch is one of the most dangerous things to business that can be. It is like that which the physicians call pre-digestion, or hasty digestion, which is sure to fill the body full of crudities and secret seeds of diseases. Therefore measure not dispatch by the times of sitting, but by the advancement of the business. And as in races it is not the large stride or high lift that makes the speed; so in business, the keeping close to the matter, and not taking of it too much at once, procureth dispatch. It is the care of some only to come off speedily for the time, or to contrive some false periods<sup>5</sup> of business, because they may seem men of dispatch. But it is one thing to abbreviate by contracting, another by cutting off: and business so handled at several sittings or meetings goeth commonly backward and forward in an unsteady manner. I knew a wise man that had it for a by-word, when he saw men hasten to a conclusion: "Stay a little, that we may make an end the sooner."<sup>6</sup>

On the other side, true dispatch is a rich thing. For time is the measure of business, as money is of wares; and business is bought at a dear hand where there is small dispatch. The Spartans and Spaniards have been noted to be of small dispatch: Mi venga la muerte de Spagna; "Let my death come from Spain"; for then it will be sure to be long in coming.

Give good hearing to those that give the first information in business; and rather direct them in the beginning than interrupt them in the continuance of their speeches: for he that is put out of his own order will go forward and backward, and be more tedious while he waits upon his memory than he could have been if he had gone on in his own course. But sometimes it is seen that the moderator<sup>7</sup> is more troublesome than the actor.

Iterations are commonly loss of time: but

<sup>1</sup>Different from.

<sup>2</sup>Place a weight in one side of their ball.

<sup>3</sup>Consideration.

<sup>4</sup>Lovers of themselves without a rival.

<sup>5</sup>Apparent but not real conclusions.

<sup>6</sup>Sir Amyas Paulet. When he was Elizabeth's ambassador in France Bacon was a member of his household.

<sup>7</sup>Presiding officer.

there is no such gain of time as to iterate often the state of the question; for it chaseth away many a frivolous speech as it is coming forth. Long and curious<sup>1</sup> speeches are as fit for dispatch, as a robe or mantle with a long train is for race. Prefaces, and passages, and excusations, and other speeches of reference to the person, are great wastes of time; and though they seem to proceed of modesty, they are bravery. Yet beware of being too material, when there is any impediment or obstruction in men's wills; for preoccupation of mind ever requireth preface of speech; like a fomentation<sup>2</sup> to make the unguent enter.

Above all things, order, and distribution, and singling out of parts, is the life of dispatch; so as the distribution be not too subtle: for he that doth not divide will never enter well into business; and he that divideth too much will never come out of it clearly. To choose time is to save time; and an unseasonable motion is but beating the air. There be three parts of business: the preparation, the debate or examination, and the perfection. Whereof, if you look for dispatch, let the middle only be the work of many, and the first and last the work of few. The proceeding upon somewhat conceived in writing doth for the most part facilitate dispatch: for though it should be wholly rejected, yet that negative is more pregnant of direction than an indefinite; as ashes are more generative than dust.

26.—OF SEEMING WISE

IT HATH been an opinion that the French are wiser than they seem, and the Spaniards seem wiser than they are. But howsoever it be between nations, certainly it is so between man and man. For as the Apostle<sup>3</sup> saith of godliness, "Having a show of godliness, but denying the power thereof"; so certainly there are in point of wisdom and sufficiency that do nothing or little very solemnly: magno conatu nugas.<sup>4</sup> It is a ridiculous thing and fit for a satire to persons of judgment, to see what shifts these formalists have, and what prospectives<sup>5</sup> to make superficies<sup>6</sup> to seem body that hath depth and bulk. Some are so close and reserved as they will not show their wares but by a dark light, and seem always to keep back somewhat; and when they know within themselves they speak of that they do not well know, would nevertheless seem to others to know of that which they may not well speak. Some help themselves with countenance and gesture, and are wise by signs; as Cicero saith of Piso, that when he answered him he fetched one of his brows up to his forehead, and bent the other down to his chin: Respondes, altero ad frontem sublato, altero ad mentum depresso supercilio, crudelitatem tibi non placere.<sup>7</sup> Some think to bear it<sup>8</sup> by speaking a great word and being peremptory; and go on, and take by admittance<sup>9</sup> that which they cannot make good. Some, whatsoever is beyond their reach, will seem to despise or make light of it as impertinent or curious; and so would have their ignorance seem judgment. Some are never without a difference,<sup>10</sup> and commonly by amusing men with a subtlety blanch<sup>11</sup> the matter; of whom A. Gellius saith, hominem delirum, qui verborum minutiis rerum frangit pondera.<sup>12</sup> Of which kind also Plato, in his Protagoras, bringeth in Prodicus in scorn, and maketh him make a speech that consisteth of distinctions from the beginning to the end. Generally, such men in all deliberations find ease to be of the negative side, and affect a credit to object and foretell difficulties: for when propositions are denied, there is an end of them; but if they be allowed, it requireth a new work: which false point of wisdom is the bane of business. To conclude, there is no decaying merchant, or inward beggar, hath so many tricks to uphold the credit of their wealth, as these empty persons have to

<sup>1</sup>Elaborate.

<sup>2</sup>Application to the body of any warm, medicated substance. In this case the unguent would be the medicine thus helped to enter the body.

<sup>3</sup>St. Paul, 2 Timothy, iii, 5.

<sup>4</sup>Making much ado about nothing.

<sup>5</sup>Stereoscopes.

<sup>6</sup>Surface.

<sup>7</sup>Raising one eye-brow to your forehead and dropping the other to your chin, you reply that you take no delight in cruelty.

<sup>8</sup>Carry it off.

<sup>9</sup>For granted.

<sup>10</sup>Distinction.

<sup>11</sup>Evade.

<sup>12</sup>A foolish man who by over-refinement of phrase destroys the force of his argument.

maintain the credit of their sufficiency. Seeming wise men may make shift to get opinion: but let no man choose them for employment; for certainly you were better take for business a man somewhat absurd than over-formal.

27.—OF FRIENDSHIP

IT HAD been hard for him that spake it to have put more truth and untruth together in a few words, than in that speech: "Whosoever is delighted in solitude is either a wild beast or a god."<sup>1</sup> For it is most true that a natural and secret hatred and aversion<sup>2</sup> towards society, in any man, hath somewhat of the savage beast; but it is most untrue that it should have any character at all of the divine nature; except it proceed, not out of a pleasure in solitude, but out of a love and desire to sequester a man's self for a higher conversation:<sup>3</sup> such as is found to have been falsely and feignedly in some of the heathen; as Epimenides the Candian, Numa the Roman, Empedocles the Sicilian, and Apollonius of Tyana; and truly and really in divers of the ancient hermits and holy fathers of the church. But little do men perceive what solitude is, and how far it extendeth. For a crowd is not company, and faces are but a gallery of pictures, and talk but a tinkling cymbal, where there is no love. The Latin adage meeteth with it a little, Magna civitas, magna solitudo;<sup>4</sup> because in a great town friends are scattered; so that there is not that fellowship, for the most part, which is in less neighborhoods. But we may go further and affirm most truly, that it is a mere and miserable solitude to want true friends, without which the world is but a wilderness; and even in this sense also of solitude, whosoever in the frame of his nature and affections is unfit for friendship, he taketh it of the beast, and not from humanity.

A principal fruit of friendship is the ease and discharge of the fullness and swellings of the heart, which passions of all kinds do cause and induce. We know diseases of stoppings and suffocations are the most dangerous in the body; and it is not much otherwise in the mind: you may take sarza<sup>5</sup> to open the liver, steel to open the spleen, flower of sulphur for the lungs, castoreum<sup>6</sup> for the brain; but no receipt openeth the heart, but a true friend, to whom you may impart griefs, joys, fears, hopes, suspicions, counsels, and whatsoever lieth upon the heart to oppress it, in a kind of civil shrift or confession.

It is a strange thing to observe how high a rate great kings and monarchs do set upon this fruit of friendship whereof we speak: so great, as they purchase it many times at the hazard of their own safety and greatness. For princes, in regard of the distance of their fortune from that of their subjects and servants, cannot gather this fruit, except (to make themselves capable thereof) they raise some persons to be as it were companions and almost equals to themselves, which many times sorteth to inconvenience. The modern languages give unto such persons the name of favorites, or privadoes; as if it were matter of grace, or conversation. But the Roman name attaineth the true use and cause thereof, naming them participes curarum;<sup>7</sup> for it is that which tieth the knot. And we see plainly that this hath been done, not by weak and passionate princes only, but by the wisest and most politic that ever reigned; who have oftentimes joined to themselves some of their servants, whom both themselves have called friends, and allowed others likewise to call them in the same manner, using the word which is received between private men.

L. Sylla, when he commanded Rome, raised Pompey (after surnamed the Great) to that height, that Pompey vaunted himself for Sylla's overmatch. For when he had carried the consulship for a friend of his, against the pursuit of Sylla, and that Sylla did a little resent thereat, and began to speak great, Pompey turned upon him again, and in effect bade him be quiet, "for that more men adored the sun rising than the sun setting."<sup>8</sup> With Julius Cæsar, Decimus Brutus had obtained that interest, as he set him

<sup>1</sup>Aristotle, in his Politics.

<sup>2</sup>Aversion.

<sup>3</sup>Mode of life.

<sup>4</sup>A great city is a great solitude.

<sup>5</sup>Sarsaparilla.

<sup>6</sup>A secretion of the beaver.

<sup>7</sup>Partners of their sorrows.

<sup>8</sup>Plutarch, Life of Pompey.

down in his testament for heir in remainder after his nephew. And this was the man that had power with him to draw him forth to his death. For when Cæsar would have discharged the senate, in regard of some ill presages, and specially a dream of Calpurnia, this man lifted him gently by the arm out of his chair telling him he hoped he would not dismiss the senate till his wife had dreamed a better dream.<sup>1</sup> And it seemeth his favor was so great, as Antonius, in a letter which is recited verbatim in one of Cicero's Philippics, calleth him venefica, "witch"; as if he had enchanted Cæsar. Augustus raised Agrippa (though of mean birth) to that height, as, when he consulted with Mæcnas about the marriage of his daughter Julia, Mæcnas took the liberty to tell him, "that he must either marry his daughter to Agrippa, or take away his life; there was no third way, he had made him so great."<sup>2</sup> With Tiberius Cæsar, Sejanus had ascended to that height, as they two were termed and reckoned as a pair of friends. Tiberius in a letter to him saith, Hæc pro amicitia nostrâ non occultavi,<sup>3</sup> and the whole senate dedicated an altar to Friendship, as to a goddess, in respect of the great dearness of friendship between them two. The like or more was between Septimius Severus and Plautianus. For he forced his eldest son to marry the daughter of Plautianus; and would often maintain Plautianus in doing affronts to his son; and did write also in a letter to the senate by these words: "I love the man so well, as I wish he may over-live me."<sup>4</sup> Now if these princes had been as a Trajan, or a Marcus Aurelius, a man might have thought that this had proceeded of an abundant goodness of nature; but being men so wise, for such strength and severity of mind, and so extreme lovers of themselves, as all these were, it proveth most plainly that they found their own felicity (though as great as ever happened to mortal men) but as an half piece, except they might have a friend to make it entire: and yet, which is more, they were princes that had wives, sons, nephews;

and yet all these could not supply the comfort of friendship.

It is not to be forgotten, what Commineus observeth of his first master, Duke Charles the Hardy; namely, that he would communicate his secrets with none; and least of all, those secrets which troubled him most. Whereupon he goeth on and saith, that towards his latter time "that closeness did impair and a little perish his understanding." Surely Commineus might have made the same judgment also, if it had pleased him, of his second master, Lewis the Eleventh, whose closeness was indeed his tormentor. The parable of Pythagoras is dark, but true; Cor ne edito, "Eat not the heart." Certainly, if a man would give it a hard phrase, those that want friends to open themselves unto are cannibals of their own hearts. But one thing is most admirable (wherewith I will conclude this first fruit of friendship), which is, that this communicating of a man's self to his friend works two contrary effects; for it redoubleth joys, and cutteth griefs in halves. For there is no man that imparteth his joys to his friend, but he joyeth the more; and no man that imparteth his griefs to his friend, but he grieveth the less. So that it is in truth of operation upon a man's mind, of like virtue as the alchemists use to attribute to their stone for man's body; that it worketh all contrary effects, but still to the good and benefit of nature. But yet, without praying in aid<sup>5</sup> of alchemists, there is a manifest image of this in the ordinary course of nature. For in bodies, union strengtheneth and cherisheth any natural action; and, on the other side, weakeneth and dulleth any violent impression: and even so is it of minds.

The second fruit of friendship is healthful and sovereign for the understanding, as the first is for the affections. For friendship maketh indeed a fair day in the affections, from storm and tempests; but it maketh daylight in the understanding, out of darkness and confusion of thoughts. Neither is this to be understood only of faithful counsel, which a man receiveth from his friend; but before you come to that, certain it is that whosoever hath his mind fraught with many thoughts, his wits and under-

<sup>1</sup>Plutarch, Life of Cæsar.

<sup>2</sup>Dion Cassius, LVI, 6.

<sup>3</sup>Such is our friendship that even this I have not kept from you (Tacitus, Annals, IV, 40).

<sup>4</sup>Dion Cassius, LXXV, 15.

<sup>5</sup>Calling in the aid.

standing do clarify and break up, in the communicating and discoursing with another: he tosseth his thoughts more easily; he marshaleth them more orderly; he seeth how they look when they are turned into words; finally, he waxeth wiser than himself; and that more by an hour's discourse than by a day's meditation. It was well said by Themistocles to the king of Persia, "that speech was like cloth of Arras, opened and put abroad; whereby the imagery doth appear in figure; whereas in thoughts they lie but as in packs."<sup>1</sup> Neither is this second fruit of friendship, in opening the understanding, restrained only to such friends as are able to give a man counsel: (they indeed are best); but even without that, a man learneth of himself, and bringeth his own thoughts to light, and whetteth his wits as against a stone, which itself cuts not. In a word, a man were better relate himself to a statue or picture, than to suffer his thoughts to pass in smother.

Add now, to make this second fruit of friendship complete, that other point, which lieth more open, and falleth within vulgar observation; which is faithful counsel from a friend. Heraclitus saith well in one of his enigmas: "Dry light is ever the best." And certain it is that the light that a man receiveth by counsel from another is drier and purer than that which cometh from his own understanding and judgment; which is ever infused and drenched in his affections and customs. So as there is as much difference between the counsel that a friend giveth, and that a man giveth himself, as there is between the counsel of a friend and of a flatterer. For there is no such flatterer as is a man's self; and there is no such remedy against flattery of a man's self as the liberty of a friend. Counsel is of two sorts; the one concerning manners, the other concerning business. For the first; the best preservative to keep the mind in health is the faithful admonition of a friend. The calling of a man's self to a strict account is a medicine, sometime, too piercing and corrosive. Reading good books of morality is a little flat and dead. Observing our faults in others is sometimes unproper for our case. But the best receipt (best, I say, to work, and best to take) is the admonition of a friend. It is a strange thing to behold what gross errors and extreme absurdities many (especially of the greater sort) do commit, for want of a friend to tell them of them, to the great damage both of their fame and fortune. For as S. James saith, they are as men, "that look sometimes into a glass, and presently forget their own shape and favor."<sup>2</sup> As for business, a man may think, if he will, that two eyes see no more than one; or that a gamester seeth always more than a looker-on; or that a man in anger is as wise as he that hath said over the four and twenty letters; or that a musket may be shot off as well upon the arm as upon a rest; and such other fond and high imaginations, to think himself all in all. But when all is done, the help of good counsel is that which setteth business straight. And if any man think that he will take counsel, but it shall be by pieces; asking counsel in one business of one man, and in another business of another man; it is well (that is to say, better perhaps than if he asked none at all); but he runneth two dangers. One, that he shall not be faithfully counseled; for it is a rare thing except it be from a perfect and entire friend to have counsel given, but such as shall be bowed and crooked to some ends which he hath that giveth it. The other, that he shall have counsel given, hurtful and unsafe (though with good meaning), and mixed partly of mischief and partly of remedy: even as if you would call a physician, that is thought good for the cure of the disease you complain of, but is unacquainted with your body; and therefore may put you in way for a present cure, but overthroweth your health in some other kind; and so cure the disease and kill the patient. But a friend that is wholly acquainted with a man's estate will beware, by furthering any present business, how he dasheth upon other inconvenience. And therefore rest not upon scattered counsels; they will rather distract and mislead than settle and direct.

After these two noble fruits of friendship (peace in the affections, and support of the judgment) followeth the last fruit, which is like the pomegranate, full of many kernels; I mean aid and bearing a part in all actions and occasions. Here the best way to represent to life the manifold use of friendship is to cast and see how many things there are which a man cannot do himself; and then it will appear that it was a sparing speech of the ancients, to say, "that a friend is another himself": for that a friend is far more than himself. Men have their time, and die many times in desire of some things which they principally take to heart; the bestowing of a child, the finishing of a work, or the like. If a man have a true friend, he may rest almost secure that the care of those things will continue after him. So that a man hath as it were two lives in his desires. A man hath a body, and that body is confined to a place; but where friendship is, all offices of life are as it were granted to him and his deputy. For he may exercise them by his friend. How many things are there which a man cannot, with any face or comeliness, say or do himself! A man can scarce allege his own merits with modesty, much less extol them; a man cannot sometimes brook to supplicate or beg; and a number of the like. But all these things are graceful in a friend's mouth, which are blushing in a man's own. So again, a man's person hath many proper relations which he cannot put off. A man cannot speak to his son but as a father; to his wife but as a husband; to his enemy but upon terms: whereas a friend may speak as the case requires, and not as it sorteth with the person. But to enumerate these things were endless: I have given the rule, where a man cannot fitly play his own part: if he have not a friend, he may quit the stage.

<sup>1</sup>Plutarch, Life of Themistocles.

<sup>2</sup>St. James, i, 23-24.

28.—OF EXPENSE

RICHES are for spending, and spending for honor and good actions. Therefore extraordinary expense must be limited by the worth of the occasion; for voluntary undoing may be as well for a man's country as for the kingdom of heaven. But ordinary expense ought to be limited by a man's estate; and governed with such regard, as it be within his compass; and not subject to deceit and abuse of servants; and ordered to the best show, that the bills may be less than the estimation abroad. Certainly, if a man will keep but of even hand,<sup>1</sup> his ordinary expenses ought to be but to the half of his receipts; and if he think to wax rich, but to the third part. It is no baseness for the greatest to descend and look into their own estate. Some forbear it, not upon negligence alone, but doubting to bring themselves into melancholy, in respect they shall find it broken. But wounds cannot be cured without searching.<sup>2</sup> He that cannot look into his own estate at all, had need both choose well those whom he employeth, and change them often; for new are more timorous and less subtle. He that can look into his estate but seldom, it behoveth him to turn all to certainties. A man had need, if he be plentiful in some kind of expense, to be as saving again in some other. As, if he be plentiful in diet, to be saving in apparel; if he be plentiful in the hall, to be saving in the stable; and the like. For he that is plentiful in expenses of all kinds will hardly be preserved from decay. In clearing of a man's estate, he may as well hurt himself in being too sudden, as in letting it run on too long. For hasty selling is commonly as disadvantageable as interest. Besides, he that clears at once will relapse; for finding himself out of straits, he will revert to his customs: but he that cleareth by degrees induceth a habit of frugality, and gaineth as well upon his mind as upon his estate. Certainly, who hath a state to repair may not despise small things: and commonly it is less dishonorable to abridge petty charges, than to stoop to petty gettings. A man ought warily to begin charges which once begun will continue: but in matters that return not he may be more magnificent.

<sup>1</sup>Will manage prudently.

32.—OF DISCOURSE

SOME in their discourse desire rather commendation of wit, in being able to hold all arguments, than of judgment, in discerning what is true; as if it were a praise to know what might be said, and not what should be thought. Some have certain commonplaces and themes wherein they are good, and want variety; which kind of poverty is for the most part tedious, and, when it is once perceived, ridiculous. The honorablest part of talk is to give the occasion; and again to moderate and pass to somewhat else; for then a man leads the dance. It is good, in discourse, and speech of conversation, to vary and intermingle speech of the present occasion with arguments; tales with reasons; asking of questions with telling of opinions; and jest with earnest: for it is a dull thing to tire, and, as we say now, to jade<sup>1</sup> any thing too far. As for jest, there be certain things which ought to be privileged from it; namely, religion, matters of state, great persons, any man's present business of importance, and any case that deserveth pity. Yet there be some that think their wits have been asleep, except they dart out somewhat that is piquant and to the quick: that is a vein which would be bridled:

<sup>2</sup>Probing.

Parce, puer, stimulis, et fortius utere loris.<sup>2</sup>

And generally, men ought to find the difference between saltiness<sup>3</sup> and bitterness. Certainly, he that hath a satirical vein, as he maketh others afraid of his wit, so he had need be afraid of others' memory. He that questioneth much, shall learn much, and content much; but especially if he apply his questions to the skill of the persons whom he asketh: for he shall give them occasion to please themselves in speaking, and himself shall continually gather knowledge. But let his questions not be troublesome; for that is fit for a poser.<sup>4</sup> And let him be sure to leave other men their turns to speak. Nay, if there be any that would reign and take up all the time, let him find means to take them off and to bring others on; as musicians use to do with those that dance too long galliards. If you disseemble sometimes your knowledge of that you are thought to know, you shall be thought another time to know that you know not. Speech of a man's self ought to be seldom, and well chosen. I knew one was wont to say in scorn: "He must needs be a wise man, he speaks so much of himself": and there is but one case wherein a man may commend himself with good grace, and that is in commending virtue in another, especially if it be such a virtue whereunto himself pretendeth. Speech of touch<sup>5</sup> towards others should be sparingly used; for discourse ought to be as a field, without coming home to any man. I knew two noblemen, of the west part of England, whereof the one was given to scoff, but kept ever royal cheer in his house: the other would ask of those that had been at the other's table: "Tell truly, was there never a flout or dry blow<sup>6</sup> given?" to which the guest would answer: "Such and such a thing passed": the lord would say: "I thought he would mar a good dinner." Discretion of speech is more than eloquence; and to speak agreeably to him with whom we deal, is more than to speak in good words or in good order. A good continued speech, without a good speech of interlocution, shows slowness; and a good reply or second speech, without a good settled speech, sheweth shallowness and weakness. As we see in beasts, that those that are weakest in the course, are yet nimblest in the turn; as it is betwixt the greyhound and the hare. To use too many circumstances, ere one come to the matter, is wearisome; to use none at all, is blunt.

34.—OF RICHES

I CANNOT call riches better than the baggage of virtue. The Roman word is better, impedimenta.<sup>7</sup> For as the baggage is to an army, so is riches to virtue. It cannot be spared nor left behind, but it hindereth the march; yea, and the care of it sometimes loseth or disturbeth the victory. Of great riches there is no real use, except it be in the distribution; the rest is but conceit. So saith Solomon: "Where much is, there are many to consume it; and what hath the owner but the sight of it with his eyes?"<sup>8</sup> The personal fruition in any man cannot reach to feel great riches: there is a custody of them; or a power of dole and donative of them; or a fame of them; but no solid use to the owner. Do you not see what feigned prices are set upon little stones and rarities? and what works of ostentation are undertaken, because there might seem to be some use of great riches? But then you will say, they may be of use to buy men out of dangers or trouble. As Solomon saith: "Riches are as a stronghold, in the imagination of the

<sup>1</sup>Overdrive.

<sup>2</sup>Use the whip lightly, lad, and pull hard on the reins (Ovid, Metamorphoses, II, 126).

<sup>3</sup>Wit.

<sup>4</sup>Examiner.

<sup>5</sup>Speech wounding others.

<sup>6</sup>Jeer or hard knock.

<sup>7</sup>Hindrances.

<sup>8</sup>Ecclesiastes, v, 11.

rich man."<sup>1</sup> But this is excellently expressed, that it is in imagination, and not always in fact. For certainly great riches have sold<sup>2</sup> more men than they have brought out. Seek not proud riches, but such as thou mayest get justly, use soberly, distribute cheerfully, and leave contentedly. Yet have no abstract nor friarly contempt of them. But distinguish, as Cicero saith well of Rabirius Posthumus: In studio rei amplificandæ apparebat non avaritiæ prædam sed instrumentum bonitatis quæri.<sup>3</sup> Harken also to Solomon, and beware of hasty gathering of riches: Qui festinat ad divitias non erit insons.<sup>4</sup> The poets feign that when Plutus (which is Riches) is sent from Jupiter, he limps and goes slowly; but when he is sent from Pluto, he runs and is swift of foot: meaning, that riches gotten by good means and just labor pace slowly; but when they come by the death of others (as by the course of inheritance, testaments, and the like), they come tumbling upon a man. But it might be applied likewise to Pluto, taking him for the devil. For when riches come from the devil (as by fraud and oppression and unjust means), they come upon speed. The ways to enrich are many, and most of them foul. Parsimony is one of the best, and yet is not innocent; for it withholdeth men from works of liberality and charity. The improvement of the ground is the most natural obtaining of riches; for it is our great mother's blessing, the earth's; but it is slow. And yet, where men of great wealth do stoop to husbandry, it multiplieth riches exceedingly. I knew a nobleman in England, that had the gretest audits<sup>5</sup> of any man in my time: a great grazier, a great sheep-master, a great timber man, a great collier, a great corn-master, a great lead-man, and so of iron, and a number of the like points of husbandry: so as the earth seemed a sea to him, in respect of the perpetual importation. It was truly observed by one, that himself came very hardly to a little riches, and very easily to great riches. For when a man's stock is come to that, that he can expect the prime of markets,<sup>6</sup> and overcome<sup>7</sup> those bargains which for their greatness are few men's money, and be partner in the industries of younger men, he cannot but increase mainly.<sup>8</sup> The gains of ordinary trades and vocations are honest, and furthered by two things chiefly: by diligence, and by a good name for good and fair dealing. But the gains of bargains are of a more doubtful nature; when men shall wait upon others' necessity, broke<sup>9</sup> by servants and instruments to draw them on, put off others cunningly that would be better chapmen,<sup>10</sup> and the like practices, which are crafty and naught. As for the chopping of bargains, when a man buys, not to hold, but to sell over again, that commonly grindeth double, both upon the seller and upon the buyer. Sharings do greatly enrich, if the hands be well chosen that are trusted. Usury is the certainest means of gain, though one of the worst; as that whereby a man doth eat his bread in sudore vultus alieni,<sup>11</sup> and besides, doth plough upon Sundays. But yet, certain though it be, it hath flaws; for that the scriveners and brokers do value unsound men, to serve their own turn. The fortune in being the first in an invention, or in a privilege, doth cause sometimes a wonderful overgrowth in riches; as it was with the first sugar man in the Canaries: therefore if a man can play the true logician, to have as well judgment as invention, he may do great matters; especially if the times be fit. He that resteth upon gains certain, shall hardly grow to great riches: and he that puts all upon adventures, doth oftentimes break and come to poverty: it is good therefore to guard adventures with certainties that may uphold losses. Monopolies, and coemption<sup>12</sup> of wares for re-sale, where they are not restrained, are great means to enrich; especially if the party have intelligence what things are like to come into request, and so store himself

<sup>1</sup>Proverbs, xviii, 11.

<sup>2</sup>Betrayed.

<sup>3</sup>In desiring to increase his wealth he seemed to be seeking not so much the spoils of greed as the means for generosity.

<sup>4</sup>He who grows rich quickly will not be free from sin (Proverbs, xxviii, 20).

<sup>5</sup>Accounts.

<sup>6</sup>Wait until the market is most favorable.

<sup>7</sup>Take advantage of.

<sup>8</sup>Greatly.

<sup>9</sup>Negotiate.

<sup>10</sup>Traders.

<sup>11</sup>By the sweat of another's brow.

<sup>12</sup>Purchasing all there is of a commodity.

beforehand. Riches gotten by service, though it be of the best rise, yet when they are gotten by flattery, feeding humors, and other servile conditions, they may be placed amongst the worst. As for fishing for testaments and executorships (as Tacitus saith of Seneca, testamenta et orbos tanquam indagine capi<sup>1</sup>) it is yet worse; by how much men submit themselves to meaner persons than in service. Believe not much them that seem to despise riches; for they despise them that despair of them; and none worse, when they come to them. Be not penny-wise; riches have wings, and sometimes they fly away of themselves, sometimes they must be set flying to bring in more. Men leave their riches either to their kindred, or to the public; and moderate portions prosper best in both. A great state left to an heir, is as a lure to all the birds of prey round about to seize on him, if he be not the better stablished in years and judgment. Likewise glorious gifts and foundations are like sacrifices without salt; and but the painted sepulchers of alms, which soon will putrefy and corrupt inwardly. Therefore measure not thine advancements<sup>2</sup> by quantity, but frame them by measure: and defer not charities till death; for certainly, if a man weigh it rightly, he that doth so is rather liberal of another man's than of his own.

38.—OF NATURE IN MEN

NATURE is often hidden, sometimes overcome, seldom extinguished. Force maketh nature more violent in the return; doctrine and discourse maketh nature less importune;<sup>3</sup> but custom only doth alter and subdue nature. He that seeketh victory over his nature, let him not set himself too great nor too small tasks: for the first will make him dejected by often failings; and the second will make him a small proceeder, though by often prevailings. And at the first let him practise with helps, as swimmers do with bladders or rushes; but after a time let him practise with disadvantages, as dancers do with thick shoes. For it breeds great perfection, if the practice be harder than the use. Where nature is mighty, and therefore the victory hard, the degrees had need be: first, to stay and arrest nature in time; like to him that would say over the four and twenty letters when he was angry: then, to go less in quantity; as if one should, in forbearing wine, come from drinking healths to a draught at a meal: and lastly, to discontinue altogether. But if a man have the fortitude and resolution to enfranchise himself at once, that is the best:

*Optimus ille animi vindex lædentiæ pectus
Vincula quæ rupit, dedoluitque semel.*<sup>4</sup>

Neither is the ancient rule amiss, to bend nature as a wand to a contrary extreme, whereby to set it right; understanding it, where the contrary extreme is no vice. Let not a man force a habit upon himself with a perpetual continuance, but with some intermission. For both the pause reinforceth the new onset; and if a man that is not perfect be ever in practice, he shall as well practise his errors as his abilities, and induce one habit of both; and there is no means to help this but by seasonable intermissions. But let not a man trust his victory over his nature too far; for nature will lay buried a great time, and yet revive upon the occasion or temptation. Like as it was with Æsop's damsel, turned from a cat to a woman; who sat very demurely at the board's end, till a mouse ran before her. Therefore let a man either avoid the occasion altogether; or put himself often to it, that he may be little moved with it. A man's nature is best perceived in privateness, for there is no affectation; in passion, for that putteth a man out of his precepts; and in a new case or experiment, for there custom leaveth him. They are happy men, whose natures sort with their vocations; otherwise they may say, Multum incola fuit anima mea,<sup>5</sup> when they converse in those things they do not affect. In studies, whatsoever a man commandeth upon himself, let him set hours for it; but whatsoever is agreeable to his nature, let him take no care for any set times; for his thoughts will fly to it of themselves, so as the spaces of other business or studies will suffice. A man's nature runs either to herbs

<sup>1</sup>Taking in bequests and wardships as with a net.

<sup>2</sup>Gifts.

<sup>3</sup>Troublesome.

<sup>4</sup>He frees his spirit best who, bursting the chains that bruise his breast, ends his sufferings once for all (Ovid, Remedy of Love, 293-294).

<sup>5</sup>My soul dwelt in a strange land (Psalms, cxx, 6).

or weeds; therefore let him seasonably water the one, and destroy the other.

42.—OF YOUTH AND AGE

A MAN that is young in years may be old in hours, if he have lost no time. But that happeneth rarely. Generally, youth is like the first cogitations, not so wise as the second. For there is a youth in thoughts as well as in ages. And yet the invention of young men is more lively than that of the old; and imaginations stream into their minds better, and, as it were, more divinely. Natures that have much heat, and great and violent desires and perturbations, are not ripe for action till they have passed the meridian of their years: as it was with Julius Cæsar, and Septimius Severus. Of the latter of whom it is said, Juventutem egit erroribus, imo furoribus, plenam.<sup>1</sup> And yet he was the ablest emperor, almost, of all the list. But reposed natures may do well in youth. As it is seen in Augustus Cæsar, Cosmus,<sup>2</sup> Duke of Florence, Gaston de Foix, and others. On the other side, heat and vivacity in age is an excellent composition for business. Young men are fitter to invent than to judge; fitter for execution than for counsel; and fitter for new projects than for settled business. For the experience of age, in things that fall within the compass of it, directeth them; but in new things, abuseth them. The errors of young men are the ruin of business; but the errors of aged men amount but to this, that more might have been done, or sooner. Young men, in the conduct and manage<sup>3</sup> of actions, embrace more than they can hold; stir more than they can quiet; fly to the end, without consideration of the means and degrees; pursue some few principles which they have chanced upon absurdly; care<sup>4</sup> not to innovate, which draws unknown inconveniences; use extreme remedies at first; and, that which doubleth all errors, will not acknowledge or retract them; like an unready horse, that will neither stop nor turn. Men of age object too much, consult too long, adventure too little, repent too soon, and seldom drive business home to the full period, but content themselves with a mediocrity of success. Certainly, it is good to compound employments of both; for that will be good for the present, because the virtues of either age may correct the defects of both; and good for succession, that young men may be learners, while men in age are actors; and, lastly, good for extern<sup>5</sup> accidents, because authority followeth old men, and favor and popularity youth. But for the moral part, perhaps youth will have the pre-eminence, as age hath for the politic. A certain rabbin, upon the text, "Your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams,"<sup>6</sup> inferreth that young men are admitted nearer to God than old, because vision is a clearer revelation than a dream. And certainly, the more a man drinketh of the world, the more it intoxicateth; and age doth profit rather in the powers of understanding, than in the virtues of the will and affections. There be some have an over-early ripeness in their years, which fadeth betimes. These are, first, such as have brittle wits, the edge whereof is soon turned; such as was Hermogenes the rhetorician, whose books are exceeding subtle, who afterwards waxed stupid. A second sort is of those that have some natural dispositions which have better grace in youth than in age; such as is a fluent and luxuriant speech, which becomes youth well, but not age: so Tully saith of Hortensius, Idem manebat, neque idem decebat.<sup>7</sup> The third is of such as take too high a strain at the first, and are magnanimous more than tract of years can uphold. As was Scipio Africanus, of whom Livy saith in effect, Ultima primis cedebant.<sup>8</sup>

47.—OF NEGOTIATING

IT IS generally better to deal by speech than by letter; and by the mediation of a third than by a man's self. Letters are good, when a man would draw an answer by letter back again; or when it may serve for a man's justification afterwards to produce his own

<sup>1</sup>He spent his youth in folly, nay, in madness (Spartianus).

<sup>2</sup>I. e., Cosimo de' Medici.

<sup>3</sup>Management.

<sup>4</sup>Hesitate.

<sup>5</sup>External.

<sup>6</sup>Joel, ii, 28.

<sup>7</sup>He remained the same, but it was no longer becoming (Cicero).

<sup>8</sup>His latter days fell short of the first.

letter; or where it may be danger to be interrupted, or heard by pieces. To deal in person is good, when a man's face breedeth regard, as commonly with inferiors; or in tender cases, where a man's eye upon the countenance of him with whom he speaketh may give him a direction how far to go; and generally, where a man will reserve to himself liberty either to disavow or to expound. In choice of instruments, it is better to choose men of a plainer sort, that are like to do that that is committed to them, and to report back again faithfully the success, than those that are cunning to contrive out of other men's business somewhat to grace themselves, and will help the matter in report for satisfaction sake. Use also such persons as affect<sup>1</sup> the business wherein they are employed; for that quickeneth much; and such as are fit for the matter; as bold men for expostulation, fair-spoken men for persuasion, crafty men for inquiry and observation, froward and absurd men for business that doth not well bear out itself. Use also such as have been lucky and prevailed before in things wherein you have employed them; for that breeds confidence, and they will strive to maintain their prescription.<sup>2</sup> It is better to sound a person, with whom one deals, afar off, than to fall upon the point at first; except you mean to surprise him by some short question. It is better dealing with men in appetite,<sup>3</sup> than with those that are where they would be. If a man deal with another upon conditions, the start or first performance is all; which a man cannot reasonably demand, except either the nature of the thing be such which must go before; or else a man can persuade the other party that he shall still need him in some other thing; or else that he be counted the honester man. All practice<sup>4</sup> is to discover, or to work. Men discover themselves in trust; in passion; at unawares; and of necessity, when they would have somewhat done and cannot find an apt pretext. If you would work any man, you must either know his nature and fashions, and so lead him; or his ends, and so persuade him; or his weakness and disadvantages, and so awe him; or those that have interest in him, and so govern him. In dealing with cunning persons, we must ever consider their ends, to interpret their speeches; and it is good to say little to them, and that which they least look for. In all negotiations of difficulty, a man may not look to sow and reap at once; but must prepare business, and so ripen it by degrees.

50.—OF STUDIES

STUDIES serve for delight, for ornament, and for ability. Their chief use for delight is in privateness and retiring; for ornament, is in discourse; and for ability, is in the judgment and disposition of business. For expert men can execute, and perhaps judge of particulars, one by one; but the general counsels, and the plots and marshaling of affairs, come best from those that are learned. To spend too much time in studies is sloth; to use them too much for ornament is affectation; to make judgment wholly by their rules is the humor of a scholar. They perfect nature, and are perfected by experience; for natural abilities are like natural plants, that need pruning by study; and studies themselves do give forth directions too much at large, except they be bounded in by experience. Crafty men contemn studies; simple men admire them; and wise men use them: for they teach not their own use; but that is a wisdom without them and above them, won by observation. Read not to contradict and confute; nor to believe and take for granted; nor to find talk and discourse; but to weigh and consider. Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested: that is, some books are to be read only in parts; others to be read, but not curiously;<sup>5</sup> and some few to be read wholly, and with diligence and attention. Some books also may be read by deputy, and extracts made of them by others; but that would be only in the less important arguments, and the meaner sort of books; else distilled books are like common distilled waters, flashy<sup>6</sup> things. Reading maketh a full man; conference a ready man; and writing an exact man. And therefore, if a man write little, he had need have a great mem-

<sup>1</sup>Are inclined to.

<sup>2</sup>Reputation.

<sup>3</sup>Anxious to advance.

<sup>4</sup>Negotiation.

<sup>5</sup>Not with great care.

<sup>6</sup>Inspid.

ory; if he confer little, he had need have a present wit; and if he read little, he had need have much cunning, to seem to know that he doth not. Histories make men wise; poets witty; the mathematics subtle; natural philosophy deep; moral grave; logic and rhetoric able to content. Abunt studia in mores.<sup>1</sup> Nay, there is no stond<sup>2</sup> or impediment in the wit, but may be wrought out by fit studies: like as diseases of the body may have appropriate exercises. Bowling is good for the stone and reins;<sup>3</sup> shooting for the lungs and breast; gentle walking for the stomach; riding for the head; and the like. So if a man's wit be wandering, let him study the mathematics; for in demonstrations, if his wit be called away never so little, he must begin again: if his wit be not apt to distinguish or find differences, let him study the schoolmen; for they are cymini sectores:<sup>4</sup> if he be not apt to beat over matters, and to call one thing to prove and illustrate another, let him study the lawyers' cases: so every defect of the mind may have a special receipt.

53.—OF PRAISE

PRAISE is the reflection of virtue. But it is as the glass or body which giveth the reflection. If it be from the common people, it is commonly false and naught; and rather followeth vain persons than virtuous. For the common people understand not many excellent virtues. The lowest virtues draw praise from them; the middle virtues work in them astonishment or admiration; but of the highest virtues they have no sense or perceiving at all. But shows, and species virtutibus similes,<sup>5</sup> serve best with them. Certainly, fame is like a river, that beareth up things light and swollen, and drowns things weighty and solid. But if persons of quality and judgment concur, then it is as the Scripture saith, Nomen bonum instar unguenti fragrantis:<sup>6</sup> it filleth all round about, and will not easily away: for the odors of ointments are more durable than those of flowers. There be so many false points of praise, that a man may justly hold it a suspect. Some praises proceed merely of flattery: and if he be an ordinary flatterer, he will have certain common attributes, which may serve every man: if he be a cunning flatterer, he will follow the arch-flatterer, which is a man's self; and wherein a man thinketh best of himself, therein the flatterer will uphold him most: but if he be an impudent flatterer, look wherein a man is conscious to himself that he is most defective and is most out of countenance in himself, that will the flatterer entitle him to perforce, spretâ conscientiâ.<sup>7</sup> Some praises come of good wishes and respects, which is a form due in civility to kings and great persons, laudando præcipere,<sup>8</sup> when by telling men what they are, they represent to them what they should be. Some men are praised maliciously to their hurt, thereby to stir envy and jealousy towards them; pessimum genus inimicorum laudantium,<sup>9</sup> inasmuch as it was a proverb amongst the Grecians, that "he that was praised to his hurt should have a push<sup>10</sup> rise upon his nose:" as we say, "that a blister will rise upon one's tongue that tells a lie." Certainly moderate praise, used with opportunity, and not vulgar, is that which doth the good. Solomon saith: "He that praiseth his friend aloud, rising early, it shall be to him no better than a curse."<sup>11</sup> Too much magnifying of man or matter doth irritate contradiction, and procure envy and scorn. To praise a man's self cannot be decent, except it be in rare cases; but to praise a man's office or profession, he may do it with good grace, and with a kind of magnanimity. The cardinals of Rome, which are theologues,<sup>12</sup> and friars, and schoolmen, have a phrase of notable contempt and scorn towards civil business: for they call all temporal business, of wars, embassages, judicature, and other employments, sbirrerie, which is under-sheriffries, as if they were but matters

<sup>1</sup>Studies develop into manners (Ovid, Heroides, XV, 83).

<sup>2</sup>Hindrance.

<sup>3</sup>Kidneys.

<sup>4</sup>Splitters of cumin, i. e., hair-splitters.

<sup>5</sup>Virtue's counterfeits.

<sup>6</sup>A good name is like a fragrant ointment (Ecclesiastes, vii, 1, inexactly quoted).

<sup>7</sup>Silencing his better judgment.

<sup>8</sup>To admonish by means of praise.

<sup>9</sup>Invidious flatterers are the worst class (Tacitus).

<sup>10</sup>Pimple.

<sup>11</sup>Proverbs, xxvii, 14.

<sup>12</sup>Theologians.

for under-sheriffs and catchpoles;<sup>1</sup> though many times those under-sheriffries do more good than their high speculations. St. Paul when he boasts of himself, he doth oft interlace, "I speak like a fool";<sup>2</sup> but speaking of his calling, he saith, Magnificabo apostolatuum meum.<sup>3</sup>

56.—OF JUDICATURE

JUDGES ought to remember that their office is jus dicere, and not jus dare; to interpret law, and not to make law, or give law. Else will it be like the authority claimed by the church of Rome; which, under pretext of exposition of Scripture, doth not stick<sup>4</sup> to add and alter, and to pronounce that which they do not find, and by show of antiquity to introduce novelty. Judges ought to be more learned than witty, more reverend than plausible, and more advised than confident. Above all things, integrity is their portion and proper virtue. "Cursed" (saith the law) "is he that removeth the land-mark."<sup>5</sup> The mislayer of a mere stone is to blame. But it is the unjust judge that is the capital remover of land-marks, when he defineth amiss of lands and property. One foul sentence doth more hurt than many foul examples. For these do but corrupt the stream; the other corrupteth the fountain. So saith Solomon: Fons turbatus, et vena corrupta, est justus cadens in causâ suâ coram adversario.<sup>6</sup> The office of judges may have reference unto the parties that sue; unto the advocates that plead; unto the clerks and ministers of justice underneath them; and to the sovereign or state above them.

First, for the causes or parties that sue. "There be" (saith the Scripture) "that turn judgment into wormwood";<sup>7</sup> and surely there be also that turn it into vinegar; for injustice maketh it bitter, and delays make it sour. The principal duty of a judge is to suppress force and fraud; whereof force is the more pernicious when it is open, and fraud

when it is close and disguised. Add thereto contentious suits, which ought to be spewed out, as the surfeit of courts. A judge ought to prepare his way to a just sentence, as God useth to prepare his way, by raising valleys and taking down hills: so when there appeareth on either side an high hand, violent prosecution, cunning advantages taken, combination, power, great counsel, then is the virtue of a judge seen, to make inequality equal; that he may plant his judgment as upon an even ground. Qui fortiter emungit, elicit sanguinem,<sup>8</sup> and where the wine-press is hard wrought, it yields a harsh wine, that tastes of the grapestone. Judges must beware of hard constructions and strained inferences; for there is no worse torture than the torture of laws. Specially in case of laws penal, they ought to have care that that which was meant for terror be not turned into rigor; and that they bring not upon the people that shower whereof the Scripture speaketh, Pluet super eos laqueos.<sup>9</sup> for penal laws pressed are a shower of snares upon the people. Therefore let penal laws, if they have been sleepers of long, or if they be grown unfit for the present time, be by wise judges confined in the execution:

Judicis officium est, ut res, ita tempora rerum, etc.<sup>10</sup>

In causes of life and death, judges ought (as far as the law permitteth) in justice to remember mercy; and to cast a severe eye upon the example, but a merciful eye upon the person.

Secondly, for the advocates and counsel that plead. Patience and gravity of hearing is an essential part of justice; and an over-speaking judge is no well tuned cymbal. It is no grace to a judge first to find that which he might have heard in due time from the bar; or to show quickness of conceit in cutting off evidence or counsel too short; or to prevent information by questions, though pertinent. The parts of a judge in hearing are four: to direct the evidence; to moderate length, repetition, or impertinency of speech; to recapitulate, select, and collate the material points of that which hath been said; and to give the rule or sentence. Whatsoever is above these is too much; and proceedeth

<sup>8</sup>Hard pressure draws blood (Proverbs, xxx, 33).

<sup>9</sup>He will rain down snares upon them (Psalms, xi, 6).

<sup>10</sup>The judge must consider the times as well as the circumstances of things (Ovid).

<sup>1</sup>Bailiffs' assistants.

<sup>2</sup>2 Corinthians, xi, 23.

<sup>3</sup>I shall magnify my office (Romans, xi, 13).

<sup>4</sup>Hesitate.

<sup>5</sup>Deuteronomy, xxvii, 17.

<sup>6</sup>As a troubled fountain and corrupted spring, so is the righteous man that must give way before his opponent (Proverbs, xxv, 26).

<sup>7</sup>Amos v, 7.

either of glory and willingness to speak or of impatience to hear, or of shortness of memory, or of want of a staid and equal attention. It is a strange thing to see that the boldness of advocates should prevail with judges; whereas they should imitate God, in whose seat they sit; who "represseth the presumptuous," and "giveth grace to the modest."<sup>1</sup> But it is more strange, that judges should have noted favorites; which cannot but cause multiplication of fees, and suspicion of by-ways. There is due from the judge to the advocate some commendation and gracing, where causes are well handled and fair pleaded; especially towards the side which obtaineth not; for that upholds in the client the reputation of his counsel, and beats down in him the conceit<sup>2</sup> of his cause. There is likewise due to the public a civil reprehension of advocates, where there appeareth cunning counsel, gross neglect, slight information, indiscreet pressing, or an overbold defence. And let not the counsel at the bar chop<sup>3</sup> with the judge, nor wind himself into the handling of the cause anew after the judge hath declared his sentence: but on the other side, let not the judge meet the cause half way, nor give occasion to the party to say, his counsel or proofs were not heard.

Thirdly, for that that concerns clerks and ministers. The place of justice is an halloved place; and therefore not only the bench, but the foot-pace and precincts and purprise<sup>4</sup> thereof, ought to be preserved without scandal and corruption. For certainly, "Grapes" (as the Scripture saith) "will not be gathered of thorns or thistles";<sup>5</sup> neither can justice yield her fruit with sweetness amongst the briars and brambles of catching and polling<sup>6</sup> clerks and ministers. The attendance of courts is subject to four bad instruments. First, certain persons that are sowers of suits; which make the court swell, and the country pine. The second sort is of those that engage courts in quarrels of jurisdiction, and are not truly amici curiæ, but parasiti curiæ,<sup>7</sup> in puffing a court up beyond her bounds, for their own scraps and advantage. The third sort is of those that may be accounted the left hands of courts; persons that are full of nimble and sinister tricks and shifts, whereby they pervert the plain and direct courses of courts, and bring justice into oblique lines and labyrinths. And the fourth is the poller<sup>8</sup> and exacter of fees; which justifies the common resemblance of the courts of justice to the bush, whereunto while the sheep flies for defence in weather, he is sure to lose part of his fleece. On the other side, an ancient clerk, skilful in precedents, wary in proceeding, and understanding in the business of the court, is an excellent finger of a court, and doth many times point the way to the judge himself.

Fourthly, for that which may concern the sovereign and estate. Judges ought above all to remember the conclusion of the Roman Twelve Tables, Salus populi suprema lex,<sup>9</sup> and to know that laws, except they be in order to that end, are but things captious, and oracles not well inspired. Therefore it is an happy thing in a state when kings and states do often consult with judges; and again, when judges do often consult with the king and state: the one, when there is matter of law intervenient in business of state; the other, when there is some consideration of state intervenient in matter of law. For many times the things deduced to judgment may be meum and tuum,<sup>10</sup> when the reason and consequence thereof may trench to point of estate.<sup>11</sup> I call matter of estate, not only the parts of sovereignty, but whatsoever introduceth any great alteration or dangerous precedent, or concerneth manifestly any great portion of people. And let no man weakly conceive that just laws and true policy have any antipathy: for they are like the spirits and sinews, that one moves with the other. Let judges also remember that Solomon's throne was supported by lions on both sides: let them belions, but yet lions under the throne; being circumspect that they do not check or

<sup>1</sup>St. James, iv, 6.

<sup>2</sup>Opinion.

<sup>3</sup>Have words.

<sup>4</sup>Enclosure.

<sup>5</sup>St. Matthew, vii, 16.

<sup>6</sup>Plundering.

<sup>7</sup>Friends of the court, but parasites of the court.

<sup>8</sup>Plunderer.

<sup>9</sup>The people's safety is the supreme law (Cicero, Of Laws, III, 3).

<sup>10</sup>Mine and thine.

<sup>11</sup>May extend to concern the state.

oppose any points of sovereignty. Let not judges also be so ignorant of their own right, as to think there is not left to them, as a principal part of their office, a wise use and application of laws. For they may remember what the Apostle saith of a greater law than theirs: Nos scimus quia lex bona est, modo quis eâ utatur legittime.<sup>1</sup>

57.—OF ANGER

TO SEEK to extinguish anger utterly is but a bravery<sup>2</sup> of the Stoics. We have better oracles: "Be angry, but sin not. Let not the sun go down upon your anger."<sup>3</sup> Anger must be limited and confined, both in race and in time. We will first speak, how the natural inclination and habit to be angry may be attempted and calmed. Secondly, how the particular motions of anger may be repressed, or at least refrained from doing mischief. Thirdly, how to raise anger, or appease anger, in another.

For the first; there is no other way but to meditate and ruminate well upon the effects of anger, how it troubles man's life. And the best time to do this is to look back upon anger when the fit is thoroughly over. Seneca saith well, "that anger is like ruin, which breaks itself upon that it falls." The Scripture exhorteth us "to possess our souls in patience."<sup>4</sup> Whosoever is out of patience, is out of possession of his soul. Men must not turn bees;

—animasque in vulnere ponunt.<sup>5</sup>

Anger is certainly a kind of baseness; as it appears well in the weakness of those subjects in whom it reigns; children; women, old folks, sick folks. Only men must beware that they carry their anger rather with scorn than with fear; so that they may seem rather to be above the injury than below it: which is a thing easily done, if a man will give law to himself in it.

For the second point; the causes and motives of anger are chiefly three. First, to be too sensible of hurt: for no man is angry that feels not himself hurt: and therefore tender and delicate persons must needs be oft angry; they have so many things to trouble them, which more robust natures have little sense of. The next is, the apprehension and construction of the injury offered to be, in the circumstances thereof, full of contempt. For contempt is that which putteth an edge upon anger, as much or more than the hurt itself. And therefore, when men are ingenious in picking out circumstances of contempt, they do kindle their anger much. Lastly, opinion of the touch<sup>6</sup> of a man's reputation doth multiply and sharpen anger. Wherein the remedy is, that a man should have, as Consalvo was wont to say, telam honoris crassior.<sup>7</sup> But in all refrainings of anger, it is the best remedy to win time; and to make a man's self believe, that the opportunity of his revenge is not yet come, but that he foresees a time for it; and so to still himself in the mean time, and reserve it.

To contain<sup>8</sup> anger from mischief, though it take hold of a man, there be two things whereof you must have special caution. The one, of extreme bitterness of words; especially if they be aculeate<sup>9</sup> and proper; for communia maledicta<sup>10</sup> are nothing so much: and again, that in anger a man reveal no secrets; for that makes him not fit for society. The other, that you do not peremptorily break off, in any business, in a fit of anger; but howsoever you show bitterness, do not act any thing that is not revocable.

For raising and appeasing anger in another; it is done chiefly by choosing of times, when men are frowardest and worst disposed, to incense them. Again, by gathering (as was touched before) all that you can find out, to aggravate the contempt. And the two remedies are by the contraries. The former, to take good times, when first to relate to a man an angry business; for the first impression is much. And the other is, to sever, as much as may be, the construction of the injury from the point of contempt; imputing it to misunderstanding, fear, passion, or what you will.

<sup>6</sup>Censure.

<sup>7</sup>A stout web of honor.

<sup>8</sup>Restrain.

<sup>9</sup>Stinging.

<sup>10</sup>General abuses.

<sup>1</sup>We know that the law is good if a man use it lawfully (1 Timothy, i, 8).

<sup>2</sup>Boast.

<sup>3</sup>Ephesians, iv, 26.

<sup>4</sup>St. Luke, xxi, 19.

<sup>5</sup>And spend their lives in stinging (Virgil, Georgics, IV, 238).

LYRIC POETRY OF THE SIXTEENTH AND SEVENTEENTH CENTURIES

English lyric poetry of the sixteenth century is a new beginning, and has its sources not in older native literature, but in Italy. Late in the century Spenser went back to Chaucer, and to some extent in language, even more in the modulation and melody of his verse, continued and developed a national tradition, which he in turn handed on to Milton. The evidence for this is to be found, however, chiefly in Spenser's longer poems, The Shepherd's Calendar and The Faerie Queene, while much earlier in the century the course which the Elizabethan lyric was to take had been pretty clearly marked out by members of the Renaissance court of Henry VIII. The two chief poets of this earlier period were Sir Thomas Wyatt and Henry Howard, Earl of Surrey. The immediate source of their inspiration is clearly in Italy, in Petrarch and his followers, and their manner is, except at rare moments, tentative and experimental. That a new thing, however, had come into English poetry was made unmistakable when many of the poems written by Wyatt and Surrey, together with others by Grimald and by "uncertain authors," were collected and printed by Richard Tottel in 1557. This, Tottel's Miscellany as it is commonly called, was the first of a series of collections of lyrics by various writers which appeared during the latter half of the sixteenth century. The poems which Tottel printed are in large part imitative—the groping efforts of cultivated men to transplant into their own country the style, the subject-matter, and the forms of the Petrarchian lyric. Full mastery of the new kind of poetry and freedom of expression hardly came before 1580, but when they did come they seemed to come suddenly, and for some fifteen or twenty years there was a veritable outburst of lyric song, gay, easy, rich, and musical, as remarkable for its spontaneity and abandon as for its frequent intensity, and perhaps even more remarkable for the great numbers who not only felt the lyrical impulse but proved themselves able to give it well-nigh perfect expression. The more notable of the miscellanies into which many, though by no means all, of the lyrics of the period were collected were A Handful of Pleasant Delights (1584), The Phoenix' Nest (1593), England's Helicon (1600), and Davison's Poetical Rhapsody (1602).

Of the various forms which the lyric took only one can be specifically mentioned here—the sonnet. Petrarch had not only written some of his greatest poetry in sonnet-form but had connected his sonnets in a sequence, so that in effect they told the story of his moods and feelings, above all of the course of his love, and of other things as they related themselves to that central theme. The sonnet-sequence made its way to England along with the rest, and particularly in the decade from 1590 to 1600 became extraordinarily popular, it being estimated that several thousand sonnets were then written. The most notable of the sequences were Sir Philip Sidney's Astrophel and Stella, Samuel Daniel's Delia, Michael Drayton's Idea, Spenser's Amoretti, and Shakespeare's Sonnets.

On the whole, the Elizabethan burst of song was as brief as it was splendid. Violent passions are short-lived, action gives way to reflection, spontaneous expression develops into more deliberate art, and so it was with the lyric in the closing years of the sixteenth century. Its exuberance became distasteful, its sweetness cloying, and Ben Jonson, lifting the same chastening voice of good sense in the lyric as in the drama, set the example of restraint, of greater attention to form, and of practice enlightened by study of the best models of classical Greek and Roman poetry. At the same time John Donne reacted harshly and powerfully from the sweetness and the venter of conventional Platonism of the Petrarchians in their love-poetry. Probably literary historians have tended to make too much of the personal influence of Jonson and Donne. Probably they were not so much actually leaders of new movements in poetry as the earliest men to feel strongly, each in his own way, a pronounced change in the whole intellectual and emotional life of England which gathered force in the early years of the seventeenth century. One way of putting it is that a period of expansive, youthful feeling was succeeded by a period of doubt mixed with disillusionment. Certainly something like this took place, and the change made itself felt throughout literature, and not merely within the little field of the lyric; yet it still remains useful within that field to remember that Jonson and Donne were the prophets of the new age. It should also be remembered, however, that some continued, as in every generation, to live in the past and to express the influences which for them were still potent, the most notable instance of this being the so-called school of Spenserians who continued to echo their master until well into the troubled years of the middle of the seventeenth century.

SIR THOMAS WYATT

(1503-1542)

THE LOVER FOR SHAME-FASTNESS HIDETH HIS DESIRE WITHIN HIS FAITHFUL HEART

The long love that in my thought doth harbor,

And in my heart doth keep his residence,
Into my face presseth with bold pretence,
And therein campeth spreading his banner.
She that me learns to love and suffer,
And wills that in my trust, and lust's negligence,<sup>1</sup>

Be reined by reason, shame, and reverence,
With his hardness takes displeasure.
Wherewithal<sup>2</sup> unto the heart's forest he fleeth,
Leaving his enterprise with pain and cry,
And there him hideth, and not appeareth.
What may I do, when my master feareth?
But in the field with him to live and die?
For good is the life ending faithfully.

THE WAVERING LOVER WILLETH, AND DREADETH, TO MOVE HIS DESIRE

Such vain thought as wonted to mislead me
In desert hope, by well assuréd moan,
Makes me from company to live alone,
In following her whom reason bids me flee.
She flyeth as fast by gentle cruelty;
And after her my heart would fain be gone,
But arméd sighs my way do stop anon,
'Twixt hope and dread locking my liberty.
Yet as I guess, under disdainful brow
One beam of pity is in her cloudy look,
Which comforteth the mind, that erst for fear shook;

And therewithal bolded, I seek the way how
To utter the smart that I suffer within;
But such it is, I not<sup>3</sup> how to begin.

THE LOVER HAVING DREAMED OF ENJOYING OF HIS LOVE, COM-PLAINETH THAT THE DREAM IS NOT EITHER LONGER OR TRUER

Unstable dream, according to the place,
Be steadfast once, or else at least be true.
By tasted sweetness make me not to rue
The sudden loss of thy false feignéd grace.

By good respect in such a dangerous case
Thou broughtst not her into this tossing mew,<sup>4</sup>

But madest my sprite<sup>5</sup> live, my care to renew.
My body in tempest her succor to embrace.
The body dead, the sprite had his desire;
Painless was th' one, the other in delight.
Why then, alas! did it not keep it right,
Returning to leap into the fire,
And where it was at wish, it could not remain?

Such mocks of dreams they turn to deadly
pain!

DESCRIPTION OF THE CONTRARI-
OUS PASSIONS IN A LOVER

I find no peace, and all my war is done;
I fear and hope, I burn, and freeze like ice;
I fly above the wind, yet can I not arise;
And nought I have, and all the world I seize on,
That loseth nor locketh, holdeth me in prison,
And holdeth me not, yet can I scape no wise;
Nor letteth me live, nor die, at my devise,<sup>6</sup>
And yet of death it giveth me occasion.
Without eye I see; and without tongue I plain:<sup>7</sup>

I desire to perish, and yet I ask health;
I love another, and thus I hate myself;
I feed me in sorrow, and laugh in all my pain.
Likewise displeaseth me both death and life,
And my delight is causer of this strife.

THE LOVER COMPARETH HIS STATE TO A SHIP IN PERILOUS STORM
TOSSED ON THE SEA

My galley chargéd with forgetfulness
Thorough sharp seas, in winter nights doth
pass,

'Tween rock and rock; and eke mine enemy,
alas,

That is my lord, steereth with cruelty,
And every hour, a thought in readiness,
As though that death were light in such a case.

An endless wind doth tear the sail apace
Of forcéd sighs, and trusty fearfulness.

<sup>1</sup>Careless confidence.<sup>2</sup>Whereupon.<sup>3</sup>Know not.<sup>4</sup>Cage.<sup>5</sup>Spirit.<sup>6</sup>Desire.<sup>7</sup>Lament.

A rain of tears, a cloud of dark disdain
 Hath done the wearied cords great hinder-
 ance,
 Wreathed with error, and eke with ignorance.
 The stars be hid that led me to this pain;
 Drownéd is reason that should me comfort,
 And I remain despairing of the port.

A RENOUNCING OF LOVE

Farewell, Love, and all thy laws for ever!
 Thy baited hooks shall tangle me no more:
 Senec<sup>1</sup> and Plato call me from thy lore
 To perfect wealth my wit for to endeavor.
 In blind error when I did perséver,
 Thy sharp repulse, that pricketh aye so sore,
 Hath taught me to set in trifles no store;
 And 'scape forth, since liberty is lever.<sup>2</sup>
 Therefore, farewell! go trouble younger
 hearts,
 And in me claim no more authority.
 With idle youth go use thy property,
 And thereon spend thy many brittle darts;
 For hitherto though I have lost my time,
 Me list no longer rotten boughs to climb.

THE LOVER SENDETH SIGHS TO MOVE HIS SUIT

Go, burning sighs, unto the frozen heart
 Go, break the ice which pity's painful dart
 Might never pierce: and if mortal prayer
 In heaven may be heard, at least I desire
 That death or mercy be end of smart.
 Take with thee pain, whereof I have my part,
 And eke the flame from which I cannot
 start,
 And leave me then in rest, I you require.
 Go, burning sighs, fulfill that I desire,
 I must go work, I see, by craft and art,
 For truth and faith in her is laid apart:
 Alas, I cannot therefore assail her,
 With pitiful complaint and scalding fire,
 That from my breast deceivably doth start.

THE LOVER COMPLAINETH THE UN- KINDNESS OF HIS LOVE

My lute, awake, perform the last
 Labor that thou and I shall waste,
 And end that I have now begun.
 And when this song is sung and past,
 My lute, be still, for I have done.

As to be heard where ear is none,
 As lead to grave<sup>3</sup> in marble stone,
 My song may pierce her heart as soon.
 Should we then sigh, or sing, or moan?
 No, no, my lute, for I have done.

The rocks do not so cruelly
 Repulse the waves continually,
 As she my suit and affection;
 So that I am past remedy,
 Whereby my lute and I have done.

Proud of the spoil that thou hast got
 Of simple hearts through Lovè's shot,
 By whom unkind thou hast them won,
 Think not he hath his bow forgot,
 Although my lute and I have done.

Vengeance shall fall on thy disdain
 That makest but game on earnest pain.
 Think not alone under the sun
 Unquit to cause thy lovers plain,<sup>4</sup>
 Although my lute and I have done.

Perchance thee lie withered and old,
 The winter nights that are so cold,
 Plaining in vain unto the moon;
 Thy wishes then dare not be told.
 Care then who list, for I have done.

And then may chance thee to repent
 The time that thou hast lost and spent
 To cause thy lovers sigh and swoon;
 Then shalt thou know beauty but lent,
 And wish and want, as I have done.

Now cease, my lute, this is the last
 Labor that thou and I shall waste,
 And ended is that we begun.
 Now is the song both sung and past,
 My lute, be still, for I have done.

AN EARNEST SUIT TO HIS UNKIND MISTRESS NOT TO FORSAKE HIM

And wilt thou leave me thus?
 Say nay, say nay, for shame!
 To save thee from the blame
 Of all my grief and grame.<sup>5</sup>
 And wilt thou leave me thus?
 Say nay! say nay!

<sup>1</sup>Seneca.

<sup>2</sup>Preferable.

<sup>3</sup>Engrave.

<sup>4</sup>To lament.

<sup>5</sup>Sorrow.

And wilt thou leave me thus,
That hath loved thee so long
In wealth and woe among:
And is thy heart so strong
As for to leave me thus?
Say nay! say nay!

And wilt thou leave me thus,
That hath given thee my heart
Never for to depart
Neither for pain nor smart:
And wilt thou leave me thus?
Say nay! say nay!

And wilt thou leave me thus,
And have no more pity
Of him that loveth thee?
Alas, thy cruelty!
And wilt thou leave me thus?
Say nay! say nay!

THE LOVER BESEECHETH HIS MIS-TRESS NOT TO FORGET HIS STEAD-FAST FAITH AND TRUE INTENT

Forget not yet the tried intent
Of such a truth as I have meant;
My great travail so gladly spent,
Forget not yet!

Forget not yet when first began
The weary life ye know, since when
The suit, the service none tell can;
Forget not yet!

Forget not yet the great assays,
The cruel wrong, the scornful ways,
The painful patience in delays,
Forget not yet!

Forget not yet, forget not this,
How long ago hath been, and is,
The mind that never meant amiss—
Forget not yet!

Forget not then thine own approved,
The which so long hath thee so loved,
Whose steadfast faith yet never moved:
Forget not this!

OF THE MEAN AND SURE ESTATE<sup>1</sup>

WRITTEN TO JOHN POINS

My mother's maids, when they did sew and spin,

They sung sometime a song of the field mouse

That, for because her livelihood was but thin,
Would needs go seek her townish sister's
house.

She thought herself endured too much pain;
The stormy blasts her cave so sore did souse
That when the furrows swimméd with the
rain,

She must lie cold and wet in sorry plight;
And worse than that, bare meat there did remain

To comfort her when she her house had dight;<sup>2</sup>

Sometime a barley corn; sometime a bean,
For which she labored hard both day and
night

In harvest whilst she might go and glean;

And when her store was stroyéd<sup>3</sup> with the
flood,

Then welaway! for she undone was clean.

Then was she fain to take, instead of food,
Sleep, if she might, her hunger to beguile.

"My sister," quoth she, "hath a living
good,

And hence from me she dwelleth not a mile,
In cold and storm she lieth warm and dry
In bed of down, the dirt doth not defile
Her tender foot, she laboreth not as I.
Richly she feedeth, and at the rich man's cost,
And for her meat she needs not crave nor cry.

By sea, by land, of the delicates, the most
Her cater<sup>4</sup> seeks and spareth for no peril,
She feedeth on boiled bacon, meat, and roast,

And hath thereof neither charge nor travail;
And, when she list, the liquor of the grape
Doth glad her heart till that her belly swell."

And at this journey she maketh but a jape;<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup>This poem is based upon Horace, Satires II, 6. It is not, of course, a lyric, but deserves inclusion here to indicate the range of Wyatt's experiments.

<sup>2</sup>Ordered.

<sup>3</sup>Destroyed.

<sup>4</sup>Caterer.

<sup>5</sup>Jest.

So forth she goeth, trusting of all this wealth
With her sister her part so for to shape,
That if she might keep herself in health,
To live a lady while her life doth last.

And to the door now is she come by stealth,
And with her foot anon she scrapeth full fast.
Th' other, for fear, durst not well scarce
appear,

Of every noise so was the wretch aghast.
At last she asked softly who was there,
And in her language as well as she could.
"Peep!" quoth the other sister, "I am here."
"Peace," quoth the town mouse, "why speakest thou so loud?"

And by the hand she took her fair and well.
"Welcome," quoth she, "my sister, by the Rood!"

She feasted her, that joy it was to tell
The fare they had; they drank the wine so
clear,

And, as to purpose now and then it fell,
She cheeréd her with "How, sister, what cheer!"

Amid this joy befell a sorry chance,
That, welaway! the stranger bought full dear
The fare she had, for, as she looked askance,
Under a stool she spied two steaming<sup>1</sup> eyes
In a round head with sharp ears. In France
Was never mouse so feared, for, though un-
wise

Had not y-seen such a beast before,
Yet had nature taught her after her guise
To know her foe and dread him evermore.
The towny mouse fled, she knew whither to
go;

Th' other had no shift, but wonders sore Feared of her life. At home she wished her tho,<sup>2</sup>

And to the door, alas! as she did skip,
The heaven it would, lo! and eke her chance
was so,

At the threshold her silly foot did trip;
And ere she might recover it again,
The traitor cat had caught her by the hip,
And made her there against her will remain,
That had forgot her poor surety and rest
For seeming wealth wherein she thought to reign.

Alas, my Pains, how men do seek the best
And find the worst by error as they stray!
And no marvel; when sight is so opprest,

And blinds the guide, anon out of the way
Goeth guide and all in seeking quiet life.
O wretched minds, there is no gold that may Grant that you seek; no war, no peace, no
strife.

No, no, although thy head were hooped with
gold,

Sergeant with mace, halberd, sword, nor knife,

Cannot repulse the care that follow should.
Each kind of life hath with him his disease:
Live in delight even as thy lust would,
And thou shalt find, when lust doth most thee please,

It irketh straight, and by itself doth fade.
A small thing is it that may thy mind appease.

None of ye all there is that is so mad
To seek for grapes on brambles or on briars;
Nor none, I trow, that hath his wit so bad
To set his hay<sup>3</sup> for conies over rivers;
Nor ye set not a drag-net for an hare;
And yet the thing that most is your desire
Ye do mis-seek with more travail and care.
Make plain thine heart, that it be not knotted
With hope or dread, and see thy will be bare
From all effects whom vice hath ever spotted.
Thyself content with that is thee assigned,
And use it well that is to thee allotted.
Then seek no more out of thyself to find
The thing that thou hast sought so long before,

For thou shalt feel it sticking in thy mind.
Mad, if ye list to continue your sore,
Let present pass and gape on time to come,
And deep yourself in travail more and more.

Henceforth, my Pains, this shall be all
and some,

These wretched fools shall have naught else
of me;

But to the great God and to his high dome,<sup>4</sup>
None other pain pray I for them to be,
But, when the rage doth lead them from the
right,

That, looking backward, virtue they may see,
Even as she is so goodly fair and bright,
And whilst they clasp their lusts in arms across,

Grant them, good Lord, as thou mayst of thy might,

To fret inward for losing such a loss.

<sup>1</sup>Gleaming.

<sup>2</sup>Then.

<sup>3</sup>Snare.

<sup>4</sup>Judgment.

HENRY HOWARD, EARL OF SURREY

(1517?-1547)

DESCRIPTION OF SPRING WHEREIN
EACH THING RENEWS, SAVE ONLY THE LOVER

The soote<sup>1</sup> season that bud and bloom forth brings,

With green hath clad the hill and eke the
vale;

The nightingale with feathers new she sings;
The turtle<sup>2</sup> to her mate hath told her tale:

Summer is come, for every spray now
springs;

The hart hath hung his old head on the pale;

The buck in brake his winter coat he flings;

The fishes float with new repaired scale;

The adder all her slough away she slings;

The swift swallow pursueth the flies smale;

The busy bee her honey now she mings.<sup>3</sup>

Winter is worn, that was the flowers' bale:

And thus I see among these pleasant things

Each care decays, and yet my sorrow springs!

COMPLAINT OF A LOVER REBUKED

Love, that doth reign and live within my
thought,

And build his seat within my captive breast,

Clad in the arms wherein with me he fought,

Oft in my face he doth his banner rest.

But she that taught me love, and suffer pain,

My doubtful hope and eke my hot desire

With shamefast look to shadow and refrain,

Her smiling grace converteth straight to ire.

And coward Love then to the heart apace

Taketh his flight, where he doth lurk and
plain

His purpose lost, and dare not show his face.

For my lord's guilt thus faultless bide I pain.

Yet from my lord shall not my foot remove;

Sweet is the death that taketh end by love.

VOW TO LOVE FAITHFULLY HOW-SOEVER HE BE REWARDED

Set me whereas the sun doth parch the
green,

Or where his beams may not dissolve the ice;

In temperate heat, where he is felt and seen;

In presence prest of people, mad or wise;

Set me in high, or yet in low degree;

In longest night, or in the longest day;

In clearest sky, or where clouds thickest be;

In lusty youth, or when my hairs are gray:

Set me in heaven, in earth, or else in hell;

In hill, or dale, or in the foaming flood;

Thrall, or at large, alive whereso I dwell;

Sick or in health, in evil fame or good;

Hers will I be, and only with this thought

Content myself, although my chance be naught.

COMPLAINT OF THE ABSENCE OF HER LOVER BEING UPON THE SEA

O happy dames! that may embrace

The fruit of your delight;

Help to bewail the woeful case,

And eke the heavy plight,

Of me, that wanted to rejoice

The fortune of my pleasant choice:

Good ladies, help to fill my mourning voice.

In ship freight with remembrance

Of thoughts and pleasures past,

He sails that hath in governance

My life, while it will last;

With scalding sighs, for lack of gale,

Furthering his hope, that is his sail,

Toward me, the sweet port of his avail.<sup>4</sup>

Alas, how oft in dreams I see

Those eyes that were my food;

Which sometime so delighted me,

That yet they do me good;

Wherewith I wake with his return,

Whose absent flame did make me burn:

But when I find the lack, Lord, how I mourn!

When other lovers in arms across,

Rejoice their chief delight,

Drownéd in tears to mourn my loss,

I stand the bitter night

In my window, where I may see

Before the winds how the clouds flee:

Lo, what a mariner love hath made me!

And in green waves when the salt flood

Doth rise by rage of wind,

A thousand fancies in that mood,

Assail my restless mind.

<sup>1</sup>Sweet.

<sup>2</sup>Turtle-dove.

<sup>3</sup>Mixes.

<sup>4</sup>Advantage.

Alas, now drencheth<sup>1</sup> my sweet foe,
That with the spoil of my heart did go,
And left me; but, alas, why did he so?

And when the seas wax calm again,
To chase from me annoy,
My doubtful hope doth cause me pain;
So dread cuts off my joy.
Thus is my wealth mingled with woe,
And of each thought a doubt doth grow;
Now he comes! Will he come? Alas, no, no!

A PRAISE OF HIS LOVE WHEREIN HE REPROVETH THEM THAT COM-PARE THEIR LADIES WITH HIS

Give place, ye lovers, here before
That spent your boasts and brags in vain;
My lady's beauty passeth more
The best of yours, I dare well sayn,<sup>2</sup>
Than doth the sun the candle light,
Or brightest day the darkest night.

And thereto hath a troth<sup>3</sup> as just
As had Penelope the fair;
For what she saith, ye may it trust
As it by writing sealéd were:
And virtues hath she many mo<sup>4</sup>
Than I with pen have skill to show.

I could rehearse, if that I would,
The whole effect of Nature's plaint,
When she had lost the perfect mold,
The like to whom she could not paint:
With wringing hands, how she did cry,
And what she said, I know it, I.

I know she swore with raging mind,
Her kingdom only set apart,
There was no loss by law of kind<sup>5</sup>
That could have gone so near her heart.
And this was chiefly all her pain:
She could not make the like again.

Sith Nature thus gave her the praise,
To be the chieftest work she wrought;
In faith, methink, some better ways
On your behalf might well be sought,
Than to compare, as ye have done,
To match the candle with the sun.

<sup>1</sup>Drowneth.

<sup>2</sup>Say.

<sup>3</sup>Faithfulness.

<sup>4</sup>More.

<sup>5</sup>Nature.

THE MEANS TO ATTAIN HAPPY LIFE

Martial,<sup>6</sup> the things that do attain
The happy life be these, I find:
The riches left, not got with pain;
The fruitful ground; the quiet mind;
The equal friend; no grudge, no strife;
No charge of rule, no governance;
Without disease, the healthful life;
The household of continuance;
The mean<sup>7</sup> diet, no delicate fare;
True wisdom joined with simpleness;
The night discharged of all care,
Where wine the wit may not oppress;
The faithful wife, without debate;
Such sleeps as may beguile the night:
Contented with thine own estate,
Ne wish for death, ne fear his might.

OF THE DEATH OF SIR T[HO]MAS
W[YATT]

W. resteth here, that quick could never
rest;
Whose heavenly gifts, increaséd by disdain,
And virtue sank the deeper in his breast;
Such profit he by envy could obtain.
A head where wisdom mysteries did frame;
Whose hammers beat still in that lively brain
As on a stithe<sup>8</sup> where that some work of fame
Was daily wrought to turn to Britain's gain.
A visage stern and mild, where both did
grow,
Vice to condemn, in virtue to rejoice;
Amid great storms, whom grace assuréd so
To live upright and smile at fortune's choice.
A hand that taught what might be said in rime;
That reft<sup>9</sup> Chaucer the glory of his wit:
A mark, the which (unperfected, for time)
Some may approach, but never none shall hit.
A tongue that served in foreign realms his
king;
Whose courteous talk to virtue did enflame
Each noble heart; a worthy guide to bring
Our English youth by travail unto fame.

<sup>6</sup>The Latin epigrammatist. This poem is a translation of his epigram To Himself.

<sup>7</sup>Moderate.

<sup>8</sup>Anvil.

<sup>9</sup>Took from.

An eye whose judgment none affect<sup>1</sup> could
 blind,
 Friends to allure, and foes to reconcile;
 Whose piercing look did represent a mind
 With virtue fraught, reposéd, void of guile.
 A heart where dread was never so imprest,
 To hide the thought that might the truth
 advance;
 In neither fortune lost, nor yet repress,
 To swell in wealth, or yield unto mischance.
 A valiant corse,<sup>2</sup> where force and beauty met;

Happy, alas, too happy, but for foes!
 Lived, and ran the race that Nature set:
 Of manhood's shape, where she the mold did
 lose.
 But to the heavens that simple<sup>3</sup> soul is fled,
 Which left with such as covet Christ to know
 Witness of faith that never shall be dead,
 Sent for our health, but not receivéd so.
 Thus for our guilt, this jewel have we lost;
 The earth his bones, the heavens possess his ghost!

ANONYMOUS

A STUDENT AT HIS BOOK<sup>4</sup>

A student at his book, so placed
 That wealth he might have won,
 From book to wife did fleet in haste,
 From wealth to woe did run.
 Now, who hath played a feater cast,<sup>5</sup>
 Since juggling first begun?
 In knitting of himself so fast,
 Himself he hath undone.

BACK AND SIDE GO BARE<sup>6</sup>Chorus

Back and side go bare, go bare,
 Both foot and hand go cold;
 But, belly, God send thee good ale enough,
 Whether it be new or old.

I cannot eat but little meat,
 My stomach is not good;
 But sure I think that I can drink
 With him that wears a hood.
 Though I go bare, take ye no care,
 I am nothing a-cold;
 I stuff my skin so full within
 Of jolly good ale and old.

I love no roast but a nutbrown toast,
 And a crab<sup>7</sup> laid in the fire;
 A little bread shall do me stead,<sup>8</sup>
 Much bread I not desire.
 No frost nor snow, no wind, I trow,
 Can hurt me if I would,
 I am so wrapped and thoroughly lapped
 Of jolly good ale and old.

And Tib my wife, that as her life
 Loveth well good ale to seek,
 Full oft drinks she, till ye may see
 The tears run down her cheek.
 Then doth she trow<sup>9</sup> to me the bowl,
 Even as a maltworm should,
 And saith "Sweetheart, I have take my part
 Of this jolly good ale and old."

Now let them drink till they nod and wink,
 Even as good fellows should do;
 They shall not miss to have the bliss
 Good ale doth bring men to.
 And all poor souls that have scoured bowls,
 Or have them lustily trowled,
 God save the lives of them and their wives,
 Whether they be young or old.

JOHN LYLY

(1553-1606)

APELLES' SONG<sup>10</sup>

Cupid and my Campaspe played
 At cards for kisses; Cupid paid.
 He stakes his quiver, bows and arrows,
 His mother's doves and team of sparrows;

Loses them too; then down he throws
 The coral of his lip, the rose Growing on's cheek (but none knows how);
 With these, the crystal of his brow,

<sup>1</sup>No affections.<sup>2</sup>Body.<sup>3</sup>I. e., incorruptible.<sup>4</sup>One of the poems by "uncertain authors" in Tottel's Miscellany (1557).<sup>5</sup>A neater trick.<sup>6</sup>From Gammer Gurton's Needle (written c. 1562).<sup>7</sup>Apple.<sup>8</sup>Be sufficient.<sup>9</sup>Pass.<sup>10</sup>This and the following song are both from Campaspe (1584). It is possible that the songs in Lyly's plays are by another hand.

And then the dimple of his chin;
 All these did my Campaspe win.
 At last he set <sup>1</sup>her both his eyes;
 She won, and Cupid blind did rise.
 O Love, has she done this to thee?
 What shall, alas! become of me?

SPRING'S WELCOME

What bird so sings, yet so does wail?
 O 'tis the ravished nightingale.

"Jug, jug, jug, jug, tereu," she cries,
 And still her woes at midnight rise.
 Brave prick-song! who is 't now we hear?
 None but the lark so shrill and clear;
 Now at heaven's gates she claps her wings,
 The morn not waking till she sings.
 Hark, hark, with what a pretty throat
 Poor robin redbreast tunes his note!
 Hark how the jolly cuckoos sing,
 "Cuckoo," to welcome in the spring!
 "Cuckoo," to welcome in the spring!

SIR PHILIP SIDNEY

(1554-1586)

ASTROPHEL AND STELLA

I

Loving in truth, and fain in verse my love to
 show,
 That she, dear she, might take some pleasure
 of my pain,—
 Pleasure might cause her read, reading might make her know,
 Knowledge might pity win, and pity grace obtain,—
 I sought fit words to paint the blackest face
 of woe,
 Studying inventions fine, her wits to entertain, Oft turning others' leaves, to see if thence would flow
 Some fresh and fruitful showers upon my sunburnt brain.
 But words came halting forth, wanting Invention's stay;
 Invention, Nature's child, fled step-dame
 Study's blows;
 And others' feet still seemed but strangers'
 in my way.
 Thus, great with child to speak, and helpless
 in my throes,
 Biting my truant pen, beating myself for spite;
 "Fool," said my Muse to me, "look in thy heart, and write."

15

You that do search for every purling spring
 Which from the ribs of old Parnassus<sup>2</sup> flows,
 And every flower, not sweet perhaps, which grows
 Near thereabouts, into your poesy wring;

<sup>1</sup>Wagered.

<sup>2</sup>Abode of Apollo and the muses.

You that do dictionary's method bring Into your rhymes, running in rattling rows;
 You that poor Petrarch's long deceased
 woes
 With new-born sighs and denizen<sup>3</sup> wit do
 sing;
 You take wrong ways; those far-fet<sup>4</sup> helps be such
 As do bewray a want of inward touch,
 And sure, at length stolen goods do come to
 light:
 But if, both for your love and skill, your
 name
 You seek to nurse at fullest breasts of Fame,
 Stella behold, and then begin to endite.

31

With how sad steps, O Moon, thou climb'st
 the skies!
 How silently, and with how wan a face!
 What, may it be that even in heavenly place
 That busy archer his sharp arrows tries!
 Sure, if that long-with-love-acquainted eyes
 Can judge of love, thou feel'st a lover's
 case,
 I read it in thy looks; thy languished grace,
 To me, that feel the like, thy state describes,
 Then, even of fellowship, O Moon, tell me,
 Is constant love deemed there but want of
 wit?
 Are beauties there as proud as here they
 be?
 Do they above love to be loved, and yet
 Those lovers scorn whom that love doth possess?
 Do they call virtue there ungratefulness?

<sup>3</sup>Adopted, i. e., borrowed.

<sup>4</sup>Far-fetched.

39

Come, Sleep! O Sleep, the certain knot of peace,

The baiting-place of wit, the balm of woe,
The poor man's wealth, the prisoner's release,
Th' indifferent judge between the high and
low;

With shield of proof shield me from out the press

Of those fierce darts Despair at me doth
throw:

O make in me those civil wars to cease;

I will good tribute pay, if thou do so.

Take thou of me smooth pillows, sweetest
bed,

A chamber deaf of noise and blind of light,

A rosy garland and a weary head:

And if these things, as being thine by right,

Move not thy heavy grace, thou shalt in me,

Livelier than elsewhere, Stella's image see.

41

Having this day my horse, my hand, my lance

Guided so well that I obtained the prize,

Both by the judgment of the English eyes

And of some sent from that sweet enemy,
France;

Horsemen my skill in horsemanship advance,
Town folks my strength; a daintier judge applies

His praise to sleight which from good use
doth rise;

Some lucky wits impute it but to chance;

Others, because of both sides I do take

My blood from them who did excel in this,

Think Nature me a man-at-arms did make.

How far they shot awry! the true cause is,

Stella looked on, and from her heavenly face

Sent forth the beams which made so fair my race.

64

No more! My Dear, no more these counsels
try!

O give my passions leave to run their race!

Let Fortune lay on me her worst disgrace!

Let folk o'ercharged with brain, against me
cry!

Let clouds bedim my face, break in mine eye!

Let me no steps but of lost labor trace!

Let all the earth in scorn recount my case;

But do not will me from my love to fly!

I do not envy Aristotle's wit;

Nor do aspire to Cæsar's bleeding fame;

Nor ought do care, though some above me sit;

Nor hope, nor wish another course to frame:

But that which once may win thy cruel
heart.

Thou art my wit, and thou my virtue art.

95

Leave me, O Love, which reachest but to dust,

And thou, my mind, aspire to higher things!

Grow rich in that which never taketh rust:

Whatever fades, but fading pleasure brings.

Draw in thy beams, and humble all thy
might

To that sweet yoke where lasting freedoms be;
Which breaks the clouds and opens forth
the light

That doth both shine and give us sight to see.

O take fast hold! let that light be thy guide

In this small course which birth draws out to death,

And think how evil becometh him to slide

Who seeketh Heaven, and comes of heavenly breath.

Then farewell, world! thy uttermost I see:

Eternal Love, maintain thy life in me!

ELEVENTH SONG

"Who is it that this dark night

Underneath my window plaineth?"

It is one who from thy sight

Being, ah! exiled, disdaineth

Every other vulgar light.

"Why, alas! and are you he?

Be not yet those fancies changed?"

Dear, when you find change in me,

Though from me you be estranged,

Let my change to ruin be.

"Well, in absence this will die;

Leave to see, and leave to wonder."

Absence sure will help, if I

Can learn how myself to sunder

From what in my heart doth lie.

"But time will these thoughts remove;

Time doth work what no man knoweth."

Time doth as the subject prove;

With time still the affection groweth

In the faithful turtle-dove.

"What if we new beauties see?
Will not they stir new affection?"
I will think they pictures be,
(Image-like, of saint's perfection)
Poorly counterfeiting thee.

"But your reason's purest light Bids you leave such minds to nourish."
Dear, do reason no such spite;
Never doth thy beauty flourish
More than in my reason's sight.

"But the wrongs Love bears will make Love at length leave undertaking."
No, the more fools it do shake,
In the ground of so firm making,
Deeper still they drive the stake.

"Peace, I think that some give ear!
Come no more, lest I get anger!"
Bliss, I will my bliss forbear;
Fearing, sweet, you to endanger;
But my soul shall harbor there.

"Well, be gone! be gone, I say, Lest that Argus<sup>1</sup> eyes perceive you!"
O unjust is Fortune's sway,
Which can make me thus to leave you;
And from louts to run away.

SIR EDWARD DYER

(1550?–1607)

MY MIND TO ME A KINGDOM IS

My mind to me a kingdom is;
Such present joys therein I find
That it excels all other bliss
That earth affords or grows by kind:<sup>5</sup> Though much I want which most would
have,
Yet still my mind forbids to crave.

No princely pomp, no wealthy store,
No force to win the victory,
No wily wit to salve a sore,
No shape to feed a loving eye;
To none of these I yield as thrall:
For why? My mind doth serve for all.

<sup>1</sup>Argus had one hundred eyes.<sup>2</sup>From Sidney's Arcadia.<sup>3</sup>Starve.

MY TRUE-LOVE HATH MY HEART

My true-love hath my heart and I have his,
By just exchange one for the other given:
I hold his dear, and mine he cannot miss,
There never was a better bargain driven:
My true-love hath my heart, and I have his.

His heart in me keeps him and me in one.
My heart in him his thoughts and senses
guides:
He loves my heart, for once it was his own,
I cherish his because in me it bides:
My true-love hath my heart, and I have
his.

MY SHEEP ARE THOUGHTS<sup>2</sup>

My sheep are thoughts, which I both guide
and serve;
Their pasture is fair hills of fruitless love,
On barren sweets they feed, and feeding
sterve.<sup>3</sup>
I wait their lot, but will not other prove;
My sheep-hook is wan hope, which all upholds;
My weeds,<sup>4</sup> desire, cut out in endless folds;
What wool my sheep shall bear, whilst thus they live,
In you it is, you must the judgment give.

I see how plenty surfeits oft,
And hasty climbers soon do fall;
I see that those which are aloft
Mishap doth threaten most of all;
They get with toil, they keep with fear:
Such cares my mind could never bear.

Content to live, this is my stay;
I seek no more than may suffice;
I press to bear no haughty sway;
Look, what I lack my mind supplies:
Lo, thus I triumph like a king,
Content with that my mind doth bring.

Some have too much, yet still do crave;
I little have, and seek no more.
They are but poor, though much they have,
And I am rich with little store:

<sup>4</sup>Clothes.<sup>5</sup>Nature.

They poor, I rich; they beg, I give;
They lack, I leave; they pine, I live.

I laugh not at another's loss;
I grudge not at another's pain;
No worldly waves my mind can toss;
My state at one doth still remain:
I fear no foe, I fawn no friend;
I loathe not life, nor dread my end.

Some weigh their pleasure by their lust,
Their wisdom by their rage of will;

Their treasure is their only trust;
A cloaked craft their store of skill:
But all the pleasure that I find
Is to maintain a quiet mind.

My wealth is health and perfect ease;
My conscience clear my chief defence;
I neither seek by bribes to please,
Nor by deceit to breed offence:
Thus do I live; thus will I die;
Would all did so as well as I!

SIR WALTER RALEIGH

(1552?–1618)

HIS PILGRIMAGE

Give me my scallop-shell<sup>1</sup> of quiet,
My staff of faith to walk upon,
My scrip<sup>2</sup> of joy, immortal diet,
My bottle of salvation,
My gown of glory, hope's true gage;<sup>3</sup>
And thus I'll take my pilgrimage.

Blood must be my body's balmer;
No other balm will there be given;
Whilst my soul, like a quiet palmer,
Traveleth towards the land of heaven,
Over the silver mountains,
Where spring the nectar fountains.

There will I kiss
The bowl of bliss;
And drink mine everlasting fill
Upon every milken hill.
My soul will be a-dry before;
But, after, it will thirst no more.

Then by that happy blissful day
More peaceful pilgrims I shall see,
That have cast off their rags of clay,
And walk appareled fresh like me.
I'll take them first,
To quench their thirst
And taste of nectar suckets,<sup>4</sup>
At those clear wells
Where sweetness dwells,
Drawn up by saints in crystal buckets.

And when our bottles and all we Are filled with immortality,

Then the blessed paths we'll travel,
Strowed with rubies thick as gravel;
Ceilings of diamonds, sapphire floors,
High walls of coral, and pearly bowers.

From thence to heaven's bribeless hall,
Where no corrupted voices brawl;
No conscience molten into gold;
No forged accuser bought or sold;
No cause deferred, no vain-spent journey,
For there Christ is the King's attorney,
Who pleads for all, without degrees,
And he hath angels<sup>5</sup> but no fees.

And when the grand twelve million jury
Of our sins, with direful fury,
Against our souls black verdicts give,
Christ pleads his death; and then we live.
Be Thou my speaker, taintless pleader!
Unblotted lawyer! true proceeder!
Thou giv'st salvation, even for alms,
Not with a bribed lawyer's palms.

And this is mine eternal plea
To him that made heaven and earth and sea:
That, since my flesh must die so soon,
And want a head to dine next noon,
Just at the stroke, when my veins start and
spread,
Set on my soul an everlasting head!

Then am I ready, like a palmer fit,
To tread those blest paths; which before I writ.

<sup>1</sup>One of the badges of a pilgrim.

<sup>2</sup>Wallet.

<sup>3</sup>Pledge.

<sup>4</sup>Sweetmeats.

<sup>5</sup>Used with double meaning; it was also the name of a coin.

GEORGE PEELE

(1558?–1597?)

CUPID'S CURSE<sup>1</sup>

ÆNONE. Fair and fair, and twice so fair,
 As fair as any may be;
 The fairest shepherd on our green,
 A love for any lady.
 PARIS. Fair and fair, and twice so fair,
 As fair as any may be;
 Thy love is fair for thee alone,
 And for no other lady.
 ÆN. My love is fair, my love is gay,
 As fresh as bin the flowers in
 May,
 And of my love my roundelay,
 My merry, merry roundelay,
 Concludes with Cupid's curse,—
 "They that do change old love for new,
 Pray gods they change for worse!"
 AMBO SIMUL.<sup>2</sup> They that do change, etc.
 ÆN. Fair and fair, etc.
 PAR. Fair and fair, etc.

Thy love is fair, etc.
 ÆN. My love can pipe, my love can sing,
 My love can many a pretty thing,
 And of his lovely praises ring
 My merry, merry roundelays,
 Amen to Cupid's curse,—
 "They that do change," etc.
 PAR. They that do change, etc.
 AMBO. Fair and fair, etc.

HARVESTMEN A-SINGING<sup>3</sup>

All ye that lovely lovers be,
 Pray you for me:
 Lo, here we come a-sowing, a-sowing,
 And sow sweet fruits of love;
 In your sweet hearts well may it prove!
 Lo, here we come a-reaping, a-reaping,
 To reap our harvest-fruit!
 And thus we pass the year so long,
 And never be we mute.

ROBERT GREENE

(1560?–1592)

SWEET ARE THE THOUGHTS THAT SAVOR OF CONTENT<sup>4</sup>

Sweet are the thoughts that savor of content;
 The quiet mind is richer than a crown;
 Sweet are the nights in careless slumber
 spent;
 The poor estate scorns fortune's angry
 frown:
 Such sweet content, such minds, such sleep,
 such bliss,
 Beggars enjoy, when princes oft do miss.
 The homely house that harbors quiet rest;
 The cottage that affords no pride nor
 care;
 The mean that 'grees with country music
 best;
 The sweet consort of mirth and music's
 fare;
 Obscuréd life sets down a type of bliss:
 A mind content both crown and kingdom is.

WEEP NOT, MY WANTON<sup>5</sup>

Weep not, my wanton, smile upon my knee,
 When thou art old there's grief enough for
 thee.
 Mother's wag, pretty boy,
 Father's sorrow, father's joy;
 When thy father first did see
 Such a boy by him and me,
 He was glad, I was woe,
 Fortune changéd made him so,
 When he left his pretty boy
 Last his sorrow, first his joy.
 Weep not, my wanton, smile upon my knee,
 When thou art old there's grief enough for
 thee.
 Streaming tears that never stint,
 Like pearl-drops from a flint,
 Fell by course from his eyes,
 That one another's place supplies;
 Thus he grieved in every part,
 Tears of blood fell from his heart,

<sup>1</sup>From the Arraignment of Paris (1584).

<sup>2</sup>Both together.

<sup>3</sup>From The Old Wives' Tale (c. 1590).

<sup>4</sup>From The Farewell to Folly (1591).

<sup>5</sup>From Menaphon (1589).

When he left his pretty boy,
Father's sorrow, father's joy.

Weep not, my wanton, smile upon my
knee,

When thou art old there's grief enough for
thee.

The wanton smiled, father wept,
Mother cried, baby leapt;

More he crowed, more we cried,
Nature could not sorrow hide:
He must go, he must kiss
Child and mother, baby bless,
For he left his pretty boy,
Father's sorrow, father's joy.

Weep not, my wanton, smile upon my knee,
When thou art old there's grief enough for
thee.

MICHAEL DRAYTON

(1563-1631)

TO HIS COY LOVE

I pray thee, leave, love me no more,
Call home the heart you gave me!
I but in vain that saint adore
That can but will not save me.
These poor half-kisses kill me quite—
Was ever man thus servéd?
Amidst an ocean of delight
For pleasure to be stervéd?<sup>1</sup>

Show me no more those snowy breasts
With azure riverets branchéd,
Where, whilst mine eye with plenty feasts,
Yet is my thirst not stanchéd;
O Tantalus, thy pains ne'er tell!
By me thou art prevented:<sup>2</sup>
'Tis nothing to be plagued in hell,
But thus in heaven tormented!

Clip<sup>3</sup> me no more in those dear arms,
Nor thy life's comfort call me,
O these are but too powerful charms,
And do but more enthrall me!
But see how patient I am grown
In all this coil<sup>4</sup> about thee:
Come, nice thing, let my heart alone,
I cannot live without thee!

IDEA

TO THE READER OF THESE SONNETS

Into these loves, who but for passion looks,
At this first sight, here let him lay them by,
And seek elsewhere in turning other books,
Which better may his labor satisfy.
No far-fetched sigh shall ever wound my
breast;
Love from mine eye a tear shall never wring;
Nor in "Ah me's!" my whining sonnets drest!
A libertine! fantastically I sing!

<sup>1</sup>Killed.

<sup>2</sup>Anticipated.

My verse is the true image of my mind,
Ever in motion, still desiring change;
And as thus, to variety inclined,
So in all humors sportively I range!
My Muse is rightly of the English strain,
That cannot long one fashion entertain.

61

Since there's no help, come, let us kiss and
part!

Nay, I have done; you get no more of me!
And I am glad, yea, glad, with all my heart,
That thus so cleanly I myself can free.
Shake hands for ever! Cancel all our vows!
And when we meet at any time again,
Be it not seen in either of our brows,
That we one jot of former love retain!
Now at the last gasp of Love's latest
breath,

When, his pulse failing, Passion speechless
lies;

When Faith is kneeling by his bed of death,
And Innocence is closing up his eyes—

Now, if thou wouldst, when all have given him over,

From death to life thou might'st him yet recover!

ODE XI

TO THE VIRGINIAN VOYAGE

You brave heroic minds,
Worthy your country's name,
That honor still pursue;
Go and subdue!
Whilst loitering hinds
Lurk here at home with shame.

<sup>3</sup>Embrace.

<sup>4</sup>Disturbance.

Britons, you stay too long;
Quickly aboard bestow you!
And with a merry gale
Swell your stretched sail,
With vows as strong
As the winds that blow you!

Your course securely steer,
West-and-by-south forth keep!
Rocks, lee-shores, nor shoals,
When Eolus<sup>1</sup> scowls,
You need not fear,
So absolute the deep.

And cheerfully at sea,
Success you still entice,
To get the pearl and gold;
And ours to hold,
Virginia,
Earth's only Paradise.

Where Nature hath in store
Fowl, venison, and fish;
And the fruitful'st soil,—
Without your toil,
Three harvests more,
All greater than your wish.

And the ambitious vine
Crowns with his purple mass
The cedar reaching high
To kiss the sky,
The cypress, pine,
And useful sassafras.

To whom, the Golden Age<sup>2</sup>
Still Nature's laws doth give:
Nor other cares attend,
But them to defend
From winter's rage,
That long there doth not live.

When as the luscious smell
Of that delicious land,
Above the seas that flows,
The clear wind throws,
Your hearts to swell,
Approaching the dear strand.

In kenning<sup>3</sup> of the shore
(Thanks to God first given!)
O you, the happiest men,
Be frolic then!
Let cannons roar,
Frightening the wide heaven!

And in regions far,
Such heroes bring ye forth
As those from whom we came!
And plant our name
Under that star
Not known unto our North!

And as there plenty grows
The laurel everywhere,
Apollo's sacred tree,
You may it see
A poet's brows
To crown, that may sing there.

Thy Voyages attend,
Industrious Hakluyt!<sup>4</sup>
Whose reading shall inflame
Men to seek fame;
And much commend
To after times thy wit.

ODE XII

TO THE CAMBRO-BRITONS AND THEIR HARP HIS BALLAD OF AGINCOURT

Fair stood the wind for France,
When we our sails advance;
Nor now to prove our chance Longer will tarry;
But putting to the main,
At Caux, the mouth of Seine,
With all his martial train
Landed King Harry.<sup>5</sup>

And taking many a fort,
Furnished in warlike sort,
Marcheth towards Agincourt<sup>6</sup>

<sup>1</sup>Recognition.

<sup>4</sup>Richard Hakluyt (1553–1616), compiler of a famous collection of narratives of Elizabethan voyages, first published in 1589.

<sup>5</sup>Henry V.

<sup>6</sup>The battle of Agincourt was fought on 25 October, 1415.

<sup>1</sup>God of winds.

<sup>2</sup>A fabled period of peace and plenty.

In happy hour;
Skirmishing day by day,
With those that stopped his way,
Where the French general lay
With all his power.

Which, in his height of pride,
King Henry to deride,
His ransom to provide,
To the King sending;
Which he neglects the while,
As from a nation vile,
Yet, with an angry smile,
Their fall portending.

And turning to his men,
Quoth our brave Henry then:
"Though they to one be ten
Be not amazed!
Yet have we well begun:
Battles so bravely won
Have ever to the sun
By Fame been raised!

"And for myself," quoth he,
"This my full rest shall be:
England ne'er mourn for me,
Nor more esteem me!
Victor I will remain.
Or on this earth lie slain;
Never shall she sustain Loss to redeem me!

"Poitiers and Cressy<sup>1</sup> tell,
When most their pride did swell,
Under our swords they fell.
No less our skill is,
Than when our Grandsire great,
Claiming the regal seat,
By many a warlike feat
Lopped the French lilies."

The Duke of York so dread
The eager vanward led;
With the main, Henry sped
Amongst his henchmen;
Exeter had the rear,
A braver man not there!
O Lord, how hot they were
On the false Frenchmen!

They now to fight are gone;
Armor on armor shone;
Drum now to drum did groan:
To hear, was wonder;
That, with the cries they make,
The very earth did shake;
Trumpet to trumpet spake;
Thunder to thunder.

Well it thine age became,
O noble Erpingham,
Which didst the signal aim
To our hid forces!
When, from a meadow by,
Like a storm suddenly,
The English archery
Stuck the French horses.

With Spanish yew so strong;
Arrows a cloth-yard long,
That like to serpents stung,
Piercing the weather.
None from his fellow starts;
But, playing manly parts,
And like true English hearts,
Stuck close together.

When down their bows they threw,
And forth their bilboes<sup>2</sup> drew,
And on the French they flew:
Not one was tardy.
Arms were from shoulders sent,
Scalps to the teeth were rent,
Down the French peasants went:
Our men were hardy.

This while our noble King,
His broad sword brandishing,
Down the French host did ding,<sup>3</sup>
As to o'erwhelm it.
And many a deep wound lent;
His arms with blood besprent,
And many a cruel dent
Bruised his helmet.

Gloucester, that duke so good,
Next of the royal blood,
For famous England stood
With his brave brother.
Clarence, in steel so bright,
Though but a maiden knight,
Yet in that furious fight
Scarce such another!

<sup>1</sup>Victories of the English in France during the Hundred Years' War. The battle of Crécy took place on 26 August, 1346; that of Poitiers on 19 September, 1356.

<sup>2</sup>Swords.

<sup>3</sup>Strike.

Warwick in blood did wade;
 Oxford, the foe invade,
 And cruel slaughter made,
 Still as they ran up.
 Suffolk his axe did ply;
 Beaumont and Willoughby
 Bare them right doughtily; Ferrers, and Fanhope.

Upon Saint Crispin's Day
 Fought was this noble fray;
 Which Fame did not delay
 To England to carry.
 O, when shall English men
 With such acts fill a pen?
 Or England breed again
 Such a King Harry?

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE

(1564-1616)

SONNETS

15

When I consider everything that grows
 Holds in perfection but a little moment,
 That this huge stage presenteth nought but shows
 Whereon the stars in secret influence com-
 ment;
 When I perceive that men as plants increase,
 Cheered and checked even by the self-same
 sky;
 Vaunt in their youthful sap, at height decrease,
 And wear their brave state out of memory;
 Then the conceit<sup>1</sup> of this inconstant stay
 Sets you most rich in youth before my sight,
 Where wasteful Time debateth<sup>2</sup> with Decay,
 To change your day of youth to sullied night;
 And all in war with Time for love of you,
 As he takes from you, I engraft you new.

18

Shall I compare thee to a summer's day?
 Thou art more lovely and more temperate:
 Rough winds do shake the darling buds of
 May,
 And summer's lease hath all too short a
 date;
 Sometime too hot the eye of heaven shines,
 And often is his gold complexion dimmed;
 And every fair from fair sometime declines,
 By chance or nature's changing course untrimmed:
 But thy eternal summer shall not fade
 Nor lose possession of that fair thou ow'st;
 Nor shall Death brag thou wand'rest in his
 shade,
 When in eternal lines to time thou grow'st;

So long as men can breathe or eyes can
 see,
 So long lives this and this gives life to
 thee.

25

Let those who are in favor with their stars
 Of public honor and proud titles boast,
 Whilst I, whom fortune of such triumph bars,
 Unlooked for<sup>3</sup> joy in that I honor most.
 Great princes' favorites their fair leaves
 spread
 But as the marigold at the sun's eye,
 And in themselves their pride lies buried,
 For at a frown they in their glory die,
 The painful warrior famoused for fight,
 After a thousand victories once foiled,
 Is from the book of honor razéd quite,
 And all the rest forgot for which he toiled.
 Then happy I, that love and am beloved Where I may not remove nor be removed.

29

When, in disgrace with Fortune and men's
 eyes,
 I all alone bewep my outcast state,
 And trouble deaf heaven with my bootless
 cries,
 And look upon myself and curse my fate,
 Wishing me like to one more rich in hope,
 Featured like him, like him with friends
 possessed,
 Desiring this man's art, and that man's scope,
 With what I most enjoy contented least;
 Yet in these thoughts myself almost despis-
 ing,
 Haply I think on thee; and then my state,
 Like to the lark at break of day arising From sullen earth, sings hymns at heaven's gate;

<sup>1</sup>Thought.<sup>2</sup>Contends.<sup>3</sup>Unnoticed.

For thy sweet love remembered such wealth brings
That then I scorn to change my state with kings.

30

When to the sessions of sweet silent thought
I summon up remembrance of things past,
I sigh the lack of many a thing I sought,
And with old woes new wail my dear time's waste;

Then can I drown an eye, unused to flow,
For precious friends hid in death's dateless
night,

And weep afresh love's long since canceled
woe,

And moan the expense of many a vanished
sight:

Then can I grieve at grievances foregone,
And heavily from woe to woe tell<sup>1</sup> o'er,
The sad account of fore-bemoanéd moan,
Which I new pay as if not paid before.

But if the while I think on thee, dear
friend,

All losses are restored and sorrows end.

31

Thy bosom is endeared with all hearts
Which I by lacking have supposed dead;
And there reigns love and all love's loving
parts,

And all those friends which I thought buried.
How many a holy and obsequious tear
Hath dear religious love stolen from mine eye
As interest of the dead, which now appear
But things removed that hidden in thee lie!
Thou art the grave where buried love doth
live,

Hung with the trophies of my lovers gone,
Who all their parts of me to thee did give,
That due of many<sup>2</sup> now is thine alone.

Their images I loved I view in thee,
And thou, all they, hast all the all of me.

55

Not marble, nor the gilded monuments
Of princes, shall outlive this powerful rhyme;
But you shall shine more bright in these contents<sup>3</sup>

Than unswept stone besmeared with sluttish
time.

<sup>1</sup>Count.<sup>2</sup>So that what belonged to many.<sup>3</sup>In these verses.

When wasteful war shall statues overturn,
And broils root out the work of masonry,
Nor Mars his sword nor war's quick fire shall burn

The living record of your memory.

'Gainst death and all-oblivious enmity Shall you pace forth; your praise shall still find room

Even in the eyes of all posterity

That wear this world out to the ending doom.

So, till the judgment that<sup>4</sup> yourself arise,
You live in this, and dwell in lovers' eyes.

57

Being your slave, what should I do but tend Upon the hours and times of your desire?

I have no precious time at all to spend,

Nor services to do, till you require.

Nor dare I chide the world-without-end hour Whilst I, my sovereign, watch the clock for
you,

Nor think the bitterness of absence sour

When you have bid your servant once adieu;

Nor dare I question with my jealous thought

Where you may be, or your affairs suppose,

But, like a sad slave, stay and think of
nought

Save, where you are how happy you make those.

So true a fool is love that in your will

Though you do anything, he thinks no ill.

60

Like as the waves make towards the pebbled
shore,

So do our minutes hasten to their end;

Each changing place with that which goes
before,

In sequent toil all forwards do contend.

Nativity, once in the main of light,

Crawls to maturity, wherewith being crowned,

Crooked<sup>5</sup> eclipses 'gainst his glory fight,

And Time that gave doth now his gift con-
found.

Time doth transfix the flourish<sup>6</sup> set on youth

And delves the parallels in beauty's brow,

Feeds on the rarities of nature's truth,

And nothing stands but for his scythe to mow;

<sup>4</sup>When.<sup>5</sup>Malignant.<sup>6</sup>Ornamentation.

And yet to times in hope<sup>1</sup> my verse shall stand,
Praising thy worth, despite his cruel hand.

64

When I have seen by Time's fell hand defaced

The rich proud cost of outworn buried age;
When sometime lofty towers I see downrazed

And brass eternal slave to mortal rage;
When I have seen the hungry ocean gain
Advantage on the kingdom of the shore,
And the firm soil win of the watery main,
Increasing store with loss and loss with store;
When I have seen such interchange of state,
Or state<sup>2</sup> itself confounded to decay
Ruin hath taught me thus to ruminate,
That Time will come and take my love away.

This thought is as a death, which cannot choose

But weep to have that which it fears to lose.

71

No longer mourn for me when I am dead
Than you shall hear the surly sullen bell
Give warning to the world that I am fled
From this vile world, with vilest worms to dwell.

Nay, if you read this line, remember not
The hand that writ it; for I love you so That I in your sweet thoughts would be forgot

If thinking on me then should make you woe.
O, if, I say, you look upon this verse
When I perhaps compounded am with clay,
Do not so much as my poor name rehearse,
But let your love even with my life decay,
Lest the wise world should look into your
moan

And mock you with me after I am gone.

73

That time of year thou mayst in me behold
When yellow leaves, or none, or few, do hang Upon those boughs which shake against the cold,

Bare ruined choirs where late the sweet birds sang.

In me thou see'st the twilight of such day
As after sunset fadeth in the west,
Which by and by black night doth take away,
Death's second self, that seals up all in rest.
In me thou see'st the glowing of such fire
That on the ashes of his youth doth lie,
As the death-bed whereon it must expire,
Consumed with that which it was nourished
by.

This thou perceiv'st, which makes thy love
more strong,

To love that well which thou must leave ere long.

90

Then hate me when thou wilt; if ever, now;
Now, while the world is bent my deeds to
cross,

Join with the spite of fortune, make me bow,
And do not drop in for an after-loss:

Ah, do not, when my heart hath scaped this
sorrow,

Come in the rearward of a conquered woe;
Give not a windy night a rainy morrow,
To linger out a purposed overthrow.

If thou wilt leave me, do not leave me last,
When other petty griefs have done their
spite,

But in the onset come; so shall I taste
At first the very worst of fortune's might,
And other strains of woe, which now seem
woe,

Compared with loss of thee will not seem so.

94

They that have power to hurt and will do
none,

That do not do the thing they most do
show,

Who, moving others, are themselves as
stone,

Unmovéd, cold, and to temptation slow,
They rightly do inherit heaven's graces
And husband nature's riches from expense;
They are the lords and owners of their faces,
Others but stewards of their excellence.<sup>3</sup>

The summer's flower is to the summer sweet,
Though to itself it only live and die,
But if that flower with base infection meet,
The basest weed outbraves his dignity:

<sup>1</sup>Future times.

<sup>2</sup>Greatness.

<sup>3</sup>Beautiful persons who are commanded by their passions hold their beauty as stewards for the commanders, their passions, which are the real owners.

For sweetest things turn sourest by their deeds;
Lilies that fester smell far worse than weeds.

97

How like a winter hath my absence been
From thee, the pleasure of the fleeting year!
What freezings have I felt, what dark days
seen!

What old December's bareness everywhere!
And yet this time removed<sup>1</sup> was summer's
time,

The teeming autumn, big with rich increase,
Bearing the wanton burden of the prime,<sup>2</sup>
Like widowed wombs after their lords' decease.

Yet this abundant issue seemed to me
But hope of orphans<sup>3</sup> and unfathered fruit;
For summer and his pleasures wait on thee,
And, thou away, the very birds are mute;
Or, if they sing, 'tis with so dull a cheer
That leaves look pale, dreading the winter's near.

98

From you have I been absent in the spring,
When proud-pied<sup>4</sup> April, dressed in all his trim,

Hath put a spirit of youth in everything,
That heavy Saturn<sup>5</sup> laughed and leaped with
him.

Yet nor the lays of birds nor the sweet smell
Of different flowers in<sup>6</sup> odor and in hue
Could make me any summer's story<sup>7</sup> tell,
Or from their proud lap pluck them where they grew;

Nor did I wonder at the lily's white,
Nor praise the deep vermilion in the rose;
They were but sweet, but figures of delight
Drawn after you, you pattern of all those.

Yet seemed it winter still, and, you
away,

As with your shadow I with these did
play.

<sup>1</sup>Time of my absence.

<sup>2</sup>Spring.

<sup>3</sup>Hope such as orphans bring.

<sup>4</sup>Gaily colored.

<sup>5</sup>Planet credited in astrology with producing a sluggish and gloomy temperament in those born under its influence.

<sup>6</sup>Flowers different in.

<sup>7</sup>Probably means, any cheerful story.

106

When in the chronicle of wasted time
I see descriptions of the fairest wights,<sup>8</sup>
And beauty making beautiful old rhyme
In praise of ladies dead and lovely knights;
Then, in the blazon of sweet beauty's best,
Of hand, of foot, of lip, of eye, of brow,
I see their antique pen would have expressed
Even such a beauty as you master<sup>9</sup> now.
So all their praises are but prophecies
Of this our time, all you prefiguring;
And, for they looked but with divining eyes,
They had not skill enough your worth to sing:

For we, which now behold these present
days,

Have eyes to wonder, but lack tongues to praise.

109

O, never say that I was false of heart,
Though absence seemed my flame to qualify.<sup>10</sup>

As easy might I from myself depart
As from my soul, which in thy breast doth lie.
That is my home of love; if I have ranged,
Like him that travels I return again,
Just to the time, not with the time exchanged.<sup>11</sup>

So that myself bring water for my stain.
Never believe, though in my nature reigned
All frailties that besiege all kinds of blood,
That it could so preposterously be stained,
To leave for nothing all thy sum of good;

For nothing this wide universe I call,
Save thou, my rose; in it thou art my all.

110

Alas, 'tis true I have gone here and there
And made myself a motley<sup>12</sup> to the view, Gored<sup>13</sup> mine own thoughts, sold cheap what is most dear,

Made old offences of affections new;
Most true it is that I have looked on truth
Askance and strangely: but, by all above,
These blenches<sup>14</sup> gave my heart another
youth,

And worse essays proved thee my best of love.

<sup>8</sup>People.

<sup>9</sup>Have.

<sup>10</sup>Moderate.

<sup>11</sup>Punctual, not altered by the time.

<sup>12</sup>Jester.

<sup>13</sup>Injured.

<sup>14</sup>Aberrations.

Now all is done, have what shall have no end:
 Mine appetite I never more will grind<sup>1</sup>
 On newer proof, to try an older friend,
 A god in love, to whom I am confined.

Then give me welcome, next my heaven
 the best,
 Even to thy pure and most most loving breast.

111

O, for my sake do you with Fortune chide,
 The guilty goddess of my harmful deeds,
 That did not better for my life provide Than public means which public manners breeds.

Thence comes it that my name receives a brand,

And almost thence my nature is subdued
 To what it works in, like the dyer's hand.
 Pity me, then, and wish I were renewed;
 Whilst, like a willing patient, I will drink
 Potions of eisel<sup>2</sup> 'gainst my strong infection;
 No bitterness that I will bitter think,
 Nor double penance, to correct correction.

Pity me then, dear friend, and I assure ye
 Even that your pity is enough to cure me.

116

Let me not to the marriage of true minds
 Admit impediments. Love is not love
 Which alters when it alteration finds,
 Or bends with the remover to remove.
 O, no! it is an ever-fixed mark
 That looks on tempests and is never shaken;
 It is the star to every wand'ring bark,
 Whose worth's unknown, although his height
 be taken.

Love's not Time's fool,<sup>3</sup> though rosy lips and cheeks

Within his bending sickle's compass come;
 Love alters not with his brief hours and weeks,

But bears it out even to the edge of doom.

If this be error and upon me proved,
 I never writ, nor no man ever loved.

129

The expense of spirit in a waste of shame
 Is lust in action; and till action, lust
 Is perjured, murd'rous, bloody, full of blame,
 Savage, extreme, rude, cruel, not to trust,

<sup>1</sup>Whet.

<sup>2</sup>Vinegar.

<sup>3</sup>The sport of time.

Enjoyed no sooner but despised straight,
 Past reason hunted, and no sooner had Past reason hated, as a swallowed bait
 On purpose laid to make the taker mad;
 Mad in pursuit and in possession so;
 Had, having, and in quest to have, extreme;
 A bliss in proof,<sup>4</sup> and proved, a very woe;
 Before, a joy proposed; behind, a dream.

All this the world well knows; yet none knows well

To shun the heaven that leads men to this hell.

130

My mistress' eyes are nothing like the sun;
 Coral is far more red than her lips' red;
 If snow be white, why then her breasts are dun;

If hairs be wires, black wires grow on her
 head.

I have seen roses damasked, red and white,
 But no such roses see I in her cheeks;
 And in some perfumes is there more delight
 Than in the breath that from my mistress reeks.

I love to hear her speak, yet well I know
 That music hath a far more pleasing sound;
 I grant I never saw a goddess go;
 My mistress, when she walks, treads on the
 ground:

And yet, by heaven, I think my love as rare

As any she belied with false compare.

146

Poor soul, the center of my sinful earth,<sup>5</sup> [Thrall to] these rebel powers that thee aray,

Why dost thou pine within and suffer dearth,
 Painting thy outward walls so costly gay?

Why so large cost, having so short a lease,
 Dost thou upon thy fading mansion spend?

Shall worms, inheritors of this excess,
 Eat up thy charge? Is this thy body's end?
 Then, soul, live thou upon thy servant's
 loss,

And let that pine to aggravate<sup>6</sup> thy store;
 Buy terms divine<sup>7</sup> in selling hours of dross;
 Within be fed, without be rich no more;

<sup>4</sup>In experience.

<sup>5</sup>My body.

<sup>6</sup>Increase.

<sup>7</sup>Eternity.<sup>3</sup>

So shalt thou feed on Death, that feeds on
men,
And Death once dead, there's no more dying then.

SONGS FROM THE PLAYS

WHEN DAISIES PIED<sup>1</sup>

When daisies pied and violets blue,
And lady-smocks all silver-white,
And cuckoo-buds of yellow hue
Do paint the meadows with delight,
The cuckoo then, on every tree,
Mocks married men; for thus sings he,
Cuckoo!
Cuckoo, cuckoo!—O word of fear,
Unpleasing to a married ear!

When shepherds pipe on oaten straws,
And merry larks are ploughmen's clocks,
When turtles<sup>2</sup> tread, and rooks, and daws,
And maidens bleach their summer smocks
The cuckoo then, on every tree,
Mocks married men; for thus sings he,
Cuckoo!
Cuckoo, cuckoo!—O word of fear,
Unpleasing to a married ear!

WHEN ICICLES HANG BY THE WALL

When icicles hang by the wall,
And Dick the shepherd blows his nail,
And Tom bears logs into the hall,
And milk comes frozen home in pail,
When blood is nipped and ways be foul,
Then nightly sings the staring owl,
"Tu-whit, tu-who!" a merry note,
While greasy Joan doth keel<sup>3</sup> the pot.

When all aloud the wind doth blow,
And coughing drowns the parson's saw,
And birds sit brooding in the snow,
And Marian's nose looks red and raw,
When roasted crabs<sup>4</sup> hiss in the bowl,
Then nightly sings the staring owl,
"Tu-whit, tu-who!" a merry note,
While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

<sup>1</sup>This and the following song are from Love's Labor's Lost.

<sup>2</sup>Turtle-doves.

<sup>3</sup>Skim.

<sup>4</sup>Apples.

WHO IS SYLVIA?<sup>1</sup>

Who is Sylvia? what is she,
That all our swains commend her?
Holy, fair, and wise is she;
The heaven such grace did lend her,
That she might admiréd be.

Is she kind as she is fair?
For beauty lives with kindness.
Love doth to her eyes repair
To help him of his blindness,
And, being helped, inhabits there.

Then to Sylvia let us sing,
That Sylvia is excelling;
She excels each mortal thing
Upon the dull earth dwelling:
To her let us garlands bring.

TELL ME, WHERE IS FANCY BRED<sup>2</sup>

Tell me, where is fancy bred,
Or in the heart, or in the head?
How begot, how nourishéd?
Reply, reply.

It is engendered in the eyes,
With gazing fed; and fancy dies
In the cradle where it lies:
Let us all ring fancy's knell;
I'll begin it,—Ding-dong, bell.
Ding, dong, bell.

UNDER THE GREENWOOD TREE<sup>3</sup>

Under the greenwood tree
Who loves to lie with me,
And turn his merry note
Unto the sweet bird's throat,
Come hither! come hither! come hither!
Here shall he see
No enemy
But winter and rough weather.

Who doth ambition shun
And loves to live i' the sun,
Seeking the food he eats
And pleased with what he gets,
Come hither! come hither! come hither!
Here shall he see
No enemy
But winter and rough weather.

<sup>2</sup>From Two Gentlemen of Verona.

<sup>3</sup>From The Merchant of Venice.

<sup>1</sup>This and the following song are from As You Like It.

BLOW, BLOW, THOU WINTER WIND

Blow, blow, thou winter wind!
 Thou art not so unkind
 As man's ingratitude;
 Thy tooth is not so keen,
 Because thou art not seen,
 Although thy breath be rude.

Heigh ho! sing, heigh ho! unto the green
 holly:

Most friendship is feigning, most loving mere folly:

Then, heigh ho, the holly!
 This life is most jolly.

Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky!
 That dost not bite so nigh
 As benefits forgot;
 Though thou the waters warp,
 Thy sting is not so sharp
 As friend remembered not.

Heigh ho! sing, heigh ho! etc.

SIGH NO MORE<sup>1</sup>

Sigh no more, ladies, sigh no more!
 Men were deceivers ever,
 One foot in sea and one on shore,
 To one thing constant never:
 Then sigh not so, but let them go,
 And be you blithe and bonny,
 Converting all your sounds of woe
 Into Hey nonny, nonny!

Sing no more ditties, sing no moe<sup>2</sup>
 Of dumps so dull and heavy!
 The fraud of men was ever so,
 Since summer first was leafy:
 Then sigh not so, but let them go,
 And be you blithe and bonny,
 Converting all your sounds of woe
 Into Hey nonny, nonny!

O MISTRESS MINE<sup>3</sup>

O Mistress mine, where are you roaming?
 O, stay and hear; your true love's coming,
 That can sing both high and low:
 Trip no further, pretty sweetening,
 Journeys end in lovers meeting,
 Every wise man's son doth know.

<sup>1</sup>From Much Ado about Nothing.

<sup>2</sup>More.

<sup>3</sup>From Twelfth Night.

What is love? 't is not hereafter;
 Present mirth hath present laughter;
 What's to come is still unsure:
 In delay there lies no plenty;
 Then come kiss me, sweet and twenty,
 Youth's a stuff will not endure.

TAKE, O, TAKE THOSE LIPS AWAY<sup>4</sup>

Take, O, take those lips away,
 That so sweetly were forsworn;
 And those eyes, the break of day,
 Lights that do mislead the morn:
 But my kisses bring again,
 Bring again;
 Seals of love, but sealed in vain,
 Sealed in vain!

COME, THOU MONARCH OF THE VINE<sup>5</sup>

Come, thou monarch of the vine,
 Plumpy Bacchus with pink eyne!<sup>6</sup>
 In thy vats our cares be drowned,
 With thy grapes our hairs be crowned!
 Cup us, till the world go round,
 Cup us, till the world go round!

HARK, 'HARK! THE LARK<sup>7</sup>

Hark, hark! the lark at heaven's gate sings,
 And Phœbus 'gins arise,
 His steeds to water at those springs
 On chaliced flowers that lies;
 And winking Mary-buds begin
 To ope their golden eyes:
 With every thing that pretty is,
 My lady sweet, arise!
 Arise, arise!

FEAR NO MORE THE HEAT O' THE SUN

Fear no more the heat o' th' sun,
 Nor the furious winter's rages;
 Thou thy worldly task hast done,
 Home art gone, and ta'en thy wages:
 Golden lads and girls all must,
 As chimney-sweepers, come to dust.

Fear no more the frown o' th' great;
 Thou art past the tyrant's stroke;
 Care no more to clothe and eat;
 To thee the reed is as the oak:
 The Scepter, Learning, Physic, must
 All follow this, and come to dust.

<sup>4</sup>From Measure for Measure.

<sup>5</sup>From Antony and Cleopatra.

<sup>6</sup>Eyes.

<sup>7</sup>This and the following song are from Cymbeline.

Fear no more the lightning-flash,
 Nor th' all-dreaded thunder-stone;
 Fear not slander, censure rash;
 Thou hast finished joy and moan:
 All lovers young, all lovers must Consign to thee, and come to dust.

No exorciser harm thee!
 Nor no witchcraft charm thee!
 Ghost unlaid forbear thee!
 Nothing ill come near thee!
 Quiet consummation have;
 And renownéd be thy grave!

FULL FATHOM FIVE THY FATHER
 LIES<sup>1</sup>

Full fathom five thy father lies:
 Of his bones are coral made;
 Those are pearls that were his eyes;
 Nothing of him that doth fade
 But doth suffer a sea-change
 Into something rich and strange.
 Sea-nymphs hourly ring his knell;
Ding-dong!
 Hark! now I hear them,—Ding-dong, bell!

THOMAS CAMPION
 (1567-1619)

FOLLOW THY FAIR SUN

Follow thy fair sun, unhappy shadow,
 Though thou be black as night,
 And she made all of light,
 Yet follow thy fair sun, unhappy shadow.

Follow her whose light thy light depriveth,
 Though here thou liest disgraced,
 And she in heaven is placed,
 Yet follow her whose light the world reviveth.

Follow those pure beams whose beauty
 burneth,
 That so have scorched thee,
 As thou still black must be,
 Till her kind beams thy black to brightness turneth.

Follow her while yet her glory shineth:
 There comes a luckless night,
 That will dim all her light;
 And this the black unhappy shade divineth.

Follow still, since so thy fates ordained;
 The Sun must have his shade,
 Till both at once do fade,
 The Sun still proud, the shadow still disdainéd.

FOLLOW YOUR SAINT

Follow your Saint, follow with accents sweet;
 Haste you, sad notes, fall at her flying feet;
 There, wrapt in cloud of sorrow, pity move,
 And tell the ravisher of my soul I perish for her love:
 But if she scorns my never-ceasing pain,
 Then burst with sighing in her sight and ne'er return again.

All that I sung still to her praise did tend,
 Still she was first; still she my songs did end.
 Yet she my love and music both doth fly,
 The music that her echo is and beauty's sympathy;
 Then let my notes pursue her scornful flight:
 It shall suffice that they were breathed and died for her delight.

THERE IS A GARDEN IN HER FACE

There is a garden in her face
 Where roses and white lilies grow;
 A heavenly paradise is that place,
 Wherein all pleasant fruits do flow:
 There cherries grow, which none may buy Till "Cherry-ripe" themselves do
 cry.

Those cherries fairly do enclose
 Of orient pearl a double row,
 Which when her lovely laughter shows,
 They look like rosebuds filled with snow;
 Yet them nor peer nor prince can buy Till "Cherry-ripe" themselves do
 cry.

Her eyes like angels watch them still;
 Her brows like bended bows do stand,
 Threatening with piercing frowns to kill
 All that attempt, with eye or hand,
 Those sacred cherries to come nigh
 Till "Cherry-ripe" themselves do cry.

<sup>1</sup>From The Tempest.

WHEN THOU MUST HOME

When thou must home to shades of underground,

And there arrived, a new admiréd guest,
The beauteous spirits do engirt thee round,
White Iope, blithe Helen, and the rest,
To hear the stories of thy finished love
From that smooth tongue whose music hell
can move;

Then wilt thou speak of banqueting delights,
Of masques and revels which sweet youth did make,

Of tourneys and great challenges of knights,
And all these triumphs for thy beauty's sake:
When thou hast told these honors done to
thee,

Then tell, O tell, how thou didst murder me.

NOW WINTER NIGHTS ENLARGE

Now winter nights enlarge
The number of their hours;
And clouds their storms discharge
Upon the airy towers.
Let now the chimneys blaze,
And cups o'erflow with wine,
Let well-tuned words amaze
With harmony divine.
Now yellow waxen lights
Shall wait on honey love;
While youthful revels, masques, and courtly sights,
Sleep's leaden spells remove.

This time doth well dispense
With lovers' long discourse;
Much speech hath some defence,
Though beauty no remorse.
All do not all things well:
Some measures comely tread,
Some knotted riddles tell,
Some poems smoothly read.
The summer hath his joys
And winter his delights;
Though love and all his pleasures
are but toys,
They shorten tedious nights.

ROSE-CHEEKED LAURA

Rose-cheeked Laura, come,
Sing thou smoothly with thy beauty's
Silent music, either other Sweetly gracing.

Lovely forms do flow
From consent<sup>1</sup> divinely framéd;
Heav'n is music, and thy beauty's
Birth is heavenly.

These dull notes we sing
Discords need for helps to grace them;
Only beauty purely loving Knows no discord,

But still moves delight,
Like clear springs renewed by flowing,
Ever perfect, ever in themselves eternal.

NEVER LOVE

Never love, unless you can Bear with all the faults of man:
Men sometimes will jealous be,
Though but little cause they see,
And hang the head, as discontent,
And speak what straight they will repent.

Men that but one Saint adore,
Make a show of love to more:
Beauty must be scorned in none,
Though but truly served in one:
For what is courtship, but disguise?
True hearts may have dissembling eyes.

Men when their affairs require,
Must awhile themselves retire;
Sometimes hunt, and sometimes hawk,
And not ever sit and talk.
If these, and such like you can bear,
Then like, and love, and never fear.

BEAUTY IS BUT A PAINTED HELL

Beauty is but a painted hell:
Aye me, aye me,
She wounds them that admire it,
She kills them that desire it;
Give her pride but fuel,
No fire is more cruel.

Pity from ev'ry heart is fled:
Aye me, aye me,
Since false desire could borrow Tears of dissembled sorrow,
Constant vows turn truthless,
Love cruel, Beauty ruthless.

<sup>1</sup>Harmony.

Sorrow can laugh, and Fury sing:
 Aye me, aye me,
 My raving griefs discover
 I lived too true a lover;
 The first step to madness
 Is the excess of sadness.

THE MAN OF LIFE UPRIGHT

The man of life upright,
 Whose guiltless heart is free
 From all dishonest deeds,
 Or thought of vanity;

The man whose silent days
 In harmless joys are spent,
 Whom hopes cannot delude,
 Nor sorrow discontent;

That man needs neither towers
 Nor armor for defence,
 Nor secret vaults to fly
 From thunder's violence.

He only can behold
 With unaffrighted eyes
 The horrors of the deep
 And terrors of the skies.

Thus, scorning all the cares
 That fate or fortune brings,
 He makes the heav'n his book,
 His wisdom heav'nly things,

Good thoughts his only friends,
 His wealth a well-spent age,
 The earth his sober inn
 And quiet pilgrimage.

BEN JONSON

(1573?-1637)

HYMN TO DIANA

Queen and Huntress, chaste and fair,
 Now the sun is laid to sleep,
 Seated in thy silver chair
 State in wonted manner keep:
 Hesperus entreats thy light,
 Goddess excellently bright.

Earth, let not thy envious shade
 Dare itself to interpose;
 Cynthia's shining orb was made Heaven to clear when day did close:
 Bless us then with wishéd sight,
 Goddess excellently bright.

Lay thy bow of pearl apart
 And thy crystal-shining quiver;
 Give unto the flying hart
 Space to breathe, how short soever:
 Thou that mak'st a day of night,
 Goddess excellently bright.

SONG: TO CELIA

Come, my Celia, let us prove,
 While we can, the sports of love.
 Time will not be ours for ever;
 He, at length, our good will sever;
 Spend not then his gifts in vain.
 Suns that set may rise again;

But if once we lose this light,
 'T is with us perpetual night.
 Why should we defer our joys?
 Fame and rumor are but toys.
 Cannot we delude the eyes
 Of a few poor household spies?
 Or his easier ears beguile,
 Thus removed by our wife?
 'T is no sin love's fruits to steal;
 But the sweet theft to reveal,
 To be taken, to be seen,
 These have crimes accounted been.

TO CELIA

Drink to me only with thine eyes,
 And I will pledge with mine;
 Or leave a kiss but in the cup,
 And I'll not look for wine.
 The thirst that from the soul doth rise
 Doth ask a drink divine;
 But might I of Jove's nectar sup,
 I would not change for thine.

I sent thee late a rosy wreath,
 Not so much honoring thee
 As giving it a hope, that there
 It could not withered be.
 But thou thereon didst only breathe,
 And sent'st it back to me;
 Since when it grows, and smells, I swear,
 Not of itself, but thee.

SONG:

THAT WOMEN ARE BUT MEN'S SHADOWS

Follow a shadow, it still flies you,
 Seem to fly it, it will pursue:
 So court a mistress, she denies you;
 Let her alone, she will court you.
 Say are not women truly, then,
 Styled but the shadows of us men?

At morn and even shades are longest;
 At noon they are or short, or none:
 So men at weakest, they are strongest,
 But grant us perfect, they're not known.
 Say are not women truly, then,
 Styled but the shadows of us men?

STILL TO BE NEAT

Still to be neat, still to be drest,
 As you were going to a feast;
 Still to be powdered, still perfumed;—
 Lady, it is to be presumed,
 Though art's hid causes are not found,
 All is not sweet, all is not sound.

Give me a look, give me a face,
 That makes simplicity a grace;
 Robes loosely flowing, hair as free:
 Such sweet neglect more taketh me
 Than all th' adulteries of art;
 They strike mine eyes, but not my heart.

HER TRIUMPH

See the chariot at hand here of Love,
 Wherein my Lady rideth!
 Each that draws is a swan or a dove,
 And well the car Love guideth.
 As she goes, all hearts do duty
 Unto her beauty;
 And enamored, do wish, so they might
 But enjoy such a sight,
 That they still were to run by her side,
 Through swords, through seas, whither she would ride.

Do but look on her eyes, they do light
 All that Love's world compriseth!
 Do but look on her hair, it is bright
 As Love's star when it riseth!
 Do but mark, her forehead's smother
 Than words that soothe her;

And from her arched brows, such a grace
 Sheds itself through the face
 As alone there triumphs to the life
 All the gain, all the good, of the elements'
 strife.

Have you seen but a bright lily grow
 Before rude hands have touched it?
 Have you marked but the fall of the snow
 Before the soil hath smutched<sup>1</sup> it?
 Have you felt the wool of the beaver?
 Or swan's down ever?
 Or have smelt o' the bud of the briar?
 Or the nard in the fire?
 Or have tasted the bag of the bee!
 O so white! O so soft! O so sweet is she!

AN ODE

High-spirited friend,
 I send nor balms, nor corsives to your
 wound;
 Your faith hath found
 A gentler, and more agile hand, to tend
 The cure of that which is but corporal,
 And doubtful days, which were named critical,
 Have made their fairest flight,
 And now are out of sight.
 Yet doth some wholesome physic for the mind,
 Wrapt in this paper lie,
 Which in the taking if you misapply,
 You are unkind.

Your covetous hand,
 Happy in that fair honor it hath gained,
 Must now be reined.
 True valor doth her own renown command
 In one full action; nor have you now more
 To do, than be a husband of that store.
 Think but how dear you bought
 This same which you have caught,
 Such thoughts will make you more in love with truth:
 'Tis wisdom, and that high,
 For men to use their fortune reverently,
 Even in youth.

A SONG

O do not wanton with those eyes,
 Lest I be sick with seeing;
 Nor cast them down, but let them rise,
 Lest shame destroy their being.

<sup>1</sup>Dirtied.

O be not angry with those fires,
 For then their threats will kill me;
 Nor look too kind on my desires,
 For then my hopes will spill me.

O do not steep them in thy tears,
 For so will sorrow slay me;
 Nor spread them as distract with fears;
 Mine own enough betray me.

A NYMPH'S PASSION

I love, and he loves me again,
 Yet dare I not tell who;
 For if the nymphs should know my swain,
 I fear they'd love him too;
     Yet if he be not known,
     The pleasure is as good as none,
 For that's a narrow joy is but our own.

I'll tell, that if they be not glad,
 They yet may envy me;
 But then if I grow jealous mad,
     And of them pitied be,
     It were a plague 'bove scorn:
     And yet it cannot be forborn, Unless my heart would, as my thought, be torn.

He is, if they can find him, fair,
 And fresh and fragrant too,
 As summer's sky, or purgéd air,
 And looks as lilies do
     That are this morning blown;
     Yet, yet I doubt he is not known,
 And fear much more, that more of him be shown.

But he hath eyes so round, and bright,
 As make away my doubt,
 Where Love may all his torches light
     Though hate had put them out:
     But then, t' increase my fears,
     What nymph soe'er his voice but hears,
 Will be my rival, though she have but ears.

I'll tell no more, and yet I love,
 And he loves me; yet no
 One unbecoming thought doth move
     From either heart, I know;
     But so exempt from blame,
     As it would be to each a fame,
 If love or fear would let me tell his name.

TO THE MEMORY OF MY BELOVED MASTER WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE

To draw no envy, Shakespeare, on thy name,
 Am I thus ample to thy book and fame;
 While I confess thy writings to be such As neither man, nor muse, can praise too much.

'T is true, and all men's suffrage. But these ways

Were not the paths I meant unto thy praise;
 For silliest ignorance on these may light,
 Which, when it sounds at best, but echoes
     right;

Or blind affection, which doth ne'er advance
 The truth, but gropes, and urgeth all by
     chance;

Or crafty malice might pretend this praise,
 And think to ruin, where it seemed to raise.
 These are, as some infamous bawd or whore Should praise a matron. What could hurt her more?

But thou art proof against them, and, indeed,
 Above the ill fortune of them, or the need.

I therefore will begin. Soul of the age!
 The applause, delight, the wonder of our stage!

My Shakespeare, rise! I will not lodge thee
     by

Chaucer, or Spenser, or bid Beaumont lie
 A little further, to make thee a room:

Thou art a monument without a tomb,
 And art alive still while thy book doth live
 And we have wits to read and praise to give.
 That I not mix thee so, my brain excuses,
 I mean with great, but disproportioned Muses;

For if I thought my judgment were of years,
 I should commit thee surely with thy peers,
 And tell how far thou didst our Lyly out-
     shine,

Or sporting Kyd, or Marlowe's mighty line.
 And though thou hadst small Latin and less Greek,

From thence to honor thee, I would not seek
 For names; but call forth thundering
     Æschylus,

Euripides, and Sophocles to us;
 Pacuvius,<sup>1</sup> Accius,<sup>1</sup> him of Cordova<sup>2</sup> dead,
 To life again, to hear thy buskin<sup>3</sup> tread,

<sup>1</sup>Roman tragic poet.

<sup>2</sup>Seneca the tragic poet.

<sup>3</sup>The high boot worn in classical times by actors in tragedy.

And shake a stage; or, when thy socks<sup>1</sup> were
on,

Leave thee alone for the comparison
Of all that insolent Greece or haughty Rome
Sent forth, or since did from their ashes come.
Triumph, my Britain, thou hast one to show
To whom all scenes of Europe homage owe.
He was not of an age, but for all time!

And all the Muses still were in their prime,
When, like Apollo, he came forth to warm
Our ears, or like a Mercury to charm!

Nature herself was proud of his designs
And joyed to wear the dressing of his lines!
Which were so richly spun, and woven so fit,
As, since, she will vouchsafe no other wit.

The merry Greek, tart Aristophanes,
Neat Terence, witty Plautus, now not please;
But antiquated and deserted lie,
As they were not of Nature's family.

Yet must I not give Nature all; thy art,
My gentle Shakespeare, must enjoy a part.
For though the poet's matter nature be,
His art doth give the fashion; and, that he

Who casts to write a living line, must sweat,
(Such as thine are) and strike the second heat
Upon the Muses' anvil; turn the same
(And himself with it) that he thinks to frame,
Or, for the laurel, he may gain a scorn;
For a good poet's made, as well as born.

And such wert thou! Look how the father's
face

Lives in his issue, even so the race
Of Shakespeare's mind and manners brightly shines

In his well turnéd, and true filéd lines;
In each of which he seems to shake a lance,
As brandished at the eyes of ignorance.

Sweet Swan of Avon! what a sight it were
To see thee in our waters yet appear,
And make those flights upon the banks of Thames,

That so did take Eliza, and our James!<sup>2</sup>
But stay, I see thee in the hemisphere
Advanced, and made a constellation there!
Shine forth, thou Star of poets, and with rage
Or influence, chide or cheer the drooping
stage,

Which, since thy flight from hence, hath mourned like night,
And despairs day, but for thy volume's light.

A PINDARIC ODE

TO THE IMMORTAL MEMORY AND FRIEND-SHIP OF THAT NOBLE PAIR, SIR LUCIUS
CARY AND SIR H. MORISON.<sup>3</sup>

I

The Strophe, or Turn

Brave infant of Saguntum,<sup>4</sup> clear
Thy coming forth in that great year,
When the prodigious Hannibal did crown
His rage with razing your immortal town.
Thou looking then about,
Ere thou wert half got out,
Wise child, didst hastily return,
And mad'st thy mother's womb thine urn.
How summ'd<sup>5</sup> a circle didst thou leave man-
kind
Of deepest lore, could we the center find!

The Antistrophe, or Counter-Turn

Did wiser nature draw thee back,
From out the horror of that sack;
Where shame, faith, honor, and regard of
right,
Lay trampled on? the deeds of death and
night
Urged, hurried forth, and hurled
Upon the affrighted world;
Fire, famine, and fell fury met,
And all on utmost ruin set:
As, could they but life's miseries foresee,
No doubt all infants would return like thee.

The Epode, or Stand

For what is life, if measured by the space,
Not by the act?
Or maskéd man, if valued by his face,
Above his fact?<sup>6</sup>
Here's one outlived his peers
And told forth fourscore years:

<sup>3</sup>Pindar was the greatest of Greek lyric poets. This poem is modeled upon his odes in its stanzaic structure, and to some extent in its style and tone. Sir Lucius Cary, Viscount Falkland, was himself a poet and the friend of men of letters, who visited him freely at his country house near Oxford. He married the sister of Sir Henry Morison. Morison died in 1629, shortly before Jonson's ode was written.

<sup>4</sup>A city in Spain captured by Hannibal after a painful siege (219 B. C.). The story told by Jonson is recorded by Pliny, Natural History, VII, iii.

<sup>5</sup>Complete.

<sup>6</sup>Deed.

<sup>1</sup>Light shoes worn in classical times by actors in comedy.

<sup>2</sup>Queen Elizabeth and James I.

He vexéd time, and busied the whole
state:
Troubled both foes and friends;
But ever to no ends:
What did this stirrer but die late?
How well at twenty had he fallen or stood!<sup>1</sup>
For three of his four score he did no good.

II

The Strophe, or Turn

He entered well by virtuous parts,
Got up, and thrived with honest arts,
He purchased friends, and fame, and honors
then,
And had his noble name advanced with men;
But weary of that flight,
He stooped in all men's sight
To sordid flatteries, acts of strife,
And sunk in that dead sea of life,
So deep, as he did then death's waters sup,
But that the cork of title buoyed him up.

The Antistrophe, or Counter-Turn

Alas! but Morison fell young!
He never fell,—thou fall'st, my tongue.
He stood a soldier to the last right end,
A perfect patriot and a noble friend;
But most, a virtuous son.
All offices were done
By him, so ample, full, and round,
In weight, in measure, number, sound,
As, though his age imperfect might appear,
His life was of humanity the sphere.<sup>2</sup>

The Epode, or Stand

Go now, and tell<sup>3</sup> our days summed up with fears,
And make them years;
Produce thy mass of miseries on the stage,
To swell thine age;
Repeat of things a throng,
To show thou hast been long,
Not lived; for life doth her great actions spell
By what was done and wrought
In season, and so brought
To light: her measures are, how well
Each syllable answered, and was formed how fair;
These make the lines of life, and that's her air!

III

The Strophe, or Turn

It is not growing like a tree
In bulk, doth make men better be;
Or standing long an oak, three hundred year,
To fall a log at last, dry, bald, and sear:
A lily of a day,
Is fairer far, in May,
Although it fall and die that night;
It was the plant and flower of light.
In small proportions we just beauties see;
And in short measures life may perfect be.

The Antistrophe, or Counter-Turn

Call, noble Lucius, then, for wine,
And let thy looks with gladness shine;
Accept this garland, plant it on thy head,
And think, nay know, thy Morrison's not dead.

He leaped the present age,
Possessed with holy rage,
To see that bright eternal day;
Of which we priests and poets say
Such truths as we expect for happy men;
And there he lives with memory and Ben

The Epode, or Stand

Jonson, who sung this of him, ere he went,
Himself, to rest,
Or taste a part of that full joy he meant
To have exprest,
In this bright asterism;<sup>4</sup>
Where it were friendship's schism,
Were not his Lucius long with us to tarry,
To separate these twi-
Lights, the Dioscuri;<sup>5</sup>
And keep the one half from his Harry.
But fate doth so alternate the design,
Whilst that in heaven, this light on earth
must shine.

IV

The Strophe, or Turn

And shine as you exalted are;
Two names of friendship, but one star:
Of hearts the union, and those not by chance
Made, or indenture, or leased out t' advance
The profits for a time.
No pleasures vain did chime,

<sup>1</sup>Stopped.<sup>2</sup>I. e., included all that humanity may achieve.<sup>3</sup>Count.<sup>4</sup>Constellation.<sup>5</sup>Castor and Pollux, children of Zeus.

Of rhymes, or riots, at your feasts,
Orgies of drink, or feigned protests;
But simple love of greatness and of good,
That knits brave minds and manners more than blood.

The Antistrophe, or Counter-Turn

This made you first to know the why
You liked, then after, to apply
That liking; and approach so one the t'
other,

Till either grew a portion of the other;
Each styléd by his end,
The copy of his friend.

You lived to be the great sir-names
And titles by which all made claims Unto the Virtue: nothing perfect done,
But as a Cary or a Morison.

The Epode, or Stand

And such a force the fair example had,
As they that saw
The good and durst not practise it, were glad
That such a law

Was left yet to mankind;
Where they might read and find Friendship, indeed, was written not in words;

And with the heart, not pen,
Of two so early men,
Whose lines her rolls were, and records;
Who, ere the first down blooméd on the chin,
Had sowed these fruits, and got the harvest in.

EPITAPH ON ELIZABETH, L. H.

Would'st thou hear what man can say
In a little? Reader, stay.

Underneath this stone doth lie
As much beauty as could die:
Which in life did harbor give
To more virtue than doth live.

If at all she had a fault,
Leave it buried in this vault.
One name was Elizabeth,
The other, let it sleep with death!
Fitter, where it died, to tell,
Than that it lived at all. Farewell!

EPITAPH ON SALATHIEL PAVY

Weep with me, all you that read
This little story:
And know, for whom a tear you shed
Death's self is sorry.
'T was a child that so did thrive
In grace and feature,
As heaven and nature seemed to strive
Which owned the creature.
Years he numbered scarce thirteen
When fates turned cruel,
Yet three filled zodiacs<sup>1</sup> had he been
The stage's jewel;
And did act, what now we moan,
Old men so duly,
As, soth, the Parcae<sup>2</sup> thought him one,
He played so truly.
So, by error, to his fate
They all consented;
But viewing him since, alas, too late!
They have repented;
And have sought, to give new birth,
In baths to steep him;
But being so much too good for earth,
Heaven vows to keep him.

JOHN DONNE

(1573-1631)

SONG

Go and catch a falling star,
Get with child a mandrake root,<sup>3</sup>
Tell me where all past years are,
Or who cleft the devil's foot;
Teach me to hear mermaids singing,
Or to keep off envy's stinging,
And find
What wind
Serves to advance an honest mind.

If thou be'st born to strange sights,
Things invisible to see,
Ride ten thousand days and nights
Till age snow white hairs on thee;

<sup>1</sup>Full years.

<sup>2</sup>The Fates.

<sup>3</sup>This root has a shape somewhat like that of the human body.

Thou, when thou return'st, wilt tell me
 All strange wonders that befell thee,
     And swear
     No where
 Lives a woman true and fair.

If thou find'st one, let me know;
     Such a pilgrimage were sweet.
 Yet do not; I would not go,
     Though at next door we might meet.
 Though she were true when you met her,
 And last till you write your letter,
     Yet she Will be False, ere I come, to two or three.

THE INDIFFERENT

I can love both fair and brown;
 Her whom abundance melts, and her whom want betrays;
 Her who loves loneliness best, and her who masks and plays;
 Her whom the country formed, and whom
     the town;
 Her who believes, and her who tries;
 Her who still weeps with spongy eyes,
 And her who is dry cork and never cries.
 I can love her, and her, and you, and you;
 I can love any, so she be not true.

Will no other vice content you?
 Will it not serve your turn to do as did your mothers?
 Or have you all old vices spent and now
     would find out others?
 Or doth a fear that men are true torment
     you?
 O we are not, be not you so;
 Let me—and do you—twenty know;
 Rob me, but bind me not, and let me go.
 Must I, who came to travel thorough you, Grow your fixed subject, because you are true?

Venus heard me sigh this song;
 And by love's sweetest part, variety, she
     swore,
 She heard not this till now; it should be so
     no more.
 She went, examined, and returned ere long,
 And said, "Alas! some two or three Poor heretics in love there be,

Which think to stablish dangerous constancy.
 But I have told them, 'Since you will be
     true,
 You shall be true to them who're false to
     you.'"

LOVERS' INFINITENESS

If yet I have not all thy love,
 Dear, I shall never have it all,
 I cannot breathe one other sigh, to move,
 Nor can intreat one other tear to fall,
 And all my treasure, which should purchase
     thee,
 Sighs, tears, and oaths, and letters, I have spent.
 Yet no more can be due to me,
 Than at the bargain made was meant;
 If then thy gift of love were partial,
 That some to me, some should to others
     fall,
 Dear, I shall never have thee all.

Or if then thou gavest me all,
 All was but all, which thou hadst then;
 But if in thy heart, since, there be or shall,
 New love created be, by other men,
 Which have their stocks entire, and can in
     tears,
 In sighs, in oaths, and letters outbid me,
 This new love may beget new fears,
 For, this love was not vowed by thee;
 And yet it was, thy gift being general,
 The ground, thy heart is mine, what ever
     shall
 Grow there, dear; I should have it all.

Yet I would not have all yet;
 He that hath all can have no more,
 And since my love doth every day admit
 New growth, thou shouldst have new rewards in store;
 Thou canst not every day give me thy heart,
 If thou canst give it, then thou never gavest
     it:
 Love's riddles are, that though thy heart
     depart,
 It stays at home, and thou with losing savest
     it:
 But we will have a way more liberal,
 Than changing hearts, to join them, so we shall
 Be one, and one another's all.

THE DREAM

Dear love, for nothing less than thee
 Would I have broke this happy dream;
 It was a theme
 For reason, much too strong for fantasy.
 Therefore thou waked'st me wisely; yet
 My dream thou brok'st not, but continued'st
 it.

Thou art so true that thoughts of thee
 suffice
 To make dreams truths and fables histories;
 Enter these arms, for since thou thought'st
 it best
 Not to dream all my dream, let's act the rest.

As lightning, or a taper's light,
 Thine eyes, and not thine noise, waked me;
 Yet I thought thee—
 For thou lov'st truth—an angel, at first
 sight;
 But when I saw thou saw'st my heart,
 And knew'st my thoughts beyond an angel's
 art,
 When thou knew'st what I dreamt, when thou knew'st when Excess of joy would wake me, and cam'st
 then,
 I must confess it could not choose but be Profane to think thee anything but thee.

Coming and staying showed thee thee,
 But rising makes me doubt that now
 Thou art not thou.
 That love is weak where fear's as strong as
 he;
 'T is not all spirit pure and brave
 If mixture it of fear, shame, honor have.
 Perchance as torches, which must ready be,
 Men light and put out, so thou deal'st with
 me.
 Thou cam'st to kindle, go'st to come: then I Will dream that hope again, but else would die.

THE ECSTASY

Where, like a pillow on a bed,
 A pregnant bank swelled up, to rest
 The violet's reclining head,
 Sat we two, one another's best.
 Our hands were firmly cemented
 With a fast balm, which thence did spring,
 Our eye-beams twisted, and did thread
 Our eyes, upon one double string;

So t' intergraft our hands, as yet
 Was all the means to make us one,
 And pictures in our eyes to get
 Was all our propagation.
 As 'twixt two equal armies, fate
 Suspends uncertain victory,
 Our souls (which to advance their state, Were gone out) hung 'twixt her, and
 me.
 And whil'st our souls negotiate there,
 We like sepulchral statues lay;
 All day, the same our postures were,
 And we said nothing, all the day.
 If any, so by love refined
 That he soul's language understood,
 And by good love were grown all mind,
 Within convenient distance stood,
 He (though he knew not which soul spake,
 Because both meant, both spake the same)
 Might thence a new concoction take,
 And part far purer than he came.
 This Ecstasy doth unperplex
 (We said) and tell us what we love;
 We see by this, it was not sex,
 We see, we saw not what did move:<sup>1</sup>
 But as all several souls contain Mixture of things, they know not what,
 Love, these mixed souls, doth mix again,
 And makes both one, each this and that.
 A single violet transplant,
 The strength, the color, and the size,
 (All which before was poor, and scant)
 Redoubles still, and multiplies.
 When love, with one another so Interanimates two souls,
 That abler soul, which thence doth flow,
 Defects of loneliness controls.
 We then, who are this new soul, know
 Of what we are composed, and made,
 For, th' atomies of which we grow,
 Are souls, whom no change can invade.
 But O alas, so long, so far
 Our bodies why do we forbear?
 They are ours, though they are not we; we
 are
 The intelligences, they the sphere.
 We owe them thanks, because they thus,
 Did us, to us, at first convey,
 Yielded their forces, sense, to us,
 Nor are dross to us, but allay.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup>We see now that we did not before know the true source of our love.

<sup>2</sup>Alloy.

On man heaven's influence works not so,

But that it first imprints the air,

So soul into the soul may flow,

Though it to body first repair.

As our blood labors to beget

Spirits, as like souls as it can,

Because such fingers need to knit

That subtle knot, which makes us man:

So must pure lovers' souls descend

T' affections, and to faculties,

Which sense may reach and apprehend,

Else a great prince in prison lies.

T' our bodies turn we then, that so

Weak men on love revealed may look;

Love's mysteries in souls do grow,

But yet the body is his book.

And if some lover, such as we,

Have heard this dialogue of one,

Let him still mark us, he shall see

Small change, when we're to bodies gone.

THE FUNERAL

Whoever comes to shroud me, do not harm

Nor question much

That subtle wreath of hair about mine arm;

The mystery, the sign you must not touch,

For 'tis my outward soul,

Viceroy to that which, unto heav'n being
gone,

Will leave this to control

And keep these limbs, her provinces, from dissolution.

For if the sinewy thread my brain lets fall

Through every part

Can tie those parts, and make me one of all;

Those hairs which upward grew, and strength and art

Have from a better brain,

Can better do't: except she meant that I

By this should know my pain,

As prisoners then are manacled, when they're condemned to die.

Whate'er she meant by 't, bury it with me;

For since I am

Love's martyr, it might breed idolatry

If into other hands these relics came;

As 'twas humility

To afford to it all that a soul can do,

So 'tis some bravery

That, since you would have none of me, I bury some of you.

HOLY SONNET

Death, be not proud, though some have called thee

Mighty and dreadful, for thou art not so;

For those whom thou think'st thou dost overthrow

Die not, poor Death; nor yet canst thou kill me.

From rest and sleep, which but thy picture
be,

Much pleasure; then from thee much more must flow;

And soonest our best men with thee do go—
Rest of their bones and souls' delivery!

Thou'rt slave to fate, chance, kings, and desperate men,

And dost with poison, war, and sickness
dwell;

And poppy or charms can make us sleep as
well

And better than thy stroke. Why swell'st thou then?

One short sleep past, we wake eternally,

And Death shall be no more: Death, thou shalt die!

A HYMN TO GOD THE FATHER

Wilt thou forgive that sin where I begun,

Which was my sin, though it were done
before?

Wilt thou forgive that sin through which I
run,

And do run still, though still I do deplore?

When thou hast done, thou hast not done;

For I have more.

Wilt thou forgive that sin which I have won

Others to sin, and made my sins their door?

Wilt thou forgive that sin which I did shun

A year or two, but wallowed in a score?

When thou hast done, thou hast not done;

For I have more.

I have a sin of fear, that when I've spun

My last thread, I shall perish on the shore;

But swear by thyself that at my death thy Son

Shall shine as he shines now and hereto-
fore;

And having done that, thou hast done;

I fear no more.

ROBERT HERRICK

(1591-1674)

THE ARGUMENT OF HIS BOOK

I sing of brooks, of blossoms, birds and bowers,
 Of April, May, of June and July-flowers;
 I sing of May-poles, hock-carts, wassails, wakes,<sup>1</sup>
 Of bridegrooms, brides, and of their bridal cakes;
 I write of youth, of love, and have access
 By these to sing of cleanly wantonness;
 I sing of dews, of rains, and, piece by piece,
 Of balm, of oil, of spice and ambergris;
 I sing of times trans-shifting, and I write
 How roses first came red and lilies white;
 I write of groves, of twilights, and I sing
 The court of Mab, and of the Fairy King;
 I write of hell; I sing (and ever shall)
 Of heaven, and hope to have it after all.

UPON THE LOSS OF HIS MISTRESSES

I have lost, and lately, these Many dainty mistresses:
 Stately Julia, prime of all;
 Sapho next, a principal;
 Smooth Anthea, for a skin
 White and heaven-like crystalline;
 Sweet Electra, and the choice
 Myrha, for the lute and voice.
 Next, Corinna, for her wit,
 And the graceful use of it;
 With Perilla: all are gone,
 Only Herrick's left alone,
 For to number sorrow by Their departures hence, and die.

CHERRY-RIPE

Cherry-ripe, ripe, ripe, I cry,
 Full and fair ones; come and buy!
 If so be you ask me where
 They do grow, I answer, there,
 Where my Julia's lips do smile;
 There's the land, or cherry-isle,
 Whose plantations fully show
 All the year where cherries grow.

DELIGHT IN DISORDER

A sweet disorder in the dress
 Kindles in clothes a wantonness.
 A lawn about the shoulders thrown Into a fine distraction;
 An erring lace, which here and there
 Enthralls the crimson stomacher;<sup>2</sup>
 A cuff neglectful, and thereby Ribbons to flow confusedly;
 A winning wave (deserving note)
 In the tempestuous petticoat;
 A careless shoe-string, in whose tie
 I see a wild civility;—
 Do more bewitch me than when art
 Is too precise in every part.

CORINNA'S GOING A-MAYING

Get up, get up for shame, the blooming morn
 Upon her wings presents the god unshorn.
 See how Aurora throws her fair
 Fresh-quilted colors through the air:
 Get up, sweet slug-a-bed, and see
 The dew bespangling herb and tree.
 Each flower has wept and bow'd toward the east
 Above an hour since: yet you not dressed;
 Nay! not so much as out of bed?
 When all the birds have matins said
 And sung their thankful hymns, 'tis sin,
 Nay, profanation, to keep in,
 Whenas a thousand virgins on this day
 Spring, sooner than the lark, to fetch in May.

Rise, and put on your foliage, and be seen
 To come forth, like the spring-time, fresh and green,
 And sweet as Flora.<sup>3</sup> Take no care
 For jewels for your gown or hair:
 Fear not; the leaves will strew
 Gems in abundance upon you:
 Besides, the childhood of the day has kept,
 Against you come, some orient pearls unwept;
 Come and receive them while the light
 Hangs on the dew-locks of the night:
 And Titan<sup>4</sup> on the eastern hill
 Retires himself, or else stands still

<sup>1</sup>A hock-cart is the last cart drawn from the field at harvest. Wassail is a drinking-bout. Wake is a merry-making or fair held on the anniversary of the dedication of a church.

<sup>2</sup>Front-piece of woman's dress.

<sup>3</sup>Goddess of flowers.

<sup>4</sup>The sun.

Till you come forth. Wash, dress, be brief
in praying:
Few beads<sup>1</sup> are best when once we go a-Maying.

Come, my Corinna, come; and, coming mark
How each field turns a street, each street a park

Made green and trimmed with trees; see how

Devotion gives each house a bough

Or branch: each porch, each door ere this
An ark, a tabernacle is,

Made up of white-thorn, neatly interwove;
As if here were those cooler shades of love.

Can such delights be in the street
And open fields and we not see 't?

Come, we'll abroad; and let's obey

The proclamation made for May:

And sin no more, as we have done, by staying;
But, my Corinna, come, let's go a-Maying.

There's not a budding boy or girl this day
But is got up, and gone to bring in May.

A deal of youth, ere this, is come

Back, and with white-thorn laden home.

Some have despatched their cakes and cream

Before that we have left to dream:

And some have wept, and wooed, and
plighted troth,

And chose their priest, ere we can cast off
cloth:

Many a green-gown<sup>2</sup> has been given;

Many a kiss, both odd and even:

Many a glance too has been sent

From out the eye, love's firmament;

Many a jest told of the keys betraying

This night, and locks picked, yet we're not a-Maying.

Come, let us go while we are in our prime;
And take the harmless folly of the time.

We shall grow old apace, and die

Before we know our liberty.

Our life is short, and our days run

As fast away as does the sun;

And, as a vapor or a drop of rain,

Once lost, can ne'er be found again,

So when or you or I are made

A fable, song, or fleeting shade,

All love, all liking, all delight
Lies drowned with us in endless night.
Then while time serves, and we are but decaying,
Come, my Corinna, come let's go a-Maying.

TO THE VIRGINS TO MAKE MUCH OF TIME

Gather ye rosebuds while ye may,
Old Time is still a-flying;
And this same flower that smiles to-day,
To-morrow will be dying.

The glorious lamp of heaven, the sun,
The higher he's a-getting,
The sooner will his race be run,
And nearer he's to setting.

That age is best which is the first,
When youth and blood are warmer;
But being spent, the worse and worst
Times still succeed the former.

Then be not coy, but use your time,
And while ye may, go marry;
For, having lost but once your prime,
You may forever tarry.

TO MUSIC, TO BECALM HIS FEVER

Charm me asleep, and melt me so
With thy delicious numbers,
That being ravished, hence I go Away in easy slumbers.

Ease my sick head,
And make my bed,

Thou power that canst sever

From me this ill;

And quickly still,

Though thou not kill

My fever.

Thou sweetly canst convert the same

From a consuming fire,

Into a gentle-licking flame,

And make it thus expire.

Then make me weep

My pains asleep,

And give me such reposes,

That I, poor I,

May think, thereby,

I live and die

'Mongst roses.

<sup>1</sup>Prayers.

<sup>2</sup>Many a tumble on the grass.

Fall on me like a silent dew,
 Or like those maiden showers,
 Which, by the peep of day, do strew
 A baptism o'er the flowers.
 Melt, melt my pains
 With thy soft strains;
 That having ease me given,
 With full delight,
 I leave this light,
 And take my flight
 For heaven.

TO ANTHEA, WHO MAY COMMAND HIM ANYTHING

Bid me to live, and I will live
 Thy protestant to be:
 Or bid me love, and I will give
 A loving heart to thee.

A heart as soft, a heart as kind,
 A heart as sound and free
 As in the whole world thou canst find,
 That heart I'll give to thee.

Bid that heart stay, and it will stay,
 To honor thy decree:
 Or bid it languish quite away,
 And 't shall do so for thee.

Bid me to weep, and I will weep,
 While I have eyes to see:
 And having none, yet I will keep
 A heart to weep for thee.

Bid me despair, and I'll despair,
 Under that cypress tree:
 Or bid me die, and I will dare
 E'en death, to die for thee.

Thou art my life, my love, my heart,
 The very eyes of me,
 And hast command of every part,
 To live and die for thee.

UPON A CHILD THAT DIED

Here she lies, a pretty bud,
 Lately made of flesh and blood:
 Who as soon fell fast asleep,
 As her little eyes did peep.
 Give her strewings, but not stir
 The earth that lightly covers her.

TO DAFFODILS

Fair Daffodils, we weep to see
 You haste away so soon;
 As yet the early rising sun
 Has not attained his noon.
 Stay, stay,
 Until the hasting day
 Has run
 But to the even-song;
 And, having prayed together, we
 Will go with you along.

We have short time to stay, as you,
 We have as short a spring;
 As quick a growth to meet decay,
 As you, or anything.
 We die
 As your hours do, and dry
 Away,
 Like to the summer's rain;
 Or as the pearls of morning's dew,
 Ne'er to be found again.

TO DAISIES, NOT TO SHUT SO SOON

Shut not so soon; the dull-eyed night
 Has not as yet begun
 To make a seizure on the light,
 Or to seal up the sun.

No marigolds yet closéd are,
 No shadows great appear;
 Nor doth the early shepherd's star
 Shine like a spangle here.

Stay but till my Julia close
 Her life-begetting eye;
 And let the whole world then dispose Itself to live or die.

TO ENJOY THE TIME

While fates permit us, let's be merry:
 Pass all we must the fatal ferry;
 And this our life too whirls away
 With the rotation of the day.

HIS WINDING-SHEET

Come thou, who art the wine and wit
 Of all I've writ;
 The grace, the glory, and the best
 Piece of the rest.

Thou art, of what I did intend,
 The all and end;
 And what was made, was made to meet
 Thee, thee, my sheet.
 Come then, and be to my chaste side
 Both bed and bride.
 We, two, as relics left will have
 One rest, one grave;
 And, hugging close, we will not fear
 Lust ent'ring here,
 Where all desires are dead, or cold
 As is the mold,
 And all affections are forgot,
 Or trouble not.
 Here, here the slaves and pris'ners be
 From shackles free,
 And weeping widows, long oppressed,
 Do here find rest.
 The wrongéd client ends his laws
 Here, and his cause;
 Here those long suits of chancery lie
 Quiet, or die,
 And all star-chamber bills do cease,
 Or hold their peace.
 Here needs no court for our request,
 Where all are best;
 All wise, all equal, and all just,
 Alike i' th' dust;
 Nor need we here to fear the frown
 Of court, or crown;
 Where fortune bears no sway o'er things,
 There all are kings.
 In this securer place we'll keep,
 As lulled asleep;
 Or for a little time we'll lie,
 As robes laid by,
 To be another day re-worn,—
 Turned, but not torn:
 Or like old testaments engrossed,
 Locked up, not lost:
 And for a while lie here concealed,
 To be revealed
 Next at that great Platonic year,<sup>1</sup>
 And then meet here.

ART ABOVE NATURE. TO JULIA

When I behold a forest spread
 With silken trees upon thy head,
 And when I see that other dress
 Of flowers set in comeliness;

When I behold another grace
 In the ascent of curious lace,
 Which like a pinnacle doth show
 The top, and the top-gallant too;
 Then, when I see thy tresses bound
 Into an oval, square, or round,
 And knit in knots far more than I Can tell by tongue, or true-love tie;
 Next, when those lawny films I see
 Play with a wild civility,
 And all those airy silks to flow,
 Alluring me, and tempting so:
 I must confess, mine eye and heart
 Dotes less on nature than on art.

THE PRIMROSE

Ask me why I send you here
 This sweet infanta of the year?
 Ask me why I send to you
 This primrose, thus bepearled with dew?
 I will whisper to your ears,
 The sweets of love are mixed with tears.

Ask me why this flower does show
 So yellow-green, and sickly too?
 Ask me why the stalk is weak
 And bending, yet it doth not break?
 I will answer, these discover
 What fainting hopes are in a lover.

THE NIGHT-PIECE, TO JULIA

Her eyes the glow-worm lend thee,
 The shooting stars attend thee;
 And the elves also,
 Whose little eyes glow
 Like the sparks of fire, befriend thee.

No Will-o'-th'-Wisp mis-light thee,
 Nor snake nor slow-worm bite thee;
 But on, on thy way,
 Not making a stay,
 Since ghost there's none to affright thee.

Let not the dark thee cumber;
 What though the moon does slumber?
 The stars of the night
 Will lend thee their light,
 Like tapers clear without number.

Then, Julia, let me woo thee,
 Thus, thus, to come unto me;
 And when I shall meet
 Thy silvery feet
 My soul I'll pour into thee.

<sup>1</sup>The year in which everything will return to its original state.

TO ELECTRA

I dare not ask a kiss;
 I dare not beg a smile;
 Lest having that or this,
 I might grow proud the while.

No, no, the utmost share
 Of my desire shall be,
 Only to kiss that air.
 That lately kisséd thee.

AN ODE FOR BEN JONSON

Ah, Ben!
 Say how or when Shall we, thy guests,
 Meet at those lyric feasts,
 Made at the Sun,
 The Dog, the Triple Tun;<sup>1</sup>
 Where we such clusters had,
 As made us nobly wild, not mad?
 And yet each verse of thine
 Out-did the meat, out-did the frolic wine.

My Ben!
 Or come again,
 Or send to us
 Thy wit's great overplus;
 But teach us yet
 Wisely to husband it,
 Lest we that talent spend;
 And having once brought to an end
 That precious stock, the store
 Of such a wit the world should have no more.

COMFORT TO A YOUTH THAT HAD LOST HIS LOVE

What needs complaints,
 When she a place
 Has with the race
 Of saints?
 In endless mirth,
 She thinks not on What's said or done
 In earth.
 She sees no tears,
 Or any tone
 Of thy deep groan
 She hears:
 Nor does she mind,
 Or think on't now,
 That ever thou
 Wast kind.

But changed above,
 She likes not there,
 As she did here,
 Thy love.
 Forbear therefore,
 And lull asleep
 Thy woes, and weep
 No more.

HIS LITANY, TO THE HOLY SPIRIT

In the hour of my distress,
 When temptations me oppress,
 And when I my sins confess,
 Sweet Spirit, comfort me!

When I lie within my bed,
 Sick in heart, and sick in head,
 And with doubts discomforted,
 Sweet Spirit, comfort me!

When the house doth sigh and weep,
 And the world is drowned in sleep,
 Yet mine eyes the watch do keep,
 Sweet Spirit, comfort me!

When the artless doctor sees
 No one hope, but of his fees,
 And his skill runs on the lees,
 Sweet Spirit, comfort me!

When his potion and his pill,
 Has or none or little skill,
 Meet for nothing but to kill,
 Sweet Spirit, comfort me!

When the passing-bell doth toll,
 And the furies in a shoal
 Come to fright a parting soul,
 Sweet Spirit, comfort me!

When the tapers now burn blue,
 And the comforters are few,
 And that number more than true,
 Sweet Spirit, comfort me!

When the priest his last hath prayed,
 And I nod to what is said,
 'Cause my speech is now decayed,
 Sweet Spirit, comfort me!

<sup>1</sup>Names of London taverns.

When, God knows, I'm tossed about,
 Either with despair or doubt,
 Yet before the glass be out,
 Sweet Spirit, comfort me!

When the Tempter me pursu'th
 With the sins of all my youth,
 And half damns me with untruth,
 Sweet Spirit, comfort me!

When the flames and hellish cries
 Fright mine ears and fright mine eyes,
 And all terrors me surprise,
 Sweet Spirit, comfort me!

When the judgment is revealed,
 And that opened which was sealed,
 When to thee I have appealed,
 Sweet Spirit, comfort me!

A GRACE FOR A CHILD

Here, a little child, I stand,
 Heaving up my either hand:
 Cold as paddocks though they be,
 Here I lift them up to thee,
 For a benison to fall
 On our meat, and on us all. Amen.

GEORGE HERBERT

(1593-1633)

THE COLLAR

I struck the board, and cried, "No more; I will abroad!

What! shall I ever sigh and pine?
 My lines and life are free; free as the road,
 Loose as the wind, as large as store.<sup>1</sup>

Shall I be still in suit?

Have I no harvest but a thorn
 To let me blood, and not restore
 What I have lost with cordial fruit?

Sure there was wine

Before my sighs did dry it; there was corn

Before my tears did drown it;

Is the year only lost to me?

Have I no bays to crown it,
 No flowers, no garlands gay? all blasted,
 All wasted?

Not so, my heart, but there is fruit,
 And thou hast hands.

Recover all thy sigh-blown age
 On double pleasures; leave thy cold dispute
 Of what is fit and not; forsake thy cage,
 Thy rope of sands

Which petty thoughts have made; and made
 to thee

Good cable, to enforce and draw,
 And be thy law,

While thou didst wink and wouldst not see.
 Away! take heed;
 I will abroad.

Call in thy death's head there, tie up thy
 fears;

He that forbears

To suit and serve his need

Deserves his load."

But as I raved, and grew more fierce and wild
 At every word,

Methought I heard one calling, "Child";
 And I replied, "My Lord."

DISCIPLINE

Throw away thy rod,
 Throw away thy wrath:
 O my God,
 Take the gentle path.

For my heart's desire
 Unto thine is bent:
 I aspire
 To a full consent.<sup>2</sup>

Not a word or look
 I affect to own,
 But by book,
 And thy book alone.

Though I fail, I weep:
 Though I halt in pace,
 Yet I creep
 To the throne of grace.

Then let wrath remove;
 Love will do the deed:
 For with love
 Stony hearts will bleed.

Love is swift of foot;
 Love's a man of war,
 And can shoot,
 And can hit from far,

<sup>1</sup>An abundance.

<sup>2</sup>Harmony.

Who can scape his bow?
That which wrought on thee,
    Brought thee low,
Needs must work on me.

Throw away thy rod;
Though man frailties hath,
    Thou art God:
Throw away thy wrath.

THE PULLEY

When God at first made man,
Having a glass of blessing standing by;
    "Let us," said he, "pour on him all we
    can:

Let the world's riches, which disperséd lie,
Contract into a span."

So Strength first made a way;
Then Beauty flow'd; then Wisdom, Honor,
Pleasure.

When almost all was out, God made a stay,
Perceiving that alone, of all his treasure,
Rest in the bottom lay.

"For if I should," said he,
Bestow this jewel also on my creature,
He would adore my gifts instead of me,
And rest in Nature, not the God of Nature;
So both should losers be.

"Yet let him keep the rest,
But keep them with repining restlessness;
Let him be rich and weary, that at least,
If goodness lead him not, yet weariness
May toss him to my breast."

LOVE

Love bade me welcome; yet my soul drew
back,

Guilty of dust and sin.

But quick-eyed Love, observing me grow slack

From my first entrance in,
Drew nearer to me, sweetly questioning,
If I lacked anything.

"A guest," I answered, "worthy to be here:"
Love said, "You shall be he."

"I, the unkind, ungrateful? Ah, my dear,
I cannot look on thee!"

Love took my hand and smiling did reply,
    "Who made the eyes but I?"

"Truth, Lord; but I have marred them: let my shame

Go where it doth deserve."

"And know you not," says Love, "who bore
the blame?"

"My dear, then I will serve."

"You must sit down," says Love, "and taste my meat."

So I did sit and eat.

EDMUND WALLER

(1606-1687)

GO, LOVELY ROSE!

Go, lovely Rose!
Tell her that wastes her time and me,
That now she knows,
When I resemble her to thee,
How sweet and fair she seems to be.

Tell her that's young,
And shuns to have her graces spied,
That hadst thou sprung
In deserts, where no men abide,
Thou must have uncommended died.

Small is the worth
Of beauty from the light retired;
Bid her come forth,
Suffer herself to be desired,
And not blush so to be admired.

Then die! that she
The common fate of all things rare
May read in thee;
How small a part of time they share
That are so wondrous sweet and fair!

SIR JOHN SUCKLING

(1609-1642)

A DOUBT OF MARTYRDOM

O for some honest lover's ghost,
 Some kind unbodied post
 Sent from the shades below!
 I strangely long to know Whether<sup>1</sup> the noble chaplets wear,
 Those that their mistress' scorn did bear
 Or those that were used kindly.

For whatso'er they tell us here
 To make those sufferings dear,
 'Twill there, I fear, be found
 That to the being crowned
 T' have loved alone will not suffice,
 Unless we also have been wise
 And have our loves enjoyed.

What posture can we think him in
 That, here unloved, again
 Departs, and 's thither gone
 Where each sits by his own?
 Or how can that Elysium be Where I my mistress still must see Circled in other's arms?

For there the judges all are just,
 And Sophonisba<sup>2</sup> must
 Be his whom she held dear,
 Not his who loved her here.
 The sweet Philoclea,<sup>3</sup> since she died,
 Lies by her Pirocles his side,
 Not by Amphialus.

Some bays, perchance, or myrtle bough
 For difference crowns the brow
 Of those kind souls that were
 The noble martyrs here:
 And if that be the only odds
 (As who can tell?) ye kinder gods,
 Give me the woman here!

RICHARD LOVELACE

(1618-1658)

TO ALTHEA, FROM PRISON

When Love with unconfinéd wings
 Hovers within my gates,
 And my divine Althea brings
 To whisper at the grates;

THE CONSTANT LOVER

Out upon it, I have loved
 Three whole days together!
 And am like to love three more,
 If it prove fair weather.

Time shall moult away his wings
 Ere he shall discover
 In the whole wide world again
 Such a constant lover.

But the spite on't is, no praise
 Is due at all to me:
 Love with me had made no stays,
 Had it any been but she.

Had it any been but she,
 And that very face,
 There had been at least ere this
 A dozen dozen in her place.

WHY SO PALE AND WAN?

Why so pale and wan, fond lover?
 Prithee, why so pale?
 Will, when looking well can't move her,
 Looking ill prevail?
 Prithee, why so pale?

Why so dull and mute, young sinner?
 Prithee, why so mute?
 Will, when speaking well can't win her,
 Saying nothing do 't?
 Prithee, why so mute?

Quit, quit for shame! This will not move;
 This cannot take her.
 If of herself she will not love,
 Nothing can make her:
 The devil take her!

When I lie tangled in her hair
 And fettered to her eye,
 The birds that wanton in the air
 Know no such liberty.

<sup>2</sup>A Carthaginian. She was betrothed to a Numidian prince but married another; later, however, she married the Numidian when he conquered her husband.

<sup>3</sup>Philoclea and the two following are characters in Sir Philip Sidney's Arcadia.

<sup>1</sup>Which.

When flowing cups run swiftly round
 With no allaying Thames,
 Our careless heads with roses bound,
 Our hearts with loyal flames;
 When thirsty grief in wine we steep,
 When healths and draughts go free,
 Fishes that tipple in the deep
 Know no such liberty.

When, like committed linnets, I
 With shriller throat will sing
 The sweetness, mercy, majesty,
 And glories of my king;

When I shall voice aloud how good
 He is, how great should be,
 Enlargéd winds, that curl the flood,
 Know no such liberty.

Stone walls do not a prison make,
 Nor iron bars a cage;
 Minds innocent and quiet take
 That for an hermitage;
 If I have freedom in my love
 And in my soul am free,
 Angels alone, that soar above,
 Enjoy such liberty.

ANDREW MARVELL

(1621-1678)

AN HORATIAN ODE UPON CROMWELL'S RETURN FROM IRELAND

The forward youth that would appear
 Must now forsake his muses dear,
 Nor in the shadows sing
 His numbers languishing:

'Tis time to leave the books in dust,
 And oil the unused armor's rust,
 Removing from the wall
 The corselet of the hall.

So restless Cromwell would not cease
 In the inglorious arts of peace,
 But through adventurous war
 Urgéd his active star;

And, like the three-forked lightning, first
 Breaking the clouds where it was nursed,
 Did thorough his own side
 His fiery way divide;<sup>1</sup>

For 'tis all one to courage high,
 The emulous, or enemy,
 And with such to inclose,
 Is more than to oppose.

Then burning through the air he went,
 And palaces and temples rent;
 And Cæsar's<sup>2</sup> head at last Did through his laurels<sup>3</sup> blast.

'Tis madness to resist or blame
 The face of angry heaven's flame;
 And if we would speak true,
 Much to the man is due,

Who from his private gardens, where
 He lived reservéd and austere,
 As if his highest plot
 To plant the bergamot,<sup>4</sup>

Could by industrious valor climb
 To ruin the great work of Time,
 And cast the kingdoms old,
 Into another mould,

Though Justice against Fate complain,
 And plead the ancient rights in vain;
 But those do hold or break,
 As men are strong or weak.

Nature, that hateth emptiness,
 Allows of penetration less,
 And therefore must make room
 Where greater spirits come.

What field of all the civil war,
 Where his were not the deepest scar?
 And Hampton<sup>5</sup> shows what part
 He had of wiser art;

Where, twining subtle fears with hope,
 He wove a net of such a scope

<sup>1</sup>The allusion is to differences which arose between the puritan army and the puritan parliament—differences which Cromwell forcibly resolved by bringing the army to London.

<sup>2</sup>Charles I's.

<sup>3</sup>Spite of his crown.

<sup>4</sup>A variety of pear.

<sup>5</sup>Hampton Court. Marvell shared the belief of other contemporaries (as the following lines show) that Cromwell tacitly abetted Charles I's flight from Hampton Court to Carisbrooke Castle.

That Charles himself might chase
To Caresbrooke's narrow case,

That thence the royal actor borne
The tragic scaffold might adorn,
While round the arm'd bands
Did clap their bloody hands.

He<sup>1</sup> nothing common did, or mean,
Upon that memorable scene,
But with his keener eye
The axe's edge did try;

Nor called the gods with vulgar spite
To vindicate his helpless right,
But bowed his comely head
Down, as upon a bed.

This was that memorable hour,
Which first assured the forc'd power;
So, when they did design
The capitol's first line,

A bleeding head, where they begun,
Did fright the architects to run;<sup>2</sup>
And yet in that the state
Foresaw its happy fate.

And now the Irish are ashamed
To see themselves in one year tamed;
So much one man can do,
That does both act and know.

They can affirm his praises best,
And have, though overcome, confessed
How good he is, how just,
And fit for highest trust;

Nor yet grown stiffer with command,
But still in the republic's hand,
How fit he is to sway,
That can so well obey!

He to the Commons' feet presents
A kingdom<sup>3</sup> for his first year's rents;
And, what he may, forbears
His fame, to make it theirs;

And has his sword and spoils ungirt,
To lay them at the public's skirt:
So when the falcon high Falls heavy from the sky,

She, having killed, no more doth search,
But on the next green bough to perch;
Where, when he first does lure,
The falconer has her sure.

What may not then our isle presume,
While victory his crest does plume?
What may not others fear,
If thus he crowns each year?

As Cæsar, he, ere long, to Gaul,
To Italy a Hannibal,
And to all states not free
Shall climacteric be.<sup>4</sup>

The Pict<sup>5</sup> no shelter now shall find Within his parti-colored<sup>6</sup> mind,
But, from this valor sad,<sup>7</sup>
Shrink underneath the plaid;

Happy if in the tufted brake
The English hunter him mistake,
Nor lay his hounds in near
The Caledonian deer.

But thou, the war's and Fortune's son,
March undefatigably on;
And for the least effect,
Still keep the sword erect;

Besides the force it has to fright
The spirits of the shady night,
The same arts that did gain
A power, must it maintain.

TO HIS COY MISTRESS

Had we but world enough, and time,
This coyness, Lady, were no crime,
We would sit down and think which way
To walk and pass our long love's day.
Thou by the Indian Ganges' side
Shouldst rubies find; I by the tide
Of Humber would complain. I would Love you ten years before the Flood,
And you should, if you please, refuse
Till the conversion of the Jews.
My vegetable love should grow
Vaster than empires, and more slow;

<sup>1</sup>Charles I.

<sup>2</sup>Pliny tells this story (Natural History, XXVIII, 4).

<sup>3</sup>Ireland.

<sup>4</sup>Shall be a dangerous menace.

<sup>5</sup>The Scot.

<sup>6</sup>I. e., fickle.

<sup>7</sup>Resolute.

An hundred years should go to praise
Thine eyes and on thy forehead gaze;
Two hundred to adore each breast,
But thirty thousand to the rest;
An age at least to every part,
And the last age should show your heart.
For, Lady, you deserve this state,
Nor would I love at lower rate.

But at my back I always hear Time's winged chariot hurrying near;
And yonder all before us lie
Deserts of vast eternity.
Thy beauty shall no more be found,
Nor, in thy marble vault, shall sound
My echoing song; then worms shall try
That long preserved virginity,
And your quaint honor turn to dust,
And into ashes all my lust:
The grave's a fine and private place,
But none, I think, do there embrace.

Now therefore, while the youthful hue
Sits on thy skin like morning dew,
And while thy willing soul transpires
At every pore with instant fires,
Now let us sport us while we may,
And now, like amorous birds of prey,
Rather at once our time devour
Than languish in his slow-chapt<sup>1</sup> power.
Let us roll all our strength and all
Our sweetness up into one ball,
And tear our pleasures with rough strife
Thorough the iron gates of life:
Thus, though we cannot make our sun
Stand still, yet we will make him run.

BERMUDAS

Where the remote Bermudas ride,
In the ocean's bosom unespied,

HENRY VAUGHAN

(1622-1695)

THE WORLD<sup>5</sup>

I saw Eternity the other night,
Like a great ring of pure and endless light,
All calm, as it was bright;
And round beneath it, Time, in hours, days,
years,
Driv'n by the spheres

<sup>1</sup>Perhaps, slowly consuming.

<sup>2</sup>The Bermudas were settled early in the seventeenth century by Englishmen who, like those who came to New England, sought to escape tyranny at home.

From a small boat, that rowed along,
The listening winds received this song:<sup>2</sup>
"What should we do but sing his praise,
That led us through the watery maze,
Unto an isle so long unknown,
And yet far kinder than our own?
Where he the huge sea-monsters wracks,
That lift the deep upon their backs,
He lands us on a grassy stage,
Safe from the storms' and prelates' rage.
He gave us this eternal spring,
Which here enamels every thing,
And sends the fowls to us in care,
On daily visits through the air;
He hangs in shades the orange bright,
Like golden lamps in a green night,
And does in the pomegranates close,
Jewels more rich than Ormus<sup>3</sup> shows;
He makes the figs our mouths to meet,
And throws the melons at our feet,
But apples<sup>4</sup> plants of such a price,
No tree could ever bear them twice;
With cedars chosen by his hand
From Lebanon, he stores the land,
And makes the hollow seas, that roar,
Proclaim the ambergris on shore;
He cast (of which we rather boast)
The Gospel's pearl upon our coast,
And in these rocks for us did frame
A temple, where to sound his name.
Oh! let our voice his praise exalt,
Till it arrive at heaven's vault,
Which, thence (perhaps) rebounding, may Echo beyond the Mexique Bay."

Thus sung they, in the English boat,
A holy and a cheerful note,
And all the way, to guide their chime,
With falling oars they kept the time.

Like a vast shadow moved; in which the world

And all her train were hurled.
The doting lover in his quaintest strain
Did there complain;
Near him, his lute, his fancy, and his flights,
Wit's four delights,

<sup>5</sup>An island in the Persian Gulf.

<sup>4</sup>Pineapples.

<sup>5</sup>Vaughan printed 1 John, ii, 16-17, at the end of this poem.

With gloves, and knots, the silly snares of
pleasure,

Yet his dear treasure,
All scattered lay, while he his eyes did pour
Upon a flower.

The darksome statesman, hung with weights
and woe,

Like a thick midnight-fog, moved there so
slow,

He did not stay, nor go;
Condemning thoughts, like sad eclipses,
scowl

Upon his soul,
And clouds of crying witnesses without Pursued him with one shout.

Yet digged the mole, and lest his ways be
found,

Worked under ground,
Where he did clutch his prey; but one did see
That policy:

Churches and altars fed him; perjuries
Were gnats and flies;
It rained about him blood and tears, but he Drank them as free.<sup>1</sup>

The fearful miser on a heap of rust
Sat pining all his life there, did scarce trust

His own hands with the dust, Yet would not place one piece above,<sup>2</sup> but lives

In fear of thieves.
Thousands there were as frantic as himself,
And hugged each one his pelf;
The downright epicure placed heaven in
sense,

And scorned pretence;
While others, slipt into a wide excess,
Said little less;

The weaker sort, slight, trivial wares enslave,
Who think them brave;

And poor, despised Truth sat counting by Their victory.

Yet some, who all this while did weep and
sing,

And sing and weep, soared up into the ring;
But most would use no wing.

O fools, said I, thus to prefer dark night
Before true light!

To live in grots and caves, and hate the day
Because it shows the way,

<sup>1</sup>As freely as if it had not rained blood and tears.

<sup>2</sup>In heaven.

The way, which from this dead and dark
abode

Leads up to God;
A way where you might tread the sun, and be
More bright than he!

But, as I did their madness so discuss,
One whispered thus,
"This ring the Bridegroom did for none provide
But for his bride."

THE RETREAT

Happy those early days, when I
Shined in my angel-infancy!
Before I understood this place
Appointed for my second race,
Or taught my soul to fancy aught
But a white, celestial thought;
When yet I had not walked above
A mile or two from my first love,
And looking back at that short space,
Could see a glimpse of his bright face;
When on some gilded cloud or flower
My gazing soul would dwell an hour,
And in those weaker glories spy
Some shadows of eternity;
Before I taught my tongue to wound
My conscience with a sinful sound,
Or had the black art to dispense,
A several sin to every sense,
But felt through all this fleshly dress
Bright shoots of everlastingness.

O, how I long to travel back,
And tread again that ancient track,
That I might once more reach that plain,
Where first I felt my glorious train;
From whence the enlightened spirit sees
That shady city of palm trees.<sup>3</sup>
But ah! my soul with too much stay
Is drunk, and staggers in the way!
Some men a forward motion love,
But I by backward steps would move;
And when this dust falls to the urn,
In that state I came, return.

MAN

Weighing the steadfastness and state
Of some mean things which here below reside,

Where birds like watchful clocks the noiseless date

And intercourse of times divide,

<sup>3</sup>I. e., Jericho.

Where bees at night get home and hive, and
 flowers
 Early, as well as late,
 Rise with the sun, and set in the same bowers;

I would (said I) my God would give The staidness of these things to man! for
 these

To his divine appointments ever cleave,
 And no new business breaks their peace;
 The birds nor sow, nor reap, yet sup and dine,
 The flowers without clothes live,
 Yet Solomon was never dressed so fine.

Man hath still either toys, or care,
 He hath no root, nor to one place is tied,
 But ever restless and irregular
 About this earth doth run and ride,
 He knows he hath a home, but scarce knows
 where,
 He says it is so far
 That he hath quite forgot how to go there.

He knocks at all doors, strays and roams,
 Nay hath not so much wit as some stones<sup>1</sup>
 have
 Which in the darkest nights point to their homes,
 By some hid sense their Maker gave;
 Man is the shuttle, to whose winding quest
 And passage through these looms
 God ordered motion, but ordained no rest.

ASCENSION HYMN

They are all gone into the world of light!
 And I alone sit ling'ring here;
 Their very memory is fair and bright,
 And my sad thoughts doth clear.

It glows and glitters in my cloudy breast
 Like stars upon some gloomy grove,
 Or those faint beams in which this hill is
 drest,
 After the sun's remove.

I see them walking in an air of glory,
 Whose light doth trample on my days:
 My days, which are at best but dull and hoary,
 Mere glimmering and decays.

O holy hope! and high humility,
 High as the heavens above!
 These are your walks, and you have showed them me
 To kindle my cold love.

Dear, beauteous death! the jewel of the just,
 Shining nowhere, but in the dark;
 What mysteries do lie beyond thy dust;
 Could man outlook that mark!

He that hath found some fledged bird's nest
 may know
 At first sight, if the bird be flown;
 But what fair well<sup>2</sup> or grove he sings in now,
 That is to him unknown.

And yet, as angels in some brighter dreams
 Call to the soul, when man doth sleep:
 So some strange thoughts transcend our wonted themes,
 And into glory peep.

If a star were confined into a tomb
 Her captive flames must needs burn there;
 But when the hand that locked her up gives room,
 She'll shine through all the sphere.

O Father of eternal life, and all Created glories under thee!
 Resume thy spirit from this world of thrall
 Into true liberty.

Either disperse these mists, which blot and
 fill
 My perspective (still) as they pass,
 Or else remove me hence unto that hill,
 Where I shall need no glass.

THE WATERFALL

With what deep murmurs through time's silent stealth
 Doth thy transparent, cool and wat'ry wealth
 Here flowing fall,
 And chide, and call,
 As if his liquid, loose retinue stayed
 Ling'ring, and were of this steep place afraid;
 The common pass
 Where, clear as glass,

<sup>1</sup>Loadstones.

<sup>2</sup>Spring or fountain.

All must descend
 Not to an end,
 But, quickened by this deep and rocky grave,
 Rise to a longer course more bright and
 brave.

Dear stream! dear bank, where often I
 Have sat, and pleased my pensive eye:
 Why, since each drop of thy quick store
 Runs thither, whence it flowed before,
 Should poor souls fear a shade or night,
 Who came (sure) from a sea of light?
 Or since those drops are all sent back
 So sure to thee, that none doth lack,
 Why should frail flesh doubt any more
 That what God takes, he'll not restore?

O useful element and clear!
 My sacred wash and cleanser here,

My first consigner unto those Fountains of life, where the Lamb goes!<sup>1</sup>
 What sublime truths, and wholesome
 themes,

Lodge in thy mystical, deep streams!—
 Such as dull man can never find
 Unless that Spirit lead his mind,
 Which first upon thy face did move,
 And hatched all with his quick'ning love.
 As this loud brook's incessant fall
 In streaming rings restagnates all,
 Which reach by course the bank, and then
 Are no more seen, just so pass men.
 O my invisible estate,
 My glorious liberty, still late!
 Thou art the channel my soul seeks,
 Not this with cataracts and creeks.

<sup>1</sup>I. e., in baptism.

SIR THOMAS BROWNE (1605-1682)

Sir Thomas Browne was born on 19 October, 1605. His father was a London mercer. Browne was sent to Winchester School in 1616, and in 1623 he went thence to Broadgates Hall (now Pembroke College), Oxford. He took his B.A. in 1626, his M.A. in 1629, and little else is known about his Oxford years. In 1630 he began a period of travel and study on the Continent, going first to Montpellier, in the south of France, then famous for its medical school. He continued his medical studies at Padua, and then at Leyden, where it is thought he obtained a medical degree. In 1633 he returned to England and settled himself near Halifax. He was made doctor of medicine at Oxford in 1637. Soon after this he began to practise medicine at Norwich, where he remained until his death. He married, in 1641, Dorothy Mileham, "a lady of such symmetrical proportion to her worthy husband, both in the graces of her body and mind, that they seemed to come together by a kind of natural magnetism." About 1635 Browne had written, "at leisable hours," for his "private exercise and satisfaction," his famous confession of faith, the Religio Medici. He apparently had no intention of publishing this, but allowed friends to read it in manuscript and to make copies of it; and thus, being admired, it came to be widely known (there are at least five manuscripts of the book extant, or were in the early nineteenth century). The result was that in 1642 an unauthorized edition was printed from one of these copies and so quickly sold out that a second edition was printed within a few months. This troubled Browne because the book was about so serious a subject as religion, and was now being much more widely read, and not only read but criticized, in a form very different from what he had actually written. The copy which reached the press was, Browne wrote, "most depraved," as the result of successive transcriptions, and so in 1643 he published as a kind of duty the first authorized edition of the book. The general scandal of his profession, Browne said, might help to persuade the world that he had no religion at all, but it was not so. On the contrary he was disposed rather to wish, if for anything, for more curious tests of his faith than Christianity afforded. "Methinks," he says, "there be not impossibilities enough in religion for an active faith; the deepest mysteries ours contains have not only been illustrated, but maintained, by syllogism and the rule of reason. I love to lose myself in a mystery, to pursue my reason to an Ositudo! 'Tis my solitary recreation to pose my apprehension with those involved enigmas and riddles of the Trinity, with Incarnation, and Resurrection." In this Browne told the simple truth; a touch of mystery fired his mind and sent it soaring on its speculative way. Whatever was odd or strange was food for him, and he became one of the most curiously learned men of any age. At the same time his wide reading helped him to clothe his grave meditations in a style which for richness and dignity is not surpassed even by any other of the great prose-writers of his own century.

Browne was a royalist, but lived through the Civil War without, apparently, being much disturbed by outward events. In 1646 he published an eminently characteristic book, his Pseudodoxia Epidemica or Enquiries into very many received Tenets and commonly presumed Truths, which examined prove but Vulgar and Common Errors. Some years later certain urns were unearthed in Norfolk, which were exactly the sort of thing to set his mind in motion, and the result was that he wrote and, in 1658, published Hydriotaphia, in which the qualities of his mind and of his personality are finely exhibited. Two other works, A Letter to a Friend and Christian Morals, were not published until after his death. In 1671 Browne was knighted, in consequence of the singular modesty of the then mayor of Norwich. Charles II was visiting Norwich and proposed to confer knighthood on the mayor, who declined it and begged that it be conferred instead on Browne, as the citizen of Norwich who most deserved the honor.

HYDRIOTAPHIA,

URN-BURIAL

CHAPTER I

IN THE deep discovery of the subterranean world, a shallow part would satisfy some enquirers; who, if two or three yards were open about the surface, would not care to rake the bowels of Potosi,<sup>1</sup> and regions towards the center. Nature hath furnished one part of the earth, and man another. The treasures of time lie high, in urns, coins, and monuments, scarce below the roots of some vegetables. Time hath endless rarities, and shows of all varieties; which reveals old things in heaven, makes new discoveries in earth, and even earth itself a discovery. That great antiquity America lay buried for thousands of years, and a large part of the earth is still in the urn<sup>1</sup> unto us.

<sup>1</sup>Silver mines in Bolivia.

Though, if Adam were made out of an extract of the earth, all parts might challenge a restitution, yet few have returned their bones far lower than they might receive them; not affecting the graves of giants, under hilly and heavy coverings, but content with less than their own depth, have wished their bones might lie soft, and the earth be light upon them. Even such as hope to rise again, would not be content with central interment, or so desperately to place their relics as to lie beyond discovery, and in no way to be seen again; which happy contrivance hath made communication with our forefathers, and left unto our view some parts, which they never beheld themselves.

Though earth hath engrossed<sup>2</sup> the name, yet water hath proved the smartest grave; which in forty days swallowed almost mankind, and the living creation; fishes not wholly escaping, except the salt ocean were handsomely<sup>3</sup> contempered by a mixture of the fresh element.

Many have taken voluminous pains to determine the state of the soul upon disunion; but men have been most phantastical in the singular contrivances of their corporal dissolution: whilst the soberest nations have rested in two ways, of simple inhumation<sup>4</sup> and burning.

That carnal interment or burying was of the elder date, the old examples of Abraham and the patriarchs are sufficient to illustrate; and were without competition, if it could be made out that Adam was buried near Damascus, or Mount Calvary, according to some tradition. God himself, that buried but one, was pleased to make choice of this way, collectible from Scripture expression, and the hot contest<sup>5</sup> between Satan and the archangel, about discovering the body of Moses. But the practice of burning was also of great antiquity, and of no slender extent. For

(not to derive the same from Hercules) noble descriptions there are hereof in the Grecian funerals of Homer, in the formal obsequies of Patroclus and Achilles; and somewhat elder in the Theban war, and solemn combustion of Meneceus, and Archemorus, contemporary unto Jair the eighth judge of Israel. Confirmable also among the Trojans, from the funeral pyre of Hector, burned before the gates of Troy: and the burning of Penthesilea the Amazonian queen: and long continuance of that practice, in the inward countries of Asia; while as low as the reign of Julian, we find that the king of Chionia<sup>6</sup> burned the body of his son, and interred the ashes in a silver urn.

The same practice extended also far west; and, besides Herulians, Getes, and Thracians, was in use with most of the Celtæ, Sarmatians, Germans, Gauls, Danes, Swedes, Norwegians; not to omit some use thereof among Carthaginians and Americans. Of greater antiquity among the Romans than most opinion, or Pliny seems to allow: for (beside the old Table Laws of burning or burying within the city, of making the funeral fire with planed wood, or quenching the fire with wine), Manlius the consul burned the body of his son: Numa, by special clause of his will, was not burned but buried; and Remus was solemnly burned, according to the description of Ovid.

Cornelius Sylla was not the first whose body was burned in Rome, but of the Cornelian family; which, being indifferently, not frequently used before, from that time spread, and became the prevalent practice. Not totally pursued in the highest run of cremation; for when even crows were funerally burned, Poppæa the wife of Nero found a peculiar grave interment. Now as all customs were founded upon some bottom of reason, so there wanted not grounds for this; according to several apprehensions of the most rational dissolution. Some being of the opinion of Thales, that water was the original of all things, thought it most equal to submit unto the principle of putrefaction, and conclude in a moist relentment.<sup>7</sup> Others conceived it most natural to end in fire, as due unto the master principle in the composi-

<sup>1</sup>Still undiscovered.

<sup>2</sup>Monopolized.

<sup>3</sup>Suitably.

<sup>4</sup>Burying.

<sup>5</sup>Cf. Jude, 9.

<sup>6</sup>According to Browne, a country near Persia.

<sup>7</sup>Dissolution.

tion, according to the doctrine of Heraclitus; and therefore heaped up large piles, more actively to waft them toward that element, whereby they also declined<sup>1</sup> a visible degeneration into worms, and left a lasting parcel of their composition.

Some apprehended a purifying virtue in fire, refining the grosser commixture, and firing out the ethereal particles so deeply immersed in it. And such as by tradition or rational conjecture held any hint of the final pyre of all things, or that this element at last must be too hard for all the rest, might conceive most naturally of the fiery dissolution. Others, pretending no natural grounds, politically declined the malice of enemies upon their buried bodies. Which consideration led Sylla unto this practice; who having thus served the body of Marius, could not but fear a retaliation upon his own; entertained after in the civil wars, and revengeful contentions of Rome.

But, as many nations embraced, and many left it indifferent, so others too much affected, or strictly declined this practice. The Indian Brahmans seemed too great friends unto fire, who burned themselves alive, and thought it the noblest way to end their days in fire; according to the expression of the Indian, burning himself at Athens, in his last words upon the pyre unto the amazed spectators, "Thus I make myself immortal."

But the Chaldeans, the great idolaters of fire, abhorred the burning of their carcases, as a pollution of that deity. The Persian magi declined it upon the like scruple, and being only solicitous about their bones, exposed their flesh to the prey of birds and dogs. And the Parsees now in India, which expose their bodies unto vultures, and endure not so much as feretra or biers of wood, the proper fuel of fire, are led on with such niceties. But whether the ancient Germans, who burned their dead, held any such fear to pollute their deity of Herthus, or the Earth, we have no authentic conjecture.

The Egyptians were afraid of fire, not as a deity, but a devouring element, mercilessly consuming their bodies, and leaving too little of them; and therefore by precious embalmments, depositure in dry earths, or handsome inclosure in glasses, contrived the notablest ways of integral conservation. And from such Egyptian scruples, imbibed by Pythagoras, it may be conjectured that Numa and the Pythagorical sect first waved<sup>2</sup> the fiery solution.

The Scythians, who swore by wind and sword, that is, by life and death, were so far from burning their bodies, that they declined all interment, and made their graves in the air: and the Ichthyophagi, or fish-eating nations about Egypt, affected the sea for their grave; thereby declining visible corruption, and restoring the debt of their bodies. Whereas the old heroes, in Homer, dreaded nothing more than water or drowning; probably upon the old opinion of the fiery substance of the soul, only extinguishable by that element; and therefore the poet emphatically implieth the total destruction in this kind of death, which happened to Ajax Oileus.<sup>3</sup>

The old Balearians<sup>4</sup> had a peculiar mode, for they used great urns and much wood, but no fire in their burials, while they bruised the flesh and bones of the dead, crowded them into urns, and laid heaps of wood upon them. And the Chinese without cremation or urnal interment of their bodies, make use of trees and much burning, while they plant a pine-tree by their grave, and burn great numbers of printed draughts<sup>5</sup> of slaves and horses over it, civilly content with their companies in effigy, which barbarous nations exact unto reality.

Christians abhorred this way of obsequies, and though they sticked<sup>6</sup> not to give their bodies to be burned in their lives, detested that mode after death; affecting rather a depositure than assumption,<sup>7</sup> and properly submitting unto the sentence of God, to return not unto ashes but unto dust again, conformable unto the practice of the patriarchs, the interment of our Savior, of Peter, Paul, and the ancient martyrs. And so far at last declining promiscuous interment with Pagans, that some have suffered ecclesiastical censures, for making no scruple thereof.

The Musselman believers will never admit

<sup>2</sup>Forsook.

<sup>3</sup>Browne refers to Odyssey, IV, 511.

<sup>4</sup>Dwellers in the Balearic Islands.

<sup>5</sup>Drawings.

<sup>6</sup>Hesitated.

<sup>7</sup>A wasting away.

<sup>1</sup>Avoided.

this fiery resolution. For they hold a present<sup>1</sup> trial from their black and white angels in the grave; which they must have made so hollow, that they may rise upon their knees.

The Jewish nation, though they entertained the old way of inhumation, yet sometimes admitted this practice. For the men of Jabesh burned the body of Saul; and by no prohibited practice, to avoid contagion or pollution, in time of pestilence, burned the bodies of their friends. And when they burned not their dead bodies, yet sometimes used great burnings near and about them, deducible from the expressions concerning Jehoram, Zedechias, and the sumptuous pyre of Asa. And were so little averse from Pagan burning, that the Jews lamenting the death of Cæsar, their friend and revenger on Pompey, frequented the place where his body was burned for many nights together. And as they raised noble monuments and mausoleums for their own nation, so they were not scrupulous in erecting some for others, according to the practice of Daniel, who left that lasting sepulchral pile in Ecbatana, for the Median and Persian kings.

But even in times of subjection and hottest use, they conformed not unto the Roman practice of burning; whereby the prophecy was secured concerning the body of Christ, that it should not see corruption, or a bone should not be broken; which we believe was also providentially prevented, from the soldier's spear and nails that passed by the little bones both in his hands and feet; not of ordinary contrivance, that it should not corrupt on the cross, according to the laws of Roman crucifixion; or an hair of his head perish, though observable in Jewish customs, to cut the hairs of malefactors.

Nor in their long cohabitation with<sup>2</sup> Egyptians, crept into a custom of their exact embalming, wherein deeply slashing the muscles, and taking out the brains and entrails, they had broken the subject of so entire a resurrection, nor fully answered the types of Enoch, Elijah, or Jonah, which yet to prevent or restore, was of equal facility unto that rising power, able to break the fasciations<sup>3</sup> and bands of death, to get clear out of the cerecloth, and an hundred pounds of ointment, and out of the sepulcher before the stone was rolled from it.

But though they embraced not this practice of burning, yet entertained they many ceremonies agreeable unto Greek and Roman obsequies. And he that observeth their funeral feasts, their lamentations at the grave, their music, and weeping mourners; how they closed the eyes of their friends, how they washed, anointed, and kissed the dead; may easily conclude these were not mere Pagan civilities. But whether that mournful burthen, and treble calling out after Absalom,<sup>4</sup> had any reference unto the last conclamation,<sup>5</sup> and triple valediction, used by other nations, we hold but a wavering conjecture.

Civilians<sup>6</sup> make sepulture but of the law of nations, others do naturally found it and discover it also in animals. They that are so thick-skinned as still to credit the story of the Phoenix,<sup>7</sup> may say something for animal burning. More serious conjectures find some examples of sepulture in elephants, cranes, the sepulchral cells of pismires,<sup>8</sup> and practice of bees,—which civil society carrieth out their dead, and hath exequies, if not interments.

CHAPTER II

THE solemnities, ceremonies, rites of their cremation or interment, so solemnly delivered by authors, we shall not disparage our reader to repeat. Only the last and lasting part in their urns, collected bones and ashes, we cannot wholly omit, or decline that subject, which occasion lately presented, in some discovered among us.

In a field of Old Walsingham,<sup>9</sup> not many months past, were digged up between forty and fifty urns, deposited in a dry and sandy soil, not a yard deep, nor far from one another. Not all strictly of one figure, but most answering these described:<sup>10</sup> some con-

<sup>1</sup>An immediate.

<sup>2</sup>Living in the same land with.

<sup>3</sup>Bandages.

<sup>4</sup>Cf. 2 Samuel, xviii, 33.

<sup>5</sup>Loud general shout.

<sup>6</sup>Writers on civil law.

<sup>7</sup>The story that it renewed its life through fire.

<sup>8</sup>Ants.

<sup>9</sup>In northern Norfolk, south of Wells.

<sup>10</sup>Pictured. Browne published a plate containing drawings of four urns.

taining two pounds of bones, distinguishable in skulls, ribs, jaws, thigh bones, and teeth, with fresh impressions of their combustion; besides the extraneous substances, like pieces of small boxes, or combs handsomely wrought, handles of small brass instruments, brzen nippers, and in one some kind of opal.

Near the same plot of ground, for about six yards' compass, were digged up coals and incinerated substances, which begat conjecture that this was the ustrina or place of burning their bodies, or some sacrificing place unto the manes,<sup>1</sup> which was properly below the surface of the ground, as the ara and altars unto the gods and heroes above it.

That these were the urns of Romans<sup>2</sup> from the common custom and place where they were found, is no obscure conjecture, not far from a Roman garrison, and but five miles from Brancaster, set down by ancient record under the name of Brannodunum. And where the adjoining town, containing seven parishes, in no very different sound, but Saxon termination, still retains the name of Burnham, which being an early station, it is not improbable the neighbor parts were filled with habitations, either of Romans themselves, or Britons Romanized, which observed the Roman customs.

Nor is it improbable, that the Romans early possessed this country. For though we meet not with such strict particulars of these parts before the new institution of Constantine and military charge of the count of the Saxon shore, and that about the Saxon invasions, the Dalmatian horsemen were in the garrison of Brancaster; yet in the time of Claudius, Vespasian, and Severus, we find no less than three legions dispersed through the province of Britain. And as high as the reign of Claudius a great overthrow was given unto the Iceni, by the Roman lieutenant Ostorius. Not long after, the country was so molested, that, in hope of a better state, Prasutagus bequeathed his kingdom unto Nero and his daughters; and Boadicea, his queen, fought the last decisive battle with Paulinus. After which time, and conquest of Agricola, the lieutenant of Vespasian, probable it is, they wholly possessed this country, ordering it into garrisons or habitations best suitable with their securities; and so some Roman habitations not improbable in these parts, as high as the time of Vespasian, where the Saxons after seated, in whose thin-filled maps we yet find the name of Walsingham. Now if the Iceni were but Gammadims, Anconians, or men that lived in an angle, wedge, or elbow of Britain, according to the original etymology, this country will challenge the emphatical appellation, as most properly making the elbow or iken of Icenia.

That Britain was notably populous is undeniable, from that expression of Cæsar.<sup>3</sup> That the Romans themselves were early in no small numbers, seventy thousand, with their associates, slain by Boadicea, affords a sure account. And though not many Roman habitations are now known, yet some, by old works, rampiers,<sup>4</sup> coins, and urns, do testify their possessions. Some urns have been found at Castor, some also about Southcreak, and, not many years past, no less than ten in a field at Buxton, not near any recorded garrison. Nor is it strange to find Roman coins of copper and silver among us; of Vespasian, Trajan, Adrian, Commodus, Antoninus, Severus, etc.; but the greater number of Dioclesian, Constantine, Constans, Valens, with many of Victorinus, Posthumus, Tetricus, and the thirty tyrants in the reign of Gallienus; and some as high as Adrianus have been found about Thetford, or Sitomagus, mentioned in the Itinerary of Antoninus, as the way from Venta or Castor unto London.<sup>5</sup> But the most frequent discovery is made at the two Castors by Norwich and Yarmouth, at Burghcastle, and Brancaster.

Besides the Norman, Saxon, and Danish pieces of Cuthred, Canutus, William, Matilda, and others, some British coins of gold have been dispersedly found, and no small number of silver pieces near Norwich, with a rude head upon the obverse, and an ill-formed horse on the reverse, with inscriptions Ic. Duro. T.; whether implying Iceni, Duro-

<sup>3</sup>Browne quotes part of Cæsar's account of Britain (Concerning the Gallic War, v, 10).

<sup>4</sup>Roman roads (as the word is here used by Browne).

<sup>5</sup>Venta Browne thought to be the Roman name for Norwich. Castor is Caistor St. Edmund's. The second Castor mentioned below is Caistor-on-Sea.

<sup>1</sup>Di manes were deified spirits of the dead, gods of the lower world.

<sup>2</sup>Modern antiquaries say that these urns were of Saxon origin.

triges, Tascia, or Trinobantes, we leave to higher conjecture. Vulgar chronology will have Norwich Castle as old as Julius Cæsar; but his distance from these parts, and its gothic<sup>1</sup> form of structure, abridgeth such antiquity. The British coins afford conjecture of early habitation in these parts, though the city of Norwich arose from the ruins of Venta; and though, perhaps, not without some habitation before, was enlarged, builded, and nominated by the Saxons. In what bulk or populousity it stood in the old East-Angle monarchy tradition and history are silent. Considerable it was in the Danish eruptions, when Sueno burned Thetford and Norwich, and Ulfketel, the governor thereof, was able to make some resistance, and after endeavored to burn the Danish navy.

How the Romans left so many coins in countries of their conquests seems of hard resolution; except we consider how they buried them under ground when, upon barbarous invasions, they were fain to desert their habitations in most part of their empire, and the strictness of their laws forbidding to transfer them to any other uses: wherein the Spartans were singular, who, to make their copper money useless, contempered it with vinegar. That the Britons left any, some wonder, since their money was iron and iron rings before Cæsar; and those of after-stamp by permission, and but small in bulk and bigness. That so few of the Saxons remain, because, overcome by succeeding conquerors upon the place, their coins, by degrees, passed into other stamps and the marks of after-ages.

Than the time of these urns deposited, or precise antiquity of these relics, nothing of more uncertainty; for since the lieutenant of Claudius seems to have made the first progress into these parts, since Boadicea was overthrown by the forces of Nero, and Agricola put a full end to these conquests, it is not probable the country was fully garrisoned or planted before; and, therefore, however these urns might be of later date, not likely of higher antiquity.

And the succeeding emperors desisted not from their conquests in these and other parts, as testified by history and medal-inscription

yet extant: the province of Britain, in so divided a distance from Rome, beholding the faces of many imperial persons, and in large account, no fewer than Cæsar, Claudius, Britannicus, Vespasian, Titus, Adrian, Severus, Commodus, Geta, and Caracalla.

A great obscurity herein, because no medal or emperor's coin enclosed, which might denote the date of their interments; observable in many urns, and found in those of Spitalfields, by London, which contained the coins of Claudius, Vespasian, Commodus, Antoninus, attended with lacrymatories,<sup>2</sup> lamps, bottles of liquor, and other appurtenances of affectionate superstition, which in these rural interments were wanting.

Some uncertainty there is from the period or term of burning, or the cessation of that practice. Macrobius affirmeth it was disused in his days;<sup>3</sup> but most agree, though without authentic record, that it ceased with the Antonini—most safely to be understood after the reign of those emperors which assumed the name of Antoninus, extending unto Heliogabalus. Not strictly after Marcus; for about fifty years later, we find the magnificent burning and consecration of Severus; and, if we so fix this period or cessation, these urns will challenge above thirteen hundred years.

But whether this practice was only then left by emperors and great persons, or generally about Rome, and not in other provinces, we hold not authentic account; for after Tertullian, in the days of Minucius, it was obviously objected upon Christians, that they condemned the practice of burning. And we find a passage in Sidonius, which asserteth that practice in France unto a lower account.<sup>4</sup> And, perhaps, not fully discussed till Christianity fully established, which gave the final extinction to these sepulchral bonfires.

Whether they were the bones of men, or women, or children, no authentic decision from ancient custom in distinct places of burial. Although not improbably conjectured, that the double sepulture or burying-place of Abraham, had in it such intention.

<sup>2</sup>Tear-bottles, i. e., small bottles of glass, alabaster and other substances found in ancient Roman tombs.

<sup>3</sup>About A. D. 400.

<sup>4</sup>At a later date.

<sup>1</sup>Its architecture is really Norman. It was built c. 1100.

But from exility<sup>1</sup> of bones, thinness of skulls, smallness of teeth, ribs, and thigh bones, not improbable that many thereof were persons of minor age, or women. Confirmable also from things contained in them. In most were found substances resembling combs, plates like boxes, fastened with iron pins, and handsomely overwrought like the necks or bridges of musical instruments; long brass plates overwrought like the handles of neat implements; brazen nippers, to pull away hair; and in one a kind of opal, yet maintaining a bluish color.

Now that they accustomed to burn or bury with them, things wherein they excelled, delighted, or which were dear unto them, either as farewells unto all pleasure, or vain apprehension that they might use them in the other world, is testified by all antiquity, observable from the gem or beryl ring upon the finger of Cynthia, the mistress of Propertius, when after her funeral pyre her ghost appeared unto him; and notably illustrated from the contents of that Roman urn preserved by Cardinal Farnese, wherein besides great number of gems with heads of gods and goddesses, were found an ape of agath, a grasshopper, an elephant of amber, a crystal ball, three glasses, two spoons, and six nuts of crystal; and beyond the content of urns, in the monument of Childeric the First,<sup>2</sup> and fourth king from Pharamond, casually discovered three years past at Tournay, restoring unto the world much gold richly adorning his sword, two hundred rubies, many hundred imperial coins, three hundred golden bees, the bones and horse-shoes of his horse interred with him, according to the barbarous magnificence of those days in their sepulchral obsequies. Although, if we steer by the conjecture of many<sup>3</sup> and Septuagint<sup>4</sup> expression, some trace thereof may be found even with the ancient Hebrews, not only from the sepulchral treasure of David, but the circumcision knives which Joshua also buried.

Some men, considering the contents of

<sup>1</sup>Smallness.

<sup>2</sup>Died A. D. 481; was king of the Salian Franks.

<sup>3</sup>I. e., many writers.

<sup>4</sup>Greek version of the Old Testament, which differs in some respects from the accepted Hebrew text—for example, in mentioning the circumcision knives of which Browne speaks.

these urns, lasting pieces and toys included in them, and the custom of burning with many other nations, might somewhat doubt whether all urns found among us, were properly Roman relics, or some not belonging unto our British, Saxon, or Danish forefathers.

In the form of burial among the ancient Britons, the large discourses of Cæsar, Tacitus, and Strabo are silent. For the discovery whereof, with other particulars, we much deplore the loss of that letter which Cicero expected or received from his brother Quintus, as a resolution of British customs; or the account which might have been made by Scribonius Largus, the physician, accompanying the Emperor Claudius, who might have also discovered that frugal bit<sup>5</sup> of the old Britons, which in the bigness of a bean could satisfy their thirst and hunger.

But that the Druids and ruling priests used to burn and bury, is expressed by Pomponius; that Bellinus, the brother of Brennus, and king of Britons, was burned, is acknowledged by Polydorus, as also by Amandus Zierexensis<sup>6</sup> in Historia, and Pineda in his Universa Historia (Spanish). That they held that practice in Gallia, Cæsar expressly delivereth. Whether the Britons (probably descended from them, of like religion, language, and manners) did not sometimes make use of burning, or whether at least such as were after civilized unto the Roman life and manners, conformed not unto this practice, we have no historical assertion or denial. But since, from the account of Tacitus, the Romans early wrought so much civility upon the British stock, that they brought them to build temples, to wear the gown, and study the Roman laws and language, that they conformed also unto their religious rites and customs in burials seems no improbable conjecture.

That burning the dead was used in Sarmatia is affirmed by Gaguinus; that the Sueons and Gothlanders used to burn their princes and great persons, is delivered by Saxo and Olaus;<sup>7</sup> that this was the old German practice, is also asserted by Tacitus. And though we are bare in historical particulars of such obsequies in this island, or that the Saxons, Jutes, and Angles burned their dead, yet came they from parts where 'twas of ancient practice; the Germans using it, from whom they were descended. And even in Jutland and Sleswick in Anglia Cymbrica, urns with bones were found not many years before us.

<sup>5</sup>I. e., small quantity of food.

<sup>6</sup>A Dutch writer.

<sup>7</sup>Saxo Grammaticus and Olaus Wormius.

But the Danish and northern nations have raised an era or point of compute from their custom of burning their dead: some deriving it from Unguinus, some from Frotho the Great, who ordained by law, that princes and chief commanders should be committed unto the fire, though the common sort had the common grave interment. So Starkaterus, that old hero, was burned, and Ringo royally burned the body of Harold the king slain by him.<sup>1</sup>

What time this custom generally expired in that nation, we discern no assured period; whether it ceased before Christianity, or upon their conversion, by Ansgarius the Gaul, in the time of Ludovicus Pius<sup>2</sup> the son of Charles the Great, according to good computes; or whether it might not be used by some persons, while for an hundred and eighty years Paganism and Christianity were promiscuously embraced among them, there is no assured conclusion. About which times the Danes were busy in England, and particularly infested this country; where many castles and strongholds were built by them, or against them, and great number of names and families still derived from them. But since this custom was probably disused before their invasion or conquest, and the Romans confessedly practised the same since their possession of this island, the most assured account will fall upon the Romans, or Britons Romanized.

However, certain it is, that urns conceived of no Roman original, are often digged up both in Norway and Denmark, handsomely described, and graphically represented by the learned physician Wormius. And in some parts of Denmark in no ordinary number, as stands delivered by authors exactly describing those countries. And they contained not only bones, but many other substances in them, as knives, pieces of iron, brass, and wood, and one of Norway a brass gilded jew's-harp.

Nor were they confused or careless in disposing the noblest sort, while they placed large stones in circle about the urns or bodies which they interred: somewhat answerable unto the monument of Rollrich stones in England, or sepulchral monument probably erected by Rollo,<sup>3</sup> who after conquered Normandy; where 'tis not improbable somewhat might be discovered. Meanwhile to what nation or person belonged that large urn found at Ashbury, containing mighty bones, and a buckler; what those large urns found at Little Massingham; or why the Anglesea urns are placed with their mouths downward, remains yet undiscovered.

CHAPTER III

PLASTERED and whited sepulchers were anciently affected in cadaverous and corruptive burials;<sup>4</sup> and the rigid Jews were wont to garnish the sepulchers of the righteous. Ulysses, in Hecuba, cared not how meanly he lived, so he might find a noble tomb after death. Great persons affected great monuments; and the fair and larger urns contained no vulgar ashes, which makes that disparity in those which time discovereth among us. The present urns were not of one capacity, the largest containing above a gallon, some not much above half that measure; nor all of one figure, wherein there is no strict conformity in the same or different countries; observable from those represented by Casalius, Bosio, and others, though all found in Italy; while many have handles, ears, and long necks, but most imitate a circular figure, in a spherical and round composition; whether from any mystery, best duration or capacity,<sup>5</sup> were but a conjecture. But the common form with necks was a proper figure, making our last bed like our first; nor much unlike the urns of our nativity while we lay in the nether part of the earth, and inward vault of our microcosm. Many

<sup>1</sup>Those named in this paragraph are all mentioned in the Danish History of Saxo Grammaticus.

<sup>2</sup>Louis the Pious reigned A. D. 814-840.

<sup>3</sup>Territory in northern France was ceded to Rolf in 912. The stones mentioned are in reality prehistoric. They are in Oxfordshire, in the parish of Little Roll-right.

<sup>4</sup>Burials of the whole corruptible body.

<sup>5</sup>Whether because this shape has any mysterious significance, or endures best, or has the largest capacity.

urns are red, these but of a black color, somewhat smooth, and dully sounding, which begat some doubt, whether they were burned, or only baked in oven or sun, according to the ancient way, in many bricks, tiles, pots, and testaceous<sup>1</sup> works; and, as the word testa is properly to be taken, when occurring without addition and chiefly intended by Pliny, when he commendeth bricks and tiles of two years old, and to make them in the spring. Nor only these concealed pieces, but the open magnificence of antiquity, ran much in the artifice of clay. Hereof the house of Mausolus was built, thus old Jupiter stood in the Capitol, and the statua<sup>2</sup> of Hercules, made in the reign of Tarquinius Priscus, was extant in Pliny's days. And such as declined burning or funeral urns, affected coffins of clay, according to the mode of Pythagoras, and way preferred by Varro. But the spirit of great ones was above these circumscriptions,<sup>3</sup> affecting copper, silver, gold, and porphyry urns, wherein Severus lay, after a serious view and sentence on that which should contain him. Some of these urns were thought to have been silvered over, from sparklings in several pots, with small tinsel parcels; uncertain whether from the earth, or the first mixture in them.

Among these urns we could obtain no good account of their coverings; only one seemed arched over with some kind of brick-work. Of those found at Buxton, some were covered with flints, some, in other parts, with tiles; those at Yarmouth Caster were closed with Roman bricks, and some have proper earthen covers adapted and fitted to them. But in the Homeric urn of Patroclus, whatever was the solid tegument,<sup>4</sup> we find the immediate covering to be a purple piece of silk: and such as had no covers might have the earth closely pressed into them, after which disposure were probably some of these, wherein we found the bones and ashes half mortared unto the sand and sides of the urn, and some long roots of quich, or dog's-grass, wreathed about the bones.

No lamps, included<sup>5</sup> liquors, lacrymator-

ies, or tear bottles, attended these rural urns, either as sacred unto the manes, or passionate expressions of their surviving friends. While with rich flames, and hired tears, they solemnized their obsequies, and in the most lamented monuments made one part of their inscriptions.<sup>6</sup> Some find sepulchral vessels containing liquors, which time hath incassated<sup>7</sup> into jellies. For, besides these lacrymatories, notable lamps, with vessels of oils, and aromatical liquors, attended noble ossuaries;<sup>8</sup> and some yet retaining a vinosity and spirit in them, which, if any have tasted, they have far exceeded the palates of antiquity. Liquors not to be computed by years of annual magistrates, but by great conjunctions and the fatal periods of kingdoms. The draughts of consulary date were but crude unto these, and Opimian wine but in the must<sup>9</sup> unto them.

In sundry graves and sepulchers we meet with rings, coins, and chalices. Ancient frugality was so severe, that they allowed no gold to attend the corpse, but only that which served to fasten their teeth. Whether the Opaline stone in this were burned upon the finger of the dead, or cast into the fire by some affectionate friend, it will consist with either custom. But other incinerable<sup>10</sup> substances were found so fresh, that they could feel no singe from fire. These, upon view, were judged to be wood; but, sinking in water, and tried by the fire, we found them to be bone or ivory. In their hardness and yellow color they most resembled box, which, in old expressions, found the epithet of eternal, and perhaps in such conservatories might have passed uncorrupted.

That bay leaves were found green in the tomb of S. Humbert, after an hundred and fifty years, was looked upon as miraculous. Remarkable it was unto old spectators, that the cypress of the temple of Diana lasted so many hundred years. The wood of the ark, and olive-rod of Aaron, were older at the

<sup>6</sup>In the monuments showing the greatest lamentation part of the inscription stated that the dead were placed there with tears.

<sup>7</sup>Thickened.

<sup>8</sup>Receptacles for bones.

<sup>9</sup>But sour. The meaning is that these wines had attained an age far greater than any the ancients drank, and presumably a correspondingly finer flavor.

<sup>10</sup>Reducible by fire to ashes.

<sup>1</sup>Earthenware.

<sup>2</sup>Statue.

<sup>3</sup>Boundaries.

<sup>4</sup>Covering.

<sup>5</sup>Enclosed.

captivity; but the cypress of the ark of Noah was the greatest vegetable of antiquity, if Josephus were not deceived by some fragments of it in his days: to omit the moor logs and fir trees found under-ground in many parts of England; the undated ruins of winds, floods, or earthquakes, and which in Flanders still show from what quarter they fell, as generally lying in a northeast position.

But though we found not these pieces to be wood, according to first apprehensions, yet we missed not altogether of some woody substance; for the bones were not so clearly picked but some coals were found amongst them; a way to make wood perpetual, and a fit associate for metal, whereon was laid the foundation of the great Ephesian temple,<sup>1</sup> and which were made the lasting tests of old boundaries and landmarks. Whilst we look on these, we admire not observations of coals found fresh after four hundred years. In a long-deserted habitation even egg-shells have been found fresh, not tending to corruption.

In the monument of King Childeic the iron relics were found all rusty and crumbling into pieces; but our little iron pins, which fastened the ivory works, held well together, and lost not their magnetical quality, though wanting a tenacious moisture for the firmer union of parts; although it be hardly drawn into fusion, yet that metal soon submitteth unto rust and dissolution. In the brazen pieces we admired not the duration, but the freedom from rust, and ill savor, upon the hardest attrition; but now exposed unto the piercing atoms of air, in the space of a few months, they begin to spot and betray their green entrails.<sup>2</sup> We conceive not these urns to have descended thus naked as they appear, or to have entered their graves without the old habit<sup>3</sup> of flowers. The urn of Philopœmen was so laden with flowers and ribbons, that it afforded no sight of itself. The rigid Lycurgus allowed olive and myrtle. The Athenians might fairly except against the practice of Democritus, to be buried up in honey, as fearing to embezzle<sup>4</sup> a great commodity of their country, and the best of that kind in Europe. But Plato seemed too frugally politic, who allowed no larger monument than would contain four heroic verses, and designed the most barren ground for sepulture: though we cannot commend the goodness of that sepulchral ground which was set at no higher rate than the mean salary of Judas. Though the earth had confounded the ashes of these ossuaries, yet the bones were so smartly burned, that some thin plates of brass were found half melted among them. Whereby we apprehend they were not of the meanest carcasses, perfunctorily fired, as sometimes in military, and commonly in pestilence, burnings; or after the manner of abject corpses, huddled forth and carelessly burned, without the Esquiline Port at Rome; which was an affront continued upon Tiberius, while they but half burned his body, and in the amphitheater, according to the custom in notable malefactors; whereas Nero seemed not so much to fear his death as that his head should be cut off and his body not burned entire.

Some, finding many fragments of skulls in these urns, suspected a mixture of bones; in none we searched was there cause of such conjecture, though sometimes they declined not that practice.—The ashes of Domitian were mingled with those of Julia; of Achilles with those of Patroclus. All urns contained not single ashes; without confused burnings they affectionately compounded their bones; passionately endeavoring to continue their living unions. And when distance of death denied such conjunctions, unsatisfied affections conceived some satisfaction to be neighbors in the grave, to lie urn by urn, and touch but in their names. And many were so curious to continue their living relations, that they contrived large and family urns, wherein the ashes of their nearest friends and kindred might successively be received, at least some parcels thereof, while their collateral memorials<sup>5</sup> lay in minor vessels about them.

Antiquity held too light thoughts from objects of mortality, while some drew provocatives of mirth from anatomies,<sup>6</sup> and jugglers showed tricks with skeletons; when

<sup>1</sup>The temple of Diana at Ephesus, one of the "seven wonders" of the ancient world.

<sup>2</sup>The green rust of brass.

<sup>3</sup>Adornment.

<sup>4</sup>Squander.

<sup>5</sup>Memorials of collateral relatives.

<sup>6</sup>Skeletons.

fiddlers made not so pleasant mirth as fencers, and men could sit with quiet stomachs, while hanging was played before them. Old considerations made few mementos by skulls and bones upon their monuments. In the Egyptian obelisks and hieroglyphical figures it is not easy to meet with bones. The sepulchral lamps speak nothing less than<sup>1</sup> sepulture, and in their literal draughts<sup>2</sup> prove often obscene and antic pieces. Where we find D. M.<sup>3</sup> it is obvious<sup>4</sup> to meet with sacrificing pateras and vessels of libation upon old sepulchral monuments. In the Jewish hypogæum and subterranean cell at Rome, was little observable beside the variety of lamps and frequent draughts of the holy candlestick. In authentic draughts of Anthony and Jerome we meet with thigh bones and death's-heads; but the cemeterial cells of ancient Christians and martyrs were filled with draughts of Scripture stories; not declining the flourishes of cypress palms, and olive, and the mystical figures of peacocks, doves, and cocks; but iterately<sup>5</sup> affecting the portraits of Enoch, Lazarus, Jonas, and the vision of Ezekiel, as hopeful draughts, and hinting imagery of the resurrection, which is the life of the grave, and sweetens our habitations in the land of moles and pismires.

Gentile inscriptions precisely delivered the extent of men's lives, seldom the manner of their deaths, which history itself so often leaves obscure in the records of memorable persons. There is scarce any philosopher but dies twice or thrice in Laërtius; nor almost any life without two or three deaths in Plutarch; which makes the tragical ends of noble persons more favorably resented<sup>6</sup> by compassionate readers who find some relief in the election of such differences.

The certainty of death is attended with uncertainties, in time, manner, places. The variety of monuments hath often obscured true graves; and cenotaphs confounded<sup>7</sup> sepulchers. For beside their real tombs, many have found honorary and empty sepulchers. The variety of Homer's monuments made him of various countries. Euripides had his tomb in Attica, but his sepulture in Macedonia. And Severus found his real sepulcher in Rome, but his empty grave in Gallia.

He that lay in a golden urn eminently above the earth, was not like to find the quiet of his bones. Many of these urns were broke by a vulgar discoverer in hope of enclosed treasure. The ashes of Marcellus were lost above ground, upon the like account. Where profit hath prompted, no age hath wanted such miners; for which the most barbarous exploiters<sup>8</sup> found the most civil rhetoric:—"Gold once out of the earth is no more due unto it;—what was unreasonably committed to the ground, is reasonably resumed from it;—let monuments and rich fabrics, not riches, adorn men's ashes;—the commerce of the living is not to be transferred unto the dead;—it is not injustice to take that which none complains to lose, and no man is wronged where no man is possessed."

What virtue yet sleeps in this terra damnata<sup>9</sup> and aged cinders, were petty magic to experiment. These crumbling relics and long fired particles superannuate<sup>10</sup> such expectations; bones, hairs, nails, and teeth of the dead, were the treasures of old sorcerers. In vain we revive such practices; present superstition too visibly perpetuates the folly of our forefathers, wherein unto old observation<sup>11</sup> this island was so complete, that it might have instructed Persia.

Plato's historian of the other world<sup>12</sup> lies twelve days incorrupted, while his soul was viewing the large stations of the dead. How to keep the corpse seven days from corruption by anointing and washing, without exenteration,<sup>13</sup> were an hazardable piece of art, in our choicest practice. How they made distinct separation of bones and ashes from

<sup>1</sup>Anything but.

<sup>2</sup>Realistic pictures.

<sup>3</sup>Abbreviation for Dis Manibus.

<sup>4</sup>Common.

<sup>5</sup>Repeatedly.

<sup>6</sup>Received.

<sup>7</sup>Caused doubt about.

<sup>8</sup>Pillagers.

<sup>9</sup>Condemned earth;—an alchemical term, meaning what remains after all else has been removed by burning, distilling, and the like.

<sup>10</sup>Are too old for.

<sup>11</sup>I. e., to Pliny, to whom Browne refers in a note (Natural History, xxx, 4).

<sup>12</sup>Er the Pamphylian, Republic, x, 614.

<sup>13</sup>Disemboweling.

fiery admixture, hath found no historical solution; though they seemed to make a distinct collection, and overlooked not Pyrrhus his toe.<sup>1</sup> Some provision they might make by fictile<sup>2</sup> vessels, coverings, tiles, or flat stones, upon and about the body (and in the same field, not far from these urns, many stones were found under ground), as also by careful separation of extraneous matter, composing and raking up the burned bones with forks, observable in that notable lamp of Galvanus. Marlianus, who had the sight of the vas ustrinum or vessel wherein they burned the dead, found in the Esquiline field at Rome, might have afforded clearer solution. But their insatisfaction herein begat that remarkable invention in the funeral pyres of some princes, by incombustible sheets made with a texture of asbestos, incombustible flax, or salamander's wool,<sup>3</sup> which preserved their bones and ashes incommixed.

How the bulk of a man should sink into so few pounds of bones and ashes, may seem strange unto any who considers not its constitution, and how slender a mass will remain upon an open and urging fire of the carnal composition. Even bones themselves, reduced into ashes, do abate a notable proportion. And consisting much of a volatile salt, when that is fired out, make a light kind of cinders. Although their bulk be disproportionate to their weight, when the heavy principle of salt is fired out, and the earth almost only remaineth; observable in saw, which makes more ashes than oak, and discovers the common fraud of selling ashes by measure, and not by ponderation.

Some bones make best skeletons, some bodies quick and speediest ashes. Who would expect a quick flame from hydropical Heraclitus? The poisoned soldier when his belly brake, put out two pyres in Plutarch. But in the plague of Athens, one private pyre served two or three intruders; and the Saracens burned in large heaps, by the king of Castile, showed how little fuel sufficeth. Though the funeral pyre of Patroclus took up an hundred foot, a piece of an old boat burned Pompey; and if the burthen of Isaac were sufficient for an holocaust, a man may carry his own pyre.

From animals are drawn good burning lights, and good medicines against burning.<sup>4</sup> Though the seminal humor seems of a contrary nature to fire, yet the body completed proves a combustible lump, wherein fire finds flame even from bones, and some fuel almost from all parts; though the metropolis of humidity<sup>5</sup> seems least disposed unto it, which might render the skulls of these urns less burned than other bones. But all flies or sinks before fire almost in all bodies: when the common ligament is dissolved, the attenuable parts ascend, the rest subside in coal, calx,<sup>6</sup> or ashes.

To burn the bones of the king of Edom for lime, seems no irrational ferity;<sup>7</sup> but to drink of the ashes of dead relations, a passionate prodigality. He that hath the ashes of his friend, hath an everlasting treasure; where fire taketh leave, corruption slowly enters. In bones well burned, fire makes a wall against itself; experimented<sup>8</sup> in cupels,<sup>9</sup> and tests of metals, which consist of such ingredients. What the sun compoundeth, fire analyseth, not transmuteth. That devouring agent leaves almost always a morsel for the earth, whereof all things are but a colony; and which, if time permits, the mother element will have in their primitive mass again.

He that looks for urns and old sepulchral relics, must not seek them in the ruins of temples, where no religion anciently placed them. These were found in a field, according to ancient custom, in noble or private burial; the old practice of the Canaanites, the family of Abraham, and the burying-place of Joshua, in the borders of his possessions; and also agreeable unto Roman practice to bury by highways, whereby their monuments were under eye;—memorials of themselves, and mementos of mortality unto living passengers; whom the epitaphs of great ones were fain to beg to stay and look upon

<sup>4</sup>Browne's note appears to indicate that he was thinking of sperm oil and white of egg.

<sup>5</sup>The brain.

<sup>6</sup>Powder remaining after all else has been consumed by burning or roasting; an alchemical term.

<sup>7</sup>Barbarity.

<sup>8</sup>As is shown.

<sup>9</sup>Refining vessels made of bone-ash, used in refining gold and silver.

<sup>1</sup>Which was incombustible.

<sup>2</sup>Clay.

<sup>3</sup>Amianthus, a kind of asbestos.

them,—a language though sometimes used, not so proper in church inscriptions. The sensible rhetoric of the dead, to exemplarity of good life, first admitted the bones of pious men and martyrs within church walls, which in succeeding ages crept into promiscuous practice: while Constantine was peculiarly favored to be admitted into the church porch, and the first thus buried in England, was in the days of Cuthred.

Christians dispute how their bodies should lie in the grave. In urnal interment they clearly escaped this controversy. Though we decline the religious consideration, yet in cemeterial and narrower burying-places, to avoid confusion and cross-position, a certain posture were to be admitted: which even Pagan civility observed. The Persians lay north and south; the Megarians and Phœnicians placed their heads to the east; the Athenians, some think, towards the west, which Christians still retain. And Beda will have it to be the posture of our Savior. That he was crucified with his face toward the west, we will not contend with tradition and probable account; but we applaud not the hand of the painter, in exalting his cross so high above those on either side: since hereof we find no authentic account in history, and even the crosses found by Helena, pretend no such distinction from longitude or dimension.

To be gnawed out of our graves, to have our skulls made drinking-bowls, and our bones turned into pipes, to delight and sport our enemies, are tragical abominations escaped in burning burials.

Urnal interments and burned relics lie not in fear of worms, or to be an heritage for serpents. In carnal sepulture, corruptions seem peculiar unto parts; and some speak of snakes out of the spinal marrow. But while we suppose common worms in graves, 'tis not easy to find any there; few in churchyards above a foot deep, fewer or none in churches though in fresh-decayed bodies. Teeth, bones, and hair, give the most lasting defiance to corruption. In an hydropical<sup>1</sup> body, ten years buried in the churchyard, we<sup>2</sup> met with a fat concretion, where the nitre of the earth, and the salt and lixivious<sup>3</sup> liquor of the body, had coagulated large lumps of fat into the consistence of the hardest Castile soap, whereof part remaineth with us. After a battle with the Persians, the Roman corpses decayed in few days, while the Persian bodies remained dry and uncorrupted. Bodies in the same ground do not uniformly dissolve, nor bones equally moulder; whereof in the opprobrious disease, we expect no long duration. The body of the Marquis of Dorset seemed sound and handsomely cereclothed, that after seventy-eight years was found uncorrupted. Common tombs preserve not beyond powder: a firmer consistence and compage<sup>4</sup> of parts might be expected from arefaction,<sup>5</sup> deep burial, or charcoal. The greatest antiquities of mortal bodies may remain in putrefied bones, whereof, though we take not in the pillar of Lot's wife, or metamorphosis of Ortelius, some may be older than pyramids, in the putrefied relics of the general inundation. When Alexander opened the tomb of Cyrus, the remaining bones discovered his proportion, whereof urnal fragments afford but a bad conjecture, and have this disadvantage of grave interments, that they leave us ignorant of most personal discoveries. For since bones afford not only rectitude and stability but figure unto the body, it is no impossible physiognomy to conjecture at fleshy appendencies, and after what shape the muscles and carnosous parts might hang in their full consistencies. A full-spread cariola<sup>6</sup> shows a well-shaped horse behind; handsome formed skulls give some analogy to fleshy resemblance. A critical view of bones makes a good distinction of sexes. Even color is not beyond conjecture, since it is hard to be deceived in the distinction of Negroes' skulls. Dante's<sup>7</sup> characters are to be found in skulls as well as faces. Hercules is not only known by his foot. Other parts make out their compro-

<sup>4</sup>Coherence.

<sup>5</sup>Drying.

<sup>6</sup>The haunch-bones of a horse.

<sup>7</sup>Dante in his view of purgatory, found gluttons so meager, and extenuated, that he conceived them to have been in the siege of Jerusalem, and that it was easy to have discovered Homo or Omo in their faces. M being made by the two lines of their cheeks, arching over the eyebrows to the nose, and their sunk eyes making OO which makes up Omo (Browne's note).

<sup>1</sup>Dropsical.

<sup>2</sup>I. e., Browne.

<sup>3</sup>Alkaline.

portions and inferences upon whole or parts. And since the dimensions of the head measure the whole body, and the figure thereof gives conjecture of the principal faculties, physiognomy outlives ourselves, and ends not in our graves.

Severe contemplators, observing these lasting relics, may think them good monuments of persons past, little advantage to future beings; and, considering that power which subdueth all things unto itself, that can resume the scattered atoms, or identify out of any thing, conceive it superfluous to expect a resurrection out of relics: but the soul subsisting, other matter, clothed with due accidents,<sup>1</sup> may salve the individuality. Yet the saints, we observe, arose from graves and monuments about the holy city. Some think the ancient patriarchs so earnestly desired to lay their bones in Canaan, as hoping to make a part of that resurrection; and, though thirty miles from Mount Calvary, at least to lie in that region which should produce the first fruits of the dead. And if, according to learned conjecture, the bodies of men shall rise where their greatest relics remain, many are not like to err in the topography of their resurrection, though their bones or bodies be after translated by angels into the field of Ezekiel's vision, or as some will order it, into the valley of judgment, or Jehosaphat.

CHAPTER IV

CHRISTIANS have handsomely glossed the deformity of death by careful consideration of the body, and civil rites which take off brutal terminations: and though they conceived all reparable by a resurrection, cast not off all care of interment. And since the ashes of sacrifices burned upon the altar of God were carefully carried out by the priests, and deposited<sup>2</sup> in a clean field; since they acknowledged their bodies to be the lodging of Christ, and temples of the Holy Ghost, they devolved not all upon the sufficiency of soul-existence; and therefore with long services and full solemnities, concluded their last exequies, wherein to all distinctions the Greek devotion seems most pathetically ceremonious.

<sup>1</sup>Qualities.

<sup>2</sup>Deposited.

Christian invention hath chiefly driven at rites, which speak hopes of another life, and hints of a resurrection. And if the ancient Gentiles held not the immortality of their better part, and some subsistence after death, in several rites, customs, actions, and expressions, they contradicted their own opinions: wherein Democritus went high, even to the thought of a resurrection, as scoffingly recorded by Pliny. What can be more express than the expression of Phocylides? Or who would expect from Lucretius a sentence of Ecclesiastes? Before Plato could speak, the soul had wings in Homer, which fell not, but flew out of the body into the mansions of the dead; who also observed that handsome distinction of Demas and Soma, for the body conjoined to the soul, and body separated from it. Lucian spoke much truth in jest, when he said that part of Hercules which proceeded from Alcmena perished, that from Jupiter remained immortal. Thus Socrates was content that his friends should bury his body, so they would not think they buried Socrates; and, regarding only his immortal part, was indifferent to be burned or buried. From such considerations, Diogenes might condemn sepulture, and, being satisfied that the soul could not perish, grow careless of corporal interment. The Stoics, who thought the souls of wise men had their habitation about the moon, might make slight account of subterraneous deposition; whereas the Pythagoreans and transcorporating<sup>3</sup> philosophers, who were to be often buried, held great care of their interment. And the Platonics rejected not a due care of the grave, though they put their ashes to unreasonable expectations, in their tedious term of return and long set revolution.<sup>4</sup>

Men have lost their reason in nothing so much as their religion, wherein stones and clouts make martyrs; and, since the religion of one seems madness unto another, to afford an account or rational of old rites requires no rigid reader. That they kindled the pyre aversely, or turning their face from it, was an handsome symbol of unwilling ministrations. That they washed their bones with wine and milk; that the mother wrapped them in linen, and dried them in her bosom, the first fostering part and place of their nourishment; that they opened their eyes towards heaven before they kindled the fire, as the place of their hopes or original, were no improper ceremonies. Their last valediction, thrice uttered by the attendants, was also very solemn, and somewhat answered by Christians, who thought it too little, if they threw not the earth thrice upon the interred body. That, in strewing their tombs, the Romans affected the rose; the Greeks amaranthus and myrtle: that the funeral pyre consisted of sweet fuel, cypress, fir, larix,<sup>1</sup> yew, and trees perpetually verdant, lay silent expressions of their surviving hopes. Wherein Christians, who deck their coffins with bays, have found a more elegant emblem; for that tree, seeming dead, will restore itself from the root, and its dry and exsuccous<sup>2</sup> leaves resume their verdure again; which, if we mistake not, we have also observed in furze. Whether the planting of yew in churchyards hold not its original from ancient funeral rites, or as an emblem of resurrection, from its perpetual verdure, may also admit conjecture.

<sup>3</sup>Believers in the doctrine of the transmigration of souls.

<sup>4</sup>The period was perhaps 25,000 years.

They made use of music to excite or quiet the affections of their friends, according to different harmonies. But the secret and symbolical hint was the harmonical nature of the soul; which, delivered from the body, went again to enjoy the primitive harmony of heaven, from whence it first descended; which, according to its progress traced by antiquity, came down by Cancer, and ascended by Capricornus.<sup>3</sup>

They burned not children before their teeth appeared, as apprehending their bodies too tender a morsel for fire, and that their gristly bones would scarce leave separable relics after the pyral combustion. That they kindled not fire in their houses for some days after was a strict memorial of the late afflicting fire. And mourning without hope, they had an happy fraud against excessive lamentation, by a common opinion that deep sorrows disturb their ghosts.

That they buried their dead on their backs, or in a supine position, seems agreeable unto profound sleep, and common posture of dying; contrary to the most natural way of birth; nor unlike our pendulous posture, in the doubtful<sup>4</sup> state of the womb. Diogenes was singular, who preferred a prone situation in the grave; and some Christians like neither, who decline the figure of rest, and make choice of an erect posture.

That they carried them out of the world with their feet forward, not inconsonant unto reason, as contrary unto the native posture of man, and his production first into it; and also agreeable unto their opinions, while they bid adieu unto the world, not to look again upon it; whereas Mahometans who think to return to a delightful life again, are carried forth with their heads forward, and looking toward their houses.

They closed their eyes, as parts which first die, or first discover the sad effects of death. But their iterated clamations<sup>5</sup> to excite<sup>6</sup> their dying or dead friends, or revoke them unto life again, was a vanity of affection; as not presumably ignorant of the critical tests of death, by apposition of feathers, glasses, and reflection of figures, which dead eyes represent not: which, however not strictly verifiable in fresh and warm cadavers,<sup>7</sup> could hardly elude the test, in corpses of four or five days.

That they sucked in the last breath of their expiring friends, was surely a practice of no medical institution, but a loose opinion that the soul passed out that way, and a fondness of affection, from some Pythagorical foundation, that the spirit of one body passed into another, which they wished might be their own.

That they poured oil upon the pyre, was a tolerable practice, while the intention rested in facilitating the accension.<sup>8</sup> But to place good omens in the quick and speedy burning, to sacrifice unto the winds for a dispatch in this office, was a low form of superstition.

The archimime, or jester, attending the funeral train, and imitating the speeches, gesture, and manners of the deceased, was too light for such solemnities, contradicting

<sup>1</sup>Larch.

<sup>2</sup>Sapless.

<sup>3</sup>Signs of the zodiac.

<sup>4</sup>Obscure.

<sup>5</sup>Outcries.

<sup>6</sup>Arouse.

<sup>7</sup>Dead bodies.

<sup>8</sup>Ignition.

their funeral orations and doleful rites of the grave.

That they buried a piece of money with them as a fee of the Elysian ferryman, was a practice full of folly. But the ancient custom of placing coins in considerable urns, and the present practice of burying medals in the noble foundations of Europe, are laudable ways of historical discoveries, in actions, persons, chronologies; and posterity will applaud them.

We examine not the old laws of sepulture, exempting certain persons from burial or burning. But hereby we apprehend that these were not the bones of persons planet-struck or burned with fire from heaven; no relics of traitors to their country, self-killers, or sacrilegious malefactors; persons in old apprehension unworthy of the earth: condemned unto the Tartarus of hell, and bottomless pit of Plato, from whence there was no redemption.

Nor were only many customs questionable in order to their obsequies, but also sundry practices, fictions, and conceptions, discordant or obscure, of their state and future beings. Whether unto eight or ten bodies of men to add one of a woman, as being more inflammable, and unctuously constituted for the better pyral combustion, were any rational practice; or whether the complaint of Periander's wife be tolerable, that wanting her funeral burning, she suffered intolerable cold in hell, according to the constitution of the infernal house of Plato, wherein cold makes a great part of their tortures, it cannot pass without some question.

Why the female ghosts appear unto Ulysses, before the heroes and masculine spirits,—why the Psyche or soul of Tiresias is of the masculine gender, who, being blind on earth, sees more than all the rest in hell; why the funeral suppers consisted of eggs, beans, smallage,<sup>1</sup> and lettuce, since the dead are made to eat asphodels about the Elysian meadows,—why, since there is no sacrifice acceptable, nor any propitiation for the covenant of the grave, men set up the deity of Morta,<sup>2</sup> and fruitlessly adored divinities without ears, it cannot escape some doubt.

The dead seem all alive in the human Hades of Homer, yet cannot well speak, prophesy, or know the living, except they drink blood, wherein is the life of man. And therefore the souls of Penelope's paramours, conducted by Mercury, chirped like bats, and those which followed Hercules, made a noise but like a flock of birds.

The departed spirits know things past and to come; yet are ignorant of things present. Agamemnon foretells what should happen unto Ulysses; yet ignorantly enquires what is become of his own son. The ghosts are afraid of swords in Homer; yet Sibylla tells Æneas in Virgil, the thin habit of spirits was beyond the force of weapons. The spirits put off their malice with their bodies, and Cæsar and Pompey accord in Latin hell; yet Ajax, in Homer, endures not a conference with Ulysses: and Deiphobus appears all mangled in Virgil's ghosts, yet we meet with perfect shadows among the wounded ghosts of Homer.

Since Charon in Lucian applauds his condition among the dead, whether it be handsomely said of Achilles, that living contemner of death, that he had rather be a ploughman's servant, than emperor of the dead? How Hercules his soul is in hell, and yet in heaven; and Julius his soul in a star, yet seen by Æneas in hell?—except the ghosts were but images and shadows of the soul, received in higher mansions, according to the ancient division of body, soul, and image, or simulacrum of them both. The particulars of future beings must needs be dark unto ancient theories, which Christian philosophy yet determines but in a cloud of opinions. A dialogue between two infants in the womb concerning the state of this world, might handsomely illustrate our ignorance of the next, whereof methinks we yet discourse in Plato's den, and are but embryon<sup>3</sup> philosophers.

Pythagoras escapes in the fabulous Hell of Dante, among that swarm of philosophers, wherein whilst we meet with Plato and Socrates, Cato is to be found in no lower place than purgatory. Among all the set, Epicurus is most considerable, whom men make honest without an Elysium, who contemned life without encouragement of immortality, and making nothing after death, yet made nothing of the king of terrors.

<sup>1</sup>Wild celery.

<sup>2</sup>One of the Fates, goddess of death.

<sup>3</sup>Rudimentary.

Were the happiness of the next world as closely apprehended as the felicities of this, it were a martyrdom to live; and unto such as consider none hereafter, it must be more than death to die, which makes us amazed at those audacities that durst be nothing and return into their chaos again. Certainly such spirits as could condemn death, when they expected no better being after, would have scorned to live, had they known any. And therefore we applaud not the judgment of Machiavel, that Christianity makes men cowards, or that with the confidence of but half-dying, the despised virtues of patience and humility have abased the spirits of men, which Pagan principles exalted; but rather regulated the wildness of audacities, in the attempts, grounds, and eternal sequels of death; wherein men of the boldest spirits are often prodigiously temerarious.<sup>1</sup> Nor can we extenuate the valor of ancient martyrs, who condemned death in the uncomfortable scene of their lives, and in their decrepit martyrdoms did probably lose not many months of their days, or parted with life when it was scarce worth the living. For (beside that long time past holds no consideration unto a slender time to come) they had no small disadvantage from the constitution of old age, which naturally makes men fearful; complexionally superannuated from the bold and courageous thoughts of youth and fervent years. But the contempt of death from corporal animosity,<sup>2</sup> promoteth not our felicity.<sup>3</sup> They may sit in the orchestra, and noblest seats of heaven, who have held up shaking hands<sup>4</sup> in the fire, and humanly<sup>5</sup> contended for glory.

Meanwhile Epicurus lies deep in Dante's Hell, wherein we meet with tombs enclosing souls which denied their immortalities. But whether the virtuous heathen, who lived better than he spake, or erring in the principles of himself, yet lived above philosophers of more specious<sup>6</sup> maxims, lie so deep as he is placed, at least so low as not to rise against Christians, who believing or knowing that truth, have lastingly denied it in their practice and conversation—were a query too sad to insist on.

But all or most apprehensions rested in opinions of some future being, which, ignorantly or coldly believed, begat those perverted conceptions, ceremonies, sayings, which Christians pity or laugh at. Happy are they which live not in that disadvantage of time, when men could say little for futurity, but from reason: whereby the noblest minds fell often upon doubtful deaths, and melancholy dissolutions. With these hopes, Socrates warmed his doubtful spirits against that cold potion;<sup>7</sup> and Cato, before he durst give the fatal stroke, spent part of the night in reading the Immortality of Plato, thereby confirming his wavering hand unto the animosity of that attempt.

It is the heaviest stone that melancholy can throw at a man, to tell him he is at the end of his nature; or that there is no further state to come, unto which this seems progressional, and otherwise made in vain. Without this accomplishment,<sup>8</sup> the natural expectation and desire of such a state, were but a fallacy in nature; unsatisfied considerators would quarrel the justice of their constitutions, and rest content that Adam had fallen lower; whereby, by knowing no other original, and deeper ignorance of themselves, they might have enjoyed the happiness of inferior creatures, who in tranquillity possess their constitutions, as having not the apprehension to deplore their own natures, and, being framed below the circumference of these hopes, or cognition of better being, the wisdom of God hath necessitated their contentment: but the superior ingredient and obscured part of ourselves, where to all present felicities afford no resting contentment, will be able at last to tell us, we are more than our present selves, and evacuate such hopes in the fruition of their own accomplishments.

CHAPTER V

Now since these dead bones have already out-lasted the living ones of Methuselah, <sup>7</sup>The hemlock, which Socrates had to drink when condemned to death by the Athenians.

<sup>8</sup>Fulfillment.

<sup>1</sup>Foolhardy.

<sup>2</sup>High spirits.

<sup>3</sup>Does not bring us a higher reward in heaven.

<sup>4</sup>Shaking, i. e., for fear.

<sup>5</sup>With human weakness.

<sup>6</sup>Splendid.

and in a yard under ground, and thin walls of clay, out-worn all the strong and specious buildings above it, and quietly rested under the drums and tramlings of three conquests: what prince can promise such diuturnity<sup>1</sup> unto his relics, or might not gladly say,

Sic ego componi versus in ossa velim ?<sup>2</sup>

Time, which antiquates antiquities, and hath an art to make dust of all things, hath yet spared these minor monuments.

In vain we hope to be known by open and visible conservatories,<sup>3</sup> when to be unknown was the means of their continuation, and obscurity their protection. If they died by violent hands, and were thrust into their urns, these bones become considerable, and some old philosophers would honor them, whose souls they conceived most pure, which were thus snatched from their bodies, and to retain a stronger propension unto them; whereas they wearily left a languishing corpse, and with faint desires of re-union. If they fell by long and aged decay, yet wrapped up in the bundle of time, they fall into indistinction,<sup>4</sup> and make but one blot with infants. If we begin to die when we live, and long life be but a prolongation of death, our life is a sad composition; we live with death, and die not in a moment. How many pulses made up the life of Methuselah, were work for Archimedes: common counters sum up the life of Moses his man.<sup>5</sup> Our days become considerable, like petty sums, by minute accumulations; where numerous fractions make up but small round numbers; and our days of a span long, make not one little finger.

If the nearness of our last necessity brought a nearer conformity into it, there were a happiness in hoary hairs, and no calamity in half-senses. But the long habit of living indisposeth us for dying; when avarice makes us the sport of death, when even David grew politically cruel and Solomon could hardly be said to be the wisest of men.

But many are too early old, and before the date of age. Adversity stretcheth our days, misery makes Alcmena's nights,<sup>6</sup> and time hath no wings unto it. But the most tedious being is that which can unwind itself, content to be nothing, or never to have been, which was beyond the malcontent of Job, who cursed not the day of his life, but his nativity; content to have so far been, as to have a title to future being, although he had lived here but in an hidden state of life, and as it were an abortion.

What song the Syrens sang, or what name Achilles assumed when he hid himself among women, though puzzling questions,<sup>7</sup> are not beyond all conjecture. What time the persons of these ossuaries entered the famous nations of the dead, and slept with princes and counselors, might admit a wide solution. But who were the proprietaries of these bones, or what bodies these ashes made up, were a question above antiquarism; not to be resolved by man, nor easily perhaps by spirits, except we consult the provincial guardians, or tutelary observators.<sup>8</sup> Had they made as good provision for their names, as they have done for their relics, they had not so grossly erred in the art of perpetuation. But to subsist in bones, and be but pyramidally<sup>9</sup> extant, is a fallacy in duration. Vain ashes which in the oblivion of names, persons, times, and sexes, have found unto themselves a fruitless continuation, and only arise unto late posterity, as emblems of mortal vanities, antidotes against pride, vain-glory, and madding vices. Pagan vain-glories which thought the world might last for ever, had encouragement for ambition; and, finding no Atropos<sup>10</sup> unto the immortality of their names, were never damped with the necessity of oblivion. Even old ambitions had the advantage of ours, in the attempts of their vain-glories, who acting early, and before the probable meridian of time, have by this time found great accomplishment of their designs, whereby the ancient heroes have already out-lasted their

<sup>1</sup>Lastingness.

<sup>2</sup>Thus I should wish to be buried when turned to bones (Tibullus, III, ii, 26).

<sup>3</sup>Repositories.

<sup>4</sup>Obscurity.

<sup>5</sup>The allusion is to Psalms, xc, 10, where the normal life of man is said to be 70 years.

<sup>6</sup>One night as long as three (Browne's note).

<sup>7</sup>Browne says in a note that these are two of the three questions which Tiberius put to grammarians.

<sup>8</sup>Protecting spirits of the place.

<sup>9</sup>After the manner of a mummy.

<sup>10</sup>One of the Fates. She cut the thread of life.

monuments and mechanical preservations. But in this latter scene of time, we cannot expect such mummies unto our memories, when ambition may fear the prophecy of Elias, and Charles the Fifth can never hope to live within two Methuselahs of Hector.

And therefore, restless unquiet for the diuturnity of our memories unto present considerations seems a vanity almost out of date, and superannuated piece of folly. We cannot hope to live so long in our names, as some have done in their persons. One face of Janus holds no proportion unto the other. 'Tis too late to be ambitious. The great mutations of the world are acted, or time may be too short for our designs. To extend our memories by monuments, whose death we daily pray for, and whose duration we cannot hope, without injury to our expectations in the advent of the last day, were a contradiction to our beliefs. We whose generations are ordained in this setting part of time, are providentially taken off from such imaginations; and, being necessitated to eye the remaining particle of futurity, are naturally constituted unto thoughts of the next world, and cannot excusably decline the consideration of that duration, which maketh pyramids pillars of snow, and all that's past a moment.

Circles and right lines limit and close all bodies, and the mortal right-lined circle must conclude and shut up all. There is no antidote against the opium of time, which temporally considereth all things: our fathers find their graves in our short memories, and sadly tell us how we may be buried in our survivors. Gravestones tell truth scarce forty years. Generations pass while some trees stand, and old families last not three oaks. To be read by bare inscriptions like many in Gruter,<sup>1</sup> to hope for eternity by enigmatical epithets or first letters of our names, to be studied by antiquaries, who we were, and have new names given us like many of the mummies, are cold consolations unto the students of perpetuity, even by everlasting languages.

To be content that times to come should only know there was such a man, not caring whether they knew more of him, was a frigid ambition in Cardan;<sup>2</sup> disparaging his horoscopic inclination and judgment of himself. Who cares to subsist like Hippocrates' patients, or Achilles' horses in Homer, under naked nominations, without deserts and noble acts, which are the balsam<sup>3</sup> of our memories, the entelechia<sup>4</sup> and soul of our subsistences? To be nameless in worthy deeds, exceeds an infamous history. The Canaanitish woman lives more happily without a name, than Herodias with one. And who had not rather been the good thief than Pilate?

But the iniquity of oblivion blindly scattereth her poppy, and deals with the memory of men without distinction to merit of perpetuity. Who can but pity the founder of the pyramids? Herostratus lives that burned the temple of Diana; he is almost lost that built it. Time hath spared the epitaph of Adrian's horse, confounded that of himself. In vain we compute our felicities by the advantage of our good names, since bad have equal durations, and Thersites is like to live as long as Agamemnon. Who knows whether the best of men be known, or whether there be not more remarkable persons forgot, than any that stand remembered in the known account of time? Without the favor of the everlasting register, the first man had been as unknown as the last, and Methuselah's long life had been his only chronicle.

Oblivion is not to be hired. The greater part must be content to be as though they had not been, to be found in the register of God, not in the record of man. Twenty-seven names make up the first story,<sup>5</sup> and the recorded names ever since contain not one living century. The number of the dead long exceedeth all that shall live. The night of time far surpasseth the day, and who knows when was the equinox? Every hour adds unto that current arithmetic,<sup>6</sup> which scarce stands one moment. And since death must be the Lucina<sup>7</sup> of life, and even Pagans

<sup>2</sup>An Italian mathematician, physician, and philosopher.

<sup>3</sup>Preservative.

<sup>4</sup>Entelechy, the soul.

<sup>5</sup>The time before the Flood.

<sup>6</sup>That running account—i. e., continuously moving time.

<sup>7</sup>Goddess of childbirth.

<sup>1</sup>A Dutch philologer.

could doubt, whether thus to live were to die; since our longest sun sets at right descensions, and makes but winter arches, and therefore it cannot be long before we lie down in darkness, and have our light in ashes; since the brother of death daily haunts us with dying mementos, and time that grows old in itself, bids us hope no long duration;—diuturnity is a dream and folly of expectation.

Darkness and light divide the course of time, and oblivion shares with memory a great part even of our living beings; we slightly remember our felicities, and the smartest strokes of affliction leave but short smart upon us. Sense endureth no extremities, and sorrows destroy us or themselves. To weep into stones are fables. Afflictions induce callosities;<sup>1</sup> miseries are slippery, or fall like snow upon us, which notwithstanding is no unhappy stupidity. To be ignorant of evils to come, and forgetful of evils past, is a merciful provision in nature, whereby we digest the mixture of our few and evil days, and, our delivered senses not relapsing into cutting remembrances, our sorrows are not kept raw by the edge of repetitions. A great part of antiquity contented their hopes of subsistency with a transmigration of their souls,—a good way to continue their memories, while having the advantage of plural successions, they could not but act something remarkable in such variety of beings, and enjoying the fame of their passed selves, make accumulation of glory unto their last durations. Others, rather than be lost in the uncomfortable night of nothing, were content to recede into the common being, and make one particle of the public soul of all things, which was no more than to return into their unknown and divine original again. Egyptian ingenuity was more unsatisfied, contriving their bodies in sweet consistencies, to attend the return of their souls. But all was vanity, feeding the wind, and folly. The Egyptian mummies, which Cambyzes or time hath spared, avarice now consumeth. Mummy is become merchandise,<sup>2</sup> Mizraim<sup>3</sup> cures wounds, and Pharaoh is sold for balsams.

In vain do individuals hope for immortality, or any patent from oblivion, in preservations below the moon; men have been deceived even in their flatteries above the sun, and studied conceits to perpetuate their names in heaven. The various cosmography of that part hath already varied the names of contrived constellations; Nimrod is lost in Orion, and Osyris in the Dog-star. While we look for incorruption in the heavens, we find they are but like the earth;—durable in their main bodies, alterable in their parts; whereof, beside comets and new stars, perspectives<sup>4</sup> begin to tell tales, and the spots that wander about the sun, with Phaeton's favor, would make clear conviction.

There is nothing strictly immortal, but immortality. Whatever hath no beginning, may be confident of no end (all others have a dependent being and within the reach of destruction); which is the peculiar of that necessary Essence that cannot destroy itself; and the highest strain of omnipotency, to be so powerfully constituted as not to suffer even from the power of itself. But the sufficiency of Christian immortality frustrates all earthly glory, and the quality of either state after death, makes a folly of posthumous memory. God who can only<sup>5</sup> destroy our souls, and hath assured our resurrection, either of our bodies or names hath directly promised no duration. Wherein there is so much of chance, that the boldest expectants have found unhappy frustration; and to hold long subsistence, seems but a scape in oblivion.<sup>6</sup> But man is a noble animal, splendid in ashes, and pompous in the grave, solemnizing nativities and deaths with equal lustre, nor omitting ceremonies of bravery in the infamy of his nature.

Life is a pure flame, and we live by an invisible sun within us. A small fire sufficeth for life, great flames seemed too little after death, while men vainly affected precious pyres, and to burn like Sardanapalus; but the wisdom of funeral laws found the folly of prodigal blazes, and reduced undoing fires unto the rule of sober obsequies, wherein few could be so mean as not to provide wood, pitch, a mourner, and an urn.

<sup>1</sup>Cause insensibility.

<sup>2</sup>The substance of mummies was in use as a medicine in Browne's day and before.

<sup>3</sup>Hebrew name of Egypt,

<sup>4</sup>Telescopes.

<sup>5</sup>I. e., who only can.

<sup>6</sup>But a chance of escaping oblivion,

Five languages secured not the epitaph of Gordianus. The man of God lives longer without a tomb, than any by one, invisibly interred by angels, and adjudged to obscurity, though not without some marks directing human discovery. Enoch and Elias, without either tomb or burial, in an anomalous state of being, are the great examples of perpetuity, in their long and living memory, in strict account being still on this side death, and having a late part yet to act upon this stage of earth. If in the decreitory term of the world,<sup>1</sup> we shall not all die but be changed, according to received translation, the last day will make but few graves; at least quick resurrections will anticipate lasting sepultures. Some graves will be opened before they be quite closed, and Lazarus be no wonder. When many that feared to die, shall groan that they can die but once, the dismal state is the second and living death, when life puts despair on the damned; when men shall wish the coverings of mountains, not of monuments, and annihilations shall be courted.

While some have studied monuments, others have studiously declined them, and some have been so vainly boisterous,<sup>2</sup> that they durst not acknowledge their graves; wherein Alaricus seems most subtle, who had a river turned to hide his bones at the bottom. Even Sylla, that thought himself safe in his urn, could not prevent revenging tongues, and stones thrown at his monument. Happy are they whom privacy makes innocent, who deal so with men in this world, that they are not afraid to meet them in the next; who, when they die, make no commotion among the dead, and are not touched with that poetical taunt of Isaiah.<sup>3</sup>

Pyramids, arches, obelisks, were but the irregularities of vain-glory, and wild enormi-

ties of ancient magnanimity. But the most magnanimous resolution rests in the Christian religion, which trampleth upon pride, and sits on the neck of ambition, humbly pursuing that infallible perpetuity, unto which all others must diminish their diameters, and be poorly seen in angles of contingency.

Pious spirits who passed their days in raptures of futurity, made little more of this world, than the world that was before it, while they lay obscure in the chaos of pre-ordination, and night of their fore-beings. And if any have been so happy as truly to understand Christian annihilation, ecstasies, exolution, liquefaction, transformation, the kiss of the spouse, gustation of God, and ingression into the divine shadow,<sup>4</sup> they have already had an handsome anticipation of heaven; the glory of the world is surely over, and the earth in ashes unto them.

To subsist in lasting monuments, to live in their productions, to exist in their names and predicament of chimæras,<sup>5</sup> was large satisfaction unto old expectations, and made one part of their Elysiums. But all this is nothing in the metaphysics of true belief. To live indeed, is to be again ourselves, which being not only an hope, but an evidence in noble believers, 'tis all one to lie in St. Innocents' church-yard, as in the sands of Egypt. Ready to be any thing, in the ecstasy of being ever, and as content with six foot as the *mole*s of Adrianus.<sup>6</sup>

—tabesne cadavera solvat,
An rogus, haud refert.<sup>7</sup>

<sup>1</sup>These terms are descriptive of the experiences of mystics.

<sup>2</sup>Condition of unfounded conceptions.

<sup>3</sup>The monument of Hadrian, now known in its altered form as the castle of St. Angelo.

<sup>4</sup>It matters not whether our bodies rot in the grave or are consumed by the funeral pyre (Lucan, Pharsalia, VII, 809-810).

<sup>1</sup>If at the day of judgment.

<sup>2</sup>Turbulent.

<sup>3</sup>Cf. Isaiah, xiv, 9, and following verses.

JOHN MILTON (1608-1674)

Milton was born in London on 9 December, 1608. His father was a scrivener or solicitor, and a convinced puritan. There was indeed so much feeling behind his puritanism as to have caused him to break with his family on this account, Milton's grandfather having been a Catholic recusant in the reign of Elizabeth. It should be remembered, however, that puritanism had not yet become the narrow, ascetic, intolerant force that we generally associate with the name, and Milton, as a matter of fact, was brought up in an environment of cultivation in which music and poetry were ever-present realities. As a boy he attended St. Paul's School in London, and went thence to Christ's College, Cambridge, in 1625. There he remained for seven years, reading widely and deeply, laying the foundations of his immense learning, commencing his work as a poet with his ode On the Morning of Christ's Nativity (1629) and other shorter poems, and exhibiting already that spirit of independence which remained throughout his life a major characteristic. The immediate circumstances, it is true, of Milton's trouble with his college tutor are obscure, but it is at least a probable supposition that his independent spirit had something to do with his temporary banishment from Cambridge and his transference to another tutor on his return. In 1632 Milton left Cambridge and went to Horton, in Buckinghamshire, where his father had retired from his London business. Here he spent six years, perhaps the happiest years of his life, continuing his studies with the conscious purpose of preparing himself for some great poetical achievement. For Milton was a dedicated spirit; from an early time aware of his great powers, he proceeded deliberately to make himself fit for the execution of his high purpose, the creation of a noble monument in verse. Many years later he expressed what was his abiding conviction from youth to old age, when he said that "he who would not be frustrate of his hope to write well hereafter in laudable things ought himself to be a true poem . . . not presuming to sing high praises of heroic men or famous cities unless he have in himself the experience and practice of all that which is praiseworthy." During the years at Horton, too, Milton not only read himself into the spirit of great poetry in ages past, but also sent forth those trial barks which remain still among the loveliest of their kind in English verse. For at Horton he wrote L'Allegro, Il Penseroso, Comus, and Lycidas, as well as other of his so-called minor poems. In 1638 he left England to travel southward to Italy, where he spent some months in pleasant intercourse with learned and cultivated men in several Italian towns. He was planning to travel farther, to Greece and Palestine, when the news of Charles's first expedition against the Scots reached him and determined him to turn his steps homeward. He knew the political situation in England well enough to realize that this was probably the beginning of worse things, and he wrote afterwards, "I thought it base to be traveling for amusement abroad while my fellow citizens were fighting for liberty at home." On his way back he had the opportunity of meeting Galileo—then old, blind, and in partial confinement at the hand of the Inquisition—at Florence. He reached England in August, 1639, and proceeded to become a schoolmaster. This result of his anxiety to share in his countrymen's fight for liberty has, certainly, the air of anti-climax, but Milton's serious purpose was to fight in the way he best could, with his pen, and his years of teaching were punctuated by the writing of controversial pamphlets, some of which won him appointment in 1649 as Latin Secretary in the puritan government. He never made himself, however, the instrument of a party. His guiding star was liberty, and he was ready to turn against the puritans themselves when they seemed to him in danger of deserting that principle for which, as he thought, they fundamentally stood. In 1641 and 1642 he wrote five pamphlets against episcopacy, or government of the church by bishops, fighting therein for religious liberty. In 1643 he began a series of pamphlets in which he contended passionately for easy divorce. The immediate occasion of these was his own unhappy marriage in that year, but the battle he waged was entirely consistent with his previously formed conviction that liberty was essential to human well-being. In 1644 he wrote, besides his tract on education, his justly most famous pamphlet in obedience to the same conviction. This was his Areopagitica, an eloquent defence of freedom of speech, in the course of which he uttered his celebrated praise of Spenser, "our sage and serious poet." After three years of work as Latin Secretary Milton's devotion to his duties in the service of the Commonwealth caused his blindness, though he did not allow this to stop either his official work or his controversial writing, any more than he allowed it to prevent the later accomplishment of his purpose of writing a great poem. That purpose he never relinquished through all the central years of his life when the cause of liberty and public duty claimed his energy. And before the Restoration in 1660 he had begun the writing of Paradise Lost. There is no reason for thinking that either the theme or his execution of it in the poem was influenced by the decay of the Commonwealth and Charles II's return, bitter blows to Milton though both were. The theme was chosen after long hesitation simply on the ground that it was the most heroic in its proportions of all possible subjects. Milton was subjected to surprisingly little annoyance by the new government, and lived his remaining years quietly enough, save for disturbances within his family, at work upon various tasks, but chiefly Paradise Lost, Paradise Regained, and Samson Agonistes. The first was finished by the summer of 1665 and was published in 1667. Paradise Regained and Samson Agonistes were published in 1671. Paradise Lost in the first edition has ten books; in the year of his death Milton published a second edition in which two of the original ten books were divided, making the twelve in which the poem has ever since been printed.

ON TIME

FLY, envious Time, till thou run out thy race:
Call on the lazy leaden-stepping Hours,
Whose speed is but the heavy plummet's pace;<sup>1</sup>

And glut thyself with what thy womb devours,

Which is no more than what is false and vain,
And merely mortal dross;

So little is our loss,
So little is thy gain!

For, when as each thing bad thou hast en-tomb'd,

And, last of all, thy greedy self consumed,
Then long Eternity shall greet our bliss
With an individual kiss,

And Joy shall overtake us as a flood;
When every thing that is sincerely good,
And perfectly divine,

With Truth, and Peace, and Love, shall ever
shine

About the supreme throne

Of him, to whose happy-making sight alone
When once our heavenly-guided soul shall climb,

Then, all this earthly grossness quit,
Attired with stars we shall for ever sit,

Triumphing over Death, and Chance, and thee, O Time!

AT A SOLEMN MUSIC

BLEST pair of Sirens, pledges of Heaven's joy, Sphere-born harmonious sisters, Voice and Verse,

Wed your divine sounds, and mixed power employ,

Dead things with inbreathed sense able to
pierce;

And to our high-raised fantasy present
That undisturb'd song of pure consent,<sup>2</sup>

Aye sung before the sapphire-colored throne
To him that sits thereon,

With saintly shout and solemn jubilee;

Where the bright Seraphim in burning row
Their loud uplifted angel-trumpets blow,

And the Cherubic host in thousand quires,<sup>3</sup>
Touch their immortal harps of golden wires,
With those just Spirits that wear victorious palms,

Hymns devout and holy psalms

Singing everlastingly:

That we on Earth, with undiscording voice,
May rightly answer that melodious noise;

As once we did, till disproportioned sin
Jarred against nature's chime, and with harsh din

Broke the fair music that all creatures made
To their great Lord, whose love their motion
swayed

In perfect diapason,<sup>4</sup> whilst they stood

In first obedience, and their state of good.

O, may we soon again renew that song,
And keep in tune with Heaven, till God ere
long

To his celestial consort<sup>5</sup> us unite,

To live with him, and sing in endless morn
of light!

ON SHAKESPEARE

WHAT needs my Shakespeare for his honored
bones

The labor of an age in pil'd stones?

Or that his hallowed relics should be hid
Under a star-ypointing pyramid?

Dear son of memory, great heir of fame,
What need'st thou such weak witness of thy
name?

Thou in our wonder and astonishment

Hast built thyself a livelong monument.

<sup>3</sup>Choirs.

<sup>4</sup>Combination of notes or parts in harmonious whole.

<sup>5</sup>Symphony.

<sup>1</sup>I. e., the gradual descent of the weights in a clock.

<sup>2</sup>Harmony.

For whilst, to the shame of slow-endavoring
 art,
 Thy easy numbers flow, and that each heart
 Hath from the leaves of thy unvalued<sup>1</sup> book
 Those Delphic<sup>2</sup> lines with deep impression took,
 Then thou, our fancy of itself bereaving,
 Dost make us marble with too much conceiving,
 And so sepulchered in such pomp dost lie
 That kings for such a tomb would wish to die.

L' ALLEGRO

HENCE, loathéd Melancholy,
 Of Cerberus and blackest Midnight born
 In Stygian cave forlorn
 'Mongst horrid shapes, and shrieks, and sights unholy!
 Find out some uncouth<sup>3</sup> cell,
 Where brooding Darkness spreads his jealous wings,
 And the night-raven sings;
 There, under ebon<sup>4</sup> shades and low-browed rocks,
 As ragged as thy locks,
 In dark Cimmerian desert<sup>5</sup> ever dwell.
 But come, thou Goddess fair and free,
 In heaven yclept<sup>6</sup> Euphrosyne,
 And by men heart-easing Mirth;
 Whom lovely Venus, at a birth,
 With two sister Graces more,
 To ivy-crownéd Bacchus bore:
 Or whether (as some sager sing)
 The frolic wind that breathes the spring,
 Zephyr, with Aurora playing,
 As he met her once a-Maying,
 There, on beds of violets blue,
 And fresh-blown roses washed in dew,
 Filled her with thee, a daughter fair,
 So buxom, blithe, and debonair.
 Haste thee, Nymph, and bring with thee
 Jest, and youthful Jollity,
 Quips and cranks and wanton wiles,
 Nods and becks and wreathéd smiles,
 Such as hang on Hebe's cheek,
 And love to live in dimple sleek;

<sup>1</sup>Invaluable.

<sup>2</sup>Inspired.

<sup>3</sup>Unknown, strange.

<sup>4</sup>Black.

<sup>5</sup>A mythical land involved in perpetual mist and darkness (Odyssey, XI, 14).

<sup>6</sup>Called.

Sport that wrinkled Care derides,
 And Laughter holding both his sides.
 Come, and trip it, as you go,
 On the light fantastic toe;
 And in thy right hand lead with thee
 The mountain-nymph, sweet Liberty;
 And, if I give thee honor due,
 Mirth, admit me of thy crew,
 To live with her, and live with thee,
 In unprovéd<sup>7</sup> pleasures free;
 To hear the lark begin his flight,
 And, singing, startle the dull night,
 From his watch-tower in the skies,
 Till the dappled dawn doth rise;
 Then to come, in spite of sorrow,
 And at my window bid good-morrow,
 Through the sweet-briar or the vine,
 Or the twisted eglantine;
 While the cock, with lively din,
 Scatters the rear of darkness thin;
 And to the stack, or the barn-door,
 Stoutly struts his dames before:
 Oft listening how the hounds and horn
 Cheerly rouse the slumbering morn,
 From the side of some hoar hill,
 Through the high wood echoing shrill:
 Sometime walking, not unseen,
 By hedgerow elms, on hillocks green,
 Right against the eastern gate
 Where the great Sun begins his state,
 Robed in flames and amber light,
 The clouds in thousand liveries dight;<sup>8</sup>
 While the ploughman, near at hand,
 Whistles o'er the furrowed land,
 And the milkmaid singeth blithe,
 And the mower whets his scythe,
 And every shepherd tells his tale<sup>9</sup>,
 Under the hawthorn in the dale.
 Straight mine eye hath caught new pleasures,
 Whilst the landscape round it measures:
 Russet lawns, and fallows gray,
 Where the nibbling flocks do stray,
 Mountains on whose barren breast
 The laboring clouds do often rest;
 Meadows trim, with daisies pied;
 Shallow brooks, and rivers wide;
 Towers and battlements it sees Bosomed high in tufted trees,
 Where perhaps some beauty lies,
 The cynosure<sup>10</sup> of neighboring eyes.

<sup>7</sup>Innocent.

<sup>8</sup>Adorned.

<sup>9</sup>Counts his sheep.

<sup>10</sup>Center of admiration.

Hard by a cottage chimney smokes
 From betwixt two agéd oaks,
 Where Corydon and Thyrsis<sup>1</sup> met
 Are at their savory dinner set
 Of herbs and other country messes,
 Which the neat-handed Phyllis dresses;
 And then in haste her bower she leaves,
 With Thestylis to bind the sheaves;
 Or, if the earlier season lead,
 To the tanned haycock in the mead.
 Sometimes, with secure<sup>2</sup> delight,
 The upland hamlets will invite,
 When the merry bells ring round,
 And the jocund rebecks<sup>3</sup> sound
 To many a youth and many a maid
 Dancing in the checkered shade,
 And young and old come forth to play
 On a sunshine holiday,
 Till the livelong daylight fail:
 Then to a spicy nut-brown ale,
 With stories told of many a feat,
 How Faery Mab the junkets eat.
 She was pinched and pulled, she said;
 And he, by Friar's lantern<sup>4</sup> led,
 Tells how the drudging goblin<sup>5</sup> sweat
 To earn his cream-bowl duly set,
 When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
 His shadowy flail hath threshed the corn
 That ten day-laborers could not end;
 Then lies him down, the lubber<sup>6</sup> fiend,
 And, stretched out all the chimney's length,
 Basks at the fire his hairy strength,
 And crop-full out of doors he flings,
 Ere the first cock his matin rings.
 Thus done the tales, to bed they creep,
 By whispering winds soon lulled asleep.
 Towered cities please us then,
 And the busy hum of men,
 Where throngs of knights and barons bold,
 In weeds<sup>7</sup> of peace, high triumphs hold,
 With store of ladies, whose bright eyes
 Rain influence, and judge the prize
 Of wit or arms, while both contend
 To win her grace whom all commend.
 There let Hymen oft appear
 In saffron robe, with taper clear,

<sup>1</sup>These and the two other names in following lines are conventional names drawn from pastoral poetry.

<sup>2</sup>Carefree.

<sup>3</sup>Fiddles.

<sup>4</sup>Will-o'-the-wisp.

<sup>5</sup>Robin Goodfellow.

<sup>6</sup>Clumsy.

<sup>7</sup>Garments.

And pomp, and feast, and revelry,
 With mask and antique pageantry;
 Such sights as youthful poets dream
 On summer eves by haunted stream.
 Then to the well-trod stage anon,
 If Jonson's learned sock<sup>8</sup> be on,
 Or sweetest Shakespeare, Fancy's child,
 Warble his native wood-notes wild.
 And ever, against eating cares,
 Lap me in soft Lydian airs,
 Married to immortal verse,
 Such as the meeting soul may pierce,
 In notes with many a winding bout<sup>9</sup>
 Of linked sweetness long drawn out
 With wanton heed and giddy cunning,
 The melting voice through mazes running,
 Untwisting all the chains that tie
 The hidden soul of harmony;
 That Orpheus' self may heave his head
 From golden slumber on a bed
 Of heaped Elysian flowers, and hear
 Such strains as would have won the ear
 Of Pluto to have quite set free
 His half-regained Eurydice.
 These delights if thou canst give,
 Mirth, with thee I mean to live.

IL PENSEROSO

HENCE, vain deluding Joys,
 The brood of Folly without father bred!
 How little you bested,<sup>10</sup>
 Or fill the fixéd mind with all your toys!
 Dwell in some idle brain,
 And fancies fond<sup>11</sup> with gaudy shapes
 possess,
 As thick and numberless
 As the gay motes that people the sunbeam,
 Or likest hovering dreams,
 The fickle pensioners of Morpheus' train.
 But, hail! thou Goddess sage and holy!
 Hail, divinest Melancholy!
 Whose saintly visage is too bright
 To hit the sense of human sight,
 And therefore to our weaker view
 O'erlaid with black, staid Wisdom's hue;
 Black, but such as in esteem
 Prince Memnon's sister might beseem,

<sup>8</sup>The light shoe worn in classical times by actors in comedy.

<sup>9</sup>Turn.

<sup>10</sup>Profit.

<sup>11</sup>Foolish.

Or that starred Ethiop queen<sup>1</sup> that strove
 To set her beauty's praise above
 The Sea-Nymphs, and their powers offended.
 Yet thou art higher far descended:
 Thee bright-haired Vesta long of yore
 To solitary Saturn bore;
 His daughter she; in Saturn's reign
 Such mixture was not held a stain.
 Oft in glimmering bowers and glades
 He met her, and in secret shades
 Of woody Ida's inmost grove,
 Whilst yet there was no fear of Jove.
 Come, pensive Nun, devout and pure,
 Sober, steadfast, and demure,
 All in a robe of darkest grain,<sup>2</sup>
 Flowing with majestic train,
 And sable stole of cypress lawn<sup>3</sup>
 Over thy decent shoulders drawn.
 Come; but keep thy wonted state,
 With even step, and musing gait,
 And looks commercing with the skies,
 Thy rapt soul sitting in thine eyes:
 There, held in holy passion still,
 Forget thyself to marble, till
 With a sad leaden downward cast
 Thou fix them on the earth as fast.
 And join with thee calm Peace and Quiet,
 Spare Fast, that oft with gods doth diet,
 And hears the Muses in a ring
 Aye round about Jove's altar sing;
 And add to these retiréd Leisure,
 That in trim gardens takes his pleasure;
 But, first and chiefest, with thee bring Him that yon soars on golden wing,
 Guiding the fiery-wheeléd throne,
 The Cherub Contemplation;
 And the mute Silence hist along,
 'Less Philomel<sup>4</sup> will deign a song,
 In her sweetest saddest plight,
 Smoothing the rugged brow of Night,
 While Cynthia<sup>5</sup> checks her dragon yoke
 Gently o'er the accustomed oak.
 Sweet bird, that shunn'st the noise of folly,
 Most musical, most melancholy!
 Thee, chauntress, oft the woods among
 I woo, to hear thy even-song;
 And, missing thee, I walk unseen
 On the dry smooth-shaven green

To behold the wandering moon,
 Riding near her highest noon,
 Like one that had been led astray
 Through the heaven's wide pathless way,
 And oft, as if her head she bowed,
 Stooping through a fleecy cloud.
 Oft, on a plat of rising ground,
 I hear the far-off curfew sound,
 Over some wide-watered shore,
 Swinging slow with sullen roar;
 Or, if the air will not permit,
 Some still removéd place will fit,
 Where glowing embers through the room
 Teach light to counterfeit a gloom,
 Far from all resort of mirth,
 Save the cricket on the hearth,
 Or the bellman's drowsy charm
 To bless the doors from nightly harm.
 Or let my lamp, at midnight hour,
 Be seen in some high lonely tower,
 Where I may oft outwatch the Bear,<sup>6</sup>
 With thrice great Hermes,<sup>7</sup> or unsphere<sup>8</sup>
 The spirit of Plato, to unfold
 What worlds or what past regions hold
 The immortal mind that hath forsook
 Her mansion in this fleshly nook;
 And of those demons that are found
 In fire, air, flood, or underground,
 Whose power hath a true consent<sup>9</sup>
 With planet or with element.
 Sometimes let gorgeous Tragedy
 In scepter'd pall come sweeping by,
 Presenting Thebes, or Pelops' line,
 Or the tale of Troy divine,
 Or what (though rare) of later age
 Ennobled hath the buskin'd<sup>10</sup> stage.
 But, O sad Virgin! that thy power
 Might raise Musæus from his bower;
 Or bid the soul of Orpheus sing
 Such notes as, warbled to the string,
 Drew iron tears down Pluto's cheek,
 And made Hell grant what love did seek;
 Or call up him<sup>11</sup> that left half-told
 The story of Cambuscan bold,

<sup>1</sup>Cassiopeia, who was placed among the stars.

<sup>2</sup>Purple color.

<sup>3</sup>A light crape.

<sup>4</sup>The nightingale.

<sup>5</sup>The moon.

<sup>6</sup>The Great Bear never sets in England, consequently he would have to sit up until dawn.

<sup>7</sup>Hermes Trismegistus, a fabled Egyptian ruler to whom were ascribed many books.

<sup>8</sup>Call his spirit from the sphere where it abides.

<sup>9</sup>Sympathy.

<sup>10</sup>Tragic (the buskin was the heavy boot worn by tragic actors in classical times).

<sup>11</sup>Chaucer (the allusion is to the uncompleted Squire's Tale).

Of Camball, and of Algarsife,
 And who had Canace to wife,
 That owned the virtuous ring and glass,
 And of the wondrous horse of brass
 On which the Tartar king did ride;
 And if aught else great bards beside
 In sage and solemn tunes have sung,
 Of turneys, and of trophies hung,
 Of forests, and enchantments drear,
 Where more is meant than meets the ear.<sup>1</sup>
 Thus, Night, oft see me in thy pale career,
 Till civil-suited Morn appear,
 Not tricked and frownced, as she was wont
 With the Attic boy<sup>2</sup> to hunt,
 But kerchiefed in a comely cloud,
 While rocking winds are piping loud,
 Or ushered with a shower still,
 When the gust hath blown his fill,
 Ending on the rustling leaves,
 With minute-drops from off the eaves.
 And, when the sun begins to fling
 His flaring beams, me, Goddess, bring
 To archéd walks of twilight groves,
 And shadows brown, that Sylvan loves,
 Of pine, or monumental oak,
 Where the rude axe with heavéd stroke
 Was never heard the nymphs to daunt,
 Or fright them from their hallowed haunt.
 There, in close covert, by some brook,
 Where no profaner eye may look,
 Hide me from day's garish eye,
 While the bee with honeyed thigh,
 That at her flowery work doth sing,
 And the waters murmuring,
 With such consort as they keep,
 Entice the dewy-feathered Sleep.
 And let some strange mysterious dream
 Wave at his wings, in airy stream
 Of lively portraiture displayed,
 Softly on my eyelids laid;
 And, as I wake, sweet music breathe
 Above, about, or underneath,
 Sent by some Spirit to mortals good,
 Or the unseen Genius of the wood.
 But let my due feet never fail
 To walk the studious cloister's pale,<sup>3</sup>
 And love the high embowéd roof,
 With antique pillars massy-proof,
 And storied windows richly light,<sup>4</sup>
 Casting a dim religious light.

<sup>1</sup>The allusion is probably to Spenser.

<sup>2</sup>Cephalus, loved by Aurora.

<sup>3</sup>Enclosure.

<sup>4</sup>Windows richly adorned with stories (from the Bible).

There let the pealing organ blow,
 To the full-voiced quire below,
 In service high and anthems clear,
 As may with sweetness, through mine ear,
 Dissolve me into ecstasies,
 And bring all Heaven before mine eyes.
 And may at last my weary age
 Find out the peaceful hermitage,
 The hairy gown and mossy cell,
 Where I may sit and rightly spell<sup>5</sup>
 Of every star that heaven doth shew,
 And every herb that sips the dew,
 Till old experience do attain
 To something like prophetic strain.
 These pleasures, Melancholy, give;
 And I with thee will choose to live.

LYCIDAS<sup>6</sup>

YET once more, O ye laurels, and once more,
 Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never sere,
 I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude,
 And with forced fingers rude
 Shatter your leaves before the mellowing year.<sup>7</sup>

Bitter constraint and sad occasion dear
 Compels me to disturb your season due;
 For Lycidas<sup>8</sup> is dead, dead ere his prime,
 Young Lycidas, and hath not left his peer.
 Who would not sing for Lycidas? he knew
 Himself to sing, and build the lofty rhyme.
 He must not float upon his watery bier
 Unwept, and welter to the parching wind,
 Without the meed of some melodious tear.

Begin, then, Sisters of the sacred well<sup>9</sup>
 That from beneath the seat of Jove doth
 spring;
 Begin, and somewhat loudly sweep the string.
 Hence with denial vain and coy excuse:
 So may some gentle Muse
 With lucky words favor my destined urn,
 And as he passes turn,
 And bid fair peace be to my sable shroud!

<sup>5</sup>Read.

<sup>6</sup>In this monody the author bewails a learned friend, unfortunately drowned in his passage from Chester on the Irish seas, 1637, and by occasion foretells the ruin of our corrupted clergy, then in their height (Milton's note). Milton's learned friend was Edward King of Christ's College, Cambridge.

<sup>7</sup>I.e., Milton was forced to break his resolution not to write until his powers were fully matured.

<sup>8</sup>The name occurs in the seventh Idyll of Theocritus.

<sup>9</sup>Muses of the Pierian spring.

For we were nursed upon the self-same
 hill,
 Fed the same flock, by fountain, shade, and
 rill;
 Together both, ere the high lawns appeared
 Under the opening eyelids of the Morn,
 We drove a-field, and both together heard
 What time the grey-fly winds her sultry
 horn,
 Battering<sup>1</sup> our flocks with the fresh dews of
 night,
 Oft till the star that rose at evening bright Toward heaven's descent had sloped his westerling wheel.
 Meanwhile the rural ditties were not mute;
 Tempered to the oaten flute,
 Rough Satyrs danced, and Fauns with cloven heel
 From the glad sound would not be absent
 long;
 And old Damœtas<sup>2</sup> loved to hear our song.
 But, oh! the heavy change, now thou art
 gone,
 Now thou art gone and never must return!
 Thee, Shepherd, thee the woods and desert
 caves,
 With wild thyme and the gadding vine
 o'ergrown,
 And all their echoes, mourn.
 The willows, and the hazel copses green,
 Shall now no more be seen
 Fanning their joyous leaves to thy soft lays.
 As killing as the canker to the rose,
 Or taint-worm to the weanling herds that graze,
 Or frost to flowers, that their gay wardrobe
 wear,
 When first the white-thorn blows;
 Such, Lycidas, thy loss to shepherd's ear.
 Where were ye, Nymphs, when the remorseless deep
 Closed o'er the head of your loved Lycidas?
 For neither were ye playing on the steep
 Where your old bards, the famous Druids,
 lie,
 Nor on the shaggy top of Mona high,
 Nor yet where Deva spreads her wizard
 stream.
 Ay me! I fondly<sup>3</sup> dream

<sup>1</sup>Feeding.

<sup>2</sup>A conventional name drawn from pastoral poetry.
 Probably some fellow or the master of Christ's College is meant.

<sup>3</sup>Foolishly.

"Had ye been there," . . . for what could that have done?
 What could the Muse<sup>4</sup> herself that Orpheus
 bore,
 The Muse herself, for her enchanting son,
 Whom universal nature did lament,
 When, by the rout that made the hideous
 roar,
 His gory visage down the stream was sent,
 Down the swift Hebrus to the Lesbian shore?
 Alas! what boots<sup>5</sup> it with uncessant care
 To tend the homely, slighted, shepherd's trade,
 And strictly meditate the thankless Muse?
 Were it not better done, as others use,
 To sport with Amaryllis in the shade,
 Or with the tangles of Næra's hair?
 Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth
 raise
 (That last infirmity of noble mind)
 To scorn delights and live laborious days;
 But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,
 And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
 Comes the blind Fury<sup>6</sup> with the abhorred
 shears,
 And slits the thin-spun life. "But not the
 praise," Phœbus replied, and touched my trembling
 ears:
 "Fame is no plant that grows on mortal
 soil,
 Nor in the glistening foil<sup>7</sup>
 Set off to the world, nor in broad rumor
 lies,
 But lives and spreads aloft by those pure
 eyes
 And perfect witness of all-judging Jove;
 As he pronounces lastly on each deed,
 Of so much fame in heaven expect thy meed."
 O fountain Arethuse, and thou honored
 flood,
 Smooth-sliding Mincius, crowned with vocal reeds,
 That strain I heard was of a higher mood.
 But now my oat<sup>8</sup> proceeds,
 And listens to the Herald of the Sea,
 That came in Neptune's plea.

<sup>4</sup>Calliope. Orpheus was torn to pieces by Thracian women, and his head was thrown into the river Hebrus.

<sup>5</sup>Avails.

<sup>6</sup>Atropos, a Fate. Milton here calls her a Fury because of his anger.

<sup>7</sup>Tinsel.

<sup>8</sup>Shepherd's pipe.

He asked the waves, and asked the felon
winds,
What hard mishap hath doomed this gentle swain?

And questioned every gust of rugged wings
That blows from off each beakéd promontory.

They knew not of his story;
And sage Hippotades<sup>1</sup> their answer brings,
That not a blast was from his dungeon
strayed:

The air was calm, and on the level brine
Sleek Panope<sup>2</sup> with all her sisters played.
It was that fatal<sup>3</sup> and perfidious bark,
Built in the eclipse, and rigged with curses
dark,

That sunk so low that sacred head of thine.
Next, Camus,<sup>4</sup> reverend sire, went footing
slow,

His mantle hairy, and his bonnet sedge,
Inwrought with figures dim, and on the edge
Like to that sanguine flower inscribed with woe.<sup>5</sup>

"Ah! who hath reft," quoth he, "my dearest pledge?"<sup>6</sup>

Last came, and last did go,
The Pilot of the Galilean Lake;<sup>7</sup>
Two massy keys he bore of metals twain<sup>8</sup>
(The golden opes, the iron shuts amain<sup>9</sup>).
He shook his mitered locks, and stern bespoke:—

"How well could I have spared for thee,
young swain,
Enow of such as, for their bellies' sake,
Creep, and intrude, and climb into the fold!
Of other care they little reckoning make
Than how to scramble at the shearers' feast,
And shove away the worthy bidden guest.
Blind mouths! that scarce themselves know how to hold
A sheep-hook, or have learned aught else the
least

That to the faithful herdman's art belongs!
What reck's<sup>10</sup> it them? What need they?

They are sped;<sup>11</sup>
And, when they list, their lean and flashy songs

Grate on their scrannel<sup>12</sup> pipes of wretched
straw;

The hungry sheep look up, and are not fed,
But, swoln with wind and the rank mist they
draw,

Rot inwardly, and foul contagion spread;
Besides what the grim wolf with privy paw
Daily devours apace, and nothing said.
But that two-handed engine<sup>13</sup> at the door
Stands ready to smite once, and smite no
more."

Return, Alpheus;<sup>14</sup> the dread voice is past
That shrunk thy streams; return Sicilian Muse,

And call the vales, and bid them hither cast
Their bells and flowerets of a thousand hues.
Ye valleys low, where the mild whispers use

Of shades, and wanton winds, and gushing
brooks,
On whose fresh lap the swart star<sup>15</sup> sparely
looks,

Throw hither all your quaint enameled eyes,
That on the green turf suck the honeyed
showers,
And purple all the ground with vernal
flowers.

Bring the rathe<sup>16</sup> primrose that forsaken dies,
The tufted crow-toe, and pale jessamine,
The white pink, and the pansy freaked<sup>17</sup> with jet,

The glowing violet,
The musk rose, and the well-attired woodbine,

With cowslips wan that hang the pensive
head,
And every flower that sad embroidery wears;
Bid amaranthus all his beauty shed,
And daffadillies fill their cups with tears,

<sup>1</sup>Æolus, god of winds.

<sup>2</sup>One of the Nereids.

<sup>3</sup>Fated.

<sup>4</sup>The god of the Cam, the river at Cambridge.

<sup>5</sup>The hyacinth, whose leaves have certain markings, said by the ancients to be AI, AI (alas!), in mourning for Hyacinthus.

<sup>6</sup>Bereaved me of my dearest child.

<sup>7</sup>St. Peter.

<sup>8</sup>Cf. St. Matthew, xvi, 19.

<sup>9</sup>With force

<sup>10</sup>Concerns.

<sup>11</sup>Provided for.

<sup>12</sup>Thin.

<sup>13</sup>Perhaps the axe of St. Matthew, iii, 10, and St. Luke, iii, 9.

<sup>14</sup>River of Arcadia, whose spirit loved Arethusa.

<sup>15</sup>The dog-star, supposed to be injurious to plants.

<sup>16</sup>Early.

<sup>17</sup>Sprinkled.

To strew the laureate hearse where Lycid lies.
For so, to interpose a little ease,
Let our frail thoughts dally with false surmise,

Ay me! whilst thee the shores and sounding seas

Wash far away, where'er thy bones are hurled;
Whether beyond the stormy Hebrides,
Where thou perhaps under the whelming tide

Visit'st the bottom of the monstrous world;<sup>1</sup>
Or whether thou, to our moist vows denied,
Sleep'st by the fable of Bellerus old,<sup>2</sup>
Where the great Vision of the guarded mount<sup>3</sup>

Looks toward Namancos and Bayona's hold.<sup>4</sup>

Look homeward, Angel, now, and melt with ruth:<sup>5</sup>

And, O ye dolphins, waft the hapless youth.
Weep no more, woeful shepherds, weep no more,

For Lycidas, your sorrow, is not dead,
Sunk though he be beneath the watery floor.
So sinks the day-star in the ocean bed,
And yet anon repairs his drooping head,
And tricks<sup>6</sup> his beams, and with new-spangled ore<sup>7</sup>

Flames in the forehead of the morning sky:

So Lycidas sunk low, but mounted high,
Through the dear might of him that walked the waves,

Where, other groves and other streams along,
With nectar pure his oozy locks he laves,
And hears the unexpressive<sup>8</sup> nuptial song,
In the blest kingdoms meek of joy and love.
There entertain him all the Saints above,
In solemn troops, and sweet societies,
That sing, and singing in their glory move,
And wipe the tears for ever from his eyes.

Now, Lycidas, the shepherds weep no more;
Henceforth thou art the Genius of the shore,
In thy large recompense, and shalt be good
To all that wander in that perilous flood.

<sup>1</sup>World of monsters.

<sup>2</sup>Land's End.

<sup>3</sup>St. Michael's Mount, near Land's End.

<sup>4</sup>In Spain, near Cape Finisterre.

<sup>5</sup>Pity.

<sup>6</sup>Adorns.

<sup>7</sup>Brightness.

<sup>8</sup>Inexpressible.

Thus sang the uncouth swain to the oaks
and rills,
While the still morn went out with sandals
gray:

He touched the tender stops of various quills,<sup>9</sup>

With eager thought warbling his Doric lay:<sup>10</sup>
And now the sun had stretched out all the
hills,

And now was dropped into the western bay.
At last he rose, and twitched his mantle
blue:

To-morrow to fresh woods, and pastures new.

SONNETS<sup>11</sup>

VII

How soon hath Time, the subtle thief of
youth,

Stolen on his wing my three-and-twentieth
year!

My hasting days fly on with full career,
But my late spring no bud or blossom
shew'th.

Perhaps my semblance might deceive the
truth

That I to manhood am arrived so near;
And inward ripeness doth much less
appear,

That some more timely-happy spirits
endu'th.

Yet, be it less or more, or soon or slow,

It shall be still in strictest measure even

To that same lot, however mean or high,

Toward which Time leads me, and the will of Heaven;

All is, if I have grace to use it so,

As ever in my great Task-Master's eye.

VIII<sup>12</sup>

CAPTAIN or Colonel, or Knight in Arms,

Whose chance on these defenceless doors
may seize,

If deed of honor did thee ever please,

Guard them, and him within protect from harms:

<sup>9</sup>Reeds, i. e., pipes.

<sup>10</sup>Pastoral poem.

<sup>11</sup>The Sonnets are numbered as in H. C. Beeching's edition.

<sup>12</sup>Written in the fall of 1642 when the army of Charles I was advancing on London.

He can requite thee, for he knows the charms
 That call fame on such gentle acts as these;
 * And he can spread thy name o'er lands and seas,
 Whatever clime the sun's bright circle
 warms.
 Lift not thy spear against the Muses' bower:
 The great Emathian conqueror<sup>1</sup> bid spare
 The house of Pindarus, when temple and tower
 Went to the ground; and the repeated air
 Of sad Electra's poet<sup>2</sup> had the power
 To save the Athenian walls from ruin bare.

IX

LADY, that in the prime of earliest youth Wisely hast shunned the broad way and the green,
 And with those few art eminently seen
 That labor up the hill of heavenly Truth,
 The better part with Mary and with Ruth,
 Chosen thou hast; and they that overween,
 * And at thy growing virtues fret their spleen,
 No anger find in thee, but pity and ruth.
 Thy care is fixed, and zealously attends To fill thy odorous lamp with deeds of
 light,
 And hope that reaps not shame. Therefore be sure
 Thou, when the Bridegroom with his feastful
 friends
 Passes to bliss at the mid-hour of night, Hast gained thy entrance, Virgin wise and pure.

XI

A BOOK was writ of late called Tetrachordon,<sup>3</sup>
 And woven close, both matter, form, and style;
 The subject new: it walked the town a
 while,
 Numbering good intellects; now seldom pored on.
 Cries the stall-reader, "Bless us! what a word
 on
 A title-page is this!"; and some in file
 Stand spelling false, while one might walk to Mile-End Green. Why, is it harder, sirs, than Gordon,

<sup>1</sup>Alexander the Great, when he sacked Thebes.

<sup>2</sup>Euripides.

<sup>3</sup>One of Milton's pamphlets on divorce.

Colkitto, or Macdonnel, or Galasp?<sup>4</sup>

Those rugged names to our like mouths
 grow sleek,
 That would have made Quintilian stare
 and gasp.
 Thy age, like ours, O soul of Sir John Cheek, Hated not learning worse than toad or
 asp,
 When thou taught'st Cambridge and King
 Edward Greek.

XII

ON THE SAME

I DID but prompt the age to quit their clogs
 By the known rules of ancient liberty,
 When straight a barbarous noise environs
 me
 Of owls and cuckoos, asses, apes, and
 dogs;
 As when those hinds that were transformed to frogs
 Railed at Latona's twin-born progeny,<sup>5</sup>
 Which after held the Sun and Moon in fee.
 But this is got by casting pearl to hogs,
 That bawl for freedom in their senseless
 mood,
 And still revolt when Truth would set them free.
 Licence they mean when they cry Liberty;
 For who loves that must first be wise and
 good:
 But from that mark how far they rove we
 see,
 For all this waste of wealth and loss of blood.

XV

ON THE LATE MASSACRE IN PIEDMONT<sup>6</sup>

AVENGE, O Lord, thy slaughtered saints, whose bones
 Lie scattered on the Alpine mountains
 cold;
 Even them who kept thy truth so pure of
 old,
 When all our fathers worshiped stocks and stones,

<sup>4</sup>Names of Scottish generals during the war of 1644-1645.

<sup>5</sup>Apollo and Diana.

<sup>6</sup>In 1655 the Count of Turin subjected the protestants of Piedmont to bitter persecution, cruelly killing a number of them.

Forget not: in thy book record their groans
 Who were thy sheep, and in their ancient fold
 Slain by the bloody Piemontese, that rolled Mother with infant down the rocks.
 Their moans
 The vales redoubled to the hills, and they
 To heaven. Their martyred blood and ashes sow
 O'er all th' Italian fields, where still doth
 sway
 The triple Tyrant;<sup>1</sup> that from these may grow
 A hundredfold, who, having learned thy
 way,
 Early may fly the Babylonian woe.

XVI

WHEN I consider how my light is spent Ere half my days in this dark world and
 wide,
 And that one talent which is death to hide Lodged with me useless, though my soul
 more bent
 To serve therewith my Maker, and present
 My true account, lest He returning chide,
 "Doth God exact day-labor, light denied?"
 I fondly ask. But Patience, to prevent That murmur, soon replies, "God doth not
 need Either man's work or his own gifts. Who
 best
 Bear his mild yoke, they serve him best.
 His state
 Is kingly: thousands at his bidding speed,
 And post o'er land and ocean without rest;
 They also serve who only stand and wait."

XVII

LAWRENCE, of virtuous father virtuous son,
 Now that the fields are dank, and ways
 are mire,
 Where shall we sometimes meet, and by the fire
 Help waste a sullen day, what may be won From the hard season gaining? Time will run
 On smoother, till Favonius<sup>2</sup> reinspire
 The frozen earth, and clothe in fresh attire
 The lily and rose, that neither sowed nor spun.

<sup>1</sup>The pope. The puritans identified Rome with Babylon (Cf. Revelation, xvii, 5).

<sup>2</sup>The spring wind from the southwest.

What neat repast shall feast us, light and
 choice,
 Of Attic taste, with wine, whence we may rise,
 To hear the lute well touched, or artful
 voice
 Warble immortal notes and Tuscan air?
 He who of those delights can judge, and
 spare
 To interpose them oft, is not unwise.

XVIII

CYRIACK, whose grandsire<sup>3</sup> on the royal bench
 Of British Themis,<sup>4</sup> with no mean applause,
 Pronounced, and in his volumes taught,
 our laws,
 Which others at their bar so often wrench,
 To-day deep thoughts resolve with me to drench
 In mirth that after no repenting draws;
 Let Euclid rest, and Archimedes pause,
 And what the Swede intend, and what the French.<sup>5</sup>
 To measure life learn thou betimes, and
 know
 Towards solid good what leads the nearest
 way;
 For other things mild Heaven a time
 ordains,
 And disapproves that care, though wise in
 show,
 That with superfluous burden loads the
 day,
 And, when God sends a cheerful hour,
 refrains.

XIX

METHOUGHT I saw my late espoused saint<sup>6</sup>
 Brought to me like Alcestis from the grave, Whom Jove's great son<sup>7</sup> to her glad husband gave,
 Rescued from Death by force, though pale and faint.
 Mine, as whom washed from spot of child-bed taint

<sup>3</sup>Sir Edward Coke.

<sup>4</sup>Goddess of justice.

<sup>5</sup>Charles X of Sweden was at war with Poland and Russia, and Louis XIV was fighting the Spanish in the Netherlands.

<sup>6</sup>Catherine Woodcock, Milton's second wife, who died in childbirth in February, 1658.

<sup>7</sup>Hercules.

Purification in the Old Law<sup>1</sup> did save,
 And such as yet once more I trust to
 have Full sight of her in Heaven without restraint,
 Came vested all in white, pure as her
 mind.
 Her face was veiled; yet to my fancied
 sight
 Love, sweetness, goodness, in her person shined
 So clear as in no face with more delight.
 But, oh! as to embrace me she inclined,
 I waked, she fled, and day brought back my night.

TO THE LORD
 GENERAL CROMWELL
 MAY, 1652

ON THE PROPOSALS OF CERTAIN MINISTERS AT THE COMMITTEE FOR PROPAGATION OF THE GOSPEL

CROMWELL, our chief of men, who through a cloud
 Not of war only, but detractions rude,
 Guided by faith and matchless fortitude,
 To peace and truth thy glorious way hast
 ploughed,
 And on the neck of crownéd Fortune proud Hast reared God's trophies, and his work pursued,
 While Darwen stream, with blood of Scots
 imbrued,
 And Dunbar field, resounds thy praises
 loud,
 And Worcester's laureate wreath: yet much remains
 To conquer still; Peace hath her victories
 No less renowned than War: new foes arise,
 Threatening to bind our souls with secular chains.<sup>2</sup> Help us to save free conscience from the paw
 Of hireling wolves, whose Gospel is their
 maw.

<sup>1</sup>Leviticus, xii.

<sup>2</sup>Government control. The proposals to which Milton objected were that puritan ministers be supported by the state.

TO MR. CYRIACK SKINNER

UPON HIS BLINDNESS

CYRIACK, this three years' day these eyes, though clear
 To outward view, of blemish or of spot,
 Bereft of light, their seeing have forgot;
 Nor to their idle orbs doth sight appear
 Of sun, or moon, or star, throughout the year,
 Or man, or woman. Yet I argue not Against Heaven's hand or will, nor bate a
 jot
 Of heart or hope, but still bear up and steer Right onward. What supports me, dost thou ask?
 The conscience, friend, to have lost them
 overplied
 In Liberty's defence, my noble task,
 Of which all Europe rings from side to side.
 This thought might lead me through the world's vain mask
 Content, though blind, had I no better guide.

PARADISE LOST

THE VERSE

The measure is English heroic verse without rhyme, as that of Homer in Greek, and of Virgil in Latin; rhyme being no necessary adjunct or true ornament of poem or good verse, in longer works especially, but the invention of a barbarous age to set off wretched matter and lame meter;
 graced indeed since by the use of some famous modern poets, carried away by custom, but much to their own vexation, hindrance, and constraint to express many things otherwise, and for the most part worse, than else they would have expressed them. Not without cause therefore, some both Italian and Spanish poets of prime note have rejected rhyme both in longer and shorter works, as have long since our best English tragedies; as a thing of itself, to all judicious ears, trivial and of no true musical delight; which consists only in apt numbers, fit quantity of syllables, and the sense variously drawn out from one verse into another; not in the jingling sound of like endings, a fault avoided by the learned ancients both in poetry and all good oratory. This neglect then of rhyme so little is to be taken for a defect,
 though it may seem so perhaps to vulgar readers,
 that it is rather to be esteemed an example set,
 the first in English, of ancient liberty recovered to heroic poem, from the troublesome and modern bondage of rhyming.

BOOK I

THE ARGUMENT

THIS First Book proposes, first in brief, the whole subject—Man's disobedience, and the loss thereupon of Paradise, wherein he was placed: then touches the prime cause of his fall—the Serpent, or rather Satan in the Serpent; who, revolting from God, and drawing to his side many legions of Angels, was, by the command of God, driven out of Heaven, with all his crew, into the great Deep. Which action passed over, the Poem hastens into the midst of things; presenting Satan, with his Angels, now fallen into Hell—described here not in the Center (for heaven and earth may be supposed as yet not made, certainly not yet accursed), but in a place of utter darkness, fittest called Chaos. Here Satan, with his Angels lying on the burning lake, thunderstruck and astonished, after a certain space recovers, as from confusion; calls up him who, next in order and dignity, lay by him: they confer of their miserable fall. Satan awakens all his legions, who lay till then in the same manner confounded. They rise: their numbers; array of battle; their chief leaders named, according to the idols known afterwards in Canaan and the countries adjoining. To these Satan directs his speech; comforts them with hope yet of regaining Heaven; but tells them, lastly, of a new world and new kind of creature to be created, according to an ancient prophecy, or report, in Heaven—for that Angels were long before this visible creation was the opinion of many ancient Fathers. To find out the truth of this prophecy, and what to determine thereon, he refers to a full council. What his associates thence attempt. Pandemonium, the palace of Satan, rises, suddenly built out of the Deep: the infernal Peers there sit in council.

OF MAN'S first disobedience, and the fruit
Of that forbidden tree whose mortal taste Brought death into the World, and all our
woe,

With loss of Eden, till one greater Man
Restore us, and regain the blissful seat,
Sing, Heavenly Muse, that, on the secret top

Of Oreb, or of Sinai, didst inspire
That shepherd who first taught the chosen
seed

In the beginning how the heavens and earth
Rose out of Chaos; or, if Sion hill Delight thee more, and Siloa's brook that flowed

Fast<sup>1</sup> by the oracle of God,<sup>2</sup> I thence Invoke thy aid to my adventurous song,
That with no middle flight intends to soar
Above the Aonian mount,<sup>3</sup> while it pursues
Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme.
And chiefly thou, O Spirit, that does prefer Before all temples the upright heart and
pure,

Instruct me, for thou know'st; thou from the first

Wast present, and, with mighty wings out-
spread,

Dove-like sat'st brooding on the vast Abyss,
And mad'st it pregnant: what in me is dark
Illumine, what is low raise and support;
That, to the highth of this great argument,
I may assert<sup>4</sup> Eternal Providence,
And justify the ways of God to men.

Say first—for Heaven hides nothing from thy view,

Nor the deep tract of Hell—say first what
cause

Moved our grand<sup>5</sup> Parents, in that happy
state,

Favored of Heaven so highly, to fall off
From their Creator, and transgress his will
For<sup>6</sup> one restraint, lords of the World besides.
Who first seduced them to that foul revolt?

The infernal Serpent; he it was whose
guile,

Stirred up with envy and revenge, deceived
The mother of mankind, what time his pride
Had cast him out from Heaven, with all his host

Of rebel Angels, by whose aid, aspiring
To set himself in glory above his peers,
He trusted to have equaled the Most High,
If he opposed, and, with ambitious aim
Against the throne and monarchy of God, Raised impious war in Heaven and battle proud,

With vain attempt. Him the Almighty
Power

Hurled headlong flaming from the ethereal
sky,

With hideous ruin and combustion, down
To bottomless perdition, there to dwell

<sup>1</sup>Close.

<sup>2</sup>The temple of Jerusalem.

<sup>3</sup>Helicon, home of the muses.

<sup>4</sup>Vindicate.

<sup>5</sup>First.

<sup>6</sup>Because of.

In adamantine chains and penal fire,
 Who durst defy the Omnipotent to arms.<sup>1</sup>
 • Nine times the space that measures day and night
 To mortal men, he, with his horrid crew,
 Lay vanquished, rolling in the fiery gulf, Confounded, though immortal. But his
 doom
 Reserved him to more wrath; for now the
 thought
 Both of lost happiness and lasting pain
 Torments him: round he throws his baleful
 eyes,
 That witnessed huge affliction and dismay,
 Mixed with obdurate pride and steadfast
 hate.
 At once, as far as Angels ken, he views
 The dismal situation waste and wild.
 A dungeon horrible, on all sides round,
 As one great furnace flamed; yet from those flames
 No light; but rather darkness visible
 Served only to discover sights of woe, Regions of sorrow, doleful shades, where
 peace
 And rest can never dwell, hope never comes
 That comes to all, but torture without end
 Still urges, and a fiery deluge, fed
 With ever-burning sulphur unconsumed.
 Such place Eternal Justice had prepared For those rebellious; here their prison ordained
 In utter darkness, and their portion set,

<sup>1</sup>Milton's conception of the universe and of its relation to heaven and hell should be grasped at the outset. He follows the Ptolemaic system, according to which the earth is the center of the universe, about which the other bodies revolve. These (sun, moon, etc.) are supposed to be fastened in a series of hollow spheres, made of some transparent substance, which move around the earth as a common center. The hollow spheres were, in medieval and early modern times, supposed to be ten in number, the outermost being the primum mobile, or "first moved." Thus the starry universe has the form of a large globe, and it is suspended from the wall of heaven by a golden chain. Heaven is the region lying entirely outside the starry universe and immediately above it. Surrounding the universe and separated from heaven by a wall is chaos, the region of unformed, warring elements through which Satan and his host were hurled from heaven. At the bottom of this region of chaos is hell, the place of punishment prepared for Satan and his followers when they rebelled. Hell, then, is under the universe and is separated from it by a distance through chaos equal to the distance from the center of the earth to the primum mobile (see where Milton says the distance from heaven to hell is three times the radius of the universe).

As far removed from God and light of
 Heaven
 As from the center thrice to the utmost pole.
 Oh how unlike the place from whence they
 fell!
 There the companions of his fall, o'erwhelmed
 With floods and whirlwinds of tempestuous
 fire,
 He soon discerns; and, weltering by his side,
 One next himself in power, and next in crime,
 Long after known in Palestine, and named BEËLZEBUB. To whom the Arch-Enemy,
 And thence in Heaven called SATAN,<sup>2</sup> with bold words
 Breaking the horrid silence, thus began:—
 "If thou beest he—but Oh how fallen! how changed
 From him!—who, in the happy realms of
 light,
 Clothed with transcendent brightness, didst
 outshine
 Myriads, though bright—if he whom mutual league,
 United thoughts and counsels, equal hope
 And hazard in the glorious enterprise,
 Joined with me once, now misery hath joined
 In equal ruin; into what pit thou seest
 From what highth fallen: so much the stronger proved
 He with his thunder: and till then who knew The force of those dire arms? Yet not for those,
 Nor what the potent Victor in his rage
 Can else inflict, do I repent, or change, Though changed in outward luster, that fixed mind,
 And high disdain from sense of injured merit,
 That with the Mightiest raised me to contend,
 And to the fierce contention brought along Innumerable force of Spirits armed,
 That durst dislike his reign, and, me preferring,
 His utmost power with adverse power opposed
 In dubious battle on the plains of Heaven, And shook his throne. What though the field be lost?
 All is not lost—the unconquerable will,
 And study of revenge, immortal hate,
 And courage never to submit or yield;

<sup>2</sup>A Hebrew word meaning adversary.

And what is else not to be overcome?
That glory never shall his wrath or might Extort from me. To bow and sue for grace
With suppliant knee, and deify his power
Who, from the terror of this arm, so late Doubted<sup>1</sup> his empire—that were low indeed;
That were an ignominy and shame beneath
This downfall; since, by fate, the strength of Gods,

And this empyreal substance, cannot fail;
Since, through experience of this great event,
In arms not worse, in foresight much advanced,

We may with more successful hope resolve
To wage by force or guile eternal war,
Irreconcilable to our grand Foe,
Who now triumphs, and in the excess of joy
Sole reigning holds the tyranny of Heaven.”

So spake the apostate Angel, though in
pain,

Vaunting aloud, but racked with deep despair;

And him thus answered soon his bold com-peer:—

“O Prince, O Chief of many thronéd
Powers

That led the embattled Seraphim to war
Under thy conduct, and, in dreadful deeds
Fearless, endangered Heaven’s perpetual
King,

And put to proof his high supremacy,
Whether upheld by strength, or chance, or
fate,

Too well I see and rue the dire event
That, with sad overthrow and foul defeat, Hath lost us Heaven, and all this mighty
host

In horrible destruction laid thus low,
As far as Gods and Heavenly Essences
Can perish: for the mind and spirit remains Invincible, and vigor soon returns,
Though all our glory extinct, and happy state
Here swallowed up in endless misery.

But what if he our Conqueror (whom I now
Of force believe almighty, since no less Than such could have o’erpowered such force as ours)

Have left us this our spirit and strength
entire,

Strongly to suffer and support our pains,
That we may so suffice<sup>2</sup> his vengeful ire,

Or do him mightier service as his thralls
By right of war, whate’er his business be,
Here in the heart of Hell to work in fire,
Or do his errands in the gloomy Deep?
What can it then avail though yet we feel Strength undiminished, or eternal being
To undergo eternal punishment?”

Whereto with speedy words the Arch-
Fiend replied:—

“Fallen Cherub, to be weak is miserable,
Doing or suffering: but of this be sure—
To do ought good never will be our task,
But ever to do ill our sole delight,
As being the contrary to his high will Whom we resist. If then his providence
Out of our evil seek to bring forth good,
Our labor must be to pervert that end,
And out of good still to find means of evil;
Which ofttimes may succeed so as perhaps Shall grieve him, if I fail not,<sup>3</sup> and disturb
His inmost counsels from their destined aim.
But see! the angry Victor hath recalled
His ministers of vengeance and pursuit Back to the gates of Heaven: the sulphurous
hail,

Shot after us in storm, o’erblown hath laid
The fiery surge that from the precipice Of Heaven received us falling; and the thunder,

Winged with red lightning and impetuous
rage,

Perhaps hath spent his shafts, and ceases
now

To bellow through the vast and boundless
Deep.

Let us not slip the occasion, whether scorn
Or satiate fury yield it from our Foe.

Seest thou yon dreary plain, forlorn and wild,
The seat of desolation, void of light,
Save what the glimmering of these livid
flames

Cast pale and dreadful? Thither let us tend

From off the tossing of these fiery waves;
There rest, if any rest can harbor there;
And, re-assembling our afflicted powers,
Consult how we may henceforth most offend
Our enemy, our own loss how repair,
How overcome this dire calamity,
What reinforcement we may gain from hope,
If not, what resolution from despair.”

Thus Satan, talking to his nearest mate,

<sup>1</sup>Feared for.

<sup>2</sup>Satisfy.

<sup>3</sup>If I mistake not.

With head uplift above the wave, and eyes
That sparkling blazed; his other parts besides

Prone on the flood, extended long and large,
Lay floating many a rood, in bulk as huge
As whom the fables name of monstrous size,
Titanian or Earth-born, that warred on Jove,<sup>1</sup>

Briareos or Typhon, whom the den
By ancient Tarsus held, or that sea-beast
Leviathan, which God of all his works
Created hugest that swim the ocean-stream.
Him, haply slumbering on the Norway foam,
The pilot of some small night-foundered<sup>2</sup>
skiff,

Deeming some island, oft, as seamen tell,
With fixéd anchor in his scaly rind,
Moors by his side under the lee, while night
Invests the sea, and wishéd morn delays.

So stretched out huge in length the Arch-
Fiend lay,
Chained on the burning lake; nor ever thence Had risen, or heaved his head, but that the
will

And high permission of all-ruling Heaven
Left him at large to his own dark designs,
That with reiterated crimes he might Heap on himself damnation, while he sought Evil to others, and enraged might see
How all his malice served but to bring forth
Infinite goodness, grace, and mercy, shown
On Man by him seduced, but on himself Treble confusion, wrath, and vengeance poured.

Forthwith upright he rears from off the pool
His mighty stature; on each hand the flames Driven backward slope their pointing spires, and, rolled

In billows, leave i'the midst a horrid vale.
Then with expanded wings he steers his flight
Aloft, incumbent on the dusky air,
That felt unusual weight; till on dry land
He lights—if it were land that ever burned
With solid, as the lake with liquid fire,
And such appeared in hue as when the force
Of subterranean wind transports a hill
Torn from Pelorus, or the shattered side
Of thundering Ætna, whose combustible
And fueled entrails, thence conceiving fire,

<sup>1</sup>The Titans warred on Uranus, the Giants (earth-born) on Jove (Zeus). Briareos was a Titan, Typhon a Giant.

<sup>2</sup>Overtaken by night and so brought to a stand.

Sublimed with mineral fury, aid the winds,
And leave a singéd bottom all involved
With stench and smoke. Such resting found the sole

Of unblest feet. Him followed his next mate;

Both glorying to have scaped the Stygian
flood

As gods, and by their own recovered strength,
Not by the sufferance of supernal power.

“Is this the region, this the soil, the clime,”
Said then the lost Archangel, “this the seat
That we must change for Heaven?—this mournful gloom

For that celestial light? Be it so, since he
Who now is sovran can dispose and bid
What shall be right: farthest from him is best,
Whom reason hath equaled, force hath made supreme

Above his equals. Farewell, happy fields, Where joy for ever dwells! Hail, horrors!
hail,

Infernal World! and thou, profoundest Hell,
Receive thy new possessor—one who brings
A mind not to be changed by place or time.
The mind is its own place, and in itself
Can make a Heaven of Hell a Hell of Heaven.

What matter where, if I be still the same,
And what I should be, all but less than<sup>3</sup> he Whom thunder hath made greater? Here at least

We shall be free; the Almighty hath not built
Here for his envy, will not drive us hence:
Here we may reign secure; and, in my choice,
To reign is worth ambition, though in Hell:
Better to reign in Hell than serve in Heaven.
But wherefore let we then our faithful
friends,

The associates and co-partners of our loss,
Lie thus astonished on the oblivious pool,<sup>4</sup>
And call them not to share with us their part
In this unhappy mansion, or once more
With rallied arms to try what may be yet Regained in Heaven, or what more lost in Hell?”

So Satan spake; and him Beëlzebub
Thus answered:—“Leader of those armies
bright

Which, but the Omnipotent, none could have foiled!

<sup>3</sup>I. e., only less than.

<sup>4</sup>Lie thus thunderstruck on the benumbing pool.

If once they hear that voice, their liveliest pledge

Of hope in fears and dangers—heard so oft
In worst extremes, and on the perilous edge
Of battle, when it raged, in all assaults
Their surest signal—they will soon resume
New courage and revive, though now they lie
Groveling and prostrate on yon lake of fire,
As we erewhile, astounded and amazed;
No wonder, fallen such a pernicious highth!”

He scarce had ceased when the superior
Fiend

Was moving toward the shore; his ponderous
shield,

Ethereal temper, massy, large, and round,
Behind him cast. The broad circumference Hung on his shoulders like the moon, whose
orb

Through optic glass<sup>1</sup> the Tuscan artist views
At evening, from the top of Fesolè,
Or in Valdarno, to descry new lands,
Rivers, or mountains, in her spotty globe.
His spear—to equal which the tallest pine
Hewn on Norwegian hills, to be the mast
Of some great ammiral,<sup>2</sup> were but a wand—
He walked with, to support uneasy steps
Over the burning marl, not like those steps
On Heaven’s azure; and the torrid clime
Smote on him sore besides, vaulted with fire.
Nathless<sup>3</sup> he so endured, till on the beach
Of that inflamèd sea he stood, and called His legions—Angel Forms, who lay entranced

Thick as autumnal leaves that strow the
brooks

In Vallombrosa,<sup>4</sup> where the Etrurian shades
High over-arched embower; or scattered sedge

Afloat, when with fierce winds Orion armed Hath vexed the Red-Sea coast, whose waves
o’erthrew

Busiris and his Memphian chivalry,<sup>5</sup>
While with perfidious hatred they pursued
The sojourners of Goshen, who beheld
From the safe shore their floating carcasses And broken chariot-wheels. So thick bestrown,

<sup>1</sup>The telescope, greatly improved by Galileo (the Tuscan artist). Fiesole is a hill just outside of Florence; Val d’Arno, the valley in which Florence lies.

<sup>2</sup>Chief vessel in a fleet.

<sup>3</sup>Nevertheless.

<sup>4</sup>Eighteen miles from Florence.

<sup>5</sup>Busiris, Pharaoh; Memphian, Egyptian.

Abject and lost, lay these, covering the flood,
Under amazement of their hideous change.
He called so loud that all the hollow deep
Of Hell resounded:—“Princes, Potentates, Warriors, the Flower of Heaven—once yours;
now lost,

If such astonishment as this can seize Eternal Spirits! Or have ye chosen this place

After the toil of battle to repose
Your wearied virtue,<sup>6</sup> for the ease you find
To slumber here, as in the vales of Heaven?
Or in this abject posture have ye sworn
To adore the Conqueror, who now beholds
Cherub and Seraph rolling in the flood
With scattered arms and ensigns, till anon
His swift pursuers from Heaven-gates discern

The advantage, and, descending, tread us
down

Thus drooping, or with linkèd thunderbolts
Transfix us to the bottom of this gulf?—
Awake, arise, or be for ever fallen!”

They heard, and were abashed, and up
they sprang

Upon the wing, as when men wont to watch,
On duty sleeping found by whom they dread,
Rouse and bestir themselves ere well awake.
Nor did they not perceive<sup>7</sup> the evil plight
In which they were, or the fierce pains not feel;

Yet to their General’s voice they soon obeyed
Innumerable. As when the potent rod
Of Amram’s son,<sup>8</sup> in Egypt’s evil day, Waved round the coast, up-called a pitchy
cloud

Of locusts, warping on the eastern wind,
That o’er the realm of impious Pharaoh hung Like Night, and darkened all the land of Nile;

So numberless were those bad Angels seen
Hovering on wing under the cope of Hell,
’Twixt upper, nether, and surrounding fires;
Till, as a signal given, the uplifted spear
Of their great Sultan waving to direct Their course, in even balance down they
light

On the firm brimstone, and fill all the plain:
A multitude like which the populous North Poured never from her frozen loins to pass

<sup>6</sup>Courage.

<sup>7</sup>Nor did they fail to perceive.

<sup>8</sup>Aaron.

Rhene or the Danaw,<sup>1</sup> when her barbarous
 sons
 Came like a deluge on the South, and spread Beneath Gibraltar to the Libyan sands.
 Forthwith, from every squadron and each
 band,
 The heads and leaders thither haste where
 stood
 Their great Commander—godlike Shapes, and Forms
 Excelling human; princely Dignities;
 And Powers that erst<sup>2</sup> in Heaven sat on thrones,
 Though of their names in Heavenly records
 now
 Be no memorial, blotted out and razed
 By their rebellion from the Books of Life.
 Nor had they yet among the sons of Eve Got them new names, till, wandering o'er
 the earth,
 Through God's high sufferance for the trial
 of man,
 •By falsities and lies the greatest part
 Of mankind they corrupted to forsake
 God their Creator, and the invisible Glory of him that made them, to transform Oft to the image of a brute, adorned
 With gay religions full of pomp and gold,
 And devils to adore for deities:
 Then were they known to men by various
 names,
 And various idols through the Heathen
 World.
 Say, Muse, their names then known, who first, who last,
 Roused from the slumber on that fiery couch,
 At their great Emperor's call, as next in worth Came singly where he stood on the bare
 strand,
 While the promiscuous crowd stood yet aloof.
 The chief were those who, from the pit of
 Hell
 Roaming to seek their prey on Earth, durst fix
 Their seats, long after, next the seat of God,
 Their altars by his altar, gods adored
 Among the nations round, and durst abide Jehovah thundering out of Sion, throned
 Between the Cherubim; yea, often placed Within his sanctuary itself their shrines,

Abominations; and with curséd things
 His holy rites and solemn feasts profaned,
 And with their darkness durst affront his
 light.
 First, Moloch, horrid king, besmeared with
 blood
 Of human sacrifice, and parents' tears;
 Though, for the noise of drums and timbrels
 loud,
 Their children's cries unheard that passed through fire
 To his grim idol. Him the Ammonite
 Worshiped in Rabba and her watery plain,
 In Argob and in Basan, to the stream
 Of utmost Arnon. Nor content with such Audacious neighborhood, the wisest heart
 Of Solomon he led by fraud to build
 His temple right against the temple of God
 On that opprobrious hill,<sup>3</sup> and made his grove
 The pleasant valley of Hinnom, Tophet thence
 And black Gehenna called, the type of Hell.
 Next Chemos, the obscene dread of Moab's
 sons,
 From Aroar to Nebo and the wild
 Of southmost Abarim; in Hesebon
 And Horonaim, Seon's realm, beyond
 The flowery dale of Sibma clad with vines,
 And Eleale to the Asphaltic Pool:<sup>4</sup>
 Peor his other name, when he enticed
 Israel in Sittim on their march from Nile,
 To do him wanton rites, which cost them
 woe.
 Yet thence his lustful orgies he enlarged
 Even to that hill of scandal, by the grove
 Of Moloch homicide, lust hard by hate,
 Till good Josiah drove them thence to Hell.
 With these came they who, from the bordering flood
 Of old Euphrates to the brook that parts Egypt from Syrian ground, had general
 names
 Of Baälim and Ashtaroth—those male, These feminine. For Spirits, when they
 please,
 Can either sex assume, or both; so soft
 And uncompounded is their essence pure,
 Not tied or manacled with joint or limb,
 Nor founded on the brittle strength of bones,

<sup>1</sup>Rhine or the Danube.

<sup>2</sup>Formerly.

<sup>3</sup>The Mount of Olives, later called the Mount of Offence.

<sup>4</sup>The Dead Sea.

Like cumbrous flesh; but, in what shape they choose,

Dilated or condensed, bright or obscure,
Can execute their aery purposes,
And works of love or enmity fulfil.

For those the race of Israel oft forsook
Their Living Strength, and unfrequented left

His righteous altar, bowing lowly down
To bestial gods; for which their heads, as low
Bowed down in battle, sunk before the spear
Of despicable foes. With these in troop Came Astoreth, whom the Phœnicians called
Astarté, queen of heaven, with crescent horns;

To whose bright image nightly by the moon
Sidonian virgins paid their vows and songs;
In Sion also not unsung, where stood
Her temple on the offensive mountain, built
By that uxorious king<sup>1</sup> whose heart, though large,

Beguiled by fair idolatresses, fell
To idols foul. Thammuz came next behind,
Whose annual wound in Lebanon allured
The Syrian damsels to lament his fate
In amorous ditties all a summer's day,
While smooth Adonis<sup>2</sup> from his native rock
Ran purple to the sea, supposed with blood,
Of Thammuz yearly wounded: the love-tale
Infected Sion's daughters with like heat,
Whose wanton passions in the sacred porch
Ezekiel saw, when, by the vision led,
His eye surveyed the dark idolatries
Of alienated Judah. Next came one Who mourned in earnest, when the captive ark

Maimed his brute image, head and hands
lopped off,

In his own temple, on the grunsel<sup>3</sup> edge,
Where he fell flat and shamed his worshippers:
Dagon his name, sea-monster, upward man
And downward fish; yet had his temple high Reared in Azotus, dreaded through the coast
Of Palestine, in Gath and Ascalon,
And Accaron and Gaza's frontier bounds.
Him followed Rimmon, whose delightful seat
Was fair Damascus, on the fertile banks
Of Abbana and Pharphar, lucid streams.
He also against the house of God was bold:

A leper<sup>4</sup> once he lost, and gained a king—
Ahaz, his sottish conqueror, whom he drew God's altar to disparage and displace
For one of Syrian mode, whereon to burn
His odious offerings, and adore the gods
Whom he had vanquished. After these appeared

A crew who, under names of old renown—
Osiris, Isis, Orus, and their train—
With monstrous shapes and sorceries abused
Fanatic Egypt and her priests to seek
Their wandering gods disguised in brutish forms

Rather than human. Nor did Israel scape
The infection, when their borrowed gold<sup>5</sup> composed

The calf in Oreb; and the rebel king<sup>6</sup>
Doubled that sin in Bethel and in Dan,
Likening his Maker to the grazéd ox—
Jehovah, who, in one night, when he<sup>7</sup>
passed

From Egypt marching, equaled<sup>8</sup> with one stroke

Both her first-born and all her bleating gods.
Belial came last; than whom a Spirit more lewd

Fell not from Heaven, or more gross to
love

Vice for itself. To him no temple stood
Or altar smoked; yet who more oft than he
In temples and at altars, when the priest
Turns atheist, as did Eli's sons, who filled
With lust and violence the house of God<sup>9</sup>
In courts and palaces he also reigns,
And in luxurious cities, where the noise
Of riot ascends above their loftiest towers,
And injury and outrage; and, when night Darkens the streets, then wander forth the sons

Of Belial, flown<sup>9</sup> with insolence and wine.
Witness the streets of Sodom, and that night
In Gibeah, when the hospitable door
Exposed a matron, to avoid worse rape.

These were the prime in order and in might:
The rest were long to tell; though far renowned

The Ionian gods—of Javan's issue held

<sup>4</sup>Naaman.

<sup>5</sup>"Borrowed" from the Egyptians.

<sup>6</sup>Jeroboam.

<sup>7</sup>I. e., Israel.

<sup>8</sup>Struck down.

<sup>9</sup>Flushed.

<sup>1</sup>Solomon.

<sup>2</sup>A river in Phœnicia whose waters are colored by the soil through which it flows.

<sup>3</sup>Threshold.

Gods, yet confessed later than Heaven and Earth,
 Their boasted parents;—Titan, Heaven's first-born,
 With his enormous brood, and birthright seized
 By younger Saturn: he from mightier Jove,
 His own and Rhea's son, like measure found;
 So Jove usurping reigned. These, first in Crete
 And Ida known, thence on the snowy top
 Of cold Olympus ruled the middle air,
 Their highest heaven; or on the Delphian cliff,
 Or in Dodona, and through all the bounds
 Of Doric land; or who with Saturn old Fled over Adria to the Hesperian fields,
 And o'er the Celtic roamed the utmost Isles.
 All these and more came flocking; but with looks Downcast and damp;<sup>1</sup> yet such wherein appeared Obscure some glimpse of joy to have found their Chief
 Not in despair, to have found themselves not lost
 In loss itself; which on his countenance cast
 Like doubtful hue. But he, his wonted pride
 Soon recollecting,<sup>2</sup> with high words, that bore
 Semblance of worth, not substance, gently raised
 Their fainting courage, and dispelled their fears:
 Then straight commands that, at the warlike sound
 Of trumpets loud and clarions, be upreared
 His mighty standard. That proud honor claimed
Azazel as his right, a Cherub tall:
 Who forthwith from the glittering staff unfurled
 The imperial ensign; which, full high advanced,
 Shone like a meteor streaming to the wind,
 With gems and golden luster rich emblazed, Seraphic arms and trophies; all the while Sonorous metal blowing martial sounds:
 At which the universal host up-sent
 A shout that tore Hell's concave, and beyond

Frighted the reign of Chaos and old Night.
 All in a moment through the gloom were seen
 Ten thousand banners rise into the air,
 With orient<sup>3</sup> colors waving: with them rose
 A forest huge of spears; and thronging helms
 Appeared, and serried shields in thick array
 Of depth immeasurable. Anon they move
 In perfect phalanx to the Dorian mood<sup>4</sup>
 Of flutes and soft recorders<sup>5</sup>—such as raised
 To highth of noblest temper heroes old Arming to battle, and instead of rage
 Deliberate valor breathed, firm, and unmoved<sup>6</sup>
 With dread of death to flight or foul retreat;
 Nor wanting power to mitigate and swage<sup>7</sup>
 With solemn touches troubled thoughts, and chase
 Anguish and doubt and fear and sorrow and pain
 From mortal or immortal minds. Thus they,
 Breathing united force with fixed thought,
 Moved on in silence to soft pipes that charmed
 Their painful steps o'er the burnt soil. And now Advanced in view they stand—a horrid<sup>8</sup> front
 Of dreadful length and dazzling arms, in guise
 Of warriors old, with ordered spear and shield,
 Awaiting what command their mighty Chief
 Had to impose. He through the armed files
 Darts his experienced eye, and soon traverse<sup>9</sup>
 The whole battalion views—their order due,
 Their visages and stature as of gods;
 Their number last he sums. And now his heart
 Distends with pride, and, hardening in his strength,
 Glories: for never, since created Man,<sup>10</sup>
 Met such embodied force as, named with these,
 Could merit more than that small infantry

<sup>3</sup>Bright.

<sup>4</sup>It was grave, or even stern, in character—suitable for soldiers.

<sup>5</sup>A kind of flute.

<sup>6</sup>Immovable.

<sup>7</sup>Assuage.

<sup>8</sup>Bristling.

<sup>9</sup>Across.

<sup>10</sup>Since man's creation.

<sup>1</sup>Depressed.

<sup>2</sup>Regaining.

Warred on by cranes<sup>1</sup>—though all the giant brood

Of Phlegra with the heroic race were joined
That fought at Thebes and Ilium, on each side

Mixed with auxiliar gods; and what resounds
In fable or romance of Uther's son<sup>2</sup>

Begirt with British and Armoric<sup>3</sup> knights;
And all who since, baptized or infidel,

Jousted in Aspramont, or Montalban,
Damasco, or Marocco, or Trebisonde,

Or whom Biserta sent from Afric shore

When Charlemagne with all his peerage fell
By Fontarabbia. Thus far these beyond

Compare of mortal prowess, yet observed<sup>4</sup>
Their dread Commander. He, above the rest

In shape and gesture proudly eminent,
Stood like a tower. His form had yet not lost
All her original brightness, nor appeared

Less than Archangel ruined, and the excess
Of glory obscured: as when the sun new-risen

Looks through the horizontal misty air
Shorn of his beams, or from behind the moon,

In dim eclipse, disastrous twilight sheds
On half the nations, and with fear of change

Perplexes monarchs. Darkened so, yet
shone

Above them all the Archangel: but his face Deep scars of thunder had intrenched, and

care

Sat on his faded cheek, but under brows
Of dauntless courage, and considerate<sup>5</sup> pride

Waiting revenge. Cruel his eye, but cast
Signs of remorse and passion,<sup>6</sup> to behold

The fellows of his crime, the followers rather (Far other once beheld in bliss), condemned

For ever now to have their lot in pain—
Millions of Spirits for his fault amerced<sup>7</sup>

Of Heaven, and from eternal splendors flung
For his revolt—yet faithful how they stood,

Their glory withered; as, when heaven's fire
Hath scathed<sup>8</sup> the forest oaks or mountain

pinetrees,

With singéd top their stately growth, though bare,

Stands on the blasted heath. He now prepared

To speak; whereat their doubled ranks they bend

From wing to wing, and half enclose him round

With all his peers: Attention held them mute.
Thrice he assayed, and thrice, in spite of

scorn,
Tears, such as angels weep, burst forth: at last

Words interwove with sighs found out their way:—

“O myriads of immortal Spirits! O Powers

Matchless, but with the Almighty!—and that strife

Was not inglorious, though the event<sup>9</sup> was dire,

As this place testifies, and this dire change,
Hateful to utter. But what power of mind,

Foreseeing or presaging, from the depth Of knowledge past or present, could have feared

How such united force of gods, how such

As stood like these, could ever know repulse?

For who can yet believe, though after loss,
That all these puissant legions, whose exile

Hath emptied Heaven, shall fail to re-ascend,
Self-raised, and re-possess their native seat?

For me, be witness all the host of Heaven,
If counsels different, or danger shunned

By me, have lost our hopes. But he who reigns

Monarch in Heaven till then as one secure
Sat on his throne, upheld by old repute,

Consent or custom, and his regal state
Put forth at full, but still his strength concealed—

Which tempted our attempt, and wrought
our fall.

Henceforth his might we know, and know our own,

So as not either to provoke, or dread
New war provoked: our better part remains

To work in close design, by fraud or guile,
What force effected not; that he no less

At length from us may find, who overcomes
By force hath overcome but half his foe.

<sup>1</sup>The Pygmies (Iliad, III, 5).

<sup>2</sup>King Arthur.

<sup>3</sup>Breton.

<sup>4</sup>Obedient.

<sup>5</sup>Thoughtful.

<sup>6</sup>Pity and strong emotion.

<sup>7</sup>Punished by loss.

<sup>8</sup>Injured.

<sup>9</sup>Result.

Space may produce new Worlds; whereof so rife

There went a fame in Heaven that he ere long

Intended to create, and therein plant
A generation whom his choice regard
Should favor equal to the Sons of Heaven.

Thither, if but to pry, shall be perhaps
Our first eruption—thither, or elsewhere;
For this infernal pit shall never hold Celestial Spirits in bondage, nor the Abyss
Long under darkness cover. But these thoughts

Full counsel must mature. Peace is despaired;

For who can think submission? War, then, war

Open or understood,<sup>1</sup> must be resolved.”

He spake; and, to confirm his words, out-flew

Millions of flaming swords, drawn from the thighs

• Of mighty Cherubim; the sudden blaze
Far round illumined Hell. Highly they raged

Against the Highest, and fierce with grasped arms

Clashed on their sounding shields the din of war,

Hurling defiance toward the vault of Heaven.

There stood a hill not far, whose grisly top
Belched fire and rolling smoke; the rest untire

Shone with a glossy scurf—undoubted sign
That in his womb was hid metallic ore,
The work of sulphur.<sup>2</sup> Thither, winged with speed,

A numerous brigad hastened: as when bands
Of pioneers, with spade and pickaxe armed,
Forerun the royal camp, to trench a field,
Or cast a rampart. Mammon led them on—Mammon, the least erected Spirit that fell From Heaven; for even in Heaven his looks and thoughts

Were always downward bent, admiring more
The riches of Heaven’s pavement, trodden gold,

Than aught divine or holy else enjoyed
In vision beatific. By him first Men also, and by his suggestion taught,

Ransacked the center,<sup>3</sup> and with impious hands

Rifled the bowels of their mother earth
For treasures better hid. Soon had his crew Opened into the hill a spacious wound,
And digged out ribs<sup>4</sup> of gold. Let none admire<sup>5</sup>

That riches grow in Hell; that soil may best Deserve the precious bane. And here let those Who boast in mortal things, and wondering tell

Of Babel, and the works of Memphian kings,<sup>6</sup>

Learn how their greatest monuments of fame

And strength, and art, are easily outdone

By Spirits reprobate, and in an hour

What in an age they, with incessant toil

And hands innumerable, scarce perform.

Nigh on the plain, in many cells prepared,

That underneath had veins of liquid fire

Sluiced from the lake, a second multitude
With wondrous art founded<sup>7</sup> the massy ore, Severing each kind, and scummed the bullion-dross.

A third as soon had formed within the ground
A various mold, and from the boiling cells
By strange conveyance filled each hollow nook;

As in an organ, from one blast of wind,
To many a row of pipes the sound-board breathes.

Anon out of the earth a fabric huge
Rose like an exhalation, with the sound

Of dulcet symphonies and voices sweet—

Built like a temple, where pilasters round

Were set, and Doric pillars overlaid<sup>8</sup>

With golden architrave; nor did there want Cornice or frieze, with bossy<sup>9</sup> sculptures
graven;

The roof was fretted<sup>10</sup> gold. Not Babylon
Nor great Alcairo such magnificence
Equaled in all their glories, to enshrine
Belus or Serapis their gods, or seat

<sup>1</sup>The earth.

<sup>2</sup>Bars.

<sup>3</sup>Wonder.

<sup>4</sup>The pyramids.

<sup>5</sup>Melted.

<sup>6</sup>Surmounted.

<sup>7</sup>Projecting.

<sup>8</sup>Checkered; or adorned with embossed designs.

<sup>1</sup>Not openly declared.

<sup>2</sup>Sulphur was formerly believed to be the formative element of metals.

Their kings, when Egypt with Assyria strove
In wealth and luxury. The ascending pile Stood fixed her stately highth; and straight
the doors,

Opening their brazen folds, discover, wide
Within, her ample spaces o'er the smooth
And level pavement: from the archéd roof,
Pendent by subtle magic, many a row
Of starry lamps and blazing cressets, fed
With naphtha and asphaltus, yielded light
As from a sky. The hasty multitude Admiring entered; and the work some praise,
And some the architect. His hand was known

In Heaven by many a towered structure
high,

Where sceptered Angels held their residence,
And sat as Princes, whom the supreme King
Exalted to such power, and gave to rule,
Each in his hierarchy, the Orders bright.
Nor was his name unheard or unadored
In ancient Greece; and in Ausonian land<sup>1</sup>
Men called him Mulciber; and how he fell
From Heaven they fabled, thrown by angry
Jove

Sheer o'er the crystal battlements: from morn
To noon he fell, from noon to dewy eve,
A summer's day, and with the setting sun
Dropt from the zenith, like a falling star,
On Lemnos, the Ægæan isle. Thus they re-
late,

Erring; for he with this rebellious rout
Fell long before; nor aught availed him now
To have built in Heaven high towers; nor did he scape

By all his engines,<sup>2</sup> but was headlong sent,
With his industrious crew, to build in Hell.

Meanwhile the wingéd heralds, by command

Of sovran power, with awful ceremony
And trumpet's sound, throughout the host proclaim

A solemn council forthwith to be held
At Pandemonium,<sup>3</sup> the high capital
Of Satan and his peers. Their summons called

From every band and squaréd regiment
By place or choice the worthiest: they anon
With hundreds and with thousands trooping
came

Attended. All access was thronged; the gates

And porches wide, but chief the spacious hall (Though like a covered field, where champions bold

Wont ride in armed, and at the soldan's<sup>4</sup> chair

Defied the best of paynim<sup>5</sup> chivalry
To mortal combat, or career with lance), Thick swarmed, both on the ground and in the air,

Brushed with the hiss of rustling wings. As bees

In spring-time, when the Sun with Taurus<sup>6</sup>
rides,

Pour forth their populous youth about the hive

In clusters; they among fresh dewes and
flowers

Fly to and fro, or on the smoothéd plank,
The suburb of their straw-built citadel,
New rubbed with balm, expatiate,<sup>7</sup> and confer<sup>8</sup>

Their state-affairs: so thick the aery crowd
Swarmed and were straitened; till, the signal given,

Behold a wonder! They but now who seemed

In bigness to surpass earth's giant sons,
Now less than smallest dwarfs, in narrow
room

Throng numberless—like that pygmean
race

Beyond the Indian mount; or faery elves,
Whose midnight revels, by a forest-side
Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,
Or dreams he sees, while overhead the Moon
Sits arbitress,<sup>9</sup> and nearer to the earth Wheels her pale course: they, on their mirth and dance

Intent, with jocund music charm his ear;
At once with joy and fear his heart rebounds.
Thus incorporeal Spirits to smallest forms Reduced their shapes immense, and were at large,

Though without number still, amidst the
hall

<sup>4</sup>Sultan's.

<sup>5</sup>Pagan.

<sup>6</sup>Sign of the zodiac (the time is 19 April to 20 May).

<sup>7</sup>Walk abroad.

<sup>8</sup>Discuss.

<sup>9</sup>Witness.

<sup>1</sup>Italy.

<sup>2</sup>Contrivances.

<sup>3</sup>Abode of all demons.

Of that infernal court. But far within,
And in their own dimensions like themselves,
The great Seraphic Lords and Cherubim
In close recess<sup>1</sup> and secret conclave sat,
A thousand demi-gods on golden seats,
Frequent<sup>2</sup> and full. After short silence
then,
And summons read, the great consult<sup>3</sup>
began.

BOOK II THE ARGUMENT

THE consultation begun, Satan debates whether another battle be to be hazarded for the recovery of Heaven: some advise it, others dissuade. A third proposal is preferred, mentioned before by Satan—to search the truth of that prophecy or tradition in Heaven concerning another world, and another kind of creature, equal, or not much inferior, to themselves, about this time to be created. Their doubt who shall be sent on this difficult search: Satan, their chief, undertakes alone the voyage; is honored and applauded. The council thus ended, the rest betake them several ways and to several employments, as their inclinations lead them, to entertain the time till Satan return. He passes on his journey to Hell-gates; finds them shut, and who sat there to guard them; by whom at length they are opened, and discover to him the great gulf between Hell and Heaven. With what difficulty he passes through, directed by Chaos, the Power of that place, to the sight of this new World which he sought.

HIGH on a throne of royal state, which far Outshone the wealth of Ormus<sup>4</sup> and of Ind,
Or where the gorgeous East with richest hand
Showers on her kings barbaric pearl and gold,
Satan exalted sat, by merit raised
To that bad eminence; and, from despair
Thus high uplifted beyond hope, aspires
Beyond thus high, insatiate to pursue Vain war with Heaven; and, by success<sup>5</sup> un-
taught,
His proud imaginations thus displayed:— “Powers and Dominions, Deities of Heaven!—

For, since no deep within her gulf can hold Immortal vigor, though oppressed and fallen,

I give not Heaven for lost: from this descent
Celestial Virtues rising will appear More glorious and more dread than from no
fall,

And trust themselves to fear no second
fate!—

Me though just right, and the fixed laws of Heaven,

Did first create your leader—next, free
choice,

With what besides in council or in fight
Hath been achieved of merit—yet this loss,
Thus far at least recovered, hath much more Established in a safe, unenvied throne, Yielded with full consent. The happier
state

In Heaven, which follows dignity, might draw

Envy from each inferior; but who here
Will envy whom the highest place exposes Foremost to stand against the Thunderer's aim

Your bulwark, and condemns to greatest share

Of endless pain? Where there is, then, no
good

For which to strive, no strife can grow up
there

From faction: for none sure will claim in Hell
Precedence; none whose portion is so small
Of present pain that with ambitious mind
Will covet more! With this advantage,
then,

To union, and firm faith, and firm accord,
More than can be in Heaven, we now return
To claim our just inheritance of old,
Surer to prosper than prosperity
Could have assured us; and by what best
way,

Whether of open war or covert guile,
We now debate. Who can advise may speak.”

He ceased; and next him Moloch, scorp-tered king,
Stood up—the strongest and the fiercest
Spirit

That fought in Heaven, now fiercer by despair.

His trust was with the Eternal to be deemed Equal in strength, and rather than be less Cared not to be at all; with that care lost

<sup>1</sup>Retirement.

<sup>2</sup>Numerous.

<sup>3</sup>Consultation.

<sup>4</sup>An island in the Persian Gulf.

<sup>5</sup>Experience.

Went all his fear: of God, or Hell, or worse,
He recked<sup>1</sup> not, and these words thereafter
spake:—

"My sentence is for open war. Of wiles,
More unexpert,<sup>2</sup> I boast not: them let those Contrive who need, or when they need; not
now.

For, while they sit contriving, shall the rest—
Millions that stand in arms, and longing wait
The signal to ascend—sit lingering here, Heaven's fugitives, and for their dwelling-
place

Accept this dark opprobrious den of shame,
The prison of his tyranny who reigns
By our delay? No! let us rather choose,
Armed with Hell-flames and fury, all at once O'er Heaven's high towers to force resistless
way,

Turning our tortures into horrid arms Against the Torturer; when, to meet the noise

Of his almighty engine, he shall hear
Infernal thunder, and, for lightning, see
Black fire and horror shot with equal rage
Among his Angels, and his throne itself
Mixed with Tartarean<sup>3</sup> sulphur and strange
fire,

His own invented torments. But perhaps
The way seems difficult, and steep to scale
With upright wing against a higher foe!
Let such bethink them, if the sleepy drench
Of that forgetful lake benumb not still,
That in our proper<sup>4</sup> motion we ascend
Up to our native seat; descent and fall
To us is adverse. Who but felt of late,
When the fierce foe hung on our broken rear
Insulting, and pursued us through the Deep,
With what compulsion and laborious flight
We sunk thus low? The ascent is easy, then;
The event<sup>5</sup> is feared! Should we again provoke

Our stronger, some worse way his wrath may
find

To our destruction, if there be in Hell Fear to be worse destroyed! What can be worse

Than to dwell here, driven out from bliss, condemned

In this abhorred deep to utter woe!
Where pain of unextinguishable fire
Must exercise<sup>6</sup> us without hope of end
The vassals of his anger, when the scourge
Inexorably, and the torturing hour, Calls us to penance? More destroyed than
thus,

We should be quite abolished, and expire.
What fear we then? what doubt we to incense
His utmost ire? which, to the highth enraged,
Will either quite consume us, and reduce
To nothing this essential<sup>7</sup>—happier far Than miserable to have eternal being!—
Or, if our substance be indeed divine,
And cannot cease to be, we are at worst
On this side nothing; and by proof we feel
Our power sufficient to disturb his Heaven
And with perpetual inroads to alarm,
Though inaccessible, his fatal throne:
Which, if not victory, is yet revenge."

He ended frowning, and his look denounced<sup>8</sup>

Desperate revenge, and battle dangerous
To less than gods. On the other side up rose Belial, in act more graceful and humane.
A fairer person lost not Heaven; he seemed
For dignity composed, and high exploit.
But all was false and hollow; though his tongue

Dropped manna, and could make the worse
appear

The better reason, to perplex and dash Maturest counsels: for his thoughts were
low—

To vice industrious, but to nobler deeds Timorous and slothful. Yet he pleased the ear,

And with persuasive accent thus began:—

"I should be much for open war, O Peers,
As not behind in hate, if what was urged
Main reason to persuade immediate war
Did not dissuade me most, and seem to cast
Ominous conjecture on the whole success;
When he who most excels in fact<sup>9</sup> of arms,
In what he counsels and in what excels
Mistrustful, grounds his courage on despair
And utter dissolution, as the scope
Of all his aim, after some dire revenge.

<sup>1</sup>Cared.

<sup>2</sup>Inexperienced.

<sup>3</sup>Infernal.

<sup>4</sup>Natural.

<sup>5</sup>Its result.

<sup>6</sup>Torment.

<sup>7</sup>Substance (adjective for substantive, as frequently with Milton).

<sup>8</sup>Indicated.

<sup>9</sup>Deeds.

First, what revenge? The towers of Heaven are filled

With armed watch, that render all access Impregnable: oft on the bordering Deep Encamp their legions, or with obscure wing
Scout far and wide into the realm of Night, Scorning surprise. Or, could we break our
way

By force, and at our heels all Hell should rise

With blackest insurrection to confound
Heaven's purest light, yet our great Enemy,
All incorruptible, would on his throne
Sit unpolluted, and the ethereal mold,<sup>1</sup>
Incapable of stain, would soon expel
Her mischief, and purge off the baser fire, Victorious. Thus repulsed, our final hope
Is flat despair: we must exasperate
The Almighty Victor to spend all his rage;
And that must end us; that must be our cure—

To be no more. Sad cure! for who would
lose,

Though full of pain, this intellectual being,
Those thoughts that wander through eternity,

To perish rather, swallowed up and lost
In the wide womb of uncreated Night, Devoid of sense and motion? And who knows,

Let this be good, whether our angry Foe
Can give it, or will ever? How he can
Is doubtful; that he never will is sure.
Will he, so wise, let loose at once his ire, Belike<sup>2</sup> through impotence or unaware,
To give his enemies their wish, and end
Them in his anger whom his anger saves
To punish endless? 'Wherefore cease we,
then?'

Say they who counsel war; 'we are decreed,
Reserved, and destined to eternal woe;
Whatever doing, what can we suffer more,
What can we suffer worse?' Is this, then,
worst—

Thus sitting, thus consulting, thus in arms?
What when we fled amain, pursued and strook

With Heaven's afflicting thunder, and be-
sought

The Deep to shelter us? This Hell then seemed

A refuge from those wounds. Or when we lay

Chained on the burning lake? That sure was worse.

What if the breath that kindled those grim
fires,

Awaked, should blow them into sevenfold
rage,

And plunge us in the flames; or from above
Should intermitted vengeance arm again
His red right hand to plague us? What if all
Her stores were opened, and this firmament
Of Hell should spout her cataracts of fire,
Impendent horrors, threatening hideous fall
One day upon our heads; while we perhaps,
Designing or exhorting glorious war
Caught in a fiery tempest, shall be hurled,
Each on his rock transfixed, the sport and
prey

Of racking whirlwinds, or for ever sunk
Under yon boiling ocean, wrapped in chains,
There to converse with everlasting groans,
Unrespited, unpitied, unreprieved,
Ages of hopeless end? This would be worse.
War, therefore, open or concealed, alike
My voice dissuades; for what can force or
guile

With him, or who deceive his mind, whose
eye

Views all things at one view? He from Heaven's highth

All these our motions vain sees and derides,
Not more almighty to resist our might
Than wise to frustrate all our plots and wiles.
Shall we, then, live thus vile—the race of
Heaven

Thus trampled, thus expelled, to suffer here Chains and these torments? Better these than worse,

By my advice; since fate inevitable
Subdues us, and omnipotent decree,
The Victor's will. To suffer, as to do,
Our strength is equal; nor the law unjust
That so ordains. This was at first resolved,
If we were wise, against so great a foe
Contending, and so doubtful what might fall.
I laugh when those who at the spear are
bold

And venturous, if that fail them, shrink, and
fear

What yet they know must follow—to endure
Exile, or ignominy, or bonds, or pain,
The sentence of their conqueror. This is
now

<sup>1</sup>Substance.

<sup>2</sup>Probably.

Our doom; which if we can sustain and bear,
Our Supreme Foe in time may much remit
His anger, and perhaps, thus far removed,
Not mind us not offending, satisfied
With what is punished; whence these raging
fires

Will slacken, if his breath stir not their flames.

Our purer essence then will overcome
Their noxious vapor; or, inured, not feel;
Or, changed at length, and to the place conformed

In temper and in nature, will receive
Familiar the fierce heat; and, void of pain,
This horror will grow mild, this darkness
light;

Besides what hope the never-ending flight
Of future days may bring, what chance, what change

Worth waiting—since our present lot appears
For happy though but ill, for ill not worst,<sup>1</sup>
If we procure not to ourselves more woe.”

Thus Belial, with words clothed in reason’s garb,

Counseled ignoble ease and peaceful sloth,
Not peace; and after him thus Mammon
spake:—

“Either to disenthroned the King of Heaven
We war, if war be best, or to regain Our own right lost. Him to unthroned we
then

May hope, when everlasting Fate shall yield
To fickle Chance, and Chaos judge the strife.
The former, vain to hope, argues as vain
The latter; for what place can be for us
Within Heaven’s bound, unless Heaven’s
Lord Supreme

We overpower? Suppose he should relent,
And publish grace to all, on promise made
Of new subjection; with what eyes could we Stand in his presence humble, and receive Strict laws imposed, to celebrate his throne
With warbled hymns, and to his Godhead
sing

Forced Halleluiahs, while he lordly sits
Our envied sovran, and his altar breathes
Ambrosial odors and ambrosial flowers,
Our servile offerings? This must be our task

In Heaven, this our delight. How wearisome

Eternity so spent in worship paid

<sup>1</sup>Since our present lot appears ill, indeed, compared with happiness, yet not so bad as it might be.

To whom we hate! Let us not then pursue,
By force impossible, by leave obtained
Unacceptable, though in Heaven, our state
Of splendid vassalage; but rather seek
Our own good from ourselves, and from our
own

Live to ourselves, though in this vast recess,
Free and to none accountable, preferring Hard liberty before the easy yoke
Of servile pomp. Our greatness will appear Then most conspicuous when great things of
small,

Useful of hurtful, prosperous of adverse,
We can create, and in what place soe’er
Thrive under evil, and work ease out of pain
Through labor and endurance. This deep
world

Of darkness do we dread? How oft amidst Thick clouds and dark doth Heaven’s all-ruling Sire

Choose to reside, his glory unobscured,
And with the majesty of darkness round
Covers his throne, from whence deep thunders roar,

Mustering their rage, and Heaven resembles Hell!

As he our darkness, cannot we his light
Imitate when we please? This desert soil
Wants not her hidden luster, gems and gold;
Nor want we skill or art from whence to raise Magnificence; and what can Heaven show
more?

Our torments also may, in length of time,
Become our elements, these piercing fires
As soft as now severe, our temper changed
Into their temper; which must needs remove The sensible<sup>2</sup> of pain. All things invite
To peaceful counsels, and the settled state
Of order, how in safety best we may Compose our present evils, with regard
Of what we are and where, dismissing quite All thoughts of war. Ye have what I advise.”

He scarce had finished, when such murmur filled

The assembly as when hollow rocks retain
The sound of blustering winds, which all night long

Had roused the sea, now with hoarse cadence lull

Seafaring men o’erwatched,<sup>3</sup> whose bark by
chance,

<sup>2</sup>Sense.

<sup>3</sup>Wearied with watching.

Or pinnacle, anchors in a craggy bay
 After the tempest. Such applause was heard
 As Mammon ended, and his sentence pleased,
 Advising peace: for such another field<sup>1</sup>
 They dreaded worse than Hell; so much the
     fear
 Of thunder and the sword of Michaël
 Wrought still within them; and no less desire To found this nether empire, which might
     rise,
 By policy and long process of time,
 In emulation opposite to Heaven.
 Which when Beëlzebub perceived—than whom,
 Satan except, none higher sat—with grave
 Aspect he rose, and in his rising seemed A pillar of state. Deep on his front en-
     graven
 Deliberation sat, and public care;
 And princely counsel in his face yet shone,
 Majestic, though in ruin. Sage he stood,
 With Atlantean shoulders,<sup>2</sup> fit to bear
 The weight of mightiest monarchies; his look
 Drew audience and attention still as night Or summer's noontide air, while thus he spoke:—
 "Thrones and Imperial Powers, Offspring of Heaven,
 Ethereal Virtues! or these titles now Must we renounce, and, changing style, be called
 Princes of Hell? for so the popular vote
 Inclines—here to continue, and build up
     here
 A growing empire; doubtless! while we dream,
 And know not that the King of Heaven hath doomed
 This place our dungeon—not our safe retreat
 Beyond his potent arm, to live exempt
 From Heaven's high jurisdiction, in new league
 Banded against his throne, but to remain
 In strictest bondage, though thus far removed,
 Under the inevitable curb, reserved
 His captive multitude. For He, be sure,
 In highth or depth, still first and last will
     reign
 Sole king, and of his kingdom lose no part

By our revolt, but over Hell extend
 His empire, and with iron scepter rule
 Us here, as with his golden those in Heaven.
 What sit we then projecting peace and war?
 War hath determined<sup>3</sup> us and foiled with
     loss
 Irreparable; terms of peace yet none Vouchsafed or sought; for what peace will be given
 To us enslaved, but custody severe,
 And stripes and arbitrary punishment
 Inflicted? and what peace can we return,
 But, to<sup>4</sup> our power, hostility and hate,
 Untamed reluctance, and revenge, though
     slow,
 Yet ever plotting how the Conqueror least May reap his conquest, and may least rejoice
 In doing what we most in suffering feel?
 Nor will occasion want, nor shall we need
 With dangerous expedition to invade Heaven, whose high walls fear no assault or siege,
 Or ambush from the Deep. What if we find
 Some easier enterprise? There is a place
 (If ancient and prophetic fame<sup>5</sup> in Heaven Err not)—another World, the happy seat
 Of some new race, called Man, about this
     time
 To be created like to us, though less
 In power and excellence, but favored more
 Of him who rules above; so was his will Pronounced among the gods, and by an oath
 That shook Heaven's whole circumference confirmed.
 Thither let us bend all our thoughts, to learn
 What creatures there inhabit, of what mold Or substance, how endued, and what their power
 And where their weakness: how attempted
     best
 By force or subtlety. Though Heaven be shut,
 And Heaven's high Arbitrator sit secure
 In his own strength, this place may lie exposed,
 The utmost border of his kingdom, left
 To their defence who hold it: here, perhaps,
 Some advantageous act may be achieved
 By sudden onset—either with Hell-fire

<sup>1</sup>Battle.

<sup>2</sup>Shoulders like those of Atlas, who supported the columns on which the heavens rest.

<sup>3</sup>Undone.

<sup>4</sup>To the limit of.

<sup>5</sup>Report.

To waste his whole creation, or possess
All as our own, and drive, as we are driven,
The puny habitants; or, if not drive,
Seduce them to our party, that their God
May prove their foe, and with repenting
hand

Abolish his own works. This would surpass Common revenge, and interrupt his joy
In our confusion, and our joy upraise
In his disturbance; when his darling sons, Hurled headlong to partake with us, shall curse

Their frail original, and faded bliss—
Faded so soon! Advise<sup>1</sup> if this be worth Attempting, or to sit in darkness here
Hatching vain empires.” Thus Beëlzebub Pleaded his devilish counsel—first devised
By Satan, and in part proposed: for whence,
But from the author of all ill, could spring
So deep a malice, to confound the race
Of mankind in one root, and Earth with Hell
To mingle and involve, done all to spite
The great Creator? But their spite still serves

His glory to augment. The bold design
Pleased highly those Infernal States,<sup>2</sup> and joy
Sparkled in all their eyes: with full assent
They vote: whereat his speech he thus renews:—

“Well have ye judged, well ended long debate,

Synod of Gods, and, like to what ye are,
Great things resolved, which from the lowest
deep

Will once more lift us up, in spite of fate,
Nearer our ancient seat—perhaps in view
Of those bright confines, whence, with neighboring arms,

And opportune excursion, we may chance
Re-enter Heaven; or else in some mild zone
Dwell, not unvisited of Heaven’s fair light,
Secure, and at the brightening orient beam
Purge off this gloom: the soft delicious air,
To heal the scar of these corrosive fires, Shall breathe her balm. But, first, whom shall we send

In search of this new World? whom shall we
find

Sufficient? who shall tempt<sup>3</sup> with wandering feet

The dark, unbottomed, infinite Abyss,
And through the palpable obscure<sup>4</sup> find out
His uncouth<sup>5</sup> way, or spread his aery flight,
Upborne with indefatigable wings
Over the vast Abrupt,<sup>6</sup> ere he arrive
The happy Isle? What strength, what art, can then

Suffice, or what evasion bear him safe,
Through the strict senteries and stations thick

Of Angels watching round? Here he had
need

All circumspection: and we now no less Choice<sup>7</sup> in our suffrage; for on whom we send

The weight of all, and our last hope, relies.”

This said, he sat; and expectation held
His look suspense,<sup>8</sup> awaiting who appeared
To second, or oppose, or undertake
The perilous attempt. But all sat mute, Pondering the danger with deep thoughts;
and each

In other’s countenance read his own dismay, Astonished. None among the choice and prime

Of those Heaven-warring champions could be
found

So hardy as to proffer or accept,
Alone, the dreadful voyage; till, at last,
Satan, whom now transcendent glory raised
Above his fellows, with monarchal pride Conscious of highest worth, unmoved thus
spake:—

“O Progeny of Heaven! Empyrean
Thrones!

With reason hath deep silence and demur<sup>9</sup> Seized us, though undismayed. Long is the
way

And hard, that out of Hell leads up to Light.
Our prison strong, this huge convex of fire,
Outrageous to devour, immures us round
Ninefold; and gates of burning adamant,
Barred over us, prohibit all egress.

These passed, if any pass, the void profound
Of unessential<sup>10</sup> Night receives him next,
Wide-gaping, and with utter loss of being

<sup>1</sup>Consider.

<sup>2</sup>Councilors.

<sup>3</sup>Try.

<sup>4</sup>Obscurity.

<sup>5</sup>Unknown.

<sup>6</sup>The region of chaos.

<sup>7</sup>Care.

<sup>8</sup>In suspense.

<sup>9</sup>Hesitancy.

<sup>10</sup>Void of being.

Threatens him, plunged in that abortive<sup>1</sup> gulf.

If thence he scape, into whatever world,
Or unknown region, what remains<sup>2</sup> him less
Than unknown dangers, and as hard escape?
But I should ill become this throne, O Peers,
And this imperial sovranity, adorned With splendor, armed with power, if aught proposed

And judged of public moment in the shape
Of difficulty or danger, could deter Me from attempting. Wherefore do I assume

These royalties, and not refuse to reign,
Refusing to accept as great a share
Of hazard as of honor, due alike
To him who reigns, and so much to him due
Of hazard more as he above the rest
High honored sits? Go, therefore, mighty
Powers,

Terror of Heaven, though fallen; intend<sup>3</sup> at
home,
While here shall be our home, what best may
ease

The present misery, and render Hell
More tolerable; if there be cure or charm
To respite, or deceive,<sup>4</sup> or slack the pain
Of this ill mansion: intermit no watch
Against a wakeful foe, while I abroad
Through all the coasts of dark destruction seek

Deliverance for us all. This enterprise None shall partake with me." Thus saying,
rose

The Monarch, and prevented all reply;
Prudent lest, from his resolution raised,<sup>5</sup>
Others among the chief might offer now,
Certain to be refused, what erst they feared,
And, so refused, might in opinion stand
His rivals, winning cheap the high repute
Which he through hazard huge must earn.

But they

Dreaded not more the adventure than his voice

Forbidding; and at once with him they rose.
Their rising all at once was as the sound Of thunder heard remote. Towards him they bend

<sup>1</sup>Dangerous.

<sup>2</sup>Awaits.

<sup>3</sup>Consider.

<sup>4</sup>Divert us from.

<sup>5</sup>Lest, encouraged by his bravery.

With awful reverence prone, and as a God
Extol him equal to the Highest in Heaven.
Nor failed they to express how much they praised

That for the general safety he despised
His own: for neither do the Spirits damned Lose all their virtue; lest bad men should boast

Their specious deeds on earth, which glory
excites,

Or close<sup>6</sup> ambition varnished o'er with zeal.

Thus they their doubtful consultations dark Ended, rejoicing in their matchless Chief:
As, when from mountain-tops the dusky
clouds

Ascending, while the North-wind sleeps, o'er-
spread

Heaven's cheerful face, the louring element Scowls o'er the darkened landscape snow or shower,

If chance the radiant sun, with farewell
sweet,

Extend his evening beam, the fields revive,
The birds their notes renew, and bleating herds

Attest their joy, that hill and valley rings.
O shame to men! Devil with devil damned
Firm concord holds; men only disagree
Of creatures rational, though under hope
Of heavenly grace, and, God proclaiming
peace,

Yet live in hatred, enmity, and strife
Among themselves, and levy cruel wars
Wasting the earth, each other to destroy:
As if (which might induce us to accord)
Man had not hellish foes enow<sup>7</sup> besides,

That day and night for his destruction wait!
The Stygian council thus dissolved; and forth

In order came the grand Infernal Peers:
Midst came their mighty Paramount,<sup>8</sup> and seemed

Alone the antagonist of Heaven, nor less Than Hell's dread Emperor, with pomp
supreme,

And god-like imitated state: him round
A globe of fiery Seraphim enclosed
With bright emblazonry, and horrent<sup>9</sup> arms.
Then of their session ended they bid cry

<sup>6</sup>Secret.

<sup>7</sup>Enough.

<sup>8</sup>Chief.

<sup>9</sup>Bristling.

With trumpet's regal sound the great result:
Toward the four winds four speedy Cheru-bim

Put to their mouths the sounding alchemy,<sup>1</sup>
By herald's voice explained;<sup>2</sup> the hollow
Abyss

Heard far and wide, and all the host of Hell
With deafening shout returned them loud acclaim.

Thence more at ease their minds, and somewhat raised

By false presumptuous hope, the rangéd
Powers

Disband; and, wandering, each his several
way

Pursues, as inclination or sad choice Leads him perplexed, where he may likeliest
find

Truce to his restless thoughts, and entertain
The irksome hours, till his great Chief return.
Part on the plain, or in the air sublime,
Upon the wing or in swift race contend,
As at the Olympian games or Pythian fields;
Part curb their fiery steeds, or shun the goal
With rapid wheels, or fronted brigads form:
As when, to warn proud cities, war appears Waged in the troubled sky, and armies rush
To battle in the clouds; before each van Prick<sup>3</sup> forth the aery knights, and couch their spears,

Till thickest legions close; with feats of arms

From either end of heaven the welkin<sup>4</sup> burns.

Others, with vast Typhœan rage, more fell,
Rend up both rocks and hills, and ride the air
In whirlwind; Hell scarce holds the wild uproar:—

As when Alcides,<sup>5</sup> from Æchalia crowned With conquest, felt the envenomed robe, and tore

Through pain up by the roots Thessalian pines,

And Lichas from the top of Æta threw
Into the Euboic sea. Others, more mild, Retreated in a silent valley, sing

With notes angelical to many a harp
Their own heroic deeds, and hapless fall
By doom of battle, and complain that Fate
Free Virtue should enthrall to Force or Chance.

Their song was partial; but the harmony (What could it less when Spirits immortal
sing?)

Suspended Hell, and took with ravishment
The thronging audience. In discourse more sweet

(For Eloquence the Soul, Song charms the Sense)

Others apart sat on a hill retired,
In thoughts more elevate, and reasoned high Of Providence, Foreknowledge, Will, and
Fate—

Fixed fate, free will, foreknowledge absolute,
And found no end, in wandering mazes lost.
Of good and evil much they argued then,
Of happiness and final misery,
Passion and apathy, and glory and shame:
Vain wisdom all, and false philosophy!—
Yet, with a pleasing sorcery, could charm
Pain for a while or anguish, and excite
Fallacious hope, or arm the obdured breast
With stubborn patience as with triple steel.
Another part, in squadrons and gross<sup>6</sup> bands,
On bold adventure to discover wide
That dismal world, if any clime perhaps Might yield them easier habitation, bend Four ways their flying march, along the banks

Of four infernal rivers, that disgorge
Into the burning lake their baleful streams—
Abhorred Styx, the flood of deadly hate;
Sad Acheron of sorrow, black and deep;
Cocytus, named of lamentation loud
Heard on the rueful stream; fierce Phlegeton, Whose waves of torrent fire inflame with
rage.

Far off from these, a slow and silent stream,
Lethe, the river of oblivion, rolls
Her watery labyrinth, whereof who drinks Forthwith his former state and being forgets—

Forgets both joy and grief, pleasure and
pain.

Beyond this flood a frozen continent
Lies dark and wild, beat with perpetual storms

Of whirlwind and dire hail, which on firm land

<sup>1</sup>Large.

<sup>1</sup>Trumpets.

<sup>2</sup>I.e., the herald states the meaning of the trumpet blasts.

<sup>3</sup>Ride.

<sup>4</sup>Sky.

<sup>5</sup>Hercules. The robe is the poisoned shirt which his wife obtained from the centaur Nessus and sent to him
by his servant Lichas.

Thaws not, but gathers heap, and ruin seems
Of ancient pile; all else deep snow and ice,
A gulf profound as that Serbonian bog
Betwixt Damiata and Mount Casius old,<sup>1</sup> Where armies whole have sunk: the parching
air

Burns froze,<sup>2</sup> and cold performs the effect of
fire.

Thither, by harpy-footed Furies haled,
At certain revolutions all the damned
Are brought; and feel by turns the bitter
change

Of fierce extremes, extremes by change more
fierce,

From beds of raging fire to starve in ice
Their soft ethereal warmth, and there to pine Immovable, infixed, and frozen round
Periods of time—thence hurried back to fire.
They ferry over this Lethean sound
Both to and fro, their sorrow to augment,
And wish and struggle, as they pass, to
reach

• The tempting stream, with one small drop to lose

In sweet forgetfulness all pain and woe,
All in one moment, and so near the brink;
But Fate withstands, and, to oppose the attempt,

Medusa with Gorgonian terror guards
The ford, and of itself the water flies
All taste of living wight,<sup>3</sup> as once it fled
The lip of Tantalus. Thus roving on In confused march forlorn, the adventurous
bands,

With shuddering horror pale, and eyes
aghast,

Viewed first<sup>4</sup> their lamentable lot, and found No rest. Through many a dark and dreary
vale

They passed, and many a region dolorous,
O'er many a frozen, many a fiery Alp, Rocks, caves, lakes, fens, bogs, dens, and shades of death—

A universe of death, which God by curse
Created evil, for evil only good;
Where all life dies, death lives, and Nature
breeds,

Perverse, all monstrous, all prodigious things,
Abominable, inutterable, and worse

Than fables yet have feigned or fear conceived,

Gorgons, and Hydras, and Chimæras dire.

Meanwhile the Adversary of God and
Man,

Satan, with thoughts inflamed of highest
design,

Puts on swift wings, and toward the gates of Hell

Explores his solitary flight: sometimes
He scours the right hand coast, sometimes the
left;

Now shaves with level wing the deep, then soars

Up to the fiery concave towering high.

As when far off at sea a fleet descried

Hangs in the clouds, by equinoctial winds

Close sailing from Bengala, or the isles

Of Ternate and Tidore,<sup>5</sup> whence merchants
bring

Their spicy drugs; they on the trading flood,
Through the wide Ethiopian to the Cape,<sup>6</sup>

Ply stemming nightly toward the pole:<sup>7</sup> so
seemed

Far off the flying Fiend. At last appear Hell-bounds, high reaching to the horrid roof,

And thrice threefold the gates; three folds were brass,

Three iron, three of adamantine rock,
Impenetrable, impaled with circling fire,
Yet unconsumed. Before the gates there sat

On either side a formidable Shape,
The one seemed woman to the waist, and fair,

But ended foul in many a scaly fold,
Voluminous and vast—a serpent armed

With mortal sting. About her middle round
A cry<sup>8</sup> of Hell-hounds never-ceasing barked

With wide Cerberean mouths full loud, and rung

A hideous peal; yet, when they list, would creep,

If aught disturbed their noise, into her womb,
And kennel there; yet there still barked and howled

Within unseen. Far less abhorred<sup>9</sup> than
these

<sup>5</sup>Two of the Moluccas.

<sup>6</sup>Through the Indian Ocean to the Cape of Good Hope.

<sup>7</sup>The South Pole.

<sup>8</sup>Pack.

<sup>9</sup>Less to be abhorred.

<sup>1</sup>I. e., in Egypt.

<sup>2</sup>Frozen.

<sup>3</sup>Living being.

<sup>4</sup>Viewed for the first time.

Vexed Scylla, bathing in the sea that parts
Calabria from the hoarse Trinacrian shore;<sup>1</sup>
Nor uglier follow the night-hag, when, called
In secret, riding through the air she comes, Lured with the smell of infant blood, to dance

With Lapland witches,<sup>2</sup> while the laboring
moon

Eclipses at their charms. The other Shape—
If shape it might be called that shape had
none

Distinguishable in member, joint, or limb;
Or substance might be called that shadow
seemed,

For each seemed either—black it stood as
Night,

Fierce as ten Furies, terrible as Hell,
And shook a dreadful dart: what seemed his
head

The likeness of a kingly crown had on.
Satan was now at hand, and from his seat
The monster moving onward came as fast
With horrid strides; Hell trembled as he strode.

The undaunted Fiend what this might be admired<sup>3</sup>—

Admired, not feared (God and his Son except,

Created thing naught valued he nor shunned),

And with disdainful look thus first began:— “Whence and what art thou, execrable Shape,

That dar’st, though grim and terrible, advance

Thy miscreated front athwart my way To yonder gates? Through them I mean to pass,

That be assured, without leave asked of thee.
Retire; or taste thy folly, and learn by proof, Hell-born, not to contend with Spirits of
Heaven.”

To whom the Goblin,<sup>4</sup> full of wrath, replied:—

“Art thou that Traitor-Angel, art thou he,
Who first broke peace in Heaven and faith,
till then

Unbroken, and in proud rebellious arms

Drew after him the third part of Heaven’s
sons,

Conjured<sup>5</sup> against the Highest—for which both thou

And they, outcast from God, are here condemned

To waste eternal days in woe and pain?

And reckon’st thou thyself with Spirits of
Heaven,

Hell-doomed, and breath’st defiance here and
scorn,

Where I reign king, and, to enrage thee more, Thy king and lord? Back to thy punish-
ment,

False fugitive; and to thy speed add wings,
Lest with a whip of scorpions I pursue
Thy lingering, or with one stroke of this dart
Strange horror seize thee, and pangs unfelt
before.”

So spake the grisly Terror, and in shape,
So speaking and so threatening, grew tenfold
More dreadful and deform. On the other
side,

Incensed with indignation, Satan stood Unterrified, and like a comet burned,
That fires the length of Ophiuchus<sup>6</sup> huge
In the arctic sky, and from his horrid hair Shakes pestilence and war. Each at the head

Leveled his deadly aim; their fatal hands
No second stroke intend; and such a frown
Each cast at the other as when two black
clouds,

With heaven’s artillery fraught, come rattling on

Over the Caspian—then stand front to front
Hovering a space, till winds the signal blow
To join their dark encounter in mid-air.

So frowned the mighty combatants that
Hell

Grew darker at their frown; so matched they
stood;

For never but once more was either like
To meet so great a foe.<sup>7</sup> And now great deeds

Had been achieved, whereof all Hell had
rung,

Had not the snaky Sorceress, that sat
Fast by Hell-gate and kept the fatal key,

<sup>1</sup>The sea between Italy and Sicily.

<sup>2</sup>Lapland was believed to be a favorite home of witches.

<sup>3</sup>Wondered.

<sup>4</sup>I. e., demon, or fiend.

<sup>5</sup>Banded by oath.

<sup>6</sup>A large constellation.

<sup>7</sup>Christ (Cf. 1 Corinthians, xv, 26, and Hebrews, ii, 14).

Risen, and with hideous outcry rushed between.

"O father, what intends thy hand," she cried,

"Against thy only son? What fury, O son, Possesses thee to bend that mortal dart Against thy father's head? And know'st for whom;<sup>1</sup>

For him who sits above, and laughs the while At thee, ordained his drudge to execute Whate'er his wrath, which he calls justice, bids—

His wrath, which one day will destroy ye both!"

She spake, and at her words the hellish Pest

Forbore: then these to her Satan returned:—"So strange thy outcry, and thy words so strange

Thou interposest, that my sudden hand, Prevented, spares to tell thee yet by deeds What it intends, till first I know of thee

What thing thou art, thus double-formed, and why,

In this infernal vale first met, thou call'st Me father, and that phantasm call'st my son.

I know thee not, nor ever saw till now Sight more detestable than him and thee."

To whom thus the Portress of Hell-gate replied:—

"Hast thou forgot me, then; and do I seem Now in thine eye so foul?—once deemed so fair

In Heaven, when at the assembly, and in sight

Of all the Seraphim with thee combined In bold conspiracy against Heaven's King, All on a sudden miserable pain Surprised thee, dim thine eyes and dizzy swum

In darkness, while thy head flames thick and fast

Threw forth, till on the left side opening wide,

Likest to thee in shape and countenance bright,

Then shining heavenly fair, a goddess armed, Out of thy head I sprung. Amazement seized All the host of Heaven; back they recoiled afraid

At first, and called me Sin, and for a sign

<sup>1</sup>I. e., and though thou knowest for whom.

Portentous held me; but, familiar grown, I pleased, and with attractive graces won The most averse—thee chiefly, who, full oft Thyself in me thy perfect image viewing, Becam'st enamored; and such joy thou took'st

With me in secret that my womb conceived A growing burden. Meanwhile war arose, And fields were fought in Heaven: wherein remained

(For what could else?) to our Almighty Foe Clear victory; to our part loss and rout Through all the Empyrean. Down they fell, Driven headlong from the pitch of Heaven, down

Into this Deep; and in the general fall I also: at which time this powerful key Into my hands was given, with charge to keep

These gates for ever shut, which none can pass

Without my opening. Pensive here I sat Alone; but long I sat not, till my womb, Pregnant by thee, and now excessive grown, Prodigious motion felt and rueful throes.

At last this odious offspring whom thou seest, Thine own begotten, breaking violent way, Tore through my entrails, that, with fear and pain

Distorted, all my nether shape thus grew Transformed: but he my inbred enemy Forth issued, brandishing his fatal dart, Made to destroy. I fled, and cried out Death!

Hell trembled at the hideous name, and sighed

From all her caves, and back resounded Death!

I fled; but he pursued (though more, it seems, Inflamed with lust than rage), and, swifter far,

Me overtook, his mother, all dismayed, And, in embraces forcible and foul Engendering with me, of that rape begot These yelling monsters, that with ceaseless cry

Surround me, as thou saw'st—hourly conceived

And hourly born, with sorrow infinite To me; for, when they list, into the womb That bred them they return, and howl, and gnaw

My bowels, their repast; then, bursting forth Afresh, with conscious terrors vex me round,

That rest or intermission none I find.
Before mine eyes in opposition sits Grim Death, my son and foe, who sets them
on,

And me, his parent, would full soon devour
For want of other prey, but that he knows
His end with mine involved, and knows that I

Should prove a bitter morsel, and his bane,
Whenever that shall be: so Fate pronounced.
But thou, O father, I forewarn thee, shun
His deadly arrow; neither vainly hope
To be invulnerable in those bright arms,
Though tempered heavenly; for that mortal
dint,<sup>1</sup>

Save he who reigns above, none can resist."

She finished; and the subtle Fiend his lore
Soon learned, now milder, and thus answered smooth:—

"Dear daughter—since thou claim'st me
for thy sire,

And my fair son here show'st me, the dear
pledge

Of dalliance had with thee in Heaven, and joys

Then sweet, now sad to mention, through dire change

Befallen us unforeseen, unthought-of—know,
I come no enemy, but to set free

From out this dark and dismal house of
pain

Both him and thee, and all the Heavenly host

Of Spirits that, in our just pretences<sup>2</sup> armed,
Fell with us from on high. From them I go

This uncouth<sup>3</sup> errand sole, and one for all Myself expose, with lonely steps to tread

The unfounded<sup>4</sup> Deep, and through the void immense

To search, with wandering quest, a place foretold

Should be—and, by concurring signs, ere now
Created vast and round—a place of bliss

In the purlieus<sup>5</sup> of Heaven; and therein placed

A race of upstart creatures, to supply
Perhaps our vacant room, though more removed,

<sup>1</sup>Blow.

<sup>2</sup>Claims.

<sup>3</sup>Unknown, strange.

<sup>4</sup>Without foundation.

<sup>5</sup>Suburbs.

Lest Heaven, surcharged with potent multitude,

Might hap to move new broils. Be this, or aught

Than this more secret, now designed, I haste
To know; and, this once known, shall soon return,

And bring ye to the place where thou and
Death

Shall dwell at ease, and up and down unseen
Wing silently the buxom<sup>6</sup> air, embalmed
With odors. There ye shall be fed and filled Immeasurably; all things shall be your prey."

He ceased; for both seemed highly pleased,
and Death

Grinned horrible a ghastly smile, to hear His famine should be filled, and blessed his
maw

Destined to that good hour. No less rejoiced

His mother bad, and thus bespake her sire:—

"The key of this infernal Pit, by due
And by command of Heaven's all-powerful
king,

I keep, by him forbidden to unlock
These adamant gates; against all force
Death ready stands to interpose his dart,
Fearless to be o'ermatched by living might.
But what owe I to his commands above,
Who hates me, and hath hither thrust me
down

Into this gloom of Tartarus profound,
To sit in hateful office here confined,
Inhabitant of Heaven and heavenly born—
Here in perpetual agony and pain,
With terrors and with clamors compassed
round

Of mine own brood, that on my bowels feed?
Thou art my father, thou my author, thou
My being gav'st me; whom should I obey
But thee? whom follow? Thou wilt bring me soon

To that new world of light and bliss, among
The gods who live at ease, where I shall reign
At thy right hand voluptuous, as beseems
Thy daughter and thy darling, without end."

Thus saying, from her side the fatal key,
Sad instrument of all our woe, she took;
And, towards the gate rolling her bestial
train,

Forthwith the huge portcullis<sup>7</sup> high up-drew,

<sup>6</sup>Yielding.

<sup>7</sup>Heavy grating sliding up and down in grooves placed at sides of gateway.

Which, but herself, not all the Stygian
Powers
Could once have moved; then in the key-hole turns
The intricate wards,<sup>1</sup> and every bolt and bar
Of massy iron or solid rock with ease
Unfastens. On a sudden open fly,
With impetuous recoil and jarring sound,
The infernal doors, and on their hinges grate
Harsh thunder, that the lowest bottom shook
Of Erebus. She opened; but to shut Excelled her power: the gates wide open
stood,
That with extended wings a bannered host,
Under spread ensigns marching, might pass
through
With horse and chariots ranked in loose array;
So wide they stood, and like a furnace-mouth
Cast forth redounding<sup>2</sup> smoke and ruddy flame.
Before their eyes in sudden view appear
The secrets of the hoary Deep—a dark Illimitable ocean, without bound,
Without dimension; where length, breadth,
and highth,
And time, and place, are lost; where eldest
Night
And Chaos, ancestors of Nature, hold Eternal anarchy, amidst the noise
Of endless wars, and by confusion stand.
For Hot, Cold, Moist, and Dry,<sup>3</sup> four champions fierce,
Strive here for mastery, and to battle bring
Their embryon atoms: they around the flag
Of each his faction, in their several clans,
Light-armed or heavy, sharp, smooth,
swift, or slow,
Swarm populous, unnumbered as the sands
Of Barca or Cyrene's<sup>4</sup> torrid soil,
Levied to side with warring winds, and poise
Their lighter wings. To whom these most adhere
He rules a moment: Chaos umpire sits,
And by decision more embroils the fray
By which he reigns: next him, high arbiter,
Chance governs all. Into this wild Abyss,
The womb of Nature, and perhaps her grave,

Of neither Sea, nor Shore, nor Air, nor Fire,<sup>5</sup>
But all these in their pregnant causes mixed
Confusedly, and which thus must ever fight,
Unless the Almighty Maker them ordain
His dark materials to create more worlds—
Into this wild Abyss the wary Fiend Stood on the brink of Hell and looked a while,
Pondering his voyage; for no narrow frith<sup>6</sup>
He had to cross. Nor was his ear less pealed
With noises loud and ruinous (to compare Great things with small) than when Bellona<sup>7</sup>
storms
With all her battering engines, bent to raze
Some capital city; or less than if this frame
Of Heaven were falling, and these elements
In mutiny had from her axle torn
The steadfast Earth. At last his sail-broad vans<sup>8</sup>
He spread for flight, and, in the surging
smoke
Uplifted, spurns the ground; thence many a
league,
As in a cloudy chair, ascending rides
Audacious; but, that seat soon failing, meets
A vast vacuity. All unawares, Fluttering his pennons vain, plumb-down he drops
Ten thousand fathom deep, and to this hour
Down had been falling, had not, by ill
chance,
The strong rebuff of some tumultuous cloud,
Instinct with fire and niter, hurried him
As many miles aloft. That fury stayed—
Quenched in a boggy Syrtis,<sup>9</sup> neither sea, Nor good dry land—nigh foundered, on he fares,
Treading the crude consistence, half on foot, Half flying; behoves him now both oar and sail.
As when a gryphon through the wilderness
With winged course, o'er hill or moory dale,
Pursues the Arimaspians,<sup>10</sup> who by stealth
Had from his wakeful custody purloined

<sup>5</sup>The four elements of the older physical science.

<sup>6</sup>Arm of the sea.

<sup>7</sup>Goddess of war.

<sup>8</sup>Wings.

<sup>9</sup>The Syrtes were two quicksands off the north coast of Africa.

<sup>10</sup>The Arimaspians were a one-eyed people of Scythia who, according to ancient writers, were continually fighting the griffins for the sake of the gold guarded by the latter.

<sup>1</sup>Notches and projections in key and lock.

<sup>2</sup>Rolling in billows.

<sup>3</sup>The four humors of medieval medicine.

<sup>4</sup>Cities of northern Africa.

The guarded gold; so eagerly the Fiend
O'er bog or steep, through strait, rough,
dense, or rare,
With head, hands, wings, or feet, pursues
his way,
And swims, or sinks, or wades, or creeps, or
flies.

At length a universal hubbub wild
Of stunning sounds, and voices all confused, Borne through the hollow dark, assaults his
ear

With loudest vehemence. Thither he plies
Undaunted, to meet there whatever Power
Or Spirit of the nethermost Abyss
Might in that noise reside, of whom to ask
Which way the nearest coast of darkness lies Bordering on light; when straight behold the
throne

Of Chaos, and his dark pavilion spread Wide on the wasteful Deep! With him enthroned

Sat sable-vested Night, eldest of things,
The consort of his reign; and by them stood
Orcus and Ades, and the dreaded name
Of Demogorgon; Rumor next, and Chance,
And Tumult, and Confusion, all embroiled, And Discord with a thousand various mouths.

To whom Satan, turning boldly, thus:— “Ye Powers

And Spirits of this nethermost Abyss,
Chaos and ancient Night, I come no spy
With purpose to explore or to disturb
The secrets of your realm; but, by constraint
Wandering this darksome desert, as my way Lies through your spacious empire up to
light,

Alone and without guide, half lost, I seek,
What readiest path leads where your gloomy boundaries

Confine with Heaven; or, if some other place,
From your dominion won, the Ethereal King
Possesses lately, thither to arrive

I travel this profound. Direct my course:
Directed, no mean recompense it brings
To your behoof,<sup>1</sup> if I that region lost,
All usurpation thence expelled, reduce
To her original darkness and your sway
(Which is my present journey<sup>2</sup>), and once
more

Erect the standard there of ancient Night.

<sup>1</sup>Advantage.

<sup>2</sup>Work.

Yours be the advantage all, mine the revenge!”

Thus Satan; and him thus the Anarch old,
With faltering speech and visage incom-
posed,

Answered:—“I know thee, stranger, who thou art—

That mighty leading Angel, who of late Made head against Heaven's King, though overthrown.

I saw and heard; for such a numerous host Fled not in silence through the frightened Deep,
With ruin upon ruin, rout on rout,
Confusion worse confounded; and Heaven-
gates

Poured out by millions her victorious bands.
Pursued. I upon my frontiers here
Keep residence; if all I can will serve
That little which is left so to defend, Encroached on still through our intestine
broils

Weakening the scepter of old Night: first,
Hell,

Your dungeon, stretching far and wide beneath,

Now lately Heaven and Earth, another
world

Hung o'er my realm, linked in a golden chain
To that side Heaven from whence your legions fell!

If that way be your walk, you have not far;
So much the nearer danger. Go, and speed;
Havoc, and spoil, and ruin, are my gain.”

He ceased; and Satan stayed not to reply,
But, glad that now his sea should find a
shore,

With fresh alacrity and force renewed
Springs upward, like a pyramid of fire,
Into the wild expanse, and through the shock

Of fighting elements, on all sides round
Environed, wins his way; harder beset
And more endangered than when Argo<sup>3</sup>
passed

Through Bosphorus betwixt the justling rocks,<sup>4</sup>

Or when Ulysses on the larboard shunned
Charybdis, and by the other whirlpool steered.

So he with difficulty and labor hard Moved on. With difficulty and labor he;

<sup>3</sup>The boat in which Jason went to Colchis for the golden fleece.

<sup>4</sup>The Symplegades, at the entrance of the Black Sea.

But, he once passed, soon after, when Man fell,

Strange alteration! Sin and Death amain,<sup>1</sup>
Following his track (such was the will of Heaven)

Paved after him a broad and beaten way
Over the dark Abyss, whose boiling gulf
Tamely endured a bridge of wondrous length,
From Hell continued, reaching the utmost Orb<sup>2</sup>

Of this frail World; by which the Spirits perverse

With easy intercourse pass to and fro
To tempt or punish mortals, except whom
God and good Angels guard by special grace.

But now at last the sacred influence
Of light appears, and from the walls of Heaven

Shoots far into the bosom of dim Night
A glimmering dawn. Here Nature first begins

Her farthest verge, and Chaos to retire,
As from her outmost works, a broken foe,
With tumult less and with less hostile din;
That<sup>3</sup> Satan with less toil, and now with ease,

Wafts on the calmer wave by dubious light,
And, like a weather-beaten vessel, holds<sup>4</sup>
Gladly the port, though shrouds and tackle
torn;

Or in the emptier waste, resembling air,
Weighs his spread wings, at leisure to behold
Far off the empyreal Heaven, extended wide
In circuit, undetermined square or round,
With opal towers and battlements adorned
Of living sapphire, once his native seat,
And, fast by, hanging in a golden chain,
This pendent World, in bigness as a star
Of smallest magnitude close by the moon.
Thither, full fraught with mischievous revenge,

Accursed, and in a curséd hour, he hies.

BOOK III

THE ARGUMENT

God, sitting on his throne, sees Satan flying towards this World, then newly created; shows him to the Son, who sat at his right hand; fore-

<sup>1</sup>In great haste.

<sup>2</sup>The outermost of the concentric spheres surrounding the earth.

<sup>3</sup>So that.

<sup>4</sup>Makes for.

tells the success of Satan in perverting mankind; clears his own justice and wisdom from all imputation, having created Man free, and able enough to have withstood his Tempter; yet declares his purpose of grace towards him, in regard he fell not of his own malice, as did Satan, but by him seduced. The Son of God renders praises to his Father for the manifestation of his gracious purpose towards Man: but God again declares that grace cannot be extended towards Man without the satisfaction of divine justice; Man hath offended the majesty of God by aspiring to Godhead, and therefore, with all his progeny, devoted to death, must die, unless some one can be found sufficient to answer for his offence, and undergo his punishment. The Son of God freely offers himself a ransom for Man: the Father accepts him, ordains his incarnation, pronounces his exaltation above all Names in Heaven and Earth; commands all the Angels to adore him.
They obey, and, hymning to their harps in full choir, celebrate the Father and the Son.
Meanwhile Satan alights upon the bare convex of this World's outermost orb; where wandering he finds a place since called the Limbo of Vanity; what persons and things fly up thither:
thence comes to the gate of Heaven, described ascending by stairs, and the waters above the firmament that flow about it. His passage thence to the orb of the Sun: he finds there Uriel, the regent of that orb, but first changes himself into the shape of a meaner Angel, and, pretending a zealous desire to behold the new Creation, and Man whom God had placed here, inquires of him the place of his habitation, and is directed: alights first on Mount Niphates.

BOOK IV

THE ARGUMENT

SATAN, now in prospect of Eden, and nigh the place where he must now attempt the bold enterprise which he undertook alone against God and Man, falls into many doubts with himself, and many passions—fear, envy, and despair; but at length confirms himself in evil;
journeys on to Paradise, whose outward prospect and situation is described; overleaps the bounds; sits, in the shape of a cormorant, on the Tree of Life, as highest in the Garden, to look about him. The Garden described;
Satan's first sight of Adam and Eve; his wonder at their excellent form and happy state, but with resolution to work their fall; overhears their discourse; thence gathers that the Tree of Knowledge was forbidden them to eat of under penalty of death, and thereon intends to found his temptation by seducing them to transgress; then leaves them a while, to know

further of their state by some other means. Meanwhile Uriel, descending on a sunbeam, warns Gabriel, who had in charge the gate of Paradise, that some evil Spirit has escaped the Deep, and passed at noon by his Sphere, in the shape of a good Angel, down to Paradise, discovered after by his furious gestures in the mount. Gabriel promises to find him ere morning. Night coming on, Adam and Eve discourse of going to their rest; their bower described; their evening worship. Gabriel, drawing forth his bands of night-watch to walk the rounds of Paradise, appoints two strong Angels to Adam's bower, lest the evil Spirit should be there doing some harm to Adam or Eve sleeping; there they find him at the ear of Eve, tempting her in a dream, and bring him, though unwilling, to Gabriel; by whom questioned, he scornfully answers; prepares resistance; but, hindered by a sign from Heaven, flies out of Paradise.

O FOR that warning voice, which he who saw
The Apocalypse heard cry in Heaven aloud,<sup>1</sup>
Then when the Dragon, put to second rout,
Came furious down to be revenged on men,
Woe to the inhabitants on Earth! that now, While time was, our first parents had been warned

The coming of their secret foe, and scaped,
Haply so scaped, his mortal snare! For now Satan, now first inflamed with rage, came
down,

The tempter, ere the accuser, of mankind,<sup>1</sup>
To wreak<sup>2</sup> on innocent frail Man his loss
Of that first battle, and his flight to Hell.
Yet not rejoicing in his speed, though bold
Far off and fearless, nor with cause to boast,
Begins his dire attempt; which, nigh the birth
Now rolling, boils in his tumultuous breast,
And like a devilish engine back recoils
Upon himself. Horror and doubt distract His troubled thoughts, and from the bottom stir

The hell within him; for within him Hell
He brings, and round about him, nor from
Hell

One step, no more than from himself, can fly
By change of place. Now conscience wakes despair

That slumbered; wakes the bitter memory
Of what he was, what is, and what must be

Worse; of worse deeds worse sufferings must ensue!

Sometimes towards Eden, which now in his view

Lay pleasant, his grieved look he fixes sad;
Sometimes towards Heaven and the full-blazing Sun,

Which now sat high in his meridan tower:
Then, much revolving, thus in sighs began:—

“O thou that, with surpassing glory
crowned,

Look'st from thy sole dominion like the god
Of this new World—at whose sight all the stars

Hide their diminished heads—to thee I call,
But with no friendly voice, and add thy
name,

O Sun, to tell thee how I hate thy beams,
That bring to my remembrance from what
state

I fell, how glorious once above thy sphere,<sup>3</sup>
Till pride and worse ambition threw me
down,

Warring in Heaven against Heaven's matchless King!

Ah, wherefore? He deserved no such return
From me, whom he created what I was
In that bright eminence, and with his good Upbraided none; nor was his service hard.
What could be less than to afford him praise,
The easiest recompense, and pay him thanks,
How due! Yet all his good proved ill in me,
And wrought but malice. Lifted up so high,
I sdained<sup>4</sup> subjection, and thought one step higher

Would set me highest, and in a moment quit
The debt immense of endless gratitude,
So burdensome, still paying, still to owe;
Forgetful what from him I still received;
And understood not that a grateful mind
By owing owes not, but still pays, at once Indebted and discharged—what burden
then?

Oh, had his powerful destiny ordained
Me some inferior Angel, I had stood
Then happy; no unbounded hope had raised Ambition. Yet why not? Some other
Power

As great might have aspired, and me, though mean,

<sup>1</sup>See Revelation, xii, 7-12.

<sup>2</sup>To avenge.

<sup>3</sup>The sphere in which the sun was fixed, the fourth of the spheres around the earth.

<sup>4</sup>Disdained.

Drawn to his part. But other Powers as great

Fell not, but stand unshaken, from within
Or from without to<sup>1</sup> all temptations armed!
Hadst thou the same free will and power to stand?

Thou hadst. Whom hast thou then, or what, to accuse,

But Heaven's free love dealt equally to all?
Be then his love accursed, since, love or hate
To me alike it deals eternal woe.

Nay, cursed be thou; since against his thy will

Chose freely what it now so justly rues
Me miserable! which way shall I fly
Infinite wrath and infinite despair?

Which way I fly is Hell; myself am Hell,
And, in the lowest deep, a lower deep
Still threatening to devour me opens wide,
To which the Hell I suffer seems a Heaven.
O, then, at last relent! Is there no place
Left for repentance, none for pardon left?

None left but by submission; and that word
Disdain forbids me, and my dread of shame
Among the Spirits beneath, whom I seduced
With other promises and other vaunts
Than to submit, boasting I could subdue
The Omnipotent. Ay me! they little know
How dearly I abide that boast so vain,
Under what torments inwardly I groan.

While they adore me on the throne of Hell,
With diadem and scepter high advanced,
The lower still I fall, only supreme
In misery: such joy ambition finds!

But say I could repent, and could obtain,
By act of grace, my former state; how soon
Would highth recall high thoughts, how soon
unsay

What feigned submission swore! Ease would recant

Vows made in pain, as violent and void
(For never can true reconciliation grow
Where wounds of deadly hate have pierced so deep);

Which would but lead me to a worse relapse
And heavier fall: so should I purchase dear Short intermission, bought with double
smart.

This knows my Punisher; therefore as far
From granting he, as I from begging, peace.
All hope excluded thus, behold, instead
Of us, outcast, exiled, his new delight,

Mankind, created, and for him this World!
So farewell hope, and, with hope, farewell
fear,

Farewell remorse! All good to me is lost;
Evil, be thou my Good: by thee at least Divided empire with Heaven's King I hold,
By thee, and more than half perhaps will
reign;

As Man ere long, and this new World, shall
know."

Thus while he spake, each passion dimmed
his face,

Thrice changed with pale—ire, envy, and
despair;

Which marred his borrowed visage, and betrayed

Him counterfeit, if any eye beheld:
For Heavenly minds from such distempers foul

Are ever clear. Whereof he soon aware Each perturbation smoothed with outward calm,

Artificer of fraud; and was the first
That practised falsehood under saintly show, Deep malice to conceal, couched<sup>2</sup> with revenge:

Yet not enough had practised to deceive
Uriel, once warned; whose eye pursued him
down

The way he went, and on the Assyrian
mount<sup>3</sup>

Saw him disfigured, more than could befall Spirit of happy sort: his gestures fierce
He marked and mad demeanor, then alone,
As he supposed, all unobserved, unseen.

So on he fares, and to the border comes
Of Eden, where delicious Paradise,<sup>4</sup>
Now nearer, crowns with her enclosure green,
As with a rural mound, the champain head<sup>5</sup>
Of a steep wilderness, whose hairy sides
With thicker overgrown, grotesque and wild,
Access denied; and overhead up-grew Insuperable highth of loftiest shade,
Cedar, and pine, and fir, and branching palm,
A sylvan scene, and, as the ranks ascend
Shade above shade, woody theater Of stateliest view. Yet higher than their tops

<sup>2</sup>Coupled.

<sup>3</sup>Mount Niphates.

<sup>4</sup>Eden is the whole region where man was destined first to dwell; Paradise is the Garden situated on the eastern side of this region.

<sup>5</sup>The level table-land at the summit.

<sup>1</sup>Against.

The verdurous wall of Paradise up-sprung;
Which to our general sire gave prospect large
Into his nether empire neighboring round.
And higher than that wall a circling row
Of goodliest trees, loaden with fairest fruit,
Blossoms and fruits at once of golden hue,
Appeared, with gay enameled colors mixed;
On which the sun more glad impressed his beams

Than in fair evening cloud, or humid bow,
When God hath showered the earth: so lovely seemed

That landscape. And of pure now purer air
Meets his approach, and to the heart inspires
Vernal delight and joy, able to drive
All sadness but despair. Now gentle gales,
Fanning their odoriferous wings, dispense Native perfumes, and whisper whence they stole

Those balmy spoils. As, when to them who sail

Beyond the Cape of Hope, and now are past Mozambique, off at sea north-east winds blow

Sabean odors<sup>1</sup> from the spicy shore
Of Araby the Blest, with such delay
Well pleased they slack their course, and many a league

Cheered with the grateful smell old Ocean smiles;

So entertained those odorous sweets the Fiend

Who came their bane, though with them better pleased

Than Asmodæus with the fishy fume
That drove him, though enamored, from the spouse

Of Tobit's son, and with a vengeance sent From Media post to Egypt, there fast bound.<sup>2</sup>

Now to the ascent of that steep savage hill
Satan had journeyed on, pensive and slow;
But further way found none; so thick entwined,

As one continued brake, the undergrowth
Of shrubs and tangling bushes had perplexed
All path of man or beast that passed that
way.

One gate there only was, and that looked east
On the other side. Which when the Arch-Felon saw,

Due entrance he disdained, and, in contempt,

At one slight bound high overleaped all
bound

Of hill or highest wall, and sheer within Lights on his feet. As when a prowling wolf, Whom hunger drives to seek new haunt for
prey,

Watching where shepherds pen their flocks
at eve,

In hurdled cotes amid the field secure,
Leaps o'er the fence with ease into the fold;

Or as a thief, bent to unhoard the cash
Of some rich burgher, whose substantial doors,

Cross-barred and bolted fast, fear no assault,
In at the window climbs, or o'er the tiles;

So clomb this first grand Thief into God's
fold:

So since into his Church lewd hirelings climb.
Thence up he flew, and on the Tree of Life,

The middle tree and highest there that grew,
Sat like a cormorant; yet not true life

Thereby regained, but sat devising death
To them who lived; nor on the virtue thought

Of that life-giving plant, but only used For prospect, what well used had been the

pledge
Of immortality. So little knows
Any, but God alone, to value right

The good before him, but perverts best things
To worst abuse, or to their meanest use.

Beneath him, with new wonder, now he views,

To all delight of human sense exposed,
In narrow room Nature's whole wealth; yea,

more!—

A Heaven on Earth: for blissful Paradise
Of God the garden was, by him in the east
Of Eden planted. Eden stretched her line

From Auran eastward to the royal towers
Of great Seleucia, built by Grecian kings,

Or where the sons of Eden long before
Dwelt in Telassar.<sup>3</sup> In this pleasant soil

His far more pleasant garden God ordained.
Out of the fertile ground he caused to grow

All trees of noblest kind for sight, smell,
taste;

And all amid them stood the Tree of Life,
High eminent, blooming ambrosial fruit

Of vegetable gold; and next to life,

<sup>1</sup>From Saba, a city of Arabia Felix.

<sup>2</sup>This story is told in the Book of Tobit, in the Apocrypha.

<sup>3</sup>Auran is a part of Syria, south of Damascus; Telassar (later Seleucia) is on the Tigris, near the modern Bagdad.

Our death, the Tree of Knowledge, grew fast by—
Knowledge of good, bought dear by knowing
ill.

Southward through Eden went a river large, Nor changed his course, but through the shaggy hill

Passed underneath ingulfed; for God had thrown

That mountain, as his garden-mold, high raised

Upon the rapid current, which, through veins
Of porous earth with kindly thirst up-drawn,
Rose a fresh fountain, and with many a rill
Watered the garden; thence united fell Down the steep glade, and met the nether
flood,

Which from his darksome passage now appears,

And now, divided into four main streams,
Runs diverse, wandering many a famous realm

And country whereof here needs no account;
But rather to tell how, if Art could tell How, from that sapphire fount the crispéd
brooks,

Rolling on orient pearl and sands of gold,
With mazy error<sup>1</sup> under pendent shades
Ran nectar, visiting each plant, and fed
Flowers worthy of Paradise, which not nice
Art

In beds and curious knots, but Nature boon<sup>2</sup> Poured forth profuse on hill, and dale, and
plain,

Both where the morning sun first warmly
smote

The open field, and where the unpierced
shade

Imbrowned the noontide bowers. Thus was
this place,

A happy rural seat of various view:
Groves whose rich trees wept odorous gums
and balm;

Others whose fruit, burnished with golden rind,

Hung amiable<sup>3</sup>—Hesperian fables true,
If true, here only—and of delicious taste.

Betwixt them lawns, or level downs, and flocks

Grazing the tender herb, were interposed,

Or palmy hillock; or the flowery lap
Of some irriguous<sup>4</sup> valley spread her store, Flowers of all hue, and without thorn the
rose.

Another side, umbrageous grots and caves
Of cool recess, o'er which the mantling vine Lays forth her purple grape, and gently creeps

Luxuriant; meanwhile murmuring waters fall
Down the slope hills dispersed, or in a lake,
That to the fringed bank with myrtle
crowned

Her crystal mirror holds, unite their streams.
The birds their choir apply;<sup>5</sup> airs, vernal airs,
Breathing the smell of field and grove, attune
The trembling leaves, while universal Pan,
Knit with the Graces and the Hours in dance,
Led on the eternal Spring. Not that fair field

Of Enna,<sup>6</sup> where Proserpin gathering flowers,
Herself a fairer flower, by gloomy Dis
Was gathered—which cost Ceres all that
pain

To seek her through the world—nor that sweet grove

Of Daphne,<sup>7</sup> by Orontes and the inspired Castalian spring, might with this Paradise
Of Eden strive; nor that Nyseian isle,<sup>8</sup>
Girt with the river Triton, where old Cham, Whom Gentiles Ammon call and Libyan
Jove,

Hid Amalthea, and her florid son,
Young Bacchus, from his stepdame Rhea's
eye;

Nor, where Abassin kings their issue guard, Mount Amara<sup>9</sup> (though this by some supposed

True Paradise) under the Ethiop line<sup>10</sup>
By Nilus' head, enclosed with shining rock,
A whole day's journey high, but wide remote
From this Assyrian garden, where the Fiend
Saw undelighted all delight, all kind
Of living creatures, new to sight and strange.
Two of far nobler shape, erect and tall,
God-like erect, with native honor clad

<sup>4</sup>Well-watered.

<sup>5</sup>Join to (the music of the streams and the air).

<sup>6</sup>In Sicily.

<sup>7</sup>Near Antioch in Syria.

<sup>8</sup>In the lake Tritonis, in northern Africa.

<sup>9</sup>A fabled mountain in central Abyssinia, on whose summit were palaces in which the Abyssinian princes were educated in seclusion from the world.

<sup>10</sup>The tropic of Cancer.

<sup>1</sup>Wanderings.

<sup>2</sup>Bounteous.

<sup>3</sup>Lovely.

In naked majesty, seemed lords of all,
 And worthy seemed; for in their looks divine
 The image of their glorious Maker shone,
 Truth, wisdom, sanctitude severe and pure—
 Severe, but in true filial freedom placed,
 Whence true authority in men: though both
 Not equal, as their sex not equal seemed;
 For contemplation he and valor formed,
 For softness she and sweet attractive grace;
 He for God only, she for God in him.
 His fair large front and eye sublime declared
 Absolute rule; and hyacinthine<sup>1</sup> locks
 Round from his parted forelock manly hung Clustering, but not beneath his shoulders broad:

She, as a veil down to the slender waist,
 Her unadorned golden tresses wore Disheveled, but in wanton ringlets waved
 As the vine curls her tendrils—which implied
 Subjection, but required with gentle sway,
 And by her yielded, by him best received
 Yielded,<sup>2</sup> with coy submission, modest pride,
 And sweet, reluctant, amorous delay.
 Nor those mysterious parts were then concealed;

Then was not guilty shame. Dishonest
 shame

Of Nature's works, honor dishonorable,
 Sin-bred, how have ye troubled all mankind
 With shows instead, mere shows of seeming
 pure,

And banished from man's life his happiest
 life,

Simplicity and spotless innocence!
 So passed they naked on, nor shunned the
 sight

Of God or Angel; for they thought no ill:
 So hand in hand they passed, the loveliest pair

That ever since in love's embraces met—
 Adam the goodliest man of men since born
 His sons; the fairest of her daughters Eve.
 Under a tuft of shade that on a green Stood whispering soft, by a fresh fountain-
 side,

They sat them down; and, after no more toil
 Of their sweet gardening labor than sufficed
 To recommend cool Zephyr, and make ease
 More easy, wholesome thirst and appetite
 More grateful, to their supper-fruits they fell—

<sup>1</sup>I. e., dark and curling.

<sup>2</sup>I. e., when so yielded.

Nectarine fruits, which the compliant boughs
 Yielded them, sidelong as they sat recline
 On the soft downy bank damasked with flowers.

The savory pulp they chew, and in the rind,
 Still as they thirsted, scoop the brimming
 stream;

Nor gentle purpose,<sup>3</sup> nor endearing smiles
 Wanted, nor youthful dalliance, as beseems
 Fair couple linked in happy nuptial league,
 Alone as they. About them frisking played
 All beasts of the earth, since wild, and of all chase

In wood or wilderness, forest or den.

Sporting the lion ramped,<sup>4</sup> and in his paw
 Dandled the kid; bears, tigers, ounces,
 pards,<sup>5</sup>

Gamboled before them; the unwieldy elephant,

To make them mirth, used all his might, and wreathed

His lithe proboscis; close the serpent sly,
 Insinuating, wove with Gordian twine
 His braided train, and of his fatal guile
 Gave proof unheeded. Others on the grass Couched, and, now filled with pasture, gazing sat,

Or bedward ruminating;<sup>6</sup> for the sun,
 Declined, was hastening now with prone career

To the Ocean Isles, and in the ascending scale
 Of Heaven the stars that usher evening rose:
 When Satan, still in gaze as first he stood,
 Scarce thus at length failed speech recovered sad:—

“O Hell! what do mine eyes with grief
 behold?

Into our room of bliss thus high advanced Creatures of other mold—Earth-born perhaps,

Not Spirits, yet to Heavenly Spirits bright Little inferior—whom my thoughts pursue
 With wonder, and could love; so lively shines
 In them divine resemblance, and such grace
 The hand that formed them on their shape hath poured.

Ah! gentle pair, ye little think how nigh
 Your change approaches, when all these delights

<sup>3</sup>Conversation.

<sup>4</sup>Rushed about.

<sup>5</sup>Panthers, leopards.

<sup>6</sup>Chewing the cud.

Will vanish, and deliver ye to woe—
 More woe, the more your taste is now of joy:
 Happy, but for so happy ill secured
 Long to continue, and this high seat, your
     Heaven,
 Ill fenced for Heaven to keep out such a foe
 As now is entered; yet no purposed foe
 To you, whom I could pity thus forlorn, Though I unpitied. League with you I seek,
 And mutual amity, so strait, so close,
 That I with you must dwell, or you with me, Henceforth. My dwelling, haply, may not
     please,
 Like this fair Paradise, your sense; yet such Accept your maker's work; he gave it me,
 Which I as freely give. Hell shall unfold,
 To entertain you two, her widest gates,
 And send forth all her kings; there will be
     room,
 Not like these narrow limits, to receive
 Your numerous offspring; if no better place,
 Thank him who puts me, loath, to this revenge
 On you, who wrong me not, for him who wronged.
 And, should I at your harmless innocence
 Melt, as I do, yet public reason just—
 Honor and empire with revenge enlarged
 By conquering this new World—compels me
     now
 To do what else, though damned, I should abhor.”
 So spake the Fiend, and with necessity,
 The tyrant's plea, excused his devilish deeds.
 Then from his lofty stand on that high tree
 Down he alights among the sportful herd
 Of those four-footed kinds, himself now one,
 Now other, as their shape served best his end
 Nearer to view his prey, and, unespied,
 To mark what of their state he more might learn
 By word or action marked. About them
     round
 A lion now he stalks with fiery glare;
 Then as a tiger, who by chance hath spied
 In some purlieu<sup>1</sup> two gentle fawns at play, Straight crouches close; then, rising, changes
     off
 His couchant watch, as one who chose his
     ground,
 Whence rushing he might surest seize them
     both

Griped in each paw: when Adam, first of men,
 To first of women, Eve, thus moving speech, Turned him<sup>2</sup> all ear to hear new utterance
     flow:—

“Sole partner and sole part of all these
     joys,
 Dearer thyself than all, needs must the Power
 That made us, and for us this ample World,
 Be infinitely good, and of his good
 As liberal and free as infinite;
 That raised us from the dust, and placed us
     here

In all this happiness, who at his hand
 Have nothing merited, nor can perform
 Aught whereof he hath need; he who requires From us no other service than to keep
 This one, this easy charge—of all the trees
 In Paradise that bear delicious fruit
 So various, not to taste that only Tree
 Of Knowledge, planted by the Tree of Life;
 So near grows Death to Life, whate'er Death
     is—

Some dreadful thing no doubt; for well thou
     know'st

God hath pronounced it Death to taste that Tree:

The only sign of our obedience left
 Among so many signs of power and rule
 Conferred upon us, and dominion given Over all other creatures that possess Earth, air, and sea. Then let us not think hard

One easy prohibition, who enjoy Free leave so large to all things else, and
     choice

Unlimited of manifold delights;
 But let us ever praise him, and extol
 His bounty, following our delightful task,
 To prune these growing plants, and tend
     these flowers;

Which, were it toilsome, yet with thee were
     sweet.”

To whom thus Eve replied:—“O thou for whom

And from whom I was formed flesh of thy flesh,

And without whom am to no end, my guide
 And head! what thou hast said is just and
     right.

For we to him, indeed, all praises owe,
 And daily thanks—I chiefly, who enjoy

<sup>1</sup>Tract on the border of a forest.

<sup>2</sup>I. e., Satan.

So far the happier lot, enjoying thee
 Pre-eminent by so much odds, while thou
 Like consort to thyself canst nowhere find.
 That day I oft remember, when from sleep
 I first awaked, and found myself reposed,
 Under a shade, on flowers, much wondering
 where
 And what I was, whence thither brought, and
 how.
 Not distant far from thence a murmuring
 sound
 Of waters issued from a cave, and spread
 Into a liquid plain; then stood unmoved, Pure as the expanse of Heaven. I thither
 went
 With unexperienced thought, and laid me
 down
 On the green bank, to look into the clear
 Smooth lake, that to me seemed another sky.
 As I bent down to look, just opposite
 A shape within the watery gleam appeared,
 Bending to look on me. I started back,
 It started back; but pleased I soon returned,
 Pleased it returned as soon with answering
 looks
 Of sympathy and love. There I had fixed Mine eyes till now, and pined with vain
 desire,
 Had not a voice thus warned me: 'What thou seest,
 What there thou seest, fair creature, is thyself;
 With thee it came and goes: but follow me,
 And I will bring thee where no shadow stays Thy coming, and thy soft embraces—he Whose image thou art; him thou shalt enjoy
 Inseparably thine; to him shalt bear
 Multitudes like thyself, and thence be called Mother of human race.' What could I do,
 But follow straight, invisibly thus led?
 Till I espied thee, fair, indeed, and tall,
 Under a platane;<sup>1</sup> yet methought less fair,
 Less winning soft, less amiably mild,
 Than that smooth watery image. Back I
 turned;
 Thou, following, cried'st aloud, 'Return,
 fair Eve; Whom fliest thou? Whom thou fliest, of him thou art,
 His flesh, his bone; to give thee being I lent
 Out of my side to thee, nearest my heart,
 Substantial life, to have thee by my side

Henceforth an individual<sup>2</sup> solace dear:
 Part of my soul I seek thee, and thee claim
 My other half.' With that thy gentle hand Seized mine: I yielded, and from that time
 see

How beauty is excelled by manly grace
 And wisdom, which alone is truly fair."

So spake our general mother, and, with
 eyes

Of conjugal attraction unreproved,<sup>3</sup>
 And meek surrender, half-embracing leaned
 On our first father; half her swelling breast
 Naked met his, under the flowing gold
 Of her loose tresses hid. He, in delight
 Both of her beauty and submissive charms,
 Smiled with superior love, as Jupiter
 On Juno smiles when he impregns the clouds
 That shed May flowers, and pressed her matron lip

With kisses pure. Aside the Devil turned
 For envy; yet with jealous leer malign Eyed them askance, and to himself thus plained<sup>4</sup>:—

"Sight hateful, sight tormenting! Thus these two,

Imparadised in one another's arms,
 The happier Eden, shall enjoy their fill
 Of bliss on bliss; while I to Hell am thrust,
 Where neither joy nor love, but fierce desire,
 Among our other torments not the least,
 Still unfulfilled, with pain of longing pines!
 Yet let me not forget what I have gained
 From their own mouths. All is not theirs, it seems;

One fatal tree there stands, of Knowledge
 called,

Forbidden them to taste. Knowledge for-bidden?

Suspicious, reasonless! Why should their
 Lord

Envy them that? Can it be sin to know?
 Can it be death? And do they only stand
 By ignorance? Is that their happy state,
 The proof of their obedience and their faith?
 O fair foundation laid whereon to build Their ruin! Hence I will excite their minds
 With more desire to know, and to reject
 Envious commands, invented with design
 To keep them low, whom knowledge might exalt

<sup>2</sup>Inseparable.

<sup>3</sup>Blameless.

<sup>4</sup>Complained.

<sup>1</sup>Plane-tree.

Equal with gods. Aspiring to be such,
They taste and die: what likelier can ensue?
But first with narrow search I must walk
round

This garden, and no corner leave unspied;
A chance but chance may lead where I may
meet

Some wandering Spirit of Heaven, by fountain-side,

Or in thick shade retired, from him to draw What further would be learned. Live while ye may,

Yet happy pair; enjoy, till I return,
Short pleasures; for long woes are to succeed!"

So saying, his proud step he scornful
turned,

But with sly circumspection, and began Through wood, through waste, o'er hill, o'er dale, his roam.

Meanwhile in utmost longitude,<sup>1</sup> where
Heaven

With earth and ocean meets, the setting Sun
Slowly descended, and with right aspect<sup>2</sup>

Against the eastern gate of Paradise
Leveled his evening rays. It was a rock
Of alabaster, piled up to the clouds, Conspicuous far, winding with one ascent Accessible from Earth, one entrance high;
The rest was craggy cliff, that overhung
Still as it rose, impossible to climb.

Betwixt these rocky pillars Gabriel sat,
Chief of the angelic guards, awaiting night;
About him exercised heroic games
The unarmed youth of Heaven; but night at
hand

Celestial armory, shields, helms, and spears, Hung high, with diamond flaming and with
gold.

Thither came Uriel, gliding through the even
On a sunbeam, swift as a shooting star
In autumn thwarts<sup>3</sup> the night, when vapors fired

Impress the air, and shows the mariner
From what point of his compass to beware
Impetuous winds. He thus began in haste:—

"Gabriel, to thee thy course by lot hath given

Charge and strict watch that to this happy
place

No evil thing approach or enter in.

This day at highth of noon came to my sphere

A Spirit, zealous, as he seemed, to know
More of the Almighty's works, and chiefly
Man,

God's latest image. I described his way
Bent all on speed, and marked his aery gait,
But in the mount that lies from Eden north,
Where he first lighted, soon discerned his looks

Alien from Heaven, with passions foul obscured.

Mine eye pursued him still, but under shade
Lost sight of him. One of the banished
crew,

I fear, hath ventured from the Deep, to raise
New troubles; him thy care must be to
find."

To whom the wingéd Warrior thus returned:—

"Uriel, no wonder if thy perfect sight,
Amid the Sun's bright circle where thou sitt'st,

See far and wide. In at this gate none pass
The vigilance here placed, but such as come Well known from Heaven; and since meridian hour

No creature thence. If Spirit of other sort,
So minded, have o'erleaped these earthy
bounds

On purpose, hard thou know'st it to exclude Spiritual substance with corporeal bar.
But, if within the circuit of these walks,
In whatsoever shape, he lurk of whom Thou tell'st, by morrow dawning I shall
know."

So promised he; and Uriel to his charge Returned on that bright beam, whose point
now raised

Bore him slope downward to the Sun, now
fallen

Beneath the Azores;<sup>4</sup> whether the Prime Orb,

Incredible how swift, had thither rolled
Diurnal, or this less volúbil<sup>5</sup> earth,

By shorter flight to the east, had left him
there

Arraying with reflected purple and gold
The clouds that on his western throne attend.

<sup>1</sup>I. e., in the extreme west.

<sup>2</sup>Directly in front.

<sup>3</sup>Shoots across.

<sup>4</sup>They are due west of Mesopotamia, the region Milton calls Eden.

<sup>5</sup>Rolling.

Now came still evening on, and twilight
gray

Had in her sober livery all things clad;
Silence accompanied; for beast and bird,
They to their grassy couch, these to their nests

Were slunk, all but the wakeful nightingale.
She all night long her amorous descant<sup>1</sup> sung:
Silence was pleased. Now glowed the firmament

With living sapphires; Hesperus,<sup>2</sup> that led
The starry host, rode brightest, till the moon,
Rising in clouded majesty, at length
Apparent queen, unveiled her peerless light,
And o'er the dark her silver mantle threw;
When Adam thus to Eve:—"Fair consort,
the hour

Of night, and all things now retired to rest,
Mind us of like repose; since God hath set
Labor and rest, as day and night, to men
Successive, and the timely dew of sleep,
Now falling with soft slumberous weight,
inclines

Our eye-lids. Other creatures all day long Rove idle, unemployed, and less need rest;
Man hath his daily work of body or mind
Appointed, which declares his dignity,
And the regard of Heaven on all his ways;
While other animals unactive range,
And of their doings God takes no account.
To-morrow, ere fresh morning streak the east
With first approach of light, we must be risen,

And at our pleasant labor, to reform
Yon flowery arbors, yonder alleys green,
Our walk at noon, with branches overgrown,
That mock our scant manuring,<sup>3</sup> and require More hands than ours to lop their wanton growth.

Those blossoms also, and those dropping gums,
That lie bestrewn, unsightly and unsmooth,
Ask riddance, if we mean to tread with ease.
Meanwhile, as Nature wills, night bids us
rest."

To whom thus Eve, with perfect beauty adorned:—

"My author and disposer, what thou bidd'st Unargued I obey. So God ordains:
God is thy law, thou mine: to know no more

Is woman's happiest knowledge, and her
praise.

With thee conversing, I forget all time,
All seasons, and their change; all please alike.
Sweet is the breath of morn, her rising sweet,
With charm<sup>4</sup> of earliest birds; pleasant the
sun,

When first on this delightful land he spreads
His orient beams, on herb, tree, fruit, and flower,

Glistening with dew; fragrant the fertile
earth

After soft showers; and sweet the coming-on
Of grateful evening mild; then silent night.
With this her solemn bird, and this fair
moon,

And these the gems of Heaven, her starry
train:

But neither breath of morn, when she ascends

With charm of earliest birds; nor rising sun
On this delightful land; nor herb, fruit, flower, Glistening with dew; nor fragrance after
showers;

Nor grateful evening mild; nor silent night,
With this her solemn bird; nor walk by moon,
Or glittering starlight, without thee is sweet.
But wherefore all night long shine these? for whom

This glorious sight, when sleep hath shut all
eyes?"

To whom our general ancestor replied:—
"Daughter of God and Man, accomplished
Eve,

Those have their course to finish round the earth

By morrow evening, and from land to land
In order, though to nations yet unborn,
Ministering light prepared, they set and rise;
Lest total darkness should by night regain
Her old possession, and extinguish life
In nature and all things; which these soft
fires

Not only enlighten, but with kindly heat
Of various influence foment and warm,
Temper or nourish, or in part shed down
Their stellar virtue on all kinds that grow
On earth,<sup>5</sup> made hereby apter to receive Fertilization from the Sun's more potent ray.
These, then, though unbeheld in deep of
night,

<sup>1</sup>Variations of theme.

<sup>2</sup>The evening star.

<sup>3</sup>Cultivating.

<sup>4</sup>Song.

<sup>5</sup>An astrological notion.

Shine not in vain. Nor think, though men were none,
 That Heaven would want spectators, God
 want praise.
 Millions of spiritual creatures walk the earth
 Unseen, both when we wake, and when we
 sleep:
 All these with ceaseless praise his works be-
 hold Both day and night. How often, from the steep
 Of echoing hill or thicket, have we heard
 Celestial voices to the midnight air,
 Sole, or responsive each to other's note,
 Singing their great Creator! Oft in bands
 While they keep watch, or nightly rounding walk,
 With heavenly touch of instrumental sounds
 In full harmonic number joined, their songs
 Divide the night,<sup>1</sup> and lift our thoughts to Heaven."
 Thus talking, hand in hand alone they passed
 On to their blissful bower. It was a place Chosen by the sovran Planter, when he framed
 All things to Man's delightful use. The roof
 Of thickest covert was inwoven shade,
 Laurel and myrtle, and what higher grew
 Of firm and fragrant leaf; on either side
 Acanthus, and each odorous bushy shrub, Fenced up the verdant wall; each beauteous
 flower,
 Iris all hues, roses, and jessamine, Reared high their flourished heads between,
 and wrought
 Mosaic; under foot the violet,
 Crocus, and hyacinth, with rich inlay Brodered the ground, more colored than with stone
 Of costliest emblem.<sup>2</sup> Other creature here,
 Beast, bird, insect, or worm, durst entertain;
 Such was their awe of Man. In shadier
 bower
 More sacred and sequestered, though but
 feigned,
 Pan or Sylvanus never slept, nor Nymph
 Nor Faunus haunted. Here, in close recess,<sup>3</sup>
 With flowers, garlands, and sweet-smelling herbs,

Espoused Eve decked her first nuptial bed,
 And heavenly choirs the hymenæan<sup>4</sup> sung,
 What day the genial Angel to our sire
 Brought her, in naked beauty more adorned,
 More lovely, than Pandora, whom the gods
 Endowed with all their gifts; and, O! too like
 In sad event, when, to the unwiser son
 Of Japhet<sup>5</sup> brought by Hermes, she ensnared
 Mankind with her fair looks, to be avenged
 On him who had stole Jove's authentic fire.

Thus at their shady lodge arrived, both
 stood,
 Both turned, and under open sky adored
 The God that made both sky, air, earth, and
 Heaven,
 Which they beheld, the moon's resplendent
 globe,

And starry pole:—"Thou also madest the
 night,
 Maker Omnipotent; and thou the day,
 Which we, in our appointed work employed,
 Have finished, happy in our mutual help
 And mutual love, the crown of all our bliss
 Ordained by thee; and this delicious place,
 For us too large, where thy abundance wants Partakers, and uncropped falls to the ground.
 But thou hast promised from us two a race
 To fill the earth, who shall with us extol
 Thy goodness infinite, both when we wake,
 And when we seek, as now, thy gift of sleep."

This said unanimous, and other rites
 Observing none, but adoration pure,
 Which God likes best, into their inmost
 bower
 Handed they went; and, eased the putting-
 off

These troublesome disguises which we wear, Straight side by side were laid; nor turned, I
 ween,

Adam from his fair spouse, nor Eve the rites
 Mysterious of connubial love refused:
 Whatever hypocrites austere talk
 Of purity, and place, and innocence,
 Defaming as impure what God declares Pure, and commands to some, leaves free to
 all.

Our Maker bids increase; who bids abstain
 But our destroyer, foe to God and Man?
 Hail, wedded Love, mysterious law, true
 source

<sup>4</sup>Nuptial hymn.

<sup>5</sup>Epimetheus, son of Iapetus, brother of Prometheus, who married Pandora. Prometheus was wiser in that he refused to marry her.

<sup>1</sup>Divide it into watches.

<sup>2</sup>I. e., mosaic pattern.

<sup>3</sup>Retirement.

Of human offspring, sole propriety<sup>1</sup>
 In Paradise of all things common else!
 By thee adulterous lust was driven from men
 Among the bestial herds to range; by thee,
 Founded in reason, loyal, just, and pure,
 Relations dear, and all the charities
 Of father, son, and brother, first were known.
 Far be it that I should write thee sin or blame
 Or think thee unbefitting holiest place,
 Perpetual fountain of domestic sweets,
 Whose bed is undefiled and chaste pronounced,
 Present, or past, assaints and patriarchs used.
 Here Love his golden shafts employs, here lights
 His constant lamp, and waves his purple
 wings,
 Reigns here and revels; not in the bought
 smile
 Of harlots—loveless, joyless, unendeared,
 Casual fruition; nor in court amours,
 Mixed dance, or wanton mask, or midnight
 ball,
 Or serenade, which the starved lover sings
 To his proud fair, best quitted with disdain.
 These, lulled by nightingales, embracing
 slept,
 And on their naked limbs the flowery roof
 Showered roses, which the morn repaired.
 Sleep on,
 Blest pair! and, O! yet happiest, if ye seek
 No happier state, and know to know no more!
 Now had Night measured with her shadowy cone<sup>2</sup>
 Half-way up-hill this vast sublunar vault,
 And from their ivory port the Cherubim Forth issuing, at the accustomed hour, stood armed
 To their night-watches in warlike parade;
 When Gabriel to his next in power thus
 spake:—
 “Uzziel, half these draw off, and coast the south
 With strictest watch; these other wheel the north:
 Our circuit meets full west.” As flame they
 part,
 Half wheeling to the shield, half to the spear.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup>Property—i. e., exclusive possession.

<sup>2</sup>The shadow which the earth throws into space is cone-shaped. The time of night indicated in the following line is midway between sunset and midnight.

<sup>3</sup>The shield-arm is the left, the spear-hand the right.

From these, two strong and subtle Spirits he called
 That near him stood, and gave them thus in charge:—

“Ithuriel and Zephon, with winged speed Search through this Garden; leave un-searched no nook;

But chiefly where those two fair creatures
 lodge,

Now laid perhaps asleep, secure of harm.
 This evening from the sun’s decline arrived
 Who tells of some infernal Spirit seen Hitherward bent (who could have thought?), escaped

The bars of Hell, on errand bad, no doubt:
 Such, where ye find, seize fast, and hither
 bring.”

So saying, on he led his radiant files,
 Dazzling the moon; these to the bower direct
 In search of whom they sought. Him there they found

Squat like a toad, close at the ear of Eve,
 Assaying by his devilish art to reach
 The organs of her fancy, and with them forge
 Illusions as he list, phantasms and dreams;
 Or if, inspiring<sup>4</sup> venom, he might taint
 The animal spirits, that from pure blood arise Like gentle breaths from rivers pure, thence
 raise

At least distempered, discontented thoughts,
 Vain hopes, vain aims, inordinate desires,
 Blown up with high conceits engendering
 pride.

Him thus intent Ithuriel with his spear
 Touched lightly; for no falsehood can endure
 Touch of celestial temper, but returns
 Of force to its own likeness. Up he starts, Discovered and surprised. As, when a spark Lights on a heap of nitrous powder, laid
 Fit for the tun, some magazine to store
 Against a rumored war, the smutty grain,
 With sudden blaze diffused, inflames the air;
 So started up, in his own shape, the Fiend.
 Back stepped those two fair Angels, half amazed

So sudden to behold the grisly King;
 Yet thus, unmoved with fear, accost him
 soon:—

“Which of those rebel Spirits adjudged to Hell

Com’st thou, escaped thy prison? and,
 transformed,

<sup>4</sup>Breathing in.

Why satt'st thou like an enemy in wait,
Here watching at the head of these that
sleep?"

"Know ye not, then," said Satan, filled
with scorn,

"Know ye not me? Ye knew me once no
mate

For you, there sitting where ye durst not soar!

Not to know me argues yourselves unknown,
The lowest of your throng; or, if ye know,
Why ask ye, and superfluous begin
Your message, like to end as much in vain?"

To whom thus Zephon, answering scorn
with scorn:—

"Think not, revolted Spirit, thy shape the
same,

Or undiminished brightness, to be known As when thou stood'st in Heaven upright and pure.

That glory then, when thou no more wast
good,

• Departed from thee; and thou resemblest
now

Thy sin and place of doom obscure and foul.
But come; for thou, be sure, shalt give account

To him who sent us, whose charge is to keep
This place inviolable, and these from harm."

So spake the Cherub; and his grave rebuke,

Severe in youthful beauty, added grace
Invincible. Abashed the Devil stood,
And felt how awful goodness is, and saw Virtue in her shape how lovely—saw, and pined

His loss; but chiefly to find here observed
His luster visibly impaired; yet seemed Undaunted. "If I must contend," said he,
"Best with the best—the sender, not the
sent;

Or all at once: more glory will be won,
Or less be lost." "Thy fear," said Zephon
bold,

"Will save us trial what the least can do Single against thee wicked, and thence weak."

The Fiend replied not, overcome with rage;
But, like a proud steed reined, went haughty
on,

Champing his iron curb. To strive or fly
He held it vain; awe from above had quelled
His heart, not else dismayed. Now drew they nigh

The western point, where those half-rounding guards

Just met, and, closing, stood in squadron
joined,

Awaiting next command. To whom their chief,

Gabriel, from the front thus called aloud:—

"O friends, I hear the tread of nimble feet Hasting this way, and now by glimpse discern

Ithuriel and Zephon through the shade;
And with them comes a third, of regal port,
But faded splendor wan, who by his gait
And fierce demeanor seems the Prince of Hell—

Not likely to part hence without contest.
Stand firm, for in his look defiance lours."

He scarce had ended, when those two approached,

And brief related whom they brought, where
found,

How busied, in what form and posture
couched.

To whom, with stern regard, thus Gabriel
spake:—

"Why hast thou, Satan, broke the bound's prescribed

To thy transgressions, and disturbed the charge

Of others, who approve not to transgress
By thy example, but have power and right
To question thy bold entrance on this place; Employed, it seems, to violate sleep, and
those

Whose dwelling God hath planted here in bliss?"

To whom thus Satan, with contemptuous
brow:—

"Gabriel, thou hadst in Heaven the esteem
of wise;

And such I held thee; but this question asked Puts me in doubt. Lives there who loves his pain?

Who would not, finding way, break loose
from Hell,

Though thither doomed? Thou wouldst thyself, no doubt,

And boldly venture to whatever place
Farthest from pain, where thou mightst hope to change

Torment with ease, and soonest recompense
Dole with delight; which in this place I
sought:

To thee no reason, who know'st only good,

But evil hast not tried. And wilt object
His will who bound us? Let him surer bar
His iron gates, if he intends our stay In that dark durance. Thus much what was asked:

The rest is true; they found me where they
say;

But that implies not violence or harm."

Thus he in scorn. The warlike Angel
moved,

Disdainfully half smiling, thus replied:—

"O loss of one in Heaven to judge of wise,
Since Satan fell, whom folly overthrew,
And now returns him from his prison scaped,
Gravely in doubt whether to hold them wise
Or not who ask what boldness brought him hither

Unlicensed from his bounds in Hell prescribed!

So wise he judges it to fly from pain

However,<sup>1</sup> and to scape his punishment!

So judge thou still, presumptuous, till the
wrath,

Which thou incurr'st by flying, meet thy
flight

Sevenfold, and scourge that wisdom back to Hell,

Which taught thee yet no better that no pain
Can equal anger infinite provoked.

But wherefore thou alone? Wherefore with
thee

Came not all Hell broke loose? Is pain to
them

Less pain, less to be fled? or thou than they Less hardy to endure? Courageous chief,

The first in flight from pain, hadst thou alleged

To thy deserted host this cause of flight,

Thou surely hadst not come sole fugitive."

To which the Fiend thus answered, frowning stern:—

"Not that I less endure, or shrink from pain, Insulting Angel! well thou knows't I stood

Thy fiercest,<sup>2</sup> when in battle to thy aid

The blasting volleyed thunder made all speed
And seconded thy else not dreaded spear.

But still thy words at random, as before,

Argue thy inexperience what behoves,

From hard assays and ill successes past,

A faithful leader—not to hazard all

Through ways of danger by himself untried.

I, therefore, I alone, first undertook
To wing the desolate Abyss, and spy
This new-created World, whereof in Hell
Fame is not silent, here in hope to find Better abode, and my afflicted Powers
To settle here on earth, or in mid air;
Though for possession put to try once more
What thou and thy gay legions dare against;
Whose easier business were to serve their
Lord

High up in Heaven, with songs to hymn
his throne,

And practised distances to cringe, not fight."

To whom the Warrior-Angel soon replied:—

"To say and straight unsay, pretending first
Wise to fly pain, professing next the spy,
Argues no leader, but a liar traced,
Satan; and couldst thou 'faithful' add?

O name,

O sacred name of faithfulness profaned!

Faithful to whom? to thy rebellious crew?

Army of fiends, fit body to fit head!

Was this your discipline and faith engaged,
Your military obedience, to dissolve

Allegiance to the acknowledged Power Supreme:

And thou, sly hypocrite, who now wouldst seem

Patron of liberty, who more than thou

Once fawned, and cringed, and servilely adored

Heaven's awful Monarch? wherefore, but in hope

To dispossess him, and thyself to reign?

But mark what I areed<sup>3</sup> thee now: Avaunt!

Fly thither whence thou fledd'st. If from this hour

Within these hallowed limits thou appear,
Back to the Infernal Pit I drag thee chained,
And seal thee so as henceforth not to scorn
The facile gates of Hell too slightly barred."

So threatened he; but Satan to no threats Gave heed, but waxing more in rage, replied:—

"Then, when I am thy captive, talk of
chains,

Proud liminary<sup>4</sup> Cherub! but ere then

Far heavier load thyself expect to feel

From my prevailing arm, though Heaven's
King

<sup>1</sup>In whatever manner.

<sup>2</sup>I. e., fiercest foe.

<sup>3</sup>Advise.

<sup>4</sup>Proud cherub set to guard these limits.

Ride on thy wings, and thou with thy compeers,
 Used to the yoke, draw'st his triumphant wheels
 In progress through the road of Heaven star-paved."
 While thus he spake, the angelic squadron bright
 Turned fiery red, sharpening in moonéd horns
 Their phalanx, and began to hem him round
 With ported spears,<sup>1</sup> as thick as when a field
 Of Ceres ripe for harvest waving bends
 Her bearded grove of ears which way the wind
 Sways them; the careful ploughman doubting stands
 Lest on the threshing-floor his hopeful sheaves
 Prove chaff. On the other side, Satan, alarmed,<sup>2</sup> Collecting all his might, dilated stood,
 Like Teneriff or Atlas, unremoved:<sup>3</sup>
 His stature reached the sky, and on his crest
 Sat Horror plumed; nor wanted in his grasp
 What seemed both spear and shield. Now dreadful deeds Might have ensued; nor only Paradise,
 In this commotion, but the starry cope
 Of Heaven perhaps, or all the elements
 At least, had gone to wrack, disturbed and torn
 With violence of this conflict, had not soon
 The Eternal, to prevent such horrid fray,
 Hung forth in Heaven his golden scales,<sup>4</sup> yet seen Betwixt Astræa and the Scorpion sign,
 Wherein all things created first he weighed,
 The pendulous round earth with balanced air
 In counterpoise, now ponders<sup>5</sup> all events,
 Battles and realms. In these he put two weights,
 The sequel<sup>6</sup> each of parting and of fight:
 The latter quick up flew, and kicked the beam;
 Which Gabriel spying thus bespake the Fiend:—

<sup>1</sup>Spears held in both hands and slanted to the left.

<sup>2</sup>On his guard (not fearful).

<sup>3</sup>Incapable of being removed.

<sup>4</sup>The constellation Libra.

<sup>5</sup>Weighs.

<sup>6</sup>Consequence.

"Satan, I know thy strength, and thou know'st mine,
 Neither our own, but given; what folly then
 To boast what arms can do! since thine no more Than Heaven permits, nor mine, though doubled now
 To trample thee as mire. For proof look up
 And read thy lot in yon celestial sign,
 Where thou art weighed, and shown how light, how weak
 If thou resist." The Fiend looked up, and knew
 His mounted scale aloft: nor more, but fled
 Murmuring; and with him fled the shades of night.

BOOK V

THE ARGUMENT

MORNING approached, Eve relates to Adam her troublesome dream; he likes it not, yet comforts her: they come forth to their day labors: their morning hymn at the door of their bower. God, to render Man inexcusable, sends Raphael to admonish him of his obedience, of his free estate, of his enemy near at hand, who he is, and why his enemy, and whatever else may avail Adam to know. Raphael comes down to Paradise; his appearance described; his coming discerned by Adam afar off, sitting at the door of his bower; he goes out to meet him, brings him to his lodge, entertains him with the choicest fruits of Paradise, got together by Eve; their discourse at table. Raphael performs his message, minds Adam of his state and of his enemy; relates, at Adam's request, who that enemy is, and how he came to be so, beginning from his first revolt in Heaven, and the occasion thereof; how he drew his legions after him to the parts of the North, and there incited them to rebel with him, persuading all but only Abdiel, a seraph, who in argument dissuades and opposes him, then forsakes him.

BOOK VI

THE ARGUMENT

RAPHAEL continues to relate how Michael and Gabriel were sent forth to battle against Satan and his Angels. The first fight described: Satan and his powers retire under night. He calls a council; invents devilish engines, which, in the second day's fight, put Michael and his Angels to some disorder; but they at length, pulling up mountains, overwhelmed both the force and machines of Satan. Yet, the tumult not so ending, God, on the third day, sends Messiah his Son, for whom he had reserved the glory of that victory. He, in the power of his Father, coming to the place, and causing all his legions to stand still on either side, with his chariot and thunder driving into the midst of his enemies, pursues them, unable to resist, towards the wall of Heaven; which opening, they leap down with horror and confusion into the place of punishment prepared for them in the Deep. Messiah returns with triumph to his Father.

BOOK VII

THE ARGUMENT

RAPHAEL, at the request of Adam, relates how and wherefore this World was first created:—that God, after the expelling of Satan and his Angels out of Heaven, declared his pleasure to create another World, and other creatures to dwell therein; sends his Son with glory, and attendance of Angels, to perform the work of creation in six days: the Angels celebrate with hymns the performance thereof, and his reascension into Heaven.

BOOK VIII

THE ARGUMENT

ADAM inquires concerning celestial motions; is doubtfully answered, and exhorted to search rather things more worthy of knowledge. Adam assents, and, still desirous to detain Raphael, relates to him what he remembered since his own creation—his placing in Paradise; his talk with God concerning solitude and fit society; his first meeting and nuptials with Eve. His discourse with the Angel thereupon; who, after admonitions repeated, departs.

BOOK IX

THE ARGUMENT

SATAN, having compassed the Earth, with meditated guile returns as a mist by night into Paradise; enters into the Serpent sleeping. Adam and Eve in the morning go forth to their labors, which Eve proposes to divide in several places, each laboring apart: Adam consents not, alleging the danger lest that enemy of whom they were forewarned should attempt her found alone. Eve, loath to be thought not circumspect or firm enough, urges her going apart, the rather desirous to make trial of her strength; Adam at last yields. The Serpent finds her alone: his subtle approach, first gazing, then speaking, with much flattery extolling Eve above all other creatures. Eve, wondering to hear the Serpent speak, asks how he attained to human speech and such understanding not till now; the Serpent answers that by tasting of a certain tree in the Garden he attained both to speech and reason, till then void of both. Eve requires him to bring her to that tree, and finds it to be the Tree of Knowledge forbidden: the Serpent, now grown bolder with many wiles and arguments induces her at length to eat. She, pleased with the taste, deliberates a while whether to impart thereof to Adam or not; at last brings him of the fruit; relates what persuaded her to eat thereof. Adam, at first amazed, but perceiving her lost, resolves, through vehemence of love, to perish with her, and, extenuating the trespass, eats also of the fruit. The effect thereof in them both; they seek to cover their nakedness; then fall to variance and accusation of one another.

NO MORE of talk where God or Angel guest
With man, as with his friend, familiar used
To sit indulgent, and with him partake
Rural repast, permitting him the while Venial discourse unblamed. I now must change

Those notes to tragic—foul distrust, and breach

Disloyal, on the part of man, revolt
And disobedience; on the part of Heaven,
Now alienated, distance and distaste,
Anger and just rebuke, and judgment given.
That brought into this world a world of woe,
Sin and her shadow Death, and Misery,
Death's harbinger. Sad task! yet argument
Not less but more heroic than the wrath
Of stern Achilles on his foe pursued Thrice fugitive about Troy wall; or rage
Of Turnus for Lavinia disespoused;
Or Neptune's ire, or Juno's, that so long Perplexed the Greek, and Cytherea's son:<sup>1</sup>
If answerable style I can obtain
Of my celestial Patroness,<sup>2</sup> who deigns
Her nightly visitation unimplored,
And dictates to me slumbering, or inspires
Easy my unpremeditated verse,
Since first this subject for heroic song
Pleased me, long choosing and beginning late,
Not sedulous by nature to indite
Wars, hitherto the only argument
Heroic deemed, chief mastery to dissect

<sup>1</sup> I. e., Milton asserts his theme to be more heroic than those of the Iliad, the Odyssey, and the Æneid.

<sup>2</sup> The heavenly Muse of the opening lines of Bk. I, called Urania at the beginning of Bk. VII.

With long and tedious havoc fabled knights
In battles feigned (the better fortitude
Of patience and heroic martyrdom
Unsung), or to describe races and games,
Or tilting furniture, emblazoned shields,
Impresses<sup>1</sup> quaint, caparisons and steeds,
Bases<sup>2</sup> and tinsel trappings, gorgeous knights
At joust and tournament; then marshaled feast

Served up in hall with sewers and seneschals;<sup>3</sup>
The skill of artifice or office mean;
Not that which justly gives heroic name
To person or to poem! Me, of these Nor skilled nor studious, higher argument
Remains, sufficient of itself to raise
That name, unless an age too late, or cold
Climate, or years, damp my intended wing
Depressed; and much they may if all be mine,
Not hers who brings it nightly to my ear.

The Sun was sunk, and after him the Star

Of Hesperus, whose office is to bring Twilight upon the earth, short arbiter
'Twixt day and night, and now from end to end

Night's hemisphere had veiled the horizon
round,

When Satan, who late fled before the threats
Of Gabriel out of Eden, now improved
In meditated fraud and malice, bent
On Man's destruction, maugre<sup>4</sup> what might hap

Of heavier on himself, fearless returned.
By night he fled, and at midnight returned
From compassing the earth—cautious of day
Since Uriel, Regent of the Sun, descried
His entrance, and forewarned the Cherubim That kept their watch. Thence, full of anguish, driven,

The space of seven continued nights he rode
With darkness—thrice the equinoctial line
He circled, four times crossed the car of Night
From pole to pole, traversing each colure<sup>5</sup>—

<sup>1</sup>Devices or emblems on a knight's shield or elsewhere.

<sup>2</sup>Kilts or lower garments worn by a knight.

<sup>3</sup>The marshal placed guests according to their rank, the sewer arranged and tasted the dishes; the seneschal was the steward.

<sup>4</sup>In spite of.

<sup>5</sup>Satan followed the shadow of the earth three nights by flying around it parallel with the equator; then for four nights he flew from pole to pole, parallel with the circles (colures) drawn from the poles through the solstices and equinoxes.

On the eighth returned, and on the coast averse<sup>6</sup>

From entrance or cherubic watch by stealth
Found unsuspected way. There was a place (Now not, though Sin, not Time, first wrought the change)

Where Tigris, at the foot of Paradise,
Into a gulf shot under ground, till part
Rose up a fountain by the Tree of Life.
In with the river sunk, and with it rose,
Satan, involved in rising mist; then sought Where to lie hid. Sea he had searched and
land

From Eden over Pontus, and the Pool
Mæotis, up beyond the river Ob;<sup>7</sup>
Downward as far antarctic; and, in length,
West from Orontes to the ocean barred
At Darien, thence to the land where flows
Ganges and Indus.<sup>8</sup> Thus the orb he roamed
With narrow search, and with inspection deep Considered every creature, which of all Most opportune might serve his wiles, and
found

The Serpent subtlest beast of all the field.
Him, after long debate, irresolute
Of thoughts revolved,<sup>9</sup> his final sentence
chose

Fit vessel, fittest imp of fraud, in whom
To enter, and his dark suggestions hide
From sharpest sight; for in the wily snake Whatever sleights none would suspicious
mark,

As from his wit and native subtlety
Proceeding, which, in other beasts observed,
Doubt might beget of diabolic power
Active within beyond the sense of brute.
Thus he resolved, but first from inward grief
His bursting passion into plaints thus poured:—

“O Earth, how like to Heaven, if not preferred

More justly, seat worthier of Gods, as built With second thought, reforming what was old!

For what God, after better, worse would build?

<sup>6</sup>On the side of the Garden opposite.

<sup>7</sup>Satan had gone northward over the Black Sea, over the Sea of Azof, and yet farther northward beyond the river Of, in Siberia, which flows into the Arctic Sea.

<sup>8</sup>Westward he had gone from the Syrian river Orontes across the Mediterranean and Atlantic to the Isthmus of Darien and on across the Pacific to India.

<sup>9</sup>His thoughts revolving irresolutely.

Terrestrial Heaven, danced round by other Heavens,
 That shine, yet bear their bright officious<sup>1</sup>
 lamps,
 Light above light, for thee alone, as seems,
 In thee concent'ring all their precious beams
 Of sacred influence! As God in Heaven
 Is center, yet extends to all, so thou Cent'ring receiv'st from all those orbs; in
 thee,
 Not in themselves, all their known virtue appears,
 Productive in herb, plant, and nobler birth
 Of creatures animate with gradual life
 Of growth, sense, reason, all summed up in
 Man.
 With what delight could I have walked thee
 round,
 If I could joy in aught—sweet interchange
 Of hill and valley, rivers, woods, and plains,
 Now land, now sea, and shores with forest
 crowned,
 Rocks, dens, and caves! But I in none of these
 Find place or refuge; and the more I see Pleasures about me, so much more I feel Torment within me, as from the hateful siege
 Of contraries; all good to me becomes Bane, and in Heaven much worse would be my state.
 But neither here seek I, no, nor in Heaven,
 To dwell, unless by mastering Heaven's Supreme;
 Nor hope to be myself less miserable
 By what I seek, but others to make such
 As I, though thereby worse to me redound.
 For only in destroying I find ease
 To my relentless thoughts; and him destroyed,
 Or won to what may work his utter loss,
 For whom all this was made, all this will soon
 Follow, as to him linked in weal or woe:
 In woe then, that destruction wide may range!
 To me shall be the glory sole among The Infernal Powers, in one day to have marred
 What he, Almighty styled, six nights and
 days
 Continued making, and who knows how long Before had been contriving? though perhaps
 Not longer than since I in one night freed

From servitude inglorious well nigh half
 The Angelic Name, and thinner left the throng
 Of his adorers. He, to be avenged,
 And to repair his numbers thus impaired—
 Whether such virtue, spent of old, now failed
 More Angels to create (if they at least Are his created), or to spite us more—
 Determined to advance into our room
 A creature formed of earth, and him endow,
 Exalted from so base original,
 With heavenly spoils, our spoils. What he decreed
 He effected; man he made, and for him built Magnificent this world, and earth his seat,
 Him Lord pronounced, and, O indignity!
 Subjected to his service Angel-wings
 And flaming ministers, to watch and tend
 Their earthy charge. Of these the vigilance
 I dread, and to elude, thus wrapped in mist
 Of midnight vapor, glide obscure, and pry
 In every bush and brake, where hap may find
 The serpent sleeping, in whose mazy folds
 To hide me, and the dark intent I bring.
 O foul descent! that I, who erst contended
 With Gods to sit the highest, am now constrained
 Into a beast, and, mixed with bestial slime,
 This essence to incarnate and imbrute,
 That to the highth of deity aspired!
 But what will not ambition and revenge
 Descend to? Who aspires must down as low
 As high he soared, obnoxious, first or last,
 To basest thing.<sup>2</sup> Revenge, at first though
 sweet,
 Bitter ere long back on itself recoils.
 Let it; I reck<sup>3</sup> not, so it light well aimed,
 Since higher I fall short, on him who next Provokes my envy, this new favorite Of Heaven, this Man of Clay, son of despite, Whom, us the more to spite, his Maker
 raised
 From dust: spite then with spite is best repaid."
 So saying, through each thicket, dank or dry,
 Like a black mist low-creeping, he held on His midnight search, where soonest he might
 find
 The Serpent. Him fast sleeping soon he
 found,

<sup>1</sup>Serviceable.

<sup>2</sup>Open, first or last, to harm from basest things.

<sup>3</sup>Care.

In labyrinth of many a round self-rolled,
His head the midst, well stored with subtle wiles:

Not yet in horrid shade or dismal den,
Nor nocent<sup>1</sup> yet, but on the grassy herb, Fearless, unfeared, he slept. In at his mouth

The Devil entered, and his brutal sense,
In heart or head, possessing soon inspired
With act intelligential; but his sleep
Disturbed not, waiting close the approach of morn.

Now, whenas sacred light began to dawn
In Eden on the humid flowers, that breathed Their morning incense, when all things that breathe

From the Earth's great altar send up silent
praise

To the Creator, and his nostrils fill With grateful smell, forth came the human
pair,

And joined their vocal worship to the choir
• Of creatures wanting voice; that done, par-
take

The season, prime for sweetest scents and airs;

Then commune how that day they best may
ply

Their growing work—for much their work outgrew

The hands' dispatch of two gardening so
wide:

And Eve first to her husband thus began:—

“Adam, well may we labor still to dress
This Garden, still to tend plant, herb, and
flower,

Our pleasant task enjoined; but, till more hands

Aid us, the work under our labor grows,
Luxurious by restraint: what we by day
Lop overgrown, or prune, or prop, or bind,
One night or two with wanton growth de-
rides,

Tending to wild. Thou, therefore, now advise,

Or hear what to my mind first thoughts present.

Let us divide our labors—thou where choice Leads thee, or where most needs, whether to wind

The woodbine round this arbor, or direct
The clasping ivy where to climb; while I

In yonder spring<sup>2</sup> of roses intermixed
With myrtle find what to redress till noon.
For, while so near each other thus all day
Our task we choose, what wonder if so near Looks intervene and smiles, or objects new Casual discourse draw on, which intermits
Our day's work, brought to little, though begun

Early, and the hour of supper comes unearned!”

To whom mild answer Adam thus returned:—

“Sole Eve, associate sole, to me beyond
Compare above all living creatures dear!
Well hast thou motioned, well thy thoughts employed

How we might best fulfil the work which here
God hath assigned us, nor of me shalt pass
Unpraised; for nothing lovelier can be found
In woman than to study household good,
And good works in her husband to promote.
Yet not so strictly hath our Lord imposed
Labor as to debar us when we need Refreshment, whether food or talk between,
Food of the mind, or this sweet intercourse
Of looks and smiles; for smiles from reason
flow

To brute denied, and are of love the food—
Love, not the lowest end of human life.

For not to irksome toil, but to delight,
He made us, and delight to reason joined.

These paths and bowers doubt not but our joint hands

Will keep from wilderness<sup>3</sup> with ease, as wide
As we need walk, till younger hands ere long Assist us. But, if much converse perhaps

Thee satiate, to short absence I could yield;
For solitude sometimes is best society,

And short retirement urges sweet return.

But other doubt possesses me, lest harm
Befall thee, severed from me; for thou
know'st

What hath been warned us—what malicious
foe,

Envyng our happiness, and of his own
Despairing, seeks to work us woe and shame
By sly assault, and somewhere nigh at hand
Watches, no doubt, with greedy hope to find
His wish and best advantage, us asunder,
Hopeless to circumvent us joined, where each
To other speedy aid might lend at need.

<sup>2</sup>Thicket.

<sup>3</sup>Wildness.

<sup>1</sup>Harmful.

Whether his first design be to withdraw
Our fealty from God, or to disturb Conjugal love—than which perhaps no bliss
Enjoyed by us excites his envy more—
Or this, or worse, leave not the faithful side That gave thee being, still shades thee and protects.

The wife, where danger or dishonor lurks,
Safest and seemliest by her husband stays,
Who guards her, or with her the worst endures."

To whom the virgin majesty of Eve,
As one who loves, and some unkindness
meets,

With sweet austere composure thus replied:—
"Offspring of Heaven and Earth, and all Earth's lord!

That such an enemy we have, who seeks
Our ruin, both by thee informed I learn,
And from the parting Angel overheard,
As in a shady nook I stood behind,
Just then returned at shut of evening flowers.
But that thou shouldst my firmness therefore doubt

To God or thee, because we have a foe
May tempt it, I expected not to hear.
His violence thou fear'st not, being such
As we, not-capable of death or pain,
Can either not receive, or can repel.
His fraud is, then, thy fear; which plain infers

Thy equal fear that my firm faith and love
Can by his fraud be shaken or seduced:
Thoughts, which how found they harbor in thy breast,

Adam! misthought of her to thee so dear?"

To whom, with healing words, Adam replied:—

"Daughter of God and Man, immortal
Eve!—

For such thou art, from sin and blame entire—

Not diffident of thee do I dissuade
Thy absence from my sight, but to avoid
The attempt itself, intended by our foe.
For he who tempts, though in vain, at least asperses

The tempted with dishonor foul, supposed
Not incorruptible of faith, not proof Against temptation. Thou thyself with scorn

And anger wouldst resent the offered wrong,
Though ineffectual found; misdeem not,
then,

If such affront I labor to avert
From thee alone, which on us both at once
The enemy, though bold, will hardly dare;
Or, daring, first on me the assault shall light.
Nor thou his malice and false guile condemn—
Subtle he needs must be who could seduce
Angels—nor think superfluous others' aid.
I from the influence of thy looks receive Access<sup>1</sup> in every virtue—in thy sight,
More wise, more watchful, stronger, if need
were

Of outward strength; while shame, thou looking on,

Shame to be overcome or overreached,
Would utmost vigor raise, and raised unite.<sup>2</sup>
Why shouldst not thou like sense within thee
feel

When I am present, and thy trial choose
With me, best witness of thy virtue tried?"

So spake domestic Adam in his care
And matrimonial love; but Eve, who thought Less attributed to her faith sincere,
Thus her reply with accent sweet renewed:—
"If this be our condition, thus to dwell

In narrow circuit straitened by a foe,
Subtle or violent, we not endued
Single with like defence wherever met,
How are we happy, still in fear of harm?
But harm precedes not sin: only our foe
Tempting affronts us with his foul esteem
Of our integrity: his foul esteem
Sticks no dishonor on our front, but turns Foul on himself; then wherefore shunned or feared

By us, who rather double honor gain
From his surmise proved false, find peace
within,

Favor from Heaven, our witness, from the event?

And what is faith, love, virtue, unassayed
Alone,<sup>3</sup> without exterior help sustained?
Let us not then suspect our happy state
Left so imperfect by the Maker wise
As not secure to single or combined.<sup>4</sup>
Frail is our happiness, if this be so;
And Eden were no Eden, thus exposed."

To whom thus Adam fervently replied:—
"O Woman, best are all things as the will
Of God ordained them; his creating hand

<sup>1</sup>Increase.

<sup>2</sup>And, once raised, knit together.

<sup>3</sup>If not tried in each of us alone.

<sup>4</sup>As not to be secure to us singly or together.

Nothing imperfect or deficient left
Of all that he created—much less man,
Or aught that might his happy state secure,
Secure from outward force. Within himself
The danger lies, yet lies within his power;
Against his will he can receive no harm.
But God left free the will; for what obeys
Reason is free; and reason he made right,
But bid her well be ware, and still erect,<sup>1</sup>
Lest, by some fair appearing good surprised,
She dictate false, and misinform the will
To do what God expressly hath forbid.

Not then mistrust, but tender love, enjoins

That I should mind thee oft; and mind thou
me.

Firm we subsist, yet possible to swerve,
Since reason not impossibility may meet
Some specious object by the foe suborned,
And fall into deception unaware,
Not keeping strictest watch, as she was warned.

Seek not temptation, then, which to avoid
Were better, and most likely<sup>2</sup> if from me
Thou sever not: trial will come unsought.
Wouldst thou approve thy constancy, approve

First thy obedience; the other who can know,
Not seeing thee attempted, who attest?

But if thou think trial unsought may find Us both securer than thus warned thou seem'st,

Go; for thy stay, not free, absents thee more.
Go in thy native innocence; rely
On what thou hast of virtue; summon all;
For God towards thee hath done his part: do thine."

So spake the Patriarch of Mankind; but
Eve

Persisted; yet submiss, though last, replied:—

"With thy permission, then, and thus fore-
warned,

Chiefly by what thy own last reasoning words Touched only, that our trial, when least
sought,

May find us both perhaps far less prepared,
The willing I go, nor much expect
A foe so proud will first the weaker seek;
So bent, the more shall shame him his repulse."

Thus saying, from her husband's hand her
hand

Soft she withdrew, and, like a wood-nymph
light,

Oread or Dryad, or of Delia's<sup>3</sup> train, Betook her to the groves, but Delia's self
In gait surpassed and goddess-like deport,
Though not as she with bow and quiver
armed,

But with such gardening tools as art, yet
rude,

Guiltless of fire had formed, or Angels
brought.

To Pales, or Pomona,<sup>4</sup> thus adorned,
Likest she seemed—Pomona when she fled Vertumnus—or to Ceres<sup>5</sup> in her prime,
Yet virgin of Proserpina from Jove.<sup>6</sup>

Her long with ardent look his eye pursued Delighted, but desiring more her stay.

Oft he to her his charge of quick return
Repeated; she to him as oft engaged

To be returned by noon amid the bower,
And all things in best order to invite

Noontide repast, or afternoon's repose.

O much deceived, much failing, hapless Eve,
Of thy presumed return! event perverse!

Thou never from that hour in Paradise
Found'st either sweet repast or sound repose;
Such ambush, hid among sweet flowers and shades,

Waited, with hellish rancor imminent,
To intercept thy way, or send thee back

Deprived of innocence, of faith, of bliss.

For now, and since first break of dawn, the Fiend,

Mere serpent in appearance, forth was come,
And on his quest where likeliest he might
find

The only two of mankind, but in them
The whole included race, his purposed prey.

In bower and field he sought, where any tuft
Of grove or garden-plot more pleasant lay,

Their tendance or plantation for delight;

By fountain or by shady rivulet

He sought them both, but wished his hap might find

Eve separate; he wished, but not with hope
Of what so seldom chanced, when to his wish,
Beyond his hope, Eve separate he spies,

<sup>1</sup>Diana's.

<sup>2</sup>Pales, goddess of pastures; Pomona, goddess of fruits.

<sup>3</sup>Goddess of husbandry.

<sup>4</sup>Before she had borne Proserpina to Jove.

<sup>1</sup>Watchful.

<sup>2</sup>I. e., you will be most likely to avoid it.

Veiled in a cloud of fragrance, where she stood,

Half-spied, so thick the roses bushing round
About her glowed, oft stooping to support
Each flower of tender stalk, whose head, though gay

Carnation, purple, azure, or specked with gold,

Hung drooping unsustained. Them she upstays

Gently with myrtle band, mindless the while Herself, though fairest unsupported flower,
From her best prop so far, and storm so nigh.

Nearer he drew, and many a walk traversed
Of stateliest covert, cedar, pine, or palm;
Then voluble<sup>1</sup> and bold, now hid, now seen
Among thick-woven arborets, and flowers
Imbordered on each bank, the hand<sup>2</sup> of Eve:
Spot more delicious than those gardens
feigned

Or of revived Adonis, or renowned Alcinous, host of old Laertes' son,<sup>3</sup>
Or that, not mystic, where the sapient king
Held dalliance with his fair Egyptian spouse.<sup>4</sup>
Much he the place admired, the person more.
As one who, long in populous city pent,
Where houses thick and sewers annoy the
air,

Forth issuing on a summer's morn, to breathe
Among the pleasant villages and farms
Adjoined, from each thing met conceives delight—

The smell of grain, or tedded grass,<sup>5</sup> or kine,
Or dairy, each rural sight, each rural sound—
If chance with nymph-like step fair virgin
pass,

What pleasing seemed, for<sup>6</sup> her now pleases
more,

She most, and in her look sums all delight:
Such pleasure took the Serpent to behold
This flowery plat, the sweet recess of Eve
Thus early, thus alone. Her heavenly form
Angelic, but more soft and feminine,
Her graceful innocence, her every air
Of gesture or least action, overawed
His malice, and with rapine sweet bereaved

<sup>1</sup>Rolling on.

<sup>2</sup>Handiwork.

<sup>3</sup>Ulysses.

<sup>4</sup>Or that not mythical garden, where Solomon entertained his Egyptian wife, Pharaoh's daughter.

<sup>5</sup>Cut and spread out to dry.

<sup>6</sup>Because of.

His fierceness of the fierce intent it brought.
That space the Evil One abstracted stood
From his own evil, and for the time remained Stupidly good, of enmity disarmed,
Of guile, of hate, of envy, of revenge.
But the hot hell that always in him burns,
Though in mid Heaven, soon ended his delight

And tortures him now more, the more he sees
Of pleasure not for him ordained. Then soon

Fierce hate he recollects, and all his thoughts
Of mischief, gratulating, thus excites:—

“Thoughts, whither have ye led me? with what sweet

Compulsion thus transported to forget
What hither brought us? hate, not love, nor hope

Of Paradise for Hell, hope here to taste
Of pleasure, but all pleasure to destroy,
Save what is in destroying; other joy
To me is lost. Then let me not let pass Occasion which now smiles. Behold alone
The Woman, opportune to all attempts—
Her husband, for I view far round, not nigh,
Whose higher intellectual more I shun,
And strength, of courage haughty, and of limb

Heroic built, though of terrestrial mold;
Foe not formidable, exempt from wound—
I not; so much hath Hell debased, and pain
Enfeebled me, to what I was in Heaven.
She fair, divinely fair, fit love for Gods,
Not terrible, though terror be in love,
And beauty, not approached<sup>7</sup> by stronger hate,

Hate stronger under show of love well feigned—

The way which to her ruin now I tend.”

So spake the Enemy of Mankind, enclosed
In serpent, inmate bad, and toward Eve
Addressed his way—not with indented wave,
Prone on the ground, as since, but on his rear,
Circular base of rising folds, that towered
Fold above fold, a surging maze; his head
Crested aloft, and carbuncle his eyes;
With burnished neck of verdant gold, erect Amidst his circling spires, that on the grass
Floated redundant.<sup>8</sup> Pleasing was his shape
And lovely; never since of serpent kind
Lovelier—not those that in Illyria changed

<sup>7</sup>I. e., if not approached.

<sup>8</sup>Copious.

Hermione and Cadmus,<sup>1</sup> or the god
In Epidaurus;<sup>2</sup> nor to which transformed
Ammonian Jove, or Capitoline, was seen,
He with Olympias, this with her who bore
Scipio, the highth of Rome.<sup>3</sup> With tract oblique

At first, as one who sought access but feared
To interrupt, sidelong he works his way.
As when a ship, by skillful steersman
wrought

Nigh river's mouth, or foreland, where the wind

Veers oft, as oft so steers, and shifts her
sail,

So varied he, and of his tortuous train
Curled many a wanton wreath in sight of
Eve,

To lure her eye. She, busied, heard the
sound

Of rustling leaves, but minded not, as used
To such disport before her through the field
From every beast, more duteous at her call
Than at Circean call the herd disguised.<sup>4</sup>

He, bolder now, uncalled before her stood,
But as in gaze admiring. Oft he bowed
His turret crest and sleek enameled neck, Fawning, and licked the ground whereon she trod.

His gentle dumb expression turned at length
The eye of Eve to mark his play; he, glad
Of her attention gained, with serpent-tongue
Organic, or impulse of vocal air,
His fraudulent temptation thus began:—

“Wonder not, sovran mistress (if perhaps Thou canst who art sole wonder), much less arm

Thy looks, the heaven of mildness, with disdain,

Displeased that I approach thee thus, and gaze

Insatiate, I thus single, nor have feared
Thy awful brow, more awful thus retired.
Fairest resemblance of thy Maker fair,

<sup>1</sup>That in Illyria took the places of Hermione and Cadmus (who had asked to be changed into serpents to escape the misery of life).

<sup>2</sup>Esculapius, who came to Rome from Epidaurus in the shape of a serpent.

<sup>3</sup>The construction is: Nor those serpents into which Jupiter Ammon and Jupiter Capitolinus were respectively seen transformed; the first with Olympias, the mother of Alexander the Great; the other with the mother of Scipio (Masson).

<sup>4</sup>Circe changed men by her enchantments into beasts, and formed them into an obedient herd.

Thee all things living gaze on, all things
thine

By gift, and thy celestial beauty adore,
With ravishment beheld—there best beheld
Where universally admired. But here,
In this enclosure wild, these beasts among,
Beholders rude, and shallow to discern Half what in thee is fair, one man except,
Who sees thee (and what is one!) who shouldst be seen

A Goddess among Gods, adored and served
By Angels numberless, thy daily train?”
So glozed<sup>5</sup> the Tempter, and his poem<sup>6</sup> tuned.

Into the heart of Eve his words made way, Though at the voice much marveling; at
length,

Not unmazed, she thus in answer spake:— “What may this mean? Language of man pronounced

By tongue of brute, and human sense expressed!

The first at least of these I thought denied
To beasts, whom God on their creation-day Created mute to all articulate sound;
The latter I de nur,<sup>7</sup> for in their looks Much reason, and in their actions, oft appears.

Thee, Serpent, subtlest beast of all the field
I knew, but not with human voice endued;
Redouble then this miracle, and say,
How cam'st thou speakable of mute, and
how

To me so friendly grown above the rest
Of brutal kind that daily are in sight:
Say, for such wonder claims attention due.”

To whom the guileful Tempter thus replied:—

“Empress of this fair world, resplendent
Eve!

Easy to me it is to tell thee all What thou command'st, and right thou shouldst be obeyed.

I was at first as other beasts that graze
The trodden herb, of abject thoughts and
low,

As was my food, nor aught but food dis-
cerned

Or sex, and apprehended nothing high:
Till on a day, roving the field, I chanced

<sup>5</sup>Flattered.

<sup>6</sup>Prelude.

<sup>7</sup>Feel doubtful about.

A goodly tree far distant to behold,
 Loaden with fruit of fairest colors mixed,
 Ruddy and gold. I nearer drew to gaze;
 When from the boughs a savory odor blown,
 Grateful to appetite, more pleased my sense
 Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the teats
 Of ewe or goat dropping with milk at even,
 Unsucked of lamb or kid, that tend their
 play.

To satisfy the sharp desire I had
 Of tasting those fair apples, I resolved
 Not to defer; hunger and thirst at once, Powerful persuaders, quickened at the scent

Of that alluring fruit, urged me so keen.
 About the mossy trunk I wound me soon;
 For, high from ground, the branches would require

Thy utmost reach, or Adam's: round the tree
 All other beasts that saw, with like desire Longing and envying stood, but could not reach.

Amid the tree now got, where plenty hung
 Tempting so nigh, to pluck and eat my fill
 I spared not; for such pleasure till that hour
 At feed or fountain never had I found.
 Sated at length, ere long I might perceive Strange alteration in me, to degree
 Of reason in my inward powers, and speech
 Wanted not long, though to this shape retained.

Thenceforth to speculations high or deep
 I turned my thoughts, and with capacious
 mind

Considered all things visible in Heaven,
 Or earth, or middle, all things fair and good.
 But all that fair and good in thy divine
 Semblance and in thy beauty's heavenly ray,
 United I beheld—no fair to thine
 Equivalent or second; which compelled
 Me thus, though importune perhaps, to come
 And gaze, and worship thee of right declared
 Sovran of creatures, universal Dame!"

So talked the spirited sly Snake;<sup>1</sup> and Eve,
 Yet more amazed, unwary thus replied:—
 "Serpent, thy overpraising leaves in doubt
 The virtue of that fruit, in thee first proved.
 But say, where grows the tree? from hence
 how far?

For many are the trees of God that grow
 In Paradise, and various, yet unknown
 To us; in such abundance lies our choice

As leaves a greater store of fruit untouched,
 Still hanging incorruptible, till men
 Grow up to their provision, and more hands
 Help to disburden Nature of her bearth."<sup>2</sup>

To whom the wily Adder, blithe and glad:—

"Empress, the way is ready, and not long—Beyond a row of myrtles, on a flat,
 Fast by a fountain, one small thicket past
 Of blowing myrrh and balm. If thou accept My conduct, I can bring thee thither soon."

"Lead, then," said Eve. He, leading, swiftly rolled

In tangles, and made intricate seem straight,
 To mischief swift. Hope elevates, and joy Brightens his crest. As when a wandering fire,<sup>3</sup>

Compact of unctuous vapor, which the night
 Condenses, and the cold environs round,
 Kindled through agitation to a flame (Which oft, they say, some evil spirit attends),

Hovering and blazing with delusive light, Misleads the amazed night-wanderer from
 his way

To bogs and mires, and oft through pond or
 pool,

There swallowed up and lost, from succor far:
 So glistered the dire Snake, and into fraud
 Led Eve, our credulous mother, to the Tree
 Of Prohibition, root of all our woe;

Which when she saw, thus to her guide she
 spake:—

"Serpent, we might have spared our coming hither,

Fruitless to me, though fruit be here to excess,

The credit of whose virtue rest with thee—
 Wondrous indeed, if cause of such effects!
 But of this tree we may not taste or touch;
 God so commanded, and left that command
 Sole daughter of his voice: the rest,<sup>4</sup> we live
 Law to ourselves; our reason is our law."

To whom the Tempter guilefully replied:—
 "Indeed! Hath God then said that of the fruit

Of all these garden-trees ye shall not eat,
 Yet lords declared of all in earth or air?"

To whom thus Eve, yet sinless:—"Of the fruit

<sup>2</sup>Produce.

<sup>3</sup>Will-o'-the-wisp.

<sup>4</sup>I. e., as for the rest.

<sup>1</sup>The sly snake animated with a spirit.

Of each tree in the Garden we may eat;
But of the fruit of this fair tree, amidst
The Garden, God hath said, 'Ye shall not eat Thereof, nor shall ye touch it, lest ye die.'"—
She scarce had said, though brief, when now more bold

The Tempter, but with show of zeal and love
To man, and indignation at his wrong,
New parts put on, and, as to passion moved,
Fluctuates<sup>1</sup> disturbed, yet comely, and in act

Raised, as of some great matter to begin.
As when of old some orator renowned
In Athens or free Rome, where eloquence Flourished, since mute, to some great cause
addressed,

Stood in himself collected, while each part,
Motion, each act, won audience ere the
tongue

Sometimes in highth began, as no delay
Of preface brooking through his zeal of right:
So standing, moving, or to highth upgrown,
The Tempter, all impassioned, thus began:—

"O sacred, wise, and wisdom-giving Plant,
Mother of science! now I feel thy power
Within me clear, not only to discern
Things in their causes, but to trace the ways
Of highest agents, deemed however wise.
Queen of this Universe! do not believe Those rigid threats of death. Ye shall not die.

How should ye? By the fruit? it gives you
life

To knowledge. By the Threatener? look on
me,

Me who have touched and tasted, yet both
live,

And life more perfect have attained than
Fate

Meant me, by venturing higher than my lot.
Shall that be shut to man which to the beast
Is open? or will God incense his ire
For such a petty trespass, and not praise
Rather your dauntless virtue, whom the pain
Of death denounced, whatever thing Death
be,

Deterred not from achieving what might
lead

To happier life, knowledge of Good and Evil?
Of good, how just! of evil—if what is evil
Be real, why not known, since easier
shunned?

God therefore cannot hurt ye, and be just;
Not just, not God; not feared then, nor obeyed;

Your fear itself of death removes the fear.
Why, then, was this forbid? Why but to awe,

Why but to keep ye low and ignorant,
His worshipers? He knows that in the day
Ye eat thereof your eyes, that seem so clear,
Yet are but dim, shall perfectly be then
Opened and cleared, and ye shall be as gods,
Knowing both good and evil, as they know.
That ye should be as gods, since I as man,
Internal man, is but proportion meet—
I, of brute, human; ye, of human, gods.
So ye shall die perhaps, by putting off
Human, to put on gods—death to be wished, Though threatened, which no worse than this can bring!

And what are gods, that man may not become

As they, participating godlike food?

The gods are first, and that advantage use
On our belief, that all from them proceeds.
I question it; for this fair earth I see,
Warmed by the sun, producing every kind;
Them nothing. If they all things, who enclosed

Knowledge of good and evil in this tree,
That whoso eats thereof forthwith attains Wisdom without their leave? and wherein lies

The offence, that man should thus attain to
know?

What can your knowledge hurt him, or this tree

Impart against his will, if all be his?

Or is it envy? and can envy dwell

In heavenly breasts? These, these and many more

Causes import your need of this fair fruit.
Goddess humane,<sup>2</sup> reach, then, and freely
taste!"

He ended; and his words, replete with
guile,

Into her heart too easy entrance won.

Fixed on the fruit she gazed, which to be-
hold

Might tempt alone; and in her ears the sound
Yet rung of his persuasive words, impregnated<sup>3</sup>
With reason, to her seeming, and with truth.

<sup>2</sup>Human.

<sup>3</sup>Filled.

<sup>1</sup>Waves to and fro.

Meanwhile the hour of noon drew on, and waked

An eager appetite, raised by the smell
So savory of that fruit, which with desire,
Inclinable now grown to touch or taste,
Solicited her longing eye; yet first,
Pausing a while, thus to herself she mused:—

“Great are thy virtues, doubtless, best of fruits,

Though kept from man, and worthy to be admired,

Whose taste, too long forborne, at first assay
Gave elocution to the mute, and taught
The tongue not made for speech to speak thy praise.

Thy praise he also who forbids thy use
Conceals not from us, naming thee the Tree
Of Knowledge, knowledge both of good and evil;

Forbids us then to taste. But his forbidding Commends thee more, while it infers the good

By thee communicated, and our want;
For good unknown sure is not had, or, had
And yet unknown, is as not had at all.

In plain, then, what forbids he but to know?
Forbids us good, forbids us to be wise!

Such prohibitions bind not. But, if Death
Bind us with after-bands, what profits then
Our inward freedom? In the day we eat

Of this fair fruit, our doom is we shall die!
How dies the Serpent? He hath eaten, and

lives,

And knows, and speaks, and reasons, and discerns,

Irrational till then. For us alone
Was death invented? or to us denied

This intellectual food, for beasts reserved?
For beasts it seems; yet that one beast which

first

Hath tasted envies not, but brings with joy
The good befallen him, author unsuspect,
Friendly to man, far from deceit or guile.

What fear I, then? rather, what know to fear

Under this ignorance of good and evil,
Of God or Death, of law or penalty?

Here grows the cure of all, this fruit divine,
Fair to the eye, inviting to the taste,

Of virtue to make wise. What hinders, then,

To reach, and feed at once both body and mind?”

So saying, her rash hand in evil hour

Forth-reaching to the fruit, she plucked, she eat.

Earth felt the wound, and Nature from her seat,

Sighing through all her works, gave signs of woe

That all was lost. Back to the thicket slunk
The guilty Serpent, and well might, for Eve,

Intent now only on her taste, naught else
Regarded; such delight till then, as seemed,

In fruit she never tasted, whether true,
Or fancied so through expectation high

Of knowledge; nor was Godhead from her thought.

Greedily she ingorged without restraint,
And knew not eating death.<sup>1</sup> Satiated at length,

And hightened as with wine, jocund and boon,<sup>2</sup>

Thus to herself she pleasingly began:—

“O sovran, virtuous, precious of all trees
In Paradise! of operation blest

To sapience, hitherto obscured, infamed,
And thy fair fruit let hang, as to no end

Created! but henceforth my early care,
Not without song, each morning, and due

praise,

Shall tend thee, and the fertile burden ease
Of thy full branches, offered free to all;

Till, dieted by thee, I grow mature
In knowledge, as the gods who all things

know.

Though others envy what they cannot give—
For, had the gift been theirs, it had not here

Thus grown! Experience, next to thee I owe,

Best guide: not following thee, I had remained

In ignorance; thou open'st Wisdom's way,
And giv'st access, though secret she retire.

And I perhaps am secret: Heaven is high—
High, and remote to see from thence distinct

Each thing on earth; and other care perhaps
May have diverted from continual watch

Our great Forbidder, safe<sup>3</sup> with all his spies
About him. But to Adam in what sort

Shall I appear? Shall I to him make known
As yet my change, and give him to partake

Full happiness with me, or rather not,
But keep the odds of knowledge in my power

<sup>1</sup>Knew not that she was eating death.

<sup>2</sup>Pleasant and merry.

<sup>3</sup>I. e., safe as far as concerns any danger from him.

Without copartner? so to add what wants
In female sex, the more to draw his love,
And render me more equal, and perhaps—
A thing not undesirable—sometime
Superior; for, inferior, who is free?
This may be well; but what if God have
seen,

And death ensue? Then I shall be no more;
And Adam, wedded to another Eve,
Shall live with her enjoying, I extinct!
A death to think! Confirmed, then, I resolve

Adam shall share with me in bliss or woe.
So dear I love him that with him all deaths
I could endure, without him live no life.”

So saying, from the tree her step she
turned,

But first low reverence done, as to the Power
That dwelt within, whose presence had infused

Into the plant sciential sap, derived • From nectar, drink of gods. Adam the
while,

Waiting desirous her return, had wove
Of choicest flowers a garland, to adorn
Her tresses, and her rural labors crown,
As reapers oft are wont their harvest-queen.
Great joy he promised to his thoughts, and
new

Solace in her return, so long delayed;
Yet oft his heart, divine of<sup>1</sup> something ill, Mistake him. He the faltering measure<sup>2</sup> felt,
And forth to meet her went, the way she took
That morn when first they parted. By the Tree

Of Knowledge he must pass; there he her
met,

Scarce from the tree returning; in her hand
A bough of fairest fruit, that downy smiled,
New gathered, and ambrosial smell diffused.
To him she hasted; in her face excuse
Came prologue, and apology too prompt,
Which, with bland words at will, she thus
addressed:—

“Hast thou not wondered, Adam, at my
stay?

Thee I have missed, and thought it long, deprived

Thy presence—agony of love till now
Not felt, nor shall be twice; for never more
Mean I to try, what rash untried I sought,

The pain of absence from thy sight. But strange

Hath been the cause, and wonderful to hear.
This tree is not, as we are told, a tree
Of danger tasted, nor to evil unknown
Opening the way, but of divine effect
To open eyes, and make them gods who
taste;

And hath been tasted such. The Serpent
wise,

Or not restrained as we, or not obeying,
Hath eaten of the fruit, and is become Not dead, as we are threatened, but thence-
forth

Endued with human voice and human sense,
Reasoning to admiration, and with me
Persuasively hath so prevailed that I Have also tasted, and have also found
The effects to correspond—opener mine
eyes,

Dim erst, dilated spirits, ampler heart,
And growing up to godhead; which for thee
Chiefly I sought, without thee can despise.
For bliss, as thou hast part, to me is bliss;
Tedious, unshared with thee, and odious
soon.

Thou, therefore, also taste, that equal lot
May join us, equal joy, as equal love;
Lest, thou not tasting, different degree
Disjoin us, and I then too late renounce Deity for thee, when fate will not permit.”

Thus Eve with countenance blithe her story told;

But in her cheek distemper flushing glowed.
On the other side, Adam, soon as he heard
The fatal trespass done by Eve, amazed,
Astonied<sup>3</sup> stood and blank, while horror chill
Ran through his veins, and all his joints relaxed.

From his slack hand the garland wreathed
for Eve

Down dropped, and all the faded roses shed.
Speechless he stood and pale, till thus at length

First to himself he inward silence broke:—

“O fairest of Creation, last and best Of all God’s works, creature in whom excelled
Whatever can to sight or thought be formed,
Holy, divine, good, amiable, or sweet!
How art thou lost! how on a sudden lost,
Defaced, deflowered, and now to death devote!

<sup>1</sup>Foreboding.

<sup>2</sup>The unequal beats of his heart.

<sup>3</sup>Stupefied.

Rather, how hast thou yielded to transgress
The strict forbiddance, how to violate
The sacred fruit forbidden? Some cursed fraud

Of enemy hath beguiled thee, yet unknown,
And me with thee hath ruined; for with thee
Certain my resolution is to die.

How can I live without thee; how forgo Thy sweet converse, and love so dearly
joined,

To live again in these wild woods forlorn?
Should God create another Eve, and I
Another rib afford, yet loss of thee
Would never from my heart. No, no! I feel
The link of nature draw me: flesh of flesh, Bone of my bone thou art, and from thy
state

Mine never shall be parted, bliss or woe."

So having said, as one from sad dismay
Recomforted, and, after thoughts disturbed,
Submitting to what seemed remediless,
Thus in calm mood his words to Eve he turned:—

"Bold deed thou hast presumed, adventurous
Eve,

And peril great provoked, who thus hast
dared,

Had it been only coveting, to eye
That sacred food, sacred to abstinence;
Much more to taste it, under ban to touch.
But past who can recall, or done undo?
Not God Omnipotent, nor Fate! Yet so
Perhaps thou shalt not die; perhaps the fact
Is not so heinous now—foretasted fruit,
Profaned first by the Serpent, by him first Made common and unhallowed ere your
taste,

Nor yet on him found deadly. He yet lives—Lives, as thou saidst, and gains to live, as
man,

Higher degree of life: inducement strong
To us, as likely, tasting, to attain Proportional ascent; which cannot be
But to be gods, or angels, demi-gods.
Nor can I think that God, Creator wise, Though threatening, will in earnest so
destroy

Us, his prime creatures, dignified so high,
Set over all his works; which, in our fall,
For us created, needs with us must fail,
Dependent made. So God shall uncreate,
Be frustrate, do, undo, and labor lose—
Not well conceived of God; who, though his power

Creation could repeat, yet would be loath
Us to abolish, lest the Adversary Triumph and say: 'Fickle their state whom God

Most favors; who can please him long? Me
first

He ruined, now Mankind; whom will he next?"—

Matter of scorn not to be given the Foe.
However, I with thee have fixed my lot,
Certain<sup>1</sup> to undergo like doom. If death
Consort with thee, death is to me as life;
So forcible within my heart I feel
The bond of nature draw me to my own—
My own in thee; for what thou art is mine.
Our state cannot be severed; we are one,
One flesh; to lose thee were to lose myself."

So Adam; and thus Eve to him replied:—

"O glorious trial of exceeding love,
Illustrious evidence, example high!
Engaging me to emulate; but, short
Of thy perfection, how shall I attain, Adam? from whose dear side I boast me
sprung,

And gladly of our union hear thee speak,
One heart, one soul in both; whereof good proof

This day affords, declaring thee resolved,
Rather than death, or aught than death more
dread,

Shall separate us, linked in love so dear,
To undergo with me one guilt, one crime,
If any be, of tasting this fair fruit;
Whose virtue (for of good still good proceeds, Direct, or by occasion) hath presented
This happy trial of thy love, which else
So eminently never had been known.

Were it I thought death menaced would
ensue

This my attempt, I would sustain alone
The worst, and not persuade thee—rather
die

Deserted than oblige<sup>2</sup> thee with a fact<sup>3</sup>
Pernicious to thy peace, chiefly assured
Remarkably so late of thy so true,
So faithful, love unequalled. But I feel Far otherwise the event—not death, but life Augmented, opened eyes, new hopes, new
joys,

Taste so divine that what of sweet before

<sup>1</sup>Resolved to.

<sup>2</sup>Bind.

<sup>3</sup>Deed.

Hath touched my sense flat seems to this and harsh.

On my experience, Adam, freely taste,
And fear of death deliver to the winds."

So saying, she embraced him, and for joy
Tenderly wept, much won that he his love
Had so ennobled, as of choice to incur
Divine displeasure for her sake, or death.
In recompense (for such compliance bad Such recompense best merits), from the bough

She gave him of that fair enticing fruit
With liberal hand. He scrupled not to eat,
Against his better knowledge, not deceived,
But fondly overcome with female charm.
Earth trembled from her entrails, as again
In pangs, and Nature gave a second groan; Sky louded, and, muttering thunder, some sad drops

Wept at completing of the mortal Sin
Original; while Adam took no thought,
Eating his fill, nor Eve to iterate
Her former trespass feared, the more to soothe

Him with her loved society; that<sup>1</sup> now,
As with new wine intoxicated both,
They swim in mirth, and fancy that they feel Divinity within them breeding wings Wherewith to scorn the earth. But that false fruit

Far other operation first displayed,
Carnal desire inflaming. He on Eve
Began to cast lascivious eyes; she him
As wantonly repaid; in lust they burn,
Till Adam thus gan Eve to dalliance move:—

"Eve, now I see thou art exact of taste
And elegant—of sapience no small part;
Since to each meaning savor we apply,
And palate call judicious.<sup>2</sup> I the praise
Yield thee; so well this day thou hast pur-veyed.

Much pleasure we have lost, while we abstained

From this delightful fruit, nor known till
now

True relish, tasting. If such pleasure be
In things to us forbidden, it might be wished

<sup>1</sup>So that.

<sup>2</sup>Since we apply the word savor to intellectual things and use the word judicious, which refers originally to the judgment or understanding, to qualify palate or the sense of taste. Adam's remark depends for its "point" on the double meaning of sapere, which means either to taste or to know.

For this one tree had been forbidden ten.
But come; so well refreshed, now let us play,
As meet is, after such delicious fare;
For never did thy beauty, since the day
I saw thee first and wedded thee, adorned
With all perfections, so inflame my sense
With ardor to enjoy thee, fairer now
Than ever—bounty of this virtuous tree!"

So said he, and forbore not glance or toy
Of amorous intent, well understood
Of Eve, whose eye darted contagious fire.
Her hand he seized, and to a shady bank,
Thick overhead with verdant roof embow-
ered,

He led her, nothing loath; flowers were the couch,

Pansies, and violets, and asphodel,
And hyacinth—earth's freshest, softest lap.
There they their fill of love and love's disport
Took largely, of their mutual guilt the seal,
The solace of their sin, till dewy sleep
Oppressed the n, wearied with their amorous
play.

Soon as the force of that fallacious fruit,
That with exhilarating vapor bland
About their spirits had played, and in most
powers

Made err, was now exhaled, and grosser
sleep,

Bred of unkindly fumes, with conscious dreams

Encumbered, now had left them, up they rose
As from unrest, and each the other viewing, Soon found their eyes how opened, and their minds

How darkened. Innocence, that as a veil Had shadowed them from knowing ill, was
gone;

Just confidence, and native righteousness,
And honor, from about them, naked left
To guilty Shame: he covered, but his robe Uncovered more. So rose the Danite strong,
Herculean Samson, from the harlot-lap
Of Philistean Dalilah, and waked
Shorn of his strength; they destitute and bare
Of all their virtue. Silent, and in face
Confounded, long they sat, as stricken mute;
Till Adam, though not less than Eve abashed,
At length gave utterance to these words constrained:—

"O Eve, in evil hour thou didst give ear
To that false Worm,<sup>3</sup> of whomsoever taught <sup>3</sup>Serpent.

To counterfeit man's voice—true in our fall,
 False in our promised rising; since our eyes
 Opened we find indeed, and find we know
 Both good and evil, good lost and evil got:
 Bad fruit of knowledge, if this be to know,
 Which leaves us naked thus, of honor void,
 Of innocence, of faith, of purity,
 Our wonted ornaments now soiled and stained,
 And in our faces evident the signs
 Of foul concupiscence; whence evil store,
 Even shame, the last of evils; of the first
 Be sure then. How shall I behold the face
 Henceforth of God or Angel, erst with joy
 And rapture so oft beheld? Those Heavenly Shapes
 Will dazzle now this earthly with their blaze
 Insufferably bright. Oh, might I here
 In solitude live savage, in some glade
 Obscured, where highest woods, impenetrable
 To star or sunlight, spread their umbrage broad,
 And brown as evening! Cover me, ye pines!
 Ye cedars, with innumerable boughs
 Hide me, where I may never see them more!
 But let us now, as in bad plight, devise
 What best may, for the present, serve to hide
 The parts of each from other that seem most
 To shame obnoxious, and unseemliest seen—
 Some tree, whose broad smooth leaves, together sewed,
 And girded on our loins, may cover round
 Those middle parts, that this new comer,
 Shame,
 There sit not, and reproach us as unclean.”
 So counseled he, and both together went Into the thickest wood. There soon they chose
 The fig-tree—not that kind for fruit renowned,
 But such as, at this day, to Indians known,
 In Malabar or Decan spreads her arms
 Branching so broad and long that in the ground
 The bended twigs take root, and daughters grow
 About the mother tree,<sup>1</sup> a pillared shade
 High overarched, and echoing walks between:

<sup>1</sup>It is now generally called the banyan tree.

There oft the Indian herdsman, shunning heat,
 Shelters in cool, and tends his pasturing herds
 At loop-holes cut through thickest shade.
 Those leaves
 They gathered, broad as Amazonian targe,
 And with what skill they had together sewed,
 To gird their waist—vain covering, if to hide
 Their guilt and dreaded shame! O how unlike
 To that first naked glory! Such of late Columbus found the American, so girt
 With feathered cincture, naked else and wild,
 Among the trees on isles and woody shores.
 Thus fenced, and, as they thought, their shame in part
 Covered, but not at rest or ease of mind,
 They sat them down to weep. Nor only tears Rained at their eyes, but high winds worse within Began to rise, high passions—anger, hate,
 Mistrust, suspicion, discord—and shook sore
 Their inward state of mind, calm region once
 And full of peace, now tossed and turbulent:
 For understanding ruled not, and the will Heard not her lore, both in subjection now
 To sensual appetite, who, from beneath Usurping over sovran reason, claimed Superior sway. From thus distempered breast
 Adam, estranged in look and altered style,
 Speech intermitted thus to Eve renewed:—
 “Would thou hadst hearkened to my words, and stayed
 With me, as I besought thee, when that strange Desire of wandering, this unhappy morn,
 I know not whence possessed thee! We had then Remained still happy—not, as now, despoiled
 Of all our good, shamed, naked, miserable!
 Let none henceforth seek needless cause to approve
 The faith they owe; when earnestly they seek Such proof, conclude they then begin to fail.”
 To whom, soon moved with touch of blame, thus Eve:—

"What words have passed thy lips, Adam severe?

Imput'st thou that to my default, or will Of wandering, as thou call'st it, which who knows

But might as ill have happened thou being by,

Or to thyself perhaps? Hadst thou been there,

Or here the attempt, thou couldst not have discerned

Fraud in the Serpent, speaking as he spake; No ground of enmity between us known Why he should mean me ill or seek to harm. Was I to have never parted from thy side? As good have grown there still, a lifeless rib.

Being as I am, why didst not thou, the head, Command me absolutely not to go, Going into such danger, as thou saidst?

Too facile then, thou didst not much gainsay,

Nay, didst permit, approve, and fair dismiss.

Hadst thou been firm and fixed in thy dissent,

Neither had I transgressed, nor thou with me."

To whom, then first incensed, Adam replied:—

"Is this the love, is this the recompense Of mine to thee, ingrateful Eve, expressed Immutable when thou wert lost, not I— Who might have lived, and joyed immortal bliss,

Yet willingly chose rather death with thee?

And am I now upbraided as the cause Of thy transgressing? not enough severe,

It seems, in thy restraint! What could I more?

I warned thee, I admonished thee, foretold The danger, and the lurking enemy

That lay in wait; beyond this had been force, And force upon free will hath here no place.

But confidence then bore thee on, secure Either to meet no danger, or to find

Matter of glorious trial; and perhaps I also erred in overmuch admiring

What seemed in thee so perfect that I thought

No evil durst attempt thee. But I rue That error now, which is become my crime,

And thou the accuser. Thus it shall befall Him who, to worth in women<sup>1</sup> overtrusting,

Lets her will rule: restraint she will not brook;

And, left to herself, if evil thence ensue, She first his weak indulgence will accuse."

Thus they in mutual accusation spent The fruitless hours, but neither self-condemning;

And of their vain contest appeared no end.

BOOK X

THE ARGUMENT

MAN's transgression known, the guardian Angels forsake Paradise, and return up to Heaven to approve their vigilance, and are approved; God declaring that the entrance of Satan could not be by them prevented. He sends his Son to judge the transgressors; who descends, and gives sentence accordingly; then, in pity, clothes them both, and reascends. Sin and Death, sitting till then at the gates of Hell, by wondrous sympathy feeling the success of Satan in this new world, and the sin of man there committed, resolve to sit no longer confined in Hell, but to follow Satan, their sire, up to the place of man: to make the way easier from Hell to this world to and fro, they pave a broad highway or bridge over Chaos, according to the track that Satan first made; then, preparing for earth, they meet him, proud of his success, returning to Hell; their mutual gratulation. Satan arrives at Pandemonium; in full assembly relates, with boasting, his success against man; instead of applause is entertained with a general hiss by all his audience, transformed, with himself also, suddenly into Serpents, according to his doom given in Paradise; then, deluded with a show of the Forbidden Tree springing up before them, they, greedily reaching to take of the fruit, chew dust and bitter ashes. The proceedings of Sin and Death: God foretells the final victory of his Son over them, and the renewing of all things; but, for the present, commands his Angels to make several alterations in the heavens and elements. Adam, more and more perceiving his fallen condition, heavily bewails, rejects the condolence of Eve; she persists, and at length appeases him: then, to evade the curse likely to fall on their offspring, proposes to Adam violent ways; which he approves not, but, conceiving better hope, puts her in mind of the late promise made them, that her seed should be revenged on the Serpent, and exhorts her, with him, to seek peace of the offended Deity by repentance and supplication.

<sup>1</sup>Bentley proposed to read "woman," and his emendation has been followed in some modern editions.

BOOK XI

THE ARGUMENT

THE Son of God presents to his Father the prayers of our first parents now repenting, and intercedes for them. God accepts them, but declares that they must no longer abide in Paradise; sends Michael with a band of Cherubim to dispossess them, but first to reveal to Adam future things: Michael's coming down. Adam shows to Eve certain ominous signs; he discerns Michael's approach; goes out to meet him: the Angel announces their departure. Eve's lamentation. Adam pleads, but submits: the Angel leads him up to a high hill; sets before him in vision what shall happen till the Flood.

BOOK XII

THE ARGUMENT

THE Angel Michael continues, from the Flood, to relate what shall succeed; then, in the mention of Abraham, comes by degrees to explain who that Seed of the Woman shall be which was promised Adam and Eve in the Fall: his incarnation, death, resurrection, and ascension; the state of the Church till his second coming. Adam greatly satisfied and recomforted by these relations and promises, descends the hill with Michael; wakens Eve, who all this while had slept, but with gentle dreams composed to quietness of mind and submission. Michael in either hand leads them out of Paradise, the fiery Sword waving behind them, and the Cherubim taking their stations to guard the place.

JOHN DRYDEN (1631-1700)

Dryden was born on 9 August, 1631, at Aldwinkle, a Northamptonshire village. His parents belonged to good families which had been conspicuous for their puritanism. Dryden was sent to Westminster School, in London, and in 1650 entered Trinity College, Cambridge. Like Milton, Dryden did not escape trouble with his college authorities. He took his B. A. in 1654. Dryden's first notable poem was his Heroic Stanzas consecrated to the Memory of his Highness Oliver Cromwell, written in 1658. It is significant of much in Dryden's life and character that he was, two years later, among the first to celebrate the return of Charles II, in his poem called Astraea Redux. If Dryden changed, Dr. Johnson said, he changed with the nation, which of course is true; but it is also true that Dryden as a working man of letters was dependent for his livelihood upon the favor of the great. This was an influence constantly determining what he should write and how he should write, and it was undeniably harmful to him as a poet. Moreover, if Dryden's own sense of personal integrity did not suffer from the life of dependence he was condemned to lead, this was only because his warmly felt interests were specifically literary rather than broadly human, which after all is merely another way of saying that Dryden suffered from essentially the same kind of moral obtuseness as did Bacon. Dryden was dramatist as well as poet, but here too his need of money drove him into close dependence on the taste of his day, with harmful results which are particularly evident in his comedies. The serious plays of the Restoration were of the so-called heroic type. They tended to sensationalism in plot, they were sentimental in conception, and in form they were more or less obedient to classical rule as that was laid down by seventeenth-century criticism. French influences were strong in England after 1660, and played a part in the development of Restoration drama, though the relative strength of the French and native influences entering into the drama of this period is still a debated question. The more notable of Dryden's heroic plays are The Indian Emperor (1665), Tyrannic Love (1669), The Conquest of Granada (in two parts, 1670-1672), and Aurengzebe (1675). All of these were written in rhymed couplets, a practice which Dryden defended in his Essay of Dramatic Poesy (1668). In All for Love (1678), however, Dryden returned to blank verse. Some of his comedies are The Rival Ladies (1664), Sir Martin Mar-All (1667), Marriage à la Mode (1672), and The Spanish Friar (1681).

In 1670 Dryden attained office, being made historiographer-royal and poet laureate, and some years later he was made collector of customs for the port of London, posts which to some extent relieved his financial burdens until the Revolution of 1688, when he lost all his offices and was again reduced to the necessity of earning his living by his pen. The satires for which Dryden is best known as a poet were written in 1681 and 1682—Absalom and Achitophel, MacFlecknoe, and The Medal. In 1682 he also published his defence of the Church of England, Religio Laici. In 1686 Dryden became a Roman Catholic, and in the following year published a defence of his new faith in the form of a beast-fable, The Hind and the Panther. The latter part of the seventeenth century was little favorable to lyric poetry, nor did Dryden attempt to write much in that kind, though his ode, Alexander's Feast, written in 1697, is a brilliant performance. One can hardly escape astonishment at the range of Dryden's power, successfully exerted despite the handicaps of his circumstances and character. In panegyric and satire, in comedy and heroic play and tragedy, in criticism and translation—in all these he excelled; and as England's greatest and most fully representative man of letters in the latter years of the seventeenth century he amply deserved the dictatorship of literature which he attained in his old age.

ALL FOR LOVE OR, THE WORLD WELL LOST<sup>1</sup>

PREFACE

THE death of Antony and Cleopatra is a subject which has been treated by the greatest wits of our nation, after Shakespeare; and by all so variously, that their example has given me the confidence to try myself in this bow of Ulysses amongst the crowd of suitors; and, withal, to take my own measures in aiming at the mark. I doubt not but the is Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra. In the Preface Dryden mentions Plutarch, Appian, and Dion Cassius, but the play affords no evidence that he actually used them.

<sup>1</sup>First performed in the winter of 1677-1678; first published in the latter year. The source of the play

same motive has prevailed with all of us in this attempt; I mean the excellency of the moral; for the chief persons represented were famous patterns of unlawful love, and their end accordingly was unfortunate.* All reasonable men have long since concluded that the hero of the poem ought not to be a character of perfect virtue, for then he could not without injustice be made unhappy; nor yet altogether wicked, because he could not then be pitied: I have therefore steered the middle course, and have drawn the character of Anthony as favorably as Plutarch, Appian, and Dion Cassius would give me leave; the like I have observed in Cleopatra. That which is wanting to work up the pity to a greater height was not afforded me by the story; for the crimes of love which they both committed were not occasioned by any necessity, or fatal ignorance, but were wholly voluntary; since our passions are, or ought to be, within our power. The fabric of the play is regular enough as to the inferior parts of it; and the unities of time, place and action, more exactly observed than, perhaps, the English theater requires. Particularly, the action is so much one that it is the only [play] of the kind without episode or underplot; every scene in the tragedy conducing to the main design, and every act concluding with a turn of it. The greatest error in the contrivance seems to be in the person of Octavia; for, though I might use the privilege of a poet, to introduce her into Alexandria, yet I had not enough considered that the compassion she moved to herself and children was destructive to that which I reserved for Anthony and Cleopatra; whose mutual love being founded upon vice, must lessen the favor of the audience to them, when virtue and innocence were oppressed by it. And though I justified Antony in some measure by making Octavia's departure to proceed wholly from herself, yet the force of the first machine<sup>1</sup> still remained; and the dividing of pity, like the cutting of a river into many channels, abated the strength of the natural stream. But this is an objection which none of my critics have urged against me; and therefore I might have let it pass, if I could have resolved to have been partial to myself. The faults my enemies have found are rather cavils concerning little and not essential decencies; which a master of the ceremonies may decide betwixt us. The French poets, I confess, are strict observers of these punctilios; they would not, for example, have suffered Cleopatra and Octavia to have met; or if they had met, there must only have passed betwixt them some cold civilities, but no eagerness of repartee, for fear of offending against the greatness of their characters and the modesty of their sex. This objection I foresaw and at the same time contemned; for I judged it both natural and probable that Octavia, proud of her new-gained conquest, would search out Cleopatra to triumph over her; and that Cleopatra, thus attacked, was not of a spirit to shun the encounter; and 'tis not unlikely that two exasperated rivals should use such satire as I have put into their mouths; for after all, though the one were a Roman and the other a queen, they were both women. 'Tis true, some actions, though natural, are not fit to be represented; and broad obscenities in words ought in good manners to be avoided: expressions therefore are a modest clothing of our thoughts, as breeches and petticoats are of our bodies. If I have kept myself within the bounds of modesty, all beyond it is but nicety and affectation; which is no more but modesty depraved into a vice; they betray themselves who are too quick of apprehension in such cases, and leave all reasonable men to imagine worse of them than of the poet.

Honest Montaigne goes yet farther: Nous ne sommes que ceremonie; la ceremonie nous emporte, et laissons la substance des choses. Nous nous tenons aux branches, et abandonnons le tronc et le corps. Nous avons appris aux dames de rougir, oyans seulement nommer ce qu'elles ne craignent aucunement a faire; nous n'osons appeller a droit nos membres, et ne craignons pas de les employer a toute sorte de debauche. La ceremonie nous defend d'exprimer par paroles les choses licites et naturelles, et nous l'en croyons; la raison nous defend de n'en faire d'illicites et mauvaises, et personne ne l'en croit.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup>Florio's translation is: We are nought but ceremony; ceremony doth transport us, and we leave the substance

<sup>1</sup>I. e., dramatic motive.

My comfort is that by this opinion my enemies are but sucking critics, who would fain be nibbling ere their teeth are come.

Yet in this nicety of manners does the excellency of French poetry consist; their heroes are the most civil people breathing; but their good breeding seldom extends to a word of sense; all their wit is in their ceremony; they want the genius which animates our state; and therefore 'tis but necessary, when they cannot please, that they should take care not to offend. But as the civillest man in the company is commonly the dullest, so these authors, while they are afraid to make you laugh or cry, out of pure good manners make you sleep. They are so careful not to exasperate a critic that they never leave him any work; so busy with the broom, and make so clean a riddance, that there is little left either for censure or for praise; for no part of a poem is worth our discommending where the whole is insipid; as when we have once tasted of palled<sup>1</sup> wine, we stay not to examine it glass by glass. But while they affect to shine in trifles, they are often careless in essentials. Thus, their Hippolitus<sup>2</sup> is so scrupulous in point of decency that he will rather expose himself to death than accuse his stepmother to his father; and my critics, I am sure, will commend him for it: but we of grosser apprehensions are apt to think that this excess of generosity is not practicable but with fools and madmen. This was good manners with a vengeance; and the audience is like to be much concerned at the misfortunes of this admirable hero; but take Hippolitus out of his poetic fit, and I suppose he would think it a wiser part to set the saddle on the right horse, and choose rather to live with the reputation of a plain-spoken honest man, than to die with the infamy of an incestuous villain. In the mean time we may take notice, that where the poet ought to have preserved the character as of things; we hold fast by the boughs, and leave the trunk or body. We have taught ladies to blush, only by hearing that named, which they nothing fear to do. We dare not call our members by their proper names, and fear not to employ them in all kind of dissoluteness. Ceremony forbids us by words to express lawful and natural things, and we believe it. Reason willetth us to do no bad or unlawful things, and no man giveth credit unto it (Essais, II, xvii).

<sup>1</sup>Vapid.

<sup>2</sup>In Racine's Phèdre.

it was delivered to us by antiquity, when he should have given us the picture of a rough young man of the Amazonian strain, a jolly huntsman, and both by his profession and his early rising a mortal enemy to love, he has chosen to give him the turn of gallantry, sent him to travel from Athens to Paris, taught him to make love, and transformed the Hippolitus of Euripides into Monsieur Hippolite. I should not have troubled myself thus far with French poets, but that I find our Chedreux critics<sup>3</sup> wholly form their judgments by them. But for my part, I desire to be tried by the laws of my own country; for it seems unjust to me that the French should prescribe here, till they have conquered. Our little sonneteers who follow them have too narrow souls to judge of poetry. Poets themselves are the most proper, though I conclude not the only critics. But till some genius as universal as Aristotle shall arise, one who can penetrate into all arts and sciences without the practice of them, I shall think it reasonable that the judgment of an artificer in his own art should be preferable to the opinion of another man; at least where he is not bribed by interest or prejudiced by malice; and this, I suppose, is manifest by plain induction: for, first, the crowd cannot be presumed to have more than a gross instinct of what pleases or displeases them: every man will grant me this; but then, by a particular kindness to himself, he draws his own stake first, and will be distinguished from the multitude, of which other men may think him one. But, if I come closer to those who are allowed for witty men, either by the advantage of their quality or by common fame, and affirm that neither are they qualified to decide sovereignly concerning poetry, I shall yet have a strong party of my opinion; for most of them severally will exclude the rest, either from the number of witty men, or at least of able judges. Put here again they are all indulgent to themselves; and every one who believes himself a wit, that is, every man, will pretend at the same time to a right of judging. But to press it yet farther, there are many witty men but few poets; neither have all poets a taste of tragedy. And this is the rock on which they are daily splitting.

<sup>3</sup>I. e., our Frenchified critics (Chedreux was a kind of wig, so named from the man who first made it).

Poetry, which is a picture of nature, must generally please; but 'tis not to be understood that all parts of it must please every man; therefore is not tragedy to be judged by a witty man, whose taste is only confined to comedy. Nor is every man who loves tragedy a sufficient judge of it; he must understand the excellencies of it too, or he will only prove a blind admirer, not a critic. From hence it comes that so many satires on poets and censures of their writings fly abroad. Men of pleasant conversation (at least esteemed so) and indued with a trifling kind of fancy, perhaps helped out with some smattering of Latin, are ambitious to distinguish themselves from the herd of gentlemen by their poetry.

Rarus enim fermè sensus communis in illâ Fortunâ.<sup>1</sup>

And is not this a wretched affectation, not to be contented with what fortune has done for them, and sit down quietly with their estates, but they must call their wits in question, and needlessly expose their nakedness to public view? Not considering that they are not to expect the same approbation from sober men, which they have found from their flatterers after the third bottle? If a little glittering in discourse has passed them on us for witty men, where was the necessity of undeceiving the world? Would a man who has an ill title to an estate, but yet is in possession of it, would he bring it of his own accord to be tried at Westminster? We who write, if we want the talent, yet have the excuse that we do it for a poor subsistence; but what can be urged in their defence, who, not having the vocation of poverty to scribble,<sup>2</sup> out of mere wantonness take pains to make themselves ridiculous? Horace was certainly in the right, where he said that "no man is satisfied with his condition." A poet is not pleased because he is not rich; and the rich are discontented because the poets will not admit them of their number. Thus the case is hard with writers: if they succeed not, they must starve; and if they do, some malicious satire is prepared to level them for daring to please without their leave. But while they are so eager to destroy the fame of others, their ambition is manifest in their concernment: some poem of their own is to be produced, and the slaves are to be laid flat with their faces on the ground, that the monarch may appear in the greater majesty.

Dionysius and Nero had the same longings, but with all their power they could never bring their business well about. 'Tis true, they proclaimed themselves poets by sound of trumpet; and poets they were, upon pain of death to any man who durst call them otherwise. The audience had a fine time on't, you may imagine; they sat in a bodily fear, and looked as demurely as they could, for 'twas a hanging matter to laugh unseasonably; and the tyrants were suspicious, as they had reason, that their subjects had 'em in the wind; so every man in his own defence set as good a face upon the business as he could; 'twas known beforehand that the monarchs were to be crowned laureates; but when the show was over, and an honest man was suffered to depart quietly, he took out his laughter which he had stifled; with a firm resolution never more to see an emperor's play, though he had been ten years a making it. In the mean time the true poets were they who made the best markets; for they had wit enough to yield the prize with a good grace, and not contend with him who had thirty legions: they were sure to be rewarded, if they confessed themselves bad writers, and that was somewhat better than to be martyrs for their reputation. Lucan's example was enough to teach them manners; and after he was put to death, for overcoming Nero, the emperor carried it without dispute for the best poet in his dominions; no man was ambitious of that grinning honor; for if he heard the malicious trumpeter proclaiming his name before his betters, he knew there was but one way with him. Mæcenas took another course, and we know he was more than a great man, for he was witty too; but finding himself far gone in poetry, which Seneca assures us was not his talent, he thought it his best way to be well with Virgil and with Horace; that at least he might be a poet at the second hand; and we see how happily it has succeeded with him; for his own bad poetry is forgotten, and their panegyrics of him still remain. But they who should be our patrons are for no such expensive ways to fame; they have much of the poetry of Mæcnas, but little of his liberality. They are for persecuting Horace and Virgil, in the persons of their successors (for such is every man who has any part of their soul and fire, though in a less degree). Some of their little zanies<sup>1</sup> yet go farther; for they are persecutors even of Horace himself, as far as they are able, by their ignorant and vile imitations of him; by making an unjust use of his authority, and turning his artillery against his friends. But how would he disdain to be copied by such hands! I dare answer for him, he would be more uneasy in their company than he was with Crispinus, their forefather, in the Holy Way;<sup>2</sup> and would no more have allowed them a place amongst the critics than he would Demetrius the mimic and Tigellius the buffoon:

<sup>1</sup>For common sense is quite scarce among men of that sort (Juvenal, Satires, viii, 73-74.)

<sup>2</sup>L. e., the call of poverty to summon them to scribble.

—Demetri, teque, Tigelli,
Discipulorum inter jubeo plorare cathedras.<sup>3</sup>

With what scorn would he look down on such miserable translators, who make doggerel of his Latin, mistake his meaning, misapply his censures, and often contradict their own? He is fixed as a landmark to set out the bounds of poetry:

—Saxum antiquum ingens,
Limes agro positus, litem ut discerneret arvis.<sup>4</sup>

But other arms than theirs and other sinews are required to raise the weight of such an author; and when they would toss him against their enemies,

*Genua labant, gelidus concrevit frigore sanguis;
Tum lapi: ipse viri vacuum per inane volutus
Nec spatium evasit totum, nec pertulit ictum.*<sup>5</sup>

For my part, I would wish no other revenge, either for myself or the rest of the

<sup>1</sup>A zany was an attendant clown who awkwardly mimicked the chief clown in a show.

<sup>2</sup>A wretched poet mentioned by Horace (Satires, I, li, 120), whom Dryden identifies with the bore Horace met on the Via Sacra (Satires, I, ix).

<sup>3</sup>Demetrius and Tigellius, go whine among the benches of your pupils (Horace, Satires, I, x, 90-91; Dryden's discipulorum should be discipularum).

<sup>4</sup>A huge old rock, set down to mark the boundary of the field, and ward off all disputes (Æneid, XII, 1897-898; Dryden omits some words in the original).

<sup>5</sup>Their knees grow weak, their blood runs cold with fear, and the rock itself, hurtling through the empty air, neither traverses the distance nor reaches its mark (Æneid, XII, 905-907; the translation is slightly inaccurate, to suit Dryden's sense).

poets, from this rhyming judge of the twelve-penny gallery, this legitimate son of Sternhold,<sup>6</sup> than that he would subscribe his name to his censure, or (not to tax him beyond his learning) set his mark; for should he own himself publicly, and come from behind the lion's skin, they whom he condemns would be thankful to him, they whom he praises would choose to be condemned; and the magistrates whom he has elected, would modestly withdraw from their employment, to avoid the scandal of his nomination. The sharpness of his satire, next to himself, falls most heavily on his friends, and they ought never to forgive him for commending them perpetually the wrong way, and sometimes by contraries. If he have a friend whose hastiness in writing is his greatest fault, Horace would have taught him to have minced the matter, and to have called it readiness of thought and a flowing fancy; for friendship will allow a man to christen an imperfection by the name of some neighbor virtue:

*Vellem in amicitia sic erraremus; et isti
Errori, nomen virtus posuisset honestum.*<sup>7</sup>

But he would never have allowed him to have called a slow man hasty, or a hasty writer a slow drudge, as Juvenal explains it:

—Canibus pigris, scabieque vetustâ
*Levibus, et siccæ lambentibus ora lucernæ, Nomen erit Pardus, Tygris, Leo; si quid adhuc
est*

Quod fremit in terris violentius.<sup>8</sup>

Yet Lucretius laughs at a foolish lover, even for excusing the imperfections of his mistress:

*Nigra μέλιχρος est, immunda et fætida ἄκοσμος.
Balba loqui non quit, τρανάζει; muta pudens
est, etc.*<sup>9</sup>

<sup>6</sup>The author, with others, of a metrical version of the Psalms once widely popular. Dryden means to say that his "rhyming judge" (who was Lord Rochester) is a wretched poet.

<sup>7</sup>Would that in friendship we might thus name things wrong, and that to our error virtue had given an honorable name (Horace, Satires, I, iii, 41-42).

<sup>8</sup>Lazy dogs, grown bald with mange, that lick t'e edge of a dry lamp, will be named Leopard, Tiger, Lion, or any other beast on earth that roars more furiously (Juvenal, Satires, VIII, 83-86).

<sup>9</sup>The dark-skinned maid is a brunette, the sluttish and untidy, unconventional. The stutterer lisps; the dumb is modest (Lucretius, On the Nature of Things, IV, 1160, 1164).

But to drive it ad Æthiopem cygnum<sup>1</sup> is not to be endured. I leave him to interpret this by the benefit of his French version on the other side, and without further considering him than I have the rest of my illiterate censors, whom I have disdained to answer because they are not qualified for judges. It remains that I acquaint the reader that I have endeavored in this play to follow the practice of the ancients, who, as Mr. Rymer<sup>2</sup> has judiciously observed, are and ought to be our masters. Horace likewise gives it for a rule in his Art of Poetry:

———*Vos exemplaria Græca
Nocturnâ versate manu, versate diurnâ.*<sup>3</sup>

Yet, though their models are regular, they are too little for English tragedy, which requires to be built in a larger compass. I could give an instance in the Oedipus Tyrannus, which was the masterpiece of Sophocles; but I reserve it for a more fit occasion, which I hope to have hereafter. In my style I have professed to imitate the divine Shakespeare; which that I might perform more freely, I have disencumbered myself from rhyme. Not that I condemn my former way, but that this is more proper to my present purpose. I hope I need not to explain myself, that I have not copied my author servilely; words and phrases must of necessity receive a change in succeeding ages; but 'tis almost a miracle that much of his language remains so pure; and that he who began dramatic poetry amongst us, untaught by any, and as Ben Jonson tells us, without learning, should by the force of his own genius perform so much that in a manner he has left no praise for any who come after him. The occasion is fair, and the subject would be pleasant to handle the difference of styles betwixt him and Fletcher, and wherein and how far they are both to be imitated. But since I must not be over-confident of my own performance after him, it will be prudence in me to be silent. Yet I hope I may affirm, and without vanity, that by imitating him I have excelled myself throughout the play; and particularly, that I prefer the scene betwixt Antony and Ventidius in the first act to anything which I have written in this kind.

PROLOGUE to Antony and Cleopatra.

What flocks of critics hover here to-day,
As vultures wait on armies for their prey,
All gaping for the carcass of a play!
With croaking notes they bode some dire
event,
And follow dying poets by the scent.
Ours gives himself for gone; y'have watched your time!

He fights this day unarmed—without his rhyme;

And brings a tale which often has been told,
As sad as Dido's and almost as old.

His hero, whom you wits his bully call,
Bates of his mettle and scarce rants at all:
He's somewhat lewd, but a well-meaning
mind;

Weeps much; fights little; but is wond'rous
kind.

In short, a pattern and companion fit
For all the keeping Tonys<sup>4</sup> of the pit.
I could name more: a wife, and mistress too;
Both (to be plain) too good for most of you:
The wife well-natured, and the mistress true.)

Now, poets, if your fame has been his care,
Allow him all the candor you can spare.
A brave man scorns to quarrel once a day,
Like Hectors<sup>5</sup> in at every petty fray.
Let those find fault whose wit's so very small,
They've need to show that they can think at
all;

Errors like straws upon the surface flow;
He who would search for pearls must dive below.

Fops may have leave to level all they can,
As pigmies would be glad to lop a man.
Half-wits are fleas; so little and so light,
We scarce could know they live, but that they bite.

But, as the rich, when tired with daily feasts,
For change become their next poor tenants'
guests;

Drink hearty draughts of ale from plain
brown bowls,

And snatch the homely rasher from the coals,
So you, retiring from much better cheer,
For once may venture to do penance here.

<sup>1</sup>To the point of terming an Ethiopian a swan (Juvenal, Satires, VIII, 33).

<sup>2</sup>Thomas Rymer (1641–1713), a critic of the drama.

<sup>3</sup>Con night and day the models furnished by the Greeks (ll. 268–269).

<sup>4</sup>Fools.

<sup>5</sup>This name was applied to the ruffians who infested London.

And since that plenteous autumn now is past,
Whose grapes and peaches have indulged
your taste,
Take in good part, from our poor poet's
board,
Such rivelled<sup>1</sup> fruits as winter can afford.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ

Marc Antony
Ventidius, his General
Dollabella, his Friend
Alexas, the Queen's Eunuch
Serapion, Priest of Isis
Myris, another Priest Servants to Antony

Cleopatra, Queen of Egypt
Octavia, Antony's Wife
Charmion, } Cleopatra's Maids
Iras, }
Antony's two little Daughters.

SCENE—ALEXANDRIA.

ACT I. SCENE, The Temple of Isis.

Enter Serapion, Myris, Priests of Isis.

Serapion. Portents and prodigies are grown so frequent That they have lost their name. Our fruitful Nile
Flowed ere the wonted season, with a torrent
So unexpected and so wondrous fierce,
That the wild deluge overtook the haste E'en of the hinds that watched it: men and beasts
Were born above the tops of trees that grew
On th'utmost margin of the water-mark.
Then with so swift an ebb the flood drove backward,
It slipped from underneath the scaly herd;
Here monstrous phoece<sup>2</sup> panted on the shore;
Forsaken dolphins there, with their broad tails,
Lay lashing the departing waves; hard by
'em,
Sea-horses flound'ring in the slimy mud,
Tossed up their heads, and dashed the ooze about 'em.

Enter Alexas behind them.

Myris. Avert these omens, Heaven!

Serap. Last night, between the hours of twelve and one,

In a lone isle o' th' temple while I walked,
A whirl-wind rose, that with a violent blast
Shook all the dome: the doors around me
clapped;

The iron wicket that defends the vault
Where the long race of Ptolomies is laid,
Burst open, and disclosed the mighty dead.
From out each monument, in order placed,
An arméd ghost start<sup>3</sup> up: the boy-king last Reared his inglorious head. A peal of groans
Then followed, and a lamentable voice Cried, "Egypt is no more." My blood ran
back;

My shaking knees against each other knocked;

On the cold pavement down I fell intranced,
And so unfinished left the horrid scene.

Alexas (showing himself). And dreamed you this? or did invent the story,
To frighten our Egyptian boys withal,
And train 'em up betimes in fear of priesthood?

Serap. My lord, I saw you not,
Nor meant my words should reach your ears;
but what

I uttered was most true.

Alex. A foolish dream,
Bred from the fumes of indigested feasts
And holy luxury.

Serap. I know my duty;
This goes no farther.

Alex. 'Tis not fit it should.
Nor would the times now bear it, were it true.
All southern from yon hills, the Roman camp
Hangs o'er us black and threat'ning, like a storm

Just breaking on our heads.

Serap. Our faint Egyptians pray for Antony;

But in their servile hearts they own Octavius.

Myr. Why then does Antony dream out his hours,

And tempts not fortune for a noble day,
Which might redeem what Actium lost?

Alex. He thinks 'tis past recovery.

Serap. Yet the foe
Seems not to press the siege.

Alex. O, there's the wonder.

Mecænas and Agrippa, who can most<sup>4</sup>
With Cæsar, are his foes. His wife Octavia, Driv'n from his house, solicits her revenge;

<sup>1</sup>Shrunken.

<sup>2</sup>Seals.

<sup>3</sup>I. e., started.

<sup>4</sup>Who prevail most.

And Dollabella, who was once his friend, Upon some private grudge now seeks his ruin;

Yet still war seems on either side to sleep.
Serap. 'Tis strange that Antony for some days past

Has not beheld the face of Cleopatra;
But here in Isis temple lives retired,
And makes his heart a prey to black despair.

Alex. 'Tis true; and we much fear he hopes by absence

To cure his mind of love.

Serap. If he be vanquished,
Or make his peace, Egypt is doomed to be A Roman province; and our plenteous harvests

Must then redeem the scarceness of their soil.
While Antony stood firm, our Alexandria Rivaled proud Rome (dominion's other seat),

And Fortune, striding like a vast Colossus,
Could fix an equal foot of empire here.

Alex. Had I my wish, these tyrants of all nature

Who lord it o'er mankind, should perish—
perish

Each by the other's sword; but, since our
will

Is lamely followed by our power, we must Depend on one, with him to rise or fall.

Serap. How stands the queen affected?

Alex. O, she dotes,
She dotes, Serapion, on this vanquished man,
And winds her self about his mighty ruins;
Whom would she yet forsake, yet yield him
up,

This hunted prey, to his pursuer's hands,
She might preserve us all; but 'tis in vain—
This changes my designs, this blasts my counsels,

And makes me use all means to keep him
here,

Whom I could wish divided from her arms,
Far as the earth's deep center. Well, you
know

The state of things; no more of your ill
omens

And black prognostics; labor to confirm
The people's hearts.

Enter Ventidius, talking aside with a Gentleman of Antony's.

Serap. These Romans will o'erhear us.
But who's that stranger? By his warlike port,

His fierce demeanor, and erected look,
He's of no vulgar note.

Alex. O, 'tis Ventidius,
Our emp'ror's great lieutenant in the East,
Who first showed Rome that Parthia could be conquered.

When Antony returned from Syria last,
He left this man to guard the Roman frontiers.

Serap. You seem to know him well.

Alex. Too well. I saw him in Cilicia
first,

When Cleopatra there met Antony;
A mortal foe he was to us, and Egypt.
But, let me witness to the worth I hate,
A braver Roman never drew a sword.
Firm to his prince; but as a friend, not slave.
He ne'er was of his pleasures; but presides
O'er all his cooler hours and morning counsels;

In short, the plainness, fierceness, rugged virtue

Of an old true-stamped Roman lives in him.
His coming bodes I know not what of ill
To our affairs. Withdraw, to mark him better;

And I'll acquaint you why I sought you here,
And what's our present work.

They withdraw to a corner of the stage; and Ventidius, with the other, comes forward to the front.

Ventidius. Not see him, say you?

I say, I must and will.

Gentleman. He has commanded,
On pain of death none should approach his presence.

Ven. I bring him news will raise his drooping spirits,
Give him new life.

Gent. He sees not Cleopatra.

Ven. Would he had never seen her!

Gent. He eats not, drinks not, sleeps not,
has no use

Of any thing, but thought; or, if he talks,
'Tis to himself, and then 'tis perfect raving;
Then he defies the world, and bids it pass;
Sometimes he gnaws his lip, and curses
loud

The boy Octavius; then he draws his mouth
Into a scornful smile, and cries, "Take all,
The world's not worth my care."

Ven. Just, just his nature.

Virtue's his path; but sometimes 'tis too narrow

For his vast soul; and then he starts out wide,
And bounds into a vice that bears him far
From his first course, and plunges him in ills:
But when his danger makes him find his fault,

Quick to observe and full of sharp remorse,
He censures eagerly his own misdeeds,
Judging himself with malice to himself,
And not forgiving what as a man he did,
Because his other parts are more than man.
He must not thus be lost.

Alexas and the priests come forward.

Alex. You have your full instructions,
now advance;

Proclaim your orders loudly.

Serap. Romans, Egyptians, hear the queen's command.

Thus Cleopatra bids: "Let labor cease,
To pomp and triumphs give this happy
day,

That gave the world a lord: 'tis Antony's."
Live, Antony; and Cleopatra live!

Be this the general voice sent up to Heaven,
And every public place repeat this echo.

Ven. (aside). Fine pageantry!

Serap. Set out before your doors
The images of all your sleeping fathers,
With laurels crowned; with laurels wreath
your posts,

And strew with flowers the pavement; let the priests

Do present sacrifice; pour out the wine,
And call the gods to join with you in gladness.

Ven. Curse on the tongue that bids this general joy!

Can they be friends of Antony, who revel
When Antony's in danger? Hide, for shame,
You Romans, your great grandsires' images,
For fear their souls should animate their marbles,

To blush at their degenerate progeny.

Alex. A love, which knows no bounds, to Antony,

Would mark the day with honors, when all
Heaven

Labored for him, when each propitious star
Stood wakeful in his orb, to watch that hour,
And shed his better influence. Her own birth-day

Our queen neglected, like a vulgar fête
That passed obscurely by.

Ven. Would it had slept,
Divided far from his; till some remote

And future age had called it out, to ruin
Some other prince, not him.

Alex.

Your emperor,
Though grown unkind, would be more gentle than

T' upbraid my queen for loving him too well.

Ven. Does the mute sacrifice upbraid the priest?

He knows him not his executioner.

O, she has decked his ruin with her love,
Led him in golden bands to gaudy slaughter,
And made perdition pleasing; she has left
him

The blank of what he was;

I tell thee, eunuch, she has quite unmanned
him.

Can any Roman see, and know him now,
Thus altered from the lord of half mankind,
Unbent, unsinewed, made a woman's toy,
Shrunk from the vast extent of all his honors,
And cramped within a corner of the world?
O, Antony!

Thou bravest soldier and thou best of friends!
Bounteous as nature; next to nature's God!
Couldst thou but make new worlds, so wouldst thou give 'em,

As bounty were thy being. Rough in battle
As the first Romans when they went to war;
Yet after victory more pitiful

Than all their praying virgins left at home!

Alex. Would you could add to those more shining virtues,

His truth to her who loves him.

Ven.

Would I could not!
But wherefore waste I precious hours with
thee?

Thou art her darling mischief, her chief engine,

Antony's other fate. Go, tell thy queen,
Ventidius is arrived, to end her charms.

Let your Egyptian timbrels play alone;
Nor mix effeminate sounds with Roman trumpets.

You dare not fight for Antony; go pray,
And keep your cowards'-holy-day in temples.

Exeunt Alexas, Serapion.

Re-enter the Gentlemen of M. Antony.

2 Gentleman. The emperor approaches,
and commands,

On pain of death, that none presume to stay.

1 Gent. I dare not disobey him.

Going out with the other.

Ven.

Well, I dare.
But I'll observe him first unseen, and find

Which way his humor drives, the rest I'll venture.

Withdraws.

Enter Antony, walking with a disturbed motion, before he speaks.

Antony. They tell me, 'tis my birthday, and I'll keep it

With double pomp of sadness.

'Tis what the day deserves which gave me breath.

Why was I raised the meteor of the world,
Hung in the skies, and blazing as I traveled,
Till all my fires were spent; and then cast downward

To be trod out by Cæsar?

Ven. (aside). On my soul;

'Tis mournful, wondrous mournful!

Ant. Count thy gains.

Now, Antony, wouldst thou be born for this?
Glutton of fortune, thy devouring youth
Has starved thy wanting age.

Ven. (aside). How sorrow shakes him!

So, now the tempest tears him up by th' roots,

And on the ground extends the noble ruin.

Antony having thrown himself down.

Ant. Lie there, thou shadow of an emperor;

The place thou pressest on thy mother earth
Is all thy empire now: now it contains thee:
Some few days hence, and then 't will be too large,

When thou'rt contracted in thy narrow urn,
Shrunk to a few cold ashes; then Octavia
(For Cleopatra will not live to see it),
Octavia then will have thee all her own,
And bear thee in her widowed hand to Cæsar;
Cæsar will weep, the crocodile will weep,
To see his rival of the universe

Lie still and peaceful there. I'll think no more on 't.

Give me some music; look that it be sad;
I'll soothe my melancholy, till I swell

And burst my self with sighing.—Soft music.

'Tis somewhat to my humor; stay, I fancy
I'm now turned wild, a commoner of nature,
Of all forsaken and forsaking all;

Live in a shady forest's sylvan scene,
Stretched at my length beneath some blasted oak,

I lean my head upon the mossy bark,
And look just of a piece as I grew from it;
My uncombed locks, matted like mistletoe,
Hang o'er my hoary face; a murm'ring brook
Runs at my foot.

Ven. (aside). Methinks I fancy Myself there too.

Ant. The herd come jumping by me,
And, fearless, quench their thirst, while I look on,

And take me for their fellow-citizen.

More of this image, more; it lulls my thoughts.

Soft music again.

Ven. (aside). I must disturb him; I can hold no longer.

Stands before him.

Ant. (starting up). Art thou Ventidius?

Ven. Are you Antony?

I'm liker what I was, than you to him

I left you last.

Ant. I'm angry.

Ven. So am I.

Ant. I would be private; leave me.

Ven. Sir, I love you,

And therefore will not leave you.

Ant. Will not leave me!

Where have you learned that answer? Who am I?

Ven. My emperor; the man I love next
Heaven;

If I said more, I think 'twere scarce a sin;
Y' are all that's good, and god-like.

Ant. All that's wretched.

You will not leave me then?

Ven. 'Twas too presuming

To say I would not; but I dare not leave you;
And, 'tis unkind in you to chide me hence
So soon, when I so far have come to see you.

Ant. Now thou hast seen me, art thou satisfied?

For, if a friend, thou hast beheld enough;

And, if a foe, too much.

Ven. (weeping). Look, emperor, this is no common dew.

I have not wept this forty year; but now

My mother comes afresh into my eyes;

I cannot help her softness.

Ant. By Heav'n, he weeps, poor good old man, he weeps!

The big round drops course<sup>1</sup> one another
down

The furrows of his cheeks. Stop 'em,
Ventidius,

Or I shall blush to death; they set my shame,
That caused 'em, full before me.

Ven. I'll do my best.

Ant. Sure there's contagion in the tears of friends:

<sup>1</sup>Pursue.

See, I have caught it too. Believe me, 'tis not

For my own griefs, but thine—Nay, father.

Ven. Emperor.

Ant. Emperor! Why, that's the style of victory,

The conqu'ring soldier, red with unfelt wounds,

Salutes his general so: but never more

Shall that sound reach my ears.

Ven. I warrant you.

Ant. Actium, Actium! Oh——

Ven. It sits too near you.

Ant. Here, here it lies; a lump of lead by day,

And, in my short distracted nightly slumbers,
The hag that rides my dreams——

Ven. Out with it, give it vent.

Ant. Urge not my shame.

I lost a battle.

Ven. So has Julius done.

Ant. Thou favor'st me, and speak'st not half thou think'st;

For Julius fought it out, and lost it fairly:

But Antony——

Ven. Nay, stop not.

Ant. Antony

(Well, thou wilt have it), like a coward, fled, Fled while his soldiers fought; fled first,
Ventidius.

Thou long'st to curse me, and I give thee leave.

I know thou cam'st prepared to rail.

Ven. I did.

Ant. I'll help thee.—I have been a man,
Ventidius——

Ven. Yes, and a brave one; but——

Ant. I know thy meaning,

But I have lost my reason, have disgraced
The name of soldier with inglorious ease;
In the full vintage of my flowing honors,
Sat still, and saw it pressed by other hands.
Fortune came smiling to my youth, and wooded it,

And purple greatness met my ripened years.
When first I came to empire, I was borne
On tides of people, crowding to my triumphs,
The wish of nations; and the willing world
Received me as its pledge of future peace;
I was so great, so happy, so belov'd,
Fate could not ruin me; till I took pains,
And worked against my fortune, chid her from me,

And turned her loose; yet still she came again.

My careless days, and my luxurious nights,
At length have wearied her, and now she's
gone,

Gone, gone, divorced for ever. Help me,
soldier,

To curse this madman, this industrious fool,
Who labored to be wretched; prithee, curse
me.

Ven. No.

Ant. Why?

Ven. You are too sensible already
Of what y' have done, too conscious of your failings;

And, like a scorpion, whipped by others first
To fury, sting yourself in mad revenge.

I would bring balm and pour it in your
wounds,

Cure your distempered mind, and heal your fortunes.

Ant. I know thou wouldst.

Ven. I will.

Ant. Ha, ha, ha, ha!

Ven. You laugh.

Ant. I do, to see officious love
Give cordials to the dead.

Ven. You would be lost then?

Ant. I am.

Ven. I say you are not. Try your fortune.

Ant. I have, to th' utmost. Dost thou think me desperate

Without just cause? No, when I found all lost

Beyond repair, I hid me from the world,
And learned to scorn it here; which now I do
So heartily, I think it is not worth
The cost of keeping.

Ven. Cæsar thinks not so;

He'll thank you for the gift he could not take.
You would be killed like Tully,<sup>1</sup> would you?

Do,

Hold out your throat to Cæsar, and die
tamely.

Ant. No, I can kill myself; and so resolve.

Ven. I can die with you too, when time shall serve;

But fortune calls upon us now to live,
To fight, to conquer.

Ant. Sure thou dream'st, Ventidius.

Ven. No; 'tis you dream; you sleep away your hours

In desperate sloth, miscalled philosophy.

<sup>1</sup>Cicero.

Up, up, for honor's sake; twelve legions wait
you,

And long to call you chief; by painful journeys

I led 'em, patient both of heat and hunger,
Down from the Parthian marches to the Nile.
'Twill do you good to see their sun-burned
faces,

Their scarred cheeks, and chopped hands;
there's virtue in 'em.

They'll sell those mangled limbs at dearer rates

Than yon trim bands can buy.

Ant. Where left you them?

Ven. I said in Lower Syria.

Ant. Bring 'em hither;

There may be life in these.

Ven. They will not come.

Ant. Why didst thou mock my hopes with promised aids,

To double my despair? They're mutinous.

Ven. Most firm and loyal.

Ant. Yet they will not march

To succor me. O trifle!

Ven. They petition

You would make hast to head 'em.

Ant. I'm besieged.

Ven. There's but one way shut up; how came I hither?

Ant. I will not stir.

Ven. They would perhaps desire

A better reason.

Ant. I have never used<sup>1</sup>

My soldiers to demand a reason of My actions. Why did they refuse to march?

Ven. They said they would not fight for Cleopatra.

Ant. What was 't they said?

Ven. They said they would not fight for Cleopatra.

Why should they fight, indeed, to make her conquer,

And make you more a slave? to gain you kingdoms,

Which, for a kiss, at your next midnight feast You'll sell to her? Then she new-names her
jewels,

And calls this diamond such or such a tax;
Each pendant in her ear shall be a province.

Ant. Ventidius, I allow your tongue free licence

On all my other faults; but, on your life,

No word of Cleopatra; she deserves
More worlds than I can lose.

Ven. Behold, you Powers,
To whom you have entrusted humankind;
See Europe, Afric', Asia, put in balance,
And all weighed down by one light, worthless
woman!

I think the gods are Antonys, and give
Like prodigals this nether world away
To none but wasteful hands.

Ant. You grow presumptuous.

Ven. I take the privilege of plain love to speak.

Ant. Plain love! plain arrogance, plain insolence!

Thy men are cowards; thou, an envious
traitor;

Who, under seeming honesty, hast vented
The burden of thy rank, o'erflowing gall.

O that thou wert my equal, great in arms
As the first Cæsar was, that I might kill thee
Without a stain to honor!

Ven. You may kill me;
You have done more already, called me
traitor.

Ant. Art thou not one?

Ven. For showing you your self,
Which none else durst have done? But had
I been

That name which I disdain to speak again,
I needed not have sought your abject fortunes,

Come to partake your fate, to die with you.
What hindered me t' have led my conqu'ring eagles

To fill Octavius's bands? I could have been A traitor then, a glorious, happy traitor,
And not have been so called.

Ant. Forgive me, soldier;
I've been too passionate.

Ven. You thought me false;
Thought my old age betrayed you; kill me,
sir;

Pray, kill me; yet you need not, your unkindness
Has left your sword no work.

Ant. I did not think so;

I said it in my rage; prithee, forgive me;
Why didst thou tempt my anger, by discovery

Of what I would not hear?

Ven. No prince but you Could merit that sincerity I used,
Nor durst another man have ventured it;

<sup>1</sup>U. e., accustomed.

But you, ere love misled your wandering eyes,

Were sure the chief and best of human race,
Framed in the very pride and boast of nature;
So perfect, that the gods, who formed you, wondered

At their own skill, and cried, "A lucky hit Has mended our design." Their envy hindered,

Else you had been immortal, and a pattern,
When Heav'n would work for ostentation's
sake,

To copy out again.

Ant. But Cleopatra—
Go on; for I can bear it now.

Ven. No more.

Ant. Thou dar'st not trust my passion;
but thou may'st;

Thou only lov'st, the rest have flattered me.

Ven. Heav'n's blessing on your heart for that kind word!

May I believe you love me? Speak again.

Ant. Indeed I do. Speak this, and this,
and this. Hugging him.

Thy praises were unjust; but I'll deserve 'em,
And yet mend all. Do with me what thou wilt;

Lead me to victory, thou know'st the way.

Ven. And will you leave this—

Ant. Prithee, do not curse her,
And I will leave her; though, Heav'n knows,
I love

Beyond life, conquest, empire, all but honor:
But I will leave her.

Ven. That's my royal master;
And shall we fight?

Ant. I warrant thee, old soldier.
Thou shalt behold me once again in iron;
And at the head of our old troops, that beat
The Parthians, cry aloud, "Come, follow
me!"

Ven. O, now I hear my emperor! in that word

Octavius fell. Gods, let me see that day,
And, if I have ten years behind, take all;
I'll thank you for th'exchange.

Ant. Oh, Cleopatra!

Ven. Again?

Ant. I've done; in that last sigh
she went.

Cæsar shall know what 'tis to force a lover
From all he holds most dear.

Ven. Methinks you breathe
Another soul; your looks are more divine;

You speak a hero, and you move a god.

Ant. O, thou hast fired me; my soul's up
in arms,

And mans each part about me; once again,
That noble eagerness of fight has seized me;
That eagerness with which I darted upward
To Cassius's camp; in vain the steepy hill
Opposed my way; in vain a war of spears Sung round my head and planted all my
shield;

I won the trenches while my foremost men
Lagged on the plain below.

Ven. Ye gods, ye gods,
For such another hour!

Ant. Come on, my soldier!
Our hearts and arms are still the same; I long
Once more to meet our foes; that thou and I, Like Time and Death, marching before our troops,

May taste<sup>1</sup> fate to 'em; mow 'em out a passage,

And entr'ring where the foremost squadrons yield,

Begin the noble harvest of the field.

Exeunt.

ACT II

Cleopatra, Iras, and Alexas.

Cleopatra. What shall I do, or whither shall I turn?

Ventidius has o'ercome, and he will go.

Alexas. He goes to fight for you.

Cleop. Then he would see me, ere he went
to fight;

Flatter me not; if once he goes, he's lost,
And all my hopes destroyed.

Alex. Does this weak passion
Become a mighty queen?

Cleop. I am no queen:
Is this to be a queen, to be besieged
By yon insulting Roman, and to wait
Each hour the victor's chain? These ills are
small:

For Antony is lost, and I can mourn
For nothing else but him. Now come, Octavius,

I have no more to lose; prepare thy bands;
I'm fit to be a captive; Antony
Has taught my mind the fortune of a slave.

Iras. Call reason to assist you.

Cleop. I have none.

<sup>1</sup>I. e., foreshadow.

And none would have; my love's a noble madness,
Which shows the cause deserved it. Moderate sorrow

Fits vulgar love, and for a vulgar man;
But I have loved with such transcendent
passion,

I soared, at first, quite out of reason's view,
And now am lost above it. No, I'm proud
'Tis thus; would Antony could see me now!
Think you he would not sigh? Though he must leave me,

Sure he would sigh; for he is noble-natured,
And bears a tender heart: I know him well.
Ah, no, I know him not; I knew him once,
But now 'tis past.

Iras. Let it be past with you:
Forget him, madam.

Cleop. Never, never, Iras.
He once was mine; and once, though now
'tis gone,

Leaves a faint image of possession still.

Alex. Think him unconstant, cruel, and ungrateful.

Cleop. I cannot; if I could, those thoughts were vain;

Faithless, ungrateful, cruel though he be,
I still must love him.

Enter Charmion.

Now, what news, my Charmion?
Will he be kind? and will he not forsake me?
Am I to live, or die?—nay, do I live?
Or am I dead? for when he gave his answer,

Fate took the word, and then I lived or died.

Charmion. I found him, madam—

Cleop. A long speech preparing?
If thou bring'st comfort, haste, and give it
me,

For never was more need.

Iras. I know he loves you.

Cleop. Had he been kind, her eyes had told me so,

Before her tongue could speak it; now she studies

To soften what he said; but give me death,
Just as he sent it, Charmion, undisguised,
And in the words he spoke.

Char. I found him, then,
Encompassed round, I think, with iron statues;

So mute, so motionless his soldiers stood,
While awfully he cast his eyes about,
And every leader's hopes or fears surveyed;

Methought he looked resolved, and yet not pleased.

When he beheld me struggling in the crowd,
He blushed, and bade make way.

Alex. There's comfort yet.

Char. Ventidius fixed his eyes upon my passage

Severely, as he meant to frown me back.
And sullenly gave place; I told my message,
Just as you gave it, broken and disordered;
I numbered in it all your sighs and tears,
And while I moved your pitiful request,
That you but only begged a last farewell,
He fetched an inward groan, and every time
I named you, sighed, as if his heart were breaking,

But shunned my eyes, and guiltily looked
down;

He seemed not now that awful Antony,
Who shook an armed assembly with his nod;
But, making show as he would rub his eyes,
Disguised and blotted out a falling tear.

Cleop. Did he then weep? And was I worth a tear?

If what thou hast to say be not as pleasing,
Tell me no more, but let me die contented.

Char. He bid me say, he knew himself so
well,

He could deny you nothing, if he saw you;
And therefore—

Cleop. Thou wouldst say, he would not see me?

Char. And therefore begged you not to use a power,

Which he could ill resist; yet he should ever Respect you as he ought.

Cleop. Is that a word
For Antony to use to Cleopatra?

Oh, that faint word, respect! how I disdain it!
Disdain myself, for loving after it!

He should have kept that word for cold
Octavia;

Respect is for a wife; am I that thing,
That dull, insipid lump, without desires,
And without power to give 'em?

Alex. You misjudge;
You see through love, and that deludes your
sight,

As what is straight seems crooked through the water;

But I, who bear my reason undisturbed,
Can see this Antony, this dreaded man,
A fearful slave, who fain would run away,
And shuns his master's eyes; if you pursue him,

My life on 't, he still drags a chain along,
That needs must clog his flight.

Cleop. Could I believe thee!—
Alex. By every circumstance I know he loves.

True, he's hard pressed, by interest and by honor;

Yet he but doubts, and parleys and casts out
Many a long look for succor.

Cleop. He sends word,
He fears to see my face.

Alex. And would you more?
He shows his weakness who declines the
combat,

And you must urge your fortune. Could he
speak

More plainly? To my ears, the message sounds—

"Come to my rescue, Cleopatra, come; Come, free me from Ventidius; from my tyrant;

See me, and give me a pretence to leave
him!"—

I hear his trumpets. This way he must pass.
Please you, retire a while; I'll work him first,
That he may bend more easy.

Cleop. You shall rule me;
But all, I fear, in vain.

Exit with Charmion and Iras.

Alex. I fear so too;
Though I concealed my thoughts, to make her bold;

But 'tis our utmost means, and fate befriend
it!

Withdraws.

Enter Lictors with fasces; one bearing the eagle; then enter Antony with Ventidius, followed by other Commanders.

Antony. Octavius is the minion of blind
chance,

But holds from virtue nothing.
Ventidius. Has he courage?

Ant. But just enough to season him from coward.

O, 'tis the coldest youth upon a charge,
The most deliberate fighter! if he ventures
(As in Illyria once they say he did
To storm a town), 'tis when he cannot choose,
When all the world have fixed their eyes upon
him;

And then he lives on that for seven years
after;

But at a close<sup>1</sup> revenge he never fails.

Ven. I heard you challenged him.

Ant. I did, Ventidius.

What think'st thou was his answer? 'Twas so tame!—

He said, he had more ways than one to
die;

I had not.

Ven. Poor!

Ant. He has more ways than one;
But he would choose 'em all before that one.

Ven. He first would choose an ague or a fever.

Ant. No; it must be an ague, not a fever;
He has not warmth enough to die by that.

Ven. Or old age and a bed.

Ant. Ay, there's his choice.

He would live, like a lamp, to the last wink,
And crawl upon the utmost verge of life;

O Hercules! Why should a man like this,
Who dares not trust his fate for one great action,

Be all the care of Heav'n? Why should he lord it

O'er fourscore thousand men, of whom each one

Is braver than himself?

Ven. You conquered for him;
Philippi knows it; there you shared with him
That empire which your sword made all your
own.

Ant. Fool that I was, upon my eagle's
wings

I bore this wren, till I was tired with soaring,
And now he mounts above me.

Good Heav'n's, is this,—is this the man who braves me?

Who bids my age make way, drives me before
him,

To the world's ridge, and sweeps me off like rubbish?

Ven. Sir, we lose time; the troops are mounted all.

Ant. Then give the word to march;

I long to leave this prison of a town,
To join thy legions, and in open field Once more to show my face. Lead, my deliverer.

Enter Alexas.

Alex. Great emperor,
In mighty arms renowned above mankind,
But, in soft pity to 'oppressed a god:
This message sends the mournful Cleopatra
To her departing lord.

Ven. Smooth sycophant!

Alex. A thousand wishes, and ten thousand prayers,

Millions of blessings wait you to the wars;
Millions of sighs and tears she sends you too,
And would have sent

As many dear embraces to your arms,
As many parting kisses to your lips;
But those, she fears, have wearied you already.

Ven. (aside). False crocodile!

Alex. And yet she begs not now, you would not leave her;

That were a wish too mighty for her hopes,
Too presuming
For her low fortune, and your ebbing love;
That were a wish for her more prosp'rous days,

Her blooming beauty, and your growing kindness.

Ant. (aside). Well, I must man it out:—what would the queen?

Alex. First, to these noble warriors, who attend

Your daring courage in the chase of fame
(Too daring, and too dang'rous for her quiet),
She humbly recommends all she holds dear,
All her own cares and fears—the care of you.

Ven. Yes, witness Actium.

Ant. Let him speak, Ventidius.

Alex. You, when his matchless valor bears him forward,

With ardor too heroic, on his foes,
Fall down, as she would do, before his feet;
Lie in his way, and stop the paths of death:
Tell him, this god is not invulnerable;
That absent Cleopatra bleeds in him;
And, that you may remember her petition,
She begs you wear these trifles, as a pawn,
Which, at your wished return, she will redeem

Gives jewels to the Commanders.

With all the wealth of Egypt;
This to the great Ventidius she presents,
Whom she can never count her enemy,
Because he loves her lord.

Ven. Tell her, I'll none on't;
I'm not ashamed of honest poverty;
Not all the diamonds of the East can bribe Ventidius from his faith. I hope to see
These and the rest of all her sparkling store,
Where they shall more deservingly be placed.

Ant. And who must wear 'em then?

Ven. The wronged Octavia.

Ant. You might have spared that word.

Ven. And he that bribe.

Ant. But have I no remembrance?

Alex. Yes, a dear one;

Your slave the queen—

Ant. My mistress.

Alex. Then your mistress;

Your mistress would, she says, have sent her soul,

But that you had long since; she humbly begs

This ruby bracelet, set with bleeding hearts
(The emblems of her own), may bind your arm. Presenting a bracelet.

Ven. Now, my best lord, in honor's name,
I ask you,

For manhood's sake and for your own dear safety,

Touch not these poisoned gifts,
Infected by the sender; touch 'em not;
Mirriads of bluest plagues lie underneath 'em,
And more than aconite has dipped the silk.

Ant. Nay, now you grow too cynical,
Ventidius.

A lady's favors may be worn with honor.
What, to refuse her bracelet! On my soul,
When I lie pensive in my tent alone,
'Twill pass the wakeful hours of winter nights,

To tell these pretty beads upon my arm,
To count for every one a soft embrace,
A melting kiss at such and such a time,
And now and then the fury of her love,
When— And what harm's in this?

Alex. None, none, my lord,
But what's to her, that now 'tis past for ever.

Ant. (going to tie it). We soldiers are so awkward—help me tie it.

Alex. In faith, my lord, we courtiers, too,
are awkward

In these affairs; so are all men indeed;
E'en I, who am not one. But shall I speak?

Ant. Yes, freely.

Alex. Then, my lord, fair hands
alone

Are fit to tie it; she who sent it can.

Ven. Hell, death! this eunuch pander ruins you.

You will not see her?

Alexas whispers an Attendant, who goes out.

Ant. But to take my leave.

Ven. Then I have washed an Ethiop.
Y'are undone;

Y'are in the toils; y'are taken; y'are destroyed;

Her eyes do Cæsar's work.

Ant. You fear too soon.

'I'm constant to myself: I know my strength;
And yet she shall not think me barbarous neither,

Born in the depths of Afric'; I'm a Roman,
Bred in the rules of soft humanity.

A guest, and kindly used, should bid farewell.

Ven. You do not know

How weak you are to her, how much an infant;
You are not proof against a smile or glance;
A sigh will quite disarm you.

Ant. See, she comes!

Now you shall find your error. Gods, I thank you;

I formed<sup>1</sup> the danger greater than it was,
And now 'tis near, 'tis lessened.

Ven. Mark the end yet.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmion, and Iras.

Ant. Well, madam, we are met.

Cleop. Is this a meeting?

Then we must part?

Ant. We must.

Cleop. Who says we must?

Ant. Our own hard fates.

Cleop. We make those fates ourselves.

Ant. Yes, we have made 'em; we have loved each other

Into our mutual ruin.

Cleop. The gods have seen my joys with envious eyes;

I have no friends in Heav'n; and all the
world

(As 'twere the bus'ness of mankind to part
us)

Is armed against my love; e'en you yourself
Join with the rest; you, you are armed against me.

Ant. I will be justified in all I do
To late posterity, and therefore hear me.

If I mix a lie

With any truth, reproach me freely with it;
Else favor me with silence.

Cleop. You command me,
And I am dumb.

Ven. I like this well; he shows authority.

Ant. That I derive my ruin

From you alone—

Cleop. O Heav'ns! I ruin you!

Ant. You promised me your silence, and you break it

Ere I have scarce begun.

Cleop. Well, I obey you.

Ant. When I beheld you first, it was in Egypt,

Ere Cæsar saw your eyes; you gave me love,
And were too young to know it; that I settled
Your father in his throne, was for your sake;
I left th'acknowledgment for time to ripen.
Cæsar stepped in, and, with a greedy hand, Plucked the green fruit, ere the first blush of
red,

Yet cleaving to the bough. He was my lord,
And was, beside, too great for me to rival;
But I deserved you first, though he enjoyed
you.

When, after, I beheld you in Cilicia,
An enemy to Rome, I pardoned you.

Cleop. I cleared myself—

Ant. Again you break your promise.

I loved you still, and took your weak excuses,
Took you into my bosom, stained by Cæsar,
And not half mine; I went to Egypt with you,
And hid me from the bus'ness of the world,
Shut out enquiring nations from my sight,
To give whole years to you.

Ven. (aside). Yes, to your shame be't
spoken.

Ant. How I loved,
Witness, ye days and nights, and all ye hours,
That danced away with down upon your feet,
As all your bus'ness were to count my passion!

One day passed by, and nothing saw but
love;

Another came, and still 'twas only love;
The suns were wearied out with looking on,
And I untired with loving.

I saw you every day, and all the day;
And every day was still but as the first,
So eager was I still to see you more.

Ven. 'Tis all too true.

Ant. Fulvia, my wife, grew jealous,

As she indeed had reason; raised a war
In Italy, to call me back.

Ven. But yet

You went not.

Ant. While within your arms I lay,

The world fell-mold'ring from my hands each hour,
And left me scarce a grasp (I thank your love
for't).

Ven. Well pushed; that last was home.

<sup>1</sup>Conceived.

Cleop.

Yet may I speak?

Ant. If I have urged a falsehood, yes;
else not.

Your silence says I have not. Fulvia died (Pardon, you gods, with my unkindness died);

To set the world at peace, I took Octavia,
This Cæsar's sister; in her pride of youth
And flower of beauty did I wed that lady, Whom blushing I must praise, because I left
her.

You called; my love obeyed the fatal summons;

This raised the Roman arms; the cause was
yours.

I would have fought by land, where I was stronger;

You hindered it; yet, when I fought at sea,
Forsook me fighting; and (O stain to honor!
O lasting shame!) I knew not that I fled;
But fled to follow you.

Ven. What haste she made to hoist her purple sails!

And, to appear magnificent in flight,
Drew half our strength away.

Ant. All this you caused.

And would you multiply more ruins on me?
This honest man, my best, my only friend,
Has gathered up the shipwreck of my fortunes;

Twelve legions I have left, my last recruits.
And you have watched the news, and bring your eyes

To seize them too. If you have aught to answer,

Now speak, you have free leave.

Alex. (aside). She stands confounded;
Despair is in her eyes.

Ven. Now lay a sigh i'th' way to stop his
passage:

Prepare a tear, and bid it for his legions;
'Tis like they shall be sold.

Cleop. How shall I plead my cause, when you, my judge,

Already have condemned me? Shall I bring
The love you bore me for my advocate?
That now is turned against me, that destroys
me;

For love, once past, is at the best forgotten;
But oft'ner sours to hate; 'twill please my
lord

To ruin me, and therefore I'll be guilty.
But could I once have thought it would have pleased you,

That you would pry with narrow searching
eyes

Into my faults, severe to my destruction,
And watching all advantages with care
That serve to make me wretched? Speak,
my lord,

For I end here. Though I deserve this usage,

Was it like you to give it?

Ant. Oh, you wrong me,
To think I sought this parting, or desired
To accuse you more than what will clear myself,

And justify this breach.

Cleop. Thus low I thank you.
And, since my innocence will not offend,
I shall not blush to own it.

Ven. After this,
I think she'll blush at nothing.

Cleop. You seem grieved
(And therein you are kind) that Cæsar first Enjoyed my love, though you deserved it
better;

I grieve for that, my lord, much more than
you;

For, had I first been yours, it would have saved

My second choice: I never had been his,
And ne'er had been but yours. But Cæsar
first,

You say, possessed my love. Not so, my
lord;

He first possessed my person; you, my love:
Cæsar loved me; but I loved Antony.

If I endured him after, 'twas because
I judged it due to the first name of men;
And, half constrained, I gave, as to a tyrant,
What he would take by force.

Ven. O Siren! Siren!
Yet grant that all the love she boasts were
true,

Has she not ruined you? I still urge that,
The fatal consequence.

Cleop. The consequence indeed,
For I dare challenge him, my greatest foe,
To say it was designed; 'tis true, I loved you,
And kept you far from an uneasy wife—
Such Fulvia was.

Yes, but he'll say, you left Octavia for me;—
And can you blame me to receive that love,
Which quitted such desert for worthless me?
How often have I wished some other Cæsar,
Great as the first, and as the second young,
Would court my love, to be refused for you!

Ven. Words, words; but Actium, sir; remember Actium.

Cleop. E'en there, I dare his malice.
True, I counseled

To fight at sea; but I betrayed you not.
I fled, but not to the enemy. 'Twas fear;
Would I had been a man, not to have feared!
For none would then have envied me your friendship,
Who envy me your love.

Ant. We're both unhappy;
If nothing else, yet our ill fortune parts us.
Speak; would you have me perish by my
stay?

Cleop. If as a friend you ask my judgment, go;

If, as a lover, stay. If you must perish—
'Tis a hard word—but stay.

Ven. See now th'effects of her so boasted
love!

She strives to drag you down to ruin with
her;

But could she scape without you, oh, how
soon

Would she let go her hold, and haste to
shore,

And never look behind!

Cleop. Then judge my love by this.
(Giving Antony a writing.) Could I have born

A life or death, a happiness or woe,
From yours divided, this had giv'n me means.

Ant. By Hercules, the writing of Octavius!

I know it well: 'tis that proscribing hand,
Young as it was, that led the way to mine,
And left me but the second place in murder.—

See, see, Ventidius! here he offers Egypt,
And joins all Syria to it, as a present,
So, in requital, she forsake my fortunes,
And join her arms with his.

Cleop. And yet you leave me!
You leave me, Antony; and yet I love you,
Indeed I do: I have refused a kingdom;
That's a trifle;
For I could part with life, with anything,
But only you. Oh, let me die but with you!
Is that a hard request?

Ant. Next living with you,
Tis all that Heav'n can give.

Alex. (aside). He melts; we conquer.

Cleop. No; you shall go; your int'rest calls you hence;

Yes; your dear interest pulls too strong for
these

Weak arms to hold you here.—(Takes his hand.) Go; leave me, soldier

(For you're no more a lover); leave me dying; Push me all pale and panting from your bosom,

And, when your march begins, let one run
after,

Breathless almost for joy, and cry, "She's
dead":

The soldiers shout; you then, perhaps, may sigh,

And muster all your Roman gravity:

Ventidius chides; and straight your brow clears up,

As I had never been.

Ant. Gods, 'tis too much; too much for man to bear!

Cleop. What is't for me then,
A weak, forsaken woman, and a lover?—

Here let me breathe my last: envy me not

This minute in your arms: I'll die apace,
As fast as ere I can, and end your trouble.

Ant. Die! Rather let me perish;—loosened
nature

Leap from its hinges, sink the props of Heaven,

And fall the skies to crush the nether world!
My eyes, my soul, my all! Embraces her.

Ven. And what's this toy,

In balance with your fortune, honor, fame?

Ant. What is't, Ventidius?—it outweighs
'em all;

Why, we have more than conquered Cæsar
now:

My queen's not only innocent, but loves me.
This, this is she who drags me down to ruin!

"But, could she 'scape without me, with what haste

Would she let slip her hold, and make to
shore,

And never look behind!"

Down on thy knees, blasphemous as thou art,
And ask forgiveness of wronged innocence.

Ven. I'll rather die than take it. Will you go?

Ant. Go! whither? Go from all that's excellent?

Faith, honor, virtue, all good things forbid
That I should go from her, who sets my love
Above the price of kingdoms! Give, you
gods,

Give to your boy, your Cæsar,

This rattle of a globe to play withal,
This gewgaw world, and put him cheaply off:
I'll not be pleased with less than Cleopatra.

Cleop. She's wholly yours. My heart's so full of joy,

That I shall do some wild extravagance
Of love in public; and the foolish world,
Which knows not tenderness, will think me
mad.

Ven. O women! women! women! all the
gods

Have not such power of doing good to man,
As you of doing harm. Exit.

Ant. Our men are armed.

Unbar the gate that looks to Cæsar's camp;
I would revenge the treachery he meant me;
And long security makes conquest easy.

I'm eager to return before I go;
For all the pleasures I have known beat thick
On my remembrance; how I long for night!

That both the sweets of mutual love may
try,

And once triumph o'er Cæsar ere we die.
Exeunt.

ACT III

*At one door enter Cleopatra, Charmion, Iras, and Alexas, a train of Egyptians; at the other, Antony and Romans. The entrance on both sides is prepared by music;
the trumpets first sounding on Antony's part: then answered by timbrels, etc., on Cleopatra's. Charmion and Iras hold a laurel wreath betwixt them. A dance of Egyptians. After the ceremony, Cleopatra crowns Antony.*

Antony. I thought how those white arms would fold me in,

And strain me close, and melt me into love;
So pleased with that sweet image, I sprung forwards,

And added all my strength to every blow.

Cleopatra. Come to me, come, my soldier, to my arms!

You've been too long away from my embraces;

But when I have you fast and all my own,
With broken murmurs, and with amorous
sighs,

I'll say, you were unkind, and punish you,
And mark you red with many an eager kiss.

Ant. My brighter Venus!

Cleop. O my greater Mars!

Ant. Thou join'st us well, my love!

Suppose me come from the Phlegræan plains,<sup>1</sup>

Where gasping giants lay, cleft by my sword,
And mountain tops, pared off each other
blow,

To bury those I slew; receive me, goddess!
Let Cæsar spread his subtle nets like Vulcan;
In thy embraces I would be beheld

By Heav'n and earth at once,
And make their envy what they meant their
sport.

Let those who took us blush; I would love on
With awful state, regardless of their frowns,
As their superior god.

There's no satiety of love in thee:

Enjoyed, thou still art new; perpetual spring
Is in thy arms; the ripened fruit but falls,
And blossoms rise to fill its empty place;

And I grow rich by giving.

Enter Ventidius, and stands apart.

Alexas. O, now the danger's past, your general comes!

He joins not in your joys, nor minds your triumphs;

But with contracted brows looks frowning on,
As envying your success.

Ant. Now, on my soul, he loves me; truly loves me:

He never flattered me in any vice,
But awes me with his virtue: e'en this minute,

Methinks, he has a right of chiding me.
Lead to the temple; I'll avoid his presence;
It checks too strong upon me.

Exeunt the rest. As Antony is going,

Ventidius pulls him by the robe.

Ventidius. Emperor!

Ant. (looking back). 'Tis the old argument; I prithee, spare me.

Ven. But this one hearing, emperor.

Ant. Let go

My robe; or, by my father Hercules—

Ven. By Hercules his father, that's yet greater,

I bring you somewhat you would wish to
know.

Ant. Thou see'st we are observed, attend me here,

And I'll return. Exit.

Ven. I'm waning in his favor, yet I love
him;

<sup>1</sup>In Macedonia, where the giants unsuccessfully did battle with the gods.

I love this man, who runs to meet his ruin;
And sure the gods, like me, are fond of him;
His virtues lie so mingled with his crimes,
As would confound their choice to punish
one,
And not reward the other.

Enter Antony.

Ant. We can conquer,
You see, without your aid.
We have dislodged their troops;
They look on us at distance, and, like curs Scaped from the lion's paws, they bay far
off,
And lick their wounds and faintly threaten war.
Five thousand Romans, with their faces upward,
Lie breathless on the plain.

Ven. 'Tis well; and he Who lost 'em, could have spared ten thousand more.

Yet if by this advantage you could gain
An easier peace, while Cæsar doubts the chance
Of arms—

Ant. O, think not on't, Ventidius!
The boy pursues my ruin, he'll no peace;
His malice is considerate in advantage.
O, he's the coolest murderer! so staunch,
He kills and keeps his temper.

Ven. Have you no friend
In all his army, who has power to move him?
Mecænas or Agrippa might do much.

Ant. They're both too deep in Cæsar's interests.

We'll work it out by dint of sword, or perish.

Ven. Fain I would find some other.

Ant. Thank thy love.
Some four or five such victories as this
Will save thy farther pains.

Ven. Expect no more; Cæsar is on his guard:

I know, sir, you have conquered against odds;

But still you draw supplies from one poor
town,

And of Egyptians; he has all the world,
And at his back nations come pouring in,
To fill the gaps you make. Pray, think
again.

Ant. Why dost thou drive me from myself, to search

For foreign aids?—to hunt my memory,
And range all o'er a waste and barren place,

To find a friend? The wretched have no
friends.

Yet I had one, the bravest youth of Rome, Whom Cæsar loves beyond the love of women;

He could resolve his mind as fire does wax,
From that hard rugged image melt him
down,

And mold him in what softer form he pleased.

Ven. Him would I see; that man of all the
world;

Just such a one we want.

Ant. He loved me too;

I was his soul; he lived not but in me:

We were so closed within each other's breasts,

The rivets were not found that joined us first.
That does not reach us yet: we were so mixed
As meeting streams, both to ourselves were lost;

We were one mass; we could not give or take
But from the same; for he was I, I he.

Ven. (aside). He moves as I would wish
him.

Ant. After this,
I need not tell his name;—'twas Dollabella.

Ven. He's now in Cæsar's camp.

Ant. No matter where,
Since he's no longer mine. He took unkindly
That I forbade him Cleopatra's sight
Because I feared he loved her: he confessed
He had a warmth, which for my sake he stifled;

For 'twere impossible that two, so one,
Should not have loved the same. When he departed,

He took no leave; and that confirmed my thoughts.

Ven. It argues that he loved you more than her,

Else he had stayed; but he perceived you jealous,

And would not grieve his friend; I know he loves you.

Ant. I should have seen him then ere
now.

Ven. Perhaps
He has thus long been lab'ring for your peace.

Ant. Would he were here!

Ven. Would you believe he loved you?
I read your answer in your eyes, you would.
Not to conceal it longer, he has sent
A messenger from Cæsar's camp, with letters.

Ant. Let him appear.

Ven. I'll bring him instantly.

Exit Ventidius; re-enters immediately with Dollabella.

Ant. 'Tis he himself! himself, by holy friendship! Runs to embrace him.

Art thou returned at last, my better half?

Come, give me all my self! Let me not live,
If the young bridegroom, longing for his
night,

Was ever half so fond.

Dollabella. I must be silent, for my soul is busy

About a nobler work: she's new come home,
Like a long-absent man, and wanders o'er
Each room, a stranger to her own, to look
If all be safe.

Ant. Thou hast what's left of me;
For I am now so sunk from what I was,
Thou find'st me at my lowest water-mark.
The rivers that ran in and raised my fortunes
Are all dried up, or take another course:
What I have left is from my native spring;
I've still a heart that swells in scorn of fate,
And lifts me to my banks.

Dolla. Still you are lord of all the world
to me.

Ant. Why, then I yet am so; for thou art
all.

If I had any joy when thou wert absent,
I grudged it to myself; methought I robbed
Thee of thy part. But, oh my Dollabella!
Thou hast beheld me other than I am.
Hast thou not seen my morning chambers'
filled

With sceptered slaves who waited to salute
me?

With eastern monarchs who forgot the sun
To worship my uprising? Menial kings
Ran coursing up and down my palace-yard, Stood silent in my presence, watched my
eyes,

And at my least command all started out,
Like racers to the goal.

Dolla. Slaves to your fortune.

Ant. Fortune is Cæsar's now; and what am I?

Ven. What you have made yourself; I will not flatter.

Ant. Is this friendly done?

Dolla. Yes; when his end is so, I must join with him;

Indeed I must, and yet you must not chide;
Why am I else your friend?

Ant. Take heed, young man,
How thou upbraid'st my love; the queen has
eyes,

And thou, too, hast a soul. Canst thou remember,

When, swelled with hatred, thou beheld'st
her first,

As accessory to thy brother's death?

Dolla. Spare my remembrance; 'twas a guilty day,

And still the blush hangs here.

Ant. To clear herself,
For sending him no aid, she came from Egypt.

Her galley down the silver Cydnos rowed;
The tackling silk, the streamers waved with
gold;

The gentle winds were lodged in purple sails;
Her nymphs, like Nereids, round her couch
were placed,

Where she, another sea-born Venus, lay.

Dolla. No more; I would not hear it.

Ant. Oh, you must!
She lay, and leaned her cheek upon her hand
And cast a look so languishingly sweet,
As if, secure of all beholders' hearts,
Neglecting, she could take 'em: boys, like Cupids,

Stood fanning with their painted wings the winds

That played about her face; but if she smiled,
A darting glory seemed to blaze abroad,
That men's desiring eyes were never wearied,
But hung upon the object; to soft flutes
The silver oars kept time; and while they played,

The hearing gave new pleasure to the sight;
And both to thought; 'twas Heaven, or somewhat more;

For she so charmed all hearts that gazing crowds

Stood panting on the shore, and wanted
breath

To give their welcome voice.

Then, Dollabella, where was then thy soul?
Was not thy fury quite disarmed with wonder?

Didst thou not shrink behind me from those
eyes,

And whisper in my ear, "Oh, tell her not
That I accused her with my brother's
death?"

<sup>1</sup>I. e., my chambers in the morning.

Dolla. And should my weakness be a plea for yours?

Mine was an age when love might be excused, When kindly warmth, and when my springing youth

Made it a debt to nature. Yours—

Ven. Speak boldly. Yours, he would say, in your declining age, When no more heat was left but what you forced,

When all the sap was needful for the trunk, When it went down, then you constrained the course,

And robbed from nature, to supply desire; In you (I would not use so harsh a word) But 'tis plain dotage.

Ant. Ha!

Dolla. 'Twas urged too home.

But yet the loss was private that I made; 'Twas but myself I lost: I lost no legions; I had no world to lose, no people's love.

Ant. This from a friend?

Dolla. Yes, Antony, a true one;

A friend so tender that each word I speak Stabs my own heart before it reach your ear. Oh, judge me not less kind, because I chide! To Cæsar I excuse you.

Ant. O ye gods!

Have I then lived to be excused to Cæsar?

Dolla. As to your equal.

Ant. Well, he's but my equal: While I wear this he never shall be more.

Dolla. I bring conditions from him

Ant. Are they noble?

Methinks thou shouldst not bring 'em else; yet he

Is full of deep dissembling; knows no honor Divided from his int'rest. Fate mistook him;

For nature meant him for an usurer:

He's fit indeed to buy, not conquer kingdoms.

Ven. Then, granting this,

What power was theirs, who wrought so hard a temper

To honorable terms?

Ant. It was my Dollabella, or some god.

Dolla. Nor I, nor yet Mæcenas, nor Agrippa:

They were your enemies; and I, a friend

Too weak alone; yet 'twas a Roman's deed.

Ant. 'Twas like a Roman done: show me that man,

Who has preserved my life, my love, my honor;

Let me but see his face.

Ven. That task is mine,

And, Heav'n, thou know'st how pleasing.

Exit Ventidius.

Dolla. You'll remember

To whom you stand obliged?

Ant. When I forget it,

Be thou unkind; and that's my greatest curse.

My queen shall thank him too.

Dolla. I fear she will not.

Ant. But she shall do't. The queen, my Dollabella!

Hast thou not still some grudgings of thy fever?

Dolla. I would not see her lost.

Ant. When I forsake her,

Leave me, my better stars! for she has truth Beyond her beauty. Cæsar tempted her, At no less price than kingdoms, to betray me;

But she resisted all; and yet thou chid'st me For loving her too well. Could I do so?

Dolla. Yes; there's my reason.

Re-enter Ventidius, with Octavia, leading

Antony's two little daughters.

Ant. Where?—Octavia there!

Starting back.

Ven. What, is she poison to you? a disease?

Look on her, view her well, and those she brings:

Are they all strangers to your eyes? Has nature

No secret call, no whisper they are yours?

Dolla. For shame, my lord, if not for love, receive 'em

With kinder eyes. If you confess a man,<sup>1</sup>

Meet 'em, embrace 'em, bid 'em welcome to you.

Your arms should open, e'en without your knowledge,

To clasp 'em in; your feet should turn to wings,

To bear you to 'em; and your eyes dart out And aim a kiss, ere you could reach the lips.

Ant. I stood amazed, to think how they came hither.

Ven. I sent for 'em; I brought 'em in, unknown

To Cleopatra's guards.

Dolla. Yet are you cold?

<sup>1</sup>I. e., if you confess yourself a man.

Octavia. Thus long I have attended for my welcome;

Which, as a stranger, sure I might expect.
Who am I?

Ant. Cæsar's sister.

Octav. That's unkind.

Had I been nothing more than Cæsar's sister,
Know, I had still remained in Cæsar's camp:
But your Octavia, your much injured wife,
Though banish'd from your bed, driv'n from your house,

In spite of Cæsar's sister, still is yours.

'Tis true, I have a heart disdains your coldness,

And prompts me not to seek what you should offer,

But a wife's virtue still surmounts that pride;
I come to claim you as my own: to show
My duty first; to ask, nay beg, your kindness:
Your hand, my lord; 'tis mine, and I will have it.

Taking his hand.

Ven. Do, take it; thou deserv'st it.

Dolla.

On my soul,

And so she does: she's neither too submissive,
Nor yet too haughty; but so just a mean
Shows, as it ought, a wife and Roman too.

Ant. I fear, Octavia, you have begged my life.

Octav. Begged it, my lord?

Ant. Yes, begged it, my ambassadress;
Poorly and basely begged it of your brother.

Octav. Poorly and basely I could never beg;

Nor could my brother grant.

Ant. Shall I, who to my kneeling slave could say,

"Rise up, and be a king," shall I fall down
And cry, "Forgive me, Cæsar"? Shall I set
A man, my equal, in the place of Jove,
As he could give me being? No; that word,
"Forgive," would choke me up,
And die upon my tongue.

Dolla. You shall not need it.

Ant. I will not need it. Come, you've all betrayed me,—

My friend too!—to receive some vile conditions.

My wife has bought me with her prayers and tears,

And now I must become her branded slave:
In every peevish mood she will upbraid
The life she gave: if I but look awry,
She cries, "I'll tell my brother."

Octav.

My hard fortune

Subjects me still to your unkind mistakes.
But the conditions I have brought are such
You need not blush to take; I love your honor,

Because 'tis mine; it never shall be said,
Octavia's husband was her brother's slave.
Sir, you are free; free, e'en from her you loathe;

For, though my brother bargains for your love,

Makes me the price and cement of your peace,

I have a soul like yours; I cannot take
Your love as alms, nor beg what I deserve.

I'll tell my brother we are reconciled;

He shall draw back his troops, and you shall march

To rule the East; I may be dropped at Athens,

No matter where; I never will complain,
But only keep the barren name of wife,

And rid you of the trouble.

Ven. Was ever such a strife of sullen honor!

Both scorn to be obliged.

Dolla. Oh, she has touched him in the tender'st part;

See how he reddens with despite and shame,
To be outdone in generosity!

Ven. See how he winks! how he dries up a tear,

That fain would fall!

Ant. Octavia, I have heard you, and must praise

The greatness of your soul,
But cannot yield to what you have proposed:
For I can ne'er be conquered but by love;
And you do all for duty. You would free me,

And would be dropped at Athens; was't not so?

Octav. It was, my lord.

Ant. Then I must be obliged
To one who loves me not; who to herself
May call me thankless and ungrateful man:—
I'll not endure it; no.

Ven. (aside). I am glad it pinches there.

Octav. Would you triumph o'er poor Octavia's virtue?

That pride was all I had to bear me up;
That you might think you owed me for your life,

And owed it to my duty, not my love.

I have been injured, and my haughty soul

Could brook but ill the man who slights my bed.

Ant. Therefore you love me not.

Octav. Therefore, my lord,
I should not love you.

Ant. Therefore you would leave me?

Octav. And therefore I should leave you—if I could.

Dolla. Her soul's too great, after such injuries,

To say she loves; and yet she lets you see it.
Her modesty and silence plead her cause.

Ant. O Dollabella, which way shall I turn?

I find a secret yielding in my soul;
But Cleopatra, who would die with me,
Must she be left? Pity pleads for Octavia;
But does it not plead more for Cleopatra?

Ven. Justice and pity both plead for Octavia;

For Cleopatra, neither.

One would be ruined with you; but she first
Had ruined you; the other, you have ruined,
And yet she would preserve you.

In every thing their merits are unequal.

Ant. O my distracted soul!

Octav. Sweet Heav'n compose it!—

Come, come, my lord, if I can pardon you, Methinks you should accept it. Look on these;

Are they not yours? Or stand they thus neglected

As they are mine? Go to him, children, go;
Kneel to him, take him by the hand, speak to him;

For you may speak, and he may own you too,

Without a blush; and so he cannot all
His children: go, I say, and pull him to me,
And pull him to yourselves, from that bad woman.

You, Agrippina, hang upon his arms;
And you, Antonia, clasp about his waist:
If he will shake you off, if he will dash you
Against the pavement, you must bear it, children;

For you are mine, and I was born to suffer.

Here the children go to him, etc.

Ven. Was ever sight so moving?—Emperor!

Dolla. Friend!

Octav. Husband!

Both Children.

Father!

Ant. I am vanquished; take me,

Octavia; take me, children; share me all.

Embracing them.

I've been a thriftless debtor to your loves,
And run out much, in riot, from your stock;
But all shall be amended.

Octav. O blest hour!

Dolla. O happy change!

Ven. My joy stops at my tongue;
But it has found two channels here for one,
And bubbles out above.

Ant. (to Octavia). This is thy triumph;
lead me where thou wilt;

E'en to thy brother's camp.

Octav. All there are yours.

Enter Alexas hastily.

Alexas. The queen, my mistress, sir, and yours—

Ant. 'Tis past.—

Octavia, you shall stay this night; to-morrow
Cæsar and we are one.

Exit leading Octavia; Dollabella and the children follow.

Ven. There's news for you; run, my officious eunuch,

Be sure to be the first; haste forward:

Haste, my dear eunuch, haste. Exit.

Alex. This downright fighting fool, this thick-skulled hero,

This blunt, unthinking instrument of death,
With plain dull virtue has outgone my wit.

Pleasure forsook my earli'st infancy;

The luxury of others robbed my cradle,

And ravished thence the promise of a man;

Cast out from nature, disinherited

Of what her meanest children claim by kind,<sup>1</sup>

Yet greatness kept me from contempt; that's gone.

Had Cleopatra followed my advice,

Then he had been betrayed who now forsakes.

She dies for love; but she has known its joys:

Gods, is this just, that I, who know no joys,
Must die because she loves?

Enter Cleopatra, Charmion, Iras, and train.

O madam, I have seen what blasts my eyes!
Octavia's here!

Cleop. Peace with that raven's note.

I know it too; and now am in

The pangs of death.

Alex. You are no more a queen;

Egypt is lost.

Cleop. What tell'st thou me of Egypt?

<sup>1</sup>By nature.

My life, my soul is lost! Octavia has him!
O fatal name to Cleopatra's love!
My kisses, my embraces, now are hers;
While I— But thou hast seen my rival;
speak,

Does she deserve this blessing? Is she fair?
Bright as a goddess? And is all perfection Confined to her? It is. Poor I was made Of that coarse matter which, when she was finished,

The gods threw by for rubbish.

Alex. She's indeed a very miracle.

Cleop. Death to my hopes, a miracle!

Alex. (bowing). A miracle;

I mean of goodness; for in beauty, madam,
You make all wonders cease.

Cleop. I was too rash: Take this in part of recompense. (Giving a ring.) But, oh!

I fear thou flatter'st me.

Charmion. She comes! she's here!

Iras. Fly, madam, Cæsar's sister!

Cleop. Were she the sister of the thund'rer
Jove,

And bore her brother's lightning in her eyes,
Thus would I face my rival.

Meets Octavia with Ventidius. Octavia bears up to her. Their trains<sup>1</sup> come up on either side.

Octav. I need not ask if you are Cleopatra;
Your haughty carriage—

Cleop. Shows I am a queen;
Nor need I ask you who you are.

Octav. A Roman;

A name that makes and can unmake a queen.

Cleop. Your lord, the man who serves me,
is a Roman.

Octav. He was a Roman till he lost that
name

To be a slave in Egypt; but I come
To free him thence.

Cleop. Peace, peace, my lover's Juno.
When he grew weary of that household-clog,
He chose my easier bonds.

Octav. I wonder not Your bonds are easy: you have long been practised

In that lascivious art: he's not the first
For whom you spread your snares: let Cæsar witness.

Cleop. I loved not Cæsar; 'twas but gratitude

I paid his love; the worst your malice can
Is but to say the greatest of mankind
Has been my slave. The next, but far above
him

In my esteem, is he whom law calls yours,
But whom his love made mine.

Octav. (coming up close to her). I would view nearer

That face which has so long usurped my
right,

To find th'inevitable charms that catch
Mankind so sure, that ruined my dear lord.

Cleop. O, you do well to search; for had you known

But half these charms, you had not lost his heart.

Octav. Far be their knowledge from a Roman lady,

Far from a modest wife! Shame of our sex, Dost thou not blush to own those black en-dearments,

That make sin pleasing?

Cleop. You may blush, who want 'em.
If bounteous nature, if indulgent Heav'n
Have giv'n me charms to please the bravest
man,

Should I not thank 'em? Should I be ashamed,

And not be proud? I am, that he has loved
me;

And, when I love not him, Heav'n change
this face

For one like that.

Octav. Thou lov'st him not so well.

Cleop. I love him better, and deserve him
more.

Octav. You do not; cannot; you have been his ruin.

Who made him cheap at Rome, but Cleopatra?

Who made him scorned abroad, but Cleopatra?

At Actium who betrayed him? Cleopatra.

Who made his children orphans, and poor me
A wretched widow? Only Cleopatra.

Cleop. Yet she who loves him best is Cleopatra.

If you have suffered, I have suffered more.

You bear the specious title of a wife,

To guild your cause, and draw the pitying
world

To favor it; the world contemns poor me.

For I have lost my honor, lost my fame,

And stained the glory of my royal house,

<sup>1</sup>U. e., attendants.

And all to bear the branded name of mistress.
There wants but life, and that too I would lose

For him I love.

Octav. Be't so, then; take thy wish.

Exit cum suis.

Cleop.

And 'tis my wish,

Now he is lost for whom alone I lived.

My sight grows dim, and every object dances

And swims before me in the maze of death.

My spirits, while they were opposed, kept up;

They could not sink beneath a rival's scorn;

But now she's gone, they faint.

Alex.

Mine have had leisure

To recollect their strength, and furnish counsel

To ruin her who else must ruin you.

Cleop.

Vain promiser!

Lead me, my Charmion; nay, your hand too,

Iras.

My grief has weight enough to sink you both.

Conduct me to some solitary chamber,

And draw the curtains round;

Then leave me to myself, to take alone

My fill of grief:

There I till death will his unkindness
weep;

As harmless infants moan themselves asleep. Exeunt.

ACT IV

Antony, Dollabella.

Dollabella. Why would you shift it from yourself on me?

Can you not tell her you must part?

Antony.

I cannot.

I could pull out an eye and bid it go,

And t'other should not weep. O Dollabella,

How many deaths are in this word, "De-
part"!

I dare not trust my tongue to tell her so:

One look of hers would thaw me into tears,

And I should melt till I were lost again.

Dolla. Then let Ventidius;

He's rough by nature.

Ant.

Oh, he'll speak too harshly;

He'll kill her with the news; thou, only thou.

Dolla. Nature has cast me in so soft a mold,

That but to hear a story feigned for pleasure
Of some sad lover's death, moistens my eyes
And robs me of my manhood. I should
speak

So faintly, with such fear to grieve her heart,
She'd not believe it earnest.

Ant.

Therefore—therefore

Thou only, thou art fit; think thyself me;

And when thou speak'st (but let it first be long),

Take off the edge from every sharper sound,

And let our parting be as gently made

As other loves begin; wilt thou do this?

Dolla. What you have said so sinks into my soul.

That, if I must speak, I shall speak just so.

Ant. I leave you then to your sad task;
farewell.

I sent her word to meet you. (Goes to the door, and comes back.) I forgot;

Let her be told, I'll make her peace with
mine:

Her crown and dignity shall be preserved,

If I have power with Cæsar.—Oh, be sure

To think on that.

Dolla. Fear not, I will remember.

*Antony goes again to the door, and comes
back.*

Ant. And tell her, too, how much I was constrained;

I did not this but with extremest force;

Desire her not to hate my memory,

For I still cherish hers;—insist on that.

Dolla. Trust me, I'll not forget it.

Ant.

Then that's all.

Goes out, and returns again.

Wilt thou forgive my fondness this once
more?

Tell her, though we shall never meet again,

If I should hear she took another love

The news would break my heart.—Now I must go;

For every time I have returned, I feel

My soul more tender; and my next command

Would be to bid her stay, and ruin both. Exit.

Dolla. Men are but children of a larger
growth;

Our appetites as apt to change as theirs,

And full as craving too, and full as vain;

And yet the soul, shut up in her dark room,

Viewing so clear abroad, at home sees nothing;

But, like a mole in earth, busy and blind,

Works all her folly up, and casts it outward

To the world's open view; thus I discovered,

And blamed the love of ruined Antony;

Yet wish that I were he, to be so ruined.

Enter Ventidius above.

Ventidius. Alone? and talking to himself? concerned too?

Perhaps my guess is right; he loved her once, And may pursue it still.

Dolla. O friendship! friendship! Ill canst thou answer this; and reason, worse: Unfaithful in th'attempt; hopeless to win; And if I win, undone: mere madness all. And yet th'occasion's fair. What injury To him, to wear the robe which he throws by!

Ven. None, none at all. This happens as I wish,

To ruin her yet more with Antony.

Enter Cleopatra, talking with Alexas; Charmion and Iras on the other side.

Dolla. She comes! What charms has sorrow on that face!

Sorrow seems pleased to dwell with so much sweetness;

Yet, now and then, a melancholy smile Breaks loose, like lightning in a winter's night,

And shows a moment's day.

Ven. If she should love him too! Her eunuch there?

That porpoise bodes ill weather. Draw, draw nearer,

Sweet devil, that I may hear.

Alexas. Believe me; try

Dollabella goes over to Charmion and

Iras; seems to talk with them.

To make him jealous; jealousy is like A polished glass held to the lips when life's in doubt;

If there be breath, 'twill catch the damp, and show it.

Cleopatra. I grant you, jealousy's a proof of love,

But 'tis a weak and unavailing med'cine; It puts out the disease,<sup>1</sup> and makes it show, But has no power to cure.

Alex. 'Tis your last remedy, and strongest too.

And then this Dollabella, who so fit To practise on? He's handsome, valiant, young,

And looks as he were laid for nature's bait To catch weak women's eyes.

He stands already more than half suspected Of loving you; the least kind word or glance You give this youth will kindle him with love:

Then, like a burning vessel set adrift, You'll send him down amain<sup>2</sup> before the wind,

To fire the heart of jealous Antony.

Cleop. Can I do this? Ah, no; my love's so true

That I can neither hide it where it is, Nor show it where it is not. Nature meant me A wife; a silly, harmless, household dove, Fond without art and kind without deceit; But fortune, that has made a mistress of me, [Has] thrust me out to the wide world, unfurnished

Of falsehood to be happy.

Alex. Force yourself.

Th'event<sup>3</sup> will be, your lover will return Doubly desirous to possess the good Which once he feared to lose.

Cleop. I must attempt it;

But oh, with what regret!

Exit Alexas. (She comes up to Dollabella.)

Ven. So, now the scene draws near; they're in my reach.

Cleop. (to Dolla.). Discoursing with my women! Might not I

Share in your entertainment?

Charmion. You have been

The subject of it, madam.

Cleop. How, and how?

Iras. Such praises of your beauty!

Cleop. Mere poetry.

Your Roman wits, your Gallus and Tibullus, Have taught you this from Cytheris and Delia.

Dolla. Those Roman wits have never been in Egypt;

Cytheris and Delia else had been unsung: I, who have seen—had I been born a poet, Should choose a nobler name.

Cleop. You flatter me.

But 'tis your nation's vice; all of your country

Are flatterers, and all false. Your friend's like you.

I'm sure, he sent you not to speak these words.

Dolla. No, madam; yet he sent me—

Cleop. Well, he sent you—

Dolla. Of a less pleasing errand.

Cleop. How less pleasing?

Less to yourself, or me?

<sup>1</sup>It brings the disease to the surface.

<sup>2</sup>In all haste.

<sup>3</sup>Outcome.

Dolla. Madam, to both;
 For you must mourn, and I must grieve to cause it.
Cleop. You, Charmion, and your fellow, stand at distance.—
(Aside.) Hold up, my spirits.—Well, now your mournful matter;
 For I'm prepared, perhaps can guess it too.
Dolla. I wish you would; for 'tis a thankless office
 To tell ill news; and I, of all your sex,
 Most fear displeasing you.
Cleop. Of all your sex,
 I soonest could forgive you, if you should.
Ven. Most delicate advances! Woman!
 woman!
 Dear, damned, inconstant sex!
Cleop. In the first place,
 I am to be forsaken; is't not so?
Dolla. I wish I could not answer to that question.
Cleop. Then pass it o'er, because it troubles you:
 I should have been more grieved another
 time.
 Next, I'm to lose my kingdom—Farewell,
 Egypt!
 Yet is there any more?
Dolla. Madam, I fear
 Your too deep sense of grief has turned your reason.
Cleop. No, no, I'm not run mad; I can bear fortune:
 And love may be expelled by other love,
 As poisons are by poisons.
Dolla. You o'erjoy me, madam,
 To find your griefs so moderately born;
 You've heard the worst; all are not false like
 him.
Cleop. No; Heav'n forbid they should.
Dolla. Some men are constant.
Cleop. And constancy deserves reward,
 that's certain.
Dolla. Deserves it not; but give it leave to hope.
Ven. I'll swear thou hast my leave. I have enough:
 But how to manage this! Well, I'll consider.
Exit.
Dolla. I came prepared
 To tell you heavy news, news which I thought Would fright the blood from your pale cheeks
 to hear;
 But you have met it with a cheerfulness

That makes my task more easy; and my
 tongue,
 Which on another's message was employed,
 Would gladly speak its own.
Cleop. Hold, Dollabella.
 First tell me, were you chosen by my lord?
 Or sought you this employment?
Dolla. He picked me out; and, as his bosom-friend,
 He charged me with his words.
Cleop. The message then
 I know was tender, and each accent smooth,
 To mollify that rugged word, "Depart."
Dolla. Oh, you mistake; he chose the harshest words;
 With fiery eyes, and with contracted brows,
 He coined his face in the severest stamp;
 And fury shook his fabric, like an earthquake;
 He heaved for vent, and burst like bellowing
 Etna,
 In sounds scarce human—"Hence, away for ever;
 Let her begone, the blot of my renown,
 And bane of all my hopes!"
All the time of this speech, Cleopatra seems more and more concerned, till she sinks quite down.
 Let her be driv'n as far as men can think From man's commerce! she'll poison to the center."
Cleop. Oh, I can bear no more!
Dolla. Help, help!—O wretch! O cursed, cursed wretch!
 What have I done!
Char. Help, chafe her temples, Iras.
Iras. Bend, bend her forward quickly.
Char. Heav'n be praised,
 She comes again.
Cleop. Oh, let him not approach me.
 Why have you brought me back to this loathed being,
 Th'abode of falsehood, violated vows,
 And injured love? For pity, let me go;
 For if there be a place of long repose,
 I'm sure I want it. My disdainful lord
 Can never break that quiet, nor awake
 The sleeping soul with hollowing in my tomb
 Such words as fright her hence.—Unkind, un-
 kind!
Dolla. (kneeling). Believe me; 'tis against myself I speak;
 That sure desires belief; I injured him:
 My friend ne'er spoke those words. Oh,
 had you seen

How often he came back, and every time
With something more obliging and more kind,
To add to what he said; what dear farewells;

How almost vanquished by his love he parted
And leaned to what unwillingly he left!
I, traitor as I was, for love of you (But what can you not do, who made me false?)

I forged that lie; for whose forgiveness kneels
This self-accused, self-punished criminal.

Cleop. With how much ease believe we what we wish!

Rise, Dollabella; if you have been guilty,
I have contributed, and too much love
Has made me guilty too.
Th'advance of kindness, which I made, was
feigned,

To call back fleeting love by jealousy;
But 'twould not last. Oh, rather let me lose,
Than so ignobly trifle with his heart.

Dolla. I find your breast fenced round
from human reach,
Transparent as a rock of solid crystal;
Seen through, but never pierced. My friend, my friend!

What endless treasure hast thou thrown
away;

And scattered, like an infant, in the ocean,
Vain sums of wealth, which none can gather thence!

Cleop. Could you not beg
An hour's admittance to his private ear?
Like one who wanders through long barren wilder

And yet foreknows no hospitable inn
Is near to succor hunger, eats his fill
Before his painful march;
So would I feed a while my famished eyes
Before we part; for I have far to go,
If death be far, and never must return.

Ventidius with Octavia, behind.

Ven. From hence you may discover—Oh, sweet, sweet!
Would you indeed? the pretty hand in earnest?

Dolla. I will, for this reward.—(Takes her hand.) Draw it not back.

'Tis all I e'er will beg.

Ven. They turn upon us.

Octavia. What quick eyes has guilt!

Ven. Seem not to have observed 'em, and go on.

They enter.

Dolla. Saw you the emperor, Ventidius?
Ven. No.

I sought him; but I heard that he was private,
None with him but Hipparchus, his freed-
man.

Dolla. Know you his bus'ness?

Ven. Giving him instructions,

And letters to his brother Cæsar.

Dolla. Well,

He must be found.

Exeunt Dollabella and Cleopatra.

Octav. Most glorious impudence!

Ven. She looked, methought,

As she would say, "Take your old man,
Octavia;

Thank you, I'm better here." Well, but what use

Make we of this discovery?

Octav. Let it die.

Ven. I pity Dollabella; but she's dangerous:

Her eyes have power beyond Thessalian
charms,

To draw the moon from Heav'n; for elo-
quence,

The sea-green Sirens taught her voice their flatt'ry;

And while she speaks, night steals upon the
day,

Unmarked of those that hear; then she's so charming,

Age buds at sight of her, and swells to youth:
The holy priests gaze on her when she smiles;
And with heaved hands, forgetting gravity,
They bless her wanton eyes; even I, who hate
her,

With a malignant joy behold such beauty;
And, while I curse, desire it. Antony

Must needs have some remains of passion
still,

Which may ferment into a worse relapse,
If now not fully cured. I know, this minute,
With Cæsar he's endeavoring her peace.

Octav. You have prevailed; but for a further purpose Walks off.

I'll prove<sup>1</sup> how he will relish this discovery.
What, make a strumpet's peace! it swells my
heart:

It must not, sha' not be.

Ven. His guards appear.

Let me begin, and you shall second me.

Enter Antony.

<sup>1</sup>Test.

Ant. Octavia, I was looking you, my love;
What, are your letters ready? I have giv'n
My last instructions.

Octav. Mine, my lord, are written.

Ant. Ventidius. Drawing him aside.

Ven. My lord?

Ant. A word in private.

When saw you Dollabella?

Ven. Now, my lord,

He parted hence, and Cleopatra with him.

Ant. Speak softly.—'Twas by my command he went,

To bear my last farewell.

Ven. (aloud). It looked indeed

Like your farewell.

Ant. More softly.—My farewell?

What secret meaning have you in those words

Of "My farewell"? He did it by my order.

Ven. (aloud). Then he obeyed your order. I suppose

You bid him do it with all gentleness,

All kindness, and all—love.

Ant. How she mourned,

The poor forsaken creature!

Ven. She took it as she ought; she bore your parting

As she did Cæsar's, as she would another's,

Were a new love to come.

Ant. (aloud). Thou dost belie her;

Most basely and maliciously belie her.

Ven. I thought not to displease you; I have done.

Octav. (coming up). You seem disturbed, my lord.

Ant. A very trifle.

Retire, my love.

Ven. It was indeed a trifle.

He sent—

Ant. (angrily). No more. Look how thou disobey'st me;

Thy life shall answer it.

Octav. Then 'tis no trifle.

Ven. (to Octavia). 'Tis less; a very nothing; you too saw it,

As well as I, and therefore 'tis no secret.

Ant. She saw it!

Ven. Yes; she saw young Dollabella—

Ant. Young Dollabella!

Ven. Young, I think him young,
And handsome too; and so do others think him.

But what of that? He went by your command,

Indeed, 'tis probable, with some kind message;

For she received it graciously; she smiled;

And then he grew familiar with her hand,
Squeezed it, and worried it with ravenous kisses;

She blushed, and sighed, and smiled, and blushed again;

At last she took occasion to talk softly,

And brought her cheek up close, and leaned on his;

At which he whispered kisses back on hers;

And then she cried aloud that constancy

Should be rewarded.

Octav. This I saw and heard.

Ant. What woman was it whom you heard and saw

So playful with my friend?

Not Cleopatra?

Ven. Even she, my lord.

Ant. My Cleopatra?

Ven. Your Cleopatra;

Dollabella's Cleopatra; every man's Cleopatra.

Ant. Thou liest.

Ven. I do not lie, my lord.

Is this so strange? Should mistresses be left,

And not provide against a time of change?

You know she's not much used to lonely nights.

Ant. I'll think no more on't.

I know 'tis false, and see the plot betwixt you.

You needed not have gone this way, Octavia.

What harms it you that Cleopatra's just?

She's mine no more. I see, and I forgive:

Urge it no farther, love.

Octav. Are you concerned,

That she's found false?

Ant. I should be, were it so;

For, though 'tis past, I would not that the world

Should tax my former choice, that I loved one

Of so light note; but I forgive you both.

Ven. What has my age deserved that you should think

I would abuse your ears with perjury?

If Heav'n be true, she's false.

Ant. Though Heav'n and earth

Should witness it, I'll not believe her tainted.

Ven. I'll bring you, then, a witness
From Hell, to prove her so.—Nay, go not
back,
*Seeing Alexas just entering, and starting
back.*

For stay you must and shall.

Alex. What means my lord?

Ven. To make you do what most you hate,—speak truth.

You are of Cleopatra's private counsel,
Of her bed-counsel, her lascivious hours;
Are conscious of each nightly change she
makes,

And watch her, as Chaldeans do the moon,
Can tell what signs she passes through, what
day.

Alex. My noble lord!

Ven. My most illustrious pander,
No fine speech, no cadence, no turned periods,
But a plain homespun truth, is what I ask;
I did, myself, o'erhear your queen make love
To Dollabella. Speak; for I will know
By your confession what more passed betwixt 'em;

How near the bus'ness draws to your employ-
ment;

And when the happy hour.

Ant. Speak truth, Alexas; whether it
offend

Or please Ventidius, care not; justify Thy injured queen from malice; dare his worst.

Octav. (aside). See how he gives him courage! how he fears

To find her false! and shuts his eyes to truth,
Willing to be misled!

Alex. As far as love may plead for woman's frailty,

Urged by desert and greatness of the lover,
So far, divine Octavia, may my queen
Stand e'en excused to you for loving him
Who is your lord; so far, from brave Ven-tidius,

May her past actions hope a fair report.

Ant. 'Tis well, and truly spoken: mark,
Ventidius.

Alex. To you, most noble emperor, her strong passion

Stands not excused, but wholly justified.

Her beauty's charms alone, without her crown,

From Ind and Meroe<sup>1</sup> drew the distant vows

Oh sighing kings; and at her feet were laid
The scepters of the earth, exposed on heaps
To choose where she would reign;
She thought a Roman only could deserve
her,

And of all Romans only Antony;
And to be less than wife to you, disdained
Their lawful passion.

Ant. 'Tis but truth.

Alex. And yet, though love, and your unmatched desert,

Have drawn her from the due regard of
honor,

At last Heav'n opened her unwilling eyes
To see the wrongs she offered fair Octavia,
Whose holy bed she lawlessly usurped;
The sad effects of this prosperous war
Confirmed those pious thoughts.

Ven. (aside). O, wheel you there?

Observe him now; the man begins to mend,
And talk substantial reason. Fear not,
eunuch;

The emperor has giv'n thee leave to speak.

Alex. Else had I never dared t'offend his ears

With what the last necessity has urged
On my forsaken mistress; yet I must not Presume to say, her heart is wholly altered.

Ant. No, dare not for thy life; I charge thee dare not

Pronounce that fatal word!

Octav. (aside). Must I bear this? Good Heav'n, afford me patience.

Ven. On, sweet eunuch; my dear half man, proceed.

Alex. Yet Dollabella

Has loved her long; he, next my god-like
lord,

Deserves her best; and should she meet his
passion,

Rejected, as she is, by him she loved—

Ant. Hence from my sight! for I can bear no more;

Let Furies drag thee quick to Hell; let all
The longer damned have rest; each torturing
hand

Do thou employ, till Cleopatra comes;
Then join thou too, and help to torture her!

Exit Alexas, thrust out by Antony.

Octav. 'Tis not well,

Indeed, my lord, 'tis much unkind to me,
To show this passion, this extreme concern-
ment,

For an abandoned, faithless prostitute.

<sup>1</sup>A kingdom of Ethiopia.

Ant. Octavia, leave me; I am much disordered;
 Leave me, I say.
Octav. My lord?
Ant. I bid you leave me.
Ven. Obey him, madam; best withdraw a while,
 And see how this will work.
Octav. Wherein have I offended you, my lord,
 That I am bid to leave you? Am I false,
 Or infamous? Am I a Cleopatra?
 Were I she,
 Base as she is, you would not bid me leave you;
 But hang upon my neck, take slight excuses,
 And fawn upon my falsehood.
Ant. 'Tis too much,
 Too much, Octavia; I am pressed with sorrows
 Too heavy to be born; and you add more;
 I would retire, and recollect what's left
 Of man within, to aid me.
Octav. You would mourn,
 In private, for your love, who has betrayed you.
 You did but half return to me; your kindness
 Lingered behind with her. I hear, my lord,
 You make conditions for her,
 And would include her treaty. Wondrous proofs
 Of love to me!
Ant. Are you my friend, Ventidius?
 Or are you turned a Dollabella too,
 And let this Fury loose?
Ven. Oh, be advised,
 Sweet madam, and retire.
Octav. Yes, I will go; but never to return.
 You shall no more be haunted with this Fury.
 My lord, my lord, love will not always last,
 When urged with long unkindness and disdain:
 Take her again whom you prefer to me;
 She stays but to be called. Poor cozened man!
 Let a feigned parting give her back your heart,
 Which a feigned love first got; for injured me,
 Though my just sense of wrongs forbid my stay,
 My duty shall be yours.
 To the dear pledges of our former love
 My tenderness and care shall be transferred,
 And they shall cheer, by turns, my widowed nights;

So take my last farewell; for I despair
 To have you whole, and scorn to take you half. Exit.

Ven. I combat Heav'n, which blasts my best designs:

My last attempt must be to win her back;
 But oh! I fear in vain. Exit.

Ant. Why was I framed with this plain, honest heart,

Which knows not to disguise its griefs and weakness,

But bears its workings outward to the world?
 I should have kept the mighty anguish in,
 And forced a smile at Cleopatra's falsehood;
 Octavia had believed it, and had stayed.

But I am made a shallow-forded stream,
 Seen to the bottom: all my clearness scorned,
 And all my faults exposed.—See where he comes,

Enter Dollabella.

Who has profaned the sacred name of friend,

And worn it into vileness!

With how secure a brow, and specious form,
 He guilds the secret villain! Sure that face
 Was meant for honesty; but Heav'n mismatched it,

And furnished treason out with nature's pomp,

To make its work more easy.

Dolla. O my friend!

Ant. Well, Dollabella, you performed my message?

Dolla. I did, unwillingly.

Ant. Unwillingly?

Was it so hard for you to bear our parting?
 You should have wished it.

Dolla. Why?

Ant. Because you love me.

And she received my message with as true,
 With as unfeigned a sorrow as you brought it?

Dolla. She loves you, e'en to madness.

Ant. Oh, I know it.

You, Dollabella, do not better know
 How much she loves me. And should I Forsake this beauty, this all-perfect creature?

Dolla. I could not, were she mine.

Ant. And yet you first Persuaded me; how come you altered since?

Dolla. I said at first I was not fit to go;
 I could not hear her sighs and see her tears,
 But pity must prevail; and so, perhaps,
 It may again with you; for I have promised,

That she should take her last farewell; and,
see,
She comes to claim my word.

Enter Cleopatra.

Ant. False Dollabella!

Dolla. What's false, my lord?

Ant. Why, Dollabella's false,
And Cleopatra's false; both false and faithless.

Draw near, you well-joined wickedness, you serpents,

Whom I have in my kindly bosom warmed
Till I am stung to death.

Dolla. My lord, have I Deserved to be thus used?

Cleop. Can Heav'n prepare
A newer torment? Can it find a curse
Beyond our separation?

Ant. Yes, if fate
Be just, much greater; Heav'n should be ingenious

In punishing such crimes. The rolling stone And gnawing vulture were slight pains, invented

When Jove was young, and no examples
known

Of mighty ills; but you have ripened sin
To such a monstrous growth, 'twill pose<sup>1</sup> the
gods

To find an equal torture. Two, two such!— Oh, there's no farther name,—two such!
to me,

To me, who locked my soul within your
breasts,

Had no desires, no joys, no life, but you;
When half the globe was mine, I gave it you
In dowry with my heart; I had no use,
No fruit of all, but you; a friend and mistress
Was what the world could give. O Cleopatra!

O Dollabella! how could you betray
This tender heart, which with an infantfondness

Lay lulled betwixt your bosoms, and there
slept,

Secure of injured faith?

Dolla. If she has wronged you,
Heav'n, Hell, and you revenge it.

Ant. If she wronged me, Thou wouldst evade thy part of guilt; but swear

Thou lov'st not her.

Dolla. Not so as I love you.

Ant. Not so! Swear, swear, I say, thou dost not love her.

Dolla. No more than friendship will allow.

Ant. No more?

Friendship allows thee nothing; thou art
perjured—

And yet thou didst not swear thou lov'dst her not;

But not so much, no more. O trifling hypo-cite,

Who dar'st not own to her, thou dost not
love,

Nor own to me, thou dost! Ventidius heard
it;

Octavia saw it.

Cleop. They are enemies.

Ant. Alexas is not so: he, he confessed
it;

He who next Hell best knew it, he avowed it.

(To Dolla.) Why do I seek a proof beyond yourself?

You, whom I sent to bear my last farewell,
Returned to plead her stay.

Dolla. What shall I answer?

If to have loved be guilt, then I have sinned;
But if to have repented of that love

Can wash away my crime, I have repented.
Yet, if I have offended past forgiveness,

Let not her suffer; she is innocent.

Cleop. Ah, what will not a woman do,
who loves?

What means will she refuse, to keep that
heart

Where all her joys are placed? 'Twas I encouraged,

'Twas I blew up the fire that scorched his
soul,

To make you jealous, and by that regain you.
But all in vain; I could not counterfeit:

In spite of all the dams my love broke o'er,
And drowned my heart again; fate took th'occasion;

And thus one minute's feigning has destroyed
My whole life's truth.

Ant. Thin cobweb arts of falsehood;
Seen, and broke through at first.

Dolla. Forgive your mistress.

Cleop. Forgive your friend.

Ant. You have convinced yourselves;
You plead each other's cause; what witness
have you,

That you but meant to raise my jealousy?

<sup>1</sup>Puzzle.

Cleop. Ourselves, and Heaven.

Ant. Guilt witnesses for guilt. Hence,
"love and friendship!

You have no longer place in human breasts,
These two have driv'n you out. Avoid my
sight;

I would not kill the man whom I have loved,
And cannot hurt the woman; but avoid me;
I do not know how long I can be tame;
For if I stay one minute more to think
How I am wronged, my justice and revenge
Will cry so loud within me, that my pity
Will not be heard for either.

Dolla. Heav'n has but
Our sorrow for our sins; and then delights
To pardon erring man; sweet mercy seems
Its darling attribute, which limits justice;
As if there were degrees in infinite,
And infinite would rather want perfection
Than punish to extent.<sup>1</sup>

Ant. I can forgive
A foe; but not a mistress and a friend.
Treason is there in its most horrid shape
Where trust is greatest, and the soul resigned
Is stabbed by its own guards: I'll hear no
more;

Hence from my sight for ever!

Cleop. How? for ever!
I cannot go one moment from your sight,
And must I go for ever?

My joys, my only joys, are centered here:
What place have I to go to? my own kingdom?

That I have lost for you; or to the Romans?
They hate me for your sake: or must I wander

The wide world o'er, a helpless, banished
woman,

Banished for love of you; banished from you?
Ay, there's the banishment! Oh, hear me;
hear me,

With strictest justice; for I beg no favor;
And if I have offended you, then kill me,
But do not banish me.

Ant. I must not hear you.
I have a fool within me takes your part;
But honor stops my ears.

Cleop. For pity hear me!
Would you cast off a slave who followed you?
Who crouched beneath your spurn?—He has no pity!

See if he gives one tear to my departure;

<sup>1</sup>U. e., strictly, or to the fullest extent.

One look, one kind farewell; Oh iron heart!
Let all the gods look down, and judge betwixt
us

If he did ever love!

Ant. No more; Alexas!

Dolla. A perjured villain!

Ant. (to Cleop.) Your Alexas; yours.

Cleop. O, 'twas his plot; his ruinous
design,

T'engage you in my love by jealousy.

Hear him; confront him with me; let him
speak.

Ant. I have; I have.

Cleop. And if he clear me not—

Ant. Your creature! one who hangs upon your smiles!

Watches your eye, to say or to unsay

Whate'er you please! I am not to be moved.

Cleop. Then must we part? Farewell,
my cruel lord!

Th'appearance is against me; and I go,

Unjustified, for ever from your sight.

How I have loved, you know; how yet I love,

My only comfort is, I know myself:

I love you more, e'en now you are unkind,

Than when you loved me most; so well, so truly,

I'll never strive against it; but die pleased,

To think you once were mine.

Ant. Good Heav'n, they weep at parting!

Must I weep too? that calls 'em innocent.

I must not weep; and yet I must, to think

That I must not forgive.—

Live, but live wretched; 'tis but just you should,

Who made me so; live from each other's
sight;

Let me not hear you meet; set all the earth

And all the seas betwixt your sundered loves;

View nothing common but the sun and skies;

Now, all take several ways;

And each your own sad fate, with mine,
deplore;

That you were false, and I could trust no more. Exeunt severally.

ACT V

Cleopatra, Charmion, Iras.

Charmion. Be juster, Heav'n; such virtue punished thus

Will make us think that Chance rules all
above,

And shuffles with a random hand the lots
Which man is forced to draw.

Cleopatra. I could tear out these eyes,
that gained his heart

And had not power to keep it. Oh, the curse

Of doting on, e'en when I find it dotage!
Bear witness, gods, you heard him bid me go;
You, whom he mocked with imprecating vows

Of promised faith!—I'll die; I will not bear
it.

You may hold me—

*She pulls out her dagger, and they hold
her.*

But I can keep my breath; I can die inward,
And choke this love.

Enter Alexas.

Iras. Help, O Alexas, help!

The queen grows desperate; her soul struggles in her

With all the agonies of love and rage,
And strives to force its passage.

Cleop. Let me go.

Art thou there, traitor!—Oh,
Oh, for a little breath, to vent my rage,
Give, give me way, and let me loose upon
him.

Alexas. Yes, I deserve it, for my ill-timed truth.

Was it for me to prop
The ruins of a falling majesty?
To place myself beneath the mighty flaw,
Thus to be crushed, and pounded into atoms,
By its o'erwhelming weight? 'Tis too presuming

For subjects to preserve that wilful power
Which courts its own destruction.

Cleop. I would reason
More calmly with you. Did not you o'er-rule

And force my plain, direct, and open love
Into these crooked paths of jealousy?
Now, what's th'event?<sup>1</sup> Octavia is removed;

But Cleopatra's banished. Thou, thou, villain,

Hast pushed my boat to open sea, to prove,<<sup>2</sup>
At my sad cost, if thou canst steer it back.
It cannot be; I'm lost too far; I'm ruined;
Hence, thou impostor, traitor, monster,
devil!—

<sup>1</sup>Outcome.

<sup>2</sup>I. e., to see.

I can no more; thou, and my griefs, have sunk

Me down so low that I want voice to curse
thee.

Alex. Suppose some shipwrecked seaman
near the shore,

Dropping and faint with climbing up the cliff;

If from above some charitable hand
Pull him to safety, hazarding himself,
To draw the other's weight; would he look
back,

And curse him for his pains? The case is
yours;

But one step more, and you have gained the height.

Cleop. Sunk, never more to rise.

Alex. Octavia's gone, and Dollabella's banished.

Believe me, madam, Antony is yours.

His heart was never lost, but started off
To jealousy, love's last retreat and covert;
Where it lies hid in shades, watchful in silence,

And list'ning for the sound that calls it back.
Some other, any man ('tis so advanced),
May perfect this unfinished work, which I (Unhappy only to myself) have left
So easy to his hand.

Cleop. Look well thou do't; else—

Alex. Else, what your silence threatens.—
Antony

Is mounted up the Pharos;<sup>3</sup> from whose turret

He stands surveying our Egyptian galleys.
Engaged with Cæsar's fleet. Now death or conquest!

If the first happen, fate acquits my promise;
If we o'ercome, the conqueror is yours.

A distant shout within.

Char. Have comfort, madam; did you mark that shout? Second shout nearer.

Iras. Hark! they redouble it.

Alex. 'Tis from the port.

The loudness shows it near; good news, kind
heavens!

Cleop. Osiris make it so!

Enter Serapion.

Serapion. Where, where's the queen?

Alex. How frightfully the holy coward stares

As if not yet recovered of th'assault,

<sup>3</sup>Lighthouse.

When all his gods, and, what's more dear to him,

His offerings, were at stake.

Serap. O horror, horror!

Egypt has been; our latest hour is come:

The queen of nations, from her ancient seat,
Is sunk for ever in the dark abyss;

Time has unrolled her glories to the last,
And now closed up the volume.

Cleop. Be more plain:

Say, whence thou com'st (though fate is in thy face.

Which from thy haggard eyes looks wildly
out,

and threatens ere thou speak'st).

Serap. I came from Pharos;

from viewing (spare me, and imagine it)

Our land's last hope, your navy—

Cleop. Vanquished?

Serap. No;

they fought not.

Cleop. Then they fled.

Serap. Nor that. I saw,

From Antony, your well-appointed fleet

Row out; and thrice he waved his hand on
high,

And thrice with cheerful cries they shouted
back;

'Twas then false Fortune, like a fawning
strumpet,

About to leave the bankrupt prodigal,

With a dissembled smile would kiss at part-
ing,

And flatter to the last; the well-timed oars,
Now dipped from every bank, now smoothly

run

To meet the foe; and soon indeed they met,

But not as foes. In few,<sup>1</sup> we saw their caps

On either side thrown up; th'Egyptian
galleys,

Received like friends) passed through, and fell behind

The Roman rear; and now, they all come forward,

And ride within the port.

Cleop. Enough, Serapion;

We've heard my doom.—This needed not, you
gods:

When I lost Antony, your work was done;

'Tis but superfluous malice.—Where's my
lord?

How bears he this last blow?

<sup>1</sup>In few words.

Serap. His fury cannot be expressed by words:

Thrice he attempted headlong to have fallen
Full on his foes, and aimed at Cæsar's galley; Withheld, he raves on you; cries he's betrayed.

Should he now find you—

Alex. Shun him; seek your safety,

Till you can clear your innocence.

Cleop. I'll stay.

Alex. You must not; haste you to your monument,

While I make speed to Cæsar.

Cleop. Cæsar! No,

I have no business with him.

Alex. I can work him

To spare your life, and let this madman
perish.

Cleop. Base fawning wretch! wouldst thou betray him too?

Hence from my sight! I will not hear a
traitor;

'Twas thy design brought all this ruin on us;
Serapion, thou art honest; counsel me;

But haste, each moment's precious.

Serap. Retire; you must not yet see Antony.

He who began this mischief,

'Tis just he tempt the danger; let him clear
you;

And, since he offered you his servile tongue,
To gain a poor precarious life from Cæsar,

Let him expose that fawning eloquence,

And speak to Antony.

Alex. O heavens! I dare not;

I meet my certain death.

Cleop. Slave, thou deserv'st it.—

Not that I fear my lord, will I avoid him;

I know him noble: when he banished me,

And thought me false, he scorned to take my
life;

But I'll be justified, and then die with him.

Alex. O pity me, and let me follow you.

Cleop. To death, if thou stir hence.

Speak, if thou canst,

Now for thy life, which basely thou wouldst
save;

While mine I prize at—this! Come, good Serapion.

Exeunt Cleopatra, Serapion, Charmion and Iras.

Alex. O that I less could fear to lose this being,

Which, like a snow-ball in my coward hand,

The more 'tis grasped, the faster melts away.
 Poor reason! what a wretched aid art thou!
 For still, in spite of thee,
 These two long lovers, soul and body, dread
 Their final separation. Let me think:
 What can I say to save myself from death?
 No matter what becomes of Cleopatra.

Ant. (within). Which way? where?

Ven. (within). This leads to th'monument.

Alex. Ah me! I hear him; yet I'm unprepared;

My gift of lying's gone;
 And this court-devil, which I so oft have raised,

Forsakes me at my need. I dare not stay;
 Yet cannot far go hence. Exit.

Enter Antony and Ventidius.

Antony. O happy Cæsar! thou hast men to lead:

Think not 'tis thou hast conquered Antony;
 But Rome has conquered Egypt. I'm betrayed.

Ventidius. Curse on this treach'rous train!

Their soil and Heav'n infect 'em all with baseness,
 And their young souls come tainted to the world

With the first breath they draw.

Ant. Th'original villain sure no god created;

He was a bastard of the sun, by Nile,
 Aped into man; with all his mother's mud
 Crusted about his soul.

Ven. The nation is
 One universal traitor; and their queen
 The very spirit and extract of 'em all.

Ant. Is there yet left
 A possibility of aid from valor?

Is there one god unsworn to my destruction?
 The least unmortgaged hope? for, if there be,
 Methinks I cannot fall beneath the fate
 Of such a boy as Cæsar.

The world's one half is yet in Antony;
 And from each limb of it that's hewed away,
 The soul comes back to me.

Ven. There yet remain
 Three legions in the town. The last assault
 Lopped off the rest; if death be your design
 (As I must wish it now), these are sufficient
 To make a heap about us of dead foes,
 An honest pile for burial.

Ant. They're enough.

We'll not divide our stars; but, side by side
 Fight emulous, and with malicious eyes
 Survey each other's acts; so every death
 Thou giv'st, I'll take on me as a just debt
 And pay thee back a soul.

Ven. Now you shall see I love you. No
 a word

Of chiding more. By my few hours of life
 I am so pleased with this brave Roman fate
 That I would not be Cæsar, to outlive you When we put off this flesh, and mount together,

I shall be shown to all th'etherial crowd,—
 "Lo, this is he who died with Antony!"

Ant. Who knows but we may pierce
 through all their troops,
 And reach my veterans yet? 'Tis worth the tempting,

T'o'erleap this gulf of fate,
 And leave our wond'ring destinies behind.

Enter Alexas, trembling.

Ven. See, see, that villain!

See Cleopatra stamped upon that face,
 With all her cunning, all her arts of false-
 hood!

How she looks out through those dissembling
 eyes!

How he has set his count'nance for deceit,
 And promises a lie before he speaks!

Let me dispatch him first. Drawing.

Alex. O spare me, spare me!

Ant. Hold; he's not worth your killing.— On thy life

(Which thou mayst keep, because I scorn to take it),

No syllable to justify thy queen;
 Save thy base tongue its office.

Alex. Sir, she's gone,
 Where she shall never be molested more
 By love, or you.

Ant. Fled to her Dollabella!
 Die, traitor! I revoke my promise! die!

Going to kill him.

Alex. O hold! she is not fled.

Ant. She is: my eyes
 Are open to her falsehood; my whole life
 Has been a golden dream of love and friendship;

But, now I wake, I'm like a merchant roused

From soft repose to see his vessel sinking,
 And all his wealth cast o'er. Ingrateful
 woman!

Who followed me but as the swallow summer

hatching her young ones in my kindly
beams,
singing her flatt'ries to my morning wake;
But now my winter comes, she spreads her
wings,
And seeks the spring of Cæsar.

Alex. Think not so:
Her fortunes have in all things mixed with
yours.

Had she betrayed her naval force to Rome,
How easily might she have gone to Cæsar,
Secure by such a bribe!

Ven. She sent it first,
To be more welcome after.

Ant. 'Tis too plain,
Else would she have appeared, to clear herself.

Alex. Too fatally she has: she could not bear
To be accused by you; but shut herself Within her monument; looked down and sighed;

While from her unchanged face the silent
tears

Dropped, as they had not leave, but stole their parting.

Some undistinguished words she inly murmured;

At last, she raised her eyes; and, with such looks

As dying Lucrece cast—

Ant. My heart forbodes—

Ven. All for the best; go on.

Alex. She snatched her poniard,
And, ere we could prevent the fatal blow, Plunged it within her breast; then turned to
me;

"Go, bear my lord (said she) my last
farewell;

and ask him, if he yet suspect my faith."

More she was saying, but death rushed betwixt.

She half pronounced your name with her last breath,

and buried half within her.

Ven. Heav'n be praised!

Ant. Then art thou innocent, my poor
dear love?

And art thou dead?

O those two words! their sound should be divided;

Hadst thou been false, and died; or hadst
thou lived,

and hadst been true—But innocence and
death!

This shows not well above. Then what am I,
The murderer of this truth, this innocence!
Thoughts cannot form themselves in words
so horrid

As can express my guilt!

Ven. Is't come to this? The gods have been too gracious;

And thus you thank 'em for't!

Ant. (to Alex.) Why stay'st thou here?
Is it for thee to spy upon my soul,
And see its inward mourning? Get thee
hence;

Thou art not worthy to behold what now
Becomes a Roman emperor to perform.

Alex. (aside). He loves her still;
His grief betrays it. Good! The joy to find

She's yet alive, completes the reconciliation.
I've saved myself, and her. But, oh! the Romans!

Fate comes too fast upon my wit,
Hunts me too hard, and meets me at each double. Exit.

Ven. Would she had died a little sooner,
though,

Before Octavia went! you might have treated;

Now 'twill look tame, and would not be received.

Come, rouse yourself, and let's die warm
together.

Ant. I will not fight; there's no more work for war.

The bus'ness of my angry hours is done.

Ven. Cæsar is at your gates.

Ant. Why, let him enter;
He's welcome now.

Ven. What lethargy has crept into your soul?

Ant. 'Tis but a scorn of life, and just
desire

To free myself from bondage.

Ven. Do it bravely.

Ant. I will; but not by fighting. O
Ventidius!

What should I fight for now? My queen is dead.

I was but great for her; my power, my empire,

Were but my merchandise to buy her love;
And conquered kings, my factors. Now she's
dead,

Let Cæsar take the world—

An empty circle, since the jewel's gone

Which made it worth my strife: my being's nauseous;

For all the bribes of life are gone away.

Ven. Would you be taken?

Ant. Yes, I would be taken;

But, as a Roman ought—dead, my Ventidius;

For I'll convey my soul from Cæsar's reach,
And lay down life myself. 'Tis time the
world

Should have a lord, and know whom to obey.
We two have kept its homage in suspense,
And bent the globe, on whose each side we
trod,

Till it was dinted inwards; let him walk

Alone upon't; I'm weary of my part.

My torch is out; and the world stands before
me,

Like a black desert at th'approach of night;
I'll lay me down, and stray no farther on.

Ven. I could be grieved,

But that I'll not outlive you: choose your
death;

For, I have seen him in such various shapes,
I care not which I take; I'm only troubled,
The life I bear is worn to such a rag,
'Tis scarce worth giving. I could wish,
indeed,

We threw it from us with a better grace;

That, like two lions taken in the toils,

We might at least thrust out our paws, and
wound

The hunters that inclose us.

Ant. I have thought on't.

Ventidius, you must live.

Ven. I must not, sir.

Ant. Wilt thou not live, to speak some good of me?

To stand by my fair fame, and guard th'ap-proaches

From the ill tongues of men?

Ven. Who shall guard mine,

For living after you?

Ant. Say I command it.

Ven. If we die well, our deaths will speak themselves

And need no living witness.

Ant. Thou hast loved me,

And fain I would reward thee; I must die;

Kill me, and take the merit of my death,

To make thee friends with Cæsar.

Ven. Thank your kindness.

You said I loved you; and in recompense,

You bid me turn a traitor; did I think

You would have used me thus?—that I should die

With a hard thought of you?

Ant. Forgive me, Roman.

Since I have heard of Cleopatra's death,

My reason bears no rule upon my tongue,

But lets my thoughts break all at random
out.

I've thought better; do not deny me twice.

Ven. By Heav'n I will not.

Let it not be t'outlive you.

Ant. Kill me first,

And then die thou; 'tis but just thou serve

Thy friend before thyself.

Ven. Give me your hand.

We soon shall meet again. Now, farewell, emperor!—

Embrace.

Methinks that word's too cold to be my last;
Since death sweeps all distinctions, farewell
friend!

That's all.—

I will not make a bus'ness of a trifle;

And yet I cannot look on you, and kill you

Pray turn your face.

Ant. I do: strike home, be sure

Ven. Home as my sword will reach.

Kills himself

Ant.

O, thou mistak'st
That wound was not of thine; give it me back
Thou robb'st me of my death.

Ven. I do indeed;

But think 'tis the first time I e'er deceived
you,

If that may plead my pardon.—And you
gods,

Forgive me, if you will; for I die perjured,
Rather than kill my friend. Dies

Ant. Farewell! Ever my leader, e'en in death!

My queen and thou have got the start of me

And I'm the lag of honor.—Gone so soon?

Is Death no more? He used him carelessly

With a familiar kindness; ere he knocked,

Ran to the door, and took him in his arms,

As who should say, "Y're welcome at all hours;

A friend need give no warning." Books had spoiled him;

For all the learn'd are cowards by profession

'Tis not worth

My farther thought; for death, for aught
know,

Is but to think no more. Here's to the satisfied. Falls on his sword.

I've missed my heart. O unperforming hand!

Thou never couldst have erred in a worse time.

My fortune jades me to the last; and death, Like a great man, takes state, and makes me wait

For my admittance.—(Trampling within.)
Some, perhaps, from Cæsar:

If he should find me living, and suspect
That I played booty with my life! I'll mend
My work ere they can reach me.

Rises upon his knees.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmion, and Iras.

Cleop. Where is my lord? where is he?
Char. There he lies,

And dead Ventidius by him.

Cleop. My fears were prophets; I am come too late.

O that accursed Alexas! Runs to him.
Ant. Art thou living?

Or am I dead before I knew, and thou
The first kind ghost that meets me?

Cleop. Help me seat him.
Send quickly, send for help!

They place him in a chair.

Ant. I am answered.

We live both. Sit thee down, my Cleopatra;
I'll make the most I can of life, to stay
A moment more with thee.

Cleop. How is it with you?

Ant. 'Tis as with a man
Removing in a hurry; all packed up,
But one dear jewel that his haste forgot;
And he, for that, returns upon the spur;
So I come back for thee.

Cleop. Too long, you heav'ns, you have been cruel to me:

Now show your mended faith, and give me
back

His fleeting life!

Ant. It will not be, my love;
I keep my soul by force.

Say but, thou art not false.

Cleop. 'Tis now too late

To say I'm true: I'll prove it, and die with
you.

Unknown to me, Alexas feigned my death;
Which when I knew, I hasted to prevent
This fatal consequence. My fleet betrayed
Both you and me.

Ant. And Dollabella—

Cleop.

Scarce

Esteemed before he loved; but hated now.

Ant. Enough: my life's not long enough for more.

Thou say'st thou wilt come after; I believe
thee;

For I can now believe whate'er thou say'st,
That we may part more kindly.

Cleop.

I will come:

Doubt not, my life, I'll come, and quickly
too:

Cæsar shall triumph o'er no part of thee.

Ant. But grieve not, while thou stay'st,
My last disastrous times;

Think we have had a clear and glorious day,
And Heav'n did kindly to delay the storm,
Just till our close of ev'ning. Ten years'
love,

And not a moment lost, but all improved
To th'utmost joys—what ages have we lived!
And now to die each other's; and so dying,
While hand in hand we walk in groves below,
Whole troops of lovers' ghosts shall flock
about us,

And all the train be ours.

Cleop. Your words are like the notes of dying swans,

Too sweet to last. Were there so many hours

For your unkindness, and not one for love?

Ant. No, not a minute.—This one kiss—more worth

Than all I leave to Cæsar.

Dies.

Cleop. O tell me so again,

And take ten thousand kisses for that word.
My lord, my lord! speak, if you yet have
being;

Sign to me, if you cannot speak; or cast

One look! Do anything that shows you live.

Iras. He's gone too far to hear you;

And this you see, a lump of senseless clay,
The leavings of a soul.

Char. Remember, madam,
He charged you not to grieve.

Cleop. And I'll obey him.

I have not loved a Roman, not to know
What should become his wife; his wife, my Charmion;

For 'tis to that high title I aspire;

And now I'll not die less. Let dull Octavia
Survive, to mourn him dead; my nobler fate
Shall knit our 'spousals with a tie too strong
For Roman laws to break.

Iras.

Will you then die?

Cleop. Why shouldst thou make that question?

Iras. Cæsar is merciful.

Cleop. Let him be so
To those who want his mercy; my poor lord
Made no such cov'nant with him, to spare me
When he was dead. Yield me to Cæsar's pride?

What! to be led in triumph through the streets,

A spectacle to base plebeian eyes;
While some dejected friend of Antony's,
Close in a corner, shakes his head, and mutters

A secret curse on her who ruined him?
I'll none of that.

Char. Whatever you resolve,
I'll follow, e'en to death.

Iras. I only feared
For you; but more should fear to live without
you.

Cleop. Why, now 'tis as it should be.
Quick, my friends,
Dispatch; ere this, the town's in Cæsar's
hands:

My lord looks down concerned, and fears my
stay,

Lest I should be surprised;
Keep him not waiting for his love too
long.

You, Charmion, bring my crown and richest
jewels;

With 'em, the wreath of victory I made (Vain augury!) for him who now lies dead;
You, Iras, bring the cure of all our ills.

Iras. The aspics, madam?

Cleop. Must I bid you twice?

Exeunt Charmion and Iras.

'Tis sweet to die, when they would force life
on me,

To rush into the dark abode of death,
And seize him first; if he be like my love,
He is not frightful, sure.

We're now alone, in secrecy and silence;
And is not this like lovers? I may kiss
These pale, cold lips; Octavia does not see
me;

And, oh! 'tis better far to have him thus,
Than see him in her arms.—O, welcome,
welcome!

Enter Charmion and Iras.

Char. What must be done?

Cleop. Short ceremony, friends;
But yet it must be decent. First, this laurel

Shall crown my hero's head; he fell not basely,
Nor left his shield behind him.—Only thou
Couldst triumph o'er thyself; and thou alone
Wert worthy so to triumph.

Char. To what end
These ensigns of your pomp and royalty?

Cleop. Dull, that thou art! why 'tis to meet my love;

As when I saw him first, on Cydnos' bank,
All sparkling, like a goddess: so adorned,
I'll find him once again; my second 'spousals
Shall match my first in glory. Haste, haste,
both,

And dress the bride of Antony.

Char. 'Tis done.

Cleop. Now seat me by my lord. I claim
this place;

For I must conquer Cæsar too, like him,
And win my share o' th' world.—Hail, you
dear relics

Of my immortal love!

O let no impious hand remove you hence:
But rest for ever here! Let Egypt give His death that peace, which it denied his
life.—

Reach me the casket.

Iras. Underneath the fruit
The aspic lies.

Cleop. (putting aside the leaves). Welcome, thou kind deceiver!

Thou best of thieves; who with an easy
key

Dost open life, and, unperceived by us,
E'en steal us from ourselves; discharging
so

Death's dreadful office better than himself;
Touching our limbs so gently into slumber,

That Death stands by, deceived by his own image,

And thinks himself but Sleep.

Serap. (within). The queen, where is she?

The town is yielded, Cæsar's at the gates.

Cleop. He comes too late t'invade the rights of death.

Haste, bare my arm, and rouse the serpent's fury.

Holds out her arm, and draws it back.
Coward flesh,

Wouldst thou conspire with Cæsar to betray
me,

As thou wert none of mine? I'll force thee
to't,

And not be sent by him,

But bring, myself, my soul to Antony.

Turns aside, and then shows her arm bloody.
Take hence; the work is done.

Serap. (within). Break ope the door,
And guard the traitor well.

Iras. Now, Charmion, to be worthy
Of our great queen and mistress.

They apply the aspics.

Cleop. Already, Death, I feel thee in my veins:

I go with such a will to find my lord,
That we shall quickly meet.

A heavy numbness creeps through every limb,

And now 'tis at my head; my eye-lids fall,
And my dear love is vanished in a mist.

Where shall I find him, where? O turn me
to him,

And lay me on his breast!—Cæsar, thy worst;
Now part us, if thou canst. Dies.

Iras sinks down at her feet, and dies;

Charmion stands behind her chair, as dressing her head.

Enter Serapion, two Priests, Alexas bound, Egyptians.

2 Priests. Behold, Serapion,
What havoc death has made!

Serap. 'Twas what I feared.—
Charmion, is this well done?

Char. Yes, 'tis well done, and like a queen, the last
Of her great race; I follow her.

Sinks down: dies.

Alexas. 'Tis true,
She has done well: much better thus to die,
Than live to make a holiday in Rome.

Serap. See, see how the lovers sit in state
together,

As they were giving laws to half mankind!
Th'impression of a smile, left in her face, Shows she died pleased with him for whom she lived,

And went to charm him in another world.
Cæsar's just ent'ring: grief has now no leisure.

Secure that villain, as our pledge of safety,
To grace th'imperial triumph.—Sleep, blest
pair,

Secure from human chance, long ages out, While all the storms of fate fly o'er your
tomb;

And fame to late posterity shall tell,
No lovers lived so great, or died so well.

Exeunt.

EPILOGUE

Poets, like disputants, when reasons fail,
Have one sure refuge left—and that's to rail.
Fop, coxcomb, fool, are thundered through the pit;

And this is all their equipage of wit.

We wonder how the devil this diff'rence
grows,

Betwixt our fools in verse, and yours in prose;
For, 'faith, the quarrel rightly understood,
'Tis civil war with their own flesh and blood.
The threadbare author hates the gaudy coat;
And swears at the gilt coach, but swears
afout:

For 'tis observed of every scribbling man,

He grows a fop as fast as e'er he can;

Prunes up, and asks his oracle, the glass,
If pink or purple best become his face.

For our poor wretch, he neither rails nor prays;

Nor likes your wit just as you like his plays; }
He has not yet so much of Mr. Bays.<sup>1</sup>

He does his best; and if he cannot please,

Would quietly sue out his writ of ease.<sup>2</sup>

Yet, if he might his own grand-jury call,

By the fair sex he begs to stand or fall.

Let Cæsar's power the men's ambition move,
But grace you him who lost the world for
love!

Yet if some antiquated lady say,

The last age is not copied in his play;

Heav'n help the man who for that face must drudge,

Which only has the wrinkles of a judge.

Let not the young and beauteous join with
those;

For should you raise such numerous hosts of foes,

Young wits and sparks he to his aid must
call;

'Tis more than one man's work to please you
all.

<sup>1</sup>Dryden was caricatured under this name in The Rehearsal (1671), a farce written by the Duke of Buckingham and others.

<sup>2</sup>A certificate of discharge from employment.

ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL (1681)

*Si propius stes
Te capiat magis.*<sup>1</sup>

TO THE READER

'Tis not my intention to make an apology for my poem: some will think it needs no excuse, and others will receive none. The design, I am sure, is honest; but he who draws his pen for one party must expect to make enemies of the other. For wit and fool are consequences of Whig and Tory; and every man is a knave or an ass to the contrary side. There's a treasury of merits in the Fanatic Church, as well as in the Papist; and a pennyworth to be had of saintship, honesty, and poetry, for the lewd, the factious, and the blockheads; but the longest chapter in Deuteronomy has not curses enough for an anti-Bromingham.<sup>2</sup> My comfort is, their manifest prejudice to my cause will render their judgment of less authority against me. Yet if a poem have a genius, it will force its own reception in the world; for there's a sweetness in good verse, which tickles even while it hurts, and no man can be heartily angry with him who pleases him against his will. The commendation of adversaries is the greatest triumph of a writer, because it never comes unless extorted. But I can be satisfied on more easy terms: if I happen to please the more moderate sort, I shall be sure of an honest party, and, in all probability, of the best judges; for the least concerned are commonly the least corrupt. And, I confess, I have laid in for those, by rebating<sup>3</sup> the satire (where justice would allow it) from carrying too sharp an edge. They who can criticize so weakly, as to imagine I have done my worst, may be convinced, at their own cost, that I can write severely with more ease than I can gently. I have but laughed at some men's follies, when I could have declaimed against their vices; and other men's virtues I have commended, as freely as I have taxed their crimes. And now, if you are a malicious reader, I expect you should return upon me that I affect to be thought more impartial than I am. But if men are not to be judged by their professions, God forgive you commonwealth's-men for professing so plausibly for the government. You cannot be so unconscionable as to charge me for not subscribing of my name; for that would reflect too grossly upon your own party, who never dare, though they have the advantage of a jury to secure them. If you like not my poem, the fault may, possibly, be in my writing (though 'tis hard for an author to judge against himself); but, more probably, 'tis in your morals, which cannot bear the truth of it. The violent, on both sides, will condemn the character of Absalom, as either too favorably or too hardly drawn. But they are not the violent whom I desire to please. The fault on the right hand is to extenuate, palliate, and indulge; and, to confess freely, I have endeavored to commit it. Besides the respect which I owe his birth, I have a greater for his heroic virtues; and David himself could not be more tender of the young man's life than I would be of his reputation. But since the most excellent natures are always the most easy, and, as being such, are the soonest perverted by ill counsels, especially when baited with fame and glory; 't is no more a wonder that he withstood not the temptations of Achitophel, than it was for Adam not to have resisted the two devils, the serpent and the woman. The conclusion of the story I purposely forbore to prosecute, because I could not obtain from myself to show Absalom unfortunate. The frame of it was cut out but for a picture to the waist, and if the draught be so far true, 't is as much as I designed.

Were I the inventor, who am only the historian, I should certainly conclude the piece with the reconciliation of Absalom to David. And who knows but this may come to pass? Things were not brought to an extremity where I left the story; there seems yet to be room left for a composure; hereafter there may only be for pity. I have not so much as an uncharitable wish against Achitophel, but am content to be accused of a good-natured error, and to hope with Origen, that the Devil himself may at last be saved. For which reason, in this poem, he is neither brought to set his house in order, nor to dispose of his person afterwards as he in wisdom shall think fit. God is infinitely merciful; and his vicegerent is only not so, because he is not infinite.

<sup>1</sup>The closer you stand, the more it takes your fancy (Horace, Art of Poetry, 361).

<sup>2</sup>Anti-Whig.

<sup>3</sup>Blunting.

The true end of satire is the amendment of vices by correction. And he who writes honestly is no more an enemy to the offender, than the physician to the patient, when he prescribes harsh remedies to an inveterate disease; for those are only in order to prevent the surgeon's work of an ense rescindendum,<sup>1</sup> which I wish not to my very enemies. To conclude all; if the body politic have any analogy to the natural, in my weak judgment an act of oblivion were as necessary in a hot, distempered state, as an opiate would be in a raging fever.

ABSALOM AND ACHITOPHEL<sup>2</sup>

In pious times, ere priestcraft did begin,
Before polygamy was made a sin;
When man on many multiplied his kind,
Ere one to one was cursedly confined;
When nature prompted, and no law denied
Promiscuous use of concubine and bride;
Then Israel's monarch<sup>3</sup> after Heaven's own
heart,
His vigorous warmth did variously impart
To wives and slaves; and, wide as his command, Scattered his Maker's image through the
land.
Michal<sup>4</sup> of royal blood, the crown did wear;
A soil ungrateful to the tiller's care:
Not so the rest; for several mothers bore
To godlike David several sons before.
But since like slaves his bed they did ascend,
No true succession could their seed attend.
Of all this numerous progeny was none
So beautiful, so brave, as Absalon:<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup>Cutting out with the knife (Ovid, Metamorphoses, I, 191).

<sup>2</sup>As Dryden's preface indicates, this is a political poem. The Biblical story of the revolt of Absalom (2 Samuel, xiii-xviii) was used as a thin veil for satire in support of the king and the Tories. Charles II's rightful successor to the throne was his brother James, Duke of York, who was, however, opposed by the Whigs because he was a Roman Catholic. The Whig leader, the first Earl of Shaftesbury, wished to make James, Duke of Monmouth, an illegitimate son of Charles, his successor. It was against this project that Dryden directed his satire.

<sup>3</sup>David; Charles II.

<sup>4</sup>Catharine of Portugal, Charles II's queen.

<sup>5</sup>James, Duke of Monmouth.

Whether, inspired by some diviner lust,
His father got him with a greater gust;
Or that his conscious destiny made way,
By manly beauty, to imperial sway.
Early in foreign fields he won renown
With kings and states allied to Israel's crown;
In peace the thoughts of war he could remove,
And seemed as he were only born for love.
Whate'er he did, was done with so much ease,

In him alone 't was natural to please:
His motions all accompanied with grace;
And paradise was opened in his face.
With secret joy indulgent David viewed
His youthful image in his son renewed:
To all his wishes nothing he denied;
And made the charming Annabel<sup>6</sup> his bride.
What faults he had (for who from faults is free?)

His father could not or he would not see.
Some warm excesses which the law forbore,
Were construed youth that purged by boiling o'er,
And Amnon's murder, by a specious name,
Was called a just revenge for injured fame.
Thus praised and loved the noble youth remained,
While David, undisturbed, in Sion<sup>7</sup> reigned.
But life can never be sincerely blest;
Heav'n punishes the bad, and proves the best.

The Jews,<sup>8</sup> a headstrong, moody, murmur'ing
race,
As ever tried th' extent and stretch of grace;
God's pampered people, whom, debauched
with ease,
No king could govern, nor no God could please (Gods they had tried of every shape and size,
That god-smiths could produce, or priests devise);

These Adam-wits, too fortunately free,
Began to dream they wanted liberty;
And when no rule, no precedent was found,
Of men by laws less circumscribed and
bound;
They led their wild desires to woods and
caves,
And thought that all but savages were slaves.

<sup>6</sup>Anne Scott, Countess of Buccleuch.

<sup>7</sup>London.

<sup>8</sup>The English.

They who, when Saul<sup>1</sup> was dead, without a blow,
 Made foolish Ishbosheth<sup>2</sup> the crown forego;
 Who banished David did from Hebron<sup>3</sup>
 bring,
 And with a general shout proclaimed him king:
 Those very Jews, who, at their very best,
 Their humor more than loyalty expressed,
 Now wondered why so long they had obeyed
 An idol monarch, which their hands had made;
 Thought they might ruin him they could create,
 Or melt him to that golden calf, a State.
 But these were random bolts; no formed design,
 Nor interest made the factious crowd to join:
 The sober part of Israel, free from stain,
 Well knew the value of a peaceful reign;
 And, looking backward with a wise affright,
 Saw seams of wounds, dishonest to the sight:
 In contemplation of whose ugly scars
 They cursed the memory of civil wars.
 The moderate sort of men, thus qualified,
 Inclined the balance to the better side;
 And David's mildness managed it so well,
 The bad found no occasion to rebel.
 But when to sin our biased nature leans,
 The careful Devil is still at hand with means;
 And providently pimps for ill desires:
 The Good Old Cause, revived, a plot requires.
 Plots, true or false, are necessary things,
 To raise up commonwealths and ruin kings.
 Th' inhabitants of old Jerusalem
 Were Jebusites;<sup>4</sup> the town so called from them;
 And theirs the native right.
 But when the chosen people grew more strong,
 The rightful cause at length became the wrong;
 And every loss the men of Jebus bore,
 They still were thought God's enemies the more.
 Thus worn and weakened, well or ill content,
 Submit they must to David's government:

<sup>1</sup>Oliver Cromwell.

<sup>2</sup>Richard Cromwell.

<sup>3</sup>Apparently Scotland, though one would expect it here to mean Brussels.

<sup>4</sup>Roman Catholics.

Impoverished and deprived of all command,
 Their taxes doubled as they lost their land;
 And, what was harder yet to flesh and blood,
 Their gods disgraced, and burned like common wood.

This set the heathen priesthood in a flame;
 For priests of all religions are the same:
 Of whatso'er descent their godhead be,
 Stock, stone, or other homely pedigree,
 In his defense his servants are as bold,
 As if he had been born of beaten gold.
 The Jewish rabbins,<sup>5</sup> though their enemies,
 In this conclude them honest men and wise:
 For 'twas their duty, all the learned think,
 T' espouse his cause, by whom they eat and drink.

From hence began that Plot, the nation's curse,

Bad in itself, but represented worse,
 Raised in extremes, and in extremes decried,
 With oaths affirmed, with dying vows denied,
 Not weighed or winnowed by the multitude;
 But swallowed in the mass, unchewed and crude.

Some truth there was, but dashed and brewed with lies,

To please the fools, and puzzle all the wise:
 Succeeding times did equal folly call,
 Believing nothing, or believing all.

Th' Egyptian<sup>6</sup> rites the Jebusites embraced;
 Where gods were recommended by their taste.

Such sav'ry deities must needs be good,
 As served at once for worship and for food.
 By force they could not introduce these gods,
 For ten to one in former days was odds;
 So fraud was used (the sacrificer's trade):
 Fools are more hard to conquer than persuade.

Their busy teachers mingled with the Jews,
 And raked for converts e'en the court and stews:

Which Hebrew priests<sup>7</sup> the more unkindly took,

Because the fleece accompanies the flock.
 Some thought they God's anointed meant to slay

By guns, invented since full many a day:
 Our author swears it not; but who can know
 How far the Devil and Jebusites may go?

<sup>5</sup>Doctors of the Anglican Church.

<sup>6</sup>French (the immediate reference is to transubstantiation).

<sup>7</sup>Clergymen of the Anglican Church.

This Plot, which failed for want of common sense,

Had yet a deep and dangerous consequence:
For, as when raging fevers boil the blood,
The standing lake soon floats into a flood,
And every hostile humor, which before
Slept quiet in its channels, bubbles o'er;
So several factions from this first ferment
Work up to foam, and threat the government.

Some by their friends, more by themselves
thought wise,
Opposed the power to which they could not
rise.

Some had in courts been great, and thrown from thence,

Like fiends were hardened in impenitence.
Some, by their monarch's fatal mercy, grown
From pardoned rebels kinsmen to the throne,
Were raised in power and public office
high;

Strong bands, if bands ungrateful men could tie.

Of these the false Achitophel<sup>1</sup> was first;
A name to all succeeding ages curst:
For close<sup>2</sup> designs and crooked counsels fit;
Sagacious, bold, and turbulent of wit;
Restless, unfixed in principles and place;
In power unpleased, impatient of disgrace:
A fiery soul, which, working out its way,
Fretted the pigmy body to decay, }
And o'er-informed the tenement of clay. }
A daring pilot in extremity;
Pleased with the danger, when the waves
went high,

He sought the storms; but, for a calm unfit,
Would steer too nigh the sands, to boast his
wit.

Great wits are sure to madness near allied,
And thin partitions do their bounds divide;
Else why should he, with wealth and honor
blest,

Refuse his age the needful hours of rest?
Punish a body which he could not please;
Bankrupt of life, yet prodigal of ease?
And all to leave what with his toil he won,
To that unfeathered two-legg'd thing, a son;
Got, while his soul did huddled notions try
And born a shapeless lump, like anarchy.
In friendship false, implacable in hate;
Resolved to ruin or to rule the State.

To compass this the triple bond he broke, }
The pillars of the public safety shook;
And fitted Israel for a foreign yoke;<sup>3</sup> }
Then seized with fear, yet still affecting fame,
Usurped a patriot's all-atoning name.
So easy still it proves in factious times,
With public zeal to cancel private crimes.
How safe is treason, and how sacred ill,
Where none can sin against the people's will!
Where crowds can wink, and no offense be
known,

Since in another's guilt they find their own!
Yet fame deserved no enemy can grudge;
The statesman we abhor, but praise the judge.

In Israel's courts ne'er sat an Abbethdin<sup>4</sup>
With more discerning eyes, or hands more
clean;

Unbribe, unsought, the wretched to redress;
Swift of dispatch, and easy of access.

Oh, had he been content to serve the crown,
With virtues only proper to the gown;
Or had the rankness of the soil been freed
From cockle, that oppressed the noble seed;
David for him his tuneful harp had strung,
And Heav'n had wanted<sup>5</sup> one immortal
song.

But wild Ambition loves to slide, not stand,
And Fortune's ice prefers to Virtue's land.
Achitophel, grown weary to possess
A lawful fame, and lazy happiness,
Disdained the golden fruit to gather free,
And lent the crowd his arm to shake the tree.
Now, manifest of crimes contrived long
since,

He stood at bold defiance with his prince;
Held up the buckler of the people's cause Against the crown, and skulked behind the laws.

The wished occasion of the Plot he takes;
Some circumstances finds, but more he makes.

By buzzing emissaries fills the ears
Of list'ning crowds with jealousies and fears
Of arbitrary counsels brought to light,
And proves the king himself a Jebusite.

<sup>3</sup>Dryden here refers to England's alliance with France against Holland in 1670. The broken "triple bond" was an alliance made in 1667 between England, Holland, and Sweden, which was directed against France. As a matter of fact Shaftesbury had nothing to do with the alliance of 1670, but Dryden did not know this.

<sup>4</sup>Judge.

<sup>5</sup>Lacked.

<sup>1</sup>Anthony Ashley Cooper, Earl of Shaftesbury.

<sup>2</sup>Secret.

Weak arguments! which yet he knew full well

Were strong with people easy to rebel.
For, governed by the moon, the giddy Jews Tread the same track when she the prime re-
news;

And once in twenty years, their scribes record,

By natural instinct they change their lord.
Achitophel still wants a chief, and none
Was found so fit as warlike Absalon:
Not that he wished his greatness to create,
For politicians neither love nor hate,
But, for he knew his title not allowed,
Would keep him still depending on the crowd,
That kingly pow'r, thus ebbing out, might be Drawn to the dregs of a democracy.
Him he attempts with studied arts to please,
And sheds his venom in such words as these:

"Auspicious prince, at whose nativity
Some royal planet ruled the southern sky;
Thy longing country's darling and desire;
Their cloudy pillar and their guardian fire:
Their second Moses, whose extended wand Divides the seas, and shows the promised
land;

Whose dawning day in every distant age
Has exercised the sacred prophets' rage;
The people's prayer, the glad diviners'
theme,

The young men's vision, and the old men's dream!

Thee, Savior, thee, the nation's vows confess,

And, never satisfied with seeing, bless:

Swift unbespoken pomps thy steps proclaim,

And stammering babes are taught to lisp thy
name.

How long wilt thou the general joy detain,
Starve and defraud the people of thy reign?
Content ingloriously to pass thy days

Like one of Virtue's fools that feeds on
praise;

Till thy fresh glories, which now shine so
bright,

Grow stale and tarnish with our daily sight.
Believe me, royal youth, thy fruit must be
Or gathered ripe, or rot upon the tree.

Heav'n has to all allotted, soon or late,

Some lucky revolution of their fate;

Whose motions if we watch and guide with
skill

(For human good depends on human will),

Our Fortune rolls as from a smooth descent,
And from the first impression takes the bent;
But, if unseized, she glides away like wind,
And leaves repenting Folly far behind.

Now, now she meets you with a glorious
prize,

And spreads her locks before her as she flies.
Had thus old David, from whose loins you
spring,

Not dared, when Fortune called him, to be
king,

At Gath<sup>1</sup> an exile he might still remain,
And Heaven's anointing oil had been in vain.

Let his successful youth your hopes engage;
But shun th' example of declining age:

Behold him setting in his western skies,
The shadows lengthening as the vapors rise.

He is not now, as when on Jordan's sand<sup>2</sup>
The joyful people thronged to see him land,

Cov'ring the beach, and black'ning all the
strand;

But, like the Prince of Angels, from his height

Comes tumbling downward with diminished
light;

Betrayed by one poor plot to public scorn,
(Our only blessing since his curst return;)

Those heaps of people which one sheaf did
bind,

Blown off and scattered by a puff of wind.

What strength can he to your designs oppose,

Naked of friends and round beset with foes?
If Pharaoh's<sup>3</sup> doubtful succor he should use,

A foreign aid would more incense the Jews:
Proud Egypt would dissembled friendship

bring;

Foment the war, but not support the king:

Nor would the royal party e'er unite

With Pharaoh's arms t'assist the Jebusite;

Or if they should, their interest soon would break,

And with such odious aid make David weak.

All sorts of men by my successful arts,

Abhorring kings, estrange their altered
hearts

From David's rule: and 't is the general cry,
'Religion, commonwealth, and liberty.'

If you, as champion of the public good,

Add to their arms a chief of royal blood,

<sup>1</sup>Brussels.

<sup>2</sup>Jordan represents the sea surrounding England.

<sup>3</sup>Louis XIV of France (Egypt).

What may not Israel hope, and what applause

Might such a general gain by such a cause?
Not barren praise alone, that gaudy flower
Fair only to the sight, but solid power;
And nobler is a limited command,
Giv'n by the love of all your native land,
Than a successive title, long and dark,
Drawn from the moldy rolls of Noah's ark."

What cannot praise effect in mighty minds,
When flattery soothes, and when ambition blinds!

Desire of power, on earth a vicious weed,
Yet, sprung from high, is of celestial seed:
In God 't is glory; and when men aspire,
'T is but a spark too much of heavenly fire.
Th' ambitious youth, too covetous of fame,
Too full of angels' metal in his frame,
Unwarily was led from virtue's ways,
Made drunk with honor, and debauched with praise.

Half loath, and half consenting to the ill—
For loyal blood within him struggled still—
He thus replied: "And what pretense have I
To take up arms for public liberty?

My father governs with unquestioned right;
The faith's defender, and mankind's delight;
Good, gracious, just, observant of the laws:
And Heav'n by wonders has espoused his
cause.

Whom has he wronged in all his peaceful
reign?

Who sues for justice to his throne in vain?
What millions has he pardoned of his foes,
Whom just revenge did to his wrath expose?
Mild, easy, humble, studious of our good;
Inclined to mercy, and averse from blood;
If mildness ill with stubborn Israel suit,
His crime is God's beloved attribute.

What could he gain, his people to betray,
Or change his right for arbitrary sway?
Let haughty Pharaoh curse with such a
reign

His fruitful Nile, and yoke a servile train.
If David's rule Jerusalem displease,
The Dog-star heats their brains to this disease.

Why then should I, encouraging the bad,
Turn rebel and run popularly mad?
Were he a tyrant, who, by lawless might Oppressed the Jews, and raised the Jebusite,
Well might I mourn; but nature's holy bands Would curb my spirits and restrain my
hands:

The people might assert their liberty;
But what was right in them were crime in me.
His favor leaves me nothing to require,
Prevents<sup>1</sup> my wishes, and outruns desire.
What more can I expect while David lives?
All but his kingly diadem he gives:
And that"—But there he paused; then sighing, said—

"Is justly destined for a worthier head.
For when my father from his toils shall rest,
And late augment the number of the blest,
His lawful issue shall the throne ascend,
Or the collat'ral line, where that shall end.
His brother, though oppressed with vulgar
spite,

Yet dauntless, and secure of native right,
Of every royal virtue stands possessed,
Still dear to all the bravest and the best.
His courage foes, his friends his truth pro-
claim;

His loyalty the king, the world his fame.
His mercy e'en th' offending crowd will find;
For sure he comes of a forgiving kind.

Why should I then repine at Heav'n's decree,

Which gives me no pretense to royalty?
Yet O that fate, propitiously inclined,
Had raised my birth, or had debased my
mind;

To my large soul not all her treasure lent,
And then betrayed it to a mean descent!
I find, I find my mounting spirits bold,
And David's part disdains my mother's
mold.

Why am I scanted by a niggard birth?
My soul disclaims the kindred of her earth;
And, made for empire, whispers me within,
'Desire of greatness is a godlike sin.'"

Him staggering so when hell's dire agent
found,
While fainting Virtue scarce maintained her
ground,

He pours fresh forces in, and thus replies:
"Th' eternal God, supremely good and
wise,

Imparts not these prodigious gifts in vain:
What wonders are reserved to bless your
reign!

Against your will, your arguments have
shown,

Such virtue's only giv'n to guide a throne.
Not that your father's mildness I contemn;
But manly force becomes the diadem.

<sup>1</sup>Anticipates.

'T is true he grants the people all they crave;
And more, perhaps, than subjects ought to have:

For lavish grants suppose a monarch tame,
And more his goodness than his wit proclaim.
But when should people strive their bonds to break,

If not when kings are negligent or weak?
Let him give on till he can give no more,
The thrifty Sanhedrin<sup>1</sup> shall keep him poor;
And every shekel which he can receive,
Shall cost a limb of his prerogative.
To ply him with new plots shall be my care;
Or plunge him deep in some expensive war;
Which when his treasure can no more supply,

He must, with the remains of kingship, buy.
His faithful friends, our jealousies and fears
Call Jebusites, and Pharaoh's pensioners;
Whom when our fury from his aid has torn,
He shall be naked left to public scorn.

The next successor, whom I fear and hate,
My arts have made obnoxious to the State;
Turned all his virtues to his overthrow,
And gained our elders to pronounce a foe.
His right, for sums of necessary gold,
Shall first be pawned, and afterwards be sold;

Till time shall ever-wanting David draw,
To pass your doubtful title into law:
If not, the people have a right supreme
To make their kings; for kings are made for them.

All empire is no more than power in trust,
Which, when resumed, can be no longer just.
Succession, for the general good designed,
In its own wrong a nation cannot bind;
If altering that the people can relieve,
Better one suffer than a nation grieve.
The Jews well know their power: ere Saul they chose,
God was their king, and God they durst depose.<sup>2</sup>

Urge now your piety, your filial name,
A father's right, and fear of future fame;
The public good, that universal call,
To which e'en Heav'n submitted, answers all.

Nor let his love enchant your generous mind;
'T is Nature's trick to propagate her kind.

Our fond begetters, who would never die,
Love but themselves in their posterity.
Or let his kindness by th' effects be tried,
Or let him lay his vain pretense aside.
God said he loved your father; could he bring

A better proof, than to anoint him king?
It surely showed he loved the shepherd well,
Who gave so fair a flock as Israel.
Would David have you thought his darling son?

What means he then, to alienate the crown?
The name of godly he may blush to bear;
'T is after God's own heart to cheat his heir.

He to his brother gives supreme command;
To you a legacy of barren land,
Perhaps th' old harp, on which he thrums his lays,

Or some dull Hebrew ballad in your praise.
Then the next heir, a prince severe and wise,
Already looks on you with jealous eyes;
Sees through the thin disguises of your arts,
And marks your progress in the people's hearts.

Though now his mighty soul its grief contains,

He meditates revenge who least complains;
And, like a lion, slumb'ring in the way,
Or sleep dissembling, while he waits his prey,
His fearless foes within his distance draws,
Constrains his roaring, and contracts his paws;

Till at the last, his time for fury found,
He shoots with sudden vengeance from the ground;

The prostrate vulgar passes o'er and spares,
But with a lordly rage his hunters tears.

Your case no tame expedients will afford:
Resolve on death, or conquest by the sword,
Which for no less a stake than life you draw;
And self-defense is nature's eldest law.

Leave the warm people no considering time;
For then rebellion may be thought a crime.
Prevail<sup>3</sup> yourself of what occasion gives,
But try your title while your father lives;
And that your arms may have a fair pretense,

Proclaim you take them in the king's defense,
Whose sacred life each minute would expose
To plots, from seeming friends, and secret foes.

<sup>1</sup>Parliament.

<sup>2</sup>The government of the Commonwealth previous to Cromwell's protectorate is represented as a theocracy.

<sup>3</sup>Avail.

And who can sound the depth of David's soul?

Perhaps his fear his kindness may control.
He fears his brother, though he loves his son,

For plighted vows too late to be undone.
If so, by force he wishes to be gained,
Like women's lechery, to seem constrained.
Doubt not: but, when he most affects the frown,

Commit a pleasing rape upon the crown.
Secure his person to secure your cause:
They who possess the prince, possess the laws."

He said, and this advice above the rest,
With Absalom's mild nature suited best:
Unblamed of life (ambition set aside),
Not stained with cruelty, nor puffed with pride,

How happy had he been, if destiny
Had higher placed his birth, or not so high!
His kingly virtues might have claimed a throne,

And blessed all other countries but his own.
But charming greatness since so few refuse,
'T is juster to lament him than accuse.
Strong were his hopes a rival to remove,
With blandishments to gain the public love;
To head the faction while their zeal was hot,

And popularly prosecute the Plot.
To further this, Achitophel unites
The malcontents of all the Israelites;
Whose differing parties he could wisely join,
For several ends, to serve the same design:
The best (and of the princes some were such),

Who thought the pow'r of monarchy too much;

Mistaken men, and patriots in their hearts;
Not wicked, but seduced by impious arts.
By these the springs of property were bent,
And wound so high, they cracked the government.

The next for interest sought t' embroil the State,

To sell their duty at a dearer rate;
And make their Jewish markets of the throne,

Pretending public good, to serve their own.
Others thought kings an useless heavy load,
Who cost too much, and did too little good.
These were for laying honest David by,
On principles of pure good husbandry.

With them joined all th' haranguers of the throng,

That thought to get preferment by the tongue.

Who follow next, a double danger bring,
Not only hating David, but the king:
The Solymæan rout,<sup>1</sup> well-versed of old
In godly faction, and in treason bold;
Cow'ring and quaking at a conqueror's sword,

But lofty to a lawful prince restored,
Saw with disdain an Ethnic plot<sup>2</sup> begun,
And scorned by Jebusites to be outdone.
Hot Levites<sup>3</sup> headed these; who, pulled before

From th' ark, which in the Judges' days they bore,

Resumed their cant, and with a zealous cry
Pursued their old belov'd Theocracy:

Where Sanhedrin and priest enslaved the nation,

And justified their spoils by inspiration:
For who so fit for reign as Aaron's race,<sup>4</sup>
If once dominion they could found in grace?
These led the pack; though not of surest scent,

Yet deepest mouthed against the government.

A numerous host of dreaming saints succeed,
Of the true old enthusiastic breed:

'Gainst form and order they their power employ,

Nothing to build, and all things to destroy.
But far more numerous was the herd of such,
Who think too little, and who talk too much.
These, out of mere instinct, they knew not why,

Adored their fathers' God and property;
And, by the same blind benefit of fate,
The Devil and the Jebusite did hate:
Born to be saved, even in their own despite,
Because they could not help believing right.
Such were the tools; but a whole Hydra more Remains, of sprouting heads too long to score.

Some of their chiefs were princes of the land:
In the first rank of these did Zimri<sup>5</sup> stand;

<sup>1</sup>The London rabble.

<sup>2</sup>The Popish Plot.

<sup>3</sup>Presbyterian ministers, who had been displaced after the Restoration.

<sup>4</sup>The clergy.

<sup>5</sup>George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham.

A man so various, that he seemed to be
 Not one, but all mankind's epitome:
 Stiff in opinions, always in the wrong;
 Was everything by starts, and nothing long;
 But, in the course of one revolving moon,
 Was chemist, fiddler, statesman, and buffoon:
 Then all for women, painting, rhyming,
 drinking,

Besides ten thousand freaks that died in thinking.

Blest madman, who could every hour employ,

With something new to wish, or to enjoy!
 Railing and praising were his usual themes;
 And both (to show his judgment) in extremes:

So over-violent, or over-civil,
 That every man, with him, was God or Devil.
 In squand'ring wealth was his peculiar art:
 Nothing went unrewarded but desert.
 Beggared by fools, whom still he found too
 late,

He had his jest, and they had his estate.

He laughed himself from court; then sought relief

By forming parties, but could ne'er be chief;
 For, spite of him, the weight of business fell
 On Absalom and wise Achitophel:

Thus, wicked but in will, of means bereft,
 He left not faction, but of that was left.

Titles and names 't were tedious to rehearse

Of lords, below the dignity of verse.

Wits, warriors, commonwealth's-men, were
 the best;

Kind husbands, and mere nobles, all the rest.
 And therefore, in the name of dullness, be
 The well-hung Balaam<sup>1</sup> and cold Caleb<sup>2</sup> free;
 And canting Nadab<sup>3</sup> let oblivion damn,
 Who made new porridge for the paschal lamb.

Let friendship's holy band some names assure;

Some their own worth, and some let scorn secure.

Nor shall the rascal rabble here have place,
 Whom kings no titles gave, and God no
 grace:

<sup>1</sup>The Earl of Huntingdon.

<sup>2</sup>Lord Grey of Wark.

<sup>3</sup>Lord Howard of Escrick (the allusion in the following line is to the story that Howard had taken the Sacrament in "lamb's wool"—ale poured on roasted apples and sauce—instead of wine).

Not bull-faced Jonas<sup>4</sup> who could statutes
 draw

To mean rebellion, and make treason law.
 But he, though bad, is followed by a worse,
 The wretch who Heav'n's anointed dared to
 curse:

Shimei,<sup>5</sup> whose youth did early promise bring
 Of zeal to God and hatred to his king,
 Did wisely from expensive sins refrain,
 And never broke the Sabbath, but for gain;
 Nor ever was he known an oath to vent,
 Or curse, unless against the government.

Thus heaping wealth, by the most ready way
 Among the Jews, which was to cheat and pray,
 The city, to reward his pious hate

Against his master, chose him magistrate.

His hand a vare<sup>6</sup> of justice did uphold;

His neck was loaded with a chain of gold.

During his office, treason was no crime;

The sons of Belial had a glorious time;

For Shimei, though not prodigal of pelf,

Yet loved his wicked neighbor as himself.

When two or three were gathered to declaim }

Against the monarch of Jerusalem, }

Shimei was always in the midst of them; }

And if they cursed the king when he was by,

Would rather curse than break good company.

If any durst his factious friends accuse,

He packed a jury of dissenting Jews;

Whose fellow-feeling in the godly cause

Would free the suff'ring saint from human laws.

For laws are only made to punish those
 Who serve the king, and to protect his foes.

If any leisure time he had from power,

(Because 't is sin to misemploy an hour,)

His bus'ness was, by writing, to persuade

That kings were useless, and a clog to trade;

And, that his noble style he might refine,

No Rechabite more shunned the fumes of wine.

Chaste were his cellars, and his shrieval board<sup>7</sup>

The grossness of a city feast abhorred:

His cooks, with long disuse, their trade forgot;

Cool was his kitchen, though his brains were hot.

<sup>4</sup>Sir William Jones.

<sup>5</sup>Slingsby Bethel, a sheriff of London in 1680.

<sup>6</sup>Wand.

<sup>7</sup>His table when he was a sheriff.

Such frugal virtue malice may accuse,
But sure 't was necessary to the Jews;
For towns once burned such magistrates require

As dare not tempt God's providence by fire.
With spiritual food he fed his servants well,
But free from flesh that made the Jews rebel;

And Moses' laws he held in more account,
For forty days of fasting in the mount.

To speak the rest, who better are forgot,
Would tire a well-breathed witness of the Plot.

Yet, Corah,<sup>1</sup> thou shalt from oblivion pass:
Erect thyself, thou monumental brass,
High as the serpent of thy metal made,
While nations stand secure beneath thy shade.

What though his birth were base, yet comets rise

From earthy vapors, ere they shine in skies.

Prodigious actions may as well be done

By weaver's issue, as by prince's son.

This arch-attestor for the public good

By that one deed ennobles all his blood.

Who ever asked the witnesses' high race,

Whose oath with martyrdom did Stephen grace?

Ours was a Levite, and as times went then,

His tribe were God Almighty's gentlemen.

Sunk were his eyes, his voice was harsh and loud,

Sure signs he neither choleric was nor proud:
His long chin proved his wit; his saintlike grace

A church vermilion, and a Moses' face.

His memory, miraculously great,

Could plots, exceeding man's belief, repeat;

Which therefore cannot be accounted lies,

For human wit could never such devise.

Some future truths are mingled in his book;

But where the witness failed, the prophet spoke:

Some things like visionary flights appear;

The spirit caught him up, the Lord knows where;

And gave him his rabbinical degree,

Unknown to foreign university.<sup>2</sup>

His judgment yet his mem'ry did excel;

Which pieced his wondrous evidence so well,

And suited to the temper of the times,
Then groaning under Jebusitic crimes.

Let Israel's foes suspect his heav'nly call,

And rashly judge his writ apocryphal;

Our laws for such affronts have forfeits made:

He takes his life, who takes away his trade,

Were I myself in witness Corah's place,

The wretch who did me such a dire disgrace,
Should whet my memory, though once forgot,

To make him an appendix of my plot.
His zeal to Heav'n made him his prince despise,

And load his person with indignities;
But zeal peculiar privilege affords,

Indulging latitude to deeds and words;

And Corah might for Agag's<sup>3</sup> murder call,

In terms as coarse as Samuel used to Saul.

What others in his evidence did join

(The best that could be had for love or coin),

In Corah's own predicament will fall;

For witness is a common name to all.

Surrounded thus with friends of every sort,
Deluded Absalom forsakes the court;

Impatient of high hopes, urged with renown,

And fired with near possession of a crown.

Th' admiring crowd are dazzled with surprise,

And on his goodly person feed their eyes.

His joy concealed, he sets himself to show,

On each side bowing popularly low;

His looks, his gestures, and his words he frames,

And with familiar ease repeats their names.

Thus formed by nature, furnished out with arts,

He glides unfelt into their secret hearts.

Then, with a kind compassionating look,

And sighs, bespeaking pity ere he spoke,

Few words he said; but easy those and fit,

More slow than Hybla-drops, and far more sweet.

"I mourn, my countrymen, your lost estate;

Though far unable to prevent your fate:

Behold a banished man,<sup>4</sup> for your dear cause

Exposed a prey to arbitrary laws!

Yet oh, that I alone could be undone,

Cut off from empire, and no more a son!

<sup>1</sup>Sir Edmund Bury Godfrey, before whom Oates testified concerning the Popish Plot, and who was soon thereafter murdered.

<sup>2</sup>Monmouth had been sent from England in 1679, but had returned.

<sup>3</sup>Titus Oates.

<sup>4</sup>Oates pretended to have the degree of D.D. from Salamanca.

Now all your liberties a spoil are made;
 Egypt and Tyrus<sup>1</sup> intercept your trade,
 And Jebusites your sacred rites invade. }

My father, whom with reverence yet I name,
 Charmed into ease, is careless of his fame;
 And, bribed with petty sums of foreign gold,
 Is grown in Bathsheba's<sup>2</sup> embraces old;
 Exalts his enemies, his friends destroys;
 And all his power against himself employs.
 He gives, and let him give, my right away;
 But why should he his own and yours betray?
 He, only he, can make the nation bleed,
 And he alone from my revenge is freed.

Take then my tears (with that he wiped his eyes),

'T is all the aid my present power supplies:
 No court-informer can these arms accuse;
 These arms may sons against their fathers use:

And 't is my wish, the next successor's reign
 May make no other Israelite complain."

Youth, beauty, graceful action seldom fail;

But common interest always will prevail;
 And pity never ceases to be shown

To him who makes the people's wrongs his own.

The crowd, that still believe their kings oppress,

With lifted hands their young Messiah bless:
 Who now begins his progress to ordain

With chariots, horsemen, and a num'rous train;

From east to west his glories he displays,
 And, like the sun, the promised land surveys.

Fame runs before him as the morning star,
 And shouts of joy salute him from afar:
 Each house receives him as a guardian god,
 And consecrates the place of his abode.

But hospitable treats did most commend
 Wise Issachar,<sup>3</sup> his wealthy western friend.
 This moving court, that caught the people's eyes,

And seemed but pomp, did other ends disguise:

Achitophel had formed it, with intent
 To sound the depths, and fathom, where it went,

The people's hearts; distinguish friends from foes,

And try their strength, before they came to blows.

Yet all was colored with a smooth pretense
 Of specious love, and duty to their prince.
 Religion, and redress of grievances,

Two names that always cheat and always please,

Are often urged; and good King David's life
 Endangered by a brother and a wife.

Thus in a pageant show a plot is made,
 And peace itself is war in masquerade.

O foolish Israel! never warned by ill!
 Still the same bait, and circumvented still!

Did ever men forsake their present ease,
 In midst of health imagine a disease;

Take pains contingent mischiefs to foresee,
 Make heirs for monarchs, and for God decree?

What shall we think! Can people give away,
 Both for themselves and sons, their native sway?

Then they are left defenseless to the sword
 Of each unbounded, arbitrary lord:

And laws are vain, by which we right enjoy,
 If kings unquestioned can those laws destroy.

Yet if the crowd be judge of fit and just,
 And kings are only officers in trust,

Then this resuming cov'nant was declared
 When kings were made, or is for ever barred.

If those who gave the scepter could not tie
 By their own deed their own posterity,

How then could Adam bind his future race?
 How could his forfeit on mankind take place?

Or how could heavenly justice damn us all,
 Who ne'er consented to our father's fall?

Then kings are slaves to those whom they command,

And tenants to their people's pleasure stand.
 Add, that the power for property allowed

Is mischievously seated in the crowd;
 For who can be secure of private right,

If sovereign sway may be dissolved by might?

Nor is the people's judgment always true:
 The most may err as grossly as the few;

And faultless kings run down, by common cry,

For vice, oppression, and for tyranny.

What standard is there in a fickle rout,

Which, flowing to the mark, runs faster out?
 Nor only crowds, but Sanhedrins may be Infected with this public lunacy,

<sup>1</sup>France and Holland.

<sup>2</sup>Louise de Querquaille, Duchess of Portsmouth, Charles's mistress.

<sup>3</sup>Thomas Thynne of Longleat.

And share the madness of rebellious times,
To murder monarchs for imagined crimes.
If they may give and take whene'er they
please,

Not kings alone (the Godhead's images),
But government itself at length must fall
To nature's state, where all have right to
all.

Yet, grant our lords the people kings can
make,

What prudent men a settled throne would
shake?

For whatsoe'er their sufferings were before,
That change they covet makes them suffer
more.

All other errors but disturb a state,
But innovation is the blow of fate.
If ancient fabrics nod and threat to fall,
To patch the flaws and buttress up the wall,
Thus far 't is duty: but here fix the mark;
For all beyond it is to touch our ark.
To change foundations, cast the frame anew,
Is work for rebels, who base ends pursue,
At once divine and human laws control,
And mend the parts by ruin of the whole.
The tamp'ring world is subject to this curse,
To physic their disease into a worse.

Now what relief can righteous David bring?
How fatal 't is to be too good a king!
Friends he has few, so high the madness
grows:

Who dare be such, must be the people's foes.
Yet some there were, e'en in the worst of
days;

Some let me name, and naming is to praise.

In this short file Barzillai<sup>1</sup> first appears;
Barzillai, crowned with honor and with years.
Long since, the rising rebels he withstood
In regions waste, beyond the Jordan's flood:
Unfortunately brave to buoy the State;
But sinking underneath his master's fate:
In exile with his godlike prince he mourned;
For him he suffered, and with him returned.
The court he practiced, not the courtier's
art:

Large was his wealth, but larger was his
heart,

Which well the noblest objects knew to choose,

The fighting warrior, and recording Muse.
His bed could once a fruitful issue boast;
Now more than half a father's name is lost.

His eldest hope, with every grace adorned,
By me (so Heav'n will have it) always
mourned,

And always honored, snatched in manhood's
prime

B' unequal fates, and Providence's crime;
Yet not before the goal of honor won,
All parts fulfilled of subject and of son:
Swift was the race, but short the time to
run.

O narrow circle, but of power divine,
Scanted in space, but perfect in thy line!
By sea, by land, thy matchless worth was
known,

Arms thy delight, and war was all thy own:
Thy force, infused, the fainting Tyrians
propped;

And haughty Pharaoh found his fortune stopped.

O ancient honor! O unconquered hand, Whom foes unpunished never could withstand!

But Israel was unworthy of thy name;
Short is the date of all immoderate fame.
It looks as Heav'n our ruin had designed,
And durst not trust thy fortune and thy
mind.

Now, free from earth, thy disencumbered
soul

Mounts up, and leaves behind the clouds and starry pole:

From thence thy kindred legions may'st thou
bring,

To aid the guardian angel of thy king.

Here stop, my Muse, here cease thy painful
flight;

No pinions can pursue immortal height:
Tell good Barzillai thou canst sing no more,
And tell thy soul she should have fled before:

Or fled she with his life, and left this verse
To hang on her departed patron's hearse?
Now take thy steepy flight from heav'n, and
see

If thou canst find on earth another he:
Another he would be too hard to find;
See then whom thou canst see not far behind.
Zadoc<sup>1</sup> the priest, whom, shunning power
and place,

His lowly mind advanced to David's grace.
With him the Sagan of Jerusalem,<sup>2</sup>
Of hospitable soul, and noble stem;

<sup>1</sup>William Sancroft, Archbishop of Canterbury.

<sup>2</sup>Henry Compton, Bishop of London.

<sup>1</sup>The Duke of Ormond.

Him of the western dome,<sup>1</sup> whose weighty
sense

Flows in fit words and heavenly eloquence.
The prophets' sons, by such example led,
To learning and to loyalty were bred:
For colleges on bounteous kings depend,
And never rebel was to arts a friend.
To these succeed the pillars of the laws;
Who best could plead, and best can judge a
cause.

Next them a train of loyal peers ascend;
Sharp-judging Adriel,<sup>2</sup> the Muses' friend;
Himself a Muse—in Sanhedrin's debate
True to his prince, but not a slave of state:
Whom David's love with honors did adorn,
That from his disobedient son were torn.
Jotham<sup>3</sup> of piercing wit, and pregnant
thought;

Endued by nature, and by learning taught
To move assemblies, who but only tried
The worse a while, then chose the better side:
Nor chose alone, but turned the balance
too;
So much the weight of one brave man can
do.

Hushai,<sup>4</sup> the friend of David in distress;
In public storms, of manly steadfastness:
By foreign treaties he informed his youth,
And joined experience to his native truth.
His frugal care supplied the wanting throne;
Frugal for that, but bounteous of his own:
'T is easy conduct when exchequers flow,
But hard the task to manage well the low;
For sovereign power is too depressed or high,
When kings are forced to sell, or crowds to
buy.

Indulge one labor more, my weary Muse,
For Amiel:<sup>5</sup> who can Amiel's praise refuse?
Of ancient race by birth, but nobler yet
In his own worth, and without title great:
The Sanhedrin long time as chief he ruled,
Their reason guided, and their passion cooled:

So dext'rous was he in the crown's defense,
So formed to speak a loyal nation's sense,

<sup>1</sup>John Dolben, Bishop of Rochester and Dean of Westminster. The "western dome" is Westminster Abbey.

<sup>2</sup>John Sheffield, Earl of Mulgrave, later Duke of Buckinghamshire.

<sup>3</sup>George Savile, Marquis of Halifax.

<sup>4</sup>Lawrence Hyde, after 1682 Earl of Rochester.

<sup>5</sup>Edward Seymour, Speaker of the House of Commons from 1673 to 1679.

That, as their band was Israel's tribes in
small,

So fit was he to represent them all.
Now rasher charioteers the seat ascend,
Whose loose careers his steady skill commend:

They, like th' unequal ruler of the day,<sup>6</sup>
Misguide the seasons, and mistake the way;
While he withdrawn at their mad labor
smiles,

And safe enjoys the sabbath of his toils.

These were the chief, a small but faithful
band
Of worthies, in the breach who dared to
stand,
And tempt th' united fury of the land.
With grief they viewed such powerful engines
bent,

To batter down the lawful government:
A numerous faction, with pretended frights,
In Sanhedrins to plume<sup>7</sup> the regal rights;
The true successor from the court removed;
The Plot, by hireling witnesses, improved.
These ills they saw, and, as their duty bound,
They showed the king the danger of the
wound;

That no concessions from the throne would
please,

But lenitives fomented the disease;
That Absalom, ambitious of the crown,
Was made the lure to draw the people down;
That false Achitophel's pernicious hate Had turned the Plot to ruin Church and State;

The council violent, the rabble worse;
That Shimei taught Jerusalem to curse.

With all these loads of injuries oppressed,
And long revolving in his careful breast
Th' event of things, at last, his patience tired,

Thus from his royal throne, by Heav'n inspired,

The godlike David spoke: with awful fear
His train their Maker in their master hear.

"Thus long have I, by native mercy
swayed,

My wrongs dissembled, my revenge delayed:
So willing to forgive th' offending age;
So much the father did the king assuage.
But now so far my clemency they slight,
Th' offenders question my forgiving right.

<sup>6</sup>Phaeton.

<sup>7</sup>I. e., to pluck out.

That one was made for many, they contend;
But 'tis to rule; for that's a monarch's
end.

They call my tenderness of blood, my fear;
Though manly tempers can the longest bear.
Yet, since they will divert my native course,
'T is time to show I am not good by force.
Those heaped affronts that haughty subjects
bring,

Are burdens for a camel, not a king.
Kings are the public pillars of the State,
Born to sustain and prop the nation's weight;
If my young Samson will pretend a call
To shake the column, let him share the fall:
But O that yet he would repent and live!
How easy 't is for parents to forgive!
With how few tears a pardon might be won
From nature, pleading for a darling son!
Poor pitied youth, by my paternal care Raised up to all the height his frame could bear!

Had God ordained his fate for empire born,
He would have giv'n his soul another turn:
Gulled with a patriot's name, whose modern
sense

Is one that would by law supplant his prince;
The people's brave, the politician's tool;
Never was patriot yet, but was a fool.
Whence comes it that religion and the laws
Should more be Absalom's than David's
cause?

His old instructor, ere he lost his place,
Was never thought indued with so much
grace.

Good heav'ns, how faction can a patriot paint!

My rebel ever proves my people's saint.
Would they impose an heir upon the throne?
Let Sanhedrins be taught to give their own.
A king's at least a part of government,
And mine as requisite as their consent;
Without my leave a future king to choose,
Infers a right the present to depose.
True, they petition me t' approve their
choice;

But Esau's hands suit ill with Jacob's voice.
My pious subjects for my safety pray;
Which to secure, they take my power away.
From plots and treasons Heav'n preserve my
years,

But save me most from my petitioners!
Unsatiated as the barren womb or grave;
God cannot grant so much as they can crave.

What then is left, but with a jealous eye
To guard the small remains of royalty?
The law shall still direct my peaceful sway,
And the same law teach rebels to obey:
Votes shall no more established power control—

Such votes as make a part exceed the whole:
No groundless clamors shall my friends remove,

Nor crowds have power to punish ere they
prove;

For gods and godlike kings their care express,
Still to defend their servants in distress.

O that my power to saving were confined!
Why am I forced, like Heav'n, against my mind,

To make examples of another kind?
Must I at length the sword of justice draw?
O curst effects of necessary law!

How ill my fear they by my mercy scan!
Beware the fury of a patient man.

Law they require, let Law then show her
face;

They could not be content to look on Grace,
Her hinder parts, but with a daring eye
To tempt the terror of her front and die.
By their own arts, 't is righteously decreed,
Those dire artificers of death shall bleed.
Against themselves their witnesses will
swear,

Till viper-like their mother Plot they tear;
And suck for nutriment that bloody gore,
Which was their principle of life before.
Their Belial with their Belzebub will fight;
Thus on my foes, my foes shall do me right.
Nor doubt th' event; for factious crowds engage,

In their first onset, all their brutal rage.
Then let 'em take an unresisted course;
Retire, and traverse, and delude their force;
But, when they stand all breathless, urge the
fight,
And rise upon 'em with redoubled might;
For lawful power is still superior found;
When long driv'n back, at length it stands
the ground."

He said. Th' Almighty, nodding, gave consent;

And peals of thunder shook the firmament.
Henceforth a series of new time began,
The mighty years in long procession ran:
Once more the godlike David was restored,
And willing nations knew their lawful lord.

MAC FLECKNOE

OR, A SATIRE UPON THE TRUE-
BLUE-PROTESTANT POETT. S.<sup>1</sup> (1682)

ALL human things are subject to decay,
And when fate summons, monarchs must obey.

This Flecknoe<sup>2</sup> found, who, like Augustus, young

Was called to empire, and had governed
long;

In prose and verse was owned, without dispute,

Through all the realms of Nonsense absolute.

This aged prince, now flourishing in peace,

And bless'd with issue of a large increase;

Worn out with business, did at length debate

To settle the succession of the State;

And, pond'ring which of all his sons was fit

To reign, and wage immortal war with wit,

Cried: "'T is resolved; for nature pleads,
that he

Should only rule, who most resembles me.

Sh—— alone my perfect image bears,

Mature in dullness from his tender years:

Sh—— alone, of all my sons, is he

Who stands confirmed in full stupidity.

The rest to some faint meaning make pre-
tense,

But Sh—— never deviates into sense.

Some beams of wit on other souls may fall,

Strike through, and make a lucid interval;

But Sh——'s genuine night admits no ray,

His rising fogs prevail upon the day.

Besides, his goodly fabric fills the eye,

And seems designed for thoughtless majesty;

Thoughtless as monarch oaks that shade the
plain,

And, spread in solemn state, supinely reign.

Heywood and Shirley<sup>3</sup> were but types of thee,

Thou last great prophet of tautology.

Heywood and Shirley<sup>3</sup> were but types of thee,
Thou last great prophet of tautology.

<sup>1</sup>Dryden published The Medal in the spring of 1682. One of the answers to it was The Medal of John Bayes, by Thomas Shadwell. Dryden and Shadwell had once been friends, but Shadwell was a strong Whig, the two were now enemies, and Shadwell's poem was savagely abusive. Mac Flecknoe was Dryden's reply.

<sup>2</sup>Flecknoe died in 1678. He was a Roman Catholic priest before the restoration of Charles II. At one time he was entertained at Lisbon by King John of Portugal.

<sup>3</sup>Thomas Heywood and James Shirley, both dramatists of the early seventeenth century.

Even I, a dunce of more renown than they,
Was sent before but to prepare thy way;
And, coarsely clad in Norwich druggat, came
To teach the nations in thy greater name.
My warbling lute, the lute I whilom strung,
When to King John of Portugal I sung,
Was but the prelude to that glorious day,
When thou on silver Thames didst cut thy
way,

With well-timed oars before the royal barge,
Swelled with the pride of thy celestial charge;
And big with hymn, commander of a host,
The like was ne'er in Epsom blankets tossed.<sup>4</sup>

Methinks I see the new Arion<sup>5</sup> sail,

The lute still trembling underneath thy nail.

At thy well-sharpened thumb from shore to
shore

The treble squeaks for fear, the basses roar;

Echoes from Pissing Alley Sh—— call,

And Sh—— they resound from Aston Hall.

About thy boat the little fishes throng,

As at the morning toast that floats along.

Sometimes, as prince of thy harmonious band,

Thou wield'st thy papers in thy threshing
hand.

St. André's<sup>6</sup> feet ne'er kept more equal time,

Not e'en the feet of thy own Psyche's<sup>7</sup>

rhyme;

Though they in number as in sense excel:

So just, so like tautology, they fell,

That, pale with envy, Singleton<sup>8</sup> forswore

The lute and sword, which he in triumph

bore,

And vowed he ne'er would act Villerius<sup>9</sup>

more."

Here stopped the good old sire, and wept for joy

In silent raptures of the hopeful boy.

All arguments, but most his plays, persuade,

That for anointed dullness he was made.

Close to the walls which fair Augusta<sup>10</sup>

bind

(The fair Augusta much to fears inclined),

<sup>4</sup>A play of Shadwell's was entitled Epsom Wells; tossing in a blanket is also the punishment given a character in Shadwell's The Virtuoso.

<sup>5</sup>A Greek musician of the eighth century, B. C. Shadwell was a musician as well as a poet.

<sup>6</sup>A French dancing-master.

<sup>7</sup>An opera in rhyme by Shadwell.

<sup>8</sup>A singer of the day.

<sup>9</sup>A character in Davenant's Siege of Rhodes.

<sup>10</sup>London, at the time fearful of the King and Roman Catholicism.

An ancient fabric raised t' inform the sight,
 There stood of yore, and Barbican it hight:
 A watchtower once; but now, so fate ordains,
 Of all the pile an empty name remains.
 From its old ruins brothel-houses rise,
 Scenes of lewd loves, and of polluted joys,
 Where their vast courts the mother-strumpets keep,
 And, undisturbed by watch, in silence sleep.
 Near these a Nursery<sup>1</sup> erects its head,
 Where queens are formed, and future heroes
   bred;

Where unfledged actors learn to laugh and
   cry,
 Where infant punks their tender voices try,
 And little Maximins<sup>2</sup> the gods defy. }
 Great Fletcher never treads in buskins here,
 Nor greater Jonson dares in socks appear;
 But gentle Simkin<sup>3</sup> just reception finds Amidst this monument of vanished minds:
 Pure clinches<sup>4</sup> the suburban Muse affords,
 • And Panton waging harmless war with words.
 Here Flecknoe, as a place to fame well
   known,

Ambitiously designed his Sh—'s throne;
 For ancient Dekker prophesied long since,
 That in this pile should reign a mighty prince,

Born for a scourge of wit, and flail of sense;
 To whom true dullness should some Psyches
   owe,

But worlds of Misers from his pen should
   flow;

Humorists and hypocrites it should produce,
 Whole Raymond families, and tribes of Bruce.<sup>5</sup>

Now Empress Fame had published the renown

Of Sh—'s coronation through the town.
 Roused by report of Fame, the nations
   meet,

From near Bunhill, and distant Watling
   Street.

No Persian carpets spread th'imperial way,
 But scattered limbs of mangled poets lay;

From dusty shops neglected authors come,
 Martyrs of pies, and relics of the bum.
 Much Heywood, Shirley, Ogleby<sup>6</sup> there lay,
 But loads of Sh— almost choked the way.
 Bilked stationers for yeomen stood prepared,
 And Herringman<sup>7</sup> was captain of the guard.
 The hoary prince in majesty appeared,
 High on a throne of his own labors reared.
 At his right hand our young Ascanius sate,
 Rome's other hope, and pillar of the State.
 His brows thick fogs, instead of glories,
   grace,

And lambent dullness played around his face.
 As Hannibal did to the altars come,
 Sworn by his sire a mortal foe to Rome;
 So Sh— swore, nor should his vow be vain,
 That he till death true dullness would maintain;

And, in his father's right, and realm's defense,

Ne'er to have peace with wit, nor truce with
   sense.

The king himself the sacred unction made,
 As king by office, and as priest by trade.

In his sinister hand, instead of ball,
 He placed a mighty mug of potent ale;
Love's Kingdom<sup>8</sup> to his right he did convey,
 At once his scepter, and his rule of sway;
 Whose righteous lore the prince had practiced young,

And from whose loins recorded Psyche
   sprung.

His temples, last, with poppies were o'er-
   spread,

That nodding seemed to consecrate his head.
 Just at that point of time, if fame not lie,
 On his left hand twelve reverend owls did fly.

So Romulus, 't is sung, by Tiber's brook,
 Presage of sway from twice six vultures took.
 Th'admiring throng loud acclamations make,
 And omens of his future empire take.

The sire then shook the honors of his head,
 And from his brows damps of oblivion shed
 Full on the filial dullness: long he stood, }
 Repelling from his breast the raging god; }
 At length burst out in this prophetic mood: }

"Heavens bless my son, from Ireland let him reign

To far Barbadoes on the western main;

<sup>6</sup>Ogleby had been a dancing-master and had afterwards translated Homer, Virgil, and Æsop, besides writing other poems.

<sup>7</sup>A London publisher.

<sup>8</sup>A play by Flecknoe.

<sup>1</sup>A theater for the training of young actors.

<sup>2</sup>The name of the chief character in Dryden's Tyrannic Love.

<sup>3</sup>A clown.

<sup>4</sup>Puns. Panton is said to have been a celebrated punster.

<sup>5</sup>The Miser and The Humorists are plays by Shadwell. Raymond is a character in the latter, Bruce a character in Shadwell's The Virtuoso.

Of his dominion may no end be known,
And greater than his father's be his throne;
Beyond Love's Kingdom let him stretch his pen!"

He paused, and all the people cried, "Amen."
Then thus continued he: "My son, advance
Still in new impudence, new ignorance.
Success let others teach, learn thou from me
Pangs without birth, and fruitless industry.
Let Virtuosos in five years be writ;
Yet not one thought accuse thy toil of wit.
Let gentle George<sup>1</sup> in triumph tread the
stage,

Make Dorimant betray, and Loveit rage; Let Cully, Cockwood, Fopling, charm the pit,

And in their folly show the writer's wit.
Yet still thy fools shall stand in thy defense,
And justify their author's want of sense.
Let 'em be all by thy own model made
Of dullness, and desire no foreign aid;
That they to future ages may be known,
Not copies drawn, but issue of thy own.
Nay, let thy men of wit too be the same,
All full of thee, and differing but in name.
But let no alien S—dl—y<sup>2</sup> interpose,
To lard with wit thy hungry Epsom prose.
And when false flowers of rhetoric thou wouldst cull,

Trust nature, do not labor to be dull;
But write thy best, and top; and, in each
line,

Sir Formal's<sup>3</sup> oratory will be thine:
Sir Formal, though unsought, attends thy quill,

And does thy northern dedications<sup>4</sup> fill.
Nor let false friends seduce thy mind to fame,
By arrogating Jonson's hostile name.<sup>5</sup>
Let father Flecknoe fire thy mind with praise,
And uncle Ogleby thy envy raise.
Thou art my blood, where Jonson has no
part:

What share have we in nature, or in art?

<sup>1</sup>Sir George Etheredge. The names in the two following lines are those of characters in Etheredge's plays.

<sup>2</sup>Sir Charles Sedley, who had written the prologue for Shadwell's Epsom Wells, and who probably, as Dryden suggests, gave Shadwell other assistance.

<sup>3</sup>Sir Formal Trifle is a character in Shadwell's Virtuoso.

<sup>4</sup>An allusion to Shadwell's dedication of various books to the Duke of Newcastle and members of his family.

<sup>5</sup>Shadwell frequently eulogized Jonson.

Where did his wit on learning ~~for~~ a brand,
And rail at arts he did not understand?
Where made he love in Prince Nicander's<sup>6</sup>
vein,

Or swept the dust in Psyche's humble strain?
Where sold he bargains, 'whip-stitch, kiss
my arse,'<sup>7</sup>

Promised a play and dwindled to a farce?
When did his Muse from Fletcher scenes
purloin,

As thou whole Eth'rege dost transfuse to
thine?

But so transfused as oil on water's flow,
His always floats above, thine sinks below.
This is thy province, this thy wondrous way,
New humors to invent for each new play:
This is that boasted bias of thy mind,
By which one way, to dullness, 't is inclined;
Which makes thy writings lean on one side
still,

And, in all changes, that way bends thy will.
Nor let thy mountain-belly make pretense
Of likeness; thine's a tympany of sense.
A tun of man in thy large bulk is writ,
But sure thou 'rt but a kilderkin of wit.
Like mine, thy gentle numbers feebly creep;
Thy tragic Muse gives smiles, thy comic
sleep.

With whate'er gall thou sett'st thyself to
write,

Thy inoffensive satires never bite.

In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dies.
Thy genius calls thee not to purchase fame
In keen iambics, but mild anagram.

Leave writing plays, and choose for thy command

Some peaceful province in acrostic land.
There thou may'st wings display and altars
raise,

And torture one poor word ten thousand
ways.

Or, if thou wouldst thy diff'rent talents suit, Set thy own songs, and sing them to thy lute."

He said: but his last words were scarcely
heard;
For Bruce and Longvil had a trap prepared,<sup>8</sup>
And down they sent the yet declaiming bard. }

<sup>6</sup>A character in Shadwell's Psyche.

<sup>7</sup>Such phrases are used by Sir Samuel Hearty in Shadwell's Virtuoso.

<sup>8</sup>These characters thus make Sir Formal Trifle disappear in Shadwell's Virtuoso.

Sinking he left his druggert robe behind,
 Borne upwards by a subterranean wind.
 The mantle fell to the young prophet's part,
 With double portion of his father's art.

RELIGIO LAICI

OR, A LAYMAN'S FAITH (1682)
 A POEM

Ornari res ipsa negat, contenta doceri.<sup>1</sup>

THE PREFACE

A POEM with so bold a title, and a name prefixed from which the handling of so serious a subject would not be expected, may reasonably oblige the author to say somewhat in defense both of himself and of his undertaking. In the first place, if it be objected to me that, being a layman, I ought not to have concerned myself with speculations which belong to the profession of divinity, I could answer that perhaps laymen, with equal advantages of parts and knowledge, are not the most incompetent judges of sacred things; but, in the due sense of my own weakness and want of learning, I plead not this; I pretend not to make myself a judge of faith in others, but only to make a confession of my own; I lay no unhallowed hand upon the ark, but wait on it, with the reverence that becomes me, at a distance. In the next place I will ingenuously confess that the helps I have used in this small treatise were many of them taken from the works of our own reverend divines of the Church of England; so that the weapons with which I combat irreligion are already consecrated; though I suppose they may be taken down as lawfully as the sword of Goliath was by David, when they are to be employed for the common cause, against the enemies of piety. I intend not by this to entitle them to any of my errors, which yet, I hope, are only those of charity to mankind; and such as my own charity has caused me to commit, that of others may more easily excuse. Being naturally inclined to scepticism in philosophy I have no reason to impose my opinions in a subject which is above it; but whatever they are, I submit them with all reverence to my Mother Church,<sup>2</sup> accounting them no further mine, than as they are authorized, or at least uncondemned by her. And, indeed, to secure myself on this side, I have used the necessary precaution of showing this paper before it was published to a judicious and learned friend, a man indefatigably zealous in the service of the Church and State; and whose writings have highly deserved of both. He was pleased to approve the body of the discourse, and I hope he is more my friend than to do it out of complaisance. 'T is true, he had too good a taste to like it all; and amongst some other faults recommended to my second view what I have written, perhaps too boldly, on St. Athanasius, which he advised me wholly to omit. I am sensible enough that I had done more prudently to have followed his opinion; but then I could not have satisfied myself that I had done honestly not to have written what was my own. It has always been my thought that heathens who never did, nor without miracle could, hear of the name of Christ, were yet in a possibility of salvation. Neither will it enter easily into my belief that, before the coming of our Savior, the whole world, excepting only the Jewish nation, should lie under the inevitable necessity of everlasting punishment, for want of that revelation which was confined to so small a spot of ground as that of Palestine. Among the sons of Noah we read of one only who was accursed; and if a blessing in the ripeness of time was reserved for Japhet (of whose progeny we are), it seems unaccountable to me why so many generations of the same offspring as preceded our Savior in the flesh should be all involved in one common condemnation, and yet that their posterity should be entitled to the hopes of salvation: as if a bill of exclusion had passed only on the fathers, which debarred not the sons from their succession. Or that so many ages had been delivered over to hell, and so many reserved for heaven, and that the Devil had the first choice, and God the next. Truly I am apt to think that the revealed religion which was taught by Noah to all his sons might continue for some ages in the whole posterity. That afterwards it was included wholly in the family of Sem is manifest; but when the progenies of Cham and Japhet swarmed into colonies, and those colonies were subdivided into many others, in process of time their descendants lost by little and little the primitive and purer rites of divine worship, retaining only the notion of one deity; to which succeeding generations added others; for men took their degrees in those ages from conquerors to gods. Revelation being thus eclipsed to almost all mankind, the light of nature, as the next in dignity, was substituted; and that is it which St. Paul concludes to be the rule of the heathens, and by which they are hereafter to be judged. If my supposition be true, then the consequence which I have assumed in my poem may be also true; namely, that Deism, or the principles of natural worship, are only the faint remnants or dying flames of revealed religion in the posterity of Noah: and that our modern philosophers, nay, and some of our philosophizing divines, have too much exalted the faculties of our souls, when they have maintained that by their force mankind has been able to find out that there is one supreme agent or intellectual being which we call God; that praise and prayer are his due worship; and the rest of those deducements, which I am confident are the remote effects of revelation, and unattainable by our discourse; I mean as simply considered, and without the benefit of divine illumination. So that we have not lifted up ourselves to God by the weak pinions of our reason, but he has been pleased to descend to us; and what Socrates said of him, what Plato writ, and the rest of the heathen philosophers of several nations, is all no more than the twilight of revelation, after the sun of it was set in the race of Noah. That there is something above us, some principle of motion, our reason can apprehend, though it cannot discover what it is, by its own virtue. And indeed 't is very improbable that we, who by the strength of our faculties cannot enter into the knowledge of any being, not so much as of our own, should be able to find out by them that supreme nature, which we cannot otherwise define than by saying it is infinite; as if infinite were definable, or infinity a subject for our narrow understanding. They who would prove religion by reason do but weaken the cause which they endeavor to support: 't is to take away the pillars from our faith, and to prop it only with a twig; 't is to design a tower like that of Babel, which, if it were possible (as it is not) to reach heaven, would come to nothing by the confusion of the workmen. For every man is building a several way; impotently conceited of his own model and his own materials: reason is always striving, and always at a loss; and of necessity it must so come to pass, while 't is exercised about that which is not its proper object. Let us be content at last to know God by his own methods; at least, so much of him as he is pleased to reveal to us in the sacred Scriptures; to apprehend them to be the word of God is all our reason has to do; for all beyond it is the work of faith, which is the seal of heaven impressed upon our human understanding.

<sup>1</sup>Truth desires not to be embellished, but simply to be told (Manilius, Astronom., iii, 39).

<sup>2</sup>I. e., the Church of England.

And now for what concerns the holy bishop Athanasius, the preface of whose creed seems inconsistent with my opinion;<sup>1</sup> which is, that heathens may possibly be saved: in the first place I desire it may be considered that it is the preface only, not the creed itself, which (till I am better informed) is of too hard a digestion for my charity. 'T is not that I am ignorant how many several texts of Scripture seemingly support that cause; but neither am I ignorant how all those texts may receive a kinder and more mollified interpretation. Every man who is read in Church history knows that belief was drawn up after a long contestation with Arius concerning the divinity of our blessed Savior, and his being one substance with the Father; and that, thus compiled, it was sent abroad among the Christian churches, as a kind of test, which whosoever took was looked on as an orthodox believer. 'T is manifest from hence that the heathen part of the empire was not concerned in it; for its business was not to distinguish betwixt pagans and Christians, but betwixt heretics and true believers. This, well considered, takes off the heavy weight of censure, which I would willingly avoid from so venerable a man; for if this proportion, "whosoever will be saved," be restrained only to those to whom it was intended, and for whom it was composed, I mean the Christians; then the anathema reaches not the heathens, who had never heard of Christ, and were nothing interested in that dispute. After all, I am far from blaming even that prefatory addition to the creed, and as far from caviling at the continuation of it in the liturgy of the Church, where, on the days appointed, 't is publicly read: for I suppose there is the same reason for it now, in opposition to the Socinians, as there was then against the Arians; the one being a heresy which seems to have been refined out of the other; and with how much more plausibility of reason it combats our religion, with so much more caution to be avoided; and therefore the prudence of our Church is to be commended, which has interposed her authority for the recommendation of this creed. Yet, to such as are grounded in the true belief, those explanatory creeds, the Nicene and this of Athanasius, might perhaps be spared; for what is supernatural will always be a mystery in spite of exposition, and, for my own part, the plain Apostles' Creed is most suitable to my weak understanding, as the simplest diet is the most easy of digestion.

<sup>1</sup>The Preface is as follows: "Whosoever will be saved, before all things it is necessary that he hold the Catholic faith. Which faith except every one do keep whole and undefiled, without doubt he shall perish everlastingly."

I have dwelt longer on this subject than I intended, and longer than, perhaps, I ought; for having laid down, as my foundation, that the Scripture is a rule; that in all things needful to salvation it is clear, sufficient, and ordained by God Almighty for that purpose, I have left myself no right to interpret obscure places, such as concern the possibility of eternal happiness to heathens; because whatsoever is obscure is concluded not necessary to be known.

But, by asserting the Scripture to be the canon of our faith, I have unavoidably created to myself two sorts of enemies: the Papists indeed, more directly, because they have kept the Scripture from us, what they could;<sup>1</sup> and have reserved to themselves a right of interpreting what they have delivered under the pretense of infallibility: and the Fanatics more collaterally, because they have assumed what amounts to an infallibility in the private spirit; and have detorted<sup>2</sup> those texts of Scripture which are not necessary to salvation, to the damnable uses of sedition, disturbance, and destruction of the civil government. To begin with the Papists, and to speak freely, I think them the less dangerous, at least in appearance, to our present State, for not only the penal laws are in force against them, and their number is contemptible; but also their peerage and commons are excluded from parliaments, and consequently those laws in no probability of being repealed. A general and uninterrupted plot of their clergy, ever since the Reformation, I suppose all Protestants believe. For 't is not reasonable to think but that so many of their orders, as were outed from their fat possessions, would endeavor a re-entrance against those whom they account heretics. As for the late design, Mr. Coleman's<sup>3</sup> letters, for aught I know, are the best evidence; and what they discover, without wiredrawing their sense, or malicious glosses, all men of reason conclude credible. If there be anything more than this required of me, I must believe it as well as I am able, in spite of the witnesses, and out of a decent conformity to the votes of parliament; for I suppose the Fanatics will not allow the private spirit in this case. Here the infallibility is at least in one part of the government; and our understandings as well as our wills are represented. But to return to the Roman Catholics, how can we be secure from the practice of Jesuited Papists in that religion? For not two or three of that order, as some of them would impose upon us, but almost the whole body of them, are of opinion that their infallible master has a right over kings, not only in spirituals but temporals. Not to name Mariana, Bellarmine, Emanuel Sa, Molina, Santarel, Simancha,<sup>4</sup> and at least twenty others of foreign countries; we can produce, of our own nation, Campian, and Doleman or Parsons,<sup>5</sup> besides many are named whom I have not read, who all of them attest this doctrine, that the Pope can depose and give away the right of any sovereign prince, si vel paulum deflexerit, if <sup>3</sup>Coleman had been secretary to the Duke of York and had engaged in correspondence looking to the establishment of Roman Catholicism in England. — He was executed in 1678.

<sup>4</sup>All of them Jesuit writers of the sixteenth century.

<sup>5</sup>English Jesuits of the sixteenth century. "Doleman" was a pseudonym used by Parsons.

<sup>1</sup>As far as they could.

<sup>2</sup>Twisted.

he shall never so little warp; but if he once comes to be excommunicated, then the bond of obedience is taken off from subjects; and they may and ought to drive him, like another Nebuchadnezzar, ex hominum Christianorum dominatu, from exercising dominion over Christians; and to this they are bound by virtue of divine precept, and by all the ties of conscience under no less penalty than damnation. If they answer me (as a learned priest has lately written) that this doctrine of the Jesuits is not de fide,<sup>1</sup> and that consequently they are not obliged by it, they must pardon me if I think they have said nothing to the purpose; for 't is a maxim in their Church, where points of faith are not decided, and that doctors are of contrary opinions, they may follow which part they please; but more safely the most received and most authorized. And their champion Bellarmine has told the world, in his Apology, that the king of England is a vassal to the Pope, ratione directi dominii,<sup>2</sup> and that he holds in villanage of his Roman landlord. Which is no new claim put in for England. Our chronicles are his authentic witnesses that King John was deposed by the same plea, and Philip Augustus admitted tenant. And which makes the more for Bellarmine, the French king was again ejected when our king submitted to the Church, and the crown received under the sordid condition of a vassalage.

'T is not sufficient for the more moderate and well-meaning Papists (of which I doubt not there are many) to produce the evidences of their loyalty to the late king, and to declare their innocency in this Plot: I will grant their behavior in the first to have been as loyal and as brave as they desire; and will be willing to hold them excused as to the second (I mean when it comes to my turn, and after my betters; for 't is a madness to be sober alone, while the nation continues drunk), but that saying of their Father Cres.<sup>3</sup> is still running in my head, that they may be dispensed with in their obedience to an heretic prince, while the necessity of the times shall oblige them to it: for that (as another of them tells us) is only the effect of Christian prudence; but when once they shall get power to shake him off, an heretic is no lawful king, and consequently to rise against him is no rebellion. I should be glad, therefore, that they would follow the advice which was charitably given them by a reverend prelate of our Church; namely, that they would join in a public act of disowning and detesting those Jesuitic principles; and subscribe to all doctrines which deny the Pope's authority of deposing kings, and releasing subjects from their oath of allegiance: to which I should think they might easily be induced, if it be true that this present Pope has condemned the doctrine of king-killing (a thesis of the Jesuits), amongst others, ex cathedra (as they call it), or in open consistory.

Leaving them, therefore, in so fair a way (if they please themselves) of satisfying all reasonable men of their sincerity and good meaning to the government, I shall make bold to consider that other extreme of our religion, I mean the Fanatics, or Schismatics, of the English Church. Since the Bible has been translated into our tongue, they have used it so, as if their business was not to be saved but to be damned by its contents. If we consider only them, better had it been for the English nation that it had still remained in the original Greek and Hebrew, or at least in the honest Latin of St. Jerome, than that several texts in it should have been prevaricated to the destruction of that government which put it into so ungrateful hands.

How many heresies the first translation of Tyndal produced in few years, let my Lord Herbert's history of Henry the Eighth inform you; insomuch that for the gross errors in it, and the great mischiefs it occasioned, a sentence passed on the first edition of the Bible, too shameful almost to be repeated. After the short reign of Edward the Sixth (who had continued to carry on the Reformation on other principles than it was begun), everyone knows that not only the chief promoters of that work, but many others whose consciences would not dispense with Popery, were forced, for fear of persecution, to change climates: from whence returning at the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's reign, many of them who had been in France, and at Geneva, brought back the rigid opinions and imperious discipline of

<sup>1</sup>A matter of faith.

<sup>2</sup>By reason of direct control.

<sup>3</sup>Serenus Cressy, chaplain to Queen Catharine, wife of Charles II.

Calvin, to graft upon our Reformation. Which, though they cunningly concealed at first (as well knowing how nauseously that drug would go down in a lawful monarchy, which was prescribed for a rebellious commonwealth), yet they always kept it in reserve; and were never wanting to themselves either in court or parliament, when either they had any prospect of a numerous party of Fanatic members in the one, or the encouragement of any favorite in the other, whose covetousness was gaping at the patrimony of the Church. They who will consult the works of our venerable Hooker, or the account of his life,<sup>1</sup> or more particularly the letter written to him on this subject by George Cranmer, may see by what gradations they proceeded: from the dislike of cap and surplice, the very next step was admonitions to the parliament against the whole government ecclesiastical; then came out volumes in English and Latin in defense of their tenets; and immediately practices were set on foot to erect their discipline without authority. Those not succeeding, satire and railing was the next; and Martin Marprelate (the Marvell of those times) was the first Presbyterian scribbler who sanctified libels and scurrility to the use of the Good Old Cause. Which was done (says my author) upon this account; that (their serious treatises having been fully answered and refuted) they might compass by railing what they had lost by reasoning; and, when their cause was sunk in court and parliament, they might at least hedge in a stake amongst the rabble: for to their ignorance all things are wit which are abusive. But if Church and State were made the theme, then the doctoral degree of wit was to be taken at Billingsgate: even the most saintlike of the party, though they durst not excuse this contempt and vilifying of the government, yet were pleased, and grinned at it with a pious smile, and called it a judgment of God against the hierarchy. Thus Sectaries, we may see, were born with teeth, foul-mouthed and scurrilous from their infancy; and if spiritual pride, venom, violence, contempt of superiors, and slander, had been the marks of orthodox belief, the Presbytery and the rest of our Schismatics, which are their spawn, were always the most visible Church in the Christian world.

'T is true, the government was too strong at that time for a rebellion; but to show what proficiency they had made in Calvin's school, even then their mouths watered at it; for two of their gifted brotherhood (Hacket and Coppinger), as the story tells us, got up into a pease-cart and harangued the people, to dispose them to an insurrection, and to establish their discipline by force: so that, however it comes about that now they celebrate Queen Elizabeth's birthnight as that of their saint and patroness, yet then they were for doing the work of the Lord by arms against her; and, in all probability, they wanted but a Fanatic lord mayor and two sheriffs of their party, to have compassed it.

Our venerable Hooker, after many admonitions which he had given them, toward the end of his preface breaks out into this prophetic speech: "There is in every one of these considerations most just cause to fear, lest our hastiness to embrace a thing of so perilous consequence" (meaning the Presbyterian discipline) "should cause posterity to feel those evils, which as yet are more easy for us to prevent, than they would be for them to remedy."

How fatally this Cassandra has foretold, we know too well by sad experience: the seeds were sown in the time of Queen Elizabeth, the bloody harvest ripened in the reign of King Charles the Martyr; and, because all the sheaves could not be carried off without shedding some of the loose grains, another crop is too like to follow; nay, I fear 't is unavoidable if the conventiclers be permitted still to scatter.

A man may be suffered to quote an adversary to our religion, when he speaks truth; and 't is the observation of Maimbourg, in his History of Calvinism, that wherever that discipline was planted and embraced, rebellion, civil war, and misery attended it. And how indeed should it happen otherwise? Reformation of Church and State has always been the ground of our divisions in England. While we were Papists, our Holy Father rid us, by pretending authority out of the Scriptures to depose princes; when we shook off his authority, the Sectaries furnished themselves with the same weapons; and out of the same magazine, the Bible: so that the

<sup>1</sup>Dryden refers to the account by Izaak Walton, where, also, Cranmer's letter is printed.

Scriptures, which are in themselves the greatest security of governors, as commanding express obedience to them, are now turned to their destruction; and never since the Reformation has there wanted a text of their interpreting to authorize a rebel. And 't is to be noted by the way that the doctrines of king-killing and deposing, which have been taken up only by the worst party of the Papists, the most frontless flatterers of the Pope's authority, have been espoused, defended, and are still maintained by the whole body of Nonconformists and Republicans. 'T is but dubbing themselves the people of God, which 't is the interest of their preachers to tell them they are, and their own interest to believe; and after that, they cannot dip into the Bible, but one text or another will turn up for their purpose; if they are under persecution (as they call it), then that is a mark of their election; if they flourish, then God works miracles for their deliverance, and the saints are to possess the earth.

They may think themselves to be too roughly handled in this paper; but I, who know best how far I could have gone on this subject, must be bold to tell them they are spared: though at the same time I am not ignorant that they interpret the mildness of a writer to them, as they do the mercy of the government; in the one they think it fear, and conclude it weakness in the other. The best way for them to confute me is, as I before advised the Papists, to disclaim their principles and renounce their practices. We shall all be glad to think them true Englishmen when they obey the king, and true Protestants when they conform to the Church discipline.

It remains that I acquaint the reader that the verses were written for an ingenious young gentleman,<sup>1</sup> my friend, upon his translation of the Critical History of the Old Testament, composed by the learned Father Simon: the verses therefore are addressed to the translator of that work, and the style of them is, what it ought to be, epistolary.

If anyone be so lamentable a critic as to require the smoothness, the numbers, and the turn of heroic poetry in this poem, I must tell him that, if he has not read Horace, I have studied him, and hope the style of his Epistles is not ill imitated here. The expressions of a poem designed purely for instruction ought to be plain and natural, and yet majestic; for here the poet is presumed to be a kind of lawgiver, and those three qualities which I have named are proper to the legislative style. The florid, elevated, and figurative way is for the passions; for love and hatred, fear and anger, are begotten in the soul by showing their objects out of their true proportion, either greater than the life, or less; but instruction is to be given by showing them what they naturally are. A man is to be cheated into passion, but to be reasoned into truth.

RELIGIO LAICI

DIM as the borrowed beams of moon and stars
To lonely, weary, wand'ring travelers,
Is Reason to the soul; and, as on high
Those rolling fires discover but the sky,
Not light us here, so Reason's glimmering
ray

Was lent, not to assure our doubtful way,
But guide us upward to a better day.
And as those nightly tapers disappear,
When day's bright lord ascends our hemisphere;

So pale grows Reason at Religion's sight;
So dies, and so dissolves in supernatural light.

Some few, whose lamp shone brighter, have been led

From cause to cause, to nature's secret head;
And found that one first principle must be:
But what, or who, that UNIVERSAL HE;
Whether some soul encompassing this ball,
Unmade, unmoved; yet making, moving all;
Or various atoms' interfering dance
Leapt into form (the noble work of chance),
Or this great all was from eternity;
Not e'en the Stagirite<sup>2</sup> himself could see,
And Epicurus guessed as well as he:
As blindly groped they for a future state;
As rashly judged of providence and fate:

But least of all could their endeavors find

What most concerned the good of humankind;

For happiness was never to be
found,

But vanished from 'em like enchanted
ground.

Opinions of the several sects of philosophers concerning the Summum Bonum.

<sup>1</sup>The young man's name was Henry Dickinson.

<sup>2</sup>Aristotle.

One thought content the good to be enjoyed;
This every little accident destroyed:
The wiser madmen did for virtue toil,
A thorny, or at best a barren soil;

In pleasure some their glutton souls would
steep,
But found their line too short, the well too
deep,
And leaky vessels which no bliss could keep.

Thus anxious thoughts in endless circles roll,
Without a center where to fix the soul;
In this wild maze their vain endeavors end:
How can the less the greater comprehend?
Or finite reason reach Infinity?
For what could fathom God were more than
He.

The Deist thinks he stands on System of firmer ground; Deism.

Cries: "Εὐρηκα, the mighty secret's found:
God is that spring of good; supreme and
best;

We, made to serve, and in that service blest."
If so, some rules of worship must be given,
Distributed alike to all by Heaven:
Else God were partial, and to some denied
The means his justice should for all provide.

This general worship is to PRAISE and PRAY,
One part to borrow blessings, one to pay;
And when frail nature slides into offense,
The sacrifice for crimes is penitence.
Yet, since th' effects of providence, we find,
Are variously dispensed to humankind;
That vice triumphs, and virtue suffers here
(A brand that sovereign justice cannot bear),
Our reason prompts us to a future state,
The last appeal from fortune and from fate:
Where God's all-righteous ways will be declared,

The bad meet punishment, the good reward.

Thus man by his own strength to heaven
would soar,
And would not be obliged to God *Of revealed
for more. Religion*

Vain, wretched creature, how art thou misled

To think thy wit these godlike notions bred!
These truths are not the product of thy mind,
But dropped from heaven, and of a nobler
kind.

Revealed Religion first informed thy sight,
And Reason saw not, till Faith sprung the
light.

Hence all thy natural worship takes the source:

'T is revelation what thou think'st discourse.
Else, how com'st thou to see these truths so
clear,

Which so obscure to heathens did appear?
Not Plato these, nor Aristotle found;
Nor he whose wisdom oracles Socrates.
renowned.

Hast thou a wit so deep, or so sublime,
Or canst thou lower dive, or higher climb?
Canst thou, by Reason, more of Godhead
know

Than Plutarch, Seneca, or Cicero?
Those giant wits, in happier ages born (When arms and arts did Greece and Rome adorn),

Knew no such system; no such piles could
raise

Of natural worship, built on prayer and
praise,

To One Sole God:

Nor did remorse to expiate sin prescribe,
But slew their fellow creatures for a bribe:
The guiltless victim groaned for their offense,
And cruelty and blood was penitence.
If sheep and oxen could atone for men,
Ah! at how cheap a rate the rich might sin!
And great oppressors might Heaven's wrath
beguile,

By offering his own creatures for a spoil!

Dar'st thou, poor worm, offend Infinity?
And must the terms of peace be given by thee?
Then thou art Justice in the last appeal:
Thy easy God instructs thee to rebel;
And, like a king remote, and weak, must take
What satisfaction thou art pleased to make.

But if there be a power too just and strong
To wink at crimes, and bear unpunished
wrong;

Look humbly upward, see his will disclose
The forfeit first, and then the fine impose:
A mulct thy poverty could never pay,
Had not eternal wisdom found the way,
And with celestial wealth supplied thy store:
His justice makes the fine, his mercy quits
the score.

See God descending in thy human frame;
Th' offended suff'ring in th' offender's name;
All thy misdeeds to him imputed see,
And all his righteousness devolved on thee.

For granting we have sinned, and that
th' offense

Of man is made against Omnipotence,

Some price that bears proportion must be paid,

And infinite with infinite be weighed.

See then the Deist lost: remorse for vice,

Not paid; or paid, inadequate in price:

What farther means can Reason now direct,

Or what relief from human wit expect?

That shows us sick; and sadly are we sure

Still to be sick, till Heav'n reveal the cure:

If then Heav'n's will must needs be understood

(Which must, if we want cure, and Heaven be good),

Let all records of will revealed be shown; }

With Scripture all in equal balance thrown, }

And our one sacred book will be that one. }

Proof needs not here, for whether we compare

That impious, idle, superstitious ware

Of rites, lustrations, offerings (which before,

In various ages, various countries bore),

With Christian faith and virtues, we shall find

None answ'ring the great ends of humankind,

But this one rule of life, that shows us best

How God may be appeased, and mortals blest.

Whether from length of time its worth we draw,

The world is scarce more ancient than the law:

Heav'n's early care prescribed for every age;

First, in the soul, and after, in the page.

Or, whether more abstractedly we look,

Or on the writers, or the written book,

Whence, but from heav'n, could men unskilled in arts,

In several ages born, in several parts,

Weave such agreeing truths? or how, or why,

Should all conspire to cheat us with a lie?

Unasked their pains, ungrateful their advice,

Starving their gain, and martyrdom their price.

If on the book itself we cast our view,

Concurrent heathens prove the story true;

The doctrine, miracles; which must convince,

For Heav'n in them appeals to human sense:

And though they prove not, they confirm the cause,

When what is taught agrees with nature's laws.

Then for the style; majestic and divine,

It speaks no less than God in every line:

Commanding words; whose force is still the same

As the first fiat that produced our frame.

All faiths beside or did by arms ascend,

Or sense indulged has made mankind their friend:

This only doctrine does our lusts oppose,

Unfed by nature's soil, in which it grows;

Cross to our interests, curbing sense and sin;

Oppressed without, and undermined within,

It thrives through pain; its own tormentors tires;

And with a stubborn patience still aspires.

To what can Reason such effects assign,

Transcending nature, but to laws divine?

Which in that sacred volume are contained;

Sufficient, clear, and for that use ordained.

But stay: the Deist here will Objection of the Deist.

urge anew,

No supernatural worship can be true;

Because a general law is that alone

Which must to all, and everywhere, be known:

A style so large as not this book can claim,
Nor aught that bears revealed Religion's name.

'T is said the sound of a Messiah's birth

Is gone through all the habitable earth;

But still that text must be confined alone

To what was then inhabited, and known:

And what provision could from thence accrue

To Indian souls, and worlds discovered new?

In other parts it helps, that, ages past,

The Scriptures there were known, and were embraced,

Till Sin spread once again the shades of night:

What's that to these who never saw the light?

Of all objections this indeed is The objection answered.

chief

To startle Reason, stagger frail Belief:

We grant, 't is true, that Heav'n from human sense

Has hid the secret paths of Providence;
But boundless wisdom, boundless mercy,

may

Find e'en for those bewildered souls a way.

If from his nature foes may pity claim,

Much more may strangers who ne'er heard his name.

And though no name be for salvation known,
But that of his eternal Son's alone;

Who knows how far transcending goodness can

Extend the merits of that Son to man?

Who knows what reasons may his mercy
 lead,
 Or ignorance invincible may plead?
 Not only charity bids hope the best,
 But more the great apostle has expressed:
 That if the Gentiles (whom no law inspired)
 By nature did what was by law required,
 They, who the written rule had never known,
 Were to themselves both rule and law alone:
 To nature's plain indictment they shall
 plead,
 And by their conscience be condemned or freed.
 Most righteous doom! because a rule revealed
 Is none to those from whom it was concealed.
 Then those who followed Reason's dictates
 right,
 Lived up, and lifted high their natural light;
 With Socrates may see their Maker's face,
 While thousand rubric-martyrs want a place.
 Nor does it balk my charity, to find
 Th' Egyptian bishop<sup>1</sup> of another mind:
 For though his creed eternal truth contains,
 'T is hard for man to doom to endless pains
 All who believed not all his zeal required,
 Unless he first could prove he was inspired.
 Then let us either think he meant to say
 This faith, where published, was the only
 way;
 Or else conclude that, Arius to confute,
 The good old man, too eager in dispute,
 Flew high; and, as his Christian fury rose,
 Damned all for heretics who durst oppose.
 Thus far my charity this path Digression
 has tried; to the trans-
 (A much unskilful, but well- lator of Father meaning guide:) Simon's Crit-
 Yet what they are, e'en these ical History
 crude thoughts were bred of the Old Testament.
 By reading that which better thou hast read:
 Thy matchless author's work; which thou,
 my friend,
 By well translating better dost commend:
 Those youthful hours which of thy equals
 most
 In toys have squandered, or in vice have lost,
 Those hours hast thou to nobler use employed;
 And the severe delights of truth enjoyed.
 Witness this weighty book, in which appears
 The crabbed toil of many thoughtful years,

Spent by thy author in the sifting care
 Of Rabbins' old sophisticated ware
 From gold divine; which he who well can sort
 May afterwards make algebra a sport:
 A treasure, which if country curates buy,
 They Junius and Tremellius<sup>2</sup> may defy;
 Save pains in various readings and translations,
 And without Hebrew make most learn'd
 quotations:
 A work so full with various learning fraught,
 So nicely pondered, yet so strongly wrought,
 As nature's height and art's last hand required;
 As much as man could compass, uninspired.
 Where we may see what errors have been
 made
 Both in the copier's and translator's trade;
 How Jewish, Popish interests have prevailed,
 And where infallibility has failed.
 For some, who have his secret meaning guessed,
 Have found our author not too much a priest:
 For fashion's sake he seems to have recourse
 To Pope, and councils, and tradition's force;
 But he that old traditions could subdue,
 Could not but find the weakness of the new:
 If Scripture, though derived from heav'nly birth,
 Has been but carelessly preserved on earth;
 If God's own people, who of God before Knew what we know, and had been promised more,
 In fuller terms, of Heaven's assisting care,
 And who did neither time nor study spare
 To keep this book untainted, unperplexed,
 Let in gross errors to corrupt the text,
 Omitted paragraphs, embroiled the sense,
 With vain traditions stopped the gaping fence,
 Which every common hand pulled up with
 ease;
 What safety from such brushwood-helps as
 these?
 If written words from time are not secured,
 How can we think have oral sounds endured?
 Which thus transmitted, if one mouth has
 failed,
 Immortal lies on ages are entailed;
 And that some such have been, is proved too
 plain;
 If we consider interest, Church, and gain.

<sup>1</sup>Athanasius, Bishop of Alexandria.

<sup>2</sup>Calvinistic divines.

"O, but," says one, "tradition set aside,

Where can we hope for an unerring guide?

Of the infallibility of tradition in general.

For since th' original Scripture has been lost,
All copies disagreeing, maimed the most,
Or Christian faith can have no certain
ground,

Or truth in Church tradition must be found."

Such an omniscient Church we wish indeed;

'T were worth both Testaments; and cast
in the Creed:

But if this mother be a guide so sure,
As can all doubts resolve, all truth secure,
Then her infallibility as well

Where copies are corrupt or lame can tell;

Restore lost canon with as little pains,

As truly explicate what still remains;

Which yet no council dare pretend to do, }

Unless like Esdras they could write it new: }

Strange confidence, still to interpret true, }

Yet not be sure that all they have explained,
Is in the blest original contained.

More safe, and much more modest 't is to say
God would not leave mankind without a way;
And that the Scriptures, though not everywhere

Free from corruption, or entire, or clear,

Are uncorrupt, sufficient, clear, entire,

In all things which our needful faith require.

If others in the same glass better see,

'T is for themselves they look, but not for
me:

For MY salvation must its doom receive,
Not from what OTHERS but what I believe.

Must all tradition then be set aside?

Objection in behalf of tradition, urged by Father Simon.

This to affirm were ignorance or
pride.

Are there not many points, some needful
sure

To saving faith, that Scripture leaves obscure?

Which every sect will wrest a several way

(For what one sect interprets, all sects may):

We hold, and say we prove from Scripture
plain,

That Christ is God; the bold Socinian

From the same Scripture urges he's but
MAN.

Now what appeal can end th' important suit;

Both parts talk loudly, but the rule is mute?

Shall I speak plain, and in a nation free
Assume an honest layman's liberty?

I think (according to my little skill,

To my own Mother Church submitting still)

That many have been saved, and many may,

Who never heard this question brought in
play.

Th' unlettered Christian, who believes in gross,

Plods on to heaven, and ne'er is at a loss;

For the strait gate would be made straiter
yet,

Were none admitted there but men of wit.

The few by nature formed, with learning fraught,

Born to instruct, as others to be taught,

Must study well the sacred page, and see

Which doctrine, this, or that, does best agree

With the whole tenor of the work divine,

And plainliest points to Heaven's revealed
design;

Which exposition flows from genuine sense,

And which is forced by wit and eloquence.

Not that tradition's parts are useless here,

When general, old, disinterested and clear:

That ancient Fathers thus expound the page

Gives truth the reverend majesty of age;

Confirms its force, by biding every test;

For best authority's next rules are best.

And still the nearer to the spring we go,

More limpid, more unsoiled the waters flow.

Thus, first traditions were a proof alone,

Could we be certain such they were, so
known;

But since some flaws in long descent may be,
They make not truth, but probability.

Even Arius and Pelagius durst provoke

To what the centuries preceding spoke.

Such difference is there in an oft-told tale;

But truth by its own sinews will prevail.

Tradition written therefore more commands

Authority, than what from voice descends;

And this, as perfect as its kind can be,

Rolls down to us the sacred history,

Which, from the Universal Church received,

Is tried, and after for itself believed.

The partial Papists would

The second objection.

infer from hence

Their Church, in last resort, should judge
the sense;

But first they would assume, *Answer to the
objection.*
with wondrous art,

Themselves to be the whole, who are but
part

Of that vast frame, the Church; yet grant they were
The handers down, can they from thence infer

A right t' interpret? or would they alone
Who brought the present, claim it for their own?

The book's a common largess to mankind,
Not more for them than every man designed:
The welcome news is in the letter found;
The carrier's not commissioned to expound.
It speaks itself, and what it does contain,
In all things needful to be known, is plain.

In times o'ergrown with rust and ignorance,

A gainful trade their clergy did advance;
When want of learning kept the laymen low,
And none but priests were authorized to
know;

When what small knowledge was, in them
did dwell,

And he a god who could but read or spell:
Then Mother Church did mightily prevail;
She parceled out the Bible by retail;
But still expounded what she sold or gave,
To keep it in her power to damn and save:
Scripture was scarce, and, as the market
went,

Poor laymen took salvation on content;
As needy men take money, good or bad:
God's word they had not, but the priest's they had.

Yet, whate'er false conveyances they made,
The lawyer still was certain to be paid.
In those dark times they learned their knack
so well,

That by long use they grew infallible:
At last, a knowing age began t'enquire
If they the book, or that did them inspire;
And, making narrower search, they found,
though late,
That what they thought the priest's was their estate,

Taught by the will produced (the written
word),

How long they had been cheated on record.
Then every man who saw the title fair Claimed a child's part, and put in for a
share;

Consulted soberly his private good,
And saved himself as cheap as e'er he could.

'T is true, my friend (and far be flattery
hence),

This good had full as bad a consequence:

The book thus put in every vulgar hand,
Which each presumed he best could understand,

The common rule was made the common
prey,

And at the mercy of the rabble lay.

The tender page with horny fists was galled,
And he was gifted most that loudest bawled:

The spirit gave the doctoral degree; }
And every member of a company }
Was of his trade and of the Bible free. }

Plain truths enough for needful use they
found,

But men would still be itching to expound:
Each was ambitious of th' obscurest place,
No measure ta'en from knowledge, all from

GRACE.

Study and pains were now no more their care;
Texts were explained by fasting and by
prayer:

This was the fruit the private spirit brought,
Occasioned by great zeal and little thought.
While crowds unlearn'd, with rude devotion
warm,

About the sacred viands buzz and swarm,
The fly-blown text creates a crawling brood,
And turns to maggots what was meant for food.

A thousand daily sects rise up and die;
A thousand more the perished race supply:
So all we make of Heaven's discovered will
Is, not to have it, or to use it ill.

The danger's much the same; on several shelves

If others wreck us, or we wreck ourselves.
What then remains, but, waiving each extreme,

The tides of ignorance and pride to stem?
Neither so rich a treasure to forego;
Nor proudly seek beyond our pow'r to know:
Faith is not built on disquisitions vain;
The things we must believe are few and plain:
But since men will believe more than they
need,

And every man will make himself a creed,
In doubtful questions 't is the safest way
To learn what unsuspected ancients say;
For 't is not likely we should higher soar
In search of heav'n, than all the Church
before;

Nor can we be deceived, unless we see
The Scripture and the Fathers disagree.
If, after all, they stand suspected still (For no man's faith depends upon his will),

'T is some relief that points not clearly known Without much hazard may be let alone:
And after hearing what our Church can say,
If still our Reason runs another way,
That private Reason 't is more just to curb,
Than by disputes the public peace disturb.
For points obscure are of small use to learn;
But common quiet is mankind's concern.

Thus have I made my own opinions clear;
Yet neither praise expect, nor censure fear:
And this unpolished, rugged verse, I chose,
As fittest for discourse, and nearest prose;
For while from sacred truth I do not swerve,
Tom Sternhold's,<sup>1</sup> or Tom Shadwell's rhymes will serve.

A SONG FOR ST. CECILIA'S DAY<sup>2</sup> (1687)

I

FROM harmony, from heav'nly harmony
This universal frame began:
When Nature underneath a heap
Of jarring atoms lay,
And could not heave her head,
The tuneful voice was heard from high:
"Arise, ye more than dead."
Then cold, and hot, and moist, and dry,
In order to their stations leap,
And Music's pow'r obey.
From harmony, from heav'nly harmony
This universal frame began:
From harmony to harmony
Through all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in Man.

II

What passion cannot Music raise and quell!
When Jubal<sup>3</sup> struck the corded shell,
His list'ning brethren stood around,
And, wond'ring, on their faces fell
To worship that celestial sound.

<sup>1</sup>Part-author of a long-popular metrical version of the Psalms.

<sup>2</sup>St. Cecilia is said to have invented the organ, and was canonized as the patron saint of music. A musical society was organized in London in 1683 for the celebration of St. Cecilia's day, 22 November, and each year an ode, composed for the occasion, was sung. This and the following poem were written by Dryden for this purpose.

<sup>3</sup>See Genesis, iv, 21.

Less than a god they thought there could not dwell

Within the hollow of that shell
That spoke so sweetly and so well.
What passion cannot Music raise and quell!

III

The Trumpet's loud clangor
Excites us to arms,
With shrill notes of anger,
And mortal alarms.
The double double double beat
Of the thund'ring Drum
Cries: "Hark! the foes come;
Charge, charge, 't is too late to retreat."

IV

The soft complaining Flute
In dying notes discovers
The woes of hopeless lovers,
Whose dirge is whispered by the warbling
Lute.

V

Sharp Violins proclaim
Their jealous pangs, and desperation,
Fury, frantic indignation,
Depth of pains, and height of passion,
For the fair, disdainful dame.

VI

But O! what art can teach,
What human voice can reach,
The sacred Organ's praise?
Notes inspiring holy love,
Notes that wing their heav'nly ways
To mend the choirs above.

VII

Orpheus could lead the savage race;
And trees unrooted left their place,
Sequacious of the lyre;
But bright Cecilia raised the wonder high'r:
When to her Organ vocal breath was giv'n,
An angel heard, and straight appeared,
Mistaking earth for heav'n.

GRAND CHORUS

As from the pow'r of sacred lays
The spheres began to move,
And sung the great Creator's praise
To all the blest above;
So, when the last and dreadful hour
This crumbling pageant shall devour,

The Trumpet shall be heard on high,
The dead shall live, the living die,
And Music shall untune the sky.

ALEXANDER'S FEAST

OR, THE POWER OF MUSIC; AN ODE IN HONOR OF ST. CECILIA'S DAY
(1697)

I

'T WAS at the royal feast, for Persia won
By Philip's warlike son:<sup>1</sup>
Aloft in awful state
The godlike hero sate
On his imperial throne:
His valiant peers were placed around;
Their brows with roses and with myrtles
bound
(So should desert in arms be crowned).
The lovely Thais, by his side,
Sate like a blooming Eastern bride
In flow'r of youth and beauty's pride.
Happy, happy, happy pair!
None but the brave,
None but the brave,
None but the brave deserves the fair.

CHORUS

Happy, happy, happy pair!
None but the brave,
None but the brave,
None but the brave deserves the fair.

II

Timotheus,<sup>2</sup> placed on high Amid the tuneful choir,
With flying fingers touched the lyre:
The trembling notes ascend the sky,
And heav'nly joys inspire.
The song began from Jove,
Who left his blissful seats above
(Such is the power of mighty love).
A dragon's fiery form belied the god:
Sublime on radiant spires he rode,
When he to fair Olympia pressed;
And while he sought her snowy breast:
Then, round her slender waist he curled,
And stamped an image of himself, a sov'- reign of the world.

<sup>1</sup>Alexander the Great.

<sup>2</sup>A Bœotian musician, a favorite of Alexander.

The list'ning crowd admire the lofty sound;
"A present deity," they shout around;
"A present deity," the vaulted roofs re-
bound:

With ravished ears
The monarch hears,
Assumes the god,
Affects to nod,
And seems to shake the spheres.

CHORUS

With ravished ears
The monarch hears,
Assumes the god,
Affects to nod,
And seems to shake the spheres.

III

The praise of Bacchus then the sweet musician sung,
Of Bacchus ever fair and ever young:
The jolly god in triumph comes;
Sound the trumpets; beat the drums;
Flushed with a purple grace
He shows his honest face:
Now give the hautboys breath; he comes,
he comes.
Bacchus, ever fair and young,
Drinking joys did first ordain;
Bacchus' blessings are a treasure.
Drinking is the soldier's pleasure:
Rich the treasure,
Sweet the pleasure,
Sweet is pleasure after pain.

CHORUS

Bacchus' blessings are a treasure,
Drinking is the soldier's pleasure:
Rich the treasure,
Sweet the pleasure,
Sweet is pleasure after pain.

IV

Soothed with the sound, the king grew vain;
Fought all his battles o'er again;
And thrice he routed all his foes; and thrice
he slew the slain.
The master saw the madness rise;
His glowing cheeks, his ardent eyes;
And, while he heav'n and earth defied,
Changed his hand, and checked his pride.
He chose a mournful Muse,
Soft pity to infuse:

He sung Darius<sup>1</sup> great and good,
 By too severe a fate,
 Fallen, fallen, fallen, fallen,
 Fallen from his high estate,
 And welt'ring in his blood;
 Deserted, at his utmost need,
 By those his former bounty fed;
 On the bare earth exposed he lies,
 With not a friend to close his eyes.

With downcast looks the joyless victor sate,
 Revolving in his altered soul
 The various turns of chance below;
 And, now and then, a sigh he stole;
 And tears began to flow.

CHORUS

Revolving in his altered soul
 The various turns of chance below;
 And, now and then, a sigh he stole;
 And tears began to flow.

V

The mighty master smiled, to see
 That love was in the next degree:
 'T was but a kindred sound to move,
 For pity melts the mind to love.
 Softly sweet, in Lydian measures,
 Soon he soothed his soul to pleasures.
 "War," he sung, "is toil and trouble;
 Honor, but an empty bubble;
 Never ending, still beginning,
 Fighting still, and still destroying:
 If the world be worth thy winning,
 Think, O think it worth enjoying;
 Lovely Thais sits beside thee,
 Take the good the gods provide thee."

The many rend the skies with loud applause;
 So Love was crowned, but Music won the cause.

The prince, unable to conceal his pain,
 Gazed on the fair
 Who caused his care,
 And sighed and looked, sighed and looked,
 Sighed and looked, and sighed again:
 At length, with love and wine at once oppressed,
 The vanquished victor sunk upon her breast.

<sup>1</sup>The Persian monarch conquered by Alexander.

CHORUS

The prince, unable to conceal his pain,
 Gazed on the fair
 Who caused his care,
 And sighed and looked, sighed and looked,
 Sighed and looked, and sighed again:
 At length, with love and wine at once oppressed,
 The vanquished victor sunk upon her breast.

VI

Now strike the golden lyre again:
 A louder yet, and yet a louder strain.
 Break his bands of sleep asunder,
 And rouse him, like a rattling peal of thunder.

Hark, hark, the horrid sound
 Has raised up his head:
 As awaked from the dead,
 And amazed, he stares around.
 "Revenge, revenge!" Timotheus cries,
 "See the Furies arise!

See the snakes that they rear,
 How they hiss in their hair,
 And the sparkles that flash from their eyes!

Behold a ghastly band,
 Each a torch in his hand!
 Those are Grecian ghosts, that in battle were slain,
 And unburied remain
 Inglorious on the plain:
 Give the vengeance due
 To the valiant crew.

Behold how they toss their torches on high,
 How they point to the Persian abodes,
 And glitt'ring temples of their hostile gods!"

The princes applaud, with a furious joy;
 And the king seized a flambeau with zeal to destroy;

Thais led the way,
 To light him to his prey,
 And, like another Helen, fired another Troy.

CHORUS

And the king seized a flambeau with zeal to destroy;

Thais led the way,
 To light him to his prey,
 And, like another Helen, fired another Troy.

VII

Thus, long ago,
Ere heaving bellows learned to blow,
While organs yet were mute;

Timotheus, to his breathing flute,
And sounding lyre,

Could swell the soul to rage, or kindle soft
desire.

At last, divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame;<sup>1</sup>

The sweet enthusiast, from her sacred store,
Enlarged the former narrow bounds,

And added length to solemn sounds,

With nature's mother wit, and arts unknown
before.

<sup>1</sup>I. e., organ.

Let old Timotheus yield the prize,
Or both divide the crown;
He raised a mortal to the skies;
She drew an angel down.

GRAND CHORUS

At last, divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame;
The sweet enthusiast, from her sacred store,
Enlarged the former narrow bounds,
And added length to solemn sounds,
With nature's mother wit, and arts unknown
before.

Let old Timotheus yield the prize,
Or both divide the crown;
He raised a mortal to the skies;
She drew an angel down.

JOSEPH ADDISON (1672-1719) AND SIR RICHARD STEELE (1672-1729)

Addison was born at Lichfield on 1 May, 1672. His father was a clergyman and the boy was brought up in a cultivated environment. He was sent to the Charterhouse School, and then to Queen's College, Oxford. At Oxford he distinguished himself both as a scholar and as a writer of smooth English and Latin verse, and he won a fellowship at Magdalen College which he held until 1699. His Latin poem on the peace of Ryswick, together with his general ability as a man of letters, won him a pension from the Whigs, who wished to secure his continued support. This enabled him to spend four years in travel and study on the continent. Immediately on his return in 1704 he was asked to write a poem celebrating Marlborough's victory at Blenheim. He wrote The Campaign, which was at once successful and which ensured his political position. He was somewhat reserved and cautious in temperament, yet nevertheless became intimate with many of the "wits" of the day. He wrote several plays which would hardly be remembered now were it not that one of them, Cato, which was put on the stage in 1713, attained a remarkable factitious success. It had a long run, not because of its dramatic interest or power, but because it was believed to contain good Whig doctrine. When the Whigs returned to power in 1714, Addison was made Chief Secretary for Ireland. Later he became Commissioner for Trade and the Colonies, and finally Secretary of State, in 1717. After he had held this post for only a few months he resigned it, chiefly because of ill-health. He died on 17 June, 1719, and was buried in Westminster Abbey.

Richard Steele was born in Dublin in March, 1672. He was sent to Charterhouse, where he became acquainted with Addison; and like Addison he went up to Oxford. He entered Christ Church, at Oxford, in 1690, but left without a degree to become a soldier. His career in the army was not without irregularities, but he rose to a captaincy by 1700. In the following year he began writing for the theater, his first play being The Funeral, or Grief à la Mode. In 1703 The Lying Lover was produced at Drury Lane, and in 1705 The Tender Husband. In these plays Steele attempted to reform the taste of the day; he proved successfully that a comedy could be genuinely amusing without descending to ribaldry and the exhibition of gross immorality, and thus he foreshadowed one of the prominent aims of later work which he and Addison were to do together. In 1707 Steele was appointed Gazetteer, a post which he lost in 1710. In 1713 he sat in Parliament for Stockbridge, but in the following spring was expelled from the House of Commons for uttering seditious sentiments—a charge without real foundation, the vote on which served to show, not Steele's guilt, but simply the solid Tory majority in the House. On the accession of George I in the fall of 1714 Steele was rewarded for his support of the Hanoverian succession by the gift of several offices, and in 1715 he was again elected to Parliament, and was knighted. He also became in that year the Patentee, or manager, of Drury Lane Theater. In spite, however, of these and other turns of fortune in his favor, Steele, owing to his reckless expenditures, was never out of financial difficulties, and his difficulties of this sort grew worse as he grew older. In the fall of 1723 he left London for Bath, then lived for a time at Hereford, and finally retired to Carmarthen in Wales—all this being done in pursuit of an arrangement designed to aid his creditors. At Carmarthen he died on 1 September, 1729, and was buried there in St. Peter's Church.

Both Steele and Addison are remembered to-day for their two periodicals, the Tatler and the Spectator. While Steele was editing the Gazette, an official government paper, he conceived the idea of a livelier periodical than that organ, and in 1709 began the Tatler. Addison soon joined him in writing for it, and the paper ran successfully until they stopped it in January, 1711, in order a few months later to begin the Spectator on a somewhat different plan. The Spectator was issued daily until 6 December, 1712, reaching a total of 555 numbers. The purposes of Steele and Addison are indicated by themselves in numbers of the two papers printed below. Briefly, their most general aim was the reformation of manners, and to this end they freely employed good-humored satire. Their style was marked by simplicity, as the content of their papers was marked by common sense. Of the two writers Addison was easily the superior, his style exhibiting a fine urbanity and quiet distinction which Steele could not attain. Addison, too, extended the Spectator's reforming activities to the sphere of taste, and made effective attacks on pedantry which have not yet lost either their force or their applicability. It should be remembered, however, that the whole design was of Steele's invention, and that Steele's reputation has suffered in a sense unfairly from the constant comparison of his essays with those of Addison.

THE TATLER

No. 1. TUESDAY, 12 APRIL, 1709.

[STEELE.]

Quicquid agunt homines—nostrum est farrago libelli.<sup>1</sup>

—Juv. Sat. i. 85, 86.

THOUGH the other papers, which are published for the use of the good people of England, have certainly very wholesome effects, and are laudable in their particular kinds, they do not seem to come up to the main design of such narrations, which, I humbly presume, should be principally intended for the use of politic persons, who are so public-spirited as to neglect their own affairs to look into transactions of state. Now these gentlemen, for the most part, being persons of strong zeal, and weak intellects, it is both a charitable and necessary work to offer something, whereby such worthy and well-affected members of the commonwealth may be instructed, after their reading, what to think; which shall be the end and purpose of this my paper, wherein I shall, from time to time, report and consider all matters of what kind soever that shall occur to me, and publish such my advices and reflections every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday in the week, for the convenience of the post. I resolve to have something which may be of entertainment to the fair sex, in honor of whom I have invented the title of this paper. I therefore earnestly desire all persons, without distinction, to take it in for the present gratis, and hereafter at the price of one penny, forbidding all hawkers to take more for it at their peril. And I desire all persons to consider, that I am at a very great charge for proper materials for this work, as well as that, before I resolved upon it, I had settled a correspondence in all parts of the known and knowing world. And forasmuch as this globe is not trodden upon by mere drudges of business only, but that men of spirit and genius are justly to be esteemed as considerable agents in it, we shall not, upon a dearth of news, present you with musty foreign edicts, and dull proclamations, but shall divide our relation of the passages which occur in action or discourse throughout this town, as well as elsewhere, under such dates of places as may prepare you for the matter you are to expect in the following manner.

<sup>1</sup>Whate'er men do, or say, or think, or dream,
Our motley paper seizes for its theme. (Pope.)

All accounts of gallantry, pleasure, and entertainment, shall be under the article of White's Chocolate-house; poetry under that of Will's Coffee-house; Learning, under the title of Grecian; foreign and domestic news, you will have from St. James's Coffee-house;<sup>2</sup> and what else I have to offer on any other subject shall be dated from my own Apartment.

I once more desire my reader to consider, that as I cannot keep an ingenious man to go daily to Will's under two-pence each day, merely for his charges; to White's under six-pence; nor to the Grecian, without allowing him some plain Spanish,<sup>3</sup> to be as able as others at the learned table; and that a good observer cannot speak with even Kidney<sup>4</sup> at St. James's without clean linen; I say, these considerations will, I hope, make all persons willing to comply with my humble request (when my gratis stock is exhausted) of a penny apiece; especially since they are sure of some proper amusement, and that it is impossible for me to want means to entertain them, having, besides the force of my own parts, the power of divination, and that I can, by casting a figure, tell you all that will happen before it comes to pass.

But this last faculty I shall use very sparingly, and speak but of few things until they are passed, for fear of divulging matters which may offend our superiors.

No. 25. TUESDAY, 7 JUNE, 1709.

[STEELE.]

A letter from a young lady, written in the most passionate terms, wherein she laments the misfortune of a gentleman, her lover, who was lately wounded in a duel, has turned my thoughts to that subject, and inclined me to examine into the causes which precipitate men into so fatal a folly. And as it has been proposed to treat of subjects of gallantry in the article from hence,<sup>5</sup> and no one point in <sup>2</sup>These famous institutions occupied an important place in London life in the late seventeenth and early eighteenth centuries, serving as informal clubs and as centers of social, political, and literary influence. Steele indicates in a general way the kinds of people who frequented the four he mentions.

<sup>3</sup>Wine.

<sup>4</sup>One of the waiters at St. James's.

<sup>5</sup>This number of The Tatler is dated from White's Chocolate-house.

nature is more proper to be considered by the company who frequent this place than that of duels, it is worth our consideration to examine into this chimerical groundless humor, and to lay every other thought aside, until we have stripped it of all its false pretenses to credit and reputation amongst men.

But I must confess, when I consider what I am going about, and run over in my imagination all the endless crowd of men of honor who will be offended at such a discourse; I am undertaking, methinks, a work worthy an invulnerable hero in romance, rather than a private gentleman with a single rapier: but as I am pretty well acquainted by great opportunities with the nature of man, and know of a truth that all men fight against their will, the danger vanishes, and resolution rises upon this subject. For this reason, I shall talk very freely on a custom which all men wish exploded, though no man has courage enough to resist it.

But there is one unintelligible word, which I fear will extremely perplex my dissertation, and I confess to you I find very hard to explain, which is the term "satisfaction." An honest country gentleman had the misfortune to fall into company with two or three modern men of honor, where he happened to be very ill-treated; and one of the company, being conscious of his offense, sends a note to him in the morning, and tells him, he was ready to give him satisfaction. "This is fine doing," says the plain fellow; "last night he sent me away cursedly out of humor, and this morning he fancies it would be a satisfaction to be run through the body."

As the matter at present stands, it is not to do handsome actions denominates a man of honor; it is enough if he dares to defend ill ones. Thus you often see a common sharper in competition with a gentleman of the first rank; though all mankind is convinced, that a fighting gamester is only a pickpocket with the courage of an highwayman. One cannot with any patience reflect on the unaccountable jumble of persons and things in this town and nation, which occasions very frequently, that a brave man falls by a hand below that of a common hangman, and yet his executioner escapes the clutches of the hangman for doing it. I shall therefore hereafter consider, how the bravest men in other ages and nations have behaved themselves upon such incidents as we decide by combat; and show, from their practice, that this resentment neither has its foundation from true reason or solid fame; but is an imposture, made of cowardice, falsehood, and want of understanding. For this work, a good history of quarrels would be very edifying to the public, and I apply myself to the town for particulars and circumstances within their knowledge, which may serve to embellish the dissertation with proper cuts. Most of the quarrels I have ever known, have proceeded from some valiant cockcomb's persisting in the wrong, to defend some prevailing folly, and preserve himself from the ingenuosness of owning a mistake.

By this means it is called "giving a man satisfaction," to urge your offense against him with your sword; which puts me in mind of Peter's order to the keeper, in The Tale of a Tub.<sup>1</sup> "If you neglect to do all this, damn you and your generation for ever: and so we bid you heartily farewell." If the contradiction in the very terms of one of our challenges were as well explained and turned into downright English, would it not run after this manner?

"Sir,

"Your extraordinary behavior last night, and the liberty you were pleased to take with me, makes me this morning give you this, to tell you, because you are an ill-bred puppy, I will meet you in Hyde-park, an hour hence; and because you want both breeding and humanity, I desire you would come with a pistol in your hand, on horseback, and endeavor to shoot me through the head, to teach you more manners. If you fail of doing me this pleasure, I shall say, you are a rascal, on every post in town: and so, sir, if you will not injure me more, I shall never forgive what you have done already. Pray, sir, do not fail of getting everything ready; and you will infinitely oblige, sir, your most obedient humble servant, etc."

No. 85. TUESDAY, 25 OCTOBER, 1709.

[STEELE.]

My brother Tranquillus, who is a man of business, came to me this morning into my study, and after very many civil expressions in return for what good offices I had done him, told me, "he desired to carry his wife, my sister, that very morning, to his own house." I readily told him, "I would wait upon him," without asking why he was so impatient to rob us of his good company. He went out of my chamber, and I thought seemed to have a little heaviness upon him, which gave me some disquiet. Soon after my sister came to me, with a very matron-like air, and most sedate satisfaction in her looks, which spoke her very much at ease; but the traces of her countenance seemed to discover that she had been lately in a passion, and that air of content to flow from a certain triumph upon some advantage obtained. She no sooner sat down by me, but I perceived she was one of those ladies who begin to be managers within the time of their being brides. Without letting her speak, which I saw she had a mighty inclination to do, I said, "Here has been your husband, who tells me he has a mind to go home this very morning, and I have consented to it." "It is well," said she, "for you must know——" "Nay, Jenny," said I. "I beg your pardon, for it is you must know—— You are to understand, that now is the time to fix or alienate your husband's heart forever; and I fear you have been a little indiscreet in your expressions or behavior towards him, even here in my house." "There has," says she, "been some words; but I will be judged by you if he was not in the wrong; nay I need not be judged by anybody, for he gave it up himself, and said not a word when he saw me grow passionate, but, 'Madam, you are perfectly in the right of it'; as you shall judge——" "Nay, Madam," said I, "I am judge already, and tell you that you are perfectly in the wrong of it; for if it was a matter of importance, I know he has better sense than you; if a trifle, you know what I told you on your wedding-day, that you were to be above little provocations." She knows very well I can be sour upon occasion, therefore gave me leave to go on.

<sup>1</sup>By Jonathan Swift.

"Sister," said I, "I will not enter into the dispute between you, which I find his prudence put an end to before it came to extremity; but charge you to have a care of the first quarrel, as you tender your happiness; for then it is that the mind will reflect harshly upon every circumstance that has ever passed between you. If such an accident is ever to happen, which I hope never will, be sure to keep to the circumstance before you; make no allusions to what is passed, or conclusions referring to what is to come: do not show a hoard of matter for dissension in your breast: but, if it is necessary, lay before him the thing as you understand it, candidly, without being ashamed of acknowledging an error, or proud of being in the right. If a young couple be not careful in this point, they will get into a habit of wrangling: and when to displease is thought of no consequence, to please is always of as little moment. There is a play, Jenny, I have formerly been at when I was a student: we got into a dark corner with a porringer of brandy, and threw raisins into it, then set it on fire. My chamber-fellow and I diverted ourselves with the sport of venturing our fingers for the raisins; and the wantonness of the thing was to see each other look like a demon, as we burned ourselves, and snatched out the fruit. This fantastical mirth was called Snap-Dragon. You may go into many a family, where you see the man and wife at this sport; every word at their table alludes to some passage between themselves; and you see by the paleness and emotion in their countenances, that it is for your sake, and not their own, that they forbear playing out the whole game in burning each other's fingers. In this case, the whole purpose of life is inverted, and the ambition turns upon a certain contention who shall contradict best, and not upon an inclination to excel in kindnesses and good offices. Therefore, dear Jenny, remember me, and avoid Snap-Dragon."

"I thank you, brother," said she, "but you do not know how he loves me; I find I can do anything with him." "If you can so, why should you desire to do anything but please him? but I have a word or two more before you go out of the room; for I see you do not like the subject I am upon: let nothing provoke you to fall upon an imperfection he cannot help; for, if he has a resenting spirit, he will think your aversion as immovable as the imperfection with which you upbraid him. But, above all, dear Jenny, be careful of one thing, and you will be something more than woman; that is, a levity you are almost all guilty of, which is, to take a pleasure in your power to give pain. It is even in a mistress an argument of meanness of spirit, but in a wife it is injustice and ingratitude. When a sensible man once observes this in a woman, he must have a very great, or very little spirit, to overlook it. A woman ought, therefore, to consider very often, how few men there are who will regard a meditated offense as a weakness of temper."

I was going on in my confabulation, when Tranquillus entered. She cast all her eyes upon him with much shame and confusion, mixed with great complacency and love, and went up to him. He took her in his arms, and looked so many soft things at one glance, that I could see he was glad I had been talking to her, sorry she had been troubled, and angry at himself that he could not disguise the concern he was in an hour before. After which he says to me, with an air awkward enough, but, methought, not unbecoming, "I have altered my mind, brother; we will live upon you a day or two longer." I replied, "That is what I have been persuading Jenny to ask of you, but she is resolved never to contradict your inclination, and refused me."

We were going on in that way which one hardly knows how to express; as when two people mean the same thing in a nice case, but come at it by talking as distantly from it as they can; when very opportunely came in upon us an honest inconsiderable fellow Tim Dapper, a gentleman well known to us both. Tim is one of those who are very necessary, by being very inconsiderable. Tim dropped in at an incident when we knew not how to fall into either a grave or a merry way. My sister took this occasion to make off, and Dapper gave us an account of all the company he has been in to-day, who was and was not at home where he visited. This Tim is the head of a species; he is a little out of his element in this town; but he is a relation of Tranquillus, and his neighbor in the country, which is the true place of residence for this species. The habit of a Dapper, when he is at home, is a light broadcloth, with calamanco<sup>1</sup> or red waistcoat and breeches; and it is remarkable that their wigs seldom hide the collar of their coats. They have always a peculiar spring in their arms, a wriggle in their bodies, and a trip in their gait. All which motions they express at once in their drinking, bowing, or saluting ladies; for a distant imitation of a forward fop, and a resolution to overtop him in his way, are the distinguishing marks of a Dapper. These under-characters of men, are parts of the sociable world by no means to be neglected: they are like pegs in a building; they make no figure in it, but hold the structure together, and are as absolutely necessary as the pillars and columns. I am sure we found it so this morning; for Tranquillus and I should, perhaps, have looked cold at each other the whole day, but Dapper fell in with his brisk way, shook us both by the hand, rallied the bride, mistook the acceptance he met with amongst us for extraordinary perfection in himself, and heartily pleased, and was pleased all the while he stayed. His company left us all in good humor, and we were not such fools as to let it sink, before we confirmed it by great cheerfulness and openness in our carriage the whole evening.

NO. 132. SATURDAY, 11 FEBRUARY, 1710.

[STEELE.]

Habeo senectuti magnam gratiam, quæ mihi sermonis aviditatem auxit, potionis et cibi sustulit.<sup>2</sup>— TULL. de Sen.

After having applied my mind with more than ordinary attention to my studies, it is my usual custom to relax and unbend it in the conversation of such, as are rather easy than shining companions. This I find particularly necessary for me before I retire to rest, in order to draw my slumbers upon me by degrees, and fall asleep insensibly. This is the particular use I make of a set of heavy honest men, with whom I have passed many hours with much indolence, though not with great pleasure. Their conversation is a kind of preparative for sleep: it takes the mind down from its abstractions, leads it into the familiar traces of thought, and lulls it into that state of tranquillity which is the condition of a thinking man, when he is but half awake. After this, my reader will not be surprised to hear the account, which I am about to give of a club of my own contemporaries, among whom I pass two or three hours every evening. This I look upon as taking my first nap before I go to bed. The truth of it is, I should think myself unjust to posterity, as well as to the society at the Trumpet, of which I am a member, did not I in some part of my writings give an account of the persons among whom I have passed almost a sixth part of my time for these last forty years. Our club consisted originally of fifteen; but, partly by the severity of the law in arbitrary times, and partly by the natural effects of old age, we are at present reduced to a third part of that number: in which, however, we hear this consolation, that the best company is said to consist of five persons. I must confess, besides the aforementioned benefit which I meet with in the conversation of this select society, I am not the less pleased with the company, in that I find myself the greatest wit among them, and am heard as their oracle in all points of learning and difficulty.

<sup>2</sup>I owe much gratitude to old age, which has sharpened my appetite for conversation and dulled my appetite for food and drink (Cicero, De Senectute).

<sup>1</sup>A woolen material.

Sir Geoffrey Notch, who is the oldest of the club, has been in possession of the right-hand chair time out of mind, and is the only man among us that has the liberty of stirring the fire. This our foreman is a gentleman of an ancient family, that came to a great estate some years before he had discretion, and run it out in hounds, horses, and cock-fighting; for which reason he looks upon himself as an honest, worthy gentleman, who has had misfortunes in the world, and calls every thriving man a pitiful upstart.

Major Matchlock is the next senior, who served in the last civil wars, and has all the battles by heart. He does not think any action in Europe worth talking of since the fight of Marston Moor; and every night tells us of his having been knocked off his horse at the rising of the London apprentices; for which he is in great esteem among us.

Honest old Dick Reptile is the third of our society. He is a good-natured indolent man, who speaks little himself, but laughs at our jokes; and brings his young nephew along with him, a youth of eighteen years old, to show him good company, and give him a taste of the world. This young fellow sits generally silent; but whenever he opens his mouth, or laughs at anything that passes, he is constantly told by his uncle, after a jocular manner, "Ay, ay, Jack, you young men think us fools; but we old men know you are."

The greatest wit of our company, next to myself, is a Bencher of the neighboring Inn, who in his youth frequented the ordinaries about Charing Cross, and pretends to have been intimate with Jack Ogle. He has about ten distichs of Hudibras without book, and never leaves the club until he has applied them all. If any modern wit be mentioned, or any town-frolic spoken of, he shakes his head at the dullness of the present age, and tells us a story of Jack Ogle.

For my own part, I am esteemed among them, because they see I am something respected by others; though at the same time I understand by their behavior, that I am considered by them as a man of a great deal of learning, but no knowledge of the world; insomuch, that the Major sometimes, in the height of his military pride, calls me the Philosopher: and Sir Geoffrey, no longer ago than last night, upon a dispute what day of the month it was then in Holland, pulled his pipe out of his mouth, and cried, "What does the scholar say to it?"

Our club meets precisely at six o'clock in the evening; but I did not come last night until half an hour after seven, by which means I escaped the battle of Naseby, which the Major usually begins at about three-quarters after six: I found also, that my good friend the Bencher had already spent three of his distichs; and only waited an opportunity to hear a sermon spoken of, that he might introduce the couplet where "a stick" rhymes to "ecclesiastic." At my entrance into the room, they were naming a red petticoat and a cloak, by which I found that the Bencher had been diverting them with a story of Jack Ogle.

I had no sooner taken my seat, but Sir Geoffrey, to show his good-will towards me, gave me a pipe of his own tobacco, and stirred up the fire. I look upon it as a point of morality, to be obliged by those who endeavor to oblige me; and therefore, in requital for his kindness, and to set the conversation a-going, I took the best occasion I could to put him upon telling us the story of old Gantlett, which he always does with very particular concern. He traced up his descent on both sides for several generations, describing his diet and manner of life, with his several battles, and particularly that in which he fell. This Gantlett was a gamecock, upon whose head the knight, in his youth, had won five hundred pounds, and lost two thousand. This naturally set the Major upon the account of Edge Hill fight, and ended in a duel of Jack Ogle's.

Old Reptile was extremely attentive to all that was said, though it was the same he had heard every night for these twenty years, and, upon all occasions, winked upon his nephew to mind what passed.

This may suffice to give the world a taste of our innocent conversation, which we spun out until about ten of the clock, when my maid came with a lantern to light me home. I could not but reflect with myself, as I was going out, upon the talkative humor of old men, and the little figure which that part of life makes in one who cannot employ his natural propensity in discourses which would make him venerable. I must own, it makes me very melancholy in company, when I hear a young man begin a story; and have often observed, that one of a quarter of an hour long in a man of five-and-twenty, gathers circumstances every time he tells it, until it grows into a long Canterbury tale of two hours by that time he is threescore.

The only way of avoiding such a trifling and frivolous old age is, to lay up in our way to it such stores of knowledge and observation, as may make us useful and agreeable in our declining years. The mind of man in a long life will become a magazine of wisdom or folly, and will consequently discharge itself in something impertinent or improving. For which reason, as there is nothing more ridiculous than an old trifling story-teller, so there is nothing more venerable, than one who has turned his experience to the entertainment and advantage of mankind.

In short, we, who are in the last stage of life, and are apt to indulge ourselves in talk, ought to consider, if what we speak be worth being heard, and endeavor to make our discourse like that of Nestor, which Homer compares to the flowing of honey for its sweetness.

I am afraid I shall be thought guilty of this excess I am speaking of, when I cannot conclude without observing, that Milton certainly thought of this passage in Homer, when, in his description of an eloquent spirit, he says, "His tongue dropped manna."<sup>1</sup>

No. 158. THURSDAY, 13 APRIL, 1710.

[ADDISON.]

Faciunt nã intelligendo, ut nihil intelligant.<sup>2</sup>—TER.

Tom Folio is a broker in learning, employed to get together good editions, and stock the libraries of great men. There is not a sale of books begins until Tom Folio is seen at the door. There is not an auction where his name is not heard, and that too in the very nick of time, in the critical moment, before the last decisive stroke of the hammer. There is not a subscription goes forward in which Tom is not privy to the first rough draught of the proposals; nor a catalogue printed, that doth not come to him wet from the press. He is an universal scholar, so far as the title-page of all authors; knows the manuscripts in which they were discovered, the editions through which they have passed, with the praises or censures which they have received from the several members of the learned world. He has a greater esteem for Aldus and Elzevir, than for Virgil and Horace. If you talk of Herodotus, he breaks out into a panegyric upon Harry Stephens. He thinks he gives you an account of an author, when he tells you the subject he treats of, the name of the editor, and the year in which it was printed. Or if you draw him into farther particulars, he cries up the goodness of the paper, extols the diligence of the corrector, and is transported with the beauty of the letter. This he looks upon to be sound learning, and substantial criticism. As for those who talk of the fineness of style, and the justness of thought, or describe the brightness of any particular passages; nay, though they themselves write in the genius and spirit of the author they admire; Tom looks upon them as men of superficial learning, and flashy parts.

I had yesterday morning a visit from this learned idiot, for that is the light in which I consider every pedant, when I discovered in him some little touches of the coxcomb,

<sup>1</sup>Said of Belial, Paradise Lost, II, 112-113.

<sup>2</sup>While they pretend to know more than others, they really know nothing (Terence, Andr. Prol. 17).

which I had not before observed. Being very full of the figure which he makes in the republic of letters, and wonderfully satisfied with his great stock of knowledge, he gave me broad intimations, that he did not believe in all points as his forefathers had done. He then communicated to me a thought of a certain author upon a passage of Virgil's account of the dead, which I made the subject of a late paper. This thought hath taken very much among men of Tom's pitch and understanding, though universally exploded by all that know how to construe Virgil, or have any relish of antiquity. Not to trouble my reader with it, I found, upon the whole, that Tom did not believe a future state of rewards and punishments, because Æneas, at his leaving the empire of the dead, passed through the gate of ivory, and not through that of horn. Knowing that Tom had not sense enough to give up an opinion which he had once received, that I might avoid wrangling, I told him "that Virgil possibly had his oversights as well as another author." "Ah! Mr. Bickerstaff,"<sup>1</sup> says he, "you would have another opinion of him, if you would read him in Daniel Heinsius's edition. I have perused him myself several times in that edition," continued he; "and after the strictest and most malicious examination, could find but two faults in him; one of them is in the Æneids, where there are two commas instead of a parenthesis; and another in the third Georgic, where you may find a semicolon turned upside down." "Perhaps," said I, "these were not Virgil's faults, but those of the transcriber." "I do not design it," says Tom, "as a reflection on Virgil; on the contrary, I know that all the manuscripts declaim against such a punctuation. Oh! Mr. Bickerstaff," says he, "what would a man give to see one simile of Virgil writ in his own hand?" I asked him which was the simile he meant; but was answered, any simile in Virgil. He then told me all the secret history in the commonwealth of learning; of modern pieces that had the names of ancient authors annexed to them; of all the books that were now writing or printing in the several parts of Europe; of many amendments which are made, and not yet published, and a thousand other particulars, which I would not have my memory burdened with for a Vatican.

At length, being fully persuaded that I thoroughly admired him, and looked upon him as a prodigy of learning, he took his leave. I know several of Tom's class, who are professed admirers of Tasso, without understanding a word of Italian: and one in particular, that carries a Pastor Fido in his pocket, in which, I am sure, he is acquainted with no other beauty but the clearness of the character.

There is another kind of pedant, who, with all Tom Folio's impertinences, hath greater superstructures and embellishments of Greek and Latin; and is still more insupportable than the other, in the same degree as he is more learned. Of this kind very often are editors, commentators, interpreters, scholiasts, and critics; and, in short, all men of deep learning without common sense. These persons set a greater value on themselves for having found out the meaning of a passage in Greek, than upon the author for having written it; nay, will allow the passage itself not to have any beauty in it, at the same time that they would be considered as the greatest men of the age, for having interpreted it. They will look with contempt on the most beautiful poems that have been composed by any of their contemporaries; but will lock themselves up in their studies for a twelvemonth together, to correct, publish, and expound such trifles of antiquity, as a modern author would be contemned for. Men of the strictest morals, severest lives, and the gravest professions, will write volumes upon an idle sonnet, that is originally in Greek or Latin; give editions of the most immoral authors; and spin out whole pages upon the various readings of a lewd expression. All that can be said in excuse for them is, that their works sufficiently show they have no taste of their authors; and that what they do in this kind, is out of their great learning, and not out of any levity or lasciviousness of temper.

A pedant of this nature is wonderfully well described in six lines of Boileau, with which I shall conclude his character:

<sup>1</sup>The Tatler papers, it was pretended, were written by Isaac Bickerstaff, a fictitious astrologer invented several years before by Swift for the purpose of making fun of one Partridge, an astrologer who published predictions much after the manner of the old-fashioned almanac still occasionally to be met with.

Un Pédant enyvré de sa vaine science,
 Tout herissé de Grec, tout bouffi d'arrogance;
 Et qui de mille auteurs retenus mot pour mot,
 Dans sa tête entassés n'a souvent fait qu'un sot,
 Croit qu'un livre fait tout, et que sans Aristote
 La raison ne voit goutte, et le bon sens radote.

Brim-full of learning see that pedant stride,
 Bristling with horrid Greek, and puffed with pride!

A thousand authors he in vain has read,
 And with their maxims stuffed his empty head;

And thinks that, without Aristotle's rule,
 Reason is blind, and common sense a fool.

THE SPECTATOR

NO. 1. THURSDAY, 1 MARCH, 1711.

[ADDISON.]

Non fumum ex fulgore, sed ex fumo dare lucem Cogitat, ut speciosa dehinc miracula promat.<sup>1</sup>

—HORACE.

I have observed that a reader seldom peruses a book with pleasure till he knows whether the writer of it be a black or a fair man, of a mild or choleric disposition, married or a bachelor, with other particulars of the like nature that conduce very much to the right understanding of an author. To gratify this curiosity, which is so natural to a reader, I design this paper and my next as prefatory discourses to my following writings, and shall give some account in them of the several persons that are engaged in this work. As the chief trouble of compiling, digesting, and correcting will fall to my share, I must do myself the justice to open the work with my own history. I was born to a small hereditary estate, which, according to the tradition of the village where it lies, was bounded by the same hedges and ditches in William the Conqueror's time that it is at present, and has been delivered down from father to son whole and entire, without the loss or acquisition of a single field or meadow, during the space of six hundred years. There runs a story in the family, that my mother dreamed that she was brought to bed of a judge: whether this might proceed from a lawsuit which was then depending in the family, or my father's being a justice of the peace, I cannot determine; for I am not so vain as to think it presaged any dignity that I should arrive at in my future life, though that was the interpretation which the neighborhood put upon it. The gravity of my behavior at my very first appearance in the world seemed to favor my mother's dream: for, as she has often told me, I threw away my rattle before I was two months old, and would not make use of my coral till they had taken away the bells from it.

As for the rest of my infancy, there being nothing in it remarkable, I shall pass it over in silence. I find that, during my nonage, I had the reputation of a very sullen youth, but was always a favorite of my schoolmaster, who used to say that my parts were solid and would wear well. I had not been long at the University before I distinguished myself by a most profound silence; for during the space of eight years, excepting in the public exercises of the college, I scarce uttered the quantity of an hundred words; and indeed do not remember that I ever spoke three sentences together in my whole life. Whilst I was in this learned body, I applied myself with so much diligence to my studies that there are very few celebrated books, either in the learned or the modern tongues, which I am not acquainted with.

Upon the death of my father I was resolved to travel into foreign countries, and therefore left the University with the character of an odd, unaccountable fellow, that had a great deal of learning if I would but show it. An insatiable thirst after knowledge carried me into all the countries of Europe in which there was anything new or strange to be seen; nay, to such a degree was my curiosity raised, that having read the controversies of some great men concerning the antiquities of Egypt, I made a voyage to Grand Cairo, on purpose to take the measure of a pyramid; and as soon as I had set myself right in that particular, returned to my native country with great satisfaction.

I have passed my latter years in this city,

<sup>1</sup>Not smoke from fire his object is to bring,
 But fire from smoke, a very different thing.
 (Art of Poetry, 143-144; Conington's translation.)

where I am frequently seen in most public places, though there are not above half a dozen of my select friends that know me; of whom my next paper shall give a more particular account. There is no place of general sort wherein I do not often make my appearance; sometimes I am seen thrusting my head into a round of politicians at Will's, and listening with great attention to the narratives that are made in those little circular audiences. Sometimes I smoke a pipe at Child's, and whilst I seem attentive to nothing but The Postman, overhear the conversation of every table in the room. I appear on Sunday nights at St. James's Coffee-house, and sometimes join the little committee of politics in the Inner room, as one who comes there to hear and improve. My face is likewise very well known at the Grecian, the Cocoa-Tree, and in the theaters both of Drury Lane and the Hay-Market. I have been taken for a merchant upon the Exchange for above these ten years, and sometimes pass for a Jew in the assembly of stock-jobbers at Jonathan's. In short, wherever I see a cluster of people, I always mix with them, though I never open my lips but in my own club.

Thus I live in the world rather as a SPECTATOR of mankind than as one of the species; by which means I have made myself a speculative statesman, soldier, merchant, and artisan, without ever meddling with any practical part in life. I am very well versed in the theory of an husband or a father, and can discern the errors in the economy, business, and diversion of others better than those who are engaged in them; as standers-by discover blots which are apt to escape those who are in the game. I never espoused any party with violence, and am resolved to observe an exact neutrality between the Whigs and Tories, unless I shall be forced to declare myself by the hostilities of either side. In short, I have acted in all the parts of my life as a looker-on, which is the character I intend to preserve in this paper.

I have given the reader just so much of my history and character as to let him see I am not altogether unqualified for the business I have undertaken. As for other particulars in my life and adventures, I shall insert them in following papers as I shall see occasion. In the meantime, when I consider how much I have seen, read, and heard, I began to blame my own taciturnity: and since I have neither time nor inclination to communicate the fullness of my heart in speech, I am resolved to do it in writing, and to print myself out, if possible, before I die. I have been often told by my friends that it is a pity so many useful discoveries which I have made, should be in the possession of a silent man. For this reason, therefore, I shall publish a sheetful of thoughts every morning for the benefit of my contemporaries; and if I can in any way contribute to the diversion or improvement of the country in which I live, I shall leave it, when I am summoned out of it, with the secret satisfaction of thinking that I have not lived in vain.

There are three very material points which I have not spoken to in this paper, and which, for several important reasons, I must keep to myself, at least for some time: I mean, an account of my name, my age, and my lodgings. I must confess, I would gratify my reader in anything that is reasonable; but, as for these three particulars, though I am sensible they might tend very much to the embellishment of my paper, I cannot yet come to a resolution of communicating them to the public. They would indeed draw me out of that obscurity which I have enjoyed for many years, and expose me in public places to several salutes and civilities which have been always very disagreeable to me; for the greatest pain I can suffer is the being talked to and being stared at. It is for this reason, likewise, that I keep my complexion and dress as very great secrets, though it is not impossible but I may make discoveries of both in the progress of the work I have undertaken.

After having been thus particular upon myself, I shall in to-morrow's paper give an account of those gentlemen who are concerned with me in this work; for, as I have before intimated, a plan of it is laid and concerted (as all other matters of importance are) in a club. However, as my friends have engaged me to stand in the front, those who have a mind to correspond with me may direct their letters To The Spectator, at Mr. Buckley's, in Little Britain. For I must further acquaint the reader that, though our club meets only on Tuesdays and Thursdays, we have appointed a committee to sit every night for the inspection of all such papers as may contribute to the advancement of the public weal.

No. 2. FRIDAY, 2 MARCH, 1711.

[STEELE.]

—Hæc alii sex

Vel plures uno conclamant ore.<sup>1</sup>

—JUVENAL.

The first of our society is a gentleman of Worcestershire, of ancient descent, a baronet, his name Sir Roger de Coverley. His great-grandfather was inventor of that famous country-dance which is called after him. All who know that shire are very well acquainted with the parts and merits of Sir Roger. He is a gentleman that is very singular in his behavior, but his singularities proceed from his good sense, and are contradictions to the manners of the world only as he thinks the world is in the wrong. However, this humor creates him no enemies, for he does nothing with sourness of obstinacy; and his being unconfined to modes and forms, makes him but the readier and more capable to please and oblige all who know him. When he is in town, he lives in Soho Square. It is said he keeps himself a bachelor by reason he was crossed in love by a perverse, beautiful widow of the next county to him. Before this disappointment, Sir Roger was what you call a fine gentleman, had often supped with my Lord Rochester and Sir George Etherege, fought a duel upon his first coming to town, and kicked Bully Dawson in a public coffee-house for calling him "youngster." But being ill-used by the above-mentioned widow, he was very serious for a year and a half; and though, his temper being naturally jovial, he at last got over it, he grew careless of himself, and never dressed afterward. He continues to wear a coat and doublet of the same cut that were in fashion at the time of his repulse, which, in his merry humors, he tells us, has been in and out twelve times since he first wore it. 'Tis said Sir Roger grew humble in his desires after he had forgot this cruel beauty; but this is looked upon by his friends rather as matter of raillery than truth. He is now in his fifty-sixth year, cheerful, gay, and hearty; keeps a good house in both town and country; a great lover of mankind; but there is such a mirthful cast in his behavior that he is rather beloved than esteemed. His tenants grow rich, his servants look satisfied, all the young women profess love to him, and the young men are glad of his company; when he comes into a house he calls the servants by their names, and talks all the way up stairs to a visit. I must not omit that Sir Roger is a justice of the quorum; that he fills the chair at a quarter-session with great abilities; and, three months ago, gained universal applause by explaining a passage in the Game Act.

The gentleman next in esteem and authority among us is another bachelor, who is a member of the Inner Temple; a man of great probity, wit, and understanding; but he has chosen his place of residence rather to obey the direction of an old humorsome father, than in pursuit of his own inclinations. He was placed there to study the laws of the land, and is the most learned of any of the house in those of the stage. Aristotle and Longinus are much better understood by him than Littleton or Coke. The father sends up, every post, questions relating to marriage-articles, leases, and tenures, in the neighborhood; all which questions he agrees with an attorney to answer and take care of in the lump. He is studying the passions themselves, when he should be inquiring into the debates among men which arise from them. He knows the argument of each of the orations of Demosthenes and Tully,<sup>2</sup> but not one case in the reports of our own courts. No one ever took him for a fool, but none, except his intimate friends, know he has a great deal of wit. This turn makes him at once both disinterested and agreeable; as few of his thoughts are drawn from business, they are most of them fit for conversation. His taste of books is a little too just for the age he lives in; he has read all, but approves of very few. His familiarity with the customs, manners, actions, and writings of the ancients makes him a very delicate observer of what occurs to him in the present world. He is an excellent critic, and the time of the play is his hour of business; exactly at five he passes through New Inn, crosses through Russell Court, and takes a turn at Will's till the play begins; he has his shoes rubbed and his periwig powdered at the barber's as you go into the Rose. It is for the good of the audience when he is at a play, for the actors have an ambition to please him.

<sup>1</sup>Six others and more cry out with one voice (Satires, VII, 167).

<sup>2</sup>Cicero.

The person of next consideration is Sir Andrew Freeport, a merchant of great eminence in the city of London, a person of indefatigable industry, strong reason, and great experience. His notions of trade are noble and generous, and (as every rich man has usually some sly way of jesting which would make no great figure were he not a rich man) he calls the sea the British Common. He is acquainted with commerce in all its parts, and will tell you that it is a stupid and barbarous way to extend dominion by arms; for true power is to be got by arts and industry. He will often argue that if this part of our trade were well cultivated, we should gain from one nation; and if another, from another. I have heard him prove that diligence makes more lasting acquisitions than valor, and that sloth has ruined more nations than the sword. He abounds in several frugal maxims, among which the greatest favorite is, "A penny saved is a penny got." A general trader of good sense is pleasanter company than a general scholar; and Sir Andrew having a natural unaffected eloquence, the perspicuity of his discourse gives the same pleasure that wit would in another man. He has made his fortunes himself, and says that England may be richer than other kingdoms by as plain methods as he himself is richer than other men; though at the same time I can say this of him, that there is not a point in the compass but blows home a ship in which he is an owner.

Next to Sir Andrew in the club-room sits Captain Sentry, a gentleman of great courage, good understanding, but invincible modesty. He is one of those that deserve very well, but are very awkward at putting their talents within the observation of such as should take notice of them. He was some years a captain, and behaved himself with great gallantry in several engagements and at several sieges; but having a small estate of his own, and being next heir to Sir Roger, he has quitted a way of life in which no man can rise suitably to his merit who is not something of a courtier as well as a soldier. I have heard him often lament that in a profession where merit is placed in so conspicuous a view, impudence should get the better of modesty. When he has talked to this purpose I never heard him make a sour expression, but frankly confess that he left the world because he was not fit for it. A strict honesty and an even, regular behavior are in themselves obstacles to him that must press through crowds who endeavor at the same end with himself,—the favor of a commander. He will, however, in this way of talk, excuse generals for not disposing according to men's desert, or inquiring into it, "For," says he, "that great man who has a mind to help me, has as many to break through to come at me as I have to come at him"; therefore he will conclude that the man who would make a figure, especially in a military way, must get over all false modesty, and assist his patron against the importunity of other pretenders by a proper assurance in his own vindication. He says it is a civil cowardice to be backward in asserting what you ought to expect, as it is a military fear to be slow in attacking when it is your duty. With this candor does the gentleman speak of himself and others. The same frankness runs through all his conversation. The military part of his life has furnished him with many adventures, in the relation of which he is very agreeable to the company; for he is never overbearing, though accustomed to command men in the utmost degree below him; nor ever too obsequious from an habit of obeying men highly above him.

But that our society may not appear a set of humorists unacquainted with the gallantries and pleasures of the age, we have among us the gallant Will Honeycomb, a gentleman who, according to his years, should be in the decline of his life, but having ever been very careful of his person, and always had a very easy fortune, time has made but very little impression either by wrinkles on his forehead or traces in his brain. His person is well turned and of a good height. He is very ready at that sort of discourse with which men usually entertain women. He has all his life dressed very well, and remembers habits as others do men. He can smile when one speaks to him, and laughs easily. He knows the history of every mode, and can inform you from which of the French king's wenches our wives and daughters had this manner of curling their hair, that way of placing their hoods; whose frailty was covered by such a sort of petticoat, and whose vanity to show her foot made that part of the dress so short in such a year. In a word, all his conversation and knowledge has been in the female world. As other men of his age will take notice to you what such a minister said upon such and such an occasion, he will tell you when the Duke of Monmouth danced at court such a woman was then smitten, another was taken with him at the head of his troop in the Park. In all these important relations, he has ever about the same time received a kind glance or a blow of a fan from some celebrated beauty, mother of the present Lord Such-a-one. If you speak of a young commoner that said a lively thing in the House, he starts up: "He has good blood in his veins; Tom Mirabell, the rogue, cheated me in that affair; that young fellow's mother used me more like a dog than any woman I ever made advances to." This way of talking of his very much enlivens the conversation among us of a more sedate turn; and I find there is not one of the company but myself, who rarely speak at all, but speaks of him as of that sort of man who is usually called a well-bred, fine gentleman. To conclude his character, where women are not concerned, he is an honest, worthy man.

I cannot tell whether I am to account him whom I am next to speak of as one of our company, for he visits us but seldom; but when he does, it adds to every man else a new enjoyment of himself. He is a clergyman, a very philosophic man, of general learning, great sanctity of life, and the most exact good breeding. He has the misfortune to be of a very weak constitution, and consequently cannot accept of such cares and business as preferments in his function would oblige him to; he is therefore among divines what a chamber-counselor is among lawyers. The probity of his mind and the integrity of his life create him followers, as being eloquent or loud advances others. He seldom introduces the subject he speaks upon; but we are so far gone in years that he observes, when he is among us, an earnestness to have him fall on some divine topic, which he always treats with much authority, as one who has no interest in this world, as one who is hastening to the object of all his wishes and conceives hope from his decays and infirmities. These are my ordinary companions.

NO. 10. MONDAY, 12 MARCH, 1711.

[ADDISON.]

*Non aliter quam qui adverso vix flumine lembum
Remigiis subigit, si brachia sorte remisit,
Atque illum in præceps pronò rapit abœus amni.*<sup>1</sup>—
• VIRG.

It is with much satisfaction that I hear this great city inquiring day by day after these my papers, and receiving my morning lectures with a becoming seriousness and attention. My publisher tells me that there are already three thousand of them distributed every day. So that if I allow twenty readers to every paper, which I look upon as a modest computation, I may reckon about three-score thousand disciples in London and Westminster, who I hope will take care to distinguish themselves from the thoughtless herd of their ignorant and unattentive brethren. Since I have raised to myself so great an audience, I shall spare no pains to make their instruction agreeable, and their diversion useful. For which reasons I shall endeavor to enliven morality with wit, and to temper wit with morality, that my readers may, if possible, both ways find their account in the speculation of the day. And to the end that their virtue and discretion may not be short, transient, intermitting starts of thought, I have resolved to refresh their memories from day to day, till I have recovered them out of that desperate state of vice and folly into which the age is fallen. The mind that lies fallow but a single day, sprouts up in follies that are only to be killed by a constant and assiduous culture. It was said of Socrates, that he brought philosophy down from heaven, to inhabit among men; and I shall be ambitious to have it said of me, that I have brought philosophy out of closets and libraries, schools and colleges, to dwell in clubs and assemblies, at tea-tables and in coffee-houses.

I would therefore in a very particular manner recommend these my speculations to all well-regulated families, that set apart an hour in every morning for tea and bread and butter; and would earnestly advise them for their good to order this paper to be punctually served up, and to be looked upon as a part of the tea-equipage.

<sup>1</sup>Like a man whose oars can barely force the boat upstream, and if he relaxes his arms the current carries it headlong down the river (Georgics, I, 201).

Sir Francis Bacon observes, that a well written book, compared with its rivals and antagonists, is like Moses' serpent, that immediately swallowed up and devoured those of the Egyptians. I shall not be so vain as to think, that where The Spectator appears, the other public prints will vanish; but shall leave it to my reader's consideration, whether, is it not much better to be let into the knowledge of one's self, than to hear what passes in Muscovy or Poland; and to amuse ourselves with such writings as tend to the wearing out of ignorance, passion, and prejudice, than such as naturally conduce to inflame hatreds, and make enmities irreconcilable?

In the next place, I would recommend this paper to the daily perusal of those gentlemen whom I cannot but consider as my good brothers and allies, I mean the fraternity of spectators, who live in the world without having anything to do in it; and either by the affluence of their fortunes, or laziness of their dispositions, have no other business with the rest of mankind, but to look upon them. Under this class of men are comprehended all contemplative tradesmen, titular physicians, fellows of the Royal Society, Temp-lars that are not given to be contentious, and statesmen that are out of business; in short, every one that considers the world as a theater, and desires to form a right judgment of those who are the actors on it.

There is another set of men that I must likewise lay a claim to, whom I have lately called the blanks of society, as being altogether unfurnished with ideas, till the business and conversation of the day has supplied them. I have often considered these poor souls with an eye of great commiseration, when I have heard them asking the first man they have met with, whether there was any news stirring? and by that means gathering together materials for thinking. These needy persons do not know what to talk of, till about twelve o'clock in the morning; for by that time they are pretty good judges of the weather, know which way the wind sits, and whether the Dutch mail be come in. As they lie at the mercy of the first man they meet, and are grave or impertinent all the day long, according to the notions which they have imbibed in the morning, I would earnestly intreat them not to stir out of their chambers till they have read this paper, and do promise them that I will daily instil into them such sound and wholesome sentiments, as shall have a good effect on their conversation for the ensuing twelve hours.

But there are none to whom this paper will be more useful, than to the female world. I have often thought there has not been sufficient pains taken in finding out proper employments and diversions for the fair ones. Their amusements seem contrived for them, rather as they are women, than as they are reasonable creatures; and are more adapted to the sex than to the species. The toilet is their great scene of business, and the right adjusting of their hair the principal employment of their lives. The sorting of a suit of ribbons is reckoned a very good morning's work; and if they make an excursion to a mercer's or a toy-shop, so great a fatigue makes them unfit for anything else all the day after. Their more serious occupations are sewing and embroidery, and their greatest drudgery the preparation of jellies and sweetmeats. This, I say, is the state of ordinary women; though I know there are multitudes of those of a more elevated life and conversation, that move in an exalted sphere of knowledge and virtue, that join all the beauties of the mind to the ornaments of dress, and inspire a kind of awe and respect, as well as love, into their male beholder. I hope to increase the number of these by publishing this daily paper, which I shall always endeavor to make an innocent if not an improving entertainment, and by that means at least divert the minds of my female readers from greater trifles. At the same time, as I would fain give some finishing touches to those which are already the most beautiful pieces in human nature, I shall endeavor to point out all those imperfections that are the blemishes, as well as those virtues which are the embellishments of the sex. In the meanwhile I hope these my gentle readers, who have so much time on their hands, will not grudge throwing away a quarter of an hour in a day on this paper, since they may do it without any hindrance to business.

I know several of my friends and well-wishers are in great pain for me, lest I should not be able to keep up the spirit of a paper which I oblige myself to furnish every day: but to make them easy in this particular, I will promise them faithfully to give it over as soon as I grow dull. This I know will be matter of great raillery to the small wits; who will frequently put me in mind of my promise, desire me to keep my word, assure me that it is high time to give over, with many other little pleasantries of the like nature, which men of a little smart genius cannot forbear throwing out against their best friends, when they have such a handle given them of being witty. But let them remember that I do hereby enter my caveat against this piece of raillery.

NO. 81. SATURDAY, 2 JUNE, 1711.

[ADDISON.]

Qualis ubi audito venantium murmure tigris Horruit in maculas—<sup>1</sup>

—STATIUS.

About the middle of last winter I went to see an opera at the theater in the Haymarket, where I could not but take notice of two parties of very fine women, that had placed themselves in the opposite side-boxes, and seemed drawn up in a kind of battle array one against another. After a short survey of them, I found they were patched differently; the faces on one hand being spotted on the right side of the forehead, and those upon the other on the left. I quickly perceived that they cast hostile glances upon one another; and that their patches were placed in those different situations, as party-signals to distinguish friends from foes. In the middle boxes, between these two opposite bodies, were several ladies who patched indifferently on both sides of their faces, and seemed to sit there with no other intention but to see the opera. Upon inquiry I found, that the body of Amazons on my right hand, were Whigs, and those on my left, Tories; and that those who had placed themselves in the middle boxes were a neutral party, whose faces had not yet declared themselves. These last, however, as I afterwards found, diminished daily, and took their party with one side or the other; insomuch that I observed in several of them, the patches, which were before dispersed equally, are now all gone over to the Whig or Tory side of the face. The censorious say, that the men, whose hearts are aimed at, are very often the occasions that one part of the face is thus dishonored, and lies under a kind of disgrace, while the other is so much set off and adorned by the owner; and that the patches turn to the right or to the left, according to the principles of the man who is most in favor. But whatever may be the motives of a few fantastical coquettes, who do not patch for the public good so much as for their own private advantage, it is certain, that there are several women of honor who patch out of principle, and with an eye to the interest of their country. Nay, I am informed that some of them adhere so steadfastly to their party, and are so far from sacrificing their zeal for the public to their passion for any particular person, that in a late draft of marriage articles a lady has stipulated with her husband, that, whatever his opinions are, she shall be at liberty to patch on which side she pleases.

I must here take notice, that Rosalinda, a famous Whig partisan, has most unfortunately a very beautiful mole on the Tory part of her forehead; which being very conspicuous, has occasioned many mistakes, and given a handle to her enemies to misrepresent her face, as though it had revolted from the Whig interest. But, whatever this natural patch may seem to intimate, it is well-known that her notions of government are still the same. This unlucky mole, however, has misled several coxcombs; and like the hanging out of false colors, made some of them converse with Rosalinda in what they thought the spirit of her party, when on a sudden she has given them an unexpected fire, that has sunk them all at once. If Rosalinda is unfortunate in her mole, Nigranilla is as unhappy in a pimple, which forces her, against her inclinations, to patch on the Whig side.

I am told that many virtuous matrons, who formerly have been taught to believe that this artificial spotting of the face was unlawful, are now reconciled by a zeal for their cause, to what they could not be prompted by a concern for their beauty.

<sup>1</sup>Like the tigress when, at the sound of the hunters, spots appear upon her skin (Theb. II, 128).

This way of declaring war upon one another, puts me in mind of what is reported of the tigress, that several spots rise in her skin when she is angry, or as Mr. Cowley has imitated the verses that stand as the motto on this paper,

—She swells with angry pride,
And calls forth all her spots on ev'ry side.<sup>1</sup>

When I was in the theater the time above-mentioned, I had the curiosity to count the patches on both sides, and found the Tory patches to be about twenty stronger than the Whig; but to make amends for this small inequality, I the next morning found the whole puppet-show filled with faces spotted after the Whiggish manner. Whether or no the ladies had retreated hither in order to rally their forces I cannot tell; but the next night they came in so great a body to the opera, that they outnumbered the enemy.

This account of party patches will, I am afraid, appear improbable to those who live at a distance from the fashionable world; but as it is a distinction of a very singular nature, and what perhaps may never meet with a parallel, I think I should not have discharged the office of a faithful Spectator, had I not recorded it.

I have, in former papers, endeavored to expose this party-rage in women, as it only serves to aggravate the hatreds and animosities that reign among men, and in a great measure deprive the fair sex of those peculiar charms with which nature has endowed them.

When the Romans and Sabines were at war, and just upon the point of giving battle, the women, who were allied to both of them, interposed with so many tears and entreaties, that they prevented the mutual slaughter which threatened both parties, and united them together in a firm and lasting peace.

I would recommend this noble example to our British ladies, at a time when their country is torn with so many unnatural divisions, that if they continue, it will be a misfortune to be born in it. The Greeks thought it so improper for women to interest themselves in competitions and contentions, that for this reason, among others, they forbade them, under pain of death, to be present at the Olympic games, notwithstanding these were the public diversions of all Greece.

As our English women excel those of all nations in beauty, they should endeavor to outshine them in all other accomplishments proper to the sex, and to distinguish themselves as tender mothers, and faithful wives, rather than as furious partisans. Female virtues are of a domestic turn. The family is the proper province for private women to shine in. If they must be showing their zeal for the public, let it not be against those who are perhaps of the same family, or at least of the same religion or nation, but against those who are the open, professed, undoubted enemies of their faith, liberty, and country. When the Romans were pressed with a foreign enemy, the ladies voluntarily contributed all their rings and jewels to assist the government under a public exigence, which appeared so laudable an action in the eyes of their countrymen, that from thenceforth it was permitted by a law to pronounce public orations at the funeral of a woman in praise of the deceased person, which till that time was peculiar to men. Would our English ladies, instead of sticking on a patch against those of their own country, show themselves so truly public-spirited as to sacrifice every one her necklace against the common enemy, what decrees ought not to be made in favor of them?

Since I am recollecting upon this subject such passages as occur to my memory out of ancient authors, I cannot omit a sentence in the celebrated funeral oration of Pericles, which he made in honor of those brave Athenians that were slain in a fight with the Lacedæmonians. After having addressed himself to the several ranks and orders of his countrymen, and shown them how they should behave themselves in the public cause, he turns to the female part of his audience: "And as for you (says he) I shall advise you in very few words: Aspire only to those virtues that are peculiar to your sex; follow your natural modesty, and think it your greatest commendation not to be talked of one way or other."<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup>Davidseis, III, 403-404.

<sup>2</sup>Thucydides, II, xlv.

No. 112. MONDAY, 9 JULY, 1711.

[ADDISON.]

Ἡ θανάτου μὲν πρώτα θεοῦ, νόμῳ ὡς δiάκειται, Τίμα.<sup>1</sup>

—PYTHAGORAS.

I am always very well pleased with a country Sunday, and think, if keeping holy the seventh day were only a human institution, it would be the best method that could have been thought of for the polishing and civilizing of mankind. It is certain the country people would soon degenerate into a kind of savages and barbarians were there not such frequent returns of a stated time, in which the whole village meet together with their best faces, and in their cleanliest habits, to converse with one another upon indifferent subjects, hear their duties explained to them, and join together in adoration of the Supreme Being. Sunday clears away the rust of the whole week, not only as it refreshes in their mind's the notions of religion, but as it puts both the sexes upon appearing in their most agreeable forms, and exerting all such qualities as are apt to give them a figure in the eye of the village. A country fellow distinguishes himself as much in the churchyard as a citizen does upon the 'Change, the whole parish politics being generally discussed in that place either after sermon or before the bell rings.

My friend Sir Roger, being a good churchman, has beautified the inside of his church with several texts of his own choosing; he has likewise given a handsome pulpit-cloth, and railed in the communion-table at his own expense. He has often told me that, at his coming to his estate, he found his parishioners very irregular; and that, in order to make them kneel and join in the responses, he gave every one of them a hassock and a common-prayer-book, and at the same time employed an itinerant singing-master, who goes about the country for that purpose, to instruct them rightly in the tunes of the Psalms; upon which they now very much value themselves, and indeed outdo most of the country churches that I have ever heard.

As Sir Roger is landlord to the whole congregation, he keeps them in very good order, and will suffer nobody to sleep in it besides himself; for, if by chance he has been surprised into a short nap at sermon, upon recovering out of it he stands up and looks about him, and, if he sees anybody else nodding, either wakes them himself, or sends his servant to them. Several other of the old knight's particularities break out upon these occasions; sometimes he will be lengthening out a verse in the Singing-Psalms half a minute after the rest of the congregation have done with it; sometimes, when he is pleased with the matter of his devotion, he pronounces "Amen" three or four times to the same prayer; and sometimes stands up when everybody else is upon their knees, to count the congregation, or see if any of his tenants are missing.

I was yesterday very much surprised to hear my old friend, in the midst of the service, calling out to one John Matthews to mind what he was about, and not disturb the congregation. This John Matthews, it seems, is remarkable for being an idle fellow, and at that time was kicking his heels for his diversion. This authority of the knight, though exerted in that odd manner which accompanies him in all circumstances of life, has a very good effect upon the parish, who are not polite enough to see anything ridiculous in his behavior; besides that the general good sense and worthiness of his character makes his friends observe these little singularities as foils that rather set off than blemish his good qualities.

As soon as the sermon is finished, nobody presumes to stir till Sir Roger is gone out of the church. The knight walks down from his seat in the chancel between a double row of his tenants, that stand bowing to him on each side, and every now and then inquires how such an one's wife, or mother, or son, or father do, whom he does not see at church,—which is understood as a secret reprimand to the person that is absent.

The chaplain has often told me that, upon a catechizing day, when Sir Roger had been pleased with a boy that answers well, he has ordered a Bible to be given him next day for his encouragement, and sometimes accompanies it with a fitch of bacon to his mother. Sir Roger has likewise added five pounds a year to the clerk's place; and, that he may encourage the young fellows to make themselves perfect in the church service, has promised, upon the death of the present incumbent, who is very old, to bestow it according to merit.

<sup>1</sup>First reverence the immortal gods, as custom decrees (Carmina Aurea, 1-2).

The fair understanding between Sir Roger and his chaplain, and their mutual concurrence in doing good, is the more remarkable because the very next village is famous for the differences and contentions that rise between the parson and the squire, who live in a perpetual state of war. The parson is always preaching at the squire, and the squire, to be revenged on the parson, never comes to church. The squire has made all his tenants atheists and tithe-stealers; while the parson instructs them every Sunday in the dignity of his order, and insinuates to them in almost every sermon that he is a better man than his patron. In short, matters are come to such an extremity that the squire has not said his prayers either in public or private this half year; and that the parson threatens him, if he does not mend his manners, to pray for him in the face of the whole congregation.

Feuds of this nature, though too frequent in the country, are very fatal to the ordinary people, who are so used to be dazzled with riches that they pay as much deference to the understanding of a man of an estate as of a man of learning; and are very hardly brought to regard any truth, how important soever it may be, that is preached to them, when they know there are several men of five hundred a year who do not believe it.

NO. 122. FRIDAY, 20 JULY, 1711.

[ADDISON.]

Comes jucundus in via pro vehiculo est.<sup>1</sup>

—PUBL. SYR.

A man's first care should be to avoid the reproaches of his own heart; his next, to escape the censures of the world. If the last interferes with the former, it ought to be entirely neglected; but otherwise there cannot be a greater satisfaction to an honest mind than to see those approbations which it gives itself seconded by the applauses of the public. A man is more sure of his conduct when the verdict which he passes upon his own behavior is thus warranted and confirmed by the opinion of all that know him.

<sup>1</sup>A pleasant comrade on a journey is as good as a carriage (Publius Syrus, Fragments).

My worthy friend Sir Roger is one of those who is not only at peace within himself but beloved and esteemed by all about him. He receives a suitable tribute for his universal benevolence to mankind in the returns of affection and good-will which are paid him by every one that lives within his neighborhood. I lately met with two or three odd instances of that general respect which is shown to the good old knight. He would needs carry Will Wimble and myself with him to the county assizes. As we were upon the road, Will Wimble joined a couple of plain men who rid before us, and conversed with them for some time, during which my friend Sir Roger acquainted me with their characters.

"The first of them," says he, "that has a spaniel by his side, is a yeoman of about an hundred pounds a year, an honest man. He is just within the Game Act, and qualified to kill an hare or a pheasant. He knocks down a dinner with his gun twice or thrice a week; and by that means lives much cheaper than those who have not so good an estate as himself. He would be a good neighbor if he did not destroy so many partridges; in short he is a very sensible man, shoots flying, and has been several times foreman of the petty-jury.

"The other that rides along with him is Tom Touchy, a fellow famous for taking the law of everybody. There is not one in the town where he lives that he has not sued for a quarter-sessions. The rogue had once the impudence to go to law with the widow. His head is full of costs, damages, and ejectments; he plagued a couple of honest gentlemen so long for a trespass in breaking one of his hedges, till he was forced to sell the ground it enclosed to defray the charges of the prosecution. His father left him fourscore pounds a year, but he has cast and been cast so often that he is not now worth thirty. I suppose he is going upon the old business of the willow tree."

As Sir Roger was giving me this account of Tom Touchy, Will Wimble and his two companions stopped short till we came up to them. After having paid their respects to Sir Roger, Will told him that Mr. Touchy and he must appeal to him upon a dispute that arose between them. Will, it seems, had been giving his fellow-traveler an account of his angling one day in such a hole; when Tom Touchy, instead of hearing out his story, told him that Mr. Such-an-one, if he pleased, might take the law of him for fishing in that part of the river. My friend Sir Roger heard them both, upon a round trot; and, after having paused some time, told them, with the air of a man who would not give his judgment rashly, that much might be said on both sides. They were neither of them dissatisfied with the knight's determination, because neither of them found himself in the wrong by it. Upon which we made the best of our way to the assizes.

The court was sat before Sir Roger came; but notwithstanding all the justices had taken their places upon the bench, they made room for the old knight at the head of them; who, for his reputation in the country, took occasion to whisper in the judge's ear that he was glad his lordship had met with so much good weather in his circuit. I was listening to the proceeding of the court with much attention, and infinitely pleased with that great appearance and solemnity which so properly accompanies such a public administration of our laws, when, after about an hour's sitting, I observed, to my great surprise, in the midst of a trial, that my friend Sir Roger was getting up to speak. I was in some pain for him, till I found he had acquitted himself of two or three sentences, with a look of much business and great intrepidity.

Upon his first rising the court was hushed, and a general whisper ran among the country people that Sir Roger was up. The speech he made was so little to the purpose that I shall not trouble my readers with an account of it; and I believe was not so much designed by the knight himself to inform the court, as to give him a figure in my eye, and keep up his credit in the country.

I was highly delighted, when the court rose, to see the gentlemen of the country gathering about my old friend, and striving who should compliment him most; at the same time that the ordinary people gazed upon him at a distance, not a little admiring his courage that was not afraid to speak to the judge.

In our return home we met with a very odd accident, which I cannot forbear relating, because it shows how desirous all who know Sir

Roger are of giving him marks of their esteem. When we were arrived upon the verge of his estate, we stopped at a little inn to rest ourselves and our horses. The man of the house had, it seems, been formerly a servant in the knight's family; and, to do honor to his old master, had some time since, unknown to Sir Roger, put him up in a sign-post before the door; so that the knight's head had hung out upon the road about a week before he himself knew anything of the matter. As soon as Sir Roger was acquainted with it, finding that his servant's indiscretion proceeded wholly from affection and goodwill, he only told him that he had made him too high a compliment; and when the fellow seemed to think that could hardly be, added, with a more decisive look, that it was too great an honor for any man under a duke; but told him at the same time that it might be altered with a very few touches, and that he himself would be at the charge of it. Accordingly they got a painter, by the knight's directions, to add a pair of whiskers to the face, and by a little aggravation to the features to change it into the Saracen's Head. I should not have known this story had not the inn-keeper, upon Sir Roger's alighting, told him in my hearing that his honor's head was brought back last night with the alterations that he had ordered to be made in it. Upon this, my friend, with his usual cheerfulness, related the particulars above mentioned, and ordered the head to be brought into the room. I could not forbear discovering greater expressions of mirth than ordinary upon the appearance of this monstrous face, under which, notwithstanding it was made to frown and stare in a most extraordinary manner, I could still discover a distant resemblance of my old friend. Sir Roger, upon seeing me laugh, desired me to tell him truly if I thought it possible for people to know him in that disguise. I at first kept my usual silence; but upon the knight's conjuring me to tell him whether it was not still more like himself than a Saracen, I composed my countenance in the best manner I could, and replied that much might be said on both sides.

These several adventures, with the knight's behavior in them, gave me as pleasant a day as ever I met with in any of my travels.

No. 159. SATURDAY, 1 SEPTEMBER, 1711.

[ADDISON.]

—*Omnem, quæ nunc obducta tuenti
Mortales hebetat visus tibi, et humida circum
Caligat, nubem eripiam*—

—VIRG.

When I was at Grand Cairo, I picked up several Oriental manuscripts, which I have still by me. Among others I met with one entitled The Visions of Mirza, which I have read over with great pleasure. I intend to give it to the public when I have no other entertainment for them; and shall begin with the first vision, which I have translated word for word as follows:—

“On the fifth day of the moon, which according to the custom of my forefathers I always keep holy, after having washed myself, and offered up my morning devotions, I ascended the high hills of Bagdad, in order to pass the rest of the day in meditation and prayer. As I was here airing myself on the tops of the mountains, I fell into a profound contemplation on the vanity of human life; and passing from one thought to another, ‘Surely,’ said I, ‘man is but a shadow, and life a dream.’ Whilst I was thus musing, I cast my eyes towards the summit of a rock that was not far from me, where I discovered one in the habit of a shepherd, with a musical instrument in his hand. As I looked upon him he applied it to his lips, and began to play upon it. The sound of it was exceedingly sweet, and wrought into a variety of tunes that were inexpressibly melodious, and altogether different from anything I had ever heard. They put me in mind of those heavenly airs that are played to the departed souls of good men upon their first arrival in Paradise, to wear out the impressions of their last agonies, and qualify them for the pleasures of that happy place. My heart melted away in secret raptures.

“I had been often told that the rock before me was the haunt of a Genius; and that several had been entertained with music who had passed by it, but never heard that the musician had before made himself visible. When he had raised my thoughts by those transporting airs which he played to taste the pleasures of his conversation, as I looked upon him like one astonished, he beckoned to me, and by the waving of his hand directed me to approach the place where he sat. I drew near with that reverence which is due to a superior nature; and as my heart was entirely subdued by the captivating strains I had heard, I fell down at his feet and wept. The Genius smiled upon me with a look of compassion and affability that familiarized him to my imagination, and at once dispelled all the fears and apprehensions with which I approached him. He lifted me from the ground, and taking me by the hand, ‘Mirza,’ said he, ‘I have heard thee in thy soliloquies; follow me.’

“He then led me to the highest pinnacle of the rock, and placing me on the top of it, ‘Cast thy eyes eastward,’ said he, ‘and tell me what thou seest.’ ‘I see,’ said I, ‘a huge valley, and a prodigious tide of water rolling through it.’ ‘The valley that thou seest,’ said he, ‘is the Vale of Misery, and the tide of water that thou seest is part of the great Tide of Eternity.’ ‘What is the reason,’ said I, ‘that the tide I see rises out of a thick mist at one end, and again loses itself in a thick mist at the other?’ ‘What thou seest,’ said he, ‘is that portion of eternity which is called time, measured out by the sun, and reaching from the beginning of the world to its consummation. Examine now,’ said he, ‘this sea that is bounded with darkness at both ends, and tell me what thou discoverest in it.’ ‘I see a bridge,’ said I, ‘standing in the midst of the tide.’ ‘The bridge thou seest,’ said he, ‘is Human Life: consider it attentively.’ Upon a more leisurely survey of it, I found that it consisted of three-score and ten entire arches, with several broken arches, which added to those that were entire, made up the number about a hundred. As I was counting the arches, the Genius told me that this bridge consisted at first of a thousand arches; but that a great flood swept away the rest, and left the bridge in the ruinous condition I now beheld it. ‘But tell me farther,’ said he, ‘what thou discoverest on it.’ ‘I see multitudes of people passing over it,’ said I, ‘and a black cloud hanging on each end of it.’ As I looked more attentively, I saw several of the passengers dropping through the bridge into the great tide that flowed underneath it; and upon farther examination, perceived there were innumerable trap-doors that lay concealed in the bridge, which the passengers no sooner trod upon, but they fell through them into the tide, and immediately disappeared. These hidden pitfalls were set very thick at the entrance of the bridge, so that throngs of people no sooner broke through the cloud, but many of them fell into them. They grew thinner towards the middle, but multiplied and lay closer together towards the end of the arches that were entire.

<sup>1</sup>All the cloud which, drawn across your eyes, now dulls your mortal vision and shrouds you in mist, I shall snatch away (Aeneid, II, 604-606).

"There were indeed some persons, but their number was very small, that continued a kind of hobbling march on the broken arches, but fell through one after another, being quite tired and spent with so long a walk.

"I passed some time in the contemplation of this wonderful structure, and the great variety of objects which it presented. My heart was filled with a deep melancholy to see several dropping unexpectedly in the midst of mirth and jollity, and catching at everything that stood by them to save themselves. Some were looking up towards the heavens in a thoughtful posture, and in the midst of a speculation stumbled and fell out of sight. Multitudes were very busy in the pursuit of bubbles that glittered in their eyes and danced before them; but often when they thought themselves within the reach of them, their footing failed and down they sunk. In this confusion of objects, I observed some with scimitars in their hands, and others with urinals, who ran to and fro upon the bridge, thrusting several persons on trap-doors which did not seem to lie in their way, and which they might have escaped had they not been thus forced upon them.

"The Genius seeing me indulge myself on this melancholy prospect, told me I had dwelt long enough upon it. 'Take thine eyes off the bridge,' said he, 'and tell me if thou yet seest anything thou dost not comprehend.' Upon looking up, 'What mean,' said I, 'those great flights of birds that are perpetually hovering about the bridge, and settling upon it from time to time? I see vultures, harpies, ravens, cormorants; and among many other feathered creatures several little winged boys, that perch in great numbers upon the middle arches.' 'These,' said the Genius, 'are Envy, Avarice, Superstition, Despair, Love, with the like cares and passions that infest human life.'

"I here fetched a deep sigh. 'Alas,' said I, 'Man was made in vain! how is he given away to misery and mortality! tortured in life, and swallowed up in death!' The Genius being moved with compassion towards me, bid me quit so uncomfortable a prospect. 'Look no more,' said he, 'on man in the first stage of his existence, in his setting out for eternity; but cast thine eye on that thick mist into which the tide bears the several generations of mortals that fall into it.' I directed my sight as I was ordered, and (whether or no the good Genius strengthened it with any supernatural force, or dissipated part of the mist that was before too thick for the eye to penetrate) I saw the valley opening at the farther end, and spreading forth into an immense ocean, that had a huge rock of adamant running through the midst of it, and dividing it into two equal parts. The clouds still rested on one half of it, insomuch that I could discover nothing in it; but the other appeared to me a vast ocean planted with innumerable islands, that were covered with fruits and flowers, and interwoven with a thousand little shining seas that ran among them. I could see persons dressed in glorious habits with garlands upon their heads, passing among the trees, lying down by the sides of fountains, or resting on beds of flowers; and could hear a confused harmony of singing birds, falling waters, human voices, and musical instruments. Gladness grew in me upon the discovery of so delightful a scene. I wished for the wings of an eagle, that I might fly away to those happy seats; but the Genius told me there was no passage to them, except through the gates of death that I saw opening every moment upon the bridge. 'The islands,' said he, 'that lie so fresh and green before thee, and with which the whole face of the ocean appears spotted as far as thou canst see, are more in number than the sands on the seashore: there are myriads of islands behind those which thou here discoverest, reaching farther than thine eye, or even thine imagination can extend itself. These are the mansions of good men after death, who, according to the degree and kinds of virtue in which they excelled, are distributed among these several islands, which abound with pleasures of different kinds and degrees, suitable to the relishes and perfections of those who are settled in them: every island is a paradise accommodated to its respective inhabitants. Are not these, O Mirza, habitations worth contending for? Does life appear miserable that gives thee opportunities of earning such a reward? Is death to be feared that will convey thee to so happy an existence? Think not man was made in vain, who has such an eternity reserved for him.' I gazed with inexpressible pleasure on these happy islands. At length, said I, 'Show me now, I beseech thee, the secrets that lie hid under those dark clouds which cover the ocean on the other side of the rock of adamant.' The Genius making me no answer, I turned me about to address myself to him a second time, but I found that he had left me; I then turned again to the vision which I had been so long contemplating; but instead of the rolling tide, the arched bridge, and the happy islands, I saw nothing but the long hollow valley of Bagdad, with oxen, sheep, and camels grazing upon the sides of it."

No. 323. TUESDAY, 11 MARCH, 1712.

[ADDISON.]

Modo vir, modo femina.<sup>1</sup>—OVID.

The Journal with which I presented my readers on Tuesday last,<sup>2</sup> has brought me in several letters with accounts of many private lives cast into that form. I have the Rake's Journal, the Sot's Journal, the Whoremaster's Journal, and among several others a very curious piece, entitled, The Journal of a Mohock.<sup>3</sup> By these instances I find that the intention of my last Tuesday's paper has been mistaken by many of my readers. I did not design so much to expose vice as idleness, and aimed at those persons who pass away their time rather in trifles and impertinence, than in crimes and immoralities. Offences of this later kind are not to be dallied with, or treated in so ludicrous a manner. In short, my journal only holds up folly to the light, and shows the disagreeableness of such actions as are indifferent in themselves, and blamable only as they proceed from creatures endowed with reason.

<sup>1</sup>Sometimes a man, sometimes a woman (Metamorphoses, IV, 280).

<sup>2</sup>Spectator No. 317. The journal was that of a "sober citizen," "of greater consequence in his own thoughts than in the eye of the world."

<sup>3</sup>The name given to the ruffians and thieves who infested London and terrorized many at night. They were descendants of the "Hectors" mentioned by Dryden in the Prologue of All for Love.

My following correspondent, who calls herself Clarinda, is such a journalist as I require: she seems by her letter to be placed in a modish state of indifference between vice and virtue, and to be susceptible of either, were there proper pains taken with her. Had her journal been filled with gallantries, or such occurrences as had shown her wholly divested of her natural innocence, notwithstanding it might have been more pleasing to the generality of readers, I should not have published it; but as it is only the picture of a life filled with a fashionable kind of gaiety and laziness, I shall set down five days of it, as I have received it from the hand of my correspondent.

DEAR MR. SPECTATOR,

You having set your readers an exercise in one of your last week's papers, I have performed mine according to your orders, and herewith send it you enclosed. You must know, Mr. Spectator, that I am a maiden lady of a good fortune, who have had several matches offered me for these ten years last past, and have at present warm applications made to me by a very pretty fellow. As I am at my own disposal, I come up to town every winter, and pass my time after the manner you will find in the following journal, which I began to write upon the very day after your Spectator upon that subject.

TUESDAY night. Could not go to sleep till one in the morning for thinking of my journal.

WEDNESDAY. From Eight till Ten. Drank two dishes of chocolate in bed, and fell asleep after them.

From Ten to Eleven. Eat a slice of bread and butter, drank a dish of bohea,<sup>4</sup> read The Spectator.

From Eleven to One. At my toilette, tried a new head.<sup>5</sup> Gave orders for Veny to be combed and washed. Mem. I look best in blue.

<sup>4</sup>Tea.

<sup>5</sup>I. e., head-dress.

From One till half an hour after Two. Drove to the Change. Cheapened a couple of fans.

Till Four. At dinner. Mem. Mr. Froth passed by in his new liveries.

From Four to Six. Dressed, paid a visit to old Lady Blithe and her sister, having before heard they were gone out of town that day.

From Six to Eleven. At basset. Mem. Never set again upon the ace of diamonds.

THURSDAY. From Eleven at night to Eight in the morning. Dreamed that I punted to Mr. Froth.

From Eight to Ten. Chocolate. Read two acts in Aurenzebe<sup>1</sup> a-bed.

From Ten to Eleven. Tea-table. Sent to borrow Lady Faddle's Cupid for Veny. Read the play-bills. Received a letter from Mr. Froth. Mem. Locked it up in my strong box.

Rest of the morning. Fontange,<sup>2</sup> the tire-woman, her account of my Lady Blithe's wash. Broke a tooth in my little tortoiseshell comb. Sent Frank to know how my Lady Hectic rested after her monkey's leaping out at window. Looked pale. Fontange tells me my glass is not true. Dressed by Three.

From Three to Four. Dinner cold before I sat down.

From Four to Eleven. Saw company. Mr. Froth's opinion of Milton. His account of the Mohocks. His fancy for a pin-cushion. Picture in the lid of his snuff-box. Old Lady Faddle promises me her woman to cut my hair. Lost five guineas at crimp.

Twelve a clock at night. Went to bed.

FRIDAY. Eight in the morning. A-bed. Read over all Mr. Froth's letters. Cupid and Veny.

Ten a clock. Stayed within all day, not at home.

From Ten to Twelve. In conference with my mantua-maker. Sorted a suit of ribands. Broke my blue china cup.

From Twelve to One. Shut myself up in my chamber, practised Lady Betty Modely's skuttle.

One in the afternoon. Called for my flowered handkerchief. Worked half a violet leaf in it. Eyes ached and head out of order. Threw by my work, and read over the remaining part of Aurenzebe.

From Three to Four. Dined.

From Four to Twelve. Changed my mind, dressed, went abroad, and played at crimp till midnight. Found Mrs. Spitey at home. Conversation: Mrs. Brilliant's necklace false stones. Old Lady Loveday going to be married to a young fellow that is not worth a groat. Miss Prue gone into the country. Tom Townley has red hair. Mem. Mrs. Spitey whispered in my ear that she had something to tell me about Mr. Froth; I am sure it is not true.

Between Twelve and One. Dreamed that Mr. Froth lay at my feet, and called me Indamora.<sup>3</sup>

SATURDAY. Rose at eight a clock in the morning. Sat down to my toilette.

From Eight to Nine. Shifted a patch for half an hour before I could determine it. Fixed it above my left eyebrow.

From Nine to Twelve. Drank my tea, and dressed.

From Twelve to Two. At Chapel. A great deal of good company. Mem. The third air in the new opera. Lady Blithe dressed frightfully.

From Three to Four. Dined. Mrs. Kitty called upon me to go to the opera before I was risen from table.

From dinner to Six. Drank tea. Turned off a footman for being rude to Veny.

Six a clock. Went to the opera. I did not see Mr. Froth till the beginning of the second act. Mr. Froth talked to a gentleman in a black wig. Bowed to a lady in the front box. Mr. Froth and his friend clapped Nicolini<sup>4</sup> in the third act. Mr. Froth cried out Ancora.<sup>5</sup> Mr. Froth led me to my chair. I think he squeezed my hand.

Eleven at night. Went to bed. Melancholy dreams. Methought Nicolini said he was Mr. Froth.

<sup>1</sup>The "Captive Queen" in Dryden's Aurenzebe.

<sup>4</sup>Nicolino Grimaldi, a famous Italian singer, who came to England in 1708.

<sup>5</sup>I. e., Encore.

<sup>1</sup>Heroic play by Dryden.

<sup>2</sup>Mlle. de Fontange introduced a new type of head-dress which was fashionable among Englishwomen at the end of the seventeenth century

SUNDAY. Indisposed.

MONDAY. Eight a clock. Waked by Miss Kitty. Aurenzebe lay upon the chair by me. Kitty repeated without book the eight best lines in the play. Went in our mobs to the dumb man, according to appointment. Told me that my lover's name began with a G. Mem. The conjurer was within a letter of Mr. Froth's name, etc.

Upon looking back into this my journal, I find that I am at a loss to know whether I pass my time well or ill; and indeed never thought of considering how I did it, before I perused your speculation upon that subject. I scarce find a single action in these five days that I can thoroughly approve of, except the working upon the violet leaf, which I am resolved to finish the first day I am at leisure. As for Mr. Froth and Veny, I did not think they took up so much of my time and thoughts, as I find they do upon my journal. The latter of them I will turn off if you insist upon it; and if Mr. Froth does not bring matters to a conclusion very suddenly, I will not let my life run away in a dream.

Your humble servant,
CLARINDA.

To resume one of the morals of my first paper, and to confirm Clarinda in her good inclinations, I would have her consider what a pretty figure she would make among posterity, were the history of her whole life published like these five days of it. I shall conclude my paper with an epitaph written by an uncertain author<sup>1</sup> on Sir Philip Sidney's sister, a lady who seems to have been of a temper very much different from that of Clarinda. The last thought of it is so very noble, that I dare say my reader will pardon the quotation.

On the Countess Dowager of Pembroke

Underneath this marble hearse
Lies the subject of all verse,
Sidney's sister, Pembroke's mother;
Death, ere thou hast killed another,
Fair and learn'd and good as she,
Time shall throw a dart at thee.

<sup>1</sup>The poem (of which Addison quotes only the first half) has been generally ascribed to Ben Johnson, but in recent years has been claimed for William Browne of Tavistock.

NO. 377. TUESDAY, 13 MAY, 1712.

[ADDISON.]

*Quid quisque vitet, nunquam homini satis
Cautum est in horas.*<sup>2</sup>—HOR.

LOVE was the mother of poetry, and still produces, among the most ignorant and barbarous, a thousand imaginary distresses and poetical complaints. It makes a footman talk like Oroondates,<sup>3</sup> and converts a brutal rustic into a gentle swain. The most ordinary plebeian or mechanic in love bleeds and pines away with a certain elegance and tenderness of sentiments which this passion naturally inspires.

These inward languishings of a mind infected with this softness have given birth to a phrase which is made use of by all the melting tribe, from the highest to the lowest, I mean that of dying for love.

Romances, which owe their very being to this passion, are full of these metaphorical deaths. Heroes and heroines, knights, squires, and damsels, are all of them in a dying condition. There is the same kind of mortality in our modern tragedies, where every one gasps, faints, bleeds, and dies. Many of the poets, to describe the execution which is done by this passion, represent the fair sex as Basilisks that destroy with their eyes; but I think Mr. Cowley has with great justness of thought compared a beautiful woman to a porcupine, that sends an arrow from every part.

I have often thought, that there is no way so effectual for the cure of this general infirmity, as a man's reflecting upon the motives that produce it. When the passion proceeds from the sense of any virtue or perfection in the person beloved, I would by no means discourage it; but if a man considers that all his heavy complaints of wounds and deaths rise from some little affectations of coquetry, which are improved into charms by his own fond imagination, the very laying before himself the cause of his distemper may be sufficient to effect the cure of it.

It is in this view that I have looked over the several bundles of letters which I have

<sup>2</sup>The dangers of the hour! no thought

We give them.

(Horace, Odes, II, xiii, 13–14. Conington's translation.)

<sup>3</sup>A character in de Scudéry's romance of Artamène ou le Grand Cyrus.

received from dying people, and composed out of them the following bill of mortality, which I shall lay before my reader without any further preface, as hoping that it may be useful to him in discovering those several places where there is most danger, and those fatal arts which are made use of to destroy the heedless and unwary.

Lysander, slain at a puppet-show on the 3rd of September.

Thyrsis, shot from a casement in Pickadilly.

T. S., wounded by Zelinda's scarlet stocking as she was stepping out of a coach.

Will. Simple, smitten at the opera by the glance of an eye that was aimed at one who stood by him.

Tho. Vainlove, lost his life at a ball.

Tim. Tatle, killed by the tap of a fan on his left shoulder by Coquetilla, as he was talking carelessly with her in a bow-window.

Sir Simon Softly, murdered at the play-house in Drury Lane by a frown.

Philander, mortally wounded by Cleora, as she was adjusting her tucker.

Ralph Gapely, Esq., hit by a random shot at the ring.

F. R., caught his death upon the water, April the 31st.

W. W., killed by an unknown hand, that was playing, with the glove off, upon the side of the front box in Drury Lane.

Sir Christopher Crazy, Bar., hurt by the brush of a whalebone petticoat.

Sylvius, shot through the sticks of a fan at St. James's Church.

Damon, struck through the heart by a diamond necklace.

Thomas Trusty, Francis Goosequill, William Meanwell, Edward Callow, Esqrs., standing in a row, fell all four at the same time by an ogle of the Widow Trapland.

Tom Rattle, chancing to tread upon a lady's tail as he came out of the play-house, she turned full upon him, and laid him dead upon the spot.

Dick Tastewell, slain by a blush from the Queen's box in the third act of the Trip to the Jubilee.

Samuel Felt, Haberdasher, wounded in his walk to Islington by Mrs. Susannah Crossstitch, as she was clambering over a stile.

R. F. T., W. S. I., M. P., etc., put to death in the last birthday massacre.

Roger Blinko, cut off in the twenty-first year of his age by a white-wash.

Musidorus, slain by an arrow that flew out of a dimple in Belinda's left cheek.

Ned Courtly, presenting Flavia with her glove (which she had dropped on purpose) she received it, and took away his life with a curtsy.

John Gosselin, having received a slight hurt from a pair of blue eyes, as he was making his escape was dispatched by a smile.

Strephon, killed by Clarinda as she looked down into the pit.

Charles Careless, shot flying by a girl of fifteen who unexpectedly popped her head upon him out of a coach.

Josiah Wither, aged threescore and three, sent to his long home by Elizabeth Jettwell, spinster.

Jack Freelave, murdered by Melissa in her hair.

William Wiseaker, Gent., drowned in a flood of tears by Moll Common.

John Pleadwell, Esq., of the Middle Temple, barrister at law, assassinated in his chambers the sixth instant by Kitty Sly, who pretended to come to him for his advice.

JONATHAN SWIFT (1667-1745)

One of the things Swift was heard to say to himself in his dreadful last days was "I am what I am; I am what I am." This has been difficult for many, particularly for comfortable people, to believe, and Swift has often been explained away. Yet he lives on, not merely in the minds and hearts of children who, by a consummate irony, find Lilliput amusing, but as a man speaking to men. For Swift, by virtue of a simplicity of outlook which has its parallel only in the lives and words of a few of the world's great religious figures, attained an insight into human folly which pierces the hearts of men by its profound truth. Uneasily men may squirm, attempting to minimize or to disregard his words, but they do not succeed; for in the end they cannot deny that beneath his coarseness and exaggeration, beneath the trappings of his age in which he clothed his thoughts and his pictures of life, Swift was essentially right. Swift wrote satirically in accordance with his own bent and the temper of his age, but he does not live simply as the prose counterpart of Pope; not alone for his mastery of satire, nor for its unexampled fierceness, nor yet for the downright plainness and directness and demonic force of his speech does he live, but because he was what he was, beneath all else a noble personality, deeply sensitive to the confused splendor and misery of humankind.

The first blow of adverse fortune which Swift had to endure came with his birth, for he always considered it an indignity that, though his parents were English, he happened to be born in Ireland, which he hated. He was born on 30 November, 1667, in Dublin. His father had died a short time before his birth, leaving his mother practically destitute. The consequence was that Swift was dependent through his early years on the charity of an uncle—a kind of dependence which was inevitably galling to him, though there is no evidence that his uncle treated him worse than victims of charity are generally treated. In 1673 he was sent to Kilkenny School; in 1681 he proceeded to Trinity College, Dublin, from which he was graduated in 1685, with a poor academic record. In 1689 he was employed as an amanuensis and secretary by Sir William Temple, a kinsman and a man now largely forgotten, though of great note in his day. Temple was a man of the world and had been a diplomat; he was on intimate terms with many of the great and influential people of the time, and he was a smooth and polished writer. There can be no doubt that he did much for Swift, whose association with him lasted, with several interruptions, until Temple's death in 1699. Through Temple's influence Swift was in 1692 admitted an M. A. at Oxford, and in 1694 he took holy orders. He had earlier considered this method of making a living, but had refused to take the step as long as he could not at least say that he had other alternatives and so had not entered the priesthood simply for the sake of income. It was during Swift's stay with Temple that he experimented until he learned how to write and what he could best do. He began apparently with poems, but was told by Dryden that he would never be a poet—a blunt verdict which may have been wrong and which Swift never forgave, although he acted on it and devoted himself chiefly thereafter to prose. It was as a result, too, of a controversy into which Temple had got over the relative merits of the ancients and the moderns that Swift wrote one of his most effective satirical pamphlets, The Battle of the Books, chiefly composed in 1697. And, moreover, it was while he was living with Temple that he first met Esther Johnson, the Stella of the famous Journal, whose devoted friend he remained, spite of passing attachments to other women, and spite of Hester Vanhomrigh's love for him, until Stella's death in 1728. It has been maintained that Swift was secretly married to Stella, and the truth about this cannot be determined. It is not, however, a matter of very great importance, it being sufficiently plain that only the ceremony is in question, the relations between the two having been simply those of close friends. In 1699 Swift returned to Ireland and in the following year was made Vicar of Laracor. He became attached to the place and did much to improve the living, though he never remained there very long at a time. From 1701, indeed, until 1714 he was much in England. He returned in the first instance to present to the government certain grievances of the Irish clergy, but, particularly after the publication of A Tale of a Tub and The Battle of the Books in 1704, it was recognized that he would make a powerful political writer and both Whigs and Tories made bids for his support. In the end he threw himself in with the Tories and for several years worked hard and brilliantly for them. His reward, however, was not the bishopric he desired and thought he deserved, nor even a lesser post in England, but the Deanery of St. Patrick's Cathedral, in Dublin. Thus, to his bitter disappointment, was Swift's exile perpetuated, and after 1714—save for two visits to England in 1726 and 1727—he remained in Ireland until his death. He never ceased to hate Ireland, but in the course of time he was moved by the wretched condition of the island and the character of English misrule to write indignantly in support of Irish causes, as, for example, in the Drapier's Letters. Gulliver's Travels into several remote Nations of the World—unquestionably Swift's greatest and most fully representative book—was also written during these years, being published in 1726. During the last years of his life Swift became hopelessly mad. He died on 19 October, 1745, and was buried in his own cathedral.

GULLIVER'S TRAVELS

(1726)

THE PUBLISHER TO THE READER

THE author of these Travels, Mr. Lemuel Gulliver, is my ancient and intimate friend; there is likewise some relation between us by the mother's side. About three years ago, Mr. Gulliver growing weary of the concourse of curious people coming to him at his house in Redriff, made a small purchase of land, with a convenient house, near Newark, in Nottinghamshire, his native country; where he now lives retired, yet in good esteem among his neighbors.

Although Mr. Gulliver was born in Nottinghamshire, where his father dwelt, yet I have heard him say his family came from Oxfordshire; to confirm which, I have observed in the churchyard at Banbury, in that county, several tombs and monuments of the Gullivers.

Before he quitted Redriff, he left the custody of the following papers in my hands, with the liberty to dispose of them as I should think fit. I have carefully perused them three times: the style is very plain and simple; and the only fault I find is, that the author, after the manner of travelers, is a little too circumstantial. There is an air of truth apparent through the whole; and indeed the author was so distinguished for his veracity, that it became a sort of proverb among his neighbors at Redriff, when any one affirmed a thing, to say it was as true as if Mr. Gulliver had spoke it.

By the advice of several worthy persons, to whom, with the author's permission, I communicated these papers, I now venture to send them into the world, hoping they may be at least, for some time, a better entertainment to our young noblemen, than the common scribbles of politics and party.

This volume would have been at least twice as large, if I had not made bold to strike out innumerable passages relating to the winds and tides, as well as to the variations and bearings in the several voyages; together with the minute descriptions of the management of the ship in storms, in the style of sailors: likewise the account of longitudes and latitudes; wherein I have reason to apprehend that Mr. Gulliver may be a little dissatisfied: but I was resolved to fit the work as much as possible to the general capacity of readers. However, if my own ignorance in sea-affairs shall have led me to commit some mistakes, I alone am answerable for them: and if any traveler hath a curiosity to see the whole work at large, as it came from the hand of the author, I will be ready to gratify him.

As for any further particulars relating to the author, the reader will receive satisfaction from the first pages of the book.

RICHARD SYMPSON.

PART I

A VOYAGE TO LILLIPUT<sup>1</sup>

CHAPTER I

The Author gives some account of himself and family, his first inducements to travel. He is shipwrecked, and swims for his life, gets safe on shore in the country of Lilliput, is made a prisoner, and is carried up country.

My father had a small estate in Nottinghamshire; I was the third of five sons. He sent me to Emanuel College in Cambridge, at fourteen years old, where I resided three years, and applied myself close to my studies; but the charge of maintaining me (although I had a very scanty allowance) being too great for a narrow fortune, I was bound apprentice to Mr. James Bates, an eminent surgeon in London, with whom I continued four years; and my father now and then sending me small sums of money, I laid them out in learning navigation, and other parts of the mathematics, useful to those who intend to travel, as I always believed it would be some time or other my fortune to do. When I left Mr. Bates, I went down to my father; where, by the assistance of him and my uncle John, and some other relations, I got forty pounds, and a promise of thirty pounds a year to maintain me at Leyden: there I studied physic two years and seven months, knowing it would be useful in long voyages.

<sup>1</sup>Lilliput means "little fellow."

Soon after my return from Leyden, I was recommended by my good master, Mr. Bates, to be surgeon to the Swallow, Captain Abraham Pannell, commander; with whom I continued three years and a half, making a voyage or two into the Levant, and some other parts. When I came back I resolved to settle in London, to which Mr. Bates, my master, encouraged me, and by him I was recommended to several patients. I took part of a small house in the Old Jury; and being advised to alter my condition, I married Mrs. Mary Burton, second daughter to Mr. Edmund Burton, hosier, in Newgate-Street, with whom I received four hundred pounds for a portion.

But, my good master Bates dying in two years after, and I having few friends, my business began to fail; for my conscience would not suffer me to imitate the bad practice of too many among my brethren. Having therefore consulted with my wife, and some of my acquaintance, I determined to go again to sea. I was surgeon successively in two ships, and made several voyages, for six years, to the East and West Indies, by which I got some addition to my fortune. My hours of leisure I spent in reading the best authors, ancient and modern, being always provided with a good number of books; and when I was ashore, in observing the manners and dispositions of the people, as well as learning their language, wherein I had a great facility by the strength of my memory.

The last of these voyages not proving very fortunate, I grew weary of the sea, and intended to stay at home with my wife and family. I removed from the Old Jury to Fetter-Lane, and from thence to Wapping, hoping to get business among the sailors; but it would not turn to account. After three years' expectation that things would mend, I accepted an advantageous offer from Captain William Prichard, master of the Antelope, who was making a voyage to the South Sea. We set sail from Bristol, May 4, 1699, and our voyage at first was very prosperous.

It would not be proper, for some reasons, to trouble the reader with the particulars of our adventures in those seas; let it suffice to inform him, that in our passage from thence to the East Indies, we were driven by a violent storm to the north-west of Van Diemen's Land.<sup>1</sup> By an observation, we found ourselves in the latitude of 30 degrees 2 minutes south. Twelve of our crew were dead by immoderate labor, and ill food, the rest were in a very weak condition. On the fifth of November, which was the beginning of summer in those parts, the weather being very hazy, the seamen spied a rock, within half a cable's length of the ship; but the wind was so strong, that we were driven directly upon it, and immediately split. Six of the crew, of whom I was one, having let down the boat into the sea, made a shift to get clear of the ship, and the rock. We rowed, by my computation, about three leagues, till we were able to work no longer, being already spent with labor while we were in the ship. We therefore trusted ourselves to the mercy of the waves, and in about half an hour the boat was overset by a sudden flurry from the north. What became of my companions in the boat, as well as of those who escaped on the rock, or were left in the vessel, I cannot tell; but conclude they were all lost. For my own part, I swam as fortune directed me, and was pushed forward by wind and tide. I often let my legs drop, and could feel no bottom: but when I was almost gone, and able to struggle no longer, I found myself within my depth; and by this time the storm was much abated. The declivity was so small, that I walked near a mile before I got to the shore, which I conjectured was about eight o'clock in the evening. I then advanced forward near half a mile, but could not discover any sign of houses or inhabitants; at least I was in so weak a condition, that I did not observe them. I was extremely tired, and with that, and the heat of the weather, and about half a pint of brandy that I drank as I left the ship, I found myself much inclined to sleep. I lay down on the grass, which was very short and soft, where I slept sounder than ever I remember to have done in my life; and, as I reckoned, above nine hours; for when I awaked, it was just day-light. I attempted to rise, but was not able to stir: for as I happened to lie on my back, I found my arms and legs were strongly fastened on each side to the ground; and my hair, which was long and thick, tied down in the same manner. I likewise felt several slender ligatures across my body, from my arm-pits to my thighs. I could only look upwards, the sun began to grow hot, and the light offended my eyes. I heard a confused noise about me, but in the posture I lay, could see nothing except the sky. In a little time I felt something alive moving on my left leg, which advancing gently forward over my breast, came almost up to my chin; when bending my eyes downwards as much as I could, I perceived it to be a human creature not six inches high, with a bow and arrow in his hands, and a quiver at his back. In the mean time, I felt at least forty more of the same kind (as I conjectured) following the first. I was in the utmost astonishment, and roared so loud, that they all ran back in a fright; and some of them as I was afterwards told, were hurt with the falls they got by leaping from my sides upon the ground. However, they soon returned, and one of them, who ventured so far as to get a full sight of my face, lifting up his hands and eyes by way of admiration, cried out in a shrill, but distinct voice, Hekinah degul: the others repeated the same words several times, but then I knew not what they meant. I lay all this while, as the reader may believe, in great uneasiness: at length, struggling to get loose, I had the fortune to break the strings, and wrench out the pegs that fastened my left arm to the ground; for, by lifting it up to my face, I discovered the methods they had taken to bind me, and at the same time with a violent pull, which gave me excessive pain, I a little loosened the strings that tied down my hair on the left side, so that I was just able to turn my head about two inches. But the creatures ran off a second time, before I could seize them; whereupon there was a great shout in a very shrill accent, and after it ceased, I heard one of them cry aloud Tolgo phonac; when in an instant I felt above an hundred arrows discharged on my left hand, which pricked me like so many needles; and besides, they shot another flight into the air, as we do bombs in Europe, whereof many, I suppose, fell on my body (though I felt them not), and some on my face, which I immediately covered with my left hand. When this shower of arrows was over, I fell a groaning with grief and pain, and then striving again to get loose, they discharged another volley larger than the first, and some of them attempted with spears to stick me in the sides; but, by good luck, I had on a buff jerkin, which they could not pierce. I thought it the most prudent method to lie still, and my design was to continue so till night, when, my left hand being already loose, I could easily free myself: and as for the inhabitants, I had reason to believe I might be a match for the greatest armies they could bring against me, if they were all of the same size with him that I saw. But fortune disposed otherwise of me. When the people observed I was quiet, they discharged no more arrows; but, by the noise I heard, I knew their numbers increased; and about four yards from me, over-against my right ear, I heard a knocking for above an hour, like that of people at work; when turning my head that way, as well as the pegs and strings would permit me, I saw a stage erected, about a foot and a half from the ground, capable of holding four of the inhabitants, with two or three ladders to mount it: from whence one of them, who seemed to be a person of quality, made me a long speech, whereof I understood not one syllable. But I should have mentioned, that before the principal person began his oration, he cried out three times, Langro dehul san (these words and the former were afterwards repeated and explained to me). Whereupon immediately about fifty of the inhabitants came and cut the strings that fastened the left side of my head, which gave me the liberty of turning it to the right, and of observing the person and gesture of him that was to speak. He appeared to be of a middle age, and taller than any of the other three who attended him, whereof one was a page that held up his train, and seemed to be somewhat longer than my middle finger; the other two stood one on each side to support him. He acted every part of an orator, and I could observe many periods of threatenings, and others of promises, pity, and kindness. I answered in a few words, but in the most submissive manner, lifting up my left hand, and both my eyes to the sun, as calling him for a witness; and being almost famished with hunger, having not eaten a morsel for some hours before I left the ship, I found the demands of nature so strong upon me, that I could not forbear showing my impatience (perhaps against the strict rules of decency) by putting my finger frequently on my mouth to signify that I wanted food. The Hurgo (for so they call a great lord, as I afterwards learned) understood me very well. He descended from the stage, and commanded that several ladders should be applied to my sides, on which above an hundred of the inhabitants mounted and walked towards my mouth, laden with baskets full of meat, which had been provided and sent thither by the King's orders, upon the first intelligence he received of me. I observed there was the flesh of several animals, but could not distinguish them by the taste. There were shoulders, legs, and loins, shaped like those of mutton, and very well dressed, but smaller than the wings of a lark. I eat them by two or three at a mouthful, and took three loaves at a time, about the bigness of musket bullets. They supplied me as fast as they could, showing a thousand marks of wonder and astonishment at my bulk and appetite. I then made another sign that I wanted drink. They found by my eating, that a small quantity would not suffice me; and being a most ingenious people, they slung up with great dexterity one of their largest hogsheads, then rolled it towards my hand, and beat out the top; I drank it off at a draught, which I might well do, for it did not hold half a pint, and tasted like a small wine of Burgundy, but much more delicious. They brought me a second hogshead, which I drank in the same manner, and made signs for more, but they had none to give me. When I had performed these wonders, they shouted for joy, and danced upon my breast, repeating several times as they did at first, Hekinah degul. They made me a sign that I should throw down the two hogsheads, but first warning the people below to stand out of the way, crying aloud, Borach mivola, and when they saw the vessels in the air, there was an universal shout of Hekinah degul. I confess I was often tempted while they were passing backwards and forwards on my body, to seize forty or fifty of the first that came in my reach, and dash them against the ground. But the remembrance of what I had felt, which probably might not be the worst they could do, and the promise of honor I made them, for so I interpreted my submissive behavior, soon drove out these imaginations. Besides, I now considered myself as bound by the laws of hospitality to a people who had treated me with so much expense and magnificence. However, in my thoughts, I could not sufficiently wonder at the intrepidity of these diminutive mortals, who durst venture to mount and walk upon my body, while one of my hands was at liberty, without trembling at the very sight of so prodigious a creature as I must appear to them. After some time, when they observed that I made no more demands for meat, there appeared before me a person of high rank from his Imperial Majesty. His Excellency, having mounted on the small of my right leg, advanced forwards up to my face, with about a dozen of his retinue. And producing his credentials under the Signet Royal, which he applied close to my eyes, spoke about ten minutes, without any signs of anger, but with a kind of determinate resolution; often pointing forwards, which, as I afterwards found, was towards the capital city, about half a mile distant, whither it was agreed by his Majesty in council that I must be conveyed. I answered in few words, but to no purpose, and made a sign with my hand that was loose, putting it to the other (but over his Excellency's head for fear of hurting him or his train), and then to my own head and body, to signify that I desired my liberty. It appeared that he understood me well enough, for he shook his head by way of disapprobation, and held his hand in a posture to show that I must be carried as a prisoner. However, he made other signs to let me understand that I should have meat and drink enough, and very good treatment. Whereupon I once more thought of attempting to break my bonds; but again, when I felt the smart of their arrows, upon my face and hands, which were all in blisters, and many of the darts still sticking in them, and observing likewise that the number of my enemies increased, I gave tokens to let them know that they might do with me what they pleased. Upon this, the Hurgo and his train withdrew, with much civility and cheerful countenances. Soon after I heard a general shout, with frequent repetitions of the words, Peplom selan, and I felt great numbers of people on my left side relaxing the cords to such a degree, that I was able to turn upon my right, and to ease myself with making water; which I very plentifully did, to the great astonishment of the people, who conjecturing by my motions what I was going to do, immediately opened to the right and left on that side to avoid the torrent which fell with such noise and violence from me. But before this, they had daubed my face and both my hands with a sort of ointment very pleasant to the smell, which in a few minutes removed all the smart of their arrows. These circumstances, added to the refreshment I had received by their victuals and drink, which were very nourishing, disposed me to sleep. I slept about eight hours, as I was afterwards assured; and it was no wonder, for the physicians, by the Emperor's order, had mingled a sleepy potion in the hogshead of wine.

<sup>1</sup>Perhaps Tasmania is meant, or a part of New Zealand. The latitude mentioned in the next sentence would indicate that Swift meant Australia, were it not for the fact that western Australia was very vaguely known in the early eighteenth century.

It seems that upon the first moment I was discovered sleeping on the ground after my landing, the Emperor had early notice of it by an express; and determined in council that I should be tied in the manner I have related (which was done in the night while I slept), that plenty of meat and drink should be sent to me, and a machine prepared to carry me to the capital city.

This resolution perhaps may appear very bold and dangerous, and I am confident would not be imitated by any prince in Europe on the like occasion; however, in my opinion, it was extremely prudent, as well as generous: for supposing these people had endeavored to kill me with their spears and arrows while I was asleep, I should certainly have awaked with the first sense of smart, which might so far have roused my rage and strength, as to have enabled me to break the strings wherewith I was tied; after which, as they were not able to make resistance, so they could expect no mercy.

These people are most excellent mathematicians, and arrived to a great perfection in mechanics, by the countenance and encouragement of the Emperor, who is a renowned patron of learning. This prince hath several machines fixed on wheels, for the carriage of trees and other great weights. He often builds his largest men of war, whereof some are nine foot long, in the woods where the timber grows, and has them carried on these engines three or four hundred yards to the sea. Five hundred carpenters and engineers were immediately set at work to prepare the greatest engine they had. It was a frame of wood raised three inches from the ground, about seven foot long and four wide, moving upon twenty-two wheels. The shout I heard was upon the arrival of this engine, which it seems set out in four hours after my landing. It was brought parallel to me as I lay. But the principal difficulty was to raise and place me in this vehicle. Eighty poles, each of one foot high, were erected for this purpose, and very strong cords of the bigness of packthread were fastened by hooks to many bandages, which the workmen had girt round my neck, my hands, my body, and my legs. Nine hundred of the strongest men were employed to draw up these cords by many pulleys fastened on the poles, and thus, in less than three hours, I was raised and slung into the engine, and there tied fast. All this I was told, for, while the whole operation was performing, I lay in a profound sleep, by the force of that soporiferous medicine infused into my liquor. Fifteen hundred of the Emperor's largest horses, each about four inches and a half high, were employed to draw me towards the metropolis, which, as I said, was half a mile distant.

About four hours after we began our journey, I awaked by a very ridiculous accident; for the carriage being stopped a while to adjust something that was out of order, two or three of the young natives had the curiosity to see how I looked when I was asleep; they climbed up into the engine, and advancing very softly to my face, one of them, an officer in the guards, put the sharp end of his half-pike a good way up into my left nostril, which tickled my nose like a straw, and made me sneeze violently: whereupon they stole off unperceived, and it was three weeks before I knew the cause of my awakening so suddenly. We made a long march the remaining part of that day, and rested at night with five hundred guards on each side of me, half with torches, and half with bows and arrows, ready to shoot me if I should offer to stir. The next morning at sun-rise we continued our march, and arrived within two hundred yards of the city gates about noon. The Emperor, and all his court, came out to meet us; but his great officers would by no means suffer his Majesty to endanger his person by mounting on my body.

At the place where the carriage stopped, there stood an ancient temple, esteemed to be the largest in the whole kingdom; which having been polluted some years before by an unnatural murder, was, according to the zeal of those people, looked upon as profane, and therefore had been applied to common uses, and all the ornaments and furniture carried away. In this edifice it was determined I should lodge. The great gate fronting to the north was about four foot high, and almost two foot wide, through which I could easily creep. On each side of the gate was a small window not above six inches from the ground: into that on the left side, the King's smiths conveyed fourscore and eleven chains, like those that hang to a lady's watch in Europe, and almost as large, which were locked to my left leg with six and thirty padlocks. Over-against this temple, on t'other side of the great highway, at twenty foot distance, there was a turret at least five foot high. Here the Emperor ascended, with many principal lords of his court, to have an opportunity of viewing me, as I was told, for I could not see them. It was reckoned that above an hundred thousand inhabitants came out of the town upon the same errand; and, in spite of my guards, I believe there could not be fewer than ten thousand at several times, who mounted my body by the help of ladders. But a proclamation was soon issued to forbid it upon pain of death. When the workmen found it was impossible for me to break loose, they cut all the strings that bound me; where-upon I rose up, with as melancholy a disposition as ever I had in my life. But the noise and astonishment of the people at seeing me rise and walk, are not to be expressed. The chains that held my left leg were about two yards long, and gave me not only the liberty of walking backwards and forwards in a semicircle; but, being fixed within four inches of the gate, allowed me to creep in, and lie at my full length in the temple.

CHAPTER II

The Emperor of Lilliput, attended by several of the nobility, comes to see the Author in his confinement. The Emperor's person and habit described. Learned men appointed to teach the Author their language. He gains favor by his mild disposition. His pockets are searched, and his sword and pistols taken from him.

WHEN I found myself on my feet, I looked about me, and must confess I never beheld a more entertaining prospect. The country round appeared like a continued garden, and the inclosed fields, which were generally forty foot square, resembled so many beds of flowers. These fields were intermingled with woods of half a stang,<sup>1</sup> and the tallest trees, as I could judge, appeared to be seven foot high. I viewed the town on my left hand, which looked like the painted scene of a city in a theater.

I had been for some hours extremely pressed by the necessities of nature; which was no wonder, it being almost two days since I had last disburdened myself. I was under great difficulties between urgency and shame. The best expedient I could think on, was to creep into my house, which I accordingly did; and shutting the gate after me, I went as far as the length of my chain would suffer, and discharged my body of that uneasy load. But this was the only time I was ever guilty of so uncleanly an action; for which I cannot but hope the candid reader will give some allowance, after he hath maturely and impartially considered my case, and the distress I was in. From this time my constant practice was, as soon as I rose, to perform that business in open air, at the full extent of my chain, and due care was taken every morning before company came, that the offensive matter should be carried off in wheel-barrows, by two servants appointed for that purpose. I would not have dwelt so long upon a circumstance, that perhaps at first sight may appear not very momentous, if I had not thought it necessary to justify my character in point of cleanliness to the world; which I am told some of my maligners have been pleased, upon this and other occasions, to call in question.

<sup>1</sup> I. e., half a square rod.

When this adventure was at an end, I came back out of my house, having occasion for fresh air. The Emperor was already descended from the tower, and advancing on horseback towards me, which had like to have cost him dear; for the beast, though very well trained, yet wholly unused to such a sight, which appeared as if a mountain moved before him, reared up on his hinder feet: but that prince, who is an excellent horseman, kept his seat, till his attendants ran in, and held the bridle, while his Majesty had time to dismount. When he alighted, he surveyed me round with great admiration, but kept beyond the length of my chain. He ordered his cooks and butlers, who were already prepared, to give me victuals and drink, which they pushed forward in a sort of vehicles upon wheels, till I could reach them. I took these vehicles, and soon emptied them all; twenty of them were filled with meat, and ten with liquor; each of the former afforded me two or three good mouthfuls, and I emptied the liquor of ten vessels, which was contained in earthen vials, into one vehicle, drinking it off at a draught; and so I did with the rest. The Empress, and young Princes of the blood of both sexes, attended by many ladies, sat at some distance in their chairs; but upon the accident that happened to the Emperor's horse, they alighted, and came near his person, which I am now going to describe. He is taller by almost the breadth of my nail, than any of his court; which alone is enough to strike an awe into the beholders. His features are strong and masculine, with an Austrian lip and arched nose, his complexion olive, his countenance erect, his body and limbs well proportioned, all his motions graceful, and his deportment majestic. He was then past his prime, being twenty-eight years and three-quarters old, of which he had reigned about seven, in great felicity, and generally victorious. For the better convenience of beholding him, I lay on my side, so that my face was parallel to his, and he stood but three yards off: however, I have had him since many times in my hand, and therefore cannot be deceived in the description. His dress was very plain and simple, and the fashion of it between the Asiatic and the European: but he had on his head a light helmet of gold, adorned with jewels, and a plume on the crest. He held his sword drawn in his hand, to defend himself, if I should happen to break loose; it was almost three inches long, the hilt and scabbard were gold enriched with diamonds. His voice was shrill, but very clear and articulate, and I could distinctly hear it when I stood up. The ladies and courtiers were all most magnificently clad, so that the spot they stood upon seemed to resemble a petticoat spread on the ground, embroidered with figures of gold and silver. His Imperial Majesty spoke often to me, and I returned answers, but neither of us could understand a syllable. There were several of his priests and lawyers present (as I conjectured by their habits) who were commanded to address themselves to me, and I spoke to them in as many languages as I had the least smattering of, which were High and Low Dutch, Latin, French, Spanish, Italian, and Lingua Franca;<sup>1</sup> but all to no purpose. After about two hours the court retired, and I was left with a strong guard, to prevent the impertinence, and probably the malice of the rabble, who were very impatient to crowd about me as near as they durst, and some of them had the impudence to shoot their arrows at me as I sat on the ground by the door of my house, whereof one very narrowly missed my left eye. But the colonel ordered six of the ringleaders to be seized, and thought no punishment so proper as to deliver them bound into my hands, which some of his soldiers accordingly did, pushing them forwards with the butt-ends of their pikes into my reach; I took them all in my right hand, put five of them into my coat-pocket, and as to the sixth, I made a countenance as if I would eat him alive. The poor man squalled terribly, and the colonel and his officers were in much pain, especially when they saw me take out my pen-knife: but I soon put them out of fear: for, looking mildly, and immediately cutting the strings he was bound with, I set him gently on the ground, and away he ran. I treated the rest in the same manner, taking them one by one out of my pocket, and I observed both the soldiers and people were highly obliged at this mark of my clemency, which was represented very much to my advantage at court.

<sup>1</sup>The mixed language used in communication between European travelers and the Greeks and others at the eastern end of the Mediterranean.

Towards night I got with some difficulty into my house, where I lay on the ground, and continued to do so about a fortnight; during which time the Emperor gave orders to have a bed prepared for me. Six hundred beds of the common measure were brought in carriages, and worked up in my house; an hundred and fifty of their beds sewn together made up the breadth and length, and these were four double, which however kept me but very indifferently from the hardness of the floor, that was of smooth stone. By the same computation they provided me with sheets, blankets, and coverlets, tolerable enough for one who had been so long inured to hardships as I.

As the news of my arrival spread through the kingdom, it brought prodigious numbers of rich, idle, and curious people to see me; so that the villages were almost emptied, and great neglect of tillage and household affairs must have ensued, if his Imperial Majesty had not provided, by several proclamations and orders of state, against this inconvenience. He directed that those who had already beheld me should return home, and not presume to come within fifty yards of my house without license from court; whereby the secretaries of state got considerable fees.

In the mean time, the Emperor held frequent councils to debate what course should be taken with me; and I was afterwards assured by a particular friend, a person of great quality, who was looked upon to be as much in the secret as any, that the court was under many difficulties concerning me. They apprehended my breaking loose, that my diet would be very expensive, and might cause a famine. Sometimes they determined to starve me, or at least to shoot me in the face and hands with poisoned arrows, which would soon dispatch me; but again they considered, that the stench of so large a carcass might produce a plague in the metropolis, and probably spread through the whole kingdom. In the midst of these consultations, several officers of the army went to the door of the great council-chamber; and two of them being admitted, gave an account of my behavior to the six criminals above-mentioned, which made so favorable an impression in the breast of his Majesty and the whole board, in my behalf, that an Imperial Commission was issued out, obliging all the villages nine hundred yards round the city, to deliver in every morning six beeves, forty sheep, and other victuals for my sustenance; together with a proportionable quantity of bread, and wine, and other liquors; for the due payment of which his Majesty gave assignments upon his treasury. For this prince lives chiefly upon his own demesnes, seldom, except upon great occasions, raising any subsidies upon his subjects, who are bound to attend him in his wars at their own expense. An establishment was also made of six hundred persons to be my domestics, who had board-wages allowed for their maintenance, and tents built for them very conveniently on each side of my door. It was likewise ordered, that three hundred tailors should make me a suit of clothes after the fashion of the country: that six of his Majesty's greatest scholars should be employed to instruct me in their language; and, lastly, that the Emperor's horses, and those of the nobility, and troops of guards, should be frequently exercised in my sight, to accustom themselves to me. All these orders were duly put in execution, and in about three weeks I made a great progress in learning their language; during which time, the Emperor frequently honored me with his visits, and was pleased to assist my masters in teaching me. We began already to converse together in some sort; and the first words I learned were to express my desire that he would please give me my liberty, which I every day repeated on my knees. His answer, as I could comprehend it, was, that this must be a work of time, not to be thought on without the advice of his council, and that first I must Lumos kelmin pesso desmar lon Emposo; that is, swear a peace with him and his kingdom. However, that I should be used with all kindness; and he advised me to acquire, by my patience and discreet behavior, the good opinion of himself and his subjects. He desired I would not take it ill, if he gave orders to certain proper officers to search me; for probably I might carry about me several weapons, which must needs be dangerous things, if they answered the bulk of so prodigious a person. I said, his Majesty should be satisfied, for I was ready to strip myself, and turn up my pockets before him. This I delivered part in words, and part in signs. He replied, that by the laws of the kingdom I must be searched by two of his officers; that he knew this could not be done without my consent and assistance; that he had so good an opinion of my generosity and justice, as to trust their persons in my hands: that whatever they took from me should be returned when I left the country, or paid for at the rate which I would set upon them. I took up the two officers in my hands, put them first into my coat-pockets, and then into every other pocket about me, except my two fobs, and another secret pocket which I had no mind should be searched, wherein I had some little necessities that were of no consequence to any but myself. In one of my fobs there was a silver watch, and in the other a small quantity of gold in a purse. These gentlemen, having pen, ink, and paper about them, made an exact inventory of every thing they saw; and when they had done, desired I would set them down, that they might deliver it to the Emperor. This inventory I afterwards translated into English, and is word for word as follows:

Imprimis, In the right coat-pocket of the Great Man-Mountain (for so I interpret the words Quinbus Flestrin) after the strictest search, we found only one great piece of coarse cloth, large enough to be a foot-cloth for your Majesty's chief room of state. In the left pocket we saw a huge silver chest, with a cover of the same metal, which we, the searchers, were not able to lift. We desired it should be opened, and one of us stepping into it, found himself up to the mid leg in a sort of dust, some part whereof flying up to our faces, set us both a sneezing for several times together. In his right waistcoat-pocket we found a prodigious bundle of white thin substances, folded one over another, about the bigness of three men, tied with a strong cable, and marked with black figures; which we humbly conceive to be writings, every letter almost half as large as the palm of our hands. In the left there was a sort of engine, from the back of which were extended twenty long poles, resembling the palisadoes before your Majesty's court; wherewith we conjecture the Man-Mountain combs his head; for we did not always trouble him with questions, because we found it a great difficulty to make him understand us. In the large pocket on the right side of his middle cover (so I translate the word ranfu-lo, by which they meant my breeches) we saw a hollow pillar of iron, about the length of a man, fastened to a strong piece of timber, larger than the pillar; and upon one side of the pillar were huge pieces of iron sticking out, cut into strange figures, which we know not what to make of. In the left pocket, another engine of the same kind. In the smaller pocket on the right side, were several round flat pieces of white and red metal, of different bulk; some of the white, which seemed to be silver, were so large and heavy, that my comrade and I could hardly lift them. In the left pocket were two black pillars irregularly shaped: we could not, without difficulty, reach the top of them as we stood at the bottom of his pocket. One of them was covered, and seemed all of a piece; but at the upper end of the other, there appeared a white round substance, about twice the bigness of our heads. Within each of these was enclosed a prodigious plate of steel; which, by our orders, we obliged him to show us, because we apprehended they might be dangerous engines. He took them out of their cases, and told us, that in his own country his practice was to shave his beard with one of these, and cut his meat with the other. There were two pockets which we could not enter: these he called his fobs; they were two large slits cut into the top of his middle cover, but squeezed close by the pressure of his belly. Out of the right fob hung a great silver chain, with a wonderful kind of engine at the bottom. We directed him to draw out whatever was fastened to that chain; which appeared to be a globe, half silver, and half of some transparent metal; for, on the transparent side, we saw certain strange figures circularly drawn, and thought we could touch them, till we found our fingers stopped by that lucid substance. He put this engine to our ears, which made an incessant noise like that of a water-mill. And we conjecture it is either some unknown animal, or the god that he worships; but we are more inclined to the latter opinion, because he assured us (if we understood him right, for he expressed himself very imperfectly), that he seldom did anything without consulting it. He called it his oracle, and said it pointed out the time for every action of his life. From the left fob he took out a net almost large enough for a fisherman, but contrived to open and shut like a purse, and served him for the same use: we found therein several massy pieces of yellow metal, which, if they be real gold, must be of immense value.

Having thus, in obedience to your Majesty's commands, diligently searched all his pockets, we observed a girdle about his waist made of the hide of some prodigious animal; from which, on the left side, hung a sword of the length of five men; and on the right, a bag or pouch divided into two cells, each cell capable of holding three of your Majesty's subjects. In one of these cells were several globes or balls of a most ponderous metal, about the bigness of our heads, and requiring a strong hand to lift them: the other cell contained a heap of certain black grains, but of no great bulk or weight, for we could hold above fifty of them in the palms of our hands.

This is an exact inventory of what we found about the body of the Man-Mountain, who used us with great civility, and due respect to your Majesty's Commission. Signed and sealed on the fourth day of the eighty-ninth moon of your Majesty's auspicious reign.

CLEFRIN FRELOCK, MARSI FRELOCK.

When this inventory was read over to the Emperor, he directed me, although in very gentle terms, to deliver up the several particulars. He first called for my scimitar, which I took out, scabbard and all. In the mean time he ordered three thousand of his choicest troops (who then attended him) to surround me at a distance, with their bows and arrows just ready to discharge: but I did not observe it, for my eyes were wholly fixed upon his Majesty. He then desired me to draw my scimitar, which, although it had got some rust by the sea-water, was in most parts exceeding bright. I did so, and immediately all the troops gave a shout between terror and surprise; for the sun shone clear, and the reflection dazzled their eyes, as I waved the scimitar to and fro in my hand. His Majesty, who is a most magnanimous prince, was less daunted than I could expect; he ordered me to return it into the scabbard, and cast it on the ground as gently as I could, about six foot from the end of my chain. The next thing he demanded, was one of the hollow iron pillars, by which he meant my pocket-pistols. I drew it out, and at his desire, as well as I could, expressed to him the use of it; and charging it only with powder, which, by the closeness of my pouch, happened to escape wetting in the sea (an inconvenience against which all prudent mariners take special care to provide), I first cautioned the Emperor not to be afraid, and then I let it off in the air. The astonishment here was much greater than at the sight of my scimitar. Hundreds fell down as if they had been struck dead; and even the Emperor, although he stood his ground, could not recover himself in some time. I delivered up both my pistols in the same manner as I had done my scimitar, and then my pouch of powder and bullets; begging him that the former might be kept from fire, for it would kindle with the smallest spark, and blow up his imperial palace into the air. I likewise delivered up my watch, which the Emperor was very curious to see, and commanded two of his tallest yeomen of the guards to bear it on a pole upon their shoulders, as draymen in England do a barrel of ale. He was amazed at the continual noise it made, and the motion of the minute-hand, which he could easily discern; for their sight is much more acute than ours: and asked the opinions of his learned men about him, which were various and remote,<sup>1</sup> as the reader may well imagine without my repeating; although indeed I could not very perfectly understand them. I then gave up my silver and copper money, my purse, with nine large pieces of gold, and some smaller ones; my knife and razor, my comb and silver snuff-box, my handkerchief and journal-book. My scimitar, pistols, and pouch, were conveyed in carriages to his Majesty's stores; but the rest of my goods were returned to me.

<sup>1</sup>Recondite.

I had, as I before observed, one private pocket which escaped their search, wherein there was a pair of spectacles (which I sometimes use for the weakness of my eyes), a pocket perspective, and several other little conveniences; which being of no consequence to the Emperor, I did not think myself bound in honor to discover, and I apprehended they might be lost or spoiled if I ventured them out of my possession.

CHAPTER III

The Author diverts the Emperor, and his nobility of both sexes, in a very uncommon manner. The diversions of the court of Lilliput described. The Author has his liberty granted him upon certain conditions.

MY GENTLENESS and good behavior had gained so far on the Emperor and his court, and indeed upon the army and people in general, that I began to conceive hopes of getting my liberty in a short time. I took all possible methods to cultivate this favorable disposition. The natives came by degrees to be less apprehensive of any danger from me. I would sometimes lie down, and let five or six of them dance on my hand. And at last the boys and girls would venture to come and play at hide and seek in my hair. I had now made a good progress in understanding and speaking their language. The Emperor had a mind one day to entertain me with several of the country shows, wherein they exceed all nations I have known, both for dexterity and magnificence. I was diverted with none so much as that of the rope-dancers, performed upon a slender white thread, extended about two foot, and twelve inches from the ground. Upon which I shall desire liberty, with the reader's patience, to enlarge a little.

This diversion is only practised by those persons who are candidates for great employments, and high favor, at court.<sup>1</sup> They are trained in this art from their youth, and are not always of noble birth, or liberal education. When a great office is vacant, either by death or disgrace (which often happens), five or six of those candidates petition the Emperor to entertain his Majesty and the court with a dance on the rope, and whoever jumps the highest without falling succeeds in the office. Very often the chief ministers themselves are commanded to show their skill, and to convince the Emperor that they have not lost their faculty. Flimnap,<sup>2</sup> the Treasurer, is allowed to cut a caper on the straight rope, at least an inch higher than any other lord in the whole empire. I have seen him do the summerset several times together upon a trencher fixed on the rope, which is no thicker than a common packthread in England. My friend Reldresal, principal Secretary for Private Affairs, is, in my opinion, if I am not partial, the second after the Treasurer; the rest of the great officers are much upon a par.

These diversions are often attended with fatal accidents, whereof great numbers are on record. I myself have seen two or three candidates break a limb. But the danger is much greater when the ministers themselves are commanded to show their dexterity; for, by contending to excel themselves and their fellows, they strain so far, that there is hardly one of them who hath not received a fall, and some of them two or three. I was assured that a year or two before my arrival, Flimnap would have infallibly broke his neck, if one of the King's cushions, that accidentally lay on the ground, had not weakened the force of his fall.

There is likewise another diversion, which is only shown before the Emperor and Empress, and first minister, upon particular occasions. The Emperor lays on the table three fine silken threads of six inches long.<sup>3</sup> One is blue, the other red, and the third green. These threads are proposed as prizes for those persons whom the Emperor hath a mind to distinguish by a peculiar mark of his favor. The ceremony is performed in his Majesty's great chamber of state, where the candidates are to undergo a trial of dexterity very different from the former, and such as I have not observed the least resemblance of in any other country of the old or the new world. The Emperor holds a stick in his hands, both ends parallel to the horizon, while the candidates advancing one by one, sometimes leap over the stick, sometimes creep under it backwards and forwards several times, according as the stick is advanced or depressed. Sometimes the Emperor holds one end of the stick, and his first minister the other; sometimes the minister has it entirely to himself. Whoever performs his part with most agility, and holds out the longest in leaping and creeping, is rewarded with the blue-colored silk; the red is given to the next, and the green to the third, which they all wear girt twice round about the middle; and you see few great persons about this court, who are not adorned with one of these girdles.

<sup>1</sup>Sir Robert Walpole, a Whig. One should remember, however, that the analogies with English affairs cannot be pushed too far.

<sup>2</sup>The ribbons of the Garter, the Thistle, and the Bath.

<sup>3</sup>Swift, of course, has the English court in mind.

The horses of the army, and those of the royal stables, having been daily led before me, were no longer shy, but would come up to my very feet without starting. The riders would leap them over my hand as I held it on the ground, and one of the Emperor's huntsmen, upon a large courser, took my foot, shoe and all; which was indeed a prodigious leap. I had the good fortune to divert the Emperor one day after a very extraordinary manner. I desired he would order several sticks of two foot high, and the thickness of an ordinary cane, to be brought me; whereupon his Majesty commanded the master of his woods to give directions accordingly; and the next morning six woodmen arrived with as many carriages, drawn by eight horses to each. I took nine of these sticks, fixing them firmly in the ground in a quadrangular figure, two foot and a half square. I took four other sticks, and tied them parallel at each corner, about two foot from the ground; then I fastened my handkerchief to the nine sticks that stood erect, and extended it on all sides, till it was tight as the top of a drum; and the four parallel sticks rising about five inches higher than the handkerchief, served as ledges on each side. When I had finished my work, I desired the Emperor to let a troop of his best horse, twenty-four in number, come and exercise upon this plain. His Majesty approved of the proposal, and I took them up, one by one, in my hands, ready mounted and armed, with the proper officers to exercise them. As soon as they got into order, they divided into two parties, performed mock skirmishes, discharged blunt arrows, drew their swords, fled and pursued, attacked and retired, and in short discovered the best military discipline I ever beheld. The parallel sticks secured them and their horses from falling over the stage; and the Emperor was so much delighted that he ordered this entertainment to be repeated several days, and once was pleased to be lifted up and give the word of command; and, with great difficulty, persuaded even the Empress herself to let me hold her in her close chair within two yards of the stage, from whence she was able to take a full view of the whole performance. It was my good fortune that no ill accident happened in these entertainments, only once a fiery horse, that belonged to one of the captains, pawing with his hoof, struck a hole in my handkerchief, and his foot slipping, he overthrew his rider and himself; but I immediately relieved them both, and covering the hole with one hand, I set down the troop with the other, in the same manner as I took them up. The horse that fell was strained in the left shoulder, but the rider got no hurt, and I repaired my handkerchief as well as I could: however, I would not trust to the strength of it any more in such dangerous enterprises.

About two or three days before I was set at liberty, as I was entertaining the court with these kind of feats, there arrived an express to inform his Majesty, that some of his subjects riding near the place where I was first taken up, had seen a great black substance lying on the ground, very oddly shaped, extending its edges round as wide as his Majesty's bedchamber, and rising up in the middle as high as a man; that it was no living creature, as they at first apprehended, for it lay on the grass without motion, and some of them had walked round it several times: that by mounting upon each other's shoulders, they had got to the top, which was flat and even, and stamping upon it they found it was hollow within; that they humbly conceived it might be something belonging to the Man-Mountain; and if his Majesty pleased, they would undertake to bring it with only five horses. I presently knew what they meant, and was glad at heart to receive this intelligence. It seems upon my first reaching the shore after our ship-wreck, I was in such confusion, that before I came to the place where I went to sleep, my hat, which I had fastened with a string to my head while I was rowing, and had stuck on all the time I was swimming, fell off after I came to land; the string, as I conjecture, breaking by some accident which I never observed, but thought my hat had been lost at sea. I entreated his Imperial Majesty to give orders it might be brought to me as soon as possible, describing to him the use and the nature of it: and the next day the wagons arrived with it, but not in a very good condition; they had bored two holes in the brim, within an inch and half of the edge, and fastened two hooks in the holes; these hooks were tied by a long cord to the harness, and thus my hat was dragged along for above half an English mile; but the ground in that country being extremely smooth and level, it received less damage than I expected.

Two days after this adventure, the Emperor having ordered that part of his army which quarters in and about his metropolis to be in readiness, took a fancy of diverting himself in a very singular manner. He desired I would stand like a Colossus, with my legs as far asunder as I conveniently could. He then commanded his General (who was an old experienced leader, and a great patron of mine) to draw up the troops in close order, and march them under me; the foot by twenty-four in a breast, and the horse by sixteen, with drums beating, colors flying, and pikes advanced. This body consisted of three thousand foot, and a thousand horse. His Majesty gave orders, upon pain of death, that every soldier in his march should observe the strictest decency with regard to my person; which, however, could not prevent some of the younger officers from turning up their eyes as they passed under me. And, to confess the truth, my breeches were at that time in so ill a condition, that they afforded some opportunities for laughter and admiration.

I had sent so many memorials and petitions for my liberty, that his Majesty at length mentioned the matter, first in the cabinet, and then in a full council; where it was opposed by none, except Skyresh Bolgolam, who was pleased, without any provocation, to be my mortal enemy. But it was carried against him by the whole board, and confirmed by the Emperor. That minister was Galbet, or Admiral of the Realm, very much in his master's confidence, and a person well versed in affairs, but of a morose and sour complexion. However, he was at length persuaded to comply; but prevailed that the articles and conditions upon which I should be set free, and to which I must swear, should be drawn up by himself. These articles were brought to me by Skyresh Bolgolam in person, attended by two under-secretaries, and several persons of distinction. After they were read, I was demanded to swear to the performance of them; first in the manner of my own country, and afterwards in the method prescribed by their laws; which was to hold my right foot in my left hand, to place the middle finger of my right hand on the crown of my head, and my thumb on the tip of my right ear. But because the reader may be curious to have some idea of the style and manner of expression peculiar to that people, as well as to know the articles upon which I recovered my liberty, I have made a translation of the whole instrument word for word, as near as I was able, which I here offer to the public.

GOLBASTO MOMAREM EVLAME GURDILLO SHEFIN MULLY ULLY GUE, most mighty Emperor of Lilliput, delight and terror of the universe, whose dominions extend five thousand blustrugs (about twelve miles in circumference) to the extremities of the globe; monarch of all monarchs, taller than the sons of men; whose feet press down to the center, and whose head strikes against the sun; at whose nod the princes of the earth shake their knees; pleasant as the spring, comfortable as the summer, fruitful as autumn, dreadful as winter. His most sublime Majesty proposeth to the Man-Mountain, lately arrived to our celestial dominions, the following articles, which by a solemn oath he shall be obliged to perform.

First, The Man-Mountain shall not depart from our dominions, without our license under our great seal.

2d, He shall not presume to come into our metropolis, without our express order; at which time, the inhabitants shall have two hours' warning to keep within their doors.

3rd, The said Man-Mountain shall confine his walks to our principal high-roads, and not offer to walk or lie down in a meadow or field of corn.

4th, As he walks the said roads, he shall take the utmost care not to trample upon the bodies of any of our loving subjects, their horses, or carriages, nor take any of our subjects into his hands, without their own consent.

5th, If an express requires extraordinary dispatch, the Man-Mountain shall be obliged to carry in his pocket the messenger and horse a six days' journey once in every moon, and return the said messenger back (if so required) safe to our Imperial Presence.

6th, He shall be our ally against our enemies in the Island of Blefuscu,<sup>1</sup> and do his utmost to destroy their fleet, which is now preparing to invade us.

7th, That the said Man-Mountain shall, at his times of leisure, be aiding and assisting our workmen, in helping to raise certain great stones, towards covering the wall of the principal park, and other our royal buildings.

8th, That the said Man-Mountain shall, in two moons' time, deliver in an exact survey of the circumference of our dominions by a computation of his own paces round the coast.

Lastly, That upon his solemn oath to observe all the above articles, the said Man-Mountain shall have a daily allowance of meat and drink sufficient for the support of 1728 of our subjects, with free access to our Royal Person, and other marks of our favor. Given at our Palace at Belfaborac the twelfth day of the ninety-first moon of our reign.

I swore and subscribed to these articles with great cheerfulness and content, although some of them were not so honorable as I could have wished; which proceeded wholly from the malice of Skyresh Bolgolam, the High-Admiral: whereupon my chains were immediately unlocked, and I was at full liberty; the Emperor himself in person did me the honor to be by at the whole ceremony. I made my acknowledgments by prostrating myself at his Majesty's feet: but he commanded me to rise; and after many gracious expressions, which, to avoid the censure of vanity, I shall not repeat, he added, that he hoped I should prove a useful servant, and well deserve all the favors he had already conferred upon me, or might do for the future.

<sup>1</sup>This country probably represents France under Louis XIV.

The reader may please to observe, that in the last article for the recovery of my liberty, the Emperor stipulates to allow me a quantity of meat and drink sufficient for the support of 1728 Lilliputians. Some time after, asking a friend at court how they came to fix on that determinate number; he told me that his Majesty's mathematicians, having taken the height of my body by the help of a quadrant, and finding it to exceed theirs in the proportion of twelve to one, they concluded from the similarity of their bodies, that mine must contain at least 1728 of theirs, and consequently would require as much food as was necessary to support that number of Lilliputians. By which, the reader may conceive an idea of the ingenuity of that people, as well as the prudent and exact economy of so great a prince.

CHAPTER IV

Mildendo, the metropolis of Lilliput, described, together with the Emperor's palace. A conversation between the Author and a principal Secretary, concerning the affairs of that empire. The Author's offer to serve the Emperor in his wars.

THE first request I made after I had obtained my liberty, was, that I might have license to see Mildendo, the metropolis; which the Emperor easily granted me, but with a special charge to do no hurt either to the inhabitants or their houses. The people had notice by proclamation of my design to visit the town. The wall which encompassed it, is two foot and an half high, and at least eleven inches broad, so that a coach and horses may be driven very safely round it; and it is flanked with strong towers at ten foot distance. I stepped over the great Western Gate, and passed very gently, and sideling through the two principal streets, only in my short waistcoat, for fear of damaging the roofs and eaves of the houses with the skirts of my coat. I walked with the utmost circumspection, to avoid treading on any stragglers, that might remain in the streets, although the orders were very strict, that all people should keep in their houses, at their own peril. The garret windows and tops of houses were so crowded with spectators, that I thought in all my travels I had not seen a more populous place. The city is an exact square, each side of the wall being five hundred foot long. The two great streets, which run cross and divide it into four quarters, are five foot wide. The lanes and alleys, which I could not enter, but only viewed them as I passed, are from twelve to eighteen inches. The town is capable of holding five hundred thousand souls. The houses are from three to five stories. The shops and markets well provided.

The Emperor's palace is in the centre of the city, where the two great streets meet. It is enclosed by a wall of two foot high, and twenty foot distant from the buildings. I had his Majesty's permission to step over this wall; and the space being so wide between that and the palace, I could easily view it on every side. The outward court is a square of forty foot, and includes two other courts: in the inmost are the royal apartments, which I was very desirous to see, but found it extremely difficult; for the great gates, from one square into another, were but eighteen inches high, and seven inches wide. Now the buildings of the outer court were at least five foot high, and it was impossible for me to stride over them without infinite damage to the pile, though the walls were strongly built of hewn stone, and four inches thick. At the same time the Emperor had a great desire that I should see the magnificence of his palace; but this I was not able to do till three days after, which I spent in cutting down with my knife some of the largest trees in the royal park, about an hundred yards distant from the city. Of these trees I made two stools, each about three foot high, and strong enough to bear my weight. The people having received notice a second time, I went again through the city to the palace, with my two stools in my hands. When I came to the side of the outer court, I stood upon one stool, and took the other in my hand: this I lifted over the roof, and gently set it down on the space between the first and second court, which was eight foot wide. I then stepped over the buildings very conveniently from one stool to the other, and drew up the first after me with a hooked stick. By this contrivance I got into the inmost court; and lying down upon my side, I applied my face to the windows of the middle stories, which were left open on purpose, and discovered the most splendid apartments that can be imagined. There I saw the Empress and the young Princes, in their several lodgings, with their chief attendants about them. Her Imperial Majesty<sup>1</sup> was pleased to smile very graciously upon me, and gave me out of the window her hand to kiss.

But I shall not anticipate the reader with farther descriptions of this kind, because I reserve them for a greater work, which is now almost ready for the press, containing a general description of this empire, from its first erection, through a long series of Princes, with a particular account of their wars and politics, laws, learning, and religion: their plants and animals, their peculiar manners and customs, with other matters very curious and useful; my chief design at present being only to relate such events and transactions as happened to the public, or to myself, during a residence of about nine months in that empire.

One morning, about a fortnight after I had obtained my liberty, Reldresal, principal Secretary (as they style him) of Private Affairs, came to my house attended only by one servant. He ordered his coach to wait at a distance, and desired I would give him an hour's audience; which I readily consented to, on account of his quality and personal merits, as well as the many good offices he had done me during my solicitations at court. I offered to lie down, that he might the more conveniently reach my ear; but he chose rather to let me hold him in my hand during our conversation. He began with compliments on my liberty; said he might pretend to some merit in it: but,

<sup>1</sup>Probably Queen Anne.

however, added, that if it had not been for the present situation of things at court, perhaps I might not have obtained it so soon. For, said he, as flourishing a condition as we may appear to be in to foreigners, we labor under two mighty evils; a violent faction at home, and the danger of an invasion by a most potent enemy from abroad. As to the first, you are to understand, that for about seventy moons past there have been two struggling parties in this empire, under the names of Tramecksan and Slamecksan, from the high and low heels on their shoes,<sup>1</sup> by which they distinguish themselves. It is alleged indeed, that the high heels are most agreeable to our ancient constitution; but, however this be, his Majesty hath determined to make use of only low heels in the administration of the government, and all offices in the gift of the Crown, as you cannot but observe; and particularly, that his Majesty's Imperial heels are lower at least by a drurr than any of his court (drurr is a measure about the fourteenth part of an inch). The animosities between these two parties run so high, that they will neither eat nor drink, nor talk with each other. We compute the Tramecksan, or High-Heels, to exceed us in number; but the power is wholly on our side. We apprehend his Imperial Highness, the Heir to the Crown, to have some tendency towards the High-Heels;<sup>2</sup> at least we can plainly discover one of his heels higher than the other, which gives him a hobble in his gait. Now, in the midst of these intestine disquiets, we are threatened with an invasion from the Island of Blefuscu, which is the other great empire of the universe, almost as large and powerful as this of his Majesty. For as to what we have heard you affirm, that there are other kingdoms and states in the world inhabited by human creatures as large as yourself, our philosophers are in much doubt, and would rather conjecture that you dropped from the moon, or one of the stars; because it is certain, that an hundred mortals of your bulk would, in a short time, destroy all the fruits and cattle of his Majesty's dominions. Besides, our histories of six thousand moons make no mention of any other regions, than the two great empires of Lilliput and Blefuscu. Which two mighty powers have, as I was going to tell you, been engaged in a most obstinate war for six and thirty moons past. It began upon the following occasion. It is allowed on all hands, that the primitive way of breaking eggs before we eat them, was upon the larger end: but his present Majesty's grandfather, while he was a boy, going to eat an egg, and breaking it according to the ancient practice, happened to cut one of his fingers. Whereupon the Emperor his father published an edict, commanding all his subjects, upon great penalties, to break the smaller end of their eggs.<sup>3</sup> The people so highly resented this law, that our histories tell us there have been six rebellions raised on that account; wherein one Emperor lost his life, and another his crown. These civil commotions were constantly fomented by the monarchs of Blefuscu; and when they were quelled, the exiles always fled for refuge to that empire. It is computed, that eleven thousand persons have, at several times, suffered death, rather than submit to break their eggs at the smaller end. Many hundred large volumes have been published upon this controversy: but the books of the Big-Endians have been long forbidden, and the whole party rendered incapable by law of holding employments. During the course of these troubles, the Emperors of Blefuscu did frequently expostulate by their ambassadors, accusing us of making a schism in religion, by offending against a fundamental doctrine of our great prophet Lustrog, in the fifty-fourth chapter of the Blundecral (which is their Alcoran). This, however, is thought to be a mere strain upon the text: for the words are these;

<sup>1</sup>This and what follows is a satire upon party government, but it is a mistake to suppose, from Swift's terms, that it refers specially to the High and Low Church parties in England.

<sup>2</sup>This probably refers to intrigues of the Prince of Wales (later George II) directed against his father's policies.

<sup>3</sup>This controversy is usually said to refer to the troubles between Catholics and protestants in England, and no doubt correctly; though the full force of the satire is lost, here and elsewhere in the book, if we tend to think of it as having only, or even chiefly, a particular application. The Little-Endians are explained to be the protestants, the Big-Endians the Catholics. The Emperor's grandfather is thus Henry VIII and, in the next sentence, the Emperor who lost his life is Charles I, he who lost his crown James II. France (Blefuscu), of course, encouraged the English Catholics.

That all true believers break their eggs at the convenient end: and which is the convenient end, seems, in my humble opinion, to be left to every man's conscience, or at least in the power of the chief magistrate to determine. Now the Big-Endian exiles have found so much credit in the Emperor of Blefuscu's court, and so much private assistance and encouragement from their party here at home, that a bloody war has been carried on between the two empires for six and thirty moons with various success; during which time we have lost forty capital ships, and a much greater number of smaller vessels, together with thirty thousand of our best seamen and soldiers; and the damage received by the enemy is reckoned to be somewhat greater than ours. However, they have now equipped a numerous fleet, and are just preparing to make a descent upon us; and his Imperial Majesty, placing great confidence in your valor and strength, has commanded me to lay this account of his affairs before you.

I desired the Secretary to present my humble duty to the Emperor, and to let him know, that I thought it would not become me, who was a foreigner, to interfere with parties; but I was ready, with the hazard of my life, to defend his person and state against all invaders.

CHAPTER V

The Author, by an extraordinary stratagem, prevents an invasion. A high title of honor is conferred upon him. Ambassadors arrive from the Emperor of Blefuscu, and sue for peace. The Emperor's apartment on fire by an accident; the Author instrumental in saving the rest of the palace.

THE Empire of Blefuscu is an island situated to the north north-east side of Lilliput, from whence it is parted only by a channel of eight hundred yards wide. I had not yet seen it, and upon this notice of an intended invasion, I avoided appearing on that side of the coast, for fear of being discovered by some of the enemy's ships, who had received no intelligence of me, all intercourse between the two empires having been strictly forbidden during the war, upon pain of death, and an embargo laid by our Emperor upon all vessels whatsoever. I communicated to his Majesty a project I had formed of seizing the enemy's whole fleet: which, as our scouts assured us, lay at anchor in the harbor ready to sail with the first fair wind. I consulted the most experienced seamen, upon the depth of the channel, which they had often plumbed, who told me, that in the middle at high-water it was seventy glumgluffs deep, which is about six foot of European measure; and the rest of it fifty glumgluffs at most. I walked towards the north-east coast over against Blefuscu; and lying down behind a hillock, took out my small pocket perspective-glass, and viewed the enemy's fleet at anchor, consisting of about fifty men of war, and a great number of transports: I then came back to my house, and gave order (for which I had a warrant) for a great quantity of the strongest cable and bars of iron. The cable was about as thick as packthread, and the bars of the length and size of a knitting-needle. I trebled the cable to make it stronger, and for the same reason I twisted three of the iron bars together, binding the extremities into a hook. Having thus fixed fifty hooks to as many cables, I went back to the north-east coast, and putting off my coat, shoes, and stockings, walked into the sea in my leathern jerkin, about half an hour before high water. I waded with what haste I could, and swam in the middle about thirty yards till I felt ground; I arrived at the fleet in less than half an hour. The enemy was so frightened when they saw me, that they leaped out of their ships, and swam to shore, where there could not be fewer than thirty thousand souls. I then took my tackling, and fastening a hook to the hole at the prow of each, I tied all the cords together at the end. While I was thus employed, the enemy discharged several thousand arrows, many of which stuck in my hands and face; and besides the excessive smart, gave me much disturbance in my work. My greatest apprehension was for my eyes, which I should have infallibly lost, if I had not suddenly thought of an expedient. I kept among other little necessities a pair of spectacles in a private pocket, which, as I observed before, had scaped the Emperor's searchers. These I took out and fastened as strongly as I could upon my nose, and thus armed went on boldly with my work in spite of the enemy's arrows, many of which struck against the glasses of my spectacles, but without any other effect, further than a little to discompose them. I had now fastened all the hooks, and taking the knot in my hand, began to pull; but not a ship would stir, for they were all too fast held by their anchors, so that the boldest part of my enterprise remained. I therefore let go the cord, and leaving the hooks fixed to the ships, I resolutely cut with my knife the cables that fastened the anchors, receiving about two hundred shots in my face and hands; then I took up the knotted end of the cables, to which my hooks were tied, and with great ease drew fifty of the enemy's largest men of war after me.

The Blefuscudians, who had not the least imagination of what I intended, were at first confounded with astonishment. They had seen me cut the cables, and thought my design was only to let the ships run adrift, or fall foul on each other: but when they perceived the whole fleet moving in order, and saw me pulling at the end, they set up such a scream of grief and despair, that it is almost impossible to describe or conceive. When I had got out of danger, I stopped awhile to pick out the arrows that stuck in my hands and face; and rubbed on some of the same ointment that was given me at my first arrival, as I have formerly mentioned. I then took off my spectacles, and waiting about an hour, till the tide was a little fallen, I waded through the middle with my cargo, and arrived safe at the royal port of Lilliput.

The Emperor and his whole court stood on the shore, expecting the issue of this great adventure. They saw the ships move forward in a large half-moon, but could not discern me, who was up to my breast in water. When I advanced in the middle of the channel, they were yet in more pain, because I was under water to my neck. The Emperor concluded me to be drowned, and that the enemy's fleet was approaching in a hostile manner: but he was soon eased of his fears, for the channel growing shallower every step I made, I came in a short time within hearing, and holding up the end of the cable by which the fleet was fastened, I cried in a loud voice, Long live the most puissant Emperor of Lilliput! This great prince received me at my landing with all possible encomiums, and created me a Nardac upon the spot, which is the highest title of honor among them.

His Majesty desired I would take some other opportunity of bringing all the rest of his enemy's ships into his ports. And so unmeasurable is the ambition of princes, that he seemed to think of nothing less than reducing the whole empire of Blefuscu into a province, and governing it by a viceroy; of destroying the Big-Endian exiles, and compelling the people to break the smaller end of their eggs, by which he would remain the sole monarch of the whole world. But I endeavored to divert him from this design, by many arguments drawn from the topics of policy as well as justice; and I plainly protested, that I would never be an instrument of bringing a free and brave people into slavery. And when the matter was debated in council, the wisest part of the ministry were of my opinion.

This open bold declaration of mine was so opposite to the schemes and politics of his Imperial Majesty, that he could never forgive it; he mentioned it in a very artful manner at council, where I was told that some of the wisest appeared, at least by their silence, to be of my opinion; but others, who were my secret enemies, could not forbear some expressions, which by a side-wind reflected on me. And from this time began an intrigue between his Majesty and a junto of ministers maliciously bent against me, which broke out in less than two months, and had like to have ended in my utter destruction. Of so little weight are the greatest services to princes, when put into the balance with a refusal to gratify their passions.

About three weeks after this exploit, there arrived a solemn embassy from Blefuscu, with humble offers of a peace; which was soon concluded upon conditions very advantageous to our Emperor, wherewith I shall not trouble the reader. There were six ambassadors, with a train of about five hundred persons, and their entry was very magnificent, suitable to the grandeur of their master, and the importance of their business. When their treaty was finished, wherein I did them several good offices by the credit I now had, or at least appeared to have at court, their Excellencies, who were privately told how much I had been their friend, made me a visit in form. They began with many compliments upon my valor and generosity, invited me to that kingdom in the Emperor their master's name, and desired me to show them some proofs of my prodigious strength, of which they had heard so many wonders; wherein I readily obliged them, but shall not trouble the reader with the particulars.

When I had for some time entertained their Excellencies, to their infinite satisfaction and surprise, I desired they would do me the honor to present my most humble respects to the Emperor their master, the renown of whose virtues had so justly filled the whole world with admiration, and whose royal person I resolved to attend before I returned to my own country: accordingly, the next time I had the honor to see our Emperor, I desired his general license to wait on the Blefusudian monarch, which he was pleased to grant me, as I could perceive, in a very cold manner; but could not guess the reason, till I had a whisper from a certain person that Flimnap and Bolgolam had represented my intercourse with those ambassadors as a mark of disaffection, from which I am sure my heart was wholly free. And this was the first time I began to conceive some imperfect idea of courts and ministers.

It is to be observed, that these ambassadors spoke to me by an interpreter, the languages of both empires differing as much from each other as any two in Europe, and each nation priding itself upon the antiquity, beauty, and energy of their own tongues, with an avowed contempt for that of their neighbor; yet our Emperor, standing upon the advantage he had got by the seizure of their fleet, obliged them to deliver their credentials, and make their speech in the Lilliputian tongue. And it must be confessed, that from the great intercourse of trade and commerce between both realms, from the continual reception of exiles, which is mutual among them, and from the custom in each empire to send their young nobility and richer gentry to the other, in order to polish themselves by seeing the world, and understanding men and manners; there are few persons of distinction, or merchants, or seamen, who dwell in the maritime parts, but what can hold conversation in both tongues;

as I found some weeks after, when I went to pay my respects to the Emperor of Blefuscu, which in the midst of great misfortunes, through the malice of my enemies, proved a very happy adventure to me, as I shall relate in its proper place.

The reader may remember, that when I signed those articles upon which I recovered my liberty, there were some which I disliked upon account of their being too servile, neither could anything but an extreme necessity have forced me to submit. But being now a Nardac of the highest rank in that empire, such offices were looked upon as below my dignity, and the Emperor (to do him justice) never once mentioned them to me. However, it was not long before I had an opportunity of doing his Majesty, at least, as I then thought, a most signal service. I was alarmed at midnight with the cries of many hundred people at my door; by which being suddenly awaked, I was in some kind of terror. I heard the word burglum repeated incessantly: several of the Emperor's court, making their way through the crowd, entreated me to come immediately to the palace, where her Imperial Majesty's apartment was on fire, by the carelessness of a maid of honor, who fell asleep while she was reading a romance. I got up in an instant; and orders being given to clear the way before me, and it being likewise a moonshine night, I made a shift to get to the Palace without trampling on any of the people. I found they had already applied ladders to the walls of the apartment, and were well provided with buckets, but the water was at some distance. These buckets were about the size of a large thimble, and the poor people supplied me with them as fast as they could; but the flame was so violent that they did little good. I might easily have stifled it with my coat, which I unfortunately left behind me for haste, and came away only in my leathern jerkin. The case seemed wholly desperate and deplorable; and this magnificent palace would have infallibly been burned down to the ground, if, by a presence of mind, unusual to me, I had not suddenly thought of an expedient. I had the evening before drunk plentifully of a most delicious wine, called glimigrim (the Blefusudians call it flunec, but ours is esteemed the better sort), which is very diuretic. By the luckiest chance in the world, I had not discharged myself of any part of it. The heat I had contracted by coming very near the flames, and by laboring to quench them, made the wine begin to operate by urine; which I voided in such a quantity, and applied so well to the proper places, that in three minutes the fire was wholly extinguished, and the rest of that noble pile, which had cost so many ages in erecting, preserved from destruction.

It was now day-light, and I returned to my house without waiting to congratulate with the Emperor: because, although I had done a very eminent piece of service, yet I could not tell how his Majesty might resent the manner by which I had performed it: for, by the fundamental laws of the realm, it is capital in any person, of what quality soever, to make water within the precincts of the palace. But I was a little comforted by a message from his Majesty, that he would give orders to the Grand Justiciary for passing my pardon in form; which, however, I could not obtain. And I was privately assured, that the Empress, conceiving the greatest abhorrence of what I had done, removed to the most distant side of the court, firmly resolved that those buildings should never be repaired for her use: and, in the presence of her chief confidants could not forbear vowing revenge.<sup>1</sup>

CHAPTER VI

Of the inhabitants of Lilliput; their learning, laws, and customs, the manner of educating their children. The Author's way of living in that country. His vindication of a great lady.

ALTHOUGH I intend to leave the description of this empire to a particular treatise, yet in the mean time I am content to gratify the curious reader with some general ideas. As the common size of the natives is somewhat under six inches high, so there is an exact proportion in all other animals, as well as plants and trees: for instance, the tallest horses and oxen are between four and five inches in height, the sheep an inch and a half, more or less: their geese about the bigness of a sparrow, and so the several gradations downwards till you come to the smallest, which, to my sight, were almost invisible; but nature hath adapted the eyes of the Lilliputians to all objects proper for their view: they see with great exactness, but at no great distance. And to show the sharpness of their sight towards objects that are near, I have been much pleased with observing a cook pulling a lark, which was not so large as a common fly; and a young girl threading an invisible needle with invisible silk. Their tallest trees are about seven foot high: I mean some of those in the great royal park, the tops whereof I could but just reach with my fist clinched. The other vegetables are in the same proportion; but this I leave to the reader's imagination.

I shall say but little at present of their learning, which for many ages hath flourished in all its branches among them: but their manner of writing is very peculiar, being neither from the left to the right, like the Europeans; nor from the right to the left, like the Arabians; nor from up to down, like the Chinese; nor from down to up, like the Cascagians; but aslant from one corner of the paper to the other, like ladies in England.

They bury their dead with their heads directly downwards, because they hold an opinion, that in eleven thousand moons they are all to rise again, in which period the earth (which they conceive to be flat) will turn upside down, and by this means they shall, at their resurrection, be found ready standing on their feet. The learned among them confess the absurdity of this doctrine, but the practice still continues, in compliance to the vulgar.

There are some laws and customs in this empire very peculiar; and if they were not so directly contrary to those of my own dear country, I should be tempted to say a little in their justification. It is only to be wished, that they were as well executed. The first I shall mention, relates to informers. All crimes against the state are punished here with the utmost severity; but if the person accused maketh his innocence plainly to appear upon his trial, the accuser is immediately put to an ignominious death; and out of his goods or lands, the innocent person is quadruply recompensed for the loss of his time, for the danger he underwent, for the hardship of his imprisonment, and for all the charges he hath been at in making his defense. Or, if that fund be deficient, it is largely supplied by the Crown. The Emperor does also confer on him some public mark of his favor, and proclamation is made of his innocence through the whole city.

<sup>1</sup>This episode may have reference to Swift's failure to obtain a bishopric because of his authorship of A Tale of a Tub.

They look upon fraud as a greater crime than theft, and therefore seldom fail to punish it with death; for they allege, that care and vigilance, with a very common understanding, may preserve a man's goods from thieves, but honesty has no fence against superior cunning; and since it is necessary that there should be a perpetual intercourse of buying and selling, and dealing upon credit, where fraud is permitted and connived at, or hath no law to punish it, the honest dealer is always undone, and the knave gets the advantage. I remember when I was once interceding with the Emperor for a criminal who had wronged his master of a great sum of money, which he had received by order, and ran away with; and happening to tell his Majesty, by way of extenuation, that it was only a breach of trust; the Emperor thought it monstrous in me to offer, as a defense, the greatest aggravation of the crime: and truly I had little to say in return, farther than the common answer, that different nations had different customs; for, I confess, I was heartily ashamed.

Although we usually call reward and punishment the two hinges upon which all government turns, yet I could never observe this maxim to be put in practice by any nation except that of Lilliput. Whoever can there bring sufficient proof that he hath strictly observed the laws of his country for seventy-three moons, hath a claim to certain privileges, according to his quality and condition of life, with a proportionable sum of money out of a fund appropriated for that use: he likewise acquires the title of Snilpall, or Legal, which is added to his name, but does not descend to his posterity. And these people thought it a prodigious defect of policy among us, when I told them that our laws were enforced only by penalties, without any mention of reward. It is upon this account that the image of Justice, in their courts of judicature, is formed with six eyes, two before, as many behind, and on each side one, to signify circumspection; with a bag of gold open in her right hand, and a sword sheathed in her left, to show she is more disposed to reward than to punish.

In choosing persons for all employments, they have more regard to good morals than to great abilities; for, since government is necessary to mankind, they believe that the common size of human understandings is fitted to some station or other, and that Providence never intended to make the management of public affairs a mystery, to be comprehended only by a few persons of sublime genius, of which there seldom are three born in an age: but they suppose truth, justice, temperance, and the like, to be in every man's power; the practice of which virtues, assisted by experience and a good intention, would qualify any man for the service of his country, except where a course of study is required. But they thought the want of moral virtues was so far from being supplied by superior endowments of the mind, that employments could never be put into such dangerous hands as those of persons so qualified; and at least, that the mistakes committed by ignorance in a virtuous disposition, would never be of such fatal consequence to the public weal, as the practices of a man whose inclinations led him to be corrupt, and had great abilities to manage, and multiply, and defend his corruptions.

In like manner, the disbelief of a Divine Providence renders a man incapable of holding any public station; for, since kings avow themselves to be the deputies of Providence, the Lilliputians think nothing can be more absurd than for a prince to employ such men as disown the authority under which he acts.

In relating these and the following laws, I would only be understood to mean the original institutions, and not the most scandalous corruptions into which these people are fallen by the degenerate nature of man. For as to that infamous practice of acquiring great employments by dancing on the ropes, or badges of favor and distinction by leaping over sticks and creeping under them, the reader is to observe, that they were first introduced by the grandfather of the Emperor now reigning, and grew to the present height, by the gradual increase of party and faction.

Ingratitude is among them a capital crime, as we read it to have been in some other countries: for they reason thus, that whoever makes ill returns to his benefactor, must needs be a common enemy to the rest of mankind, from whom he hath received no obligation, and therefore such a man is not fit to live.

Their notions relating to the duties of parents and children differ extremely from ours. For, since the conjunction of male and female is founded upon the great law of nature, in order to propagate and continue the species, the Lilliputians will needs have it, that men and women are joined together like other animals, by the motives of concupiscence; and that their tenderness towards their young proceeds from the like natural principle: for which reason they will never allow, that a child is under any obligation to his father for begetting him, or to his mother for bringing him into the world, which, considering the miseries of human life, was neither a benefit in itself, nor intended so by his parents, whose thoughts in their love-encounters were otherwise employed. Upon these, and the like reasonings, their opinion is, that parents are the last of all others to be trusted with the education of their own children; and therefore they have in every town public nurseries, where all parents, except cottagers and laborers, are obliged to send their infants of both sexes to be reared and educated when they come to the age of twenty moons, at which time they are supposed to have some rudiments of docility. These schools are of several kinds, suited to different qualities, and to both sexes. They have certain professors well skilled in preparing children for such a condition of life as befits the rank of their parents, and their own capacities as well as inclinations. I shall first say something of the male nurseries, and then of the female.

The nurseries for males of noble or eminent birth, are provided with grave and learned professors, and their several deputies. The clothes and food of the children are plain and simple. They are bred up in the principles of honor, justice, courage, modesty, clemency, religion, and love of their country; they are always employed in some business, except in the times of eating and sleeping, which are very short, and two hours for diversions, consisting of bodily exercises. They are dressed by men till four years of age, and then are obliged to dress themselves, although their quality be ever so great; and the women attendants, who are aged proportionably to ours at fifty, perform only the most menial offices. They are never suffered to converse with servants, but go together in small or greater numbers to take their diversions, and always in the presence of a professor, or one of his deputies; whereby they avoid those early bad impressions of folly and vice to which our children are subject. Their parents are suffered to see them only twice a year; the visit is to last but an hour. They are allowed to kiss the child at meeting and parting; but a professor, who always stands by on those occasions, will not suffer them to whisper, or use any fondling expressions, or bring any presents of toys, sweetmeats, and the like.

The pension from each family for the education and entertainment of a child, upon failure of due payment, is levied by the Emperor's officers.

The nurseries for children of ordinary gentlemen, merchants, traders, and handicrafts, are managed proportionably after the same manner; only those designed for trades, are put out apprentices at eleven years old, whereas those of persons of quality continue in their exercises till fifteen, which answers to one and twenty with us: but the confinement is gradually lessened for the last three years.

In the female nurseries, the young girls of quality are educated much like the males, only they are dressed by orderly servants of their own sex; but always in the presence of a professor or deputy, till they come to dress themselves, which is at five years old. And if it be found that these nurses ever presume to entertain the girl with frightful or foolish stories, or the common follies practised by chambermaids among us, they are publicly whipped thrice about the city, imprisoned for a year, and banished for life to the most desolate part of the country. Thus the young ladies there are as much ashamed of being cowards and fools, as the men, and despise all personal ornaments beyond decency and cleanliness: neither did I perceive any difference in their education, made by their difference of sex, only that the exercises of the females were not altogether so robust; and that some rules were given them relating to domestic life, and a smaller compass of learning was enjoined them: for their maxim is, that among people of quality, a wife should be always a reasonable and agreeable companion, because she cannot always be young. When the girls are twelve years old, which among them is the marriageable age, their parents or guardians take them home, with great expressions of gratitude to the professors, and seldom without tears of the young lady and her companions.

In the nurseries of females of the meaner sort, the children are instructed in all kinds of works proper for their sex, and their several degrees: those intended for apprentices, are dismissed at seven years old, the rest are kept to eleven.

The meaner families who have children at these nurseries, are obliged, besides their annual pension, which is as low as possible, to return to the steward of the nursery a small monthly share of their gettings, to be a portion for the child; and therefore all parents are limited in their expenses by the law. For the Lilliputians think nothing can be more unjust, than for people, in subservience to their own appetites, to bring children into the world, and leave the burden of supporting them on the public. As to persons of quality, they give security to appropriate a certain sum for each child, suitable to their condition; and these funds are always managed with good husbandry, and the most exact justice.

The cottagers and laborers keep their children at home, their business being only to till and cultivate the earth, and therefore their education is of little consequence to the public; but the old and diseased among them are supported by hospitals: for begging is a trade unknown in this empire.

And here it may perhaps divert the curious reader, to give some account of my domestic, and my manner of living in this country, during a residence of nine months and thirteen days. Having a head mechanically turned, and being likewise forced by necessity, I had made for myself a table and chair convenient enough, out of the largest trees in the royal park. Two hundred sempstresses were employed to make me shirts, and linen for my bed and table, all of the strongest and coarsest kind they could get; which, however, they were forced to quilt together in several folds, for the thickest was some degrees finer than lawn. Their linen was usually three inches wide, and three foot make a piece. The sempstresses took my measure as I lay on the ground, one standing at my neck, and another at my mid-leg, with a strong cord extended, that each held by the end, while the third measured the length of the cord with a rule of an inch long. Then they measured my right thumb, and desired no more; for by a mathematical computation, that twice round the thumb is once round the wrist, and so on to the neck and the waist, and by the help of my old shirt, which I displayed on the ground before them for a pattern, they fitted me exactly. Three hundred tailors were employed in the same manner to make me clothes; but they had another contrivance for taking my measure. I kneeled down, and they raised a ladder from the ground to my neck; upon this ladder one of them mounted, and let fall a plumb-line from my collar to the floor, which just answered the length of my coat: but my waist and arms I measured myself. When my clothes were finished, which was done in my house, (for the largest of theirs would not have been able to hold them) they looked like the patch-work made by the ladies in England, only that mine were all of a color.

I had three hundred cooks to dress my victuals, in little convenient huts built about my house, where they and their families lived, and prepared me two dishes apiece. I took up twenty waiters in my hand, and placed them on the table: an hundred more attended below on the ground, some with dishes of meat, and some with barrels of wine, and other liquors, slung on their shoulders; all which the waiters above drew up as I wanted, in a very ingenious manner, by certain cords, as we draw the bucket up a well in Europe. A dish of their meat was a good mouthful, and a barrel of their liquor a reasonable draught. Their mutton yields to ours, but their beef is excellent. I have had a sirloin so large, that I have been forced to make three bites of it; but this is rare. My servants were astonished to see me eat it bones and all, as in our country we do the leg of a lark. Their geese and turkeys I usually eat at a mouthful, and I must confess they far exceed ours. Of their smaller fowl I could take up twenty or thirty at the end of my knife.

One day his Imperial Majesty, being informed of my way of living, desired that himself and his Royal Consort, with the young Princes of the blood of both sexes, might have the happiness (as he was pleased to call it) of dining with me. They came accordingly, and I placed them in chairs of state on my table, just over against me, with their guards about them. Flimnap, the Lord High Treasurer, attended there likewise with his white staff; and I observed he often looked on me with a sour countenance, which I would not seem to regard, but eat more than usual, in honor to my dear country, as well as to fill the court with admiration. I have some private reasons to believe, that this visit from his Majesty gave Flimnap an opportunity of doing me ill offices to his master. That minister had always been my secret enemy, though he outwardly caressed me more than was usual to the moroseness of his nature. He represented to the Emperor the low condition of his treasury; that he was forced to take up money at great discount; that exchequer bills would not circulate under nine per cent. below par; that in short I had cost his Majesty above a million and a half of sprugs (their greatest gold coin, about the bigness of a spangle); and upon the whole, that it would be advisable in the Emperor to take the first fair occasion of dismissing me.

I am here obliged to vindicate the reputation of an excellent lady, who was an innocent sufferer upon my account. The Treasurer took a fancy to be jealous of his wife, from the malice of some evil tongues, who informed him that her Grace had taken a violent affection for my person; and the court-scandal ran for some time, that she once came privately to my lodging. This I solemnly declare to be a most infamous falsehood, without any grounds, farther than that her Grace was pleased to treat me with all innocent marks of freedom and friendship. I own she came often to my house, but always publicly, nor ever without three more in the coach, who were usually her sister and young daughter, and some particular acquaintance; but this was common to many other ladies of the court. And I still appeal to my servants round, whether they at any time saw a coach at my door without knowing what persons were in it. On those occasions, when a servant had given me notice, my custom was to go immediately to the door; and, after paying my respects, to take up the coach and two horses very carefully in my hands (for, if there were six horses, the postillion always unharnessed four), and place them on a table, where I had fixed a moveable rim quite round, of five inches high, to prevent accidents. And I have often had four coaches and horses at once on my table full of company, while I sat in my chair leaning my face towards them; and when I was engaged with one set, the coachmen would gently drive the others round my table. I have passed many an afternoon very agreeably in these conversations. But I defy the Treasurer, or his two informers (I will name them, and let them make their best of it) Clustril and Drunlo, to prove that any person ever came to me incognito, except the secretary Reldresal, who was sent by express command of his Imperial Majesty, as I have before related. I should not have dwelt so long upon this particular, if it had not been a point wherein the reputation of a great lady is so nearly concerned, to say nothing of my own; though I then had the honor to be a Nardac, which the Treasurer himself is not; for all the world knows he is only a Glumglum, a title inferior by one degree, as that of a Marquis is to a Duke in England, although I allow he preceded me in right of his post. These false informations, which I afterwards came to the knowledge of, by an accident not proper to mention, made Flimnap, the Treasurer, show his lady for some time an ill countenance, and me a worse; and although he were at last undeceived and reconciled to her, yet I lost all credit with him, and found my interest decline very fast with the Emperor himself, who was indeed too much governed by that favorite.

CHAPTER VII

The Author, being informed of a design to accuse him of high treason, makes his escape to Blefuscu. His reception there.

BEFORE I proceed to give an account of my leaving this kingdom, it may be proper to inform the reader of a private intrigue which had been for two months forming against me.

I had been hitherto all my life a stranger to courts, for which I was unqualified by the meanness of my condition. I had indeed heard and read enough of the dispositions of great princes and ministers; but never expected to have found such terrible effects of them in so remote a country, governed, as I thought, by very different maxims from those in Europe.

When I was just preparing to pay my attendance on the Emperor of Blefuscu, a considerable person at court (to whom I had been very serviceable at a time when he lay under the highest displeasure of his Imperial Majesty) came to my house very privately at night in a close chair, and without sending his name, desired admittance. The chairmen were dismissed; I put the chair, with his Lordship in it, into my coat-pocket: and giving orders to a trusty servant to say I was indisposed and gone to sleep, I fastened the door of my house, placed the chair on the table, according to my usual custom, and sat down by it. After the common salutations were over, observing his Lordship's countenance full of concern, and enquiring into the reason, he desired I would hear him with patience in a matter that highly concerned my honor and my life. His speech was to the following effect, for I took notes of it as soon as he left me.

You are to know, said he, that several Committees of Council have been lately called in the most private manner on your account; and it is but two days since his Majesty came to a full resolution.

You are very sensible that Skyresh Bulgolam (Galbet, or High-Admiral) hath been your mortal enemy almost ever since your arrival. His original reasons I know not; but his hatred is much increased since your great success against Blefuscu, by which his glory, as Admiral, is obscured. This Lord, in conjunction with Flimnap the High-Treasurer, whose enmity against you is notorious on account of his lady, Limtoc the General, Lalcon the Chamberlain, and Balmuff the Grand Justiciary, have prepared articles of impeachment against you, for treason, and other capital crimes.

This preface made me so impatient, being conscious of my own merits and innocence, that I was going to interrupt; when he entertained me to be silent, and thus proceeded.

Out of gratitude for the favors you have done me, I procured information of the whole proceedings, and a copy of the articles, wherein I venture my head for your service.

Articles of Impeachment against Quinbus Flestrin (the Man-Mountain)

ARTICLE I

Whereas, by a statute made in the reign of his Imperial Majesty Calin Deffar Plune, it is enacted, that whoever shall make water within the precincts of the royal palace, shall be liable to the pains and penalties of high treason; notwithstanding, the said Quinbus Flestrin, in open breach of the said law, under color of extinguishing the fire kindled in the apartment of his Majesty's most dear Imperial Consort, did maliciously, traitorously, and devilishly, by discharge of his urine, put out the said fire kindled in the said apartment, lying and being within the precincts of the said royal palace, against the statute in that case provided, etc., against the duty, etc.

ARTICLE II

That the said Quinbus Flestrin having brought the imperial fleet of Blefuscu into the royal port, and being afterwards commanded by his Imperial Majesty to seize all the other ships of the said empire of Blefuscu, and reduce that empire to a province, to be governed by a viceroy from hence, and to destroy and put to death not only all the Big-Endian exiles, but likewise all the people of that empire, who would not immediately forsake the Big-Endian heresy: He, the said Flestrin, like a false traitor against his most Auspicious, Serene, Imperial Majesty, did petition to be excused from the said service, upon pretence of unwillingness to force the consciences, or destroy the liberties and lives of an innocent people.

ARTICLE III

That, whereas certain ambassadors arrived from the court of Blefuscu, to sue for peace in his Majesty's court: He, the said Flestrin, did, like a false traitor, aid, abet, comfort, and divert the said ambassadors, although he knew them to be servants to a Prince who was lately an open enemy to his Imperial Majesty, and in open war against his said Majesty.

ARTICLE IV

That the said Quinbus Flestrin, contrary to the duty of a faithful subject, is now preparing to make a voyage to the court and empire of Blefuscu, for which he hath received only verbal license from his Imperial Majesty; and under color of the said license, dorth falsely and traitorously intend to take the said voyage, and thereby to aid, comfort, and abet the Emperor of Blefuscu, so late an enemy, and in open war with his Imperial Majesty aforesaid.

There are some other articles, but these are the most important, of which I have read you an abstract.

In the several debates upon this impeachment, it must be confessed that his Majesty gave many marks of his great lenity, often urging the services you had done him, and endeavoring to extenuate your crimes. The Treasurer and Admiral insisted that you should be put to the most painful and ignominious death, by setting fire on your house at night, and the General was to attend with twenty thousand men armed with poisoned arrows to shoot you on the face and hands. Some of your servants were to have private orders to strew a poisonous juice on your shirts, which would soon make you tear your own flesh, and die in the utmost torture. The General came into the same opinion; so that for a long time there was a majority against you. But his Majesty resolving, if possible, to spare your life, at last brought off the Chamberlain.

Upon this incident, Reldresal, principal Secretary for Private Affairs, who always approved himself your true friend, was commanded by the Emperor to deliver his opinion, which he accordingly did; and therein justified the good thoughts you have of him. He allowed your crimes to be great, but that still there was room for mercy, the most commendable virtue in a prince, and for which his Majesty was so justly celebrated. He said, the friendship between you and him was so well known to the world, that perhaps the most honorable board might think him partial: however, in obedience to the command he had received, he would freely offer his sentiments. That if his Majesty, in consideration of your services, and pursuant to his own merciful disposition, would please to spare your life, and only give orders to put out both your eyes, he humbly conceived, that by this expedient, justice might in some measure be satisfied, and all the world would applaud the lenity of the Emperor, as well as the fair and generous proceedings of those who have the honor to be his counselors. That the loss of your eyes would be no impediment to your bodily strength, by which you might still be useful to his Majesty. That blindness is an addition to courage, by concealing dangers from us; that the fear you had for your eyes, was the greatest difficulty in bringing over the enemy's fleet, and it would be sufficient for you to see by the eyes of the ministers, since the greatest princes do no more.

This proposal was received with the utmost disapprobation by the whole board. Bolgolam, the Admiral, could not preserve his temper; but rising up in fury, said, he wondered how the Secretary durst presume to give his opinion for preserving the life of a traitor: that the services you had performed, were, by all true reasons of state, the great aggravation of your crimes; that you, who were able to extinguish the fire, by discharge of urine in her Majesty's apartment (which he mentioned with horror), might, at another time, raise an inundation by the same means, to drown the whole palace; and the same strength which enabled you to bring over the enemy's fleet, might serve, upon the first discontent, to carry it back: that he had good reasons to think you were a Big-Indian in your heart; and as treason begins in the heart, before it appears in overt acts, so he accused you as a traitor on that account, and therefore insisted you should be put to death.

The Treasurer was of the same opinion; he showed to what straits his Majesty's revenue was reduced by the charge of maintaining you, which would soon grow insupportable: that the Secretary's expedient of putting out your eyes was so far from being a remedy against this evil, that it would probably increase it, as it is manifest from the common practice of blinding some kind of fowl, after which they fed the faster, and grew sooner fat: that his sacred Majesty and the Council, who are your judges, were in their own consciences fully convinced of your guilt, which was a sufficient argument to condemn you to death, without the formal proofs required by the strict letter of the law.

But his Imperial Majesty, fully determined against capital punishment, was graciously pleased to say, that since the Council thought the loss of your eyes too easy a censure, some other may be inflicted hereafter. And your friend the Secretary humbly desiring to be heard again, in answer to what the Treasurer had objected concerning the great charge his Majesty was at in maintaining you, said, that his Excellency, who had the sole disposal of the Emperor's revenue, might easily provide against that evil, by gradually lessening your establishment; by which, for want of sufficient food, you would grow weak and faint, and lose your appetite, and consequently decay and consume in a few months; neither would the stench of your carcass be then so dangerous, when it should become more than half diminished; and immediately upon your death, five or six thousand of his Majesty's subjects might, in two or three days, cut your flesh from your bones, take it away by cart-loads, and bury it in distant parts to prevent infection, leaving the skeleton as a monument of admiration to posterity.

Thus by the great friendship of the Secretary, the whole affair was compromised. It was strictly enjoined, that the project of starving you by degrees should be kept a secret, but the sentence of putting out your eyes was entered on the books; none dissenting except Bolgolam the Admiral, who, being a creature of the Empress, was perpetually instigated by her Majesty to insist upon your death, she having borne perpetual malice against you, on account of that infamous and illegal method you took to extinguish the fire in her apartment.

In three days your friend the Secretary will be directed to come to your house, and read before you the articles of impeachment; and then to signify the great lenity and favor of his Majesty and Council, whereby you are only condemned to the loss of your eyes, which his Majesty doth not question you will gratefully and humbly submit to; and twenty of his Majesty's surgeons will attend, in order to see the operation well performed, by discharging very sharp-pointed arrows into the balls of your eyes, as you lie on the ground.

I leave to your prudence what measures you will take; and to avoid suspicion, I must immediately return in as private a manner as I came.

His Lordship did so, and I remained alone, under many doubts and perplexities of mind.

It was a custom introduced by this prince and his ministry (very different, as I have been assured, from the practices of former times), that after the court had decreed any cruel execution, either to gratify the monarch's resentment, or the malice of a favorite, the Emperor always made a speech to his whole Council, expressing his great lenity and tenderness, as qualities known and confessed by all the world. This speech was immediately published through the kingdom; nor did any thing terrify the people so much as those encomiums on his Majesty's mercy; because it was observed, that the more these praises were enlarged and insisted on, the more inhuman was the punishment, and the sufferer more innocent. And as to myself, I must confess, having never been designed for a courtier either by my birth or education, I was so ill a judge of things, that I could not discover the lenity and favor of his sentence, but conceived it (perhaps erroneously) rather to be rigorous than gentle. I sometimes thought of standing my trial, for although I could not deny the facts alleged in the several articles, yet I hoped they would admit of some extenuations. But having in my life perused many state-trials, which I ever observed to terminate as the judges thought fit to direct, I durst not rely on so dangerous a decision, in so critical a juncture, and against such powerful enemies. Once I was strongly bent upon resistance, for while I had liberty, the whole strength of that empire could hardly subdue me, and I might easily with stones pelt the metropolis to pieces; but I soon rejected that project with horror, by remembering the oath I had made to the Emperor, the favors I received from him, and the high title of Nardac he conferred upon me. Neither had I so soon learned the gratitude of courtiers, to persuade myself that his Majesty's present severities acquitted me of all past obligations.

At last I fixed upon a resolution, for which it is probable I may incur some censure, and not unjustly; for I confess I owe the preserving my eyes, and consequently my liberty, to my own great rashness and want of experience: because if I had then known the nature of princes and ministers, which I have since observed in many other courts, and their methods of treating criminals less obnoxious than myself, I should with great alacrity and readiness have submitted to so easy a punishment. But hurried on by the precipitancy of youth, and having his Imperial Majesty's license to pay my attendance upon the Emperor of Blefuscu, I took this opportunity, before the three days were elapsed, to send a letter to my friend the Secretary, signifying my resolution of setting out that morning for Blefuscu pursuant to the leave I had got; and without waiting for an answer, I went to that side of the island where our fleet lay. I seized a large man of war, tied a cable to the prow, and, lifting up the anchors, I stripped myself, put my clothes (together with my coverlet, which I brought under my arm) into the vessel, and drawing it after me between wading and swimming, arrived at the royal port of Blefuscu, where the people had long expected me: they lent me two guides to direct me to the capital city, which is of the same name. I held them in my hands till I came within two hundred yards of the gate, and desired them to signify my arrival to one of the secretaries, and let him know, I there waited his Majesty's command. I had an answer in about an hour, that his Majesty, attended by the Royal Family, and great officers of the court, was coming out to receive me. I advanced a hundred yards. The Emperor and his train alighted from their horses, the Empress and ladies from their coaches, and I did not perceive they were in any fright or concern. I lay on the ground to kiss his Majesty's and the Empress's hands. I told his Majesty, that I was come according to my promise, and with the license of the Emperor my master, to have the honor of seeing so mighty a monarch, and to offer him any service in my power, consistent with my duty to my own prince; not mentioning a word of my disgrace, because I had hitherto no regular information of it, and might suppose myself wholly ignorant of any such design; neither could I reasonably conceive that the Emperor would discover the secret while I was out of his power: wherein, however, it soon appeared I was deceived.

I shall not trouble the reader with the particular account of my reception at this court, which was suitable to the generosity of so great a prince; nor of the difficulties I was in for want of a house and bed, being forced to lie on the ground, wrapped up in my coverlet.

CHAPTER VIII

The Author, by a lucky accident, finds means to leave Blefuscu: and, after some difficulties, returns safe to his native country.

THREE days after my arrival, walking out of curiosity to the north-east coast of the island, I observed, about half a league off, in the sea, somewhat that looked like a boat overturned. I pulled off my shoes and stockings, and wading two or three hundred yards, I found the object to approach nearer by force of the tide; and then plainly saw it to be a real boat, which I supposed might, by some tempest, have been driven from a ship; whereupon I returned immediately towards the city, and desired his Imperial Majesty to lend me twenty of the tallest vessels he had left after the loss of his fleet, and three thousand seamen under the command of his Vice-Admiral. This fleet sailed round, while I went back the shortest way to the coast where I first discovered the boat; I found the tide had driven it still nearer. The seamen were all provided with cordage, which I had beforehand twisted to a sufficient strength. When the ships came up, I stripped myself, and waded till I came within an hundred yards of the boat, after which I was forced to swim till I got up to it. The seamen threw me the end of the cord, which I fastened to a hole in the fore-part of the boat, and the other end to a man of war; but I found all my labor to little purpose; for being out of my depth, I was not able to work. In this necessity, I was forced to swim behind, and push the boat forwards as often as I could, with one of my hands; and the tide favoring me, I advanced so far, that I could just hold up my chin and feel the ground. I rested two or three minutes, and then gave the boat another shove, and so on till the sea was no higher than my arm-pits; and now the most laborious part being over, I took out my other cables, which were stowed in one of the ships, and fastening them first to the boat, and then to nine of the vessels which attended me; the wind being favorable, the seamen towed, and I shoved till we arrived within forty yards of the shore; and waiting till the tide was out, I got dry to the boat, and by the assistance of two thousand men, with ropes and engines, I made a shift to turn it on its bottom, and found it was but little damaged.

I shall not trouble the reader with the difficulties I was under by the help of certain paddles, which cost me ten days making, to get my boat to the royal port of Blefuscu, where a mighty concourse of people appeared upon my arrival, full of wonder at the sight of so prodigious a vessel. I told the Emperor that my good fortune had thrown this boat in my way, to carry me to some place from whence I might return into my native country, and begged his Majesty's orders for getting materials to fit it up, together with his license to depart; which, after some kind expostulations, he was pleased to grant.

I did very much wonder, in all this time, not to have heard of any express relating to me from our Emperor to the court of Blefuscu. But I was afterwards given privately to understand, that his Imperial Majesty, never imagining I had the least notice of his designs, believed I was only gone to Blefuscu in performance of my promise, according to the license he had given me, which was well known at our court, and would return in a few days when that ceremony was ended. But he was at last in pain at my long absence; and after consulting with the Treasurer, and the rest of that cabal, a person of quality was dispatched with the copy of the articles against me. This envoy had instructions to represent to the monarch of Blefuscu, the great lenity of his master, who was content to punish me no farther than with the loss of my eyes; that I had fled from justice, and if I did not return in two hours, I should be deprived of my title of Nardac, and declared a traitor. The envoy further added, that in order to maintain the peace and amity between both empires, his master expected that his brother of Blefuscu would give orders to have me sent back to Lilliput, bound hand and foot, to be punished as a traitor.

The Emperor of Blefuscu having taken three days to consult, returned an answer consisting of many civilities and excuses. He said, that as for sending me bound, his brother knew it was impossible; that although I had deprived him of his fleet, yet he owed great obligations to me for many good offices I had done him in making the peace. That, however, both their Majesties would soon be made easy; for I had found a prodigious vessel on the shore, able to carry me on the sea, which he had given order to fit up with my own assistance and direction and he hoped in a few weeks both empires would be freed from so insupportable an incumbrance.

With this answer the envoy returned to Lilliput, and the monarch of Blefuscu related to me all that had passed; offering me at the same time (but under the strictest confidence) his gracious protection, if I would continue in his service; wherein although I believed him sincere, yet I resolved never more to put any confidence in princes or ministers, where I could possibly avoid it; and therefore, with all due acknowledgments for his favorable intentions, I humbly begged to be excused. I told him, that since fortune, whether good or evil, had thrown a vessel in my way, I was resolved to venture myself in the ocean, rather than be an occasion of difference between two such mighty monarchs. Neither did I find the Emperor at all displeased; and I discovered by a certain accident, that he was very glad of my resolution, and so were most of his ministers.

These considerations moved me to hasten my departure somewhat sooner than I intended; to which the court, impatient to have me gone, very readily contributed. Five hundred workmen were employed to make two sails to my boat, according to my directions, by quilting thirteen fold of their strongest linen together. I was at the pains of making ropes and cables, by twisting ten, twenty, or thirty of the thickest and strongest of theirs. A great stone that I happened to find, after a long search, by the sea-shore, served me for an anchor. I had the tallow of three hundred cows for greasing my boat, and other uses. I was at incredible pains in cutting down some of the largest timber-trees for oars and masts, wherein I was, however, much assisted by his Majesty's ship-carpenters, who helped me in smoothing them, after I had done the rough work.

In about a month, when all was prepared, I sent to receive his Majesty's commands, and take my leave. The Emperor and Royal Family came out of the palace; I lay down on my face to kiss his hand, which he very graciously gave me: so did the Empress and young Princes of the blood. His Majesty presented me with fifty purses of two hundred sprugs apiece, together with his picture at full length, which I put immediately into one of my gloves, to keep it from being hurt. The ceremonies at my departure were too many to trouble the reader with at this time.

I stored the boat with the carcasses of an hundred oxen, and three hundred sheep, with bread and drink proportionable, and as much meat ready dressed as four hundred cooks could provide. I took with me six cows and two bulls alive, with as many ewes and rams, intending to carry them into my own country, and propagate the breed. And to feed them on board, I had a good bundle of hay, and a bag of corn. I would gladly have taken a dozen of the natives, but this was a thing the Emperor would by no means permit; and besides a diligent search into my pockets, his Majesty engaged my honor not to carry away any of his subjects, although with their own consent and desire.

Having thus prepared all things as well as I was able, I set sail on the twenty-fourth day of September, 1701, at six in the morning; and when I had gone about four leagues to the northward, the wind being at south-east, at six in the evening I descried a small island about half a league to the north-west. I advanced forward, and cast anchor on the lee-side of the island, which seemed to be uninhabited. I then took some refreshment, and went to my rest. I slept well, and as I conjecture at least six hours, for I found the day broke in two hours after I awaked. It was a clear night. I eat my breakfast before the sun was up; and heaving anchor, the wind being favorable, I steered the same course that I had done the day before, wherein I was directed by my pocket-compass. My intention was to reach, if possible, one of those islands, which I had reason to believe lay to the north-east of Van Diemen's Land. I discovered nothing all that day; but upon the next, about three in the afternoon, when I had by my computation made twenty-four leagues from Blefuscu, I descried a sail steering to the south-east; my course was due east. I hailed her, but could get no answer; yet I found I gained upon her, for the wind slackened. I made all the sail I could, and in half an hour she spied me, then hung out her ancient, and discharged a gun. It is not easy to express the joy I was in upon the unexpected hope of once more seeing my beloved country, and the dear pledges I had left in it. The ship slackened her sails, and I came up with her between five and six in the evening, September 26; but my heart leaped within me to see her English colors. I put my cows and sheep into my coat-pockets, and got on board with all my little cargo of provisions. The vessel was an English merchantman returning from Japan by the North and South Seas; the Captain, Mr. John Biddel of Deptford, a very civil man, and an excellent sailor. We were now in the latitude of 30 degrees south; there were about fifty men in the ship; and here I met an old comrade of mine, one Peter Williams, who gave me a good character to the Captain. This gentleman treated me with kindness, and desired I would let him know what place I came from last, and whither I was bound; which I did in a few words, but he thought I was raving, and that the dangers I underwent had disturbed my head; whereupon I took my black cattle and sheep out of my pocket, which, after great astonishment, clearly convinced him of my veracity. I then showed him the gold given me by the Emperor of Blefuscu, together with his Majesty's picture at full length, and some other rarities of that country. I gave him two purses of two hundred sprugs each, and promised, when we arrived in England, to make him a present of a cow and a sheep big with young.

I shall not trouble the reader with a particular account of this voyage, which was very prosperous for the most part. We arrived in the Downs on the 13th of April, 1702. I had only one misfortune, that the rats on board carried away one of my sheep; I found her bones in a hole, picked clean from the flesh. The rest of my cattle I got safe on shore, and set them a grazing in a bowling-green at Greenwich, where the fineness of the grass made them feed very heartily, though I had always feared the contrary: neither could I possibly have preserved them in so long a voyage, if the Captain had not allowed me some of his best biscuit, which, rubbed to powder, and mingled with water, was their constant food. The short time I continued in England, I made a considerable profit by showing my cattle to many persons of quality, and others: and before I began my second voyage, I sold them for six hundred pounds. Since my last return, I find the breed is considerably increased, especially the sheep; which I hope will prove much to the advantage of the woolen manufacture, by the fineness of the fleeces.

I stayed but two months with my wife and family; for my insatiable desire of seeing foreign countries would suffer me to continue no longer. I left fifteen hundred pounds with my wife, and fixed her in a good house at Redriff. My remaining stock I carried with me, part in money, and part in goods, in hopes to improve my fortunes. My eldest uncle John had left me an estate in land, near Epping, of about thirty pounds a year; and I had a long lease of the Black Bull in Fetter-Lane, which yielded me as much more; so that I was not in any danger of leaving my family upon the parish. My son Johnny, named so after his uncle, was at the Grammar School, and a towardly child. My daughter Betty (who is now well married, and has children) was then at her needle-work. I took leave of my wife, and boy and girl, with tears on both sides, and went on board the Adventure, a merchant-ship of three hundred tons, bound for Surat, Captain John Nicholas, of Liverpool, Commander. But my account of this voyage must be referred to the second part of my Travels.

ALEXANDER POPE (1688-1744)

What Dryden was in the latter part of the seventeenth century Pope became in the first half of the eighteenth—the foremost man of letters of the age and the acknowledged arbiter of literary taste. Pope was born in the year of the Revolution, on 21 May. His father was a London merchant and a Roman Catholic. The latter fact colored Pope's whole life, because for many years after the Revolution Catholics suffered oppressive disabilities, both social and legal, which marked them as a class apart from the rest of the nation and almost forced them to live in an atmosphere of suspicion, intrigue, and evasion of the law. Among other things, they were debarred from the universities, they were burdened with heavy taxes, and they could hold no public offices. Pope, moreover, always refused to change his religion, although the heaviest inducements were held before him from time to time, and although, too, his adherence to Catholicism was merely formal, the result rather of filial piety than of personal conviction. It is doubtful, however, if Pope would have been able to attend one of the universities, even had his parents been Church-of-England people, for from his birth he was deformed, and delicate in health. In his Epistle to Arbuthnot he described his life as one long disease, which was scarcely an exaggeration, as there must have been hardly a day when he was free from pain and his face was lined and contorted from his intense sufferings. His education was largely got through his own eager and wide reading in classical and English poetry, with the result that his scholarship remained always seriously defective and that he had no methodical training save such as was administered by his father in the correction of his youthful verses. He was a precocious boy, and determined at an early age to be a poet. At an early age, too, he succeeded in attracting the interest of several men of taste and cultivation, at least one of whom, William Walsh, deserves to be mentioned in any account of Pope. For "knowing Walsh," whether he exerted a decisive influence or not, marked out precisely the direction in which Pope was to travel. "He used to encourage me much," Pope in later years wrote to a friend, "and used to tell me there was one way left of excelling: for though we had several great poets, we never had any one great poet that was correct; and he desired me to make that my study and aim." Pope did so; and in correctness of form, in clarity, pointed wit, polish, studied concision, smoothness, and metrical precision, Pope excelled remarkably, as is witnessed, for example, by the number of familiar sayings he has given to the English-speaking world, and as no one who reads more than a few pages of him needs to be told.

Pope's Pastorals were his first published poems, printed in 1709, but written, as he always claimed, when he was only sixteen years old. These were followed by his Essay on Criticism in 1711 and by his Rape of the Lock, in its earlier form, in 1712. These poems made his reputation immediately, placing him by general consent at the head of living poets. He was, however, poor, and could not expect, on account of his Catholicism, either public office or a pension, the usual rewards bestowed on successful and useful men of letters by the government in his day. Consequently Pope had to find some new way of securing an income, and he found it. In 1713 he issued proposals for a translation of the Iliad, inviting immediate subscriptions in support of the project. Warm friends helped him with enthusiasm to secure subscriptions, a publisher offered him a large sum for the right of publication, and, as the combined result of his reputation and of his persistent hard work with the translation, Pope managed to clear over £5000 on the work, and later made another large sum when, with the help of assistants, he translated the Odyssey. Such profits from literary work were unprecedented, and they were sufficient to enable Pope to buy a country house with a small estate at Twickenham and to live there comfortably through the remainder of his life, independent of private patronage or the favor of public men.

The Essay on Criticism, though didactic in character, had shown Pope's gift as a satirist, and his greatest success came in that field, particularly in the Dunciad and in the poems collected under the title, Satires and Epistles. Pope's satire was never, like Dryden's, political; and though in The Rape of the Lock his ridicule was general, he chiefly devoted himself to personal satire. In this he was biting, even venomous, and he has often been blamed for the number and virulence of his enmities, for his spitefulness, and for his treachery. It cannot be pretended that Pope's character had many edifying qualities, yet no one who has not read widely in the literature of the early eighteenth century can know the extent and kind of provocation he had for his angry retorts. And despite all blemishes and all limitations he remains an arresting figure in his own right, besides embodying more completely than any of his contemporaries the classicism of his age.

ODE ON SOLITUDE<sup>1</sup>

HAPPY the man whose wish and care
A few paternal acres bound,
Content to breathe his native air
In his own ground.

Whose herds with milk, whose fields with bread,
Whose flocks supply him with attire,
Whose trees in summer yield him shade.
In winter fire.

Bless'd, who can unconcern'dly find
Hours, days, and years slide soft away,
In health of body, peace of mind,
Quiet by day,

Sound sleep by night; study and ease
Together mixed; sweet recreation;
And Innocence, which most does please,
With meditation.

Thus let me live, unseen, unknown,
Thus unlamented let me die;
Steal from the world, and not a stone
Tell where I lie.

AN ESSAY ON CRITICISM<sup>2</sup>

CONTENTS

PART I

Introduction. That 'tis as great a fault to judge ill, as to write ill, and a more dangerous one to the public, v. 1. That a true Taste is as rare to be found, as a true Genius, v. 9 to 18. That most men are born with some Taste, but spoiled by false Education, v. 19 to 25. The multitude of Critics, and causes of them, v. 26 to 45. That we are to study our own Taste, and know the Limits of it, v. 46 to 67. Nature the best guide of Judgment, v. 68 to 87. Improved by Art and Rules, which are but methodized Nature, 88. Rules derived from the Practice of the Ancient Poets, v. id. to 110. That therefore the Ancients are necessary to be studied, by a Critic, particularly Homer and Virgil, v. 120 to 138. Of Licenses, and the use of them by the <sup>1</sup>According to Pope himself this poem was written when he was only twelve years old, in 1700. Pope's statements about the dates of his earlier works are unreliable, and it seems unlikely that this one can be true. In any case, however, this is in all probability the earliest poem by Pope which has been preserved.

<sup>2</sup>Pope began to write the Essay perhaps as early as 1707. It was finished in 1709, and published in 1711.

Ancients, v. 140 to 180. Reverence due to the Ancients, and praise of them, v. 181, etc.

PART II. Ver. 201, etc.

Causes hindering a true Judgment. 1. Pride, v. 208. 2. Imperfect Learning, v. 215. 3. Judging by parts, and not by the whole, v. 233 to 288. Critics in Wit, Language, Versification, only, v. 288, 305, 399, etc. 4. Being too hard to please, or too apt to admire, v. 384. 5. Partiality—too much Love to a Sect—to the Ancients or Moderns, v. 394. 6. Prejudice or Prevention, v. 408. 7. Singularity, v. 424. 8. Inconstancy, v. 430. 9. Party Spirit, v. 452, etc. 10. Envy, v. 466. Against Envy, and in praise of Good-nature, v. 508, etc. When Severity is chiefly to be used by Critics, v. 526, etc.

PART III. Ver. 560, etc.

Rules for the Conduct of Manners in a Critic. 1. Candor, v. 563. Modesty, v. 566. Good-breeding, v. 572. Sincerity, and Freedom of advice, v. 578. 2. When one's Counsel is to be restrained, v. 584. Character of an incorrigible Poet, v. 600. And of an impertinent Critic, v. 610, etc. Character of a good Critic, v. 629. The History of Criticism, and Characters of the best Critics, Aristotle, v. 645. Horace, v. 653. Dionysius, v. 665. Petronius, v. 667. Quintilian, v. 670. Longinus, v. 675. Of the Decay of Criticism, and its Revival. Erasmus, v. 693. Vida, v. 705. Boileau, v. 714. Lord Roscommon, etc., v. 725. Conclusion.

PART I

'Tis hard to say, if greater want of skill
Appear in writing or in judging ill;
But, of the two, less dang'rous is th' offense
To tire our patience, than mislead our sense.
Some few in that, but numbers err in this,
Ten censure wrong for one who writes amiss;
A fool might once himself alone expose,
Now one in verse makes many more in prose.

'T is with our judgments as 'our watches,
none
Go just alike, yet each believes his own.
In Poets as true genius is but rare,
True Taste as seldom is the Critic's share;
Both must alike from Heav'n derive their
light,

These born to judge, as well as those to write.
Let such teach others who themselves excel,
And censure freely who have written well.
Authors are partial to their wit, 't is true,
But are not Critics to their judgment too?

Yet if we look more closely, we shall find Most have the seeds of judgment in their
mind:

Nature affords at least a glimm'ring light;
The lines, though touched but faintly, are drawn right.

But as the slightest sketch, if justly traced, }
Is by ill-coloring but the more disgraced, }
So by false learning is good sense defaced: }
Some are bewildered in the maze of schools,
And some made coxcombs Nature meant but fools.

In search of wit these lose their common
sense,

And then turn Critics in their own defense:
Each burns alike, who can, or cannot write,
Or with a Rival's, or an Eunuch's spite.

All fools have still an itching to deride,
And fain would be upon the laughing side.
If Mævius<sup>1</sup> scribble in Apollo's spite,
There are who judge still worse than he can
write.

Some have at first for Wits, then Poets
passed,
Turned Critics next, and proved plain fools
at last.

Some neither can for Wits nor Critics pass,
As heavy mules are neither horse nor ass.
Those half-learn'd witlings, num'rous in our isle,

As half-formed insects on the banks of Nile;
Unfinished things, one knows not what to
call,

Their generation's so equivocal:
To tell 'em, would a hundred tongues require,
Or one vain wit's, that might a hundred tire.

But you who seek to give and merit fame,
And justly bear a Critic's noble name,
Be sure yourself and your own reach to know,
How far your genius, taste, and learning go;
Launch not beyond your depth, but be discreet,

And mark that point where sense and dullness meet.

Nature to all things fixed the limits fit,
And wisely curbed proud man's pretending
wit.

As on the land while here the ocean gains,
In other parts it leaves wide sandy plains;
Thus in the soul while memory prevails,
The solid pow'r of understanding fails;

Where beams of warm imagination play,
The memory's soft figures melt away.
One science only will one genius fit;
So vast is art, so narrow human wit:
Not only bounded to peculiar arts,
But oft in those confined to single parts.
Like kings we lose the conquests gained
before,

By vain ambition still to make them more;
Each might his sev'ral province well command,

Would all but stoop to what they understand.

First follow Nature, and your judgment
frame

By her just standard, which is still the same:
Unerring Nature, still divinely bright,
One clear, unchanged, and universal light,
Life, force, and beauty, must to all impart,
At once the source, and end, and test of Art.
Art from that fund each just supply provides,
Works without show, and without pomp presides:

In some fair body thus th' informing soul
With spirits feeds, with vigor fills the whole,
Each motion guides, and ev'ry nerve sustains;

Itself unseen, but in th' effects, remains.
Some, to whom Heav'n in wit has been profuse,

Want as much more, to turn it to its use;
For wit and judgment often are at strife,
Though meant each other's aid, like man and wife.

'T is more to guide, than spur the Muse's
steed;

Restrain his fury, than provoke his speed;
The wing'd courser, like a gen'rous horse, Shows most true mettle when you check his course.

Those Rules of old discovered, not devised,

Are Nature still, but Nature methodized;
Nature, like liberty, is but restrained
By the same laws which first herself ordained.

Hear how learn'd Greece her useful rules
indites,

When to repress, and when indulge our flights:

High on Parnassus' top her sons she showed,
And pointed out those arduous paths they
trod;

Held from afar, aloft, th' immortal prize,
And urged the rest by equal steps to rise.

<sup>1</sup>A Roman poet of no ability, whose name has been preserved by Virgil and Horace.

Just precepts thus from great examples
giv'n,
She drew from them what they derived from Heav'n.

The gen'rous Critic fanned the Poet's fire,
And taught the world with reason to admire.

Then Criticism the Muse's handmaid proved,
To dress her charms, and make her more
belov'd:

But following wits from that intention
strayed,

Who could not win the mistress, wooed the
maid;

Against the Poets their own arms they
turned,

Sure to hate most the men from whom they learned.

So modern 'Pothecaries, taught the art
By Doctors' bills to play the Doctor's part,
Bold in the practice of mistaken rules,
Prescribe, apply, and call their masters fools.
Some on the leaves of ancient authors
prey,

Nor time nor moths e'er spoiled so much as they.

Some drily plain, without invention's aid,
Write dull receipts how poems may be made.
These leave the sense, their learning to dis-
play,

And those explain the meaning quite away.

You then whose judgment the right course
would steer,

Know well each Ancient's proper character;
His fable, subject, scope in ev'ry page;
Religion, Country, genius of his Age:

Without all these at once before your eyes,
Cavil you may, but never criticize.

Be Homer's works your study and delight,
Read them by day, and meditate by night;
Thence form your judgment, thence your maxims bring,

And trace the Muses upward to their spring.
Still with itself compared, his text peruse;
And let your comment be the Mantuan
Muse.<sup>1</sup>

When first young Maro<sup>1</sup> in his boundless
mind

A work t' outlast immortal Rome designed,
Perhaps he seemed above the critic's law,
And but from Nature's fountains scorned to
draw:

But when t' examine every part he came,
Nature and Homer were, he found, the same.
Convinced, amazed, he checks the bold design;

And rules as strict his labored work confine,
As if the Stagirite<sup>2</sup> o'erlooked each line.

Learn hence for ancient rules a just esteem;
To copy nature is to copy them.

Some beauties yet no Precepts can declare,

For there's a happiness as well as care.

Music resembles Poetry, in each

Are nameless graces which no methods
teach,

And which a master-hand alone can reach.

If, where the rules not far enough extend (Since rules were made but to promote their end),

Some lucky License answer to the full

Th' intent proposed, that License is a rule.

Thus Pegasus, a nearer way to take,
May boldly deviate from the common track;
From vulgar bounds with brave disorder
part,

And snatch a grace beyond the reach of art,
Which without passing through the judgment, gains

The heart, and all its end at once attains.

In prospects thus, some objects please our
eyes,

Which out of nature's common order rise,
The shapeless rock, or hanging precipice.

Great wits sometimes may gloriously offend,
And rise to faults true Critics dare not
mend.

But though the Ancients thus their rules invade

(As Kings dispense with laws themselves have made),

Moderns, beware! or if you must offend
Against the precept, ne'er transgress its End;
Let it be seldom, and compelled by need;
And have, at least, their precedent to plead.
The Critic else proceeds without remorse,
Seizes your fame, and puts his laws in force.

I know there are, to whose presumptuous
thoughts

Those freer beauties, e'en in them, seem faults.

Some figures monstrous and mis-shaped
appear,

Considered singly, or beheld too near,

<sup>1</sup>Virgil.

<sup>2</sup>Aristotle.

Which, but proportioned to their light, or
place,
Due distance reconciles to form and grace.
A prudent chief not always must display
His powers in equal ranks, and fair array.
But with th' occasion and the place comply,
Conceal his force, nay seem sometimes to fly.
Those oft are stratagems which error seem,
Nor is it Homer nods, but we that dream.

Still green with bays each ancient Altar
stands,
Above the reach of sacrilegious hands;
Secure from Flames, from Envy's fiercer
rage,
Destructive War, and all-involving Age.
See, from each clime the learn'd their incense
bring!

Hear, in all tongues consenting Pæans ring!
In praise so just let ev'ry voice be joined,
And fill the gen'ral chorus of mankind.
Hail, Bards triumphant! born in happier
days;

Immortal heirs of universal praise!
Whose honors with increase of ages grow,
As streams roll down, enlarging as they flow;
Nations unborn your mighty names shall
sound,
And worlds applaud that must not yet be
found!

Oh may some spark of your celestial fire,
The last, the meanest of your sons inspire (That on weak wings, from far, pursues your
flights;
Glow while he reads, but trembles as he writes),
To teach vain Wits a science little known,
T' admire superior sense, and doubt their
own!

PART II

Of all the Causes which conspire to blind Man's erring judgment, and misguide the
mind,
What the weak head with strongest bias
rules,
Is Pride, the never-failing voice of fools.
Whatever nature has in worth denied,
She gives in large recruits of needful pride;
For as in bodies, thus in souls, we find What wants in blood and spirits, swelled with wind:
Pride, where wit fails, steps in to our defense,
And fills up all the mighty Void of sense.

If once right reason drives that cloud away,
Truth breaks upon us with resistless day.
Trust not yourself; but your defects to know,
Make use of ev'ry friend—and ev'ry foe.

A little learning is a dang'rous thing;
Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring.<sup>1</sup>
There shallow draughts intoxicate the brain,
And drinking largely sobers us again.
Fired at first sight with what the Muse im-
parts,

In fearless youth we tempt the heights of Arts,

While from the bounded level of our mind
Short views we take, nor see the lengths
behind;

But more advanced, behold with strange surprise

New distant scenes of endless science rise!
So pleased at first the tow'ring Alps we try, Mount o'er the vales, and seem to tread the
sky,

Th' eternal snows appear already past,
And the first clouds and mountains seem the last;

But, those attained, we tremble to survey
The growing labors of the lengthened way,
Th' increasing prospect tires our wand'ring
eyes,

Hills peep o'er hills, and Alps on Alps arise!

A perfect Judge will read each work of Wit
With the same spirit that its author writ:
Survey the Whole, nor seek slight faults to
find

Where nature moves, and rapture warms the
mind;

Nor lose, for that malignant dull delight,
The gen'rous pleasure to be charmed with
Wit.

But in such lays as neither ebb, nor flow,
Correctly cold, and regularly low,
That, shunning faults, one quiet tenor keep,
We cannot blame indeed—but we may
sleep.

In wit, as nature, what affects our hearts
Is not th' exactness of peculiar parts;
'T is not a lip, or eye, we beauty call,
But the joint force and full result of all.

Thus when we view some well-proportioned dome

(The world's just wonder, and e'en thine, O Rome!<sup>2</sup>),

<sup>1</sup>Pieria was said to be the birthplace of the muses.

<sup>2</sup>St. Peter's.

No single parts unequally surprise,
All comes united to th' admiring eyes;
No monstrous height, or breadth, or length
appear;

The Whole at once is bold and regular.

Whoever thinks a faultless piece to see,
Thinks what ne'er was, nor is, nor e'er shall
be.

In every work regard the writer's End, Since none can compass more than they intend;

And if the means be just, the conduct true,
Applause, in spite of trivial faults, is due;
As men of breeding, sometimes men of wit,
T' avoid great errors, must the less commit:
Neglect the rules each verbal Critic lays,
For not to know some trifles is a praise.
Most Critics, fond of some subservient art,
Still make the Whole depend upon a Part:
They talk of principles, but notions prize,
And all to one loved Folly sacrifice.

Once on a time, La Mancha's Knight,<sup>1</sup>
they say,

A certain bard encount'ring on the way, Discours'd in terms as just, with looks as sage,

As e'er could Dennis<sup>2</sup> of the Grecian stage;
Concluding all were desp'rate sots and fools,
Who durst depart from Aristotle's rules.

Our Author, happy in a judge so nice,
Produced his Play, and begged the Knight's advice;

Made him observe the subject, and the plot,
The manners, passions, unities; what not?
All which, exact to rule, were brought about,
Were but a Combat in the lists left out.

"What! leave the Combat out?" exclaims
the Knight;

Yes, or we must renounce the Stagirite.

"Not so, by Heav'n" (he answers in a rage),
"Knights, squires, and steeds, must enter on the stage."

So vast a throng the stage can ne'er contain.
"Then build a new, or act it in a plain."

Thus Critics, of less judgment than caprice,
Curious, not knowing, not exact but nice,
Form short Ideas; and offend in arts
(As most in manners) by a love to parts.

Some to Conceit alone their taste confine,
And glitt'ring thoughts struck out at ev'ry
line;

<sup>1</sup>Don Quixote.

<sup>2</sup>John Dennis, critic and playwright contemporary with Pope.

Pleased with a work where nothing 's just or
fit;

One glaring Chaos and wild heap of wit.
Poets like painters, thus, unskilled to trace
The naked nature and the living grace,
With gold and jewels cover ev'ry part,
And hide with ornaments their want of art.
True Wit is Nature to advantage dressed,
What oft was thought, but ne'er so well expressed;

Something, whose truth convinced at sight
we find,

That gives us back the image of our mind.
As shades more sweetly recommend the light,
So modest plainness sets off sprightly wit.
For works may have more wit than does 'em
good,

As bodies perish through excess of blood.

Others for Language all their care express,
And value books, as women men, for Dress:
Their praise is still—the Style is excellent:
The Sense, they humbly take upon content.
Words are like leaves; and where they most abound,

Much fruit of sense beneath is rarely found,
False Eloquence, like the prismatic glass,
Its gaudy colors spreads on ev'ry place;
The face of Nature we no more survey,
All glares alike, without distinction gay:
But true expression, like th' unchanging }

Sun,
Clears and improves whate'er it shines upon, }

It gilds all objects, but it alters none.
Expression is the dress of thought, and still Appears more decent, as more suitable;
A vile conceit in pompous words expressed,
Is like a clown in regal purple dressed:

For diff'rent styles with diff'rent subjects
sort,

As several garbs with country, town, and
court.

Some by old words to fame have made pre-
tense,

Ancients in phrase, mere moderns in their
sense;

Such labored nothings, in so strange a style,
Amaze th' unlearn'd, and make the learn'd
smile.

Unlucky, as Fungoso<sup>3</sup> in the play,
These sparks with awkward vanity display }
What the fine gentleman wore yesterday; }

<sup>3</sup>A character in Ben Jonson's Every Man out of His Humor.

And but so mimic ancient wits at best,
As apes our grandsires, in their doublets dressed.

In words, as fashions, the same rule will hold;
Alike fantastic, if too new, or old:

Be not the first by whom the new are tried,
Nor yet the last to lay the old aside.

But most by Numbers judge a Poet's song;
And smooth or rough, with them is right or
wrong:

In the bright Muse though thousand charms
conspire,

Her voice is all these tuneful fools admire;
Who haunt Parnassus but to please their
ear,

Not mend their minds; as some to Church
repair,

Not for the doctrine, but the music there. }
These equal syllables alone require,

Though oft the ear the open vowels tire;
While expletives their feeble aid do join;

And ten low words oft creep in one dull line:
While they ring round the same unvaried
chimes,

With sure returns of still expected rhymes; Where'er you find "the cooling western breeze,"

In the next line, it "whispers through the trees";

If crystal streams "with pleasing murmurs
creep,"

The reader's threatened (not in vain) with
"sleep";

Then, at the last and only couplet fraught
With some unmeaning thing they call a
thought,

A needless Alexandrine ends the song

That, like a wounded snake, drags its slow length along.

Leave such to tune their own dull rhymes,
and know

What 's roundly smooth or languishingly
slow;

And praise the easy vigor of a line,
Where Denham's strength, and Waller's sweetness join.<sup>1</sup>

True ease in writing comes from art, not
chance,

As those move easiest who have learned to dance.

<sup>1</sup>Both poets of the mid-seventeenth century, long highly praised as the "fathers" of the plain style and the closed couplet which Dryden developed and Pope perfected.

'T is not enough no harshness gives offense,
The sound must seem an echo to the sense:
Soft is the strain when Zephyr gently blows,
And the smooth stream in smoother numbers
flows;

But when loud surges lash the sounding
shore,

The hoarse, rough verse should like the torrent roar:

When Ajax strives some rock's vast weight
to throw,

The line too labors, and the words move
slow;

Not so, when swift Camilla scours the plain,
Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skims
along the main.

Hear how Timotheus' varied lays surprise,
And bid alternate passions fall and rise!<sup>2</sup>

While, at each change, the son of Libyan
Jove

Now burns with glory, and then melts with
love,

Now his fierce eyes with sparkling fury glow,
Now sighs steal out, and tears begin to flow:
Persians and Greeks like turns of nature
found,

And the world's victor stood subdued by Sound!

The pow'r of Music all our hearts allow,

And what Timotheus was, is Dryden now.
Avoid Extremes; and shun the fault of such,

Who still are pleased too little or too much.
At ev'ry trifle scorn to take offense,

That always shows great pride, or little sense;
Those heads, as stomachs, are not sure the
best,

Which nauseate all, and nothing can digest.

Yet let not each gay Turn thy rapture move;
For fools admire, but men of sense approve:

As things seem large which we through mists
descry,

Dullness is ever apt to magnify.

Some foreign writers, some our own despise;

The Ancients only, or the Moderns prize.

Thus Wit, like Faith, by each man is applied
To one small sect, and all are damned beside.

Meanly they seek the blessing to confine,
And force that sun but on a part to shine,

Which not alone the southern wit sublimes,
But ripens spirits in cold northern climes;

<sup>2</sup>The reference in these and the following lines is to Dryden's Alexander's Feast.

Which from the first has shone on ages past,
 Enlights the present, and shall warm the last;
 Though each may feel increases and decays,
 And see now clearer and now darker days.
 Regard not then if Wit be old or new,
 But blame the false, and value still the true.

Some ne'er advance a Judgment of their
 own,

But catch the spreading notion of the Town;
 They reason and conclude by precedent,
 And own stale nonsense which they ne'er invent.

Some judge of author's names, not works,
 and then

Nor praise nor blame the writings, but the men.

Of all this servile herd the worst is he
 That in proud dullness joins with Quality,
 A constant Critic at the great man's board,
 To fetch and carry nonsense for my Lord.
 What woeful stuff this madrigal would be,
 In some starved hackney sonneteer, or me?
 But let a Lord once own the happy lines,
 How the wit brightens! how the style refines!
 Before his sacred name flies ev'ry fault,
 And each exalted stanza teems with thought!

The Vulgar thus through Imitation err;
 As oft the Learn'd by being singular;
 So much they scorn the crowd, that if the throng

By chance go right, they purposely go wrong;
 So Schismatics the plain believers quit,
 And are but damned for having too much
 wit.

Some praise at morning what they blame at
 night;

But always think the last opinion right.
 A Muse by these is like a mistress used,
 This hour she's idolized, the next abused;
 While their weak heads like towns unfortified,

'Twixt sense and nonsense daily change their
 side.

Ask them the cause; they're wiser still, they
 say;

And still to-morrow's wiser than to-day.
 We think our fathers fools, so wise we grow,
 Our wiser sons, no doubt, will think us so.
 Once School-divines this zealous isle o'er-
 spread;

Who knew most Sentences,<sup>1</sup> was deepest
 read;

<sup>1</sup>The reference is to the Book of Sentences of Peter Lombard.

Faith, Gospel, all, seemed made to be disputed,

And none had sense enough to be confuted:
 Scotists and Thomists,<sup>2</sup> now, in peace remain,

Amidst their kindred cobwebs in Duck-lane.
 If Faith itself has different dresses worn,
 What wonder modes in Wit should take their turn?

Of't, leaving what is natural and fit,
 The current folly proves the ready wit;
 And authors think their reputation safe,
 Which lives as long as fools are pleased to laugh.

Some valuing those of their own side or
 mind,

Still make themselves the measure of man-
 kind:

Fondly we think we honor merit then,
 When we but praise ourselves in other men.
 Parties in Wit attend on those of State,
 And public faction doubles private hate.
 Pride, Malice, Folly, against Dryden rose,
 In various shapes of Parsons, Critics, Beaus;
 But sense survived, when merry jests were
 past;

For rising merit will buoy up at last.
 Might he return, and bless once more our
 eyes,

New Blackmores and new Milbourns must arise:<sup>3</sup>

Nay should great Homer lift his awful head,
 Zoilus<sup>4</sup> again would start up from the dead.
 Envy will merit, as its shade, pursue;
 But like a shadow, proves the substance true;
 For envied Wit, like Sol eclipsed, makes
 known

Th' opposing body's grossness, not its own,
 When first that sun too powerful beams displays,

It draws up vapors which obscure its rays;
 But e'en those clouds at last adorn its way,
 Reflect new glories, and augment the day.

Be thou the first true merit to befriend;
 His praise is lost, who stays till all commend.

<sup>2</sup>Followers of Duns Scotus and St. Thomas Aquinas, scholastic philosophers of the thirteenth century. Duck Lane was a London street where second-hand books were formerly sold.

<sup>3</sup>Blackmore was a physician and a dull poet, Milbourn a clergyman; both attacked Dryden.

<sup>4</sup>Greek critic (fourth century, B. C.) who attacked Homer.

Short is the date, alas, of modern rhymes,
And 't is but just to let them live betimes.
No longer now that golden age appears,
When Patriarch-wits survived a thousand years:

Now length of Fame (our second life) is lost,
And bare threescore is all e'en that can
boast;

Our sons their fathers' failing language see,
And such as Chaucer is, shall Dryden be.
So when the faithful pencil has designed
Some bright Idea of the master's mind,
Where a new world leaps out at his command,

And ready Nature waits upon his hand;
When the ripe colors soften and unite,
And sweetly melt into just shade and light;
When mellowing years their full perfection
give,

And each bold figure just begins to live,
The treach'rous colors the fair art betray,
And all the bright creation fades away!

Unhappy Wit, like most mistaken things,
Atones not for that envy which it brings.
In youth alone its empty praise we boast,
But soon the short-lived vanity is lost:
Like some fair flow'r the early spring supplies,

That gaily blooms, but e'en in blooming dies.
What is this Wit, which must our cares employ?

The owner's wife, that other men enjoy;
Then most our trouble still when most admired,

And still the more we give, the more required;

Whose fame with pains we guard, but lose
with ease,

Sure some to vex, but never all to please;
'T is what the vicious fear, the virtuous shun,
By fools 't is hated, and by knaves undone!

If Wit so much from Ign'rance undergo,
Ah, let not Learning too commence its foe!
Of old, those met rewards who could excel,
And such were praised who but endeavored
well:

Though triumphs were to gen'als only due,
Crowns were reserved to grace the soldiers
too.

Now, they who reach Parnassus' lofty crown, Employ their pains to spurn some others
down;

And while self-love each jealous writer rules,
Contending wits become the sport of fools:

But still the worst with most regret com-
mend,

For each ill Author is as bad a Friend.
To what base ends, and by what abject ways,
Are mortals urged through sacred lust of
praise!

Ah ne'er so dire a thirst of glory boast,
Nor in the Critic let the Man be lost.
Good-nature and good-sense must ever join;
To err is human, to forgive, divine.

But if in noble minds some dregs remain
Not yet purged off, of spleen and sour dis-
dain;

Discharge that rage on more provoking
crimes,

Nor fear a dearth in these flagitious times.
No pardon vile Obscenity should find,
Though wit and art conspire to move your
mind;

But Dullness with Obscenity must prove
As shameful sure as Impotence in love.
In the fat age of pleasure, wealth, and ease Sprung the rank weed, and thrived with large increase:

When love was all an easy Monarch's care;
Seldom at council, never in a war:
Jilts ruled the state, and statesmen farces writ;
Nay wits had pensions, and young Lords had
wit:

The Fair sate panting at a Courtier's play,
And not a Mask<sup>1</sup> went unimproved away:
The modest fan was lifted up no more,
And Virgins smiled at what they blushed
before.

The following license of a Foreign reign
Did all the dregs of bold Socinus<sup>2</sup> drain;
Then unbelieving priests reformed the nation,

And taught more pleasant methods of salvation;

Where Heav'n's free subjects might their rights dispute,

Lest God himself should seem too absolute:
Pulpits their sacred satire learned to spare,
And Vice admired<sup>3</sup> to find a flat'rer there!
Encouraged thus, Wit's Titans braved the skies,

And the press groaned with licensed blasphemies.

<sup>1</sup>I. e., woman wearing a mask.

<sup>2</sup>The name of two Italians of the sixteenth century who revived Arianism and may be regarded as fore-runners of modern unitarianism.

<sup>3</sup>Wondered.

These monsters, Critics! with your darts
engage,
Here point your thunder, and exhaust your
rage!
Yet shun their fault, who, scandalously nice,
Will needs mistake an author into vice;
All seems infected that th' infected spy,
As all looks yellow to the jaundiced eye.

PART III

Learn then what Morals Critics ought to
show,
For 't is but half a Judge's task, to know.
'T is not enough, taste, judgment, learning,
join;
In all you speak, let truth and candor shine:
That not alone what to your sense is due
All may allow; but seek your friendship too.
Be silent always when you doubt your
sense;
And speak, though sure, with seeming diffidence:
Some positive, persisting fops we know,
Who, if once wrong, will needs be always so;
But you, with pleasure own your errors past,
And make each day a Critic on the last.
'T is not enough, your counsel still be true;
Blunt truths more mischief than nice falsehoods do;
Men must be taught as if you taught them
not,
And things unknown proposed as things forgot.
Without Good Breeding, truth is disapproved;
That only makes superior sense beloved.
Be niggards of advice on no pretense;
For the worst avarice is that of sense.
With mean complacence ne'er betray your trust,
Nor be so civil as to prove unjust.
Fear not the anger of the wise to raise;
Those best can bear reproof, who merit
praise.
'T were well might critics still this freedom
take,
But Appius<sup>1</sup> reddens at each word you speak,
And stares, tremendous, with a threat'ning
eye,
Like some fierce Tyrant in old tapestry.

Fear most to tax an Honorable fool,
Whose right it is, uncensured, to be dull;
Such, without wit, are Poets when they
please,
As without learning they can take Degrees.
Leave dang'rous truths to unsuccessful
Satires,
And flattery to fulsome Dedicators,
Whom, when they praise, the world believes
no more,
Than when they promise to give scribbling o'er.
'T is best sometimes your censure to restrain,
And charitably let the dull be vain:
Your silence there is better than your spite,
For who can rail so long as they can write?
Still humming on, their drowsy course they
keep,
And lashed so long, like tops, are lashed asleep.
False steps but help them to renew the race,
As, after stumbling, Jades will mend their
pace.
What crowds of these, impenitently bold,
In sounds and jingling syllables grown old,
Still run on Poets, in a raging vein, E'en to the dregs and squeezings of the
brain,
Strain out the last dull droppings of their
sense,
And rhyme with all the rage of Impotence.
Such shameless Bards we have; and yet
't is true,
There are as mad abandoned Critics too.
The bookful blockhead, ignorantly read,
With loads of learned lumber in his head,
With his own tongue still edifies his ears,
And always list'ning to himself appears.
All books he reads, and all he reads assails,
From Dryden's Fables down to Durfey's Tales.
With him, most authors steal their works, or
buy;
Garth did not write his own Dispensary.
Name a new Play, and he's the Poet's friend,
Nay showed his faults—but when would Poets mend?
No place so sacred from such fops is barred,
Nor is Paul's church more safe than Paul's churchyard:
Nay, fly to Altars; there they'll talk you
dead:
For Fools rush in where Angels fear to tread.

<sup>1</sup>I. e., John Dennis. The name was taken from his tragedy, Appius and Virginia.

Distrustful sense with modest caution }
 speaks,
 It still looks home, and short excursions }
 makes;

But rattling nonsense in full volleys breaks,
 And never shocked, and never turned aside,
 Bursts out, resistless, with a thund'ring tide.

But where's the man, who counsel can bestow, Still pleased to teach, and yet not proud to
 know?

Unbiassed, or by favor, or by spite;
 Not dully prepossessed, nor blindly right;
 Though learn'd, well-bred; and though well-
 bred, sincere,

Modestly bold, and humanly severe:
 Who to a friend his faults can freely show,
 And gladly praise the merit of a foe?
 Bless'd with a taste exact, yet unconfined;
 A knowledge both of books and human kind:
 Gen'rous converse; a soul exempt from pride;
 And love to praise, with reason on his
 side?

Such once were Critics; such the happy few,

Athens and Rome in better ages knew.
 The mighty Stagirite first left the shore,
 Spread all his sails, and durst the deeps explore:

He steered securely, and discovered far,
 Led by the light of the Mæonian Star.<sup>1</sup>
 Poets, a race long unconfined, and free,
 Still fond and proud of savage liberty,
 Received his laws; and stood convinced
 't was fit,

Who conquered Nature, should preside o'er
 Wit.

Horace still charms with graceful negligence,

And without method talks us into sense,
 Will, like a friend, familiarly convey
 The truest notions in the easiest way.
 He, who supreme in judgment, as in wit,
 Might boldly censure, as he boldly writ,
 Yet judged with coolness, though he sung
 with fire;

His Precepts teach but what his works inspire.

Our Critics take a contrary extreme,
 They judge with fury, but they write with fle'me:<sup>2</sup>

Nor suffers Horace more in wrong Translations
 By Wits, than Critics in as wrong Quotations.

See Dionysius<sup>3</sup> Homer's thoughts refine,
 And call new beauties forth from every line!
 Fancy and art in gay Petronius please,
 The scholar's learning, with the courtier's
 ease.

In grave Quintilian's copious work, we find
 The justest rules, and clearest method joined:
 Thus useful arms in magazines we place,
 All ranged in order, and disposed with grace,
 But less to please the eye, than arm the
 hand,

Still fit for use, and ready at command.

Thee, bold Longinus! all the Nine<sup>4</sup> inspire,
 And bless their Critic with a Poet's fire.

An ardent Judge, who zealous in his trust,
 With warmth gives sentence, yet is always
 just;

Whose own example strengthens all his laws;
 And is himself that great Sublime he draws.

Thus long succeeding Critics justly reigned,

License repressed, and useful laws ordained.
 Learning and Rome alike in empire grew;
 And Arts still followed where her Eagles flew;

From the same foes, at last, both felt their
 doom,

And the same age saw Learning fall, and Rome.

With Tyranny, then Superstition joined,
 As that the body, this enslaved the mind;
 Much was believed, but little understood,
 And to be dull was construed to be good;
 A second deluge Learning thus o'er-run,
 And the Monks finished what the Goths begun.

At length Erasmus, that great injured
 name
 (The glory of the Priesthood, and the shame!), Stemmed the wild torrent of a barb'rous
 age,

And drove those holy Vandals off the stage.

But see! each Muse, in Leo's<sup>5</sup> golden days, Starts from her trance, and trims her withered days,

<sup>1</sup>Homer.

<sup>2</sup>Phlegm, i. e., dullness.

<sup>3</sup>Dionysius of Halicarnassus, Greek critic.

<sup>4</sup>The muses.

<sup>5</sup>Leo X.

Rome's ancient Genius, o'er its ruins spread,
Shakes off the dust, and rears his rev'rend head.

Then Sculpture and her sister-arts revive;
Stones leaped to form, and rocks began to live;
With sweeter notes each rising Temple rung;
A Raphael painted, and a Vida sung.
Immortal Vida: on whose honored brow
The Poet's bays and Critic's ivy grow:
Cremona now shall ever boast thy name,
As next in place to Mantua, next in fame!

But soon by impious arms from Latium chased,
Their ancient bounds the banished Muses passed;

Thence Arts o'er all the northern world advance,

But Critic-learning flourished most in France:

The rules a nation, born to serve, obeys;
And Boileau still in right of Horace sways.
But we, brave Britons, foreign laws despised,
And kept unconquered, and uncivilized;
Fierce for the liberties of wit, and bold,
We still defied the Romans, as of old.

Yet some there were, among the sounder few
Of those who less presumed, and better knew,
Who durst assert the juster ancient cause,
And here restored Wit's fundamental laws.
Such was the Muse, whose rules and practice tell,

"Nature's chief Master-piece is writing well."

Such was Roscommon,<sup>1</sup> not more learn'd than good,

With manners gen'rous as his noble blood;
To him the wit of Greece and Rome was known,

And ev'ry author's merit, but his own.

Such late was Walsh<sup>2</sup>—the Muse's judge and friend,

Who justly knew to blame or to commend:
To failings mild, but zealous for desert;
The clearest head, and the sincerest heart.

This humble praise, lamented shade! receive,

This praise at least a grateful Muse may give:
The Muse, whose early voice you taught to sing,

Prescribed her heights, and pruned her tender wing

(Her guide now lost), no more attempts to rise,

But in low numbers short excursions tries:

Content, if hence th' unlearn'd their wants may view,

The learn'd reflect on what before they knew:

Careless of censure, nor too fond of fame;
Still pleased to praise, yet not afraid to blame,

Averse alike to flatter, or offend;

Not free from faults, nor yet too vain to mend.

THE RAPE OF THE LOCK<sup>3</sup>

AN HEROI-COMICAL POEM

*Nolueram, Belinda, tuos violare capillos;
Sed juvat, hoc precibus me tribuisse tuis.*<sup>4</sup> MART.

TO MRS. ARABELLA FERMOR

Madam,

It will be in vain to deny that I have some regard for this piece, since I dedicate it to You. Yet you may bear me witness, it was intended only to divert a few young Ladies, who have good sense and good humor enough to laugh not only at their sex's little unguarded follies, but at their own. But as it was communicated with the air of a Secret, it soon found its way into the world. An imperfect copy having been offered to a Bookseller, you had the good nature for my sake to consent to the publication of one more correct: This I was forced to, before I had executed half my design, for the Machinery was entirely wanting to complete it.

The Machinery, Madam, is a term invented by the Critics, to signify that part which the Deities, Angels, or Demons are made to act in a Poem: For the ancient Poets are in one respect like many modern Ladies: let an action be never so trivial in itself, they always make it appear of the utmost importance. These Machines I deter-

<sup>3</sup>First published in 1712, but rewritten and published in its present form in 1714. The occasion of the poem was as follows: Lord Petre had in a moment of fun cut off a lock of Miss Arabella Fermor's hair. Miss Fermor became angry, the families of both took up the quarrel, and serious consequences seemed likely to follow. At this point a common friend, Mr. John Caryll, suggested to Pope that he write a poem to make a jest of the whole affair. The result was the earlier version of the Rape of the Lock, which is said to have succeeded in its immediate purpose.

<sup>4</sup>I did not want, Belinda, to do violence to your lock, but I am glad to yield this gift to your entreaties (Martial, Epigrams, xii, 84. Pope alters the name).

<sup>1</sup>Wentworth Dillon, Earl of Roscommon.

<sup>2</sup>See the introductory account of Pope above.

mined to raise on a very new and odd foundation, the Rosicrucian doctrine of Spirits.

I know how disagreeable it is to make use of hard words before a Lady; but 'tis so much the concern of a Poet to have his works understood, and particularly by your Sex, that you must give me leave to explain two or three difficult terms.

The Rosicrucians are a people I must bring you acquainted with. The best account I know of them is in a French book called Le Comte de Gabalis, which both in its title and size is so like a Novel, that many of the Fair Sex have read it for one by mistake. According to these Gentlemen, the four Elements are inhabited by Spirits, which they call Sylphs, Gnomes, Nymphs, and Salamanders. The Gnomes or Demons of Earth delight in mischief; but the Sylphs, whose habitation is in the Air, are the best-conditioned creatures imaginable. For, they say, any mortals may enjoy the most intimate familiarities with these gentle Spirits, upon a condition very easy to all true Adepts, an inviolate preservation of Chastity.

As to the following Cantos, all the passages of them are as fabulous as the Vision at the beginning, or the Transformation at the end (except the loss of your Hair, which I always mention with reverence). The Human persons are as fictitious as the airy ones; and the character of Belinda, as it is now managed, resembles you in nothing but in Beauty.

If this Poem had as many Graces as there are in your Person, or in your Mind, yet I could never hope it should pass through the world half so Uncensured as You have done. But let its fortune be what it will, mine is happy enough, to have given me this occasion of assuring you that I am, with the truest esteem, MADAM,

Your most obedient, Humble Servant,

A. POPE.

CANTO I

WHAT dire offense from am'rous causes
springs,

What mighty contests rise from trivial
things,

I sing—This verse to Caryl, Muse! is due:
This, e'en Belinda may vouchsafe to view:
Slight is the subject, but not so the praise,
If She inspire, and He approve my lays.

Say what strange motive, Goddess! could compel

A well-bred Lord t' assault a gentle Belle?

O say what stranger cause, yet unexplored,
Could make a gentle Belle reject a Lord?

In tasks so bold, can little men engage,

And in soft bosoms dwells such mighty
Rage?

Sol through white curtains shot a tim'rous
ray,

And oped those eyes that must eclipse the
day:

Now lap-dogs give themselves the rousing
shake,

And sleepless lovers, just at twelve, awake:
Thrice rung the bell, the slipper knocked
the ground,<sup>1</sup>

And the pressed watch returned a silver
sound.

Belinda still her downy pillow pressed,
Her guardian Sylph prolonged the balmy
rest:

'T was He had summoned to her silent bed
The morning-dream that hovered o'er her
head;

A Youth more glitt'ring than a Birth-night
Beau

(That e'en in slumber caused her cheek to glow),

Seemed to her ear his winning lips to lay,

And thus in whispers said, or seemed to say:

"Fairest of mortals, thou distinguished
care

Of thousand bright Inhabitants of Air!

If e'er one vision touched thy infant thought,
Of all the Nurse and all the Priest have
taught;

Of airy Elves by moonlight shadows seen,

The Silver token, and the circled green,

Or virgins visited by Angel-pow'rs,

With golden crowns and wreaths of heav'nly
flow'rs;

Hear and believe! thy own importance know,
Nor bound thy narrow views to things below.

Some secret truths, from learn'd pride concealed,

To Maids alone and Children are revealed:

What though no credit doubting Wits may give?

The Fair and Innocent shall still believe.

Know, then, unnumbered Spirits round thee
fly,

The light Militia of the lower sky:

These, though unseen, are ever on the wing,
Hang o'er the Box, and hover round the Ring.

Think what an equipage thou hast in Air,
And view with scorn two Pages and a Chair.

<sup>1</sup>To call her maid, who had not come when the bell was rung.

As now your own, our beings were of old,
And once enclosed in Woman's beauteous
mold;

Thence, by a soft transition, we repair
From earthly Vehicles to these of air.
Think not, when Woman's transient breath
is fled,

That all her vanities at once are dead;
Succeeding vanities she still regards,
And though she plays no more, o'erlooks the cards.

Her joy in gilded Chariots, when alive,
And love of Ombre, after death survive.
For when the Fair in all their pride expire,
To their first Elements their Souls retire:
The Sprites of fiery Termagants in Flame
Mount up, and take a Salamander's name.
Soft yielding minds to Water glide away,
And sip, with Nymphs, their elemental Tea.
The graver Prude sinks downward to a Gnome,

In search of mischief still on Earth to roam.
The light Coquettes in Sylphs aloft repair,
And sport and flutter in the fields of Air.

"Know further yet; whoever fair and chaste Rejects mankind, is by some Sylph embraced:

For Spirits, freed from mortal laws, with ease Assume what sexes and what shapes they
please.

What guards the purity of melting Maids,
In courtly balls, and midnight masquerades,
Safe from the treach'rous friend, the daring
spark,

The glance by day, the whisper in the dark,
When kind occasion prompts their warm desires,

When music softens, and when dancing
fires?

'T is but their Sylph, the wise Celestials
know,

Though Honor is the word with Men below.
Some nymphs there are, too conscious of their face,

For life predestined to the Gnomes' embrace.

These swell their prospects and exalt their
pride,

When offers are disdained, and love denied:

Then gay Ideas crowd the vacant brain,
While Peers, and Dukes, and all their sweeping train,

And Garters, Stars, and Coronets appear,
And in soft sounds, Your Græ salutes their
ear.

'T is these that early taint the female soul,
Instruct the eyes of young Coquettes to roll,
Teach Infant-cheeks a bidden blush to know,
And little hearts to flutter at a Beau.

"Oft, when the world imagine women
stray,

The Sylphs through mystic mazes guide
their way,

Through all the giddy circle they pursue,
And old impertinence expel by new.

What tender maid but must a victim fall
To one man's treat, but for another's ball?
When Florio speaks what virgin could with-
stand,

If gentle Damon did not squeeze her hand?
With varying vanities, from ev'ry part,
They shift the moving Toyshop of their
heart;

Where wigs with wigs, with sword-knots
sword-knots strive,

Beaux banish beaux, and coaches coaches
drive.

This erring mortals Levity may call;
Oh blind to truth! the Sylphs contrive it all.

"Of these am I, who thy protection claim,
A watchfull sprite, and Ariel is my name.

Late, as I ranged the crystal wilds of air,
In the clear Mirror of thy ruling Star
I saw, alas! some dread event impend,
Ere to the main this morning sun descend,
But heav'n reveals not what, or how, or
where:

Warned by the Sylph, oh pious maid, beware!

This to disclose is all thy guardian can:
Beware of all, but most beware of Man!"

He said; when Shock, who thought she slept too long,

Leaped up, and waked his mistress with his tongue.

'T was then, Belinda, if report say true,
Thy eyes first opened on a Billet-doux;
Wounds, Charms, and Ardors were no sooner
read,

But all the Vision vanished from thy head.

And now, unveiled, the Toilet stands displayed,

Each silver Vase in mystic order laid.

First, robed in white, the Nymph intent
adores,

With head uncovered, the Cosmetic pow'rs.

A heav'nly image in the glass appears,
To that she bends, to that her eyes she rears;
Th' inferior Priestess, at her altar's side,
Trembling begins the sacred rites of Pride.
Unnumbered treasures ope at once, and here
The various off'rings of the world appear;
From each she nicely culls with curious toil,
And decks the Goddess with the glitt'ring spoil.

This casket India's glowing gems unlocks,
And all Arabia breathes from yonder box.
The Tortoise here and Elephant unite, Transformed to combs, the speckled, and the white.

Here files of pins extend their shining rows,
Puffs, Powders, Patches, Bibles, Billet-doux.
Now awful Beauty puts on all its arms;
The fair each moment rises in her charms,
Repairs her smiles, awakens ev'ry grace,
And calls forth all the wonders of her face;
Sees by degrees a purer blush arise,
And keener lightnings quicken in her eyes.
The busy Sylphs surround their darling care,
These set the head, and those divide the hair,

Some fold the sleeve, whilst others plait the gown;

And Betty's<sup>1</sup> praised for labors not her own.

CANTO II

Not with more glories, in th' ethereal plain,
The Sun first rises o'er the purpled main,
Than, issuing forth, the rival of his beams
Launched on the bosom of the silver Thames.
Fair Nymphs, and well-dressed Youths around her shone,

But ev'ry eye was fixed on her alone.

On her white breast a sparkling Cross she
wore,

Which Jews might kiss, and Infidels adore.

Her lively looks a sprightly mind disclose,
Quick as her eyes, and as unfixed as those:

Favors to none, to all she smiles extends;
Oft she rejects, but never once offends.

Bright as the sun, her eyes the gazers strike,
And, like the sun, they shine on all alike.

Yet graceful ease, and sweetness void of
pride,

Might hide her faults, if Belles had faults to
hide:

If to her share some female errors fall,
Look on her face, and you'll forget 'em all.

This Nymph, to the destruction of man-
kind,
Nourished two Locks which graceful hung
behind

In equal curls, and well conspired to deck
With shining ringlets the smooth iv'ry neck.
Love in these labyrinths his slaves detains,
And mighty hearts are held in slender chains.
With hairy springes we the birds betray,
Slight lines of hair surprise the finny prey,
Fair tresses man's imperial race ensnare,
And beauty draws us with a single hair.

Th' advent'rous Baron the bright locks
admired;

He saw, he wished, and to the prize aspired.
Resolved to win, he meditates the way,
By force to ravish, or by fraud betray;
For when success a Lover's toil attends,
Few ask, if fraud or force attained his ends.

For this, ere Phœbus rose, he had implored
Propitious heav'n, and every pow'r adored,
But chiefly Love—to Love an Altar built,
Of twelve vast French Romances, neatly gilt.

There lay three garters, half a pair of gloves;
And all the trophies of his former loves;
With tender Billet-doux he lights the pyre,
And breathes three am'rous sighs to raise the
fire.

Then prostrate falls, and begs with ardent
eyes

Soon to obtain, and long possess the prize:
The pow'rs gave ear, and granted half his
prayer,

The rest, the winds dispersed in empty air.

But now secure the painted vessel glides,
The sun-beams trembling on the floating
tides:

While melting music steals upon the sky,
And softened sounds along the waters die;
Smooth flow the waves, the Zephyrs gently
play,

Belinda smiled, and all the world was gay.
All but the Sylph—with careful thoughts oppressed,

Th' impending woe sat heavy on his breast.
He summons straight his Denizens of air;
The lucid squadrons round the sails repair:
Soft o'er the shrouds aërial whispers breathe,
That seemed but Zephyrs to the train beneath.

Some to the sun their insect-wings unfold,
Waft on the breeze, or sink in clouds of
gold;

<sup>1</sup>Belinda's maid.

Transparent forms, too fine for mortal sight,
 Their fluid bodies half dissolved in light,
 Loose to the wind their airy garments flew,
 Thin glitt'ring textures of the filmy dew,
 Dipped in the richest tincture of the skies,
 Where light disports in ever-mingling dyes,
 While ev'ry beam new transient colors flings,
 Colors that change whene'er they wave their wings.

Amid the circle, on the gilded mast,
 Superior by the head, was Ariel placed;
 His purple pinions op'ning to the sun,
 He raised his azure wand, and thus begun:

"Ye Sylphs and Sylphids, to your chief give ear!

Fays, Fairies, Genii, Elves, and Demons, hear!

Ye know the spheres and various tasks assigned

By laws eternal to th' ærial kind.

Some in the fields of purest ether play,
 And bask and whiten in the blaze of day.

Some guide the course of wand'ring orbs on
 high,

Or roll the planets through the boundless
 sky.

Some less refined, beneath the moon's pale
 light

Pursue the stars that shoot athwart<sup>1</sup> the
 night,

Or suck the mists in grosser air below,
 Or dip their pinions in the painted bow,
 Or brew fierce tempests on the wintry main,
 Or o'er the globe distil the kindly rain.

Others on earth o'er human race preside,
 Watch all their ways, and all their actions
 guide:

Of these the chief the care of Nations own,
 And guard with Arms divine the British Throne.

"Our humbler province is to tend the Fair,
 Not a less pleasing, though less glorious
 care;

To save the powder from too rude a gale,
 Nor let th' imprisoned essences exhale;
 To draw fresh colors from the vernal flow'rs;
 To steal from rainbows e'er they drop in show'rs

A brighter wash; to curl their waving hairs,
 Assist their blushes, and inspire their airs;
 Nay oft, in dreams, invention we bestow,
 To change a Flounce, or add a Furbelow.

"This day, black Omens threat the brightest Fair,

That e'er deserved a watchful spirit's care;
 Some dire disaster, or by force, or slight;
 But what, or where, the fates have wrapped in night.

Whether the nymph shall break Diana's law,
 Or some frail China jar receive a flaw;
 Or stain her honor or her new brocade;
 Forget her pray'rs, or miss a masquerade;
 Or lose her heart, or necklace, at a ball;
 Or whether Heav'n has doomed that Shock must fall.

Haste, then, ye spirits! to your charge repair:
 The flutt'ring fan be Zephyretta's care;
 The drops<sup>2</sup> to thee, Brillante, we consign;
 And, Momentilla, let the watch be thine;
 Do thou, Crispissa, tend her fav'rite Lock;
 Ariel himself shall be the guard of Shock.

"To fifty chosen Sylphs, of special note,
 We trust th' important charge, the Petticoat:

Oft have we known that seven-fold fence to fail,

Though stiff with hoops, and armed with ribs of whale;

Form a strong line about the silver bound,
 And guard the wide circumference around.

"Whatever spirit, careless of his charge,
 His post neglects, or leaves the fair at large,
 Shall feel sharp vengeance soon o'ertake his sins,

Be stopped in vials, or transfixed with pins;
 Or plunged in lakes of bitter washes lie,
 Or wedged whole ages in a bodkin's eye:
 Gums and Pomatums shall his flight restrain, While clogged he beats his silken wings in
 vain;

Or Alum styptics with contracting pow'r
 Shrink his thin essence like a riveled<sup>3</sup> flow'r:
 Or, as Ixion fixed, the wretch shall feel
 The giddy motion of the whirling Mill,
 In fumes of burning Chocolate shall glow,
 And tremble at the sea that froths below!"

He spoke; the spirits from the sails descend;

Some, orb in orb, around the nymph extend;
 Some thread the mazy ringlets of her hair;
 Some hang upon the pendants of her ear:
 With beating hearts the dire event they wait,
 Anxious, and trembling for the birth of Fate.

<sup>1</sup>Across.

<sup>2</sup>Earrings.

<sup>3</sup>Shrunken.

CANTO III

Close by those meads, for ever crowned with flow'rs,

Where Thames with pride surveys his rising
tow'rs,

There stands a structure of majestic frame,<sup>1</sup>
Which from the neighb'ring Hampton takes its name.

Here Britain's statesmen oft the fall fore-
doom

Of foreign Tyrants and of Nymphs at home;
Here thou, great Anna! whom three realms
obey,

Dost sometimes counsel take—and sometimes Tea.

Hither the heroes and the nymphs resort,
To taste awhile the pleasures of a Court;
In various talk th' instructive hours they
passed,

Who gave the ball, or paid the visit last;
One speaks the glory of the British Queen,
And one describes a charming Indian screen;
A third interprets motions, looks, and eyes;
At ev'ry word a reputation dies.

Snuff, or the fan, supply each pause of chat,
With singing, laughing, ogling, and all that.

Meanwhile, declining from the noon of
day,

The sun obliquely shoots his burning ray;
The hungry Judges soon the sentence sign,
And wretches hang that jurymen may dine;
The merchant from th' Exchange returns in
peace,

And the long labors of the Toilet cease.
Belinda now, whom thirst of fame invites,
Burns to encounter two advent'rous Knights,
At Ombre<sup>2</sup> singly to decide their doom;
And swells her breast with conquests yet to come.

Straight the three bands prepare in arms to
join,

Each band the number of the sacred nine.
Soon as she spreads her hand, th' aërial guard
Descend, and sit on each important card:

<sup>1</sup>Hampton Court, a royal palace.

<sup>2</sup>A game of cards, of Spanish origin, usually played by three people. Each player received nine cards. The one who declared the trump became the "ombre" and played against the other two. If one of these took more tricks than the "ombre" the latter was defeated, which was called "codille." The three highest cards were called "matadores." They were, in the order of their value, "Spadillio" (ace of spades), "Manillio" (when trumps were black, the two of trumps; when red, the seven of trumps), and "Basto" (ace of clubs).

First Ariel perched upon a Matadore,
Then each, according to the rank they bore;
For Sylphs, yet mindful of their ancient race,
Are, as when women, wondrous fond of
place.

Behold, four Kings in majesty revered,
With hoary whiskers and a forky beard;
And four fair Queens whose hands sustain a
flow'r,

Th' expressive emblem of their softer pow'r;
Four Knaves in garbs succinct, a trusty band, Caps on their heads, and halberts in their
hand;

And particolored troops, a shining train,
Draw forth to combat on the velvet plain.

The skillful Nymph reviews her force with
care:

"Let Spades be trumps!" she said, and trumps they were.

Now move to war her sable Matadores,
In show like leaders of the swarthy Moors.
Spadillio first, unconquerable Lord!
Led off two captive trumps, and swept the board.

As many more Manillio forced to yield,
And marched a victor from the verdant field.
Him Basto followed, but his fate more hard Gained but one trump and one plebeian card.
With his broad saber next, a chief in years,
The hoary Majesty of Spades appears,
Puts forth one manly leg, to sight revealed,
The rest, his many-colored robe concealed.
The rebel Knave, who dares his prince engage,

Proves the just victim of his royal rage.
E'en mighty Pam<sup>3</sup>, that Kings and Queens
o'erthrew

And mowed down armies in the fights of Lu,
Sad chance of war! now destitute of aid,
Falls undistinguished by the victor spade!

Thus far both armies to Belinda yield;
Now to the Baron fate inclines the field.
His warlike Amazon her host invades,
Th' imperial consort of the crown of Spades.
The Club's black Tyrant first her victim
died,

Spite of his haughty mien, and barb'rous
pride:

What boots the regal circle on his head,
His giant limbs, in state unwieldy spread;
That long behind he trails his pompous robe,
And, of all monarchs, only grasps the globe?

<sup>3</sup>Knave of clubs, highest card in the game of loo.

The Baron now his Diamonds pours apace;
Th' embroidered King who shows but half his
face,

And his refulgent Queen, with pow'rs combined

Of broken troops an easy conquest find.

Clubs, Diamonds, Hearts, in wild disorder
seen,

With throngs promiscuous strew the level
green.

Thus when dispersed a routed army runs,

Of Asia's troops, and Afric's sable sons,

With like confusion different nations fly,

Of various habit, and of various dye,

The pierced battalions dis-united fall,

In heaps on heaps; one fate o'erwhelms them
all.

The Knave of Diamonds tries his wily arts,
And wins (oh shameful chance!) the Queen of Hearts.

At this, the blood the virgin's cheek forsook,
A livid paleness spreads o'er all her look;

She sees, and trembles at th' approaching ill,
Just in the jaws of ruin, and Codille.

And now (as oft in some distempered State)

On one nice Trick depends the gen'ral fate.

An Ace of Hearts steps forth: The King
unseen

Lurked in her hand, and mourned his captive Queen:

He springs to Vengeance with an eager pace,
And falls like thunder on the prostrate Ace.

The nymph exulting fills with shouts the sky;
The walls, the woods, and long canals reply.

O thoughtless mortals! ever blind to fate,

Too soon dejected, and too soon elate.

Sudden, these honors shall be snatched away,
And cursed for ever this victorious day.

For lo! the board with cups and spoons is
crowned,

The berries crackle, and the mill turns round;

On shining Altars of Japan they raise

The silver lamp; the fiery spirits blaze:

From silver spouts the grateful liquors glide,

While China's earth receives the smoking tide:

At once they gratify their scent and taste,

And frequent cups prolong the rich repast.

Straight hover round the Fair her airy band;

Some, as she sipped, the fuming liquor
fanned,

Some o'er her lap their careful plumes displayed,

Trembling, and conscious of the rich brocade.

Coffee (which makes the politician wise,
And see through all things with his half-shut
eyes),

Sent up in vapors to the Baron's brain

New Stratagems, the radiant Lock to gain.

Ah cease, rash youth! desist ere 't is too late,

Fear the just Gods, and think of Scylla's
Fate!

Changed to a bird, and sent to flit in air,

She dearly pays for Nisus' injured hair!

But when to mischief mortals bend their
will,

How soon they find fit instruments of ill!

Just then, Clarissa drew with tempting grace

A two-edged weapon from her shining case:

So Ladies in Romance assist their Knight,

Present the spear, and arm him for the fight.

He takes the gift with rev'rence, and extends

The little engine on his fingers' ends;

This just behind Belinda's neck he spread,

As o'er the fragrant steams she bends her head.

Swift to the Lock a thousand Sprites repair,

A thousand wings, by turns, blow back the
hair;

And thrice they twitched the diamond in her
ear;

Thrice she looked back, and thrice the foe
drew near.

Just in that instant, anxious Ariel sought

The close recesses of the Virgin's thought;

As on the nosegay in her breast reclined,

He watched th' Ideas rising in her mind,

Sudden he viewed, in spite of all her art,

An earthly Lover lurking at her heart.

Amazed, confused, he found his pow'r expired,

Resigned to fate, and with a sigh retired.

The Peer now spreads the glitt'ring Forfex
wide,

T' enclose the Lock; now joins it, to divide.

E'en then, before the fatal engine closed,

A wretched Sylph too fondly interposed;

Fate urged the shears, and cut the Sylph in twain

(But airy substance soon unites again),

The meeting points the sacred hair dis sever

From the fair head, for ever, and for ever!

Then flashed the living lightning from her
eyes,

And screams of horror rend th' affrighted
skies.

Not louder shrieks to pitying heav'n are cast,

When husbands, or when lapdogs breathe
their last;

Or when rich China vessels fall'n from high,
In glitt'ring dust and painted fragments lie!

Let wreaths of triumph now my temples
twine

(The victor cried) the glorious Prize is mine!
While fish in streams, or birds delight in
air,

Or in a coach and six the British Fair,
As long as Atalantis<sup>1</sup> shall be read,
Or the small pillow grace a Lady's bed,
While visits shall be paid on solemn days,
When num'rous wax-lights in bright order
blaze,

While nymphs take treats, or assignations
give,

So long my honor, name, and praise shall
live!

What Time would spare, from Steel receives its date,

And monuments, like men, submit to fate!

Steel could the labor of the Gods destroy,
And strike to dust th' imperial towers of Troy;

Steel could the works of mortal pride con-
found,

And hew triumphal arches to the ground.

What wonder then, fair nymph! thy hairs should feel,

The conqu'ring force of unresisted steel?

CANTO IV

But anxious cares the pensive nymph oppressed,

And secret passions labored in her breast.

Not youthful kings in battle seized alive,

Not scornful virgins who their charms survive,

Not ardent lovers robbed of all their bliss,

Not ancient ladies when refused a kiss,

Not tyrants fierce that unrepenting die,

Not Cynthia when her manteau's pinned awry,

E'er felt such rage, resentment, and despair,
As thou, sad Virgin! for thy ravished Hair.

For, that sad moment, when the Sylphs withdrew

And Ariel weeping from Belinda flew,

Umbriel, a dusky, melancholy sprite,

As ever sullied the fair face of light,

Down to the central earth, his proper scene,
Repaired to search the gloomy Cave of Spleen.<sup>2</sup>

Swift on his sooty pinions flits the Gnome,
And in a vapor reached the dismal dome.

No cheerful breeze this sullen region knows,
The dreaded East is all the wind that blows.

Here in a grotto, sheltered close from air,
And screened in shades from day's detested
glare,

She sighs for ever on her pensive bed,
Pain at her side, and Megrim<sup>3</sup> at her head.

Two handmaids wait the throne: alike in
place,

But diff'ring far in figure and in face.

Here stood Ill-nature like an ancient maid,
Her wrinkled form in black and white arrayed;

With store of pray'rs, for mornings, nights,
and noons,

Her hand is filled; her bosom with lampoons.

There Affectation, with a sickly mien,
Shows in her cheek the roses of eighteen,
Practised to lisp, and hang the head aside,
Faints into airs, and languishes with pride,
On the rich quilt sinks with becoming woe, Wrapped in a gown, for sickness, and for
show.

The fair ones feel such maladies as these,
When each new night-dress gives a new disease.

A constant Vapor o'er the palace flies;
Strange phantoms rising as the mists arise;
Dreadful, as hermit's dreams in haunted
shades,

Or bright, as visions of expiring maids.

Now glaring fiends, and snakes on rolling
spires,

Pale specters, gaping tombs, and purple fires:
Now lakes of liquid gold, Elysian scenes,
And crystal domes, and angels in machines.<sup>4</sup>

Unnumbered throngs on every side are
seen,

Of bodies changed to various forms by Spleen.

Here living Tea-pots stand, one arm held
out,

One bent; the handle this, and that the spout:

<sup>2</sup>Low spirits, or ill temper.

<sup>3</sup>Headache, but the word was used in the early eighteenth century (as was "vapors") for what we should call "the blues."

<sup>4</sup>The "deus ex machina."

<sup>1</sup>The New Atalantis by Mrs. Manley (published in 1709), a voluminous work which chronicled contemporary scandal.

A Pipkin<sup>1</sup> there, like Homer's Tripod walks;
Here sighs a Jar, and there a Goose-pie
talks;

Men prove with child, as powerful fancy
works,
And maids turned bottles, call aloud for corks.

Safe passed the Gnome through this fantastic band,
A branch of healing Spleenwort in his hand.
Then thus addressed the pow'r: "Hail, wayward Queen!

Who rule the sex to fifty from fifteen:
Parent of vapors and of female wit,
Who give th' hysteric, or poetic fit,
On various tempers act by various ways,
Make some take physic, others scribble
plays;

Who cause the proud their visits to delay,
And send the godly in a pet to pray.
A nymph there is, that all thy pow'r dis-dains,

And thousands more in equal mirth maintain.

But oh! if e'er thy Gnome could spoil a grace,
Or raise a pimple on a beauteous face,
Like Citron-waters matrons cheeks inflame,
Or change complexions at a losing game;
If e'er with airy horns I planted heads,
Or rumpled petticoats, or tumbled beds,
Or caused suspicion when no soul was rude,
Or discomposed the head-dress of a Prude,
Or e'er to costive lap-dog gave disease,
Which not the tears of brightest eyes could
ease:

Hear me, and touch Belinda with chagrin,
That single act gives half the world the spleen."

The Goddess with a discontented air Seems to reject him, though she grants his pray'r.

A wondrous Bag with both her hands she binds,

Like that where once Ulysses held the winds;
There she collects the force of female lungs,
Sighs, sobs, and passions, and the war of tongues.

A Vial next she fills with fainting fears,
Soft sorrows, melting griefs, and flowing
tears.

<sup>1</sup>A small jar. "Homer's tripod" is one of the self-moving tripods made by Vulcan, described in the Iliad (XVIII, 373-377).

The Gnome rejoicing bears her gifts away,
Spreads his black wings, and slowly mounts
to day.

Sunk in Thalestris<sup>2</sup> arms the nymph he
found,

Her eyes dejected and her hair unbound.
Full o'er their heads the swelling bag he rent,
And all the Furies issued at the vent.

Belinda burns with more than mortal ire,
And fierce Thalestris fans the rising fire.
"O wretched maid!" she spread her hands,
and cried

(While Hampton's echoes, "Wretched maid!" replied),

"Was it for this you took such constant care
The bodkin, comb, and essence to prepare?

For this your locks in paper durance bound,
For this with tort'ring irons wreathed
around?

For this with fillets strained your tender
head,

And bravely bore the double loads of lead?<sup>3</sup>
Gods! shall the ravisher display your hair,

While the Fops envy, and the Ladies stare!
Honor forbid! at whose unrivaled shrine
Ease, pleasure, virtue, all our sex resign.

Methinks already I your tears survey,
Already hear the horrid things they say,
Already see you a degraded toast,<sup>4</sup>
And all your honor in a whisper lost!

How shall I, then, your helpless fame defend?

'T will then be infamy to seem your friend!
And shall this prize, th' inestimable prize,
Exposed through crystal to the gazing eyes,
And heightened by the diamond's circling rays,

On that rapacious hand for ever blaze?
Sooner shall grass in Hyde-park Circus grow,
And wits take lodgings in the sound of Bow;<sup>5</sup>
Sooner let earth, air, sea, to Chaos fall,
Men, monkeys, lap-dogs, parrots, perish all!"

She said; then raging to Sir Plume<sup>6</sup> repairs,
And bids her Beau demand the precious hairs:

<sup>2</sup>A friend of Belinda's, said to be a Mrs. Morley.

<sup>3</sup>Fastenings for curl-papers.

<sup>4</sup>A slang term for a woman whose health was drunk by her admirers.

<sup>5</sup>The bells of the church of St. Mary le Bow, in Cheapside, an unfashionable quarter of the city.

<sup>6</sup>Sir George Brown, brother of Mrs. Morley. He is said to have threatened Pope with violence for the picture of him which follows.

(Sir Plume of amber snuff-box justly vain,
And the nice conduct of a clouded cane)
With earnest eyes, and round unthinking
face,

He first the snuff-box opened, then the case,
And thus broke out—"My Lord, why, what
the devil?

Z—ds! damn the lock! 'fore Gad, you must be civil!

Plague on 't! 't is past a jest—nay prithee,
pox!

Give her the hair!"—he spoke, and rapped
his box.

"It grieves me much" (replied the Peer again)

"Who speaks so well should ever speak in vain.

But by this Lock, this sacred Lock I swear (Which never more shall join its parted
hair;

Which never more its honors shall renew,
• Clipped from the lovely head where late it
grew),

That while my nostrils draw the vital air,
This hand, which won it, shall for ever wear."
He spoke, and speaking, in proud triumph
spread

The long-contended honors of her head.

But Umbriel, hateful Gnome! forbears not so;

He breaks the Vial whence the sorrows
flow.

Then see! the nymph in beauteous grief appears,

Her eyes half-languishing, half-drowned in
tears;

On her heaved bosom hung her drooping
head,

Which, with a sigh, she raised; and thus she
said:

"For ever cursed be this detested day,
Which snatched my best, my fav'rite curl
away!

Happy! ah, ten times happy had I been,
If Hampton Court these eyes had never seen!

Yet am not I the first mistaken maid,
By love of Courts to num'rous ills betrayed.

O had I rather un-admired remained
In some lone isle, or distant Northern land;

Where the gilt Chariot never marks the way,
Where none learn Ombre, none e'er taste

Bohea!<sup>1</sup>

There kept my charms concealed from mortal eye,

Like roses, that in deserts bloom and die.

What moved my mind with youthful Lords to roam?

O had I stayed, and said my pray'rs at home!

'T was this, the morning omens seemed to tell, Thrice from my trembling hand the patch-
box<sup>2</sup> fell;

The tott'ring China shook without a wind,
Nay, Poll sat mute, and Shock was most un-
kind!

A Sylph too warned me of the threats of fate,
In mystic visions, now believed too late!

See the poor remnants of these slighted hairs!
My hands shall rend what e'en thy rapine
spares:

These in two sable ringlets taught to break,
Once gave new beauties to the snowy neck;
The sister-lock now sits uncouth, alone,
And in its fellow's fate foresees its own;
Uncurled it hangs, the fatal shears demands,
And tempts once more thy sacrilegious
hands.

O hadst thou, cruel! been content to seize Hairs less in sight, or any hairs but these!"

CANTO V

She said: the pitying audience melt in tears.
But Fate and Jove had stopped the Baron's
ears.

In vain Thalestris with reproach assails,
For who can move when fair Belinda fails?
Not half so fixed the Trojan<sup>3</sup> could remain,
While Anna begged and Dido raged in vain.
Then grave Clarissa graceful waved her fan;
Silence ensued, and thus the nymph began:

"Say why are Beauties praised and honored most,

The wise man's passion, and the vain man's toast?

Why decked with all that land and sea afford,

Why Angels called, and Angel-like adored?
Why round our coaches crowd the white-
gloved Beaux,

Why bows the side-box from its inmost rows;
How vain are all these glories, all our pains,
Unless good sense preserve what beauty gains;

<sup>2</sup>Box which held patches of sticking plaster for the
face.

<sup>3</sup>Æneas.

That men may say, when we the front-box
grace:

'Behold the first in virtue as in face!'

Oh! if to dance all night, and dress all day,
Charmed the small-pox, or chased old age
away;

Who would not scorn what housewife's cares
produce,

Or who would learn one earthly thing of use?
To patch, nay ogle, might become a Saint,
Nor could it sure be such a sin to paint.

But since, alas! frail beauty must decay,
Curled or uncurled, since Locks will turn to gray;

Since painted, or not painted, all shall fade,
And she who scorns a man, must die a maid;
What then remains but well our pow'r to use,
And keep good-humor still whate'er we lose?
And trust me, dear! good-humor can prevail,
When airs, and flights, and screams, and scolding fail.

Beauties in vain their pretty eyes may roll;
Charms strike the sight, but merit wins the
soul."

So spoke the Dame, but no applause ensued;

Belinda frowned, Thalestris called her Prude.
"To arms, to arms!" the fierce Virago cries,
And swift as lightning to the combat flies.
All side in parties, and begin th' attack;
Fans clap, silks rustle, and tough whalebones
crack;

Heroes' and Heroines' shouts confus'dly rise,
And bass, and treble voices strike the skies.
No common weapons in their hands are
found,

Like Gods they fight, nor dread a mortal
wound.

So when bold Homer makes the Gods engage,

And heav'nly breasts with human passions
rage;

'Gainst Pallas, Mars; Latona, Hermes arms;
And all Olympus rings with loud alarms:
Jove's thunder roars, heav'n trembles all
around,

Blue Neptune storms, the bellowing deeps
resound:

Earth shakes her nodding tow'rs, the ground
gives way,

And the pale ghosts start at the flash of day!

Triumphant Umbriel on a scone's height Clapped his glad wings, and sat to view the
fight:

Propped on the bodkin spears, the Sprites survey

The growing combat, or assist the fray.

While through the press enraged Thalestris flies,

And scatters death around from both her
eyes,

A Beau and Witling perished in the throng,
One died in metaphor, and one in song.

"O cruel nymph! a living death I bear,"

Cried Dapperwit, and sunk beside his chair.

A mournful glance Sir Fopling upwards cast,

"Those eyes are made so killing"—was his last.

Thus on Mæander's flowery margin lies
Th' expiring Swan, and as he sings he dies.

When bold Sir Plume had drawn Clarissa
down,

Chloe stepped in, and killed him with a
frown;

She smiled to see the doughty hero slain,
But, at her smile, the Beau revived again.

Now Jove suspends his golden scales in air, Weighs the Men's wits against the Lady's
hair;

The doubtful beam long nods from side to
side;

At length the wits mount up, the hairs sub-
side.

See, fierce Belinda on the Baron flies,
With more than usual lightning in her eyes:
Nor feared the Chief th' unequal fight to try,
Who sought no more than on his foe to die.
But this bold Lord with manly strength
endued,

She with one finger and a thumb subdued:
Just where the breath of life his nostrils drew,
A charge of Snuff the wily virgin threw;
The Gnomes direct, to ev'ry atom just,
The pungent grains of titillating dust.
Sudden, with starting tears each eye o'er-
flows,

And the high dome re-echoes to his nose.

"Now meet thy fate," incensed Belinda
cried,

And drew a deadly bodkin from her side.

(The same, his ancient personage to deck,
Her great great grandsire wore about his neck,

In three seal-rings; which after, melted
down,

Formed a vast buckle for his widow's gown:
Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew,
The bells she jingled, and the whistle blew;

Then in a bodkin graced her mother's hairs,
Which long she wore, and now Belinda wears.)

"Boast not my fall" (he cried) "insulting
foe!

Thou by some other shalt be laid as low,
Nor think, to die dejects my lofty mind:
All that I dread is leaving you behind!
Rather than so, ah, let me still survive,
And burn in Cupid's flames—but burn
alive."

"Restore the Lock!" she cries; and all around

"Restore the Lock!" the vaulted roofs re-
bound.

Not fierce Othello in so loud a strain Roared for the handkerchief that caused his pain.

But see how oft ambitious aims are crossed,
And chiefs contend 'till all the prize is lost!
The Lock, obtained with guilt, and kept with
pain,

In every place is sought, but sought in vain:
With such a prize no mortal must be bless'd,
So heav'n decrees! with heav'n who can contest?

Some thought it mounted to the Lunar
sphere,

Since all things lost on earth are treasured
there.

There Heroes' wits are kept in pond'rous
vases,

And beaux' in snuff-boxes and tweezer-cases.
There broken vows and death-bed alms are
found,

And lovers' hearts with ends of riband
bound,

The courtier's promises, and sick man's pray'rs,

The smiles of harlots, and the tears of heirs,
Cages for gnats, and chains to yoke a flea,
Dried butterflies, and tomes of casuistry.

But trust the Muse—she saw it upward
rise,

Though marked by none but quick, poetic
eyes

(So Rome's great founder<sup>1</sup> to the heav'n's withdrew,

To Proculus alone confessed in view);

A sudden Star, it shot through liquid air,
And drew behind a radiant trail of hair.

Not Berenice's<sup>2</sup> Locks first rose so bright,
The heav'n's bespangling with disheveled
light.

The Sylphs behold it kindling as it flies,
And pleased pursue its progress through the
skies.

This the Beau monde shall from the Mall<sup>3</sup>
survey,

And hail with music its propitious ray.

This the bless'd Lover shall for Venus take,
And send up vows from Rosamonda's lake.<sup>4</sup>

This Partridge<sup>5</sup> soon shall view in cloudless
skies,

When next he looks through Galileo's eyes;
And hence th' egregious wizard shall fore-
doom

The fate of Louis, and the fall of Rome.<sup>6</sup>

Then cease, bright Nymph! to mourn thy ravished hair,

Which adds new glory to the shining sphere!

Not all the tresses that fair head can boast,
Shall draw such envy as the Lock you lost.

For, after all the murders of your eye,

When, after millions slain, yourself shall die:
When those fair suns shall set, as set they

must,

And all those tresses shall be laid in dust,

This Lock, the Muse shall consecrate to fame,
And 'midst the stars inscribe Belinda's name.

<sup>1</sup>Romulus (the legend Pope alludes to is to be found in Livy, I, xvi).

<sup>2</sup>An Egyptian queen who dedicated a lock of hair for her husband's safe return from war. It was said to have become a constellation.

<sup>3</sup>Upper side of St. James's Park, London.

<sup>4</sup>A pond in St. James's Park.

<sup>5</sup>An astrologer who published predictions. Swift made fun of him in his Bickerstaff papers, foretelling his death, and later pretending that the astrologer had duly died at the appointed time.

<sup>6</sup>Louis XIV and the Papacy.

AN ESSAY ON MAN<sup>1</sup>

To

H. ST. JOHN LORD BOLINGBROKE

ARGUMENT OF EPISTLE I

Of the Nature and State of Man, with Respect to the Universe.

Of Man in the abstract. I. That we can judge only with regard to our own system, being ignorant of the relations of systems and things, v. 17, etc. II. That Man is not to be deemed imperfect, but a Being suited to his place and rank in the creation, agreeable to the general Order of things, and conformable to Ends and Relations to him unknown, v. 35, etc. III. That it is partly upon his ignorance of future events, and partly upon the hope of a future state, that all his happiness in the present depends, v. 77, etc. IV. The pride of aiming at more knowledge, and pretending to more Perfection, the cause of Man's error and misery. The impiety of putting himself in the place of God, and judging of the fitness or unfitness, perfection or imperfection, justice or injustice of his dispensations, v. 109, etc. V. The absurdity of conceiving himself the final cause of the creation, or expecting that perfection in the moral world, which is not in the natural, v. 131, etc. VI. The unreasonableness of his complaints against Providence, while on the one hand he demands the Perfections of the Angels, and on the other the bodily qualifications of the Brutes; though, to possess any of the sensitive faculties in a higher degree, would render him miserable, v. 173, etc. VII. That throughout the whole visible world, an universal order and gradation in the sensual and mental faculties is observed, which causes a subordination of creature to creature, and of all creatures to Man. The gradations of sense, instinct, thought, reflection, reason; that Reason alone countervails all the other faculties, v. 207. VIII. How much further this order and subordination of living creatures may extend, above and below us; were any part of which broken, not that part only, but the whole connected creation must be destroyed, v. 233. IX. The extravagance, madness, and pride of such a desire, v. 250. X. The consequence of all, the absolute submission due to Providence, both as to our present and future state, v. 281, etc. to the end.

<sup>1</sup>The first epistle, all that is here printed, was written in 1732, though the complete work (four epistles) was not finished and published until 1734. The Essay purports to be a philosophical poem, an aim characteristic of the age. Pope, however, had not a philosophic mind, and the interest of the poem lies in its detached sayings. It has even been claimed that Pope merely put into verse material given him by Lord Bolingbroke, his "guide, philosopher, and friend," to whom the poem is addressed. Though this can hardly be true, at least in the literal sense of the words, doubtless the matter of the poem was a subject of frequent discussion between the two.

EPISTLE I

AWAKE, my ST. JOHN! leave all meaner things

To low ambition, and the pride of Kings.

Let us (since Life can little more supply

Than just to look about us and to die)

Expatriate<sup>2</sup> free o'er all this scene of Man;

A mighty maze! but not without a plan;<sup>3</sup>

A Wild, where weeds and flow'rs promiscuous shoot;

Or Garden, tempting with forbidden fruit.

Together let us beat this ample field,

Try what the open, what the covert yield;

The latent tracts, the giddy heights, explore

Of all who blindly creep, or sightless soar;

Eye Nature's walks, shoot Folly as it flies,

And catch the Manners living as they rise;

Laugh where we must, be candid where we can;

But vindicate the ways of God to Man.

I. Say first, of God above, or Man below,

What can we reason, but from what we know?

Of Man, what see we but his station here,

From which to reason, or to which refer?

Through worlds unnumbered though the God be known,

'T is ours to trace him only in our own.

He, who through vast immensity can pierce,

See worlds on worlds compose one universe,

Observe how system into system runs,

What other planets circle other suns,

What varied Being peoples ev'ry star,

May tell why Heav'n has made us as we are.

But of this frame the bearings, and the ties,

The strong connections, nice dependencies,

Gradations just, has thy pervading soul

Look'd through? or can a part contain the whole?

Is the great chain, that draws all to agree,
And drawn supports, upheld by God, or thee?

<sup>2</sup>Wander.

<sup>3</sup>This line in the original editions stood,

"A mighty maze of walks without a plan;"

and it has been remarked (by Lowell) that "perhaps this came nearer Pope's real opinion than the verse he substituted for it."

II. Presumptuous Man! the reason wouldst thou find,

Why formed so weak, so little, and so blind?
First, if thou canst, the harder reason guess,
Why formed no weaker, blinder, and no less?
Ask of thy mother earth, why oaks are made

Taller or stronger than the weeds they shade?
Or ask of yonder argent fields above,
Why Jove's satellites are less than Jove?

Of Systems possible, if 't is confessed
That Wisdom infinite must form the best,
Where all must full or not coherent be,
And all that rises, rise in due degree;
Then, in the scale of reas'ning life, 't is plain,
There must be, somewhere, such a rank as Man:

And all the question (wrangle e'er so long)
Is only this, if God has placed him wrong?

Respecting Man, whatever wrong we call,
May, must be right, as relative to all.
In human works, though labored on with pain,

A thousand movements scarce one purpose gain;

In God's, one single can its end produce;
Yet serves to second too some other use.
So Man, who here seems principal alone,
Perhaps acts second to some sphere unknown,

Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal:
'Tis but a part we see, and not a whole.

When the proud steed shall know why Man restrains

His fiery course, or drives him o'er the plains:
When the dull Ox, why now he breaks the clod,

Is now a victim, and now Egypt's God:
Then shall Man's pride and dullness comprehend

His actions', passions', being's, use and end;
Why doing, suff'ring, checked, impelled; and why

This hour a slave, the next a deity.

Then say not Man's imperfect, Heav'n in fault;

Say rather, Man's as perfect as he ought:
His knowledge measured to his state and place;

His time a moment, and a point his space.
If to be perfect in a certain sphere,
What matter, soon or late, or here or there?
The bless'd to-day is as completely so,
As who began a thousand years ago.

III. Heav'n from all creatures hides the book of Fate,

All but the page prescribed, their present state:

From brutes what men, from men what spirits know:

Or who could suffer Being here below?

The lamb thy riot dooms to bleed to-day,
Had he thy Reason, would he skip and play?
Pleased to the last, he crops the flow'ry food,
And licks the hand just raised to shed his blood.

O blindness to the future! kindly giv'n,
That each may fill the circle marked by Heav'n:

Who sees with equal eye, as God of all,
A hero perish, or a sparrow fall,
Atoms or systems into ruin hurled,
And now a bubble burst, and now a world.

Hope humbly then; with trembling pinions soar;

Wait the great teacher Death: and God adore.

What future bliss, he gives not, thee to know,
But gives that Hope to be thy blessing now.
Hope springs eternal in the human breast:
Man never Is, but always To be bless'd:
The soul, uneasy and confined from home,
Rests and expatiates in a life to come.

Lo, the poor Indian! whose untutored mind

Sees God in clouds, or hears him in the wind:
His soul proud Science never taught to stray
Far as the solar walk, or milky way;

Yet simple Nature to his hope has giv'n,
Behind the cloud-topped hill, an humbler heav'n;

Some safer world in depth of woods embraced,

Some happier island in the watry waste,
Where slaves once more their native land behold,

No fiends torment, no Christians thirst for gold.

To Be, contents his natural desire,
He asks no Angel's wing, no Seraph's fire;
But thinks, admitted to that equal<sup>1</sup> sky,
His faithful dog shall bear him company

IV. Go, wiser thou! and, in thy scale of sense,

Weigh thy Opinion against Providence;
Call imperfection what thou fanci'st such,
Say, here he gives too little, there too much:

<sup>1</sup>Impartial.

Destroy all Creatures for thy sport or gust,<sup>1</sup>
 Yet cry, If Man's unhappy, God's unjust;
 If Man alone engross not Heav'n's high care,
 Alone made perfect here, immortal there:
 Snatch from his hand the balance and the rod,

Re-judge his justice, be the God of God.
 In Pride, in reas'ning Pride, our error lies;
 All quit their sphere, and rush into the
 skies.

Pride still is aiming at the bless'd abodes,
 Men would be Angels, Angels would be Gods.
 Aspiring to be Gods, if Angels fell,
 Aspiring to be Angels, Men rebel:
 And who but wishes to invert the laws
 Of Order, sins against th' Eternal Cause.

V. Ask for what end the heav'nly bodies
 shine,

Earth for whose use? Pride answers, "'Tis for mine:

For me kind Nature wakes her genial Pow'r, Suckles each herb, and spreads out ev'ry
 flow'r;

Annual for me, the grape, the rose renew
 The juice nectareous, and the balmy dew;
 For me, the mine a thousand treasures
 brings;

For me, health gushes from a thousand
 springs;

Seas roll to waft me, suns to light me rise;
 My foot-stool earth, my canopy the skies."

But errs not Nature from his gracious end,
 From burning suns when livid deaths de-
 scend,

When earthquakes swallow, or when tem-
 pests sweep

Towns to one grave, whole nations to the deep?

"No," ('tis replied) "the first Almighty
 Cause

Acts not by partial, but by gen'ral laws;
 Th' exceptions few; some change since all
 began:

And what created perfect?"—Why then
 Man?

If the great end be human Happiness,
 Then Nature deviates; and can Man do less?
 As much that end a constant course requires
 Of show'rs and sun-shine, as of Man's desires;

As much eternal springs and cloudless skies,
 As Men for ever temp'rate, calm, and wise.

If plagues or earthquakes break not Heav'n's
 design,

Why then a Borgia, or a Catiline?

Who knows but he, whose hand the lightning forms,

Who heaves old Ocean, and who wings the
 storms;

Pours fierce Ambition in a Cæsar's mind,
 Or turns young Ammon,<sup>2</sup> loose to scourge mankind?

From pride, from pride, our very reas'ning
 springs;

Account for moral as for nat'ral things:

Why charge we Heav'n in those, in these acquit?

In both, to reason right is to submit.

Better for Us, perhaps, it might appear,
 Were there all harmony, all virtue here;

That never air or ocean felt the wind;
 That never passion discomposed the mind.

But all subsists by elemental strife;
 And Passions are the elements of Life.

The gen'ral Order, since the whole began.
 Is kept in Nature, and is kept in Man.

VI. What would this Man? Now upward will he soar,

And, little less than Angel, would be more;
 Now looking downwards, just as grieved
 appears

To want the strength of bulls, the fur of bears.
 Made for his use all creatures if he call,

Say what their use, had he the pow'rs of
 all?

Nature to these, without profusion, kind,
 The proper organs, proper pow'rs assign'd;

Each seeming want compensated of course,
 Here with degrees of swiftness, there of force;

All in exact proportion to the state;
 Nothing to add, and nothing to abate.

Each beast, each insect, happy in its own:
 Is Heav'n unkind to Man, and Man alone?

Shall he alone, whom rational we call,
 Be pleased with nothing, if not bless'd with
 all?

The bliss of Man (could Pride that blessing
 find)

Is not to act or think beyond mankind;

No pow'rs of body or of soul to share,

But what his nature and his state can bear.

Why has not Man a microscopic eye?

For this plain reason, Man is not a Fly.

<sup>1</sup>Pleasure.

<sup>2</sup>Alexander the Great, who allowed himself to be called the son of Jupiter Ammon.

Say what the use, were finer optics giv'n,
T' inspect a mite, not comprehend the
heav'n?

Or touch, if tremblingly alive all o'er,
To smart and agonize at every pore?
Or quick effluvia darting through the brain,
Die of a rose in aromatic pain?

If Nature thundered in his op'ning ears,
And stunned him with the music of the
spheres,

How would he wish that Heav'n had left him
still

The whisp'ring Zephyr, and the purling rill?
Who finds not Providence all good and wise,
Alike in what it gives, and what denies?

VII. Far as Creation's ample range extends,
The scale of sensual, mental pow'rs ascends:
Mark how it mounts, to Man's imperial
race,

From the green myriads in the peopled grass:
What modes of sight betwixt each wide extreme,

The mole's dim curtain, and the lynx's beam:
Of smell, the headlong lioness between,
And hound sagacious on the tainted green:
Of hearing, from the life that fills the Flood,
To that which warbles through the vernal
wood:

The spider's touch, how exquisitely fine!
Feels at each thread, and lives along the line:
In the nice bee, what sense so subtly true
From pois'nous herbs extracts the healing
dew?

How Instinct varies in the grov'ling swine, Compared, half-reas'ning elephant, with thine!

'Twixt that, and Reason, what a nice barrier,
For ever sep'rate, yet for ever near!
Remembrance and Reflection how allied;
What thin partitions Sense from Thought divide:

And Middle natures, how they long to join,
Yet never pass th' insuperable line!
Without this just gradation, could they be Subjected, these to those, or all to thee?
The pow'rs of all subdued by thee alone,
Is not thy Reason all these pow'rs in one?

VIII. See, through this air, this ocean, and this earth,

All matter quick, and bursting into birth.
Above, how high progressive life may go!
Around, how wide! how deep extend below!
Vast chain of being! which from God began,
Natures ethereal, human, angel, man,

Beast, bird, fish, insect, what no eye can see,
No glass can reach; from Infinite to thee,
From thee to Nothing.—On superior pow'rs
Were we to press, inferior might on ours:
Or in the full creation leave a void,
Where, one step broken, the great scale 's destroyed:

From Nature's chain whatever link you strike,

Tenth or ten-thousandth, breaks the chain alike.

And, if each system in gradation roll
Alike essential to th' amazing Whole,
The least confusion but in one, not all
That system only, but the Whole must fall.
Let Earth unbalanced from her orbit fly, Planets and Suns run lawless through the
sky;

Let ruling Angels from their spheres be hurled,

Being on Being wrecked, and world on
world;

Heav'n's whole foundations to their center
nod,

And Nature tremble to the throne of God.
All this dread Order break—for whom? for
thee?

Vile worm!—O Madness! Pride! Impiety!
IX. What if the foot, ordained the dust to
tread,

Or hand, to toil, aspired to be the head?

What if the head, the eye, or ear repined
To serve mere engines to the ruling Mind?

Just as absurd for any part to claim
To be another, in this gen'ral frame:

Just as absurd, to mourn the tasks or pains,
The great directing Mind of all ordains.

All are but parts of one stupendous whole,
Whose body Nature is, and God the soul;
That, changed through all, and yet in all the same;

Great in the earth, as in th' ethereal frame;
Warm in the sun, refreshes in the breeze,
Glow in the stars, and blossoms in the trees,
Lives through all life, extends through all
extent,

Spreads undivided, operates unspent;
Breathes in our soul, informs our mortal part,
As full, as perfect, in a hair as heart:

As full, as perfect, in vile Man that mourns,
As the rapt Seraph that adores and burns:
To him no high, no low, no great, no small;
He fills, he bounds, connects, and equals
all.

X. Cease then, nor Order Imperfection name:

Our proper bliss depends on what we blame.
Know thy own point: This kind, this due degree

Of blindness, weakness, Heav'n bestows on thee.

Submit.—In this, or any other sphere,
Secure to be as bless'd as thou canst bear:
Safe in the hand of one disposing Pow'r,
Or in the natal, or the mortal hour.
All Nature is but Art, unknown to thee;
All Chance, Direction, which thou canst not see;

All Discord, Harmony not understood;
All partial Evil, universal Good:
And, spite of Pride, in erring Reason's spite,
One truth is clear, Whatever is, is right.

EPISTLE TO DR. ARBUTHNOT<sup>1</sup>

Advertisement to the first publication of this Epistle

THIS paper is a sort of bill of complaint, begun many years since, and drawn up by snatches, as the several occasions offered. I had no thoughts of publishing it, till it pleased some Persons of Rank and Fortune (the Authors of Verses to the Imitator of Horace, and of an Epistle to a Doctor of Divinity from a Nobleman at Hampton Court) to attack, in a very extraordinary manner, not only my Writings (of which, being public, the Public is judge), but my Person, Morals, and Family, whereof, to those who know me not, a truer information may be requisite. Being divided between the necessity to say something of myself, and my own laziness to undertake so awkward a task, I thought it the shortest way to put the last hand to this Epistle. If it have anything pleasing, it will be that by which I am most desirous to please, the Truth and the Sentiment; and if anything offensive, it will be only to those I am least sorry to offend, the vicious or the ungenerous.

<sup>1</sup>Pope indicates in the "Advertisement" printed above the purpose of this Epistle, but his statement concerning the time of its composition cannot be taken literally. A few passages were written earlier than 1734 (the portraits of Addison and Bufo, and the reference to his mother), but the Epistle as a whole dates from this year, or from 1735. Its immediate occasion was the abusive attack on Pope contained in the two poems he mentions in the "Advertisement." The first of these is said to have been written by Lady Mary Wortley Montague and Lord John Hervey together; the second was written by Hervey. Dr. John Arbuthnot was both physician and man of letters, and Pope's close friend until his death in 1735, only a short time after the publication of the Epistle. The poem is cast in the form of a dialogue between Pope himself and Arbuthnot.

Many will know their own pictures in it, there being not a circumstance but what is true; but I have, for the most part, spared their Names, and they may escape being laughed at, if they please.

I would have some of them know, it was owing to the request of the learned and candid Friend to whom it is inscribed, that I make not as free use of theirs as they have done of mine. However, I shall have this advantage, and honor, on my side, that whereas, by their proceeding, any abuse may be directed at any man, no injury can possibly be done by mine, since a nameless character can never be found out, but by its truth and likeness. P.

P. SHUT, shut the door, good John!<sup>2</sup>
fatigued, I said,

Tie up the knocker, say I'm sick, I'm dead.
The Dog-star rages! nay 'tis past a doubt,
All Bedlam, or Parnassus, is let out:

Fire in each eye, and papers in each hand,
They rave, recite, and madden round the land.

What walls can guard me, or what shade can hide?

They pierce my thickets, through my Grot<sup>3</sup>
they glide;

By land, by water, they renew the charge;
They stop the chariot, and they board the barge.

No place is sacred, not the Church is free;
E'en Sunday shines on Sabbath-day to me;
Then from the Mint<sup>4</sup> walks forth the Man
of rhyme,

Happy to catch me just at Dinner-time.

Is there a Parson, much bemused in beer,
A maudlin Poetess, a rhyming Peer,
A Clerk,<sup>5</sup> foredoomed his father's soul to
cross,

Who pens a Stanza, when he should engross?
Is there, who, locked from ink and paper,
scrawls

With despicable charcoal round his darkened walls?

<sup>2</sup>John Searl, Pope's body-servant.

<sup>3</sup>An artificial grotto that formed a passage-way under a road which ran through Pope's grounds at Twickenham. This grotto and its ornamentation gave Pope a particular pleasure.

<sup>4</sup>A district in London where debtors could not be arrested; nor could they be arrested anywhere on Sundays.

<sup>5</sup>Law clerk.

All fly to Twit'nam,<sup>1</sup> and in humble strain
Apply to me, to keep them mad or vain.
Arthur,<sup>2</sup> whose giddy son neglects the Laws, Imputes to me and my damned works the
cause:

Poor Cornus<sup>3</sup> sees his frantic wife elope,
And curses Wit, and Poetry, and Pope.
Friend to my Life (which did not you prolong,

The world had wanted many an idle song)
What Drop or Nostrum can this plague remove?

Or which must end me, a Fool's wrath or
love?

A dire dilemma! either way I'm sped,<sup>4</sup>
If foes, they write, if friends, they read me
dead.

Seized and tied down to judge, how wretched
I!

Who can't be silent, and who will not lie.
To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace,
And to be grave, exceeds all Pow'r of face.

I sit with sad civility, I read
With honest anguish, and an aching head;
And drop at last, but in unwilling ears,
This saving counsel, "Keep your piece nine years."<sup>5</sup>

"Nine years!" cries he, who high in Drury-lane,

Lulled by soft Zephyrs through the broken pane,

Rhymes ere he wakes, and prints before
Term ends,<sup>6</sup>

Obliged by hunger, and request of friends:

"The piece, you think, is incorrect? why,
take it,

I'm all submission, what you'd have it,
make it."

Three things another's modest wishes
bound,

My Friendship, and a Prologue, and ten pound.

Pitholeon sends to me: "You know his
Grace,

I want a Patron; ask him for a Place."

Pitholeon libeled me—"but here's a letter Informs you, Sir, 'twas when he knew no
better.

Dare you refuse him? Curll<sup>7</sup> invites to dine, He'll write a Journal, or he'll turn Divine."

Bless me! a packet—" 'Tis a stranger sues,
A Virgin Tragedy, an Orphan Muse."

If I dislike it, "Furies, death and rage!"

If I approve, "Commend it to the Stage."

There (thank my stars) my whole Commission ends,

The Play'rs and I are, luckily, no friends,
Fired that the house reject him, "'Sdeath
I'll print it,

And shame the fools—Your Int'rest, Sir,
with Lintot!"<sup>8</sup>

Lintot, dull rogue! will think your price too
much:

"Not, Sir, if you revise it, and retouch."

All my demurs but double his Attacks;

At last he whispers, "Do; and we go snacks."

Glad of a quarrel, straight I clap the door,
Sir, let me see your works and you no more.

'Tis sung, when Midas' Ears began to
spring

(Midas, a sacred person and a king),

His very Minister who spied them first,

(Some say his Queen) was forced to speak,
or burst.

And is not mine, my friend, a sorer case,
When ev'ry coxcomb perks them in my face?

A. Good friend, forbear! you deal in dang'- rous things.

I'd never name Queens, Ministers, or Kings;
Keep close to Ears, and those let asses prick;

'Tis nothing— P. Nothing? if they bite and kick?

Out with it, Dunciad! let the secret pass,

That secret to each fool, that he's an Ass:

The truth once told (and wherefore should we lie?)

The Queen of Midas slept, and so may I.

You think this cruel? take it for a rule,

No creature smarts so little as a fool.

Let peals of laughter, Codrus! round thee
break,

Thou unconcerned canst hear the mighty
crack:

Pit, Box, and gall'ry in convulsions hurled,

Thou stand'st unshook amidst a bursting
world.

Who shames a Scribbler? break one cobweb
through,

He spins the slight, self-pleasing thread anew:

<sup>1</sup>Twickenham, where Pope lived.

<sup>2</sup>Arthur Moore, a politician.

<sup>3</sup>Robert, Lord Walpole.

<sup>4</sup>Done for.

<sup>5</sup>Horace's advice in his Art of Poetry (line 388).

<sup>6</sup>f. e., before the season is over.

<sup>7</sup>A piratical publisher and an enemy of Pope.

<sup>8</sup>Another publisher, who published much of Pope's work.

Destroy his fib or sophistry, in vain,
The creature's at his dirty work again,
Throned in the center of his thin designs,
Proud of a vast extent of flimsy lines!
Whom have I hurt? has Poet yet, or Peer,
Lost the arched eye-brow, or Parnassian
sneer?

And has not Colley<sup>1</sup> still his Lord and Whore?

His butchers Henley? his freemasons Moore?
Does not one table Bavius still admit?
Still to one Bishop Philips<sup>2</sup> seem a wit?
Still Sappho<sup>3</sup>— A. Hold! for God's sake
—you'll offend,

No Names!—be calm!—learn prudence of a friend!

I too could write, and I am twice as tall;
But foes like these— P. One Flatt'rer's worse than all.

Of all mad creatures, if the learn'd are right,
It is the slaver kills, and not the bite.

A fool quite angry is quite innocent:
Alas! 'tis ten times worse when they repent.

One dedicates in high heroic prose,
And ridicules beyond a hundred foes:
One from all Grubstreet will my fame defend,
And, more abusive, calls himself my friend.
This prints my Letters, that expects a bribe,
And others roar aloud, "Subscribe, subscribe."

There are, who to my person pay their
court:

I cough like Horace, and, though lean, am short,

Ammon's<sup>4</sup> great son one shoulder had too
high,

Such Ovid's nose, and "Sir! you have an Eye"—

Go on, obliging creatures, make me see
All that disgraced my Betters, met in me.
Say for my comfort, languishing in bed,
"Just so immortal Maro<sup>5</sup> held his head:"
And when I die, be sure you let me know
Great Homer died three thousand years ago.

Why did I write? what sin to me unknown
Dipped me in ink, my parents', or my own?
As yet a child, nor yet a fool to fame,
I lisped in numbers, for the numbers came.

<sup>1</sup>Colley Cibber.

<sup>2</sup>Ambrose Philips.

<sup>3</sup>Lady Mary Wortley Montague.

<sup>4</sup>Alexander the Great.

<sup>5</sup>Virgil.

I left no calling for this idle trade,
No duty broke, no father disobeyed.

The Muse but served to ease some friend
not Wife,

To help me through this long disease, my Life,

To second, Arbuthnot! thy Art and Care,
And teach the Being you preserved, to bear.

But why then publish? Granville<sup>6</sup> the polite,

And knowing Walsh,<sup>7</sup> would tell me I could
write;

Well-natured Garth<sup>8</sup> inflamed with early
praise;

And Congreve loved, and Swift endured my lays;

The courtly Talbot, Somers, Sheffield,<sup>9</sup> read;
E'en mitered Rochester<sup>10</sup> would nod the head,

And St. John's self (great Dryden's friends
before)

With open arms received one Poet more.

Happy my studies, when by these approved!

Happier their author, when by these belov'd!

From these the world will judge of men and books,

Not from the Burnets, Oldmixons, and Cokes.<sup>11</sup>

Soft were my numbers; who could take offense,

While pure Description held the place of Sense?

Like gentle Fanny's<sup>12</sup> was my flow'ry theme,
A painted mistress, or a purling stream.

Yet then did Gildon draw his venal quill;—

I wished the man a dinner, and sat still.

Yet then did Dennis<sup>13</sup> rave in furious fret;

I never answered,—I was not in debt.

If want provoked, or madness made them
print,

I waged no war with Bedlam or the Mint.

Did some more sober Critic come abroad;

If wrong, I smiled; if right, I kissed the rod.

Pains, reading, study, are their just pretense,

And all they want is spirit, taste, and sense.

<sup>6</sup>George Granville, Lord Lansdowne.

<sup>7</sup>See introductory account of Pope above.

<sup>8</sup>Samuel Garth, physician and man of letters.

<sup>9</sup>All statesmen and patrons of letters.

<sup>10</sup>Francis Atterbury, Bishop of Rochester.

<sup>11</sup>Authors of secret and scandalous history (Pope's note).

<sup>12</sup>Lord Hervey.

<sup>13</sup>Gildon and Dennis were critics of the day.

Commas and points they set exactly right,
 And 'twere a sin to rob them of their mite.
 Yet ne'er one sprig of laurel graced these ribalds,
 From slashing Bentley down to pidling
 Tibalds:<sup>1</sup>
 Each wight, who reads not, and but scans
 and spells,
 Each Word-catcher, that lives on syllables,
 E'en such small Critics some regard may
 claim,
 Preserved in Milton's or in Shakespeare's
 name.
 Pretty! in amber to observe the forms
 Of hairs, or straws, or dirt, or grubs, or worms!
 The things, we know, are neither rich nor
 rare,
 But wonder how the devil they got there.
 Were others angry: I excused them too;
 Well might they rage, I gave them but their due.
 A man's true merit 'tis not hard to find;
 But each man's secret standard in his mind,
 That Casting-weight pride adds to empti-
 ness,
 This, who can gratify? for who can guess?
 The Bard<sup>2</sup> whom pilfered Pastorals renown,
 Who turns a Persian tale for half a Crown,
 Just writes to make his barrenness appear,
 And strains, from hard-bound brains, eight lines a year;
 He, who still wanting, though he lives on theft,
 Steals much, spends little, yet has nothing
 left:
 And He, who now to sense, now nonsense
 leaning,
 Means not, but blunders round about a meaning:
 And He, whose fustian's so sublimely bad,
 It is not Poetry, but prose run mad:
 All these, my modest Satire bade translate,
 And owned that nine such Poets made a
 Tate.<sup>3</sup>
 How did they fume, and stamp, and roar,
 and chafe!
 And swear, not Addison himself was safe.

Peace to all such! but were there One whose fires
 True Genius kindles, and fair Fame inspires; Bless'd with each talent and each art to
 please,
 And born to write, converse, and live with
 ease:
 Should such a man, too fond to rule alone, Bear, like the Turk, no brother near the
 throne.
 View him with scornful, yet with jealous
 eyes,
 And hate for arts that caused himself to rise;
 Damn with faint praise, assent with civil leer,
 And without sneering, teach the rest to
 sneer;
 Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike,
 Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike;
 Alike reserved to blame, or to commend,
 A tim'rous foe, and a suspicious friend;
 Dreading e'en fools, by Flatterers besieged,
 And so obliging, that he ne'er obliged;
 Like Cato, give his little Senate laws,
 And sit attentive to his own applause;
 While Wits and Templars ev'ry sentence
 raise,
 And wonder with a foolish face of praise:—
 Who but must laugh, if such a man there be?
 Who would not weep, if Atticus<sup>4</sup> were he?
 What though my Name stood rubric<sup>5</sup> on the walls
 Or plastered posts, with claps,<sup>6</sup> in capitals?
 Or smoking forth, a hundred hawkers' load,
 On wings of winds came flying all abroad?
 I sought no homage from the Race that
 write;
 I kept, like Asian Monarchs, from their sight:
 Poems I heeded (now be-rhymed so long)
 No more than thou, great George! a birthday song.
 I ne'er with wits or witlings passed my days,
 To spread about the itch of verse and praise;
 Nor like a puppy, daggled through the town,
 To fetch and carry sing-song up and down;
 Nor at Rehearsals sweat, and mouthed, and
 cried,
 With handkerchief and orange at my side;

<sup>1</sup>Bentley was a famous classical scholar who published an edition of Paradise Lost; Theobald a scholar and editor of Shakespeare.

<sup>2</sup>Ambrose Philips.

<sup>3</sup>Nahum Tate, at the time poet laureate.

<sup>4</sup>Addison.

<sup>5</sup>The reference is to Lintot's practice of posting on the walls of his shop the titles of new books in red letters.

<sup>6</sup>Posters.

But sick of fops, and poetry, and prate,
To Bufo,<sup>1</sup> left the whole Castalian state.

Proud as Apollo on his forkéd hill,
Sat full-blown Bufo, puffed by ev'ry quill;
Fed with soft Dedication all day long,
Horace and he went hand in hand in song.
His Library (where busts of Poets dead
And a true Pindar stood without a head),
Received of wits an undistinguished race,
Who first his judgment asked, and then a place:

Much they extolled his pictures, much his seat,

And flattered ev'ry day, and some days eat:
Till grown more frugal in his riper days,
He paid some bards with port, and some with praise:

To some a dry rehearsal saw assigned,
And others (harder still) he paid in kind.
Dryden alone (what wonder?) came not nigh,
Dryden alone escaped this judging eye:
But still the Great have kindness in reserve,
He helped to bury whom he helped to starve.

May some choice patron bless each gray goose quill!

May ev'ry Bavius have his Bufo still!

So, when a Statesman wants a day's defense,
Or Envy holds a whole week's war with Sense,

Or simple pride for flatt'ry makes demands,
May dunce by dunce be whistled off my hands!

Bless'd be the Great! for those they take away,

And those they left me; for they left me Gay;<sup>2</sup>

Left me to see neglected Genius bloom,
Neglected die, and tell it on his tomb:
Of all thy blameless life the sole return
My Verse, and Queensb'ry weeping o'er thy urn.

Oh, let me live my own, and die so too!

(To live and die is all I have to do)

Maintain a Poet's dignity and ease,

And see what friends, and read what books I please;

Above a Patron, though I condescend
Sometimes to call a minister my friend.

I was not born for Courts or great affairs;
I pay my debts, believe, and say my pray'rs;

<sup>1</sup>Probably Lord Halifax (the following portrait is said to have been intended, when first written, for Bubb Doddington).

<sup>2</sup>John Gay, the poet.

Can sleep without a Poem in my head;
Nor know, if Dennis be alive or dead.

Why am I asked what next shall see the light?

Heav'n's! was I born for nothing but to write?

Has Life no joys for me? or (to be grave)

Have I no friend to serve, no soul to save?

"I found him close with Swift"—"Indeed? no doubt"

(Cries prating Balbus), "something will come out."

'Tis all in vain, deny it as I will.

"No, such a Genius never can lie still;"

And then for mine obligingly mistakes

The first Lampoon Sir Will. or Bubo<sup>3</sup> makes.

Poor guiltless I! and can I choose but smile,

When ev'ry Coxcomb knows me by my Style?

Cursed be the verse, how well soe'er it flow,

That tends to make one worthy man my foe,

Give Virtue scandal, Innocence a fear,

Or from the soft-eyed Virgin steal a tear!

But he who hurts a harmless neighbor's peace,

Insults fall'n worth, or Beauty in distress,

Who loves a Lie, lame slander helps about,

Who writes a Libel, or who copies out:

That Fop, whose pride affects a patron's name,

Yet absent, wounds an author's honest fame:

Who can your merit selfishly approve,

And show the sense of it without the love;

Who has the vanity to call you friend,

Yet wants the honor, injured, to defend;

Who tells whate'er you think, whate'er you say,

And, if he lie not, must at least betray:

Who to the Dean, and silver bell can swear,

And sees at Canons what was never there;

Who reads, but with a lust to misapply,

Make Satire a Lampoon, and Fiction, Lie.

A lash like mine no honest man shall dread,

But all such babbling blockheads in his stead.

Let Sporus<sup>4</sup> tremble— A. What? that thing of silk,

Sporus, that mere white curd of Ass's milk?

Satire or sense, alas! can Sporus feel?

Who breaks a butterfly upon a wheel?

<sup>3</sup>Sir William Yonge and Bubb Doddington.

<sup>4</sup>John, Lord Hervey.

P. Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
 This painted child of dirt, that stinks and stings;
 Whose buzz the witty and the fair annoys,
 Yet wit ne'er tastes, and beauty ne'er enjoys:
 So well-bred spaniels civilly delight
 In mumbling of the game they dare not bite.
 Eternal smiles his emptiness betray,
 As shallow streams run dimpling all the way.
 Whether in florid impotence he speaks,
 And, as the prompter breathes, the puppet squeaks;
 Or at the ear of Eve, familiar Toad,
 Half froth, half venom, spits himself abroad,
 In puns, or politics, or tales, or lies,
 Or spite, or smut, or rhymes, or blasphemies.
 His wit all see-saw, between that and this,
 Now high, now low, now master up, now miss,
 And he himself one vile Antithesis.
 Amphibious thing! that acting either part,
 The trifling head or the corrupted heart,
 Fop at the toilet, flatt'rer at the board,
 Now trips a Lady, and now struts a Lord.
 Eve's tempter thus the Rabbins have expressed,
 A Cherub's face, a reptile all the rest;
 Beauty that shocks you, parts that none will trust;
 Wit that can creep, and pride that licks the dust.
 Not Fortune's worshiper, nor fashion's fool,
 Not Lucre's madman, nor Ambition's tool,
 Not proud, nor servile;—be one Poet's praise,
 That, if he pleased, he pleased by manly ways:
 That Flatt'ry, e'en to Kings, he held a shame,
 And thought a Lie in verse or prose the same.
 That not in Fancy's maze he wandered long,
 But stooped to Truth, and moralized his song:
 That not for Fame, but Virtue's better end,
 He stood the furious foe, the timid friend,
 The damning critic, half approving wit,
 The coxcomb hit, or fearing to be hit;
 Laughed at the loss of friends he never had,
 The dull, the proud, the wicked, and the mad;
 The distant threats of vengeance on his head,
 The blow unfelt, the tear he never shed;
 The tale revived, the lie so oft o'erthrown,
 Th' imputed trash, and dullness not his own;

The morals blackened when the writings
 'scape,

The libeled person, and the pictured shape;
 Abuse, on all he loved, or loved him, spread,
 A friend in exile, or a father dead;
 The whisper, that to greatness still too near,
 Perhaps, yet vibrates on his Sov'reign's ear:—

Welcome for thee, fair Virtue! all the past;
 For thee, fair Virtue! welcome e'en the last!

A. But why insult the poor, affront the great?

P. A knave's a knave, to me, in ev'ry state:
 Alike my scorn, if he succeed or fail.
 Sporus at court, or Japhet<sup>1</sup> in a jail,
 A hireling scribbler, or a hireling peer,
 Knight of the post corrupt, or of the shire;
 If on a Pillory, or near a Throne,
 He gain his Prince's ear, or lose his own.

Yet soft by nature, more a dupe than wit,
 Sappho can tell you how this man was bit;
 This dreaded Sat'rist Dennis will confess Foe to his pride, but friend to his distress:
 So humble, he has knocked at Tibbald's door,
 Has drunk with Cibber, nay has rhymed for Moore.

Full ten years slandered, did he once reply?
 Three thousand suns went down on Welsted's<sup>2</sup> lie.

To please a Mistress one aspersed his life;
 He lashed him not, but let her be his wife.
 Let Budgell<sup>3</sup> charge low Grubstreet on his quill,

And write whate'er he pleased, except his Will;

Let the two Curlls<sup>4</sup> of Town and Court, abuse
 His father, mother, body, soul, and muse.
 Yet why? that Father held it for a rule,
 It was a sin to call our neighbor fool;
 That harmless Mother thought no wife a whore:

Hear this, and spare his family, James Moore!

Unspotted names, and memorable long!

If there be force in Virtue, or in Song.

Of gentle blood (part shed in Honor's cause,

While yet in Britain Honor had applause)

<sup>1</sup>Japhet Croke, a forger.

<sup>2</sup>A hack-writer of the day.

<sup>3</sup>Budgell was charged with forging a will, to his own profit.

<sup>4</sup>The bookseller and Lord Hervey.

Each parent sprung— A. What fortune, pray?— P. Their own,
 And better got, than Bestia's from the
 throne.
 Born to no Pride, inheriting no Strife,
 Nor marrying Discord in a noble wife,
 Stranger to civil and religious rage,
 The good man walked innoxious through his
 age.
 Nor Courts he saw, no suits would ever try,
 Nor dared an Oath, nor hazarded a Lie.
 Unlearn'd, he knew no schoolman's subtle
 art,
 No language, but the language of the heart.
 By Nature honest, by Experience wise,
 Healthy by temp'rance, and by exercise;
 His life, though long, to sickness past unknown,
 His death was instant, and without a groan.
 O grant me, thus to live, and thus to die!
 Who sprung from Kings shall know less joy than I.

O Friend! may each domestic bliss be
 thine!
 Be no unpleasing Melancholy mine:
 Me, let the tender office long engage,
 To rock the cradle of reposing Age,
 With lenient arts extend a Mother's breath;
 Make Languor smile, and smooth the bed
 of Death,
 Explore the thought, explain the asking eye,
 And keep a while one parent from the sky!
 On cares like these if length of days attend,
 May Heav'n, to bless those days, preserve
 my friend,
 Preserve him social, cheerful, and serene,
 And just as rich as when he served a Queen.<sup>1</sup>
 A. Whether that blessing be denied or giv'n, Thus far was right, the rest belongs to Heav'n.

<sup>1</sup>Arbuthnot had been physician to Queen Anne.

WILLIAM COLLINS (1721-1759)

Collins was born in Chichester, coming of a family of tradesmen long established there. The date of his birth is not known, though there is a tradition that he was born on Christmas day. As a boy he probably attended the prebendal school at Chichester, and in 1753 he was sent to Winchester, where he came to know several youths afterwards eminent, among them Joseph Warton. Collins showed already at Winchester a pronounced turn for verse-writing, and there is ground for believing that he also distinguished himself for scholarship. In 1740 he was entered at Queen's College, Oxford, and after the summer of the following year he was at Magdalen College. He took his B. A. in 1743. Our knowledge of his Oxford years is meager, but it appears that, while he made some real progress in his studies, he began to exhibit there the indolence and taste for dissipation which marked his later years in London. Collins's father had died, leaving little or no money, in 1734, and he derived his chief means of support from allowances made by his uncle. It was apparently intended that he should provide for himself by taking holy orders, but instead he went to London to support himself by literature. "He was romantic enough," says his college friend White, "to suppose that his superior abilities would draw the attention of the great world, by means of whom he was to make his fortune." He had many plans both for historical work and for play-writing, and he might have made, not a fortune, but at least a competency had he ever seriously attempted to carry them out. He contented himself, however, largely with talk, while he bought fine clothes when he could, enjoyed the gaiety of London, and drank intemperately. His actual performance consisted only of his Persian Eclogues, said by Joseph Warton to have been written at Winchester when Collins was only seventeen (published in 1742), his Epistle Addressed to Sir Thomas Hanmer, an editor of Shakespeare (1743), and a small number of lyrical poems, chiefly odes (Odes on Several Descriptive and Allegoric Subjects, 1747; Ode Occasioned by the Death of Mr. Thomson, 1749; Ode on the Popular Superstitions of the Highlands of Scotland, not published until 1788). In 1749 Collins's days of poverty ended, his uncle dying in that year and leaving him a large sum of money. Shortly afterwards he apparently left London, to live in Chichester through the remaining years of his life. His mind was still full of projects, but it soon became evident that there was less hope than ever of their being carried out. For Collins soon began to show signs of mental break-down. These gradually increased, leaving him weak and helpless even when he was in possession of his faculties, and he was insane practically from 1754 until the time of his death.

Small though the quantity of Collins's poetry is, his odes are of so singularly fine a quality as to give his name lasting interest. He was one of the few men of his period who had lyrical power of a high order, and he wrote at least enough to give this enduring, if not full, expression. In the nineteenth century he was looked upon with increased interest as a real, if largely unconscious, forerunner of the romantic movement of the early years of that century. Collins was "romantic" in that to some extent he shared the growing antiquarian interests of his age, and in that his descriptions of natural scenery show some freshness, while it is evident that he could only with difficulty bring his imaginative powers into relation with real life. On the other hand, as some of Collins's odes show in their stanzaic structure the influence of classical example, so does his poetic style exhibit classical restraint, proportion, finish, ease, and simplicity. When at his best, Collins shows a considerable degree of emancipation from the conventional classicism of his age, in favor of a truer classicism of form induced by independent study of the Greeks, particularly of the Greek dramatists.

DIRGE IN CYMBELINE

SUNG BY GUIDERUS AND ARVIRAGUS OVER FIDELE, SUPPOSED TO BE DEAD (1744)

To FAIR Fidele's grassy tomb
Soft maids and village hinds shall bring
Each op'ning sweet, of earliest bloom,
And rifle all the breathing Spring.

No wailing ghost shall dare appear,
To vex with shrieks this quiet grove;
But shepherd lads assemble here,
And melting virgins own their love.

No withered witch shall here be seen,
No goblins lead their nightly crew;
The female fays shall haunt the green,
And dress thy grave with pearly dew.

The red-breast oft at ev'ning hours
 Shall kindly lend his little aid,
 With hoary moss, and gathered flow'rs,
 To deck the ground where thou art laid.

When howling winds, and beating rain,
 In tempests shake the sylvan cell,
 Or 'midst the chase on ev'ry plain,
 The tender thought on thee shall dwell.

Each lonely scene shall thee restore,
 For thee the tear be duly shed:
 Belov'd till life can charm no more,
 And mourned, till Pity's self be dead.

ODE TO SIMPLICITY<sup>1</sup>

O thou by Nature taught
 To breathe her genuine thought,
 In numbers warmly pure, and sweetly strong:
 Who first, on mountains wild,
 In Fancy, loveliest child,
 Thy babe or Pleasure's, nursed the pow'rs
 of song!

Thou who with hermit heart
 Disdain'st the wealth of art,
 And gauds, and pageant weeds, and trailing pall,
 But com'st a decent maid
 In Attic robe arrayed,
 O chaste, unboastful nymph, to thee I call!

By all the honeyed store
 On Hybla's thymy shore,
 By all her blooms, and mingled murmurs
 dear,
 By her<sup>2</sup> whose lovelorn woe
 In ev'ning musings slow
 Soothed sweetly sad Electra's poet's<sup>3</sup> ear:

By old Cephisus<sup>4</sup> deep,
 Who spread his wavy sweep
 In warbled wand'rings round thy green retreat,
 On whose enameled side
 When holy Freedom died,
 No equal haunt allured thy future feet:

<sup>1</sup>This and all the following poems were published in 1747 (this is the date on the title-page of the first edition, though the volume actually appeared in December, 1746).

<sup>2</sup>The nightingale.

<sup>3</sup>Sophocles.

<sup>4</sup>River of Attica.

O sister meek of Truth,
 To my admiring youth
 Thy sober aid and native charms infuse!
 The flow'rs that sweetest breathe,
 Though Beauty culled the wreath,
 Still ask thy hand to range their ordered hues.

While Rome could none esteem
 But virtue's patriot theme,
 You loved her hills, and led her laureate
 band:
 But stayed to sing alone
 To one distinguished throne,<sup>5</sup>
 And turned thy face, and fled her altered
 land.

No more, in hall or bow'r,
 The passions own thy pow'r;
 Love, only love, her forceless numbers mean
 For thou hast left her shrine;
 Nor olive more, nor vine,
 Shall gain thy feet to bless the servile scene.

Though taste, though genius bless
 To some divine excess, Faints the cold work till thou inspire the whole;
 What each, what all supply,
 May court, may charm our eye,
 Thou, only thou, canst raise the meeting
 soul!

Of these let others ask,
 To aid some mighty task;
 I only seek to find thy temp'rate vale:
 Where oft my reed might sound
 To maids and shepherds round,
 And all thy sons, O Nature, learn my tale.

ODE ON THE POETICAL CHARACTER

STROPHE

As once, if not with light regard
 I read aright that gifted bard<sup>6</sup> (Him whose school above the rest
 His loveliest Elfin Queen has bless'd),
 One, only one, unrivaled fair
 Might hope the magic girdle wear,

<sup>5</sup>The throne of Augustus, patron of Virgil and Horace.

<sup>6</sup>Spenser.

At solemn tourney hung on high,
 The wish of each love-darting eye;
 Lo! to each other nymph in turn applied,
 As if, in air unseen, some hov'ring hand,
 Some chaste and angel friend to virgin fame,
 With whispered spell had burst the starting band,
 It left unloved her loathed, dishonored
 side;
 Happier hopeless fair, if never
 Her baffled hand with vain endeavor
 Had touched that fatal zone to her denied!
 Young Fancy thus, to me divinest name,
 To whom, prepared and bathed in heav'n,
 The cest<sup>1</sup> of amplest pow'r is giv'n,
 To gird the godlike gift assigns,
 To gird their bless'd, prophetic loins,
 And gaze her visions wild, and feel unmixed
 her flame!

EPODE

The band, as fairy legends say,
 Was wove on that creating day
 When He who called with thought to birth
 Yon tented sky, this laughing earth,
 And dressed with springs and forests tall,
 And poured the main engirthing all,
 Long by the loved enthusiast wooed,
 Himself in some diviner mood,
 Retiring, sat with her alone,
 And placed her on his sapphire throne,
 The whiles, the vaulted shrine around,
 Seraphic wires were heard to sound,
 Now sublimest triumph swelling,
 Now on love and mercy dwelling;
 And she, from out the veiling cloud,
 Breathed her magic notes aloud:
 And thou, thou rich-haired Youth of Morn,
 And all thy subject life, was born!
 The dang'rous Passions kept aloof,
 Far from the sainted growing woof:
 But near it sat ecstatic Wonder,
 List'ning the deep applauding thunder;
 And Truth, in sunny vest arrayed,
 By whose the tarsel's<sup>2</sup> eyes were made;
 All the shad'wy tribes of mind
 In braided dance their murmurs joined,
 And all the bright uncounted Powers
 Who feed on heav'n's ambrosial flowers.

Where is the bard whose soul can now
 Its high presuming hopes avow?
 Where he who thinks, with rapture blind,
 This hallowed work for him designed?

ANTISTROPHE

High on some cliff, to heav'n up-piled,
 Of rude access, of prospect wild,
 Where, tangled round the jealous steep,
 Strange shades o'er-brow the valleys deep,
 And holy genii guard the rock,
 Its glooms embrown, its springs unlock,
 While on its rich ambitious head
 An Eden, like his own, lies spread,
 I view that oak, the fancied glades among,
 By which as Milton lay, his ev'ning ear,
 From many a cloud that dropped ethereal
 dew,
 Nigh sphered in heav'n its native strains
 could hear,
 On which that ancient trump he reached was hung:
 Thither oft, his glory greeting,
 From Waller's myrtle shades retreating,
 With many a vow from Hope's aspiring
 tongue,
 My trembling feet his guiding steps pursue;
 In vain—such bliss to one alone
 Of all the sons of soul was known,
 And Heav'n and Fancy, kindred powers,
 Have now o'erturned th' inspiring bowers,
 Or curtained close such scene from ev'ry future view.

ODE

WRITTEN IN THE BEGINNING OF THE YEAR
 1746

How sleep the brave who sink to rest
 By all their country's wishes bless'd!
 When Spring, with dewy fingers cold,
 Returns to deck their hallowed mold,
 She there shall dress a sweeter sod
 Than Fancy's feet have ever trod.

By fairy hands their knell is rung,
 By forms unseen their dirge is sung;
 There Honor comes, a pilgrim gray,
 To bless the turf that wraps their clay;
 And Freedom shall awhile repair,
 To dwell a weeping hermit there!

<sup>1</sup>Girdle.

<sup>2</sup>Male falcon.

ODE TO LIBERTY

STROPHE

Who shall awake the Spartan fire,
And call in solemn sounds to life
The youths whose locks divinely spreading,
Like vernal hyacinths in sullen hue,
At once the breath of fear and virtue shedding,

Applauding Freedom loved of old to view?
What new Alcæus, fancy-bless'd,
Shall sing the sword, in myrtles dressed,
At Wisdom's shrine awhile its flame concealing

(What place so fit to seal a deed renowned?),
Till she her brightest lightnings round
revealing,

It leaped in glory forth, and dealt her prompted wound?

O goddess, in that feeling hour,
When most its sounds would court thy ears,

Let not my shell's misguided pow'r
E'er draw thy sad, thy mindful tears.
No, Freedom, no, I will not tell
How Rome, before thy weeping face,
With heaviest sound, a giant statue, fell,
Pushed by a wild and artless race
From off its wide ambitious base,
When Time his Northern sons of spoil awoke,
And all the blended work of strength and
grace,

With many a rude repeated stroke,
And many a barb'rous yell, to thousand fragments broke.

EPODE

Yet e'en where'er the least appeared,
Th' admiring world thy hand revered;
Still, midst the scattered states around,
Some remnants of her strength were found;
They saw, by what escaped the storm,
How wondrous rose her perfect form,
How in the great, the labored whole,
Each mighty master poured his soul!
For sunny Florence, seat of Art,
Beneath her vines preserved a part,
Till they<sup>1</sup> whom Science loved to name
(O who could fear it?) quenched her flame.
And lo, an humbler relic laid
In jealous Pisa's olive shade!

<sup>1</sup>The Medici. "Science" is used as a synonym for learning.

See, small Marino joins the theme,
Though least, not last in thy esteem.
Strike, louder strike th' ennobling strings
To those<sup>2</sup> whose merchant sons were kings;
To him<sup>3</sup> who, decked with pearly pride,
In Adria weds his green-haired bride.
Hail, port of glory, wealth, and pleasure!
Ne'er let me change this Lydian measure,
Nor e'er her former pride relate
To sad Liguria's<sup>4</sup> bleeding state.
Ah no! more pleased thy haunts I seek,
On Wild Helvetia's<sup>5</sup> mountains bleak (Where, when the favored of thy choice,
The daring archer,<sup>6</sup> heard thy voice,
Forth from his eyrie roused in dread,
The rav'ning eagle<sup>7</sup> northward fled):
Or dwell in willowed meads more near,
With those<sup>8</sup> to whom thy stork is dear;
Those whom the rod of Alva bruised,
Whose crown a British queen<sup>9</sup> refused!
The magic works, thou feel'st the strains,
One holier name alone remains;
The perfect spell shall then avail:
Hail nymph, adored by Britain, hail!

ANTISTROPHE

Beyond the measure vast of thought,
The works the wizard Time has wrought!

The Gaul, 't is held of antique story,
Saw Britain linked to his now adverse strand;
No sea between, nor cliff sublime and
hoary,

He passed with unwet feet through all our land.
To the blown Baltic then, they say,
The wild waves found another way,
Where Orcas howls, his wolfish mountains
rounding;

Till all the banded West at once 'gan rise,
A wide wild storm e'en Nature's self confounding,

With'ring her giant sons with strange uncouth surprise.

This pillared earth so firm and wide,
By winds and inward labors torn,
In thunders dread was pushed aside,
And down the should'ring billows borne.

<sup>2</sup>The Venetians.

<sup>3</sup>The Doge of Venice.

<sup>4</sup>Genoa.

<sup>5</sup>Switzerland.

<sup>6</sup>William Tell.

<sup>7</sup>Austria.

<sup>8</sup>The Dutch.

<sup>9</sup>Queen Elizabeth (in 1575).

And see, like gems, her laughing train,
 The little isles on every side!
 Mona, once hid from those who search the
 main,
 Where thousand elfin shapes abide,
 And Wight, who checks the west'ring tide;
 For thee consenting Heav'n has each bestowed,
 A fair attendant on her sov'reign pride.
 To thee this bless'd divorce she owed,
 For thou hast made her vales thy loved, thy last abode!

SECOND EPODE

Then too, 't is said, an hoary pile,
 Midst the green navel of our isle,
 Thy shrine in some religious wood,
 O soul-enforcing goddess, stood!
 There oft the painted native's feet
 Were wont thy form celestial meet:
 Though now with hopeless toil we trace
 Time's backward rolls to find its place;
 Whether the fiery-tress'd Dane
 Or Roman's self o'erturned the fane,
 Or in what heaven-left age it fell,
 'T were hard for modern song to tell.
 Yet still, if truth those beams infuse
 Which guide at once and charm the Muse,
 Beyond yon braided clouds that lie,
 Paving the light-embroidered sky,
 Amidst the bright pavilioned plains,
 The beauteous model still remains.
 There, happier than in islands bless'd,<sup>1</sup>
 Or bow'rs by Spring or Hebe dressed,
 The chiefs who fill our Albion's story,
 In warlike weeds, retired in glory,
 Hear their consorted druids sing
 Their triumphs to th' immortal string.

How may the poet now unfold
 What never tongue or numbers told?
 How learn, delighted and amazed,
 What hands unknown that fabric raised?
 E'en now, before his favored eyes,
 In Gothic pride it seems to rise!
 Yet Græcia's graceful orders join,
 Majestic through the mixed design;
 The secret builder knew to choose
 Each sphere-found gem of richest hues:
 Whate'er heav'n's purer mold contains,
 When nearer suns emblaze its veins;
 There on the walls the patriot's sight
 May ever hang with fresh delight,

And, graved with some prophetic rage,
 Read Albion's fame through ev'ry age.

Ye forms divine, ye laureate band,
 That near her inmost altar stand,
 Now sooth her to her blissful train
 Blithe Concord's social form to gain:
 Concord, whose myrtle wand can steep
 E'en Anger's bloodshot eyes in sleep:
 Before whose breathing bosom's balm
 Rage drops his steel, and storms grow calm.
 Her let our sires and matrons hoar
 Welcome to Britain's ravaged shore;
 Our youths, enamored of the fair,
 Play with the tangles of her hair;
 Till, in one loud applauding sound,
 The nations shout to her around,
 "O how supremely art thou bless'd!
 Thou, lady, thou shalt rule the West!"

ODE TO EVENING

If aught of oaten stop, or pastoral song,
 May hope, chaste Eve, to sooth thy modest
 ear,

Like thy own solemn springs,
 Thy springs and dying gales,

O nymph reserved, while now the bright-haired sun
 Sits in yon western tent, whose cloudy skirts,
 With brede<sup>2</sup> ethereal wove,
 O'erhang his wavy bed:

Now air is hushed, save where the weak-eyed bat,
 With short shrill shriek, flits by on leathern
 wing,
 Or where the beetle winds
 His small but sullen horn,

As oft he rises 'midst the twilight path,
 Against the pilgrim borne in heedless hum:
 Now teach me, maid composed,
 To breathe some softened strain,

Whose numbers, stealing through thy dark'ning vale,
 May not unseemly with its stillness suit,
 As, musing slow, I hail Thy genial loved return!

For when thy folding-star arising shows
 His paly circlet, at his warning lamp

<sup>1</sup>The Happy Islands, abode of the souls of heroes.

<sup>2</sup>Embroidery.

The fragrant Hours, and elves
Who slept in flowers the day,

And many a nymph who wreaths her brows
with sedge,
And sheds the fresh'ning dew, and, lovelier
still,
The pensive Pleasures sweet,
Prepare thy shadowy car.

Then lead, calm vot'ress, where some sheety lake
Cheers the lone heath, or some time-hallowed pile
Or upland fallows gray
Reflect its last cool gleam.

But when chill blust'ring winds, or driving
rain,
Forbid my willing feet, be mine the hut
That from the mountain's side
Views wilds, and swelling floods,

And hamlets brown, and dim-discovered
spires,
And hears their simple bell, and marks o'er
all
Thy dewy fingers draw
The gradual dusky veil.

While Spring shall pour his show'rs, as oft
he wont,
And bathe thy breathing tresses, meekest
Eve;
While Summer loves to sport
Beneath thy ling'ring light;

While sallow Autumn fills thy lap with leaves;
Or Winter, yelling through the troublous air,
Affrights thy shrinking train,
And rudely rends thy robes;

So long, sure-found beneath the sylvan shed,
Shall Fancy, Friendship, Science, rose-lipped Health,
Thy gentlest influence own,
And hymn thy fav'rite name!

THE PASSIONS

AN ODE FOR MUSIC

When Music, heav'nly maid, was young,
While yet in early Greece she sung,
The Passions oft, to hear her shell,
Thronged around her magic cell,

Exulting, trembling, raging, fainting,
Possessed beyond the Muse's painting;
By turns they felt the glowing mind
Disturbed, delighted, raised, refined:
Till once, 't is said, when all were fired,
Filled with fury, rapt, inspired,
From the supporting myrtles round
They snatched her instruments of sound;
And as they oft had heard apart
Sweet lessons of her forceful art,
Each—for madness ruled the hour—
Would prove his own expressive pow'r.

First Fear his hand, its skill to try,
Amid the chords bewildered laid,
And back recoiled, he knew not why,
E'en at the sound himself had made.

Next Anger rushed; his eyes, on fire,
In lightnings owned his secret stings;
In one rude clash he struck the lyre,
And swept with hurried hand the strings.

With woeful measures wan Despair
Low sullen sounds his grief beguiled;
A solemn, strange, and mingled air;
'T was sad by fits, by starts 't was wild.

But thou, O Hope, with eyes so fair,
What was thy delightful measure?
Still it whispered promised pleasure,
And bade the lovely scenes at distance hail!
Still would her touch the strain prolong,
And from the rocks, the woods, the vale,
She called on Echo still through all the song;
And where her sweetest theme she chose,
A soft responsive voice was heard at ev'ry close,
And Hope enchanted smiled, and waved her golden hair.

And longer had she sung,—but with a frown
Revenge impatient rose;
He threw his blood-stained sword in thunder
down

And with a with'ring look
The war-denouncing<sup>1</sup> trumpet took,
And blew a blast so loud and dread,
Were ne'er prophetic sounds so full of woe.
And ever and anon he beat
The doubling drum with furious heat;

<sup>1</sup>War-announcing.

And though sometimes, each dreary pause between,
 Dejected Pity, at his side,
 Her soul-subduing voice applied,
 Yet still he kept his wild unaltered mien, While each strained ball of sight seemed bursting from his head.

Thy numbers, Jealousy, to nought were fixed,
 Sad proof of thy distressful state;
 Of differing themes the veering song was mixed,
 And now it courted Love, now raving called on Hate.

With eyes upraised, as one inspired,
 Pale Melancholy sat retired,
 And from her wild sequestered seat,
 In notes by distance made more sweet,
 Poured through the mellow horn her pensive
 soul:

• And, dashing soft from rocks around,
 Bubbling runnels joined the sound;
 Through glades and glooms the mingled measure stole;
 Or o'er some haunted stream with fond delay
 Round an holy calm diffusing,
 Love of peace and lonely musing,
 In hollow murmurs died away.

But O how altered was its sprightlier tone,
 When Cheerfulness, a nymph of healthiest hue,

Her bow across her shoulder flung,
 Her buskins gemmed with morning dew,
 Blew an inspiring air, that dale and thicket
 rung,

The hunter's call to faun and dryad known!
 The oak-crowned sisters, and their chaste-eyed queen,<sup>1</sup>

Satyrs, and sylvan boys, were seen,
 Peeping from forth their alleys green;

Brown Exercise rejoiced to hear,
 And Sport leaped up, and seized his beechen spear.

Last came Joy's ecstatic trial.

He, with viny crown advancing,

First to the lively pipe his hand addressed;
 But soon he saw the brisk awak'ning viol, Whose sweet entrancing voice he loved the
 best.

They would have thought, who heard
 the strain,

They saw in Tempe's vale<sup>2</sup> her native
 maids,

Amidst the festal sounding shades,
 To some unwearied minstrel dancing, While, as his flying fingers kissed the strings,

Love framed with Mirth a gay fantastic
 round;

Loose were her tresses seen, her zone
 unbound,

And he, amidst his frolic play,
 As if he would the charming air repay,
 Shook thousand odors from his dewy wings.

O Music, sphere-descended maid,
 Friend of Pleasure, Wisdom's aid,
 Why, goddess, why, to us denied,
 Lay'st thou thy ancient lyre aside?
 As in that loved Athenian bower
 You learned an all-commanding power,
 Thy mimic soul, O nymph endeared,
 Can well recall what then it heard.
 Where is thy native simple heart,
 Devote to Virtue, Fancy, Art?

Arise as in that elder time,
 Warm, energetic, chaste, sublime!
 Thy wonders, in that godlike age,
 Fill thy recording sister's page—
 'T is said, and I believe the tale,
 Thy humblest reed could more prevail,
 Had more of strength, diviner rage,
 Than all which charms this laggard age,
 E'en all at once together found,
 Cecelia's<sup>3</sup> mingled world of sound.
 O bid our vain endeavors cease,
 Revive the just designs of Greece,
 Return in all thy simple state,
 Confirm the tales her sons relate!

<sup>2</sup>A valley in Thessaly.

<sup>3</sup>St. Cecelia was said to have invented the organ.

<sup>1</sup>The wood-nymphs and Diana.

THOMAS GRAY (1716-1771)

Gray was born in Cornhill, London, on 26 December, 1716. When he was about eleven years old he was sent to Eton, where he formed close friendships with Horace Walpole, Richard West, whose early death in 1742 caused him deep grief, and Thomas Ashton. In 1734 he entered Peterhouse, Cambridge. He made but few acquaintances there, his life-long habit of reserve already asserting itself, and he left Cambridge in 1738 without taking a degree, because of his hatred of mathematics. In 1739 he went with Horace Walpole to travel on the continent, and they spent some months together very agreeably, though in Italy there arose a difference between them which caused them to part company, Gray returning home alone in the summer of 1741. He spent about a year living with his mother at Stoke Poges, and then in 1742 returned to Peterhouse. He made some efforts to study the law, and was given the bachelor's degree in law in 1743, but he never took any steps looking to active practice. Instead he settled down to a life of study at Cambridge, where he remained, save for one interruption, through the rest of his life. In consequence of some disturbance he moved from Peterhouse to Pembroke in 1756, and in a life outwardly so quiet as his this was a great event. When the British Museum was opened in 1759 he took lodgings in London and remained there two years, studying manuscripts and old books in the Museum. He is said to have become one of the most learned men in Europe in his time, his studies including classical literature, history, modern languages and literatures, architecture, botany, and music. He made extensive collections and notes for a history of English poetry, but gave over his design when he learned that Thomas Warton was engaged on the same subject. His few poems he wrote slowly and with difficulty, and he had no ambition for fame. He was occupied with the famous Elegy for about eight years before he completed it, and then was induced to publish it in 1751 only when he learned that a mutilated copy was about to be printed without his permission. Nevertheless the few poems he published in 1753 and 1757 won him immediate recognition, and he was offered the post of poet laureate in the latter year. This he refused without hesitation, regarding it, in view of the character of recent incumbents, as a questionable honor, and as in any case one which he did not care for. In 1768 he was made professor of modern history at Cambridge, a post which in his day did not necessarily carry any duties with it and, though he planned to deliver some lectures, he never did so. Gray died on 30 July, 1771, and was buried at Stoke Poges, by the side of his mother.

Gray's poems are almost as few in number as those of Collins, and like Collins's they are characterized by an exquisite sense of form. Gray's fastidious classicism of style and form issued from qualities of temperament which were reinforced by his close study of the Greeks and, among English poets, of Milton and Dryden. Gray's antiquarianism, which found expression in the Bard and in his Norse and other Welsh poems, together with admiration which he felt for rugged natural scenery, has caused him to be regarded as a forerunner of the romantic poets of the early nineteenth century. This to a certain extent he was, but the point may be unduly insisted on to the obscuration of his more important qualities. His interesting letters are of a piece with his poems in showing that he was "romantic" in only a very partial and external sense.

ODE ON THE DEATH OF A FAVORITE CAT,

DROWNED IN A TUB OF GOLD FISHES<sup>1</sup>

'Twas on a lofty vase's side,
Where China's gayest art had dyed
The azure flowers, that blow;
Demurest of the tabby kind,
The pensive Selima reclined,
Gazed on the lake below.

Her conscious tail her joy declared;
The fair round face, the snowy beard,

The velvet of her paws,
Her coat, that with the tortoise vies,
Her ears of jet, and emerald eyes,
She saw; and purred applause.

Still had she gazed; but 'midst the tide
Two angel forms were seen to glide,
The Genii of the stream:
Their scaly armor's Tyrian hue
Through richest purple to the view Betrayed a golden gleam.

The hapless Nymph with wonder saw:
A whisker first and then a claw,

<sup>1</sup>Written early in 1747; first published in 1748.

With many an ardent wish,
 She stretched in vain to reach the prize.
 What female heart can gold despise?
 What Cat's averse to fish?

Presumptuous Maid! with looks intent
 Again she stretched, again she bent,
 Nor knew the gulf between.
 (Malignant Fate sat by, and smiled)
 The slipp'ry verge her feet beguiled,
 She tumbled headlong in.

Eight times emerging from the flood
 She mewed to ev'ry wat'ry God,
 Some speedy aid to send.
 No Dolphin came, no Nereid stirred:
 Nor cruel Tom, nor Susan heard.
 A Fav'rite has no friend!

From hence, ye Beauties, undeceived,
 Know, one false step is ne'er retrieved,
 And be with caution bold.
 Not all that tempts your wand'ring eyes
 And heedless hearts, is lawful prize;
 Nor all, that glisters, gold.

ODE ON A DISTANT PROSPECT OF ETON COLLEGE<sup>1</sup>

**Ἀνθρωπος ἱκανὴν πρόφασιν εἰς τὸ δυστυχεῖν.*<sup>2</sup> —Menander.

Ye distant spires, ye antique towers,
 That crown the wat'ry glade,
 Where grateful Science still adores
 Her Henry's<sup>3</sup> holy Shade;
 And ye, that from the stately brow
 Of Windsor's<sup>4</sup> heights th' expanse below
 Of grove, of lawn, of mead survey, Whose turf, whose shade, whose flowers among Wanders the hoary Thames along
 His silver-winding way.

Ah happy hills, ah pleasing shade,
 Ah fields belov'd in vain,
 Where once my careless childhood strayed,
 A stranger yet to pain!
 I feel the gales, that from ye blow,
 A momentary bliss bestow,

As waving fresh their gladsome wing,
 My weary soul they seem to sooth,
 And, redolent of joy and youth,
 To breathe a second spring.

Say, Father Thames, for thou hast seen
 Full many a sprightly race
 Disporting on thy margent green
 The paths of pleasure trace,
 Who foremost now delight to cleave
 With pliant arm thy glassy wave?
 The captive linnet which enthrall?
 What idle progeny succeed
 To chase the rolling circle's speed,
 Or urge the flying ball?

While some on earnest business bent
 Their murm'ring labors ply
 'Gainst graver hours, that bring constraint
 To sweeten liberty:
 Some bold adventurers disdain
 The limits of their little reign,
 And unknown regions dare descry:
 Still as they run they look behind,
 They hear a voice in every wind,
 And snatch a fearful joy.

Gay hope is theirs by fancy fed,
 Less pleasing when possessed;
 The tear forgot as soon as shed,
 The sunshine of the breast:
 Theirs buxom health of rosy hue,
 Wild wit, invention ever-new,
 And lively cheer of vigor born;
 The thoughtless day, the easy night,
 The spirits pure, the slumbers light,
 That fly th' approach of morn.

Alas, regardless of their doom,
 The little victims play!
 No sense have they of ills to come,
 Nor care beyond to-day:
 Yet see how all around 'em wait
 The Ministers of human fate,
 And black Misfortune's baleful train!
 Ah, show them where in ambush stand
 To seize their prey the murd'rous band!
 Ah, tell them, they are men!

These shall the fury Passions tear,
 The vulturs of the mind,
 Disdainful Anger, pallid Fear,
 And Shame that skulks behind;

<sup>1</sup>Written in 1742; first published in 1747.

<sup>2</sup>A human being; sufficient cause for misery.

<sup>3</sup>Henry VI, founder of Eton College (1440).

<sup>4</sup>Windsor Castle, a royal palace near Eton.

Or pining Love shall waste their youth,
Or Jealousy with rankling tooth,
That inly gnaws the secret heart,
And Envy wan, and faded Care,
Grim-visaged comfortless Despair,
And Sorrow's piercing dart.

Ambition this shall tempt to rise,
Then whirl the wretch from high,
To bitter Scorn a sacrifice,
And grinning Infamy.
The stings of Falsehood those shall try,
And hard Unkindness' altered eye,
That mocks the tear it forced to flow;
And keen Remorse with blood defiled,
And moody Madness laughing wild
Amid severest woe.

Lo, in the vale of years beneath
A grisly troop are seen,
The painful family of Death,
More hideous than their Queen:
This racks the joints, this fires the veins,
That every laboring sinew strains,
Those in the deeper vitals rage:
Lo, Poverty, to fill the band,
That numbs the soul with icy hand,
And slow-consuming Age.

To each his sufferings: all are men,
Condemned alike to groan;
The tender for another's pain,
Th' unfeeling for his own.
Yet ah! why should they know their fate?
Since sorrow never comes too late,
And happiness too swiftly flies.
Thought would destroy their paradise.
No more; where ignorance is bliss,
'Tis folly to be wise.

HYMN TO ADVERSITY<sup>1</sup>

—Ζήνα

τὸν φρονεῖν βροτοῖς ὁδῶ-σαντα τῷ πάθει μάθαν
θέντα κυρίως ἔχειν.<sup>2</sup>

Æschylus, in Agamemnone.

Daughter of Jove, relentless Power,
Thou Tamer of the human breast,
Whose iron scourge and tort'ring hour,
The Bad affright, afflict the Best!

<sup>1</sup>Written in 1742; first published in 1753.

<sup>2</sup>Zeus has set men on the way to wisdom and decreed that they shall learn through suffering (lines 167-171).

Bound in thy adamantine chain
The Proud are taught to taste of pain,
And purple Tyrants vainly groan
With pangs unfelt before, unpitied and alone.

When first thy Sire to send on earth
Virtue, his darling Child, designed,
To thee he gave the heav'nly Birth,
And bade to form her infant mind.
Stern rugged Nurse! thy rigid lore
With patience many a year she bore:
What sorrow was, thou bad'st her know,
And from her own she learned to melt at others' woe.

Scared at thy frown terrific, fly
Self-pleasing Folly's idle brood,
Wild Laughter, Noise, and thoughtless Joy,
And leave us leisure to be good.
Light they disperse, and with them go
The summer Friend, the flatt'ring Foe;
By vain Prosperity received,
To her they vow their truth, and are again believed.

Wisdom in sable garb arrayed
Immersed in rapt'rous thought profound,
And Melancholy, silent maid
With leaden eye, that loves the ground,
Still on thy solemn steps attend:
Warm Charity, the gen'ral Friend,
With Justice to herself severe,
And Pity dropping soft the sadly-pleasing tear.

Oh, gently on thy Suppliant's head,
Dread Goddess, lay thy chast'ning hand!
Not in thy Gorgon terrors clad,<sup>3</sup>
Nor circled with the vengeful Band
(As by the Impious thou art seen)
With thund'ring voice, and threat'ning
mien,
With screaming Horror's funeral cry,
Despair, and fell Disease, and ghastly Poverty.

Thy form benign, O Goddess, wear,
Thy milder influence impart,
Thy philosophic Train be there
To soften, not to wound my heart,

<sup>3</sup>Gorgon means dreadful; the reference is to the image on the shield of Pallas Athene. In the next line "the vengeful Band" are the Furies.

The gen'rous spark extinct revive,
Teach me to love and to forgive,
Exact my own defects to scan,
What others are, to feel, and know myself a
Man.

THE PROGRESS OF POESY,<sup>1</sup>

A PINDARIC ODE

Φωνᾶντα συνετοῖσιν ἔς

Δὲ τὸ πᾶν ἐμυρνέων χαρίζεται.<sup>2</sup>

—Pindar, Olymp. II.

STROPHE

Awake, Æolian lyre,<sup>3</sup> awake,
And give to rapture all thy trembling strings.
From Helicon's harmonious springs
A thousand rills their mazy progress take:
The laughing flowers, that round them blow,
Drink life and fragrance as they flow.
Now the rich stream of music winds along
Deep, majestic, smooth, and strong,
Through verdant vales, and Ceres' golden reign:<sup>4</sup>
Now rolling down the steep amain,
Headlong, impetuous, see it pour:
The rocks, and nodding groves rebellow to the roar.

ANTISTROPHE

Oh! Sovereign of the willing soul,
Parent of sweet and solemn-breathing airs,
Enchanting shell!<sup>5</sup> the sullen Cares,
And frantic Passions hear thy soft control.
On Thracia's hills the Lord of War,<sup>6</sup>
Has curbed the fury of his car,
And dropped his thirsty lance at thy command.

Perching on the sceptered hand
Of Jove, thy magic lulls the feathered king<sup>7</sup>
With ruffled plumes, and flagging wing:
Quenched in dark clouds of slumber lie
The terror of his beak, and lightnings of his
eye.

<sup>1</sup>Written in 1754; first published in 1757.

<sup>2</sup>A voice intelligible to the wise, but one that needs interpreters for the rabble (lines 153-154).

<sup>3</sup>The lyre of Pindar.

<sup>4</sup>Fields over which Ceres reigns.

<sup>5</sup>The lyre was said to have been made first by Hermes from a tortoise shell.

<sup>6</sup>Mars. Thrace was thought to be his favorite abode.

<sup>7</sup>The eagle.

EPODE

Thee the voice, the dance, obey,
Tempered to thy warbled lay.
O'er Idalia's<sup>8</sup> velvet-green
The rosy-crown'd Loves are seen
On Cytherea's day
With antic Sports, and blue-eyed Pleasures,
Frisking light in frolic measures;
Now pursuing, now retreating,
Now in circling troops they meet:
To brisk notes in cadence beating
Glance their many-twinkling feet.
Slow melting strains their Queen's approach
declare:

Where'er she turns the Graces homage
pay.

With arms sublime, that float upon the air,
In gliding state she wins her easy way:
O'er her warm cheek, and rising bosom,
move

The bloom of young Desire, and purple light
of Love.

STROPHE

Man's feeble race what Ills await,
Labor and Penury, the racks of Pain,
Disease, and Sorrow's weeping train,
And Death, sad refuge from the storms of Fate!

The fond complaint, my Song, disprove,
And justify the laws of Jove.
Say, has he giv'n in vain the heav'nly Muse?
Night, and all her sickly dews,
Her Specters wan, and Birds of boding cry,
He gives to range the dreary sky:
Till down the eastern cliffs afar
Hyperion's march<sup>9</sup> they spy, and glitt'ring shafts of war.

ANTISTROPHE

In climes beyond the solar road,
Where shaggy forms o'er ice-built mountains roam,
The Muse has broke the twilight-gloom
To cheer the shiv'ring Native's dull abode.
And oft, beneath the od'rous shade
Of Chili's boundless forests laid,
She deigns to hear the savage Youth repeat
In loose numbers wildly sweet

<sup>8</sup>A town in Cyprus containing a temple to Venus, or Cytherea, as she was sometimes called.

<sup>9</sup>The sunrise.

Their feather-cintured Chiefs, and dusky Loves.
Her track, where'er the Goddess roves,
Glory pursue, and generous Shame,
Th' unconquerable Mind, and Freedom's holy flame.

EPODE

Woods, that wave o'er Delphi's steep,
Isles, that crown th' Ægean deep,
Fields, that cool Ilissus<sup>1</sup> laves,
Or where Mæander's<sup>2</sup> amber waves
In lingering Lab'rinth creep,
How do your tuneful Echoes languish,
Mute, but to the voice of Anguish?
Where each old poetic Mountain Inspiration breathed around:
Ev'ry shade and hallowed Fountain
Murmured deep a solemn sound:
Till the sad Nine in Greece's evil hour
Left their Parnassus for the Latian plains.
Alike they scorn the pomp of tyrant-Power,
And coward Vice, that revels in her chains.
When Latium had her lofty spirit lost,
They sought, O Albion! next thy sea-encircled coast.<sup>3</sup>

STROPHE

Far from the sun and summer-gale,
In thy green lap was Nature's Darling<sup>4</sup> laid,
What time, where lucid Avon strayed,
To Him the mighty Mother did unveil
Her awful face: The dauntless Child
Stretched forth his little arms, and smiled.
This pencil take (she said) whose colors clear
Richly paint the vernal year:
Thine too these golden keys, immortal Boy!
This can unlock the gates of Joy;
Of Horror that, and thrilling Fears,
Or ope the sacred source of sympathetic
Tears.

<sup>1</sup>A stream flowing through Athens.

<sup>2</sup>A river in Asia Minor.

<sup>3</sup>Gray's note on this epode is as follows: Progress of poetry from Greece to Italy, and from Italy to England. Chaucer was not unacquainted with the writings of Dante or of Petrarch. The Earl of Surrey and Sir Tho. Wyatt had traveled in Italy [Gray is wrong about Surrey, who was never in Italy, though he spent some time in France], and formed their taste there; Spenser imitated the Italian writers; Milton improved on them: but this school expired soon after the Restoration, and a new one arose on the French model, which has subsisted ever since.

<sup>4</sup>Shakespeare.

ANTISTROPHE

Nor second He,<sup>5</sup> that rode sublime
Upon the seraph-wings of Ecstasy,
The secrets of th' Abyss to spy.
He passed the flaming bounds of Place and
Time:

The living Throne, the sapphire-blaze,
Where Angels tremble, while they gaze,
He saw; but blasted with excess of light,
Closed his eyes in endless night.
Behold, where Dryden's less presumptuous car,

Wide o'er the fields of Glory bear
Two Coursers of ethereal race,
With necks in thunder clothed, and long-resounding pace.

EPODE

Hark, his hands the lyre explore!
Bright-eyed Fancy hovering o'er Scatters from her pictured urn Thoughts that breathe, and words that burn.

But ah! 'tis heard no more—
Oh! Lyre divine, what daring Spirit
Wakes thee now? though he inherit
Nor the pride, nor ample pinion,
That the Theban Eagle bear<sup>6</sup>.
Sailing with supreme dominion
Through the azure deep of air:
Yet oft before his infant eyes would run
Such forms, as glitter in the Muse's ray
With orient hues, unborrowed of the Sun:
Yet shall he mount, and keep his distant way
Beyond the limits of a vulgar fate,
Beneath the Good how far—but far above
the Great.

THE BARD,<sup>7</sup>

A PINDARIC ODE

ADVERTISEMENT

The following Ode is founded on a Tradition current in Wales, that Edward the First, when he completed the conquest of that country, ordered

<sup>5</sup>Milton.

<sup>6</sup>Pindar compares himself to that bird, and his enemies to ravens that croak and clamor in vain below, while it pursues its flight, regardless of their noise (Gray's note).

<sup>7</sup>Begun in 1754 and finished in 1757, when it was first published.

all the Bards that fell into his hands to be put to death.<sup>1</sup>

STROPHE

"Ruin seize thee, ruthless King!
Confusion on thy banners wait,
Though fanned by Conquest's crimson wing
They mock the air with idle state.
Helm, nor Hauberk's twisted mail,
Nor even thy virtues, Tyrant, shall avail
To save thy secret soul from nightly fears,
From Cambria's<sup>2</sup> curse, from Cambria's
tears!"

Such were the sounds, that o'er the crested
pride

Of the first Edward scattered wild dismay,
As down the steep of Snowdon's<sup>3</sup> shaggy side
He wound with toilsome march his long array.

Stout Glo'ster<sup>4</sup> stood aghast in speechless
trance;

To arms! cried Mortimer,<sup>5</sup> and couched his quiv'ring lance.

ANTISTROPHE

On a rock, whose haughty brow
Frowns o'er old Conway's foaming flood,
Robed in the sable garb of woe,
With haggard eyes the Poet stood;
(Loose his beard, and hoary hair Streamed, like a meteor, to the troubled air)
And with a Master's hand, and Prophet's fire, Struck the deep sorrows of his lyre.

"Hark, how each giant-oak, and desert cave,
Sighs to the torrent's awful voice beneath!
O'er thee, O King! their hundred arms they
wave,

Revenge on thee in hoarser murmurs breathe;
Vocal no more, since Cambria's fatal day,
To high-born Hoel's harp, or soft Llewellyn's
lay.

<sup>1</sup>This tradition has no foundation in fact. Edward I reigned from 1272 to 1307.

<sup>2</sup>Wales.

<sup>3</sup>A name given by the Saxons to that mountainous tract which the Welsh themselves call Craigian-eryri: it included all the highlands of Carnarvonshire and Merionethshire, as far east as the river Conway (Gray's note).

<sup>4</sup>Gilbert de Clare, surnamed the Red, Earl of Gloucester and Hertford, son-in-law to King Edward (Gray's note).

<sup>5</sup>Edmond de Mortimer, Lord of Wigmore. They were both Lords-Marchers, whose lands lay on the borders of Wales, and probably accompanied the king in this expedition (Gray's note).

EPODE

"Cold is Cadwallo's tongue,
That hushed the stormy main:
Brave Urien sleeps upon his craggy bed:
Mountains, ye mourn in vain
Modred, whose magic song
Made huge Plinlimmon<sup>6</sup> bow his cloud-topped head.

On dreary Arvon's shore they lie,<sup>7</sup>
Smeared with gore, and ghastly pale:
Far, far aloof th' affrighted ravens sail;
The famished Eagle screams, and passes by.
Dear lost companions of my tuneful art,
Dear, as the light that visits these sad eyes,
Dear, as the ruddy drops that warm my
heart,

Ye died amidst your dying country's cries—
No more I weep. They do not sleep.
On yonder cliffs, a grisly band,
I see them sit, they linger yet,
Avengers of their native land:
With me in dreadful harmony they join,
And weave with bloody hands the tissue of thy line.

STROPHE

"Weave the warp, and weave the woof,
The winding-sheet of Edward's race.
Give ample room, and verge enough
The characters of hell to trace.
Mark the year, and mark the night,
When Severn shall re-echo with affright
The shrieks of death, through Berkeley's<sup>8</sup>
roofs that ring,
Shrieks of an agonizing King!<sup>9</sup>
She-Wolf<sup>9</sup> of France, with unrelenting fangs,
That tear'st the bowels of thy mangled
Mate,

From thee be born, who o'er thy country
hangs<sup>10</sup>

The scourge of Heav'n. What Terrors round him wait!

Amazement in his van, with Flight combined,

And sorrow's faded form, and solitude behind.

<sup>6</sup>A mountain in Wales.

<sup>7</sup>The shores of Carnarvonshire opposite to the isle of Anglesey (Gray's note).

<sup>8</sup>Edward II, murdered in Berkeley Castle, 1327.

<sup>9</sup>Isabel of France, Edward II's adulterous queen (Gray's note).

<sup>10</sup>Edward III. The reference is to his triumphs in France.

ANTISTROPHE

“Mighty Victor, mighty Lord,
 Low on his funeral couch he lies!
 No pitying heart, no eye, afford
 A tear to grace his obsequies.
 Is the sable Warrior<sup>1</sup> fled?
 Thy son is gone. He rests among the Dead.
 The Swarm, that in thy noon-tide beam were born?
 Gone to salute the rising Morn.
 Fair laughs<sup>2</sup> the Morn, and soft the Zephyr blows,
 While proudly riding o’er the azure realm
 In gallant trim the gilded Vessel goes; Youth on the prow, and Pleasure at the helm;
 Regardless of the sweeping Whirlwind’s
 sway,
 That, hushed in grim repose, expects his evening prey.

EPODE

“Fill high the sparkling bowl,
 The rich repast prepare,
 Reft of a crown, he yet may share the feast:
 Close by the regal chair
 Fell Thirst and Famine scowl
 A baleful smile upon their baffled Guest.
 Heard ye the din of battle bray,
 Lance to lance, and horse to horse?
 Long Years of havoc<sup>3</sup> urge their destined
 course,
 And through the kindred squadrons mow
 their way.
 Ye Towers of Julius,<sup>4</sup> London’s lasting
 shame,
 With many a foul and midnight murder fed,
 Revere his Consort’s<sup>5</sup> faith, his Father’s<sup>6</sup>
 fame,
 And spare the meek Usurper’s<sup>7</sup> holy head.
 Above, below, the rose<sup>8</sup> of snow,
 Twined with her blushing foe, we spread:

<sup>1</sup>The Black Prince.

<sup>2</sup>These lines describe the reign of Richard II and (in the epode) his death by starvation.

<sup>3</sup>The Wars of the Roses.

<sup>4</sup>The Tower of London. The oldest part of that structure is vulgarly attributed to Julius Cæsar (Gray’s note).

<sup>5</sup>Margaret of Anjou.

<sup>6</sup>Henry V.

<sup>7</sup>Henry VI, who was “very near being canonized” (Gray).

<sup>8</sup>The white and red roses, devices of York and Lancaster (Gray).

The bristled Boar<sup>9</sup> in infant gore
 Wallows beneath the thorny shade.
 Now, Brothers, bending o’er th’ accurséd loom Stamp we our vengeance deep, and ratify his doom.

STROPHE

“Edward, lo! to sudden fate
 (Weave we the woof. The thread is spun)
 Half of thy heart we consecrate.
 (The web is wove. The work is done.)’
 Stay, O stay! nor thus forlorn Leave me unblest, unpitied, here to mourn:
 In yon bright track, that fires the western
 skies,
 They melt, they vanish from my eyes.
 But oh! what solemn scenes on Snowdon’s
 height
 Descending slow their glitt’ring skirts unroll?
 Visions of glory, spare my aching sight,
 Ye unborn Ages, crowd not on my soul!
 No more our long-lost Arthur we bewail.
 All-hail, ye genuine Kings,<sup>10</sup> Britonnia’s Issue, hail!

ANTISTROPHE

“Girt with many a Baron bold
 Sublime their starry fronts they rear;
 And gorgeous Dames, and Statesmen old
 In bearded majesty, appear.
 In the midst a Form divine!<sup>11</sup>
 Her eye proclaims her of the Briton-Line;
 Her lion-port, her awe-commanding face,
 Attempered sweet to virgin grace.
 What strings symphonious tremble in the air,
 What strains of vocal transport round her
 play!
 Hear from the grave, great Taliessin, hear;
 They breathe a soul to animate thy clay.
 Bright Rapture calls, and soaring, as she sings,
 Waves in the eye of Heav’n her many-colored wings.

<sup>9</sup>The silver boar was the device of Richard III (Gray). The “infant gore” is that of the murdered princes.

<sup>10</sup>Both Merlin and Taliessin [Cymric bard, sixth century] had prophesied that the Welsh should regain their sovereignty over this island, which seemed to be accomplished in the House of Tudor [beginning with Henry VII] (Gray).

<sup>11</sup>Queen Elizabeth.

EPODE

"The verse adorn again
Fierce War, and faithful Love,
And Truth severe, by fairy Fiction dressed.<sup>1</sup>
In buskined measures move
Pale Grief, and pleasing Pain,
With Horror, Tyrant of the throbbing breast.<sup>2</sup>

A Voice, as of the Cherub-Choir,
Gales from blooming Eden bear;<sup>3</sup>
And distant warblings lessen on my ear,
That lost in long futurity expire.<sup>4</sup> Fond impious Man, think'st thou, yon
sanguine cloud,
Raised by thy breath, has quenched the Orb
of day?

To-morrow he repairs the golden flood,
And warms the nations with redoubled ray.
Enough for me: With joy I see
The different doom our Fates assign.
Be thine Despair, and sceptered Care,
To triumph, and to die, are mine."
He spoke, and headlong from the mountain's
height
Deep in the roaring tide he plunged to endless
night.

THE FATAL SISTERS,

AN ODE<sup>5</sup>

PREFACE

In the Eleventh Century Sigurd, Earl of the Orkney Islands, went with a fleet of ships and a considerable body of troops into Ireland, to the assistance of Sictryg with the silken beard, who was then making war on his father-in-law Brian, King of Dublin: the Earl and all his forces were

<sup>1</sup>The reference is to Spenser's Faerie Queene.

<sup>2</sup>Shakespeare.

<sup>3</sup>Milton.

<sup>4</sup>The succession of poets after Milton's time (Gray).

<sup>5</sup>Written in 1761; first published in 1768. Gray made this version from a Latin translation of an Old Norse poem. The original text, with an English prose translation, is to be found in Vigfusson and Powell's Corpus Poeticum Boreale, I, 281-283. The prose which precedes and follows the poem Gray embodied in the Preface printed above. The event which it celebrates is the Battle of Clontarf, fought 23 April (not on Christmas day, as Gray says), 1014. Sictryg, it may be noted, was King of Dublin, Brian, King of Ireland. Brian was Sictryg's stepfather, which may be what Gray means when he says "father-in-law." The "gigantic figures resembling women" are the Valkyries, who in the poem are represented as weaving the web of battle.

cut to pieces, and Sictryg was in danger of a total defeat; but the enemy had a greater loss by the death of Brian, their King, who fell in action. On Christmas day (the day of the battle), a Native of Caithness in Scotland saw at a distance a number of persons on horseback riding full speed towards a hill, and seeming to enter into it. Curiosity led him to follow them, till looking through an opening in the rocks he saw twelve gigantic figures resembling women: they were all employed about a loom; and as they wove, they sung the following dreadful Song; which when they had finished, they tore the web into twelve pieces, and (each taking her portion) galloped Six to the North and as many to the South.

Now the storm begins to lower (Haste, the loom of Hell prepare),
Iron-sleet of arrowy shower
Hurtles in the darkened air.

Glitt'ring lances are the loom,
Where the dusky warp we strain,
Weaving many a Soldier's doom,
Orkney's woe, and Randver's bane.

See the grisly texture grow
(Tis of human entrails made),
And the weights, that play below,
Each a gasing Warrior's head.

Shafts for shuttles, dipped in gore,
Shoot the trembling cords along.
Sword, that once a Monarch bore,
Keep the tissue close and strong.

Mista black, terrific Maid,
Sangrida, and Hilda<sup>6</sup> see,
Join the wayward work to aid:
'Tis the woof of victory.

Ere the ruddy sun be set,
Pikes must shiver, javelins sing,
Blade with clattering buckler meet,
Hauberk crash, and helmet ring.

(Weave the crimson web of war)
Let us go, and let us fly,
Where our Friends the conflict share,
Where they triumph, where they die.

As the paths of fate we tread,
Wading through th' ensanguined field:
Gondula, and Geira, spread
O'er the youthful King your shield.

<sup>6</sup>These are names of Valkyries, as are also the names in the third stanza below.

We the reins to slaughter give,
Ours to kill, and ours to spare:
Spite of danger he shall live.
(Weave the crimson web of war.)

They, whom once the desert-beach
Pent within its bleak domain,
Soon their ample sway shall stretch
O'er the plenty of the plain.

Low the dauntless Earl is laid,
Gored with many a gaping wound:
Fate demands a nobler head;
Soon a King shall bite the ground.<sup>1</sup>

Long his loss shall Eirin<sup>2</sup> weep, Ne'er again his likeness see;
Long her strains in sorrow steep,
Strains of Immortality!

Horror covers all the heath,
Clouds of carnage blot the sun.
Sisters, weave the web of death;
Sisters, cease, the work is done.

Hail the task, and hail the hands!
Songs of joy and triumph sing!
Joy to the victorious bands;
Triumph to the younger King.

Mortal, thou that hear'st the tale,
Learn the tenor of our song.
Scotland, through each winding vale
Far and wide the notes prolong.

Sisters, hence with spurs of speed:
Each her thundering falchion<sup>3</sup> wield;
Each bestride her sable steed.
Hurry, hurry to the field.

ELEGY

WRITTEN IN A COUNTRY CHURCH-YARD<sup>4</sup>

The Curfew tolls the knell of parting day,
The lowing herd wind slowly o'er the lea,
The plowman homeward plods his weary
way,
And leaves the world to darkness and to
me.

<sup>1</sup>I. e., Brian.

<sup>2</sup>Ireland.

<sup>3</sup>Short sword.

<sup>4</sup>Completed in 1750; first published in 1751.

Now fades the glimmering landscape on the
sight,
And all the air a solemn stillness holds,
Save where the beetle wheels his droning
flight,
And drowsy tinklings lull the distant folds.

Save that from yonder ivy-mantled tower
The moping owl does to the moon complain
Of such, as wand'ring near her secret bower,
Molest her ancient solitary reign.

Beneath those rugged elms, that yew-tree's
shade,
Where heaves the turf in many a mold-
'ring heap,
Each in his narrow cell for ever laid,
The rude Forefathers of the hamlet
sleep.

The breezy call of incense-breathing Morn,
The swallow twitt'ring from the straw-
built shed,
The cock's shrill clarion, or the echoing
horn,
No more shall rouse them from their lowly bed.

For them no more the blazing hearth shall
burn,
Or busy housewife ply her evening care:
No children run to lisp their sire's return,
Or climb his knees the envied kiss to share.

Oft did the harvest to their sickle yield,
Their furrow oft the stubborn glebe has
broke;
How jocund did they drive their team afield!
How bowed the woods beneath their sturdy stroke!

Let not Ambition mock their useful toil,
Their homely joys, and destiny obscure;
Nor Grandeur hear with a disdainful smile,
The short and simple annals of the poor.

The boast of heraldry, the pomp of pow'r,
And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er
gave,
Awaits alike th' inevitable hour.
The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

Nor you, ye Proud, impute to These the
 fault,
 If Mem'ry o'er their Tomb no Trophies
 raise,

Where through the long-drawn isle and fretted vault

The pealing anthem swells the note of
 praise.

Can storied urn or animated bust
 Back to its mansion call the fleeting breath?

Can Honor's voice provoke the silent dust,
 Or Flatt'ry sooth the dull cold ear of Death?

Perhaps in this neglected spot is laid
 Some heart once pregnant with celestial
 fire;

Hands, that the rod of empire might have
 swayed,

Or waked to ecstasy the living lyre.

But Knowledge to their eyes her ample page Rich with the spoils of time did ne'er un-roll;

Chill Penury repressed their noble rage,
 And froze the genial current of the soul.

Full many a gem of purest ray serene,
 The dark unfathomed caves of ocean bear:
 Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,
 And waste its sweetness on the desert air.

Some village-Hampden,<sup>1</sup> that with dauntless
 breast

The little Tyrant of his fields withstood;
 Some mute inglorious Milton here may rest,
 Some Cromwell guiltless of his country's
 blood.

Th' applause of list'ning senates to command,

The threats of pain and ruin to despise,
 To scatter plenty o'er a smiling land,
 And read their hist'ry in a nation's eyes,

Their lot forbade: nor circumscribed alone
 Their growing virtues, but their crimes confined;

Forbade to wade through slaughter to a
 throne,

And shut the gates of mercy on mankind,

The struggling pangs of conscious truth to
 hide,

To quench the blushes of ingenuous shame,
 Or heap the shrine of Luxury and Pride
 With incense kindled at the Muse's flame.

Far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife,
 Their sober wishes never learned to stray;
 Along the cool sequestered vale of life
 They kept the noiseless tenor of their way.

Yet e'en these bones from insult to protect
 Some frail memorial still erected nigh,
 With uncouth rhymes and shapeless sculpture decked,
 Implores the passing tribute of a sigh.

Their name, their years, spelt by th' unlettered muse,

The place of fame and elegy supply:
 And many a holy text around she strews,
 That teach the rustic moralist to die.

For who to dumb Forgetfulness a prey,
 This pleasing anxious being e'er resigned,
 Left the warm precincts of the cheerful day,
 Nor cast one longing ling'ring look behind?

On some fond breast the parting soul relies,
 Some pious drops the closing eye requires;
 E'en from the tomb the voice of Nature cries,
 E'en in our Ashes live their wonted Fires.

For thee, who mindful of th' unhonored
 Dead

Dost in these lines their artless tale relate;
 If chance, by lonely contemplation led,
 Some kindred Spirit shall inquire thy fate,

Haply some hoary-headed Swain may say,
 "Oft have we seen him at the peep of
 dawn

Brushing with hasty steps the dews away
 To meet the sun upon the upland lawn.

"There at the foot of yonder nodding beech
 That wreathes its old fantastic roots so
 high,

His listless length at noontide would he stretch,

And pore upon the brook that babbles by.

<sup>1</sup>John Hampden, who in 1636 refused to pay the ship-money demanded by Charles I.

"Hard by yon wood, now smiling as in scorn, Mutt'ring his wayward fancies he would rove,
Now drooping, woeful wan, like one forlorn,
Or crazed with care, or crossed in hopeless
love.

"One morn I missed him on the custom'd
hill,
Along the heath and near his fav'rite tree;
Another came; nor yet beside the rill,
Nor up the lawn, nor at the wood was he;

"The next with dirges due in sad array Slow through the church-way path we saw him borne.
Approach and read (for thou can'st read) the
lay,
Graved on the stone beneath yon agéd thorn."

THE EPITAPH

*Here rests his head upon the lap of Earth
A Youth to Fortune and to Fame unknown.
Fair Science frowned not on his humble birth,
And Melancholy marked him for her own.*

*Large was his bounty, and his soul sincere,
Heav'n did a recompense as largely send:
He gave to Mis'ry all he had, a tear,
He gained from Heav'n ('twas all he wished) a friend.*

*No farther seek his merits to disclose,
Or draw his frailties from their dread abode
(There they alike in trembling hope repose),
The bosom of his Father and his God.*

SONNET

ON THE DEATH OF RICHARD WEST<sup>1</sup>

In vain to me the smiling Mornings shine,
And redd'ning Phœbus lifts his golden
Fire:
The Birds in vain their amorous Descant join;
Or cheerful Fields resume their green Attire:
These Ears, alas! for other Notes repine,
A different Object do these Eyes require.
My lonely Anguish melts no Heart, but
mine;
And in my Breast the imperfect Joys expire.
Yet Morning smiles the busy Race to cheer,
And new-born Pleasure brings to happier
Men:
The Fields to all their wonted Tribute bear;
To warm their little Loves the Birds com-
plain;
I fruitless mourn to him that cannot hear,
And weep the more, because I weep in vain.

SKETCH OF HIS OWN CHARACTER<sup>2</sup>

Too poor for a bribe, and too proud to impor-
tune;
He had not the method of making a fortune;
Could love, and could hate, so was thought somewhat odd;
No very great wit, he believed in a God.
A Post or a Pension he did not desire,
But left Church and State to Charles Townshend and Squire.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup>Written in 1742; first published in 1775.

<sup>2</sup>Written in 1761; first published in 1775.

<sup>3</sup>Townshend was Chancellor of the Exchequer in 1767; he was a politician, orator, and man of the world. Samuel Squire was a fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge; in 1761 he was Bishop of St. David's.

SAMUEL JOHNSON (1709-1784)

Johnson's father was a bookseller doing business in Lichfield, and there Johnson was born on 18 September, 1709. There was little money in the family, and Johnson's struggle with poverty began almost with his birth. The one fortunate circumstance of his youth was the fact that he had the freedom of his father's shop; and his early education was got largely from wide reading in the books which the people of Lichfield did not buy. In 1728 Johnson entered Pembroke College, Oxford, but was able to remain there only fourteen months. He then did not know where to turn for a living. He took a position in a school, but such were schools in that time that after a few months "he relinquished a situation which all his life long he recollected with the strongest aversion, and even a degree of horror." He next made unsuccessful attempts to obtain appointment to headmasterships, and almost equally unsuccessful attempts to earn money by literary hackwork. When he was twenty-six he married Mrs. Porter, a widow who was many years older than himself, whom he regarded with true and undiminished affection until her death in 1752, and whose loss he did not cease to lament until his own death. With a little money which his wife had, Johnson opened a school at Edial, near Lichfield—a school which was never attended by more than three pupils and which he soon abandoned. Other efforts having failed, he now determined to try his fortune in London, whither he went in the company of one of his three former pupils, David Garrick, who was to become the greatest of English actors. Johnson found employment in London, managing to make a bare living, often enough to do little better than escape starvation, by means of hackwriting for the booksellers. In 1738 he published London, a satirical poem imitated from Juvenal after the manner of Pope's imitations of Horace, which won him immediate recognition from the best judges of the day, including Pope himself, but which brought him very little money. Gradually he became known, but could never cease struggling, by means of all kinds of literary work that offered, for a bare subsistence. In 1745 he projected a new edition of Shakespeare, but did not actually publish it until 1765. In 1747 he announced his plan for what was his greatest work, though a work which has now little more than historical interest and one whose value it is not entirely easy for us to grasp. This was his Dictionary of the English Language, which it took him and his assistants eight years of hard work to complete. The announcement of its publication in 1755 was the occasion of Johnson's famous letter to Lord Chesterfield, in which with a noble indignation he rebuked that gentleman for attempting at the last moment, and with a minimum of trouble, to secure the dedication of the Dictionary to himself. Meanwhile Johnson had published The Vanity of Human Wishes in 1749, had seen his classical tragedy, Irene, acted with little success, and had published two series of periodical essays, The Rambler (1750-1752) and The Adventurer (1753). A third series, The Idler, was written from 1758 to 1760. Early in 1759 occurred the death of his mother, and it was to meet the expenses of her illness and death that he wrote Rasselas. His need was urgent, and he wrote the tale within the space of a single week—a week during which he was distracted by fears and sorrow and was expecting daily to hear the news of his mother's death. Though Johnson all his life had a pronounced tendency to indolence, his mind could on occasion work, as this instance proves, with astonishing rapidity. A few years later, however, on the accession of George III in 1762, Johnson's long struggle with poverty ceased. The Tories at that time returned to power, and Johnson, who was strongly attached to the Tory party, was granted a pension of £300, which was sufficient to make him fairly comfortable through the remainder of his life. After this, until within a few years of the end of his life, he wrote but little. These years after 1762 were the years of his famous talk. It was in 1763 that he met Boswell, who was to record it all in the greatest of English biographies, and it was in 1764 that the Literary Club was founded, which brought together Johnson's friends—Sir Joshua Reynolds, Edmund Burke, Garrick, Boswell, Goldsmith, Charles James Fox, Edward Gibbon, Adam Smith, and others, including R. B. Sheridan and Bishop Percy. These were the happiest years of Johnson's life, and at the close they were crowned by a great achievement. In the late 1770's a group of booksellers planned to issue a collection of the works of the English poets, and Johnson undertook to write biographical and critical notices of the poets included in the series. The result was his Lives of the Poets, which contains some of his best and easiest writing, and which, as a monument of the man and of his type of criticism, remains of lasting interest and importance.

Johnson is known to most readers to-day through Boswell alone, if not, by bad luck, through Macaulay alone. The great biography has overshadowed his own writings, and the man is known—

with all his ugliness and clumsiness and eccentricity—and his talk is known, while what he wrote is relatively neglected. It is true, moreover, that a fully rounded picture of Johnson and a full understanding of his greatness cannot be got without Boswell; yet in recent years there has been a wholesome protest against exclusive reliance on Boswell, and an approach to justice in the way of recognition that Johnson's strong common sense is equally reflected in his own work. And among his works there is, as Leslie Stephen has said, none that so completely gives his special message to the world as Rasselas.

THE HISTORY OF RASSELAS, PRINCE OF ABYSSINIA (1759)

CHAPTER I

DESCRIPTION OF A PALACE IN A VALLEY

YE WHO listen with credulity to the whispers of fancy, and pursue with eagerness the phantoms of hope, who expect that age will perform the promises of youth, and that the deficiencies of the present day will be supplied by the morrow—attend to the history of Rasselas, prince of Abyssinia.

Rasselas was the fourth son of the mighty emperor, in whose dominions the Father of Waters begins his course; whose bounty pours down the streams of plenty, and scatters over half the world the harvests of Egypt.

According to the custom which has descended from age to age among the monarchs of the torrid zone, Rasselas was confined in a private palace, with the other sons and daughters of Abyssinian royalty, till the order of succession should call him to the throne.

The place which the wisdom or policy of antiquity had destined for the residence of the Abyssinian princes, was a spacious valley in the kingdom of Amhara, surrounded on every side by mountains, of which the summits overhang the middle part. The only passage by which it could be entered, was a cavern that passed under a rock, of which it has long been disputed whether it was the work of nature or of human industry. The outlet of the cavern was concealed by a thick wood, and the mouth which opened into the valley was closed with gates of iron, forged by the artificers of ancient days, so massy that no man could without the help of engines open or shut them.

From the mountains on every side, rivulets descended, that filled all the valley with verdure and fertility, and formed a lake in the middle, inhabited by fish of every species, and frequented by every fowl whom nature has taught to dip the wing in water. This lake discharged its superfluities by a stream, which entered a dark cleft of the mountain on the northern side, and fell with dreadful noise from precipice to precipice till it was heard no more.

The sides of the mountains were covered with trees; the banks of the brooks were diversified with flowers; every blast shook spices from the rocks, and every month dropped fruits upon the ground. All animals that bite the grass, or browse the shrub, whether wild or tame, wandered in this extensive circuit, secured from beasts of prey by the mountains which confined them. On one part were flocks and herds feeding in the pastures, on another all the beasts of chase frisking in the lawns; the sprightly kid was bounding on the rocks, the subtle monkey frolicking in the trees, and the solemn elephant reposing in the shade. All the diversities of the world were brought together; the blessings of nature were collected, and its evils extracted and excluded.

The valley, wide and fruitful, supplied its inhabitants with the necessaries of life, and all delights and superfluities were added at the annual visit which the emperor paid his children, when the iron gate was opened to the sound of music, and, during eight days, every one that resided in the valley was required to propose whatever might contribute to make seclusion pleasant, to fill up the vacancies of attention, and lessen the tediousness of time. Every desire was immediately granted. All the artificers of pleasure were called to gladden the festivity; the musicians exerted the power of harmony, and the dancers showed their activity before the princes, in hope that they should pass their lives in this blissful captivity, to which those only were admitted whose performance was thought able to add novelty to luxury. Such was the appearance of security and delight which this retirement afforded, that they to whom it was new always desired that it might be perpetual; and as those on whom the iron gate had once closed were never suffered to return, the effect of longer experience could not be known. Thus every year produced new schemes of delight, and new competitors for imprisonment.

The palace stood on an eminence, raised about thirty paces above the surface of the lake. It was divided into many squares or courts, built with greater or less magnificence, according to the rank of those for whom they were designed. The roofs were turned into arches of massy stone, joined by a cement that grew harder by time; and the building stood from century to century, deriding the solstitial rains and equinoctial hurricanes, without need of reparation.<sup>1</sup>

This house, which was so large as to be fully known to none but some ancient officers who successively inherited the secrets of the place, was built as if suspicion herself had dictated the plan. To every room there was an open and secret passage; every square had a communication with the rest, either from the upper stories by private galleries, or by subterranean passages from the lower apartments. Many of the columns had unsuspected cavities, in which a long race of monarchs had deposited their treasures. They then closed up the opening with marble, which was never to be removed but in the utmost exigencies of the kingdom; and recorded their accumulations in a book, which was itself concealed in a tower, not entered but by the emperor, attended by the prince who stood next in succession.

CHAPTER II

THE DISCONTENT OF RASSELAS IN THE HAPPY VALLEY

HERE the sons and daughters of Abyssinia lived only to know the soft vicissitudes of pleasure and repose, attended by all that were skillful to delight, and gratified with whatever the senses can enjoy. They wandered in gardens of fragrance, and slept in the fortresses of security. Every art was practised to make them pleased with their own condition. The sages who instructed them, told them of nothing but the miseries of public life, and described all beyond the mountains as regions of calamity, where discord was always raging, and where man preyed upon man.

To heighten their opinion of their own felicity, they were daily entertained with songs, the subject of which was the happy valley. Their appetites were excited by frequent enumerations of different enjoyments; and revelry and merriment was the business of every hour, from the dawn of morning to the close of even.

These methods were generally successful: few of the princes had ever wished to enlarge their bounds, but passed their lives in full conviction that they had all within their reach that art or nature could bestow, and pitied those whom fate had excluded from this seat of tranquillity, as the sport of chance and the slaves of misery.

Thus they rose in the morning and lay down at night, pleased with each other and with themselves—all but Rasselas, who, in the twenty-sixth year of his age, began to withdraw himself from their pastimes and assemblies, and to delight in solitary walks and silent meditation. He often sat before tables covered with luxury, and forgot to taste the dainties that were placed before him; he rose abruptly in the midst of the song, and hastily retired beyond the sound of music. His attendants observed the change, and endeavored to renew his love of pleasure; he neglected their officiousness, repulsed their invitations, and spent day after day on the banks of rivulets sheltered with trees, where he sometimes listened to the birds in the branches, sometimes observed the fish playing in the stream, and anon cast his eyes upon the pastures and mountains filled with animals, of which some were biting the herbage, and some sleeping among the bushes.

This singularity of his humor made him much observed. One of the sages, in whose conversation he had formerly delighted, followed him secretly, in hope of discovering the cause of his disquiet. Rasselas, who knew not that any one was near him, having for some time fixed his eyes upon the goats that were browsing among the rocks, began to compare their condition with his own. "What," said he, "makes the difference between man and all the rest of the animal creation? Every beast that strays beside me has the same corporeal necessities with myself: he is hungry and crops the grass, he is thirsty and drinks the stream; his thirst and hunger are appeased, he is satisfied and sleeps; he arises again and is hungry; he is again fed and is at rest. I am hungry and thirsty like him, but when thirst and hunger cease I am not at rest; I am like him pained with want, but am not like him satisfied with fullness. The intermediate hours are tedious and gloomy; I long again to be hungry, that I may again quicken my attention. The birds peck the berries or the corn, and fly away to the groves, where they sit in seeming happiness on the branches, and waste their lives in tuning one unvaried series of sounds. I likewise can call the lutanist and the singer; but the sounds that pleased me yesterday weary me to-day, and will grow yet more wearisome to-morrow. I can discover within me no power of perception which is not glutted with its proper pleasure; yet I do not feel myself delighted. Man surely has some latent sense for which this place affords no gratification; or he has some desires distinct from sense, which must be satisfied before he can be happy."

<sup>1</sup>Of being repaired.

After this he lifted up his head, and seeing the moon rising, walked towards the palace. As he passed through the fields, and saw the animals around him, "Ye," said he, "are happy, and need not envy me that walk thus among you, burdened with myself; nor do I, ye gentle beings, envy your felicity, for it is not the felicity of man. I have many distresses from which ye are free; I fear pain when I do not feel it; I sometimes shrink at evils recollected, and sometimes start at evils anticipated: surely the equity of Providence has balanced peculiar sufferings with peculiar enjoyments."

With observations like these the prince amused himself as he returned, uttering them with a plaintive voice, yet with a look that discovered him to feel some complacency in his own perspicacity, and to receive some solace of the miseries of life, from consciousness of the delicacy with which he felt, and the eloquence with which he bewailed them. He mingled cheerfully in the diversions of the evening, and all rejoiced to find that his heart was lightened.

CHAPTER III

THE WANTS OF HIM THAT WANTS NOTHING

ON the next day, his old instructor, imagining that he had now made himself acquainted with his disease of mind, was in hope of curing it by counsel, and officiously sought an opportunity of conference, which the prince, having long considered him as one whose intellects were exhausted, was not very willing to afford: "Why," said he, "does this man thus intrude upon me; shall I be never suffered to forget those lectures which pleased only while they were new, and to become new again must be forgotten?" He then walked into the wood, and composed himself to his usual meditations; when, before his thoughts had taken any settled form, he perceived his pursuer at his side, and was at first prompted by his impatience to go hastily away; but, being unwilling to offend a man whom he had once revered and still loved, he invited him to sit down with him on the bank.

The old man, thus encouraged, began to lament the change which had been lately observed in the prince, and to inquire why he so often retired from the pleasures of the palace to loneliness and silence. "I fly from pleasure," said the prince, "because pleasure has ceased to please; I am lonely, because I am miserable, and am unwilling to cloud with my presence the happiness of others." "You, sir," said the sage, "are the first who has complained of misery in the happy valley. I hope to convince you that your complaints have no real cause. You are here in full possession of all that the emperor of Abyssinia can bestow; here is neither labor to be endured nor danger to be dreaded, yet here is all that labor or danger can procure or purchase. Look round and tell me which of your wants is without supply: if you want nothing, how are you unhappy?"

"That I want nothing," said the prince, "or that I know not what I want, is the cause of my complaint; if I had any known want, I should have a certain wish; that wish would excite endeavor, and I should not then repine to see the sun move so slowly towards the western mountain, or lament when the day breaks and sleep will no longer hide me from myself. When I see the kids and the lambs chasing one another, I fancy that I should be happy if I had something to pursue. But possessing all that I can want, I find one day and one hour exactly like another, except that the latter is still more tedious than the former. Let your experience inform me how the day may now seem as short as in my childhood, while nature was yet fresh, and every moment showed me what I never had observed before. I have already enjoyed too much; give me something to desire."

<sup>1</sup>I. e., peculiar, appropriate.

The old man was surprised at this new species of affliction, and knew not what to reply, yet was unwilling to be silent. "Sir," said he, "if you had seen the miseries of the world, you would know how to value your present state." "Now," said the prince, "you have given me something to desire; I shall long to see the miseries of the world, since the sight of them is necessary to happiness."

CHAPTER IV

THE PRINCE CONTINUES TO GRIEVE AND MUSE

AT this time the sound of music proclaimed the hour of repast, and the conversation was concluded. The old man went away sufficiently discontented, to find that his reasonings had produced the only conclusion which they were intended to prevent. But in the decline of life shame and grief are of short duration: whether it be that we bear easily what we have borne long; or that, finding ourselves in age less regarded, we less regard others; or, that we look with slight regard upon afflictions to which we know that the hand of death is about to put an end.

The prince, whose views were extended to a wider space, could not speedily quiet his emotions. He had been before terrified at the length of life which nature promised him, because he considered that in a long time much must be endured; he now rejoiced in his youth, because in many years much might be done.

This first beam of hope that had been ever darted into his mind, rekindled youth in his cheeks, and doubled the luster of his eyes. He was fired with the desire of doing something, though he knew not yet with distinctness either end or means.

He was now no longer gloomy and unsocial; but, considering himself as master of a secret stock of happiness, which he could enjoy only by concealing it, he affected to be busy in all schemes of diversion, and endeavored to make others pleased with the state of which he himself was weary. But pleasures never can be so multiplied or continued, as not to leave much of life unemployed; there were many hours, both of the night and day, which he could spend without suspicion in solitary thought. The load of life was much lightened: he went eagerly into the assemblies, because he supposed the frequency of his presence necessary to the success of his purposes; he retired gladly to privacy, because he had now a subject of thought.

His chief amusement was to picture to himself that world which he had never seen; to place himself in various conditions, to be entangled in imaginary difficulties, and to be engaged in wild adventures; but his benevolence always terminated his projects in the relief of distress, the detection of fraud, the defeat of oppression, and the diffusion of happiness.

Thus passed twenty months of the life of Rasselas. He busied himself so intensely in visionary bustle, that he forgot his real solitude, and, amidst hourly preparations for the various incidents of human affairs, neglected to consider by what means he should mingle with mankind.

One day, as he was sitting on a bank, he feigned to himself an orphan virgin robbed of her little portion by a treacherous lover, and crying after him for restitution and redress. So strongly was the image impressed upon his mind, that he started up in the maid's defense, and ran forward to seize the plunderer, with all the eagerness of real pursuit. Fear naturally quickens the flight of guilt. Rasselas could not catch the fugitive with his utmost efforts; but resolving to weary by perseverance, him whom he could not surpass in speed, he pressed on till the foot of the mountain stopped his course.

Here he recollected himself, and smiled at his own useless impetuosity. Then raising his eyes to the mountain, "This," said he, "is the fatal obstacle that hinders at once the enjoyment of pleasure, and the exercise of virtue. How long is it that my hopes and wishes have flown beyond this boundary of my life, which yet I never have attempted to surmount!"

Struck with this reflection, he sat down to muse; and remembered, that since he first resolved to escape from his confinement, the sun had passed twice over him in his annual course. He now felt a degree of regret with which he had never been before acquainted. He considered how much might have been done in the time which had passed and left nothing real behind it. He compared twenty months with the life of man. "In life," said he, "is not to be counted the ignorance of infancy, or imbecility of age. We are long before we are able to think, and we soon cease from the power of acting. The true period of human existence may be reasonably estimated at forty years, of which I have mused away the four and twentieth part. What I have lost was certain, for I have certainly possessed it; but of twenty months to come who can assure me?"

The consciousness of his own folly pierced him deeply, and he was long before he could be reconciled to himself. "The rest of my time," said he, "has been lost by the crime or folly of my ancestors, and the absurd institutions of my country; I remember it with disgust, yet without remorse: but the months that have passed since new light darted into my soul, since I formed a scheme of reasonable felicity, have been squandered by my own fault. I have lost that which can never be restored; I have seen the sun rise and set for twenty months, an idle gazer on the light of heaven: in this time the birds have left the nest of their mother, and committed themselves to the woods and to the skies; the kid has forsaken the teat, and learned by degrees to climb the rocks in quest of independent sustenance. I only have made no advances, but am still helpless and ignorant. The moon, by more than twenty changes, admonished me of the flux of life; the stream that rolled before my feet upbraided my inactivity. I sat feasting on intellectual luxury, regardless alike of the examples of the earth, and the instructions of the planets. Twenty months are passed; who shall restore them?"

These sorrowful meditations fastened upon his mind; he passed four months in resolving to lose no more time in idle resolves, and was awakened to more vigorous exertion by hearing a maid, who had broken a porcelain cup, remark that what cannot be repaired is not to be regretted.

This was obvious; and Rasselas reproached himself that he had not discovered it; having not known, or not considered, how many useful hints are obtained by chance, and how often the mind, hurried by her own ardor to distant views, neglects the truths that lie open before her. He for a few hours regretted his regret, and from that time bent his whole mind upon the means of escaping from the valley of happiness.

CHAPTER V

THE PRINCE MEDITATES HIS ESCAPE

HE now found that it would be very difficult to effect that which it was very easy to suppose effected. When he looked round about him, he saw himself confined by the bars of nature, which had never yet been broken, and by the gate, through which none that once had passed it were ever able to return. He was now impatient as an eagle in a grate.<sup>1</sup> He passed week after week in clambering the mountains, to see if there was any aperture which the bushes might conceal, but found all the summits inaccessible by their prominence. The iron gate he despaired to open; for it was not only secured with all the power of art, but was always watched by successive sentinels, and was by its position exposed to the perpetual observation of all the inhabitants.

He then examined the cavern through which the waters of the lake were discharged; and, looking down at a time when the sun shone strongly upon its mouth, he discovered it to be full of broken rocks, which, though they permitted the stream to flow through many narrow passages, would stop any body of solid bulk. He returned discouraged and dejected; but having now known the blessing of hope, resolved never to despair.

In these fruitless researches he spent ten months. The time, however, passed cheerfully away: in the morning he rose with new hope, in the evening applauded his own

<sup>1</sup>Cage.

diligence, and in the night slept sound after his fatigue. He met a thousand amusements which beguiled his labor, and diversified his thoughts. He discerned the various instincts of animals and properties of plants, and found the place replete with wonders, of which he purposed to solace himself with the contemplation, if he should never be able to accomplish his flight; rejoicing that his endeavors, though yet unsuccessful, had supplied him with a source of inexhaustible inquiry.

But his original curiosity was not yet abated; he resolved to obtain some knowledge of the ways of men. His wish still continued, but his hope grew less. He ceased to survey any longer the walls of his prison, and spared to search by new toils for interstices which he knew could not be found, yet determined to keep his design always in view, and lay hold on any expedient that time should offer.

CHAPTER VI

A DISSERTATION ON THE ART OF FLYING

AMONG the artists that had been allured into the happy valley, to labor for the accommodation and pleasure of its inhabitants, was a man eminent for his knowledge of the mechanic powers, who had contrived many engines both of use and recreation. By a wheel which the stream turned, he forced the water into a tower, whence it was distributed to all the apartments of the palace. He erected a pavilion in the garden, around which he kept the air always cool by artificial showers. One of the groves, appropriated to the ladies, was ventilated by fans, to which the rivulets that ran through it gave a constant motion; and instruments of soft music were placed at proper distances, of which some played by the impulse of the wind, and some by the power of the stream.

This artist was sometimes visited by Rasselas, who was pleased with every kind of knowledge, imagining that the time would come when all his acquisitions should be of use to him in the open world. He came one day to amuse himself in his usual manner, and found the master busy in building a sailing chariot: he saw that the design was practicable upon a level surface, and with expressions of great esteem solicited its completion. The workman was pleased to find himself so much regarded by the prince, and resolved to gain yet higher honors. "Sir," said he, "you have seen but a small part of what the mechanic sciences can perform. I have been long of opinion, that instead of the tardy conveyance of ships and chariots, man might use the swifter migration of wings; that the fields of air are open to knowledge, and that only ignorance and idleness need crawl upon the ground."

This hint rekindled the prince's desire of passing the mountains: having seen what the mechanist had already performed, he was willing to fancy that he could do more; yet resolved to inquire further, before he suffered hope to afflict him by disappointment. "I am afraid," said he to the artist, "that your imagination prevails over your skill, and that you now tell me rather what you wish, than what you know. Every animal has his element assigned him; the birds have the air, and man and beasts the earth." "So," replied the mechanist, "fishes have the water in which yet beasts can swim by nature, and men by art. He that can swim needs not despair to fly; to swim is to fly in a grosser fluid, and to fly is to swim in a subtler. We are only to proportion our power of resistance to the different density of matter through which we are to pass. You will be necessarily upborne by the air, if you can renew any impulse upon it faster than the air can recede from the pressure."

"But the exercise of swimming," said the prince, "is very laborious; the strongest limbs are soon wearied: I am afraid the act of flying will be yet more violent; and wings will be of no great use, unless we can fly further than we can swim."

"The labor of rising from the ground," said the artist, "will be great, as we see it in the heavier domestic fowls; but as we mount higher, the earth's attraction, and the body's gravity, will be gradually diminished, till we shall arrive at a region where the man will float in the air without any tendency to fall: no care will then be necessary but to move forwards, which the gentlest impulse will effect. You, sir, whose curiosity is so extensive, will easily conceive with what pleasure a philosopher, furnished with wings, and hovering in the sky, would see the earth, and all its inhabitants, rolling beneath him, and presenting to him successively, by its diurnal motion, all the countries within the same parallel. How must it amuse the pendent spectator to see the moving scene of land and ocean, cities, and deserts! To survey with equal security the marts of trade, and the fields of battle; mountains infested by barbarians, and fruitful regions gladdened by plenty and lulled by peace! How easily shall we then trace the Nile through all his passage; pass over to distant regions, and examine the face of nature from one extremity of the earth to the other!"

"All this," said the prince, "is much to be desired; but I am afraid that no man will be able to breathe in these regions of speculation and tranquillity. I have been told that respiration is difficult upon lofty mountains; yet from these precipices, though so high as to produce great tenuity of air, it is very easy to fall; therefore I suspect, that from any height where life can be supported, there may be danger of too quick descent."

"Nothing," replied the artist, "will ever be attempted, if all possible objections must be first overcome. If you will favor my project, I will try the first flight at my own hazard. I have considered the structure of all volant<sup>1</sup> animals, and find the folding continuity of the bat's wings most easily accommodated to the human form. Upon this model I shall begin my task to-morrow, and in a year expect to tower into the air beyond the malice and pursuit of man. But I will work only on this condition, that the art shall not be divulged, and that you shall not require me to make wings for any but ourselves."

"Why," said Rasselas, "should you envy others so great an advantage? All skill ought to be exerted for universal good; every man has owed much to others, and ought to repay the kindness that he has received."

"If men were all virtuous," returned the artist, "I should with great alacrity teach them all to fly. But what would be the security of the good, if the bad could at pleasure invade them from the sky? Against an army sailing through the clouds, neither walls, nor mountains, nor seas, could afford any security. A flight of northern savages might hover in the wind, and light at once with irresistible violence upon the capital of a fruitful region that was rolling under them. Even this valley, the retreat of princes, the abode of happiness, might be violated by the sudden descent of some of the naked nations that swarm on the coast of the southern sea."

The prince promised secrecy, and waited for the performance, not wholly hopeless of success. He visited the work from time to time, observed its progress, and remarked many ingenious contrivances to facilitate motion, and unite levity with strength. The artist was every day more certain that he should leave vultures and eagles behind him, and the contagion of his confidence seized upon the prince.

In a year the wings were finished; and, on a morning appointed, the maker appeared furnished for flight on a little promontory: he waved his pinions awhile to gather air, then leaped from his stand, and in an instant dropped into the lake. His wings, which were of no use in the air, sustained him in the water, and the prince drew him to land, half dead with terror and vexation.

CHAPTER VII

THE PRINCE FINDS A MAN OF LEARNING

THE prince was not much afflicted by this disaster, having suffered himself to hope for a happier event, only because he had no other means of escape in view. He still persisted in his design to leave the happy valley by the first opportunity.

His imagination was now at a stand; he had no prospect of entering into the world; and, notwithstanding all his endeavors to support himself, discontent by degrees preyed upon him, and he began again to lose his thoughts in sadness, when the rainy season, which in these countries is periodical, made it inconvenient to wander in the woods.

The rain continued longer and with more violence than had been ever known; the clouds broke on the surrounding mountains, and the torrents streamed into the plain on every side, till the cavern was too narrow to discharge the water. The lake overflowed its banks, and all the level of the valley was covered with the inundation. The eminence on which the palace was built, and some other spots of rising ground, were all that the eye could now discover. The herds and flocks left the pastures, and both the wild beasts and the tame retreated to the mountains.

<sup>1</sup>Flying.

This inundation confined all the princes to domestic amusements; and the attention of Rasselas was particularly seized by a poem, which Imlac rehearsed, upon the various conditions of humanity. He commanded the poet to attend him in his apartment, and recite his verses a second time; then entering into familiar talk, he thought himself happy in having found a man who knew the world so well, and could so skillfully paint the scenes of life. He asked a thousand questions about things, to which, though common to all other mortals, his confinement from childhood had kept him a stranger. The poet pitied his ignorance, and loved his curiosity, and entertained him from day to day with novelty and instruction, so that the prince regretted the necessity of sleep, and longed till the morning should renew his pleasure.

As they were sitting together, the prince commanded Imlac to relate his history, and to tell by what accident he was forced, or by what motive induced, to close his life in the happy valley. As he was going to begin his narrative, Rasselas was called to a concert, and obliged to restrain his curiosity till the evening.

CHAPTER VIII

THE HISTORY OF IMLAC

THE close of the day is, in the regions of the torrid zone, the only season of diversion and entertainment, and it was therefore midnight before the music ceased, and the princesses retired. Rasselas then called for his companion, and required him to begin the story of his life.

"Sir," said Imlac, "my history will not be long: the life that is devoted to knowledge passes silently away, and is very little diversified by events. To talk in public, to think in solitude, to read and to hear, to inquire and answer inquiries, is the business of a scholar. He wanders about the world without pomp or terror, and is neither known nor valued but by men like himself.

"I was born in the kingdom of Goiama, at no great distance from the fountain of the Nile. My father was a wealthy merchant, who traded between the inland countries of Africa and the ports of the Red Sea. He was honest, frugal, and diligent, but of mean sentiments and narrow comprehension: he desired only to be rich, and to conceal his riches, lest he should be spoiled by the governors of the province."

"Surely," said the prince, "my father must be negligent of his charge, if any man in his dominions dares take that which belongs to another. Does he not know that kings are accountable for injustice permitted as well as done? If I were emperor, not the meanest of my subjects should be oppressed with impunity. My blood boils when I am told that a merchant durst not enjoy his honest gains, for fear of losing them by the rapacity of power. Name the governor who robbed the people, that I may declare his crimes to the emperor."

"Sir," said Imlac, "your ardor is the natural effect of virtue animated by youth: the time will come when you will acquit your father, and perhaps hear with less impatience of the governor. Oppression is, in the Abyssinian dominions, neither frequent nor tolerated; but no form of government has been yet discovered, by which cruelty can be wholly prevented. Subordination supposes power on one part, and subjection on the other; and if power be in the hands of men, it will sometimes be abused. The vigilance of the supreme magistrate may do much, but much will still remain undone. He can never know all the crimes that are committed, and can seldom punish all that he knows."

"This," said the prince, "I do not understand; but I had rather hear thee than dispute. Continue thy narration."

"My father," proceeded Imlac, "originally intended that I should have no other education, than such as might qualify me for commerce; and discovering in me great strength of memory and quickness of apprehension, often declared his hope that I should be some time the richest man in Abyssinia."

"Why," said the prince, "did thy father desire the increase of his wealth, when it was already greater than he durst discover or enjoy? I am unwilling to doubt thy veracity, yet inconsistencies cannot both be true."

"Inconsistencies," answered Imlac, "cannot both be right, but, imputed to man, they may both be true. Yet diversity is not inconsistency. My father might expect a time of greater security. However, some desire is necessary to keep life in motion; and he whose real wants are supplied, must admit those of fancy."

"This," said the prince, "I can in some measure conceive. I repent that I interrupted thee."

"With this hope," proceeded Imlac, "he sent me to school; but when I had once found the delight of knowledge, and felt the pleasure of intelligence and the pride of invention,<sup>1</sup> I began silently to despise riches, and determined to disappoint the purpose of my father, whose grossness of conception raised my pity. I was twenty years old before his tenderness would expose me to the fatigue of travel, in which time I had been instructed, by successive masters, in all the literature of my native country. As every hour taught me something new, I lived in a continual course of gratification; but, as I advanced towards manhood, I lost much of the reverence with which I had been used to look on my instructors; because when the lesson was ended, I did not find them wiser or better than common men.

"At length my father resolved to initiate me in commerce, and opening one of his subterranean treasuries, counted out ten thousand pieces of gold. 'This, young man,' said he, 'is the stock with which you must negotiate. I began with less than the fifth part, and you see how diligence and parsimony have increased it. This is your own to waste or to improve. If you squander it by negligence or caprice, you must wait for my death before you will be rich; if in four years you double your stock, we will thenceforward let subordination cease, and live together as friends and partners; for he shall always be equal with me, who is equally skilled in the art of growing rich.'

"We laid our money upon camels, concealed in bales of cheap goods, and traveled to the shore of the Red Sea. When I cast my eye on the expanse of waters, my heart bounded like that of a prisoner escaped. I felt an unextinguishable curiosity kindle in my mind, and resolved to snatch this opportunity of seeing the manners of other nations, and of learning sciences unknown in Abyssinia.

"I remembered that my father had obliged me to the improvement of my stock, not by a promise which I ought not to violate, but by a penalty which I was at liberty to incur; and therefore determined to gratify my predominant desire, and, by drinking at the fountains of knowledge, to quench the thirst of curiosity.

"As I was supposed to trade without connection with my father, it was easy for me to become acquainted with the master of a ship, and procure a passage to some other country. I had no motives of choice to regulate my voyage; it was sufficient for me that, wherever I wandered, I should see a country which I had not seen before. I therefore entered a ship bound for Surat, having left a letter for my father declaring my intention.

CHAPTER IX

THE HISTORY OF IMLAC CONTINUED

"WHEN I first entered upon the world of waters, and lost sight of land, I looked round about me with pleasing terror, and thinking my soul enlarged by the boundless prospect, imagined that I could gaze round for ever without satiety; but in a short time I grew weary of looking on barren uniformity, where I could only see again what I had already seen. I then descended into the ship, and doubted for awhile whether all my future pleasures would not end like this, in disgust and disappointment. Yet, surely, said I, the ocean and the land are very different; the only variety of water is rest and motion, but the earth has mountains and valleys, deserts and cities; it is inhabited by men of different customs and contrary opinions; and I may hope to find variety in life, though I should miss it in nature.

"With this thought I quieted my mind; and amused myself during the voyage, sometimes by learning from the sailors the art of navigation, which I have never practised, and sometimes by forming schemes for my conduct in different situations, in not one of which I have been ever placed.

"I was almost weary of my naval amuse-

<sup>1</sup>I. e., of the workings of imagination.

ments when we landed safely at Surat. I secured my money, and purchasing some commodities for show, joined myself to a caravan that was passing into the inland country. My companions, for some reason or other, conjecturing that I was rich, and, by my inquiries and admiration, finding that I was ignorant, considered me as a novice whom they had a right to cheat, and who was to learn at the usual expense the art of fraud. They exposed me to the theft of servants and the exaction of officers, and saw me plundered upon false pretenses, without any advantage to themselves, but that of rejoicing in the superiority of their own knowledge."

"Stop a moment," said the prince. "Is there such depravity in man, as that he should injure another without benefit to himself? I can easily conceive that all are pleased with superiority; but your ignorance was merely accidental, which, being neither your crime nor your folly, could afford them no reason to applaud themselves; and the knowledge which they had, and which you wanted, they might as effectually have shown by warning, as betraying you."

"Pride," said Imlac, "is seldom delicate, it will please itself with very mean advantages; and envy feels not its own happiness, but when it may be compared with the misery of others. They were my enemies, because they grieved to think me rich; and my oppressors, because they delighted to find me weak."

"Proceed," said the prince: "I doubt not of the facts which you relate, but imagine that you impute them to mistaken motives."

"In this company," said Imlac, "I arrived at Agra, the capital of Indostan, the city in which the great Mogul commonly resides. I applied myself to the language of the country, and in a few months was able to converse with the learned men; some of whom I found morose and reserved, and others easy and communicative; some were unwilling to teach another what they had with difficulty learned themselves; and some showed that the end of their studies was to gain the dignity of instructing."

"To the tutor of the young princes I recommended myself so much, that I was presented to the emperor as a man of uncommon knowledge. The emperor asked me many questions concerning my country and my travels; and though I cannot now recollect any thing that he uttered above the power of a common man, he dismissed me astonished at his wisdom, and enamored of his goodness.

"My credit was now so high, that the merchants with whom I had traveled, applied to me for recommendations to the ladies of the court. I was surprised at their confidence of solicitation, and gently reproached them with their practices on the road. They heard me with cold indifference, and showed no tokens of shame or sorrow.

"They then urged their request with the offer of a bribe; but what I would not do for kindness, I would not do for money, and refused them, not because they had injured me, but because I would not enable them to injure others; for I knew they would have made use of my credit to cheat those who should buy their wares.

"Having resided at Agra till there was no more to be learned, I traveled into Persia, where I saw many remains of ancient magnificence, and observed many new accommodations of life. The Persians are a nation eminently social, and their assemblies afforded me daily opportunities of remarking characters and manners, and of tracing human nature through all its variations.

"From Persia I passed into Arabia, where I saw a nation at once pastoral and warlike; who live without any settled habitation; whose only wealth is their flocks and herds; and who have yet carried on through all ages an hereditary war with all mankind, though they neither covet nor envy their possessions.

CHAPTER X

IMLAC'S HISTORY CONTINUED. A DISSERTATION UPON POETRY

"WHEREVER I went, I found that poetry was considered as the highest learning, and regarded with a veneration somewhat approaching to that which man would pay to the angelic nature. And yet it fills me with wonder, that, in almost all countries, the most ancient poets are considered as the best: whether it be that every other kind of knowledge is an acquisition gradually attained, and poetry is a gift conferred at once; or that the first poetry of every nation surprised them as a novelty, and retained the credit by consent, which it received by accident at first; or whether, as the province of poetry is to describe nature and passion, which are always the same, the first writers took possession of the most striking objects for description, and the most probable occurrences for fiction, and left nothing to those that followed them, but transcription of the same events, and new combinations of the same images:—whatever be the reason, it is commonly observed that the early writers are in possession of nature, and their followers of art; that the first excel in strength and invention, and the latter in elegance and refinement.

“I was desirous to add my name to this illustrious fraternity. I read all the poets of Persia and Arabia, and was able to repeat by memory the volumes that are suspended in the mosque of Mecca. But I soon found that no man was ever great by imitation. My desire of excellence impelled me to transfer my attention to nature and to life. Nature was to be my subject, and men to be my auditors: I could never describe what I had not seen; I could not hope to move those with delight or terror, whose interests and opinions I did not understand.

“Being now resolved to be a poet, I saw everything with a new purpose; my sphere of attention was suddenly magnified; no kind of knowledge was to be overlooked. I ranged mountains and deserts for images and resemblances, and pictured upon my mind every tree of the forest and flower of the valley. I observed with equal care the crags of the rock and the pinnacles of the palace. Sometimes I wandered along the mazes of the rivulet, and sometimes watched the changes of the summer clouds. To a poet nothing can be useless. Whatever is beautiful, and whatever is dreadful, must be familiar to his imagination: he must be conversant with all that is awfully vast or elegantly little. The plants of the garden, the animals of the wood, the minerals of the earth, and meteors of the sky, must all concur to store his mind with inexhaustible variety: for every idea is useful for the enforcement or decoration of moral or religious truth; and he who knows most, will have most power of diversifying his scenes, and of gratifying his reader with remote allusions and unexpected instruction.

“All the appearances of nature I was therefore careful to study; and every country which I have surveyed has contributed something to my poetical powers.”

“In so wide a survey,” said the prince, “you must surely have left much unobserved. I have lived, till now, within the circuit of these mountains, and yet cannot walk abroad without the sight of something which I have never beheld before, or never heeded.”

“The business of a poet,” said Imlac, “is to examine, not the individual, but the species; to remark general properties and large appearances. He does not number the streaks of the tulip, or describe the different shades in the verdure of the forest: he is to exhibit in his portraits of nature such prominent and striking features, as recall the original to every mind; and must neglect the minuter discriminations, which one may have remarked, and another have neglected, for those characteristics which are alike obvious to vigilance and carelessness.

“But the knowledge of nature is only half the task of a poet: he must be acquainted likewise with all the modes of life. His character requires that he estimate the happiness and misery of every condition, observe the power of all the passions in all their combinations, and trace the changes of the human mind as they are modified by various institutions and accidental influences of climate or custom, from the sprightliness of infancy to the despondence of decrepitude. He must divest himself of the prejudices of his age and country; he must consider right and wrong in their abstracted and invariable state; he must disregard present laws and opinions, and rise to general and transcendental truths, which will always be the same. He must therefore content himself with the slow progress of his name, condemn the applause of his own time, and commit his claims to the justice of posterity. He must write as the interpreter of nature, and the legislator of mankind, and consider himself as presiding over the thoughts and manners of future generations; as a being superior to time and place.

“His labor is not yet at an end; he must know many languages and many sciences; and, that his style may be worthy of his thoughts, must, by incessant practice, familiarize to himself every delicacy of speech and grace of harmony."

CHAPTER XI

IMLAC'S NARRATIVE CONTINUED. A HINT ON PILGRIMAGE

IMLAC now felt the enthusiastic fit, and was proceeding to aggrandize his own profession, when the prince cried out, "Enough! thou hast convinced me that no human being can ever be a poet. Proceed with thy narration."

"To be a poet," said Imlac, "is indeed very difficult."

"So difficult," returned the prince, "that I will at present hear no more of his labors. Tell me whither you went when you had seen Persia."

"From Persia," said the poet, "I traveled through Syria, and for three years resided in Palestine, where I conversed with great numbers of the northern and western nations of Europe; the nations which are now in possession of all power and all knowledge; whose armies are irresistible, and whose fleets command the remotest parts of the globe. When I compared these men with the natives of our own kingdom, and those that surround us, they appeared almost another order of beings. In their countries it is difficult to wish for anything that may not be obtained: a thousand arts, of which we never heard, are continually laboring for their convenience and pleasure; and whatever their own climate has denied them is supplied by their commerce."

"By what means," said the prince, "are the Europeans thus powerful; or why, since they can so easily visit Asia and Africa for trade or conquest, cannot the Asiatics and Africans invade their coasts, plant colonies in their ports, and give laws to their natural princes? The same wind that carries them back, would bring us thither."

"They are more powerful, sir, than we," answered Imlac, "because they are wiser; knowledge will always predominate over ignorance, as man governs the other animals. But why their knowledge is more than ours, I know not what reason can be given, but the unsearchable will of the Supreme Being."

"When," said the prince with a sigh, "shall I be able to visit Palestine, and mingle with this mighty confluence of nations? Till that happy moment shall arrive, let me fill up the time with such representations as thou canst give me. I am not ignorant of the motive that assembles such numbers in that place, and cannot but consider it as the center of wisdom and piety, to which the best and wisest men of every land must be continually resorting."

"There are some nations," said Imlac, "that send few visitants to Palestine; for many numerous and learned sects in Europe concur to censure pilgrimage as superstitious, or deride it as ridiculous."

"You know," said the prince, "how little my life has made me acquainted with diversity of opinions; it will be too long to hear the arguments on both sides; you, that have considered them, tell me the result."

"Pilgrimage," said Imlac, "like many other acts of piety, may be reasonable or superstitious, according to the principles upon which it is performed. Long journeys in search of truth are not commanded. Truth, such as is necessary to the regulation of life, is always found where it is honestly sought. Change of place is no natural cause of the increase of piety, for it inevitably produces dissipation of mind. Yet, since men go every day to view the fields where great actions have been performed, and return with stronger impressions of the event, curiosity of the same kind may naturally dispose us to view that country whence our religion had its beginning; and I believe no man surveys those awful scenes without some confirmation of holy resolutions. That the Supreme Being may be more easily propitiated in one place than in another, is the dream of idle superstition; but that some places may operate upon our own minds in an uncommon manner, is an opinion which hourly experience will justify. He who supposes that his vices may be more successfully combated in Palestine, will, perhaps, find himself mistaken; yet he may go thither without folly: he who thinks they will be more freely pardoned, dishonors at once his reason and religion."

"These," said the prince, "are European distinctions. I will consider them another time. What have you found to be the effect of knowledge? Are those nations happier than we?"

"There is so much infelicity," said the poet, "in the world, that scarce any man has leisure from his own distresses to estimate the comparative happiness of others. Knowledge is certainly one of the means of pleasure, as is confessed by the natural desire which every mind feels of increasing its ideas. Ignorance is mere privation, by which nothing can be produced; it is a vacuity in which the soul sits motionless and torpid for want of attraction; and, without knowing why, we always rejoice when we learn, and grieve when we forget. I am therefore inclined to conclude, that if nothing counteracts the natural consequence of learning, we grow more happy as our minds take a wider range.

"In enumerating the particular comforts of life, we shall find many advantages on the side of the Europeans. They cure wounds and diseases with which we languish and perish. We suffer inclemencies of weather which they can obviate. They have engines for the despatch of many laborious works, which we must perform by manual industry. There is such communication between distant places, that one friend can hardly be said to be absent from another. Their policy removes all public inconveniences; they have roads cut through their mountains, and bridges laid upon their rivers. And, if we descend to the privacies of life, their habitations are more commodious, and their possessions are more secure."

"They are surely happy," said the prince, "who have all these conveniences, of which I envy none so much as the facility with which separated friends interchange their thoughts."

"The Europeans," answered Imlac, "are less unhappy than we; but they are not happy. Human life is every where a state in which much is to be endured, and little to be enjoyed."

CHAPTER XII

THE STORY OF IMLAC CONTINUED

"I AM not yet willing," said the prince, "to suppose that happiness is so parsimoniously distributed to mortals; nor can believe but that, if I had the choice of life, I should be able to fill every day with pleasure. I would injure no man, and should provoke no resentment; I would relieve every distress, and should enjoy the benedictions of gratitude. I would choose my friends among the wise, and my wife among the virtuous; and therefore should be in no danger from treachery or unkindness. My children should, by my care, be learned and pious, and would repay to my age what their childhood had received. What would dare to molest him who might call on every side to thousands enriched by his bounty, or assisted by his power? And why should not life glide quietly away in the soft reciprocation of protection and reverence? All this may be done without the help of European refinements, which appear by their effects to be rather specious than useful. Let us leave them, and pursue our journey."

"From Palestine," said Imlac, "I passed through many regions of Asia; in the more civilized kingdoms as a trader, and among the barbarians of the mountains as a pilgrim. At last I began to long for my native country, that I might repose, after my travels and fatigues, in the places where I had spent my earliest years, and gladden my old companions with the recital of my adventures. Often did I figure to myself those with whom I had sported away the gay hours of dawning life, sitting round me in its evening, wondering at my tales, and listening to my counsels.

"When this thought had taken possession of my mind, I considered every moment as wasted which did not bring me nearer to Abyssinia. I hastened into Egypt, and notwithstanding my impatience, was detained ten months in the contemplation of its ancient magnificence, and in inquiries after the remains of its ancient learning. I found in Cairo a mixture of all nations; some brought thither by the love of knowledge, some by the hope of gain, and many by the desire of living after their own manner without observation, and of lying hid in the obscurity of multitudes: for in a city, populous as Cairo, it is possible to obtain at the same time the gratifications of society, and the secrecy of solitude.

"From Cairo I traveled to Suez, and embarked on the Red Sea, passing along the coast till I arrived at the port from which I had departed twenty years before. Here I joined myself to a caravan, and re-entered my native country.

"I now expected the caresses of my kinsmen, and the congratulations of my friends, and was not without hope that my father, whatever value he had set upon riches, would own with gladness and pride a son who was able to add to the felicity and honor of the nation. But I was soon convinced that my thoughts were vain. My father had been dead fourteen years, having divided his wealth among my brothers, who were removed to some other provinces. Of my companions, the greater part were in the grave; of the rest, some could with difficulty remember me, and some considered me as one corrupted by foreign manners.

"A man used to vicissitudes, is not easily dejected. I forgot, after a time, my disappointment, and endeavored to recommend myself to the nobles of the kingdom; they admitted me to their tables, heard my story, and dismissed me. I opened a school, and was prohibited to teach. I then resolved to sit down in the quiet of domestic life, and addressed a lady that was fond of my conversation, but rejected my suit because my father was a merchant.

"Wearied at last with solicitation and repulses, I resolved to hide myself for ever from the world, and depend no longer on the opinion or caprice of others. I waited for the time when the gate of the happy valley should open, that I might bid farewell to hope and fear: the day came; my performance was distinguished with favor; and I resigned myself with joy to perpetual confinement."

"Hast thou here found happiness at last?" said Rasselas. "Tell me without reserve; art thou content with thy condition? or, dost thou wish to be again wandering and inquiring? All the inhabitants of this valley celebrate their lot, and at the annual visit of the emperor, invite others to partake of their felicity."

"Great prince," said Imlac, "I shall speak the truth; I know not one of all your attendants, who does not lament the hour when he entered this retreat. I am less unhappy than the rest, because I have a mind replete with images, which I can vary and combine at pleasure. I can amuse my solitude by the renovation of the knowledge which begins to fade from my memory, and by recollection of the incidents of my past life. Yet all this ends in the sorrowful consideration, that my acquirements are now useless, and that none of my pleasures can be again enjoyed. The rest, whose minds have no impression but of the present moment, are either corroded by malignant passions, or sit stupid in the gloom of perpetual vacancy."

"What passions can infest those," said the prince, "who have no rivals? We are in a place where impotence precludes malice, and where all envy is repressed by community of enjoyments."

"There may be community," said Imlac, "of material possessions, but there can never be community of love or of esteem. It must happen that one will please more than another; he that knows himself despised, will always be envious; and still more envious and malevolent, if he is condemned to live in the presence of those who despise him. The invitations by which they allure others, to a state which they feel to be wretched, proceed from the natural malignity of hopeless misery. They are weary of themselves and of each other, and expect to find relief in new companions. They envy the liberty which their folly has forfeited, and would gladly see all mankind imprisoned like themselves.

"From this crime, however, I am wholly free. No man can say that he is wretched by my persuasion. I look with pity on the crowds who are annually soliciting admission to captivity, and wish that it were lawful for me to warn them of their danger."

"My dear Imlac," said the prince, "I will open to thee my whole heart. I have long meditated an escape from the happy valley. I have examined the mountains on every side, but find myself insuperably barred: teach me the way to break my prison; thou shalt be the companion of my flight, the guide of my rambles, the partner of my fortune, and my sole director in the choice of life."

"Sir," answered the poet, "your escape will be difficult, and, perhaps, you may soon repent your curiosity. The world, which you figure to yourself smooth and quiet as the lake in the valley, you will find a sea foaming with tempests, and boiling with whirlpools: you will be sometimes overwhelmed by the waves of violence, and sometimes dashed against the rocks of treachery.

Amidst wrongs and frauds, competitions and anxieties, you will wish a thousand times for these seats of quiet, and willingly quit hope to be free from fear."

"Do not seek to deter me from my purpose," said the prince; "I am impatient to see what thou hast seen; and, since thou art thyself weary of the valley, it is evident that thy former state was better than this. Whatever be the consequence of my experiment, I am resolved to judge with mine own eyes of the various conditions of men, and then to make deliberately my choice of life."

"I am afraid," said Imlac, "you are hindered by stronger restraints than my persuasions; yet, if your determination is fixed, I do not counsel you to despair. Few things are impossible to diligence and skill."

CHAPTER XIII

RASSELAS DISCOVERS THE MEANS OF ESCAPE

THE prince now dismissed his favorite to rest; but the narrative of wonders and novelties filled his mind with perturbation. He revolved all that he had heard, and prepared innumerable questions for the morning.

Much of his uneasiness was now removed. He had a friend to whom he could impart his thoughts, and whose experience could assist him in his designs. His heart was no longer condemned to swell with silent vexation. He thought that even the happy valley might be endured with such a companion, and that if they could range the world together, he should have nothing further to desire.

In a few days the water was discharged, and the ground dried. The prince and Imlac then walked out together, to converse without the notice of the rest. The prince, whose thoughts were always on the wing, as he passed by the gate, said, with a countenance of sorrow, "Why art thou so strong, and why is man so weak?"

"Man is not weak," answered his companion; "knowledge is more than equivalent to force. The master of mechanics laughs at strength. I can burst the gate, but cannot do it secretly. Some other expedient must be tried."

As they were walking on the side of the mountain, they observed that the cones, which the rain had driven from their burrows, had taken shelter among the bushes, and formed holes behind them, tending upwards in an oblique line. "It has been the opinion of antiquity," said Imlac, "that human reason borrowed many arts from the instinct of animals; let us, therefore, not think ourselves degraded by learning from the coney. We may escape by piercing the mountain in the same direction. We will begin where the summit hangs over the middle part, and labor upward till we shall issue up beyond the prominence."

The eyes of the prince, when he heard this proposal, sparkled with joy. The execution was easy, and the success certain.

No time was now lost. They hastened early in the morning to choose a place proper for their mine. They clambered with great fatigue among crags and brambles, and returned without having discovered any part that favored their design. The second and the third day were spent in the same manner, and with the same frustration. But, on the fourth, they found a small cavern, concealed by a thicket, where they resolved to make their experiment.

Imlac procured instruments proper to hew stone and remove earth, and they fell to their work on the next day with more eagerness than vigor: they were presently exhausted by their efforts, and sat down to pant upon the grass. The prince, for a moment, appeared to be discouraged. "Sir," said his companion, "practice will enable us to continue our labor for a longer time; mark, however, how far we have advanced, and you will find that our toil will some time have an end. Great works are performed, not by strength, but perseverance: yonder palace was raised by single stones, yet you see its height and spaciousness. He that shall walk with vigor three hours a day, will pass in seven years a space equal to the circumference of the globe."

They returned to their work day after day, and, in a short time, found a fissure in the rock, which enabled them to pass far with very little obstruction. This Rasselas considered as a good omen. "Do not disturb your mind," said Imlac, "with other hopes or fears than reason may suggest: if you are pleased with prognostics of good, you will be terrified likewise with tokens of evil, and your whole life will be a prey to superstition. Whatever facilitates our work is more than an omen, it is a cause of success. This is one of those pleasing surprises which often happen to active resolution. Many things difficult to design prove easy to performance."

CHAPTER XIV

RASSELAS AND IMLAC RECEIVE AN UNEXPECTED VISIT

THEY had now wrought their way to the middle, and solaced their toil with the approach of liberty, when the prince, coming down to refresh himself with air, found his sister Nekayah standing before the mouth of the cavity. He started and stood confused, afraid to tell his design, and yet hopeless to conceal it. A few moments determined him to repose on her fidelity, and secure her secrecy by a declaration without reserve.

"Do not imagine," said the princess, "that I came hither as a spy: I had long observed from my window that you and Imlac directed your walk every day towards the same point; but I did not suppose that you had any better reason for the preference than a cooler shade, or more fragrant bank; nor followed you with any other design than to partake of your conversation. Since, then, not suspicion but fondness has detected you, let me not lose the advantage of my discovery. I am equally weary of confinement with yourself, and not less desirous of knowing what is done or suffered in the world. Permit me to fly with you from this tasteless tranquillity, which will yet grow more loathsome when you have left me. You may deny me to accompany you, but cannot hinder me from following."

The prince, who loved Nekayah above his other sisters, had no inclination to refuse her request, and grieved that he had lost an opportunity of showing his confidence by a voluntary communication. It was therefore agreed that she should leave the valley with them; and that, in the mean time, she should watch lest any other straggler should, by chance or curiosity, follow them to the mountain.

At length their labor was at an end; they saw light beyond the prominence, and, issuing to the top of the mountain, beheld the Nile, yet a narrow current, wandering beneath them.

The prince looked round with rapture, anticipated all the pleasure of travel, and in thought was already transported beyond his father's dominions. Imlac, though very joyful at his escape, had less expectation of pleasure in the world, which he had before tried, and of which he had been weary.

Rasselas was so much delighted with a wider horizon, that he could not soon be persuaded to return into the valley. He informed his sister that the way was open, and that nothing now remained but to prepare for their departure.

CHAPTER XV

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS LEAVE THE VALLEY, AND SEE MANY WONDERS

THE prince and princess had jewels sufficient to make them rich, whenever they came into a place of commerce, which, by Imlac's direction, they hid in their clothes; and, on the night of the next full moon, all left the valley. The princess was followed only by a single favorite, who did not know whither she was going.

They clambered through the cavity, and began to go down on the other side. The princess and her maid turned their eyes towards every part, and, seeing nothing to bound their prospect, considered themselves as in danger of being lost in a dreary vacuity. They stopped and trembled. "I am almost afraid," said the princess, "to begin a journey of which I cannot perceive an end, and to venture into this immense plain, where I may be approached on every side by men whom I never saw." The prince felt nearly the same emotions, though he thought it more manly to conceal them.

Imlac smiled at their terrors, and encouraged them to proceed; but the princess continued irresolute till she had been imperceptibly drawn forward too far to return.

In the morning they found some shepherds in the field, who set milk and fruits before them. The princess wondered that she did not see a palace ready for her reception, and a table spread with delicacies; but being faint and hungry, she drank the milk and ate the fruits, and thought them of a higher flavor than the products of the valley.

They traveled forward by easy journeys, being all unaccustomed to toil or difficulty, and knowing, that, though they might be missed, they could not be pursued. In a few days they came into a more populous region, where Imlac was diverted with the admiration which his companions expressed at the diversity of manners, stations, and employments.

Their dress was such as might not bring upon them the suspicion of having any thing to conceal; yet the prince, wherever he came, expected to be obeyed, and the princess was frightened because those that came into her presence did not prostrate themselves before her. Imlac was forced to observe them with great vigilance, lest they should betray their rank by their unusual behavior, and detained them several weeks in the first village, to accustom them to the sight of common mortals.

By degrees the royal wanderers were taught to understand that they had for a time laid aside their dignity, and were to expect only such regard as liberality and courtesy could procure. And Imlac having, by many admonitions, prepared them to endure the tumults of a port, and the ruggedness of the commercial race, brought them down to the seacoast.

The prince and his sister, to whom everything was new, were gratified equally at all places, and therefore remained for some months at the port, without any inclination to pass further. Imlac was content with their stay, because he did not think it safe to expose them, unpractised in the world, to the hazards of a foreign country.

At last he began to fear lest they should be discovered, and proposed to fix a day for their departure. They had no pretensions to judge for themselves, and referred the whole scheme to his direction. He therefore took passage in a ship to Suez; and, when the time came, with great difficulty prevailed on the princess to enter the vessel. They had a quick and prosperous voyage, and from Suez traveled by land to Cairo.

CHAPTER XVI

THEY ENTER CAIRO, AND FIND EVERY MAN
HAPPY

As they approached the city, which filled the strangers with astonishment, "This,"

said Imlac to the prince, "is the place where travelers and merchants assemble from all the corners of the earth. You will here find men of every character, and every occupation. Commerce is here honorable: I will act as a merchant, and you shall live as strangers who have no other end of travel than curiosity; it will soon be observed that we are rich; our reputation will procure us access to all whom we shall desire to know; you will see all the conditions of humanity, and enable yourself at leisure to make your choice of life."

They now entered the town, stunned by the noise, and offended by the crowds. Instruction had not yet so prevailed over habit, but that they wondered to see themselves pass undistinguished along the street, and met by the lowest of the people without reverence or notice. The princess could not at first bear the thought of being leveled with the vulgar, and for some days continued in her chamber, where she was served by her favorite Pekuah as in the palace of the valley.

Imlac, who understood traffic, sold part of the jewels the next day, and hired a house, which he adorned with such magnificence, that he was immediately considered as a merchant of great wealth. His politeness attracted many acquaintance, and his generosity made him courted by many dependents. His table was crowded by men of every nation, who all admired his knowledge, and solicited his favor. His companions, not being able to mix in the conversation, could make no discovery of their ignorance or surprise, and were gradually initiated in the world as they gained knowledge of the language.

The prince had, by frequent lectures, been taught the use and nature of money; but the ladies could not, for a long time, comprehend what the merchants did with small pieces of gold and silver, or why things of so little use should be received as equivalent to the necessities of life.

They studied the language two years, while Imlac was preparing to set before them the various ranks and conditions of mankind. He grew acquainted with all who had any thing uncommon in their fortune or conduct. He frequented the voluptuous and the frugal, the idle and the busy, the merchants and the men of learning.

* The prince being now able to converse with fluency, and having learned the caution necessary to be observed in his intercourse with strangers, began to accompany Imlac to places of resort, and to enter into all assemblies, that he might make his choice of life.

For some time he thought choice needless, because all appeared to him equally happy. Wherever he went he met gaiety and kindness, and heard the song of joy or the laugh of carelessness. He began to believe that the world overflowed with universal plenty, and that nothing was withheld either from want or merit; that every hand showered liberality, and every heart melted with benevolence; "and who then," says he, "will be suffered to be wretched?"

Imlac permitted the pleasing delusion, and was unwilling to crush the hope of experience, till one day, having sat awhile silent, "I know not," said the prince, "what can be the reason that I am more unhappy than any of our friends. I see them perpetually and unalterably cheerful, but feel my own mind restless and uneasy. I am unsatisfied with those pleasures which I seem most to court. I live in the crowds of jollity, not so much to enjoy company as to shun myself, and am only loud and merry to conceal my sadness."

"Every man," said Imlac, "may, by examining his own mind, guess what passes in the minds of others; when you feel that your own gaiety is counterfeit, it may justly lead you to suspect that of your companions not to be sincere. Envy is commonly reciprocal. We are long before we are convinced that happiness is never to be found; and each believes it possessed by others, to keep alive the hope of obtaining it for himself. In the assembly where you passed the last night, there appeared such sprightliness of air and volatility of fancy, as might have suited beings of a higher order, formed to inhabit serener regions inaccessible to care or sorrow; yet, believe me, prince, there was not one who did not dread the moment when solitude should deliver him to the tyranny of reflection."

"This," said the prince, "may be true of others, since it is true of me; yet, whatever be the general infelicity of man, one condition is more happy than another, and wisdom surely directs us to take the least evil in the choice of life."

"The causes of good and evil," answered Imlac, "are so various and uncertain, so often entangled with each other, so diversified by various relations, and so much subject to accidents which cannot be foreseen, that he who would fix his condition upon incontestable reasons of preference, must live and die inquiring and deliberating."

"But surely," said Rasselas, "the wise men, to whom we listen with reverence and wonder, chose that mode of life for themselves which they thought most likely to make them happy."

"Very few," said the poet, "live by choice. Every man is placed in his present condition by causes which acted without his foresight, and with which he did not always willingly co-operate; and therefore you will rarely meet one who does not think the lot of his neighbor better than his own."

"I am pleased to think," said the prince, "that my birth has given me at least one advantage over others, by enabling me to determine for myself. I have here the world before me; I will review it at leisure: surely happiness is somewhere to be found."

CHAPTER XVII

THE PRINCE ASSOCIATES WITH YOUNG MEN OF SPIRIT AND GAIETY

RASSELAS rose next day, and resolved to begin his experiments upon life. "Youth," cried he, "is the time of gladness: I will join myself to the young men whose only business is to gratify their desires, and whose time is all spent in a succession of enjoyments."

To such societies he was readily admitted; but a few days brought him back weary and disgusted. Their mirth was without images; their laughter without motive; their pleasures were gross and sensual, in which the mind had no part. Their conduct was at once wild and mean: they laughed at order and at law; but the frown of power dejected, and the eye of wisdom abashed them.

The prince soon concluded that he should never be happy in a course of life of which he was ashamed. He thought it unsuitable to a reasonable being to act without a plan, and to be sad or cheerful only by chance. "Happiness," said he, "must be something solid and permanent, without fear and without uncertainty."

But his young companions had gained so much of his regard by their frankness and courtesy, that he could not leave them without warning and remonstrance. "My friends," said he, "I have seriously considered our manners and our prospects, and find that we have mistaken our own interest. The first years of man must make provision for the last. He that never thinks never can be wise. Perpetual levity must end in ignorance: and intemperance, though it may fire the spirits for an hour, will make life short or miserable. Let us consider that youth is of no long duration, and that in maturer age, when the enchantments of fancy shall cease, and phantoms of delight dance no more about us, we shall have no comforts but the esteem of wise men, and the means of doing good. Let us, therefore, stop, while to stop is in our power: let us live as men who are sometime to grow old, and to whom it will be the most dreadful of all evils to count their past years by follies, and to be reminded of their former luxuriance of health only by the maladies which riot has produced."

They stared awhile in silence one upon another, and at last drove him away by a general chorus of continued laughter.

The consciousness that his sentiments were just, and his intentions kind, was scarcely sufficient to support him against the horror of derision. But he recovered his tranquillity, and pursued his search.

CHAPTER XVIII

THE PRINCE FINDS A WISE AND HAPPY MAN

As he was one day walking in the street, he saw a spacious building, which all were, by the open doors, invited to enter. He followed the stream of people, and found it a hall or school of declamation, in which professors read lectures to their auditory.<sup>1</sup> He fixed his eye upon a sage raised above the rest, who discoursed with great energy on the government of the passions. His look was venerable, his action graceful, his pronunciation clear, and his diction elegant. He showed, with great strength of sentiment and variety of illustration, that human nature is degraded and debased when the lower faculties predominate over the higher; that when fancy, the parent of passion, usurps the dominion of the mind, nothing ensues but the natural effect of unlawful government—perturbation and confusion; that she betrays the fortresses of the intellect to rebels, and excites her children to sedition against reason their lawful sovereign. He compared reason to the sun, of which the light is constant, uniform, and lasting; and fancy to a meteor, of bright but transitory luster, irregular in its motion, and delusive in its direction.

He then communicated the various precepts given from time to time for the conquest of passion, and displayed the happiness of those who had obtained the important victory, after which man is no longer the slave of fear, nor the fool of hope; is no more emaciated by envy, inflamed by anger, emasculated by tenderness, or depressed by grief; but walks on calmly through the tumults or privacies of life, as the sun pursues alike his course through the calm or the stormy sky.

He enumerated many examples of heroes immovable by pain or pleasure, who looked with indifference on those modes or accidents to which the vulgar give the names of good and evil. He exhorted his hearers to lay aside their prejudices, and arm themselves against the shafts of malice or misfortune, by invulnerable patience; concluding, that this state only was happiness, and that this happiness was in every one's power.

Rasselas listened to him with the veneration due to the instructions of a superior being, and waiting for him at the door, humbly implored the liberty of visiting so great a master of true wisdom. The lecturer hesitated a moment, when Rasselas put a purse of gold into his hand, which he received with a mixture of joy and wonder.

"I have found," said the prince at his return to Imlac, "a man who can teach all that is necessary to be known, who, from the unshaken throne of rational fortitude, looks down on the scenes of life changing beneath him. He speaks, and attention watches his lips; he reasons, and conviction closes his periods. This man shall be my future guide: I will learn his doctrines, and imitate his life."

<sup>1</sup>Audience.

"Be not too hasty," said Imlac, "to trust or to admire the teachers of morality: they discourse like angels, but they live like men."

Rasselas, who could not conceive how any man could reason so forcibly without feeling the cogency of his own arguments, paid his visit in a few days, and was denied admission. He had now learned the power of money, and made his way by a piece of gold to the inner apartment, where he found the philosopher, in a room half darkened, with his eyes misty, and his face pale. "Sir," said he, "you are come at a time when all human friendship is useless: what I suffer cannot be remedied; what I have lost cannot be supplied. My daughter, my only daughter, from whose tenderness I expected all the comforts of my age, died last night of a fever. My views, my purposes, my hopes are at an end: I am now a lonely being disunited from society."

"Sir," said the prince, "mortality is an event by which a wise man can never be surprised: we know that death is always near, and it should therefore always be expected."

"Young man," answered the philosopher, "you speak like one that has never felt the pang of separation." "Have you then forgot the precepts," said Rasselas, "which you so powerfully enforced? Has wisdom no strength to arm the heart against calamity? Consider that external things are naturally variable, but truth and reason are always the same." "What comfort," said the mourner, "can truth and reason afford me? Of what effect are they now, but to tell me that my daughter will not be restored?"

The prince, whose humanity would not suffer him to insult misery with reproof, went away convinced of the emptiness of rhetorical sound and the inefficacy of polished periods and studied sentences.

CHAPTER XIX

A GLIMPSE OF PASTORAL LIFE

HE was still eager upon the same inquiry; and having heard of a hermit, that lived near the lowest cataract of the Nile, and filled the whole country with the fame of his sanctity, resolved to visit his retreat, and inquire whether that felicity which public life could not afford, was to be found in solitude; and whether a man whose age and virtue made him venerable, could teach any peculiar art of shunning evils or enduring them.

Imlac and the princess agreed to accompany him; and, after the necessary preparations, they began their journey. Their way lay through the fields, where shepherds tended their flocks, and the lambs were playing upon the pasture. "This," said the poet, "is the life which has been often celebrated for its innocence and quiet; let us pass the heat of the day among the shepherds' tents, and know whether all our searches are not to terminate in pastoral simplicity."

The proposal pleased them, and they induced the shepherds, by small presents and familiar questions, to tell their opinion of their own state. They were so rude and ignorant, so little able to compare the good with the evil of the occupation, and so indistinct in their narratives and descriptions, that very little could be learned from them; but it was evident that their hearts were cankered with discontent, that they considered themselves as condemned to labor for the luxury of the rich, and looked up with stupid malevolence toward those that were placed above them.

The princess pronounced with vehemence, that she would never suffer these envious savages to be her companions, and that she should not soon be desirous of seeing any more specimens of rustic happiness; but could not believe that all the accounts of primeval pleasures were fabulous, and was yet in doubt, whether life had any thing that could be justly preferred to the placid gratifications of fields and woods. She hoped that the time would come, when, with a few virtuous and elegant companions, she should gather flowers planted by her own hand, fondle the lambs of her own ewe, and listen without care, among brooks and breezes, to one of her maidens reading in the shade.

CHAPTER XX

THE DANGER OF PROSPERITY

ON the next day they continued their journey, till the heat compelled them to look round for shelter. At a small distance they saw a thick wood, which they no sooner entered than they perceived that they were approaching the habitations of men. The shrubs were diligently cut away, to open walks where the shades were darkest; the boughs of opposite trees were artificially interwoven; seats of flowery turf were raised in vacant spaces; and a rivulet, that wantoned along the side of a winding path, had its banks sometimes opened into small basins, and its stream sometimes obstructed by little mounds of stone, heaped together to increase its murmurs.

They passed slowly through the wood, delighted with such unexpected accommodations, and entertained each other with conjecturing what or who he could be, that, in those rude and unfrequented regions, had leisure and art for such harmless luxury.

As they advanced, they heard the sound of music, and saw youths and virgins dancing in the grove; and going still further, beheld a stately palace built upon a hill, surrounded with woods. The laws of eastern hospitality allowed them to enter, and the master welcomed them like a man liberal and wealthy.

He was skillful enough in appearances soon to discern that they were no common guests, and spread his table with magnificence. The eloquence of Imlac caught his attention, and the lofty courtesy of the princess excited his respect. When they offered to depart, he entreated their stay, and was the next day still more unwilling to dismiss them than before. They were easily persuaded to stop, and civility grew up in time to freedom and confidence.

The prince now saw all the domestics cheerful, and all the face of nature smiling round the place, and could not forbear to hope he should find here what he was seeking; but when he was congratulating the master upon his possessions, he answered with a sigh, "My condition has indeed the appearance of happiness, but appearances are delusive. My prosperity puts my life in danger; the Bassa<sup>1</sup> of Egypt is my enemy, incensed only by my wealth and popularity. I have been hitherto protected against him by the princes of the country; but as the favor of the great is uncertain, I know not how soon my defenders may be persuaded to share the plunder with the Bassa. I have sent my treasures into a distant country, and upon the first alarm, am prepared to follow them. Then will my enemies riot in my mansion, and enjoy the gardens which I have planted."

They all joined in lamenting his danger, and deprecating his exile; and the princess was so much disturbed with the tumult of grief and indignation, that she retired to her apartment.

They continued with their kind inviter a few days longer, and then went forward to find the hermit.

CHAPTER XXI

THE HAPPINESS OF SOLITUDE. THE HERMIT'S HISTORY

THEY came on the third day, by the direction of the peasants, to the hermit's cell: it was a cavern in the side of a mountain, overshadowed with palm trees; at such a distance from the cataract, that nothing more was heard than a gentle uniform murmur, such as composed the mind to pensive meditation, especially when it was assisted by the wind whistling among the branches. The first rude essay of nature had been so much improved by human labor, that the cave contained several apartments appropriated to different uses, and often afforded lodging to travelers, whom darkness or tempests happened to overtake.

The hermit sat on a bench at the door, to enjoy the coolness of the evening. On one side lay a book with pens and papers, on the other mechanical instruments of various kinds. As they approached him unregarded, the princess observed that he had not the countenance of a man that had found, or could teach, the way to happiness.

They saluted him with great respect, which he repaid like a man not unaccustomed to the forms of courts. "My children," said he, "if you have lost your way, you shall be willingly supplied with such conveniences for the night as this cavern will afford. I have all that nature requires, and you will not expect delicacies in a hermit's cell."

They thanked him, and, entering, were pleased with the neatness and regularity of the place. The hermit set flesh and wine before them, though he fed only upon fruits and water. His discourse was cheerful without levity, and pious without enthusiasm. He soon gained the esteem of his guests, and the princess repented of her hasty censure.

<sup>1</sup>Basha, governor of a province.

At last Imlac began thus: "I do not now wonder that your reputation is so far extended. We have heard at Cairo of your wisdom, and came hither to implore your direction for this young man and maiden in the choice of life."

"To him that lives well," answered the hermit, "every form of life is good; nor can I give any other rule for choice, than to remove from all apparent evil."

"He will remove most certainly from evil," said the prince, "who shall devote himself to that solitude which you have recommended by your example."

"I have indeed lived fifteen years in solitude," said the hermit, "but have no desire that my example should gain any imitators. In my youth I professed arms, and was raised by degrees to the highest military rank. I have traversed wide countries at the head of my troops, and seen many battles and sieges. At last, being disgusted by the preferments of a younger officer, and feeling that my vigor was beginning to decay, I was resolved to close my life in peace, having found the world full of snares, discord, and misery. I had once escaped from the pursuit of the enemy by the shelter of this cavern, and therefore chose it for my final residence. I employed artificers to form it into chambers, and stored it with all that I was likely to want.

"For some time after my retreat, I rejoiced like a tempest-beaten sailor at his entrance into the harbor, being delighted with the sudden change of the noise and hurry of war to stillness and repose. When the pleasure of novelty went away, I employed my hours in examining the plants which grow in the valley, and the minerals which I collected from the rocks. But that inquiry is now grown tasteless and irksome. I have been for some time unsettled and distracted: my mind is disturbed with a thousand perplexities of doubt and vanities of imagination, which hourly prevail upon me, because I have no opportunities of relaxation or diversion. I am sometimes ashamed to think that I could not secure myself from vice, but by retiring from the exercise of virtue, and begin to suspect that I was rather impelled by resentment, than led by devotion, into solitude. My fancy riots in scenes of folly, and I lament that I have lost so much and have gained so little. In solitude, if I escape the example of bad men, I want likewise the counsel and conversation of the good. I have been long comparing the evils with the advantages of society, and resolve to return into the world to-morrow. The life of a solitary man will be certainly miserable, but not certainly devout."

They heard his resolution with surprise, but after a short pause, offered to conduct him to Cairo. He dug up a considerable treasure which he had hid among the rocks, and accompanied them to the city, on which, as he approached it, he gazed with rapture.

CHAPTER XXII

THE HAPPINESS OF A LIFE LED ACCORDING TO NATURE

RASSELAS went often to an assembly of learned men, who met at stated times to unbend their minds, and compare their opinions. Their manners were somewhat coarse, but their conversation was instructive, and their disputations acute, though sometimes too violent, and often continued till neither controvertist remembered upon what question they began. Some faults were almost general among them: every one was desirous to dictate to the rest, and every one was pleased to hear the genius or knowledge of another depreciated.

In this assembly Rasselas was relating his interview with the hermit, and the wonder with which he heard him censure a course of life which he had so deliberately chosen, and so laudably followed. The sentiments of the hearers were various. Some were of opinion, that the folly of his choice had been justly punished by condemnation to perpetual perseverance. One of the youngest among them, with great vehemence, pronounced him a hypocrite. Some talked of the right of society to the labor of individuals, and considered retirement as a desertion of duty. Others readily allowed that there was a time when the claims of the public were satisfied, and when a man might properly sequester himself, to review his life, and purify his heart.

One, who appeared more affected with the narrative than the rest, thought it likely that the hermit would, in a few years, go back to his retreat, and perhaps, if shame did not restrain or death intercept him, return once more from his retreat into the world: "For the hope of happiness," said he, "is so strongly impressed, that the longest experience is not able to efface it. Of the present state, whatever it be, we feel, and are forced to confess, the misery; yet, when the same state is again at a distance, imagination paints it as desirable. But the time will surely come, when desire will be no longer our torment, and no man shall be wretched but by his own fault."

"This," said a philosopher, who had heard him with tokens of great impatience, "is the present condition of a wise man. The time is already come, when none are wretched but by their own fault. Nothing is more idle than to inquire after happiness, which nature has kindly placed within our reach. The way to be happy is to live according to nature, in obedience to that universal and unalterable law with which every heart is originally impressed; which is not written on it by precept, but engraven by destiny, not instilled by education, but infused at our nativity. He that lives according to nature will suffer nothing from the delusions of hope, or importunities of desire; he will receive and reject with equability of temper, and act or suffer as the reason of things shall alternately prescribe. Other men may amuse themselves with subtle definitions, or intricate ratiocinations. Let them learn to be wise by easier means: let them observe the hind of the forest, and the linnet of the grove; let them consider the life of animals, whose motions are regulated by instinct: they obey their guide, and are happy. Let us therefore, at length, cease to dispute, and learn to live; throw away the encumbrance of precepts, which they who utter them with so much pride and pomp do not understand, and carry with us this simple and intelligible maxim,—that deviation from nature is deviation from happiness."

When he had spoken, he looked round him with a placid air, and enjoyed the consciousness of his own beneficence. "Sir," said the prince with great modesty, "as I, like all the rest of mankind, am desirous of felicity, my closest attention has been fixed upon your discourse; I doubt not the truth of a position which a man so learned has so confidently advanced:—let me only know what it is to live according to nature."

"When I find young men so humble and so docile," said the philosopher, "I can deny them no information which my studies have enabled me to afford.—To live according to nature, is to act always with due regard to the fitness arising from the relations and qualities of causes and effects; to concur with the great and unchangeable scheme of universal felicity; to co-operate with the general disposition and tendency of the present system of things."

The prince soon found that this was one of the sages whom he should understand less as he heard him longer. He therefore bowed and was silent; and the philosopher, supposing him satisfied, and the rest vanquished, rose up, and departed with the air of a man that had co-operated with the present system.

CHAPTER XXIII

THE PRINCE AND HIS SISTER DIVIDE BETWEEN THEM THE WORK OF OBSERVATION

RASSELAS returned home full of reflections, doubtful how to direct his future steps. Of the way to happiness he found the learned and simple equally ignorant; but, as he was yet young, he flattered himself that he had time remaining for more experiments and further inquiries. He communicated to Imlac his observations and his doubts, but was answered by him with new doubts, and remarks that gave him no comfort. He therefore discoursed more frequently and freely with his sister, who had yet the same hope with himself, and always assisted him to give some reason why, though he had been hitherto frustrated, he might succeed at last.

"We have hitherto," said she, "known but little of the world: we have never yet been either great or mean. In our own country, though we had royalty, we had no power; and in this, we have not yet seen the private recesses of domestic peace. Imlac favors not our search, lest we should in time find him mistaken. We will divide the task between us: you shall try what is to be found in the splendor of courts, and I will range the shades of humbler life. Perhaps command and authority may be the supreme blessings, as they afford most opportunities of doing good; or, perhaps, what this world can give may be found in the modest habitations of middle fortune, too low for great designs, and too high for penury and distress."

CHAPTER XXIV

THE PRINCE EXAMINES THE HAPPINESS OF HIGH STATIONS

RASSELAS applauded the design, and appeared next day with a splendid retinue at the court of the Bassa. He was soon distinguished for his magnificence, and admitted, as a prince whose curiosity had brought him from distant countries, to an intimacy with the great officers, and frequent conversation with the Bassa himself.

He was at first inclined to believe, that the man must be pleased with his own condition whom all approached with reverence and heard with obedience, and who had the power to extend his edicts to a whole kingdom. "There can be no pleasure," said he, "equal to that of feeling at once the joy of thousands all made happy by wise administration. Yet, since by the law of subordination this sublime delight can be in one nation but the lot of one, it is surely reasonable to think that there is some satisfaction more popular and accessible, and that millions can hardly be subjected to the will of a single man, only to fill his particular breast with incommunicable content."

These thoughts were often in his mind, and he found no solution of the difficulty. But as presents and civilities gained him more familiarity, he found that almost every man who stood high in employment hated all the rest, and was hated by them, and that their lives were a continual succession of plots and detections, stratagems and escapes, faction and treachery. Many of those who surrounded the Bassa, were sent only to watch and report his conduct; every tongue was muttering censure, and every eye was searching for a fault.

At last the letters of revocation arrived, the Bassa was carried in chains to Constantinople, and his name was mentioned no more.

"What are we now to think of the prerogatives of power," said Rasselas to his sister; "is it without any efficacy to good? or, is the subordinate degree only dangerous, and the supreme safe and glorious? Is the Sultan the only happy man in his dominions? or, is the Sultan himself subject to the torments of suspicion and the dread of enemies?"

In a short time the second Bassa was deposed; the Sultan that had advanced him was murdered by the Janizaries, and his successor had other views and different favorites.

CHAPTER XXV

THE PRINCESS PURSUES HER INQUIRY WITH MORE DILIGENCE THAN SUCCESS

THE princess, in the mean time, insinuated herself into many families; for there are few doors through which liberality, joined with good humor, cannot find its way. The daughters of many houses were airy and cheerful; but Nekayah had been too long accustomed to the conversation of Imlac and her brother, to be much pleased with childish levity, and prattle which had no meaning. She found their thoughts narrow, their wishes low, and their merriment often artificial. Their pleasures, poor as they were, could not be preserved pure, but were embittered by petty competitions and worthless emulation. They were always jealous of the beauty of each other; of a quality to which solicitude can add nothing, and from which detraction can take nothing away. Many were in love with triflers like themselves, and many fancied that they were in love when in truth they were only idle. Their affection was not fixed on sense or virtue, and therefore seldom ended but in vexation. Their grief, however, like their joy, was transient; every thing floated in their mind unconnected with the past or future, so that one desire easily gave way to another, as a second stone cast into the water effaces and confounds the circles of the first.

With these girls she played as with inoffensive animals, and found them proud of her countenance, and weary of her company.

But her purpose was to examine more deeply, and her affability easily persuaded the hearts that were swelling with sorrow to discharge their secrets in her ear; and those whom hope flattered, or prosperity delighted, often courted her to partake their pleasures.

The princess and her brother commonly met in the evening, in a private summer house on the bank of the Nile, and related to each other the occurrences of the day. As they were sitting together, the princess cast her eyes upon the river that flowed before her. "Answer," said she, "great Father of Waters, thou that rollest thy floods through eighty nations, to the invocations of the daughter of thy native king. Tell me if thou waterest, through all thy course, a single habitation from which thou dost not hear the murmurs of complaint?"

"You are, then," said Rasselas, "not more successful in private houses, than I have been in courts." "I have, since the last partition of our provinces," said the princess, "enabled myself to enter familiarly into many families, where there was the fairest show of prosperity and peace, and know not one house that is not haunted by some fury that destroys their quiet."

"I did not seek ease among the poor, because I concluded that there it could not be found. But I saw many poor, whom I had supposed to live in affluence. Poverty has, in large cities, very different appearances: it is often concealed in splendor, and often in extravagance. It is the care of a very great part of mankind to conceal their indigence from the rest; they support themselves by temporary expedients, and every day is lost in contriving for the morrow."

"This, however, was an evil, which, though frequent, I saw with less pain, because I could relieve it. Yet some have refused my bounties; more offended with my quickness to detect their wants, than pleased with my readiness to succor them; and others, whose exigencies compelled them to admit my kindness, have never been able to forgive their benefactress. Many, however, have been sincerely grateful without the ostentation of gratitude, or the hope of other favors."

CHAPTER XXVI

THE PRINCESS CONTINUES HER REMARKS
UPON PRIVATE LIFE

NEKAYAH, perceiving her brother's attention fixed, proceeded in her narrative.

"In families, where there is or is not poverty, there is commonly discord: if a kingdom be, as Imlac tells us, a great family, a family likewise is a little kingdom, torn with factions, and exposed to revolutions. An unpractised observer expects the love of parents and children to be constant and equal; but this kindness seldom continues beyond the years of infancy: in a short time the children become rivals to their parents; benefits are allayed by reproaches, and gratitude debased by envy.

"Parents and children seldom act in concert: each child endeavors to appropriate the esteem or fondness of the parents, and the parents, with yet less temptation, betray each other to their children; thus, some place their confidence in the father, and some in the mother, and by degrees the house is filled with artifices and feuds.

"The opinions of children and parents, of the young and the old, are naturally opposite, by the contrary effects of hope and despondence, of expectation and experience, without crime or folly on either side. The colors of life in youth and age appear different, as the face of nature in spring and winter. And how can children credit the assertions of parents, which their own eyes show them to be false?"

"Few parents act in such a manner as much to enforce their maxims by the credit of their lives. The old man trusts wholly to slow contrivance and gradual progression; the youth expects to force his way by genius, vigor, and precipitance. The old man pays regard to riches, and the youth reverences virtue. The old man deifies prudence; the youth commits himself to magnanimity and chance. The young man, who intends no ill, believes that none is intended, and therefore acts with openness and candor; but his father, having suffered the injuries of fraud, is impelled to suspect, and too often allured to practise it. Age looks with anger on the temerity of youth, and youth with contempt on the scrupulosity of age. Thus parents and children, for the greatest part, live on to love less and less; and, if those whom nature has thus closely united are the torments of each other, where shall we look for tenderness and consolation?"

"Surely," said the prince, "you must have been unfortunate in your choice of acquaintance: I am unwilling to believe, that the most tender of all relations is thus impeded in its effects by natural necessity."

"Domestic discord," answered she, "is not inevitably and fatally necessary; but yet it is not easily avoided. We seldom see that a whole family is virtuous; the good and evil cannot well agree; and the evil can yet less agree with one another; even the virtuous fall sometimes to variance, when their virtues are of different kinds, and tending to extremes. In general, those parents have most reverence who most deserve it; for he that lives well cannot be despised.

"Many other evils infest private life. Some are the slaves of servants whom they have trusted with their affairs. Some are kept in continual anxiety by the caprice of rich relations, whom they cannot please, and dare not offend. Some husbands are imperious, and some wives perverse: and, as it is always more easy to do evil than good, though the wisdom or virtue of one can very rarely make many happy, the folly or vice of one may often make many miserable."

"If such be the general effect of marriage," said the prince, "I shall, for the future, think it dangerous to connect my interest with that of another, lest I should be unhappy by my partner's fault."

"I have met," said the princess, "with many who live single for that reason; but I never found that their prudence ought to raise envy. They dream away their time without friendship, without fondness, and are driven to rid themselves of the day, for which they have no use, by childish amusements or vicious delights. They act as being under the constant sense of some known inferiority; that fills their minds with rancor, and their tongues with censure. They are peevish at home, and malevolent abroad; and, as the outlaws of human nature, make it their business and their pleasure to disturb that society which debars them from its privileges. To live without feeling or exciting sympathy, to be fortunate without adding to the felicity of others, or afflicted without tasting the balm of pity, is a state more gloomy than solitude: it is not retreat, but exclusion from mankind. Marriage has many pains, but celibacy has no pleasures."

"What then is to be done?" said Rasselas; "the more we inquire, the less we can resolve. Surely he is most likely to please himself that has no other inclination to regard."

CHAPTER XXVII

DISQUISITION UPON GREATNESS

THE conversation had a short pause. The prince having considered his sister's observations, told her, that she had surveyed life with prejudice, and supposed misery where she did not find it. "Your narrative," says he, "throws yet a darker gloom upon the prospects of futurity; the predictions of Im-lac were but faint sketches of the evils painted by Nekayah. I have been lately convinced that quiet is not the daughter of grandeur or of power: that her presence is not to be bought by wealth, nor enforced by conquest. It is evident, that as any man acts in a wider compass, he must be more exposed to opposition from enmity, or miscarriage from chance; whoever has many to please or to govern, must use the ministry of many agents, some of whom will be wicked, and some ignorant; by some he will be misled, and by others betrayed. If he gratifies one he will offend another; those that are not favored will think themselves injured; and, since favors can be conferred but upon few, the greater number will be always discontented."

"The discontent," said the princess, "which is thus unreasonable, I hope that I shall always have spirit to despise, and you power to repress."

"Discontent," answered Rasselas, "will not always be without reason, under the most just and vigilant administration of public affairs. None, however attentive, can always discover that merit which indigence or faction may happen to obscure; and none, however powerful, can always reward it. Yet he that sees inferior desert advanced above him, will naturally impute that preference to partiality or caprice; and, indeed, it can scarcely be hoped that any man, however magnanimous by nature, or exalted by condition, will be able to persist for ever in the fixed and inexorable justice of distribution: he will sometimes indulge his own affections, and sometimes those of his favorites; he will permit some to please him who can never serve him; he will discover in those whom he loves, qualities which in reality they do not possess; and to those from whom he receives pleasure, he will in his turn endeavor to give it. Thus will recommendations sometimes prevail which were purchased by money, or by the more destructive bribery of flattery and servility.

"He that has much to do will do something wrong, and of that wrong must suffer the consequences; and, if it were possible that he should always act rightly, yet when such numbers are to judge of his conduct, the bad will censure and obstruct him by malevolence, and the good sometimes by mistake.

"The highest stations cannot therefore hope to be the abodes of happiness, which I would willingly believe to have fled from thrones and palaces to seats of humble privacy and placid obscurity. For what can hinder the satisfaction, or intercept the expectations, of him whose abilities are adequate to his employments, who sees with his own eyes the whole circuit of his influence, who chooses by his own knowledge all whom he trusts, and whom none are tempted to deceive by hope or fear? Surely he has nothing to do but to love and to be loved, to be virtuous and to be happy."

"Whether perfect happiness would be procured by perfect goodness," said Nekayah, "this world will never afford an opportunity of deciding. But this, at least, may be maintained, that we do not always find visible happiness in proportion to visible virtue. All natural and almost all political evils, are incident alike to the bad and good: they are confounded in the misery of a famine, and not much distinguished in the fury of a faction; they sink together in a tempest, and are driven together from their country by invaders. All that virtue can afford is quietness of conscience and a steady prospect of a happier state; this may enable us to endure calamity with patience; but remember that patience must suppose pain."

CHAPTER XXVIII

RASSELAS AND NEKAYAH CONTINUE THEIR CONVERSATION

"DEAR princess," said Rasselas, "you fall into the common errors of exaggeratory declamation, by producing, in a familiar disquisition, examples of national calamities, and scenes of extensive misery, which are found in books rather than in the world, and which, as they are horrid, are ordained to be rare. Let us not imagine evils which we do not feel, nor injure life by misrepresentations. I cannot bear that querulous eloquence which threatens every city with a siege like that of Jerusalem, that makes famine attend on every flight of locusts, and suspends pestilence on the wing of every blast that issues from the south.

"On necessary and inevitable evils which overwhelm kingdoms at once, all disputation is vain: when they happen they must be endured. But it is evident, that these bursts of universal distress are more dreaded than felt; thousands and ten thousands flourish in youth and wither in age, without the knowledge of any other than domestic evils, and share the same pleasures and vexations, whether their kings are mild or cruel, whether the armies of their country pursue their enemies or retreat before them. While courts are disturbed with intestine competitions, and ambassadors are negotiating in foreign countries, the smith still plies his anvil, and the husbandman drives his plow forward; the necessities of life are required and obtained; and the successive business of the seasons continues to make its wonted revolutions.

"Let us cease to consider what, perhaps, may never happen, and what when it shall happen, will laugh at human speculation. We will not endeavor to modify the motions of the elements, or to fix the destiny of kingdoms. It is our business to consider what beings like us may perform; each laboring for his own happiness, by promoting within his circle, however narrow, the happiness of others.

"Marriage is evidently the dictate of nature; men and women are made to be companions of each other; and therefore I cannot be persuaded but that marriage is one of the means of happiness."

"I know not," said the princess, "whether marriage be more than one of the innumerable modes of human misery. When I see and reckon the various forms of connubial infelicity, the unexpected causes of lasting discord, the diversities of temper, the oppositions of opinion, the rude collisions of contrary desire where both are urged by violent impulses, the obstinate contests of disagreeing virtues where both are supported by consciousness of good intention, I am sometimes disposed to think with the severer casuists of most nations, that marriage is rather permitted than approved, and that none, but by the instigation of a passion too much indulged, entangle themselves with indissoluble compacts."

"You seem to forget," replied Rasselas, "that you have, even now, represented celibacy as less happy than marriage. Both conditions may be bad, but they cannot both be worst. Thus it happens when wrong opinions are entertained, that they mutually destroy each other, and leave the mind open to truth."

"I did not expect," answered the princess, "to hear that imputed to falsehood which is the consequence only of frailty. To the mind, as to the eye, it is difficult to compare with exactness objects vast in their extent, and various in their parts. Where we see or conceive the whole at once, we readily note the discriminations, and decide the preference; but of two systems, of which neither can be surveyed by any human being in its full compass of magnitude and multiplicity of complication, where is the wonder, that, judging of the whole by parts, I am alternately affected by one and the other, as either presses on my memory or fancy? We differ from ourselves, just as we differ from each other, when we see only part of the question, as in the multifarious relations of politics and morality; but when we perceive the whole at once, as in numerical computations, all agree in one judgment, and none ever varies his opinion."

"Let us not add," said the prince, "to the other evils of life the bitterness of controversy, nor endeavor to vie with each other in subtilities of argument. We are employed in a search, of which both are equally to enjoy the success, or suffer by the miscarriage. It is therefore fit that we assist each other. You surely conclude too hastily from the infelicity of marriage against its institution: will not the misery of life prove equally that life cannot be the gift of heaven? The world must be peopled by marriage, or peopled without it."

"How the world is to be peopled," returned Nekayah, "is not my care, and needs not be yours. I see no danger that the present generation should omit to leave successors behind them: we are not now inquiring for the world, but for ourselves."

CHAPTER XXIX

THE DEBATE OF MARRIAGE CONTINUED

"THE good of the whole," says Rasselas, "is the same with the good of all its parts. If marriage be best for mankind, it must be evidently best for individuals; or a permanent and necessary duty must be the cause of evil, and some must be inevitably sacrificed to the convenience of others. In the estimate which you have made of the two states, it appears that the incommunities of a single life are, in a great measure, necessary and certain, but those of the conjugal state accidental and avoidable."

"I cannot forbear to flatter myself, that prudence and benevolence will make marriage happy. The general folly of mankind is the cause of general complaint. What can be expected but disappointment and repentance from a choice made in the immaturity of youth, in the ardor of desire, without judgment, without foresight, without inquiry after conformity of opinions, similarity of manners, rectitude of judgment, or purity of sentiment?"

"Such is the common process of marriage. A youth and maiden, meeting by chance or brought together by artifice, exchange glances, reciprocate civilities, go home, and dream of one another. Having little to divert attention, or diversify thought, they find themselves uneasy when they are apart, and therefore conclude that they shall be happy together. They marry, and discover what nothing but voluntary blindness before had concealed: they wear out life in altercations, and charge nature with cruelty."

"From those early marriages proceeds likewise the rivalry of parents and children. The son is eager to enjoy the world before the father is willing to forsake it, and there is hardly room at once for two generations. The daughter begins to bloom before the mother can be content to fade, and neither can forbear to wish for the absence of the other."

"Surely all these evils may be avoided by that deliberation and delay which prudence prescribes to irrevocable choice. In the variety and jollity of youthful pleasures, life may be well enough supported without the help of a partner. Longer time will increase experience, and wider views will allow better opportunities of inquiry and selection: one advantage, at least, will be certain; the parents will be visibly older than their children."

"What reason cannot collect," said Nekayah, "and what experiment has not yet taught, can be known only from the report of others. I have been told that late marriages are not eminently happy. This is a question too important to be neglected, and I have often proposed it to those whose accuracy of remark, and comprehensiveness of knowledge, made their suffrages worthy of regard. They have generally determined that it is dangerous for a man and woman to suspend their fate upon each other, at a time when opinions are fixed, and habits are established; when friendships have been contracted on both sides; when life has been planned into method, and the mind has long enjoyed the contemplation of its own prospects."

"It is scarcely possible that two traveling through the world under the conduct of chance, should have been both directed to the same path, and it will not often happen that either will quit the track which custom has made pleasing. When the desultory levity of youth has settled into regularity, it is soon succeeded by pride ashamed to yield, or obstinacy delighting to contend. And even though mutual esteem produces mutual desire to please, time itself, as it modifies unchangeably the external mien, determines likewise the direction of the passions, and gives an inflexible rigidity to the manners. Long customs are not easily broken: he that attempts to change the course of his own life, very often labors in vain: and how shall we do that for others, which we are seldom able to do for ourselves?"

"But surely," interposed the prince, "you suppose the chief motive of choice forgotten or neglected. Whenever I shall seek a wife, it shall be my first question, whether she be willing to be led by reason."

"Thus it is," said Nekayah, "that philosophers are deceived. There are a thousand familiar disputes which reason never can decide; questions that elude investigation, and make logic ridiculous; cases where something must be done, and where little can be said. Consider the state of mankind, and inquire how few can be supposed to act upon any occasions, whether small or great, with all the reasons of action present to their minds. Wretched would be the pair above all names of wretchedness, who should be doomed to adjust by reason, every morning, all the minute detail of a domestic day."

"Those who marry at an advanced age, will probably escape the encroachments of their children; but, in diminution of this advantage, they will be likely to leave them, ignorant and helpless, to a guardian's mercy; or, if that should not happen, they must at least go out of the world before they see those whom they love best either wise or great."

"From their children, if they have less to fear, they have less also to hope, and they lose, without equivalent, the joys of early love, and the convenience of uniting with manners pliant, and minds susceptible of new impressions, which might wear away their dissimilarities by long cohabitation, as soft bodies, by continual attrition, conform their surfaces to each other."

"I believe it will be found, that those who marry late are best pleased with their children, and those who marry early, with their partners."

"The union of these two affections," said Rasselas, "would produce all that could be wished. Perhaps there is a time when marriage might unite them, a time neither too early for the father, nor too late for the husband."

"Every hour," answered the princess, "confirms my prejudice in favor of the position so often uttered by the mouth of Imlac,—That nature sets her gifts on the right hand and on the left. Those conditions which flatter hope and attract desire, are so constituted, that, as we approach one, we recede from another. There are goods so opposed that we cannot seize both, but, by too much prudence, may pass between them at too great a distance to reach either. This is often the fate of long consideration: he does nothing who endeavors to do more than is allowed to humanity. Flatter not yourself with contrarieties of pleasure. Of the blessings set before you, make your choice, and be content. No man can taste the fruits of autumn while he is delighting his scent with the flowers of the spring: no man can, at the same time, fill his cup from the source and from the mouth of the Nile."

CHAPTER XXX

IMLAC ENTERS AND CHANGES THE CONVERSATION

HERE Imlac entered, and interrupted them. "Imlac," said Rasselas, "I have been taking from the princess the dismal history of private life, and am almost discouraged from further search."

"It seems to me," said Imlac, "that while you are making the choice of life, you neglect to live. You wander about a single city, which, however large and diversified, can now afford few novelties, and forget that you are in a country, famous among the earliest monarchies for the power and wisdom of its inhabitants; a country where the sciences first dawned that illuminate the world, and beyond which the arts cannot be traced of civil society or domestic life."

"The old Egyptians have left behind them monuments of industry and power, before which all European magnificence is confessed to fade away. The ruins of their architecture are the schools of modern builders, and from the wonders which time has spared we may conjecture, though uncertainly, what it has destroyed."

"My curiosity," said Rasselas, "does not very strongly lead me to survey piles of stone, or mounds of earth; my business is with man. I came hither not to measure fragments of temples, or trace choked aqueducts, but to look upon the various scenes of the present world."

"The things that are now before us," said the princess, "require attention, and deserve it. What have I to do with the heroes or the monuments of ancient times? with times which never can return, and heroes whose form of life was different from all that the present condition of mankind requires or allows?"

"To know anything," returned the poet, "we must know its effects; to see men we must see their works, that we may learn what reason has dictated, or passion has incited, and find what are the most powerful motives of action. To judge rightly of the present, we must oppose it to the past; for all judgment is comparative, and of the future nothing can be known. The truth is, that no mind is much employed upon the present; recollection and anticipation fill up almost all our moments. Our passions are joy and grief, love and hatred, hope and fear. Of joy and grief the past is the object, and the future of hope and fear: even love and hatred respect the past, for the cause must have been before the effect.

"The present state of things is the consequence of the former, and it is natural to inquire what were the sources of the good that we enjoy, or the evil that we suffer. If we act only for ourselves, to neglect the study of history is not prudent; if we are intrusted with the care of others, it is not just. Ignorance, when it is voluntary, is criminal; and he may properly be charged with evil, who refused to learn how he might prevent it.

"There is no part of history so generally useful as that which relates the progress of the human mind, the gradual improvement of reason, the successive advances of science, the vicissitudes of learning and ignorance, which are the light and darkness of thinking beings, the extinction and resuscitation of arts, and the revolutions of the intellectual world. If accounts of battles and invasions are peculiarly the business of princes, the useful or elegant arts are not to be neglected; those who have kingdoms to govern, have understandings to cultivate.

"Example is always more efficacious than precept. A soldier is formed in war, and a painter must copy pictures. In this, contemplative life has the advantage—great actions are seldom seen, but the labors of art are always at hand, for those who desire to know what art has been able to perform.

"When the eye or the imagination is struck with an uncommon work, the next transition of an active mind is to the means by which it was performed. Here begins the true use of such contemplation; we enlarge our comprehension by new ideas, and perhaps recover some art lost to mankind, or learn what is less perfectly known in our own country. At least we compare our own with former times, and either rejoice at our improvements, or, what is the first motion towards good, discover our defects."

"I am willing," said the prince, "to see all that can deserve my search." "And I," said the princess, "shall rejoice to learn something of the manners of antiquity."

"The most pompous monument of Egyptian greatness, and one of the most bulky works of manual industry," said Imlac, "are the Pyramids; fabrics raised before the time of history, and of which the earliest narratives afford us only uncertain traditions. Of these the greatest is still standing, very little injured by time."

"Let us visit them to-morrow," said Nekayah. "I have often heard of the Pyramids, and shall not rest till I have seen them within and without with my own eyes."

CHAPTER XXXI

THEY VISIT THE PYRAMIDS

THE resolution being thus taken, they set out the next day. They laid tents upon their camels, being resolved to stay among the Pyramids till their curiosity was fully satisfied. They traveled gently, turned aside to everything remarkable, stopped from time to time and conversed with the inhabitants, and observed the various appearances of towns ruined and inhabited, of wild and cultivated nature.

When they came to the great Pyramid, they were astonished at the extent of the base, and the height of the top. Imlac explained to them the principles upon which the pyramidal form was chosen for a fabric intended to coextend its duration with that of the world: he showed that its gradual diminution gave it such stability as defeated all the common attacks of the elements, and could scarcely be overthrown by earthquakes themselves, the least resistible of natural violence. A concussion that should shatter the Pyramid would threaten the dissolution of the continent.

They measured all its dimensions, and pitched their tents at its foot. Next day they prepared to enter its interior apartments, and having hired the common guides, climbed up to the first passage, when the favorite of the princess, looking into the cavity, stepped back and trembled. "Pekuah," said the princess, "of what art thou afraid?" "Of the narrow entrance," answered the lady, "and of the dreadful gloom. I dare not enter a place which must surely be inhabited by unquiet souls. The original possessors of these dreadful vaults will start up before us, and perhaps shut us in for ever." She spoke, and threw her arms round the neck of her mistress.

"If all your fear be of apparitions," said the prince, "I will promise you safety: there is no danger from the dead: he that is once buried will be seen no more."

"That the dead are seen no more," said Imlac, "I will not undertake to maintain, against the concurrent and unvaried testimony of all ages, and of all nations. There is no people, rude or learned, among whom apparitions of the dead are not related and believed. This opinion, which perhaps prevails as far as human nature is diffused, could become universal only by its truth: those that never heard of one another, would not have agreed in a tale which nothing but experience can make credible. That it is doubted by single cavilers, can very little weaken the general evidence; and some who deny it with their tongues, confess it by their fears.

"Yet I do not mean to add new terrors to those which have already seized upon Pekuah. There can be no reason why specters should haunt the Pyramid more than other places, or why they should have power or will to hurt innocence and purity. Our entrance is no violation of their privileges; we can take nothing from them, how then can we offend them?"

"My dear Pekuah," said the princess, "I will always go before you, and Imlac shall follow you. Remember that you are the companion of the princess of Abyssinia."

"If the princess is pleased that her servant should die," returned the lady, "let her command some death less dreadful than enclosure in this horrid cavern. You know I dare not disobey you: I must go if you command me; but, if I once enter, I never shall come back."

The princess saw that her fear was too strong for expostulation or reproof, and embracing her, told her that she should stay in the tent till their return. Pekuah was yet not satisfied, but entreated the princess not to pursue so dreadful a purpose as that of entering the recesses of the Pyramid. "Though I cannot teach courage," said Nekayah, "I must not learn cowardice; nor leave at last undone what I came hither only to do."

CHAPTER XXXII

THEY ENTER THE PYRAMID

PEKUAH descended to the tents, and the rest entered the Pyramid: they passed through the galleries, surveyed the vaults of marble, and examined the chest in which the body of the founder is supposed to have been repositied. They then sat down in one of the most spacious chambers to rest awhile before they attempted to return.

"We have now," said Imlac, "gratified our minds with an exact view of the greatest work of man, except the wall of China.

"Of the wall it is very easy to assign the motive. It secured a wealthy and timorous nation from the incursions of barbarians, whose unskillfulness in arts made it easier for them to supply their wants by rapine than by industry, and who from time to time poured in upon the habitations of peaceful commerce, as vultures descend upon domestic fowl. Their celerity and fierceness made the wall necessary, and their ignorance made it efficacious.

"But for the Pyramids no reason has ever been given adequate to the cost and labor of the work. The narrowness of the chambers proves that it could afford no retreat from enemies, and treasures might have been repositied at far less expense with equal security. It seems to have been erected only in compliance with that hunger of imagination which preys incessantly upon life, and must be always appeased by some employment. Those who have already all that they can enjoy, must enlarge their desires. He that has built for use, till use is supplied, must begin to build for vanity, and extend his plan to the utmost power of human performance, that he may not be soon reduced to form another wish.

"I consider this mighty structure as a monument of the insufficiency of human enjoyments. A king whose power is unlimited, and whose treasures surmount all real and imaginary wants, is compelled to solace, by the erection of a Pyramid, the satiety of dominion and tastelessness of declining life, by amusing the tediousness of declining life, by seeing thousands laboring without end, and one stone, for no purpose, laid upon another. Whoever thou art that, not content with a moderate condition, imaginest happiness in royal magnificence, and dreamest that command or riches can feed the appetite of novelty with perpetual gratifications, survey the Pyramids, and confess thy folly!"

CHAPTER XXXIII

THE PRINCESS MEETS WITH AN UNEXPECTED MISFORTUNE

THEY rose up; and returned through the cavity at which they had entered, and the princess prepared for her favorite a long narrative of dark labyrinths and costly rooms, and of the different impressions which the varieties of the way had made upon her. But when they came to their train, they found every one silent and dejected; the men discovered shame and fear in their countenances, and the women were weeping in the tents.

What had happened they did not try to conjecture, but immediately inquired. "You had scarcely entered into the Pyramid," said one of the attendants, "when a troop of Arabs rushed upon us; we were too few to resist them, and too slow to escape. They were about to search the tents, set us on our camels, and drive us along before them, when the approach of some Turkish horsemen put them to flight; but they seized the lady Pekuah with her two maids, and carried them away. The Turks are now pursuing them by our instigation, but I fear they will not be able to overtake them."

The princess was overpowered with surprise and grief. Rasselas, in the first heat of his resentment, ordered his servants to follow him, and prepared to pursue the robbers with his saber in his hand. "Sir," said Imlac, "what can you hope from violence or valor? the Arabs are mounted on horses trained to battle and retreat; we have only beasts of burden. By leaving our present station we may lose the princess, but cannot hope to regain Pekuah."

In a short time the Turks returned, having not been able to reach the enemy. The princess burst out into new lamentations, and Rasselas could scarcely forbear to reproach them with cowardice; but Imlac was of opinion that the escape of the Arabs was no addition to their misfortune, for perhaps they would have killed their captives rather than have resigned them.

CHAPTER XXXIV

THEY RETURN TO CAIRO WITHOUT PEKUAH

THERE was nothing to be hoped from longer stay. They returned to Cairo, repenting of their curiosity, censuring the negligence of the government, lamenting their own rashness which had neglected to procure a guard, imagining many expedients by which the loss of Pekuah might have been prevented, and resolving to do something for her recovery, though none could find any thing proper to be done.

Nekayah retired to her chamber, where her women attempted to comfort her by telling her that all had their troubles, and that lady Pekuah had enjoyed much happiness in the world for a long time, and might reasonably expect a change of fortune. They hoped that some good would befall her wheresoever she was, and that their mistress would find another friend who might supply her place.

The princess made them no answer, and they continued the form of condolence, not much grieved in their hearts that the favorite was lost.

Next day the prince presented to the Bassa a memorial of the wrong which he had suffered, and a petition for redress. The Bassa threatened to punish the robbers, but did not attempt to catch them; nor indeed could any account or description be given by which he might direct the pursuit.

It soon appeared that nothing would be done by authority. Governors being accustomed to hear of more crimes than they can punish, and more wrongs than they can redress, set themselves at ease by indiscriminate negligence, and presently forget the request when they lose sight of the petitioner.

Imlac then endeavored to gain some intelligence by private agents. He found many who pretended to an exact knowledge of all the haunts of the Arabs, and to regular correspondence with their chiefs, and who readily undertook the recovery of Pekuah. Of these, some were furnished with money for their journey, and came back no more; some were liberally paid for accounts which a few days discovered to be false. But the princess would not suffer any means, however improbable, to be left untried. While she was doing something, she kept her hope alive. As one expedient failed, another was suggested; when one messenger returned unsuccessful, another was despatched to a different quarter.

Two months had now passed, and of Pekuah nothing had been heard; the hopes which they had endeavored to raise in each other grew more languid, and the princess when she saw nothing more to be tried, sunk down inconsolable in hopeless dejection. A thousand times she reproached herself with the easy compliance by which she permitted her favorite to stay behind her. "Had not my fondness," said she, "lessened my authority, Pekuah had not dared to talk of her terrors. She ought to have feared me more than spectators. A severe look would have overpowered her; a peremptory command would have compelled obedience. Why did foolish indulgence prevail upon me? Why did I not speak, and refuse to hear?"

"Great princess," said Imlac, "do not reproach yourself for your virtue, or consider that as blamable by which evil has accidentally been caused. Your tenderness for the timidity of Pekuah was generous and kind. When we act according to our duty, we commit the event to him by whose laws our actions are governed, and who will suffer none to be finally punished for obedience. When, in prospect of some good, whether natural or moral, we break the rules prescribed us, we withdraw from the direction of superior wisdom, and take all consequences upon ourselves. Man cannot so far know the connection of causes and events, as that he may venture to do wrong in order to do right. When we pursue our end by lawful means, we may always console our miscarriage by the hope of future recompense. When we consult only our own policy, and attempt to find a nearer way to good, by overleaping the settled boundaries of right and wrong, we cannot be happy even by success, because we cannot escape the consciousness of our fault: but if we miscarry, the disappointment is irremediably embittered. How comfortless is the sorrow of him who feels at once the pangs of guilt, and the vexation of calamity which guilt has brought upon him!

"Consider, princess, what would have been your condition, if the lady Pekuah had entreated to accompany you, and being compelled to stay in the tents, had been carried away; or how would you have borne the thought, if you had forced her into the Pyramid, and she had died before you in agonies of terror."

"Had either happened," said Nekayah, "I could not have endured life till now: I should have been tortured to madness by the remembrance of such cruelty, or must have pined away in abhorrence of myself."

"This at least," said Imlac, "is the present reward of virtuous conduct, that no unlucky consequence can oblige us to repent it."

CHAPTER XXXV

THE PRINCESS LANGUISHES FOR WANT OF PEKUAH

NEKAYAH being thus reconciled to herself, found that no evil is insupportable, but that which is accompanied with consciousness of wrong. She was from that time delivered from the violence of tempestuous sorrow, and sunk into silent pensiveness and gloomy tranquillity. She sat from morning to evening recollecting all that had been done or said by her Pekuah, treasured up with care every trifle on which Pekuah had set an accidental value, and which might recall to mind any little incident or careless conversation. The sentiments of her whom she now expected to see no more, were treasured in her memory as rules of life, and she deliberated to no other end than to conjecture, on any occasion, what would have been the opinion and counsel of Pekuah.

The women by whom she was attended knew nothing of her real condition, and therefore she could not talk to them but with caution and reserve. She began to remit her curiosity, having no great care to collect notions which she had no convenience of uttering. Rasselas endeavored first to comfort, and afterwards to divert her; he hired musicians, to whom she seemed to listen, but did not hear them, and procured masters to instruct her in various arts, whose lectures, when they visited her again, were again to be repeated. She had lost her taste of pleasure, and her ambition of excellence. And her mind, though forced into short excursions, always recurred to the image of her friend.

Imlac was every morning earnestly enjoined to renew his inquiries, and was asked every night whether he had yet heard of Pekuah, till not being able to return the princess the answer that she desired, he was less and less willing to come into her presence. She observed his backwardness, and commanded him to attend her. "You are not," said she, "to confound impatience with resentment, or to suppose that I charge you with negligence, because I repine at your unsuccessfulness. I do not much wonder at your absence; I know that the unhappy are never pleasing, and that all naturally avoid the contagion of misery. To hear complaints is wearisome alike to the wretched and the happy; for who would cloud, by adventitious grief, the short gleams of gaiety which life allows us? or who that is struggling under his own evils, will add to them the miseries of another?"

"The time is at hand, when none shall be disturbed any longer by the sighs of Nekayah; my search after happiness is now at an end. I am resolved to retire from the world with all its flatteries and deceits, and will hide myself in solitude, without any other care than to compose my thoughts, and regulate my hours by a constant succession of innocent occupations, till with a mind purified from all earthly desires, I shall enter into that state to which all are hastening, and in which I hope again to enjoy the friendship of Pekuah."

"Do not entangle your mind," said Imlac, "by irrevocable determinations, nor increase the burden of life by a voluntary accumulation of misery: the weariness of retirement will continue or increase when the loss of Pekuah is forgotten. That you have been deprived of one pleasure, is no very good reason for rejection of the rest."

"Since Pekuah was taken from me," said the princess, "I have no pleasure to reject or to retain. She that has no one to love or trust has little to hope. She wants the radical principle of happiness. We may, perhaps, allow, that what satisfaction this world can afford, must arise from the conjunction of wealth, knowledge, and goodness: wealth is nothing but as it is bestowed, and knowledge nothing but as it is communicated; they must therefore be imparted to others, and to whom could I now delight to impart them? Goodness affords the only comfort which can be enjoyed without a partner, and goodness may be practised in retirement."

"How far solitude may admit goodness or advance it, I shall not," replied Imlac, "dispute at present. Remember the confession of the pious hermit. You will wish to return into the world, when the image of your companion has left your thoughts."—"That time," said Nekayah, "will never come. The generous frankness, the modest obsequiousness, and the faithful secrecy of my dear Pekuah, will always be more missed, as I shall live longer to see vice and folly."

"The state of a mind oppressed with a sudden calamity," said Imlac, "is like that of the fabulous inhabitants of the new-created earth, who when the first night came upon them, supposed that day would never return. When the clouds of sorrow gather over us, we see nothing beyond them, nor can imagine how they will be dispelled; yet a new day succeeded to the night, and sorrow is never long without a dawn of ease. But they who restrain themselves from receiving comfort, do as the savages would have done, had they put out their eyes when it was dark. Our minds, like our bodies, are in continual flux; something is hourly lost, and something acquired. To lose much at once is inconvenient to either, but while the vital powers remain uninjured, nature will find the means of reparation. Distance has the same effect on the mind as on the eye, and while we glide along the stream of time, whatever we leave behind us is always lessening, and that which we approach increasing, in magnitude. Do not suffer life to stagnate; it will grow muddy for want of motion; commit yourself again to the current of the world; Pekuah will vanish by degrees: you will meet in your way some other favorite, or learn to diffuse yourself in general conversation."

"At least," said the prince, "do not despair before all remedies have been tried; the inquiry after the unfortunate lady is still continued, and shall be carried on with yet greater diligence, on condition that you will promise to wait a year for the event, without any unalterable resolution."

Nekayah thought this a reasonable demand, and made the promise to her brother, who had been advised by Imlac to require it. Imlac had, indeed, no great hope of regaining Pekuah; but he supposed, that if he could secure the interval of a year, the princess would be then in no danger of a cloister.

CHAPTER XXXVI

PEKUAH IS STILL REMEMBERED. THE PROGRESS OF SORROW

NEKAYAH, seeing that nothing was omitted for the recovery of her favorite, and having, by her promise, set her intention of retirement at a distance, began imperceptibly to return to common cares and common pleasures. She rejoiced without her own consent at the suspension of her sorrows, and sometimes caught herself with indignation in the act of turning away her mind from the remembrance of her, whom yet she resolved never to forget.

She then appointed a certain hour of the day for meditation on the merits and fondness of Pekuah, and for some weeks retired constantly at the time fixed, and returned with her eyes swollen and her countenance clouded. By degrees she grew less scrupulous, and suffered any important and pressing avocation to delay the tribute of daily tears. She then yielded to less occasions; sometimes forgot what she was indeed afraid to remember, and at last wholly released herself from the duty of periodical affliction.

Her real love of Pekuah was yet not diminished. A thousand occurrences brought her back to memory, and a thousand wants, which nothing but the confidence of friendship can supply, made her frequently regretted. She, therefore, solicited Imlac never to desist from inquiry, and to leave no art of intelligence untried, that at least she might have the comfort of knowing that she did not suffer by negligence or sluggishness. "Yet what," said she, "is to be expected from our pursuit of happiness, when we find the state of life to be such, that happiness itself is the cause of misery? Why should we endeavor to attain that of which the possession cannot be secured? I shall henceforward fear to yield my heart to excellence however bright, or to fondness however tender, lest I should lose again what I have lost in Pekuah."

CHAPTER XXXVII

THE PRINCESS HEARS NEWS OF PEKUAH

IN seven months, one of the messengers, who had been sent away upon the day when the promise was drawn from the princess, returned, after many unsuccessful rambles, from the borders of Nubia, with an account that Pekuah was in the hands of an Arab chief, who possessed a castle or fortress on the extremity of Egypt. The Arab, whose revenue was plunder, was willing to restore her, with her two attendants, for two hundred ounces of gold.

The price was no subject of debate. The princess was in ecstasies, when she heard that her favorite was alive, and might so cheaply be ransomed. She could not think of delaying for a moment Pekuah's happiness or her own, but entreated her brother to send back the messenger with the sum required. Imlac being consulted, was not very confident of the veracity of the relater, and was still more doubtful of the Arab's faith, who might, if he were too liberally trusted, detain at once the money and the captives. He thought it dangerous to put themselves in the power of the Arab, by going into his district, and could not expect that the rover would so much expose himself as to come into the lower country, where he might be seized by the forces of the Bassa.

It is difficult to negotiate where neither will trust. But Imlac, after some deliberation, directed the messenger to propose, that Pekuah should be conducted by ten horsemen to the monastery of St. Antony, which is situated in the deserts of Upper Egypt, where she should be met by the same number, and her ransom should be paid.

That no time might be lost, as they expected that the proposal would not be refused, they immediately began their journey to the monastery; and when they arrived, Imlac went forward with the former messenger to the Arab's fortress. Rasselas was desirous to go with them, but neither his sister nor Imlac would consent. The Arab, according to the custom of his nation, observed the laws of hospitality with great exactness to those who put themselves into his power, and, in a few days, brought Pekuah with her maids, by easy journeys, to the place appointed, where, receiving the stipulated price, he restored her with great respect to liberty and her friends, and undertook to conduct them back towards Cairo, beyond all danger of robbery or violence.

The princess and her favorite embraced each other with transport too violent to be expressed, and went out together to pour the tears of tenderness in secret, and exchange professions of kindness and gratitude. After a few hours they returned into the refectory of the convent, where, in the presence of the prior and his brethren, the prince required of Pekuah the history of her adventures.

CHAPTER XXXVIII

THE ADVENTURES OF THE LADY PEKUAH

"At what time and in what manner I was forced away," said Pekuah, "your servants have told you. The suddenness of the event struck me with surprise, and I was at first rather stupefied, than agitated with any passion of either fear or sorrow. My confusion was increased by the speed and tumult of our flight, while we were followed by the Turks, who, as it seemed, soon despaired to overtake us, or were afraid of those whom they made a show of menacing.

"When the Arabs saw themselves out of danger, they slackened their course; and as I was less harassed by external violence, I began to feel more uneasiness in my mind. After some time, we stopped near a spring shaded with trees in a pleasant meadow, where we were set upon the ground, and offered such refreshments as our masters were partaking. I was suffered to sit with my maids apart from the rest, and none attempted to comfort or insult us. Here I first began to feel the full weight of my misery. The girls sat weeping in silence, and from time to time looked on me for succor. I knew not to what condition we were doomed, nor could conjecture where would be the place of our captivity, or whence to draw any hope of deliverance. I was in the hands of robbers and savages, and had no reason to suppose that their pity was more than their justice, or that they would forbear the gratification of any ardor of desire, or caprice of cruelty. I, however, kissed my maids, and endeavored to pacify them by remarking that we were yet treated with decency, and that, since we were now carried beyond pursuit, there was no danger of violence to our lives.

"When we were to be set again on horseback, my maids clung round me, and refused to be parted; but I commanded them not to irritate those who had us in their power. We traveled the remaining part of the day through an unfrequented and pathless country, and came by moonlight to the side of a hill, where the rest of the troop were stationed. Their tents were pitched and their fires kindled, and our chief was welcomed as a man much beloved by his dependants.

"We were received into a large tent, where we found women who had attended their husbands in the expedition. They set before us the supper which they had provided, and I ate it rather to encourage my maids, than to comply with any appetite of my own. When the meat was taken away, they spread the carpets for repose. I was weary, and hoped to find in sleep that remission of distress which nature seldom denies. Ordering myself therefore to be undressed, I observed that the women looked very earnestly upon me, not expecting, I suppose, to see me so submissively attended. When my upper vest was taken off, they were apparently struck with the splendor of my clothes, and one of them timorously laid her hand upon the embroidery. She then went out, and in a short time came back with another woman, who seemed to be of higher rank and greater authority. She did, at her entrance, the usual act of reverence, and taking me by the hand, placed me in a smaller tent, spread with finer carpets, where I spent the night quietly with my maids.

"In the morning, as I was sitting on the grass, the chief of the troop came towards me. I rose up to receive him, and he bowed with great respect. 'Illustrious lady,' said he, 'my fortune is better than I had presumed to hope: I am told by my women that I have a princess in my camp.' 'Sir,' answered I, 'your women have deceived themselves and you; I am not a princess, but an unhappy stranger, who intended soon to have left this country, in which I am now to be imprisoned for ever.' 'Whoever or whencesoever you are,' returned the Arab, 'your dress, and that of your servants, show your rank to be high and your wealth to be great. Why should you, who can so easily procure your ransom, think yourself in danger of perpetual captivity? The purpose of my incursions is to increase my riches, or, more properly, to gather tribute. The sons of Ishmael are the natural and hereditary lords of this part of the continent, which is usurped by late invaders and low-born tyrants, from whom we are compelled to take by the sword what is denied to justice. The violence of war admits no distinction; the lance that is lifted at guilt and power, will sometimes fall on innocence and gentleness.

"How little," said I, "did I expect that yesterday it should have fallen upon me!"

"Misfortunes," answered the Arab, 'should always be expected. If the eye of hostility could learn reverence or pity, excellence like yours had been exempt from injury. But the angels of affliction spread their toils alike for the virtuous and the wicked, for the mighty and the mean. Do not be disconsolate: I am not one of the lawless and cruel rovers of the desert; I know the rules of civil life; I will fix your ransom, give a passport to your messenger, and perform my stipulation with nice punctuality.'

"You will easily believe that I was pleased with his courtesy: and finding that his predominant passion was desire of money, I began now to think my danger less, for I knew that no sum would be thought too great for the release of Pekuah. I told him that he should have no reason to charge me with ingratitude, if I was used with kindness, and that any ransom which could be expected for a maid of common rank would be paid; but that he must not persist to rate me as a princess. He said he would consider what he should demand, and then smiling, bowed and retired.

"Soon after, the women came about me, each contending to be more officious than the other, and my maids themselves were served with reverence. We traveled onward by short journeys. On the fourth day, the chief told me that my ransom must be two hundred ounces of gold; which I not only promised him, but told him, that I would add fifty more, if I and my maids were honorably treated.

"I never knew the power of gold before.

From that time I was the leader of the troop. The march of every day was longer or shorter as I commanded, and the tents were pitched where I chose to rest. We now had camels and other conveniences for travel; my own women were always at my side; and I amused myself with observing the manners of the vagrant nations, and with viewing remains of ancient edifices, with which these deserted countries appear to have been, in some distant age, lavishly embellished.

"The chief of the band was a man far from illiterate: he was able to travel by the stars or the compass, and had marked, in his erratic expeditions, such places as are most worthy the notice of a passenger. He observed to me, that buildings are always best preserved in places little frequented and difficult of access: for, when once a country declines from its primitive splendor, the more inhabitants are left, the quicker ruin will be made. Walls supply stones more easily than quarries, and palaces and temples will be demolished, to make stables of granite and cottages of porphyry.

CHAPTER XXXIX

THE ADVENTURES OF PEKUAH CONTINUED

"We wandered about in this manner for some weeks, whether, as our chief pretended, for my gratification, or, as I rather suspected, for some convenience of his own. I endeavored to appear contented, where sullenness and resentment would have been of no use, and that endeavor conducted much to the calmness of my mind; but my heart was always with Nekayah, and the troubles of the night much overbalanced the amusements of the day. My women, who threw all their cares upon their mistress, set their minds at ease from the time when they saw me treated with respect, and gave themselves up to the incidental alleviations of our fatigue without solicitude or sorrow. I was pleased with their pleasure, and animated with their confidence. My condition had lost much of its terror, since I found that the Arab ranged the country merely to get riches. Avarice is an uniform and tractable vice: other intellectual distempers are different in different constitutions of mind; that which soothes the pride of one will offend the pride of another; but to the favor of the covetous there is a ready way; bring money, and nothing is denied.

"At last we came to the dwelling of our chief, a strong and spacious house built with stone in an island of the Nile, which lies, as I was told, under the tropic. 'Lady,' said the Arab, 'you shall rest after your journey a few weeks in this place, where you are to consider yourself as sovereign. My occupation is war: I have therefore chosen this obscure residence, from which I can issue unexpected, and to which I can retire unpursued. You may now repose in security; here are few pleasures, but here is no danger.' He then led me into the inner apartments, and seating me on the richest couch, bowed to the ground. His women, who considered me as a rival, looked on me with malignity; but being soon informed that I was a great lady detained only for my ransom, they began to vie with each other in obsequiousness and reverence.

"Being again comforted with new assurances of speedy liberty, I was for some days diverted from impatience by the novelty of the place. The turrets overlooked the country to a great distance, and afforded a view of many windings of the stream. In the day I wandered from one place to another, as the course of the sun varied the splendor of the prospect, and saw many things which I had never seen before. The crocodiles and river-horses are common in this unpeopled region, and I often looked upon them with terror, though I knew that they could not hurt me. For some time I expected to see mermaids and tritons, which, as Imlac has told me, the European travelers have stationed in the Nile; but no such beings ever appeared, and the Arab, when I inquired after them, laughed at my credulity.

"At night the Arab always attended me to a tower set apart for celestial observations, where he endeavored to teach me the names and courses of the stars. I had no great inclination to this study, but an appearance of attention was necessary to please my instructor, who valued himself for his skill; and, in a little while, I found some employment requisite to beguile the tediousness of time, which was to be passed always amidst the same objects. I was weary of looking in the morning on things from which I had turned away weary in the evening; I therefore was at last willing to observe the stars rather than do nothing, but could not always compose my thoughts, and was very often thinking on Nekayah, when others imagined me contemplating the sky. Soon after, the Arab went upon another expedition, and then my only pleasure was to talk with my maids about the accident by which we were carried away, and the happiness that we should all enjoy at the end of our captivity."

"There were women in your Arab's fortress," said the princess: "why did you not make them your companions, enjoy their conversation, and partake their diversions? In a place where they found business or amusement, why should you alone sit corroded with idle melancholy? or why could not you bear for a few months that condition to which they were condemned for life?"

"The diversions of the women," answered Pekuah, "were only childish play, by which the mind accustomed to stronger operations could not be kept busy. I could do all which they delighted in doing, by powers merely sensitive, while my intellectual faculties were flown to Cairo. They ran from room to room, as a bird hops from wire to wire in his cage. They danced for the sake of motion, as lambs frisk in a meadow. One sometimes pretended to be hurt, that the rest might be alarmed; or hid herself, that another might seek her. Part of their time passed in watching the progress of light bodies that floated on the river, and part in marking the various forms into which clouds broke in the sky.

"Their business was only needlework, in which I and my maids sometimes helped them; but you know that the mind will easily straggle from the fingers, nor will you suspect that captivity and absence from Nekayah could receive solace from silken flowers.

"Nor was much satisfaction to be hoped from their conversation: for of what could they be expected to talk? They had seen nothing, for they had lived from early youth in that narrow spot; of what they had not seen they could have no knowledge, for they could not read. They had no ideas but of the few things that were within their view, and had hardly names for any thing but their clothes and their food. As I bore a superior character, I was often called to terminate their quarrels, which I decided as equitably as I could. If it could have amused me to hear the complaints of each against the rest, I might have been often detained by long stories; but the motives of their animosity were so small, that I could not listen without intercepting the tale."

"How," said Rasselas, "can the Arab, whom you represented as a man of more than common accomplishments, take any pleasure in his seraglio, when it is filled only with women like these? Are they exquisitely beautiful?"

"They do not," said Pekuah, "want that unaffected and ignoble beauty which may subsist without sprightliness or sublimity, without energy of thought or dignity of virtue. But to a man like the Arab such beauty was only a flower casually plucked and carelessly thrown away. Whatever pleasures he might find among them, they were not those of friendship or society. When they were playing about him, he looked on them with inattentive superiority; when they vied for his regard, he sometimes turned away disgusted. As they had no knowledge, their talk could take nothing from the tediousness of life; as they had no choice, their fondness, or appearance of fondness, excited in him neither pride nor gratitude; he was not exalted in his own esteem by the smiles of a woman who saw no other man, nor was much obliged by that regard, of which he could never know the sincerity, and which he might often perceive to be exerted, not so much to delight him as to pain a rival. That which he gave and they received as love, was only a careless distribution of superfluous time, such love as man can bestow upon that which he despises, such as has neither hope, nor fear, neither joy nor sorrow."

"You have reason, lady, to think yourself happy," said Imlac, "that you have been thus easily dismissed. How could a mind, hungry for knowledge, be willing, in an intellectual famine, to lose such a banquet as Pekuah's conversation?"

"I am inclined to believe," answered Pekuah, "that he was for some time in suspense; for, notwithstanding his promise, whenever I proposed to despatch a messenger to Cairo, he found some excuse for delay. While I was detained in his house, he made many incursions into the neighboring countries; and, perhaps, he would have refused to discharge me, had his plunder been equal to his wishes. He returned always courteous, related his adventures, delighted to hear my observations, and endeavored to advance my acquaintance with the stars. When I importuned him to send away my letters, he soothed me with professions of honor and sincerity; and, when I could be no longer decently denied, put his troop again in motion, and left me to govern in his absence. I was much afflicted by this studied procrastination, and was sometimes afraid that I should be forgotten; that you would leave Cairo, and I must end my days in an island of the Nile.

"I grew at last hopeless and dejected, and cared so little to entertain him, that he for a while more frequently talked with my maids. That he should fall in love with them or with me, might have been equally fatal, and I was not much pleased with the growing friendship. My anxiety was not long; for, as I recovered some degree of cheerfulness, he returned to me, and I could not forbear to despise my former uneasiness.

"He still delayed to send for my ransom, and would, perhaps, never have determined, had not your agent found his way to him. The gold, which he would not fetch, he could not reject when it was offered. He hastened to prepare for our journey hither, like a man delivered from the pain of an intestine conflict. I took leave of my companions in the house, who dismissed me with cold indifference."

Nekayah having heard her favorite's relation, rose and embraced her, and Rasselas gave her an hundred ounces of gold, which she presented to the Arab for the fifty that were promised.

CHAPTER XL

THE HISTORY OF A MAN OF LEARNING

THEY returned to Cairo, and were so well pleased at finding themselves together, that none of them went much abroad. The prince began to love learning, and one day declared to Imlac, that he intended to devote himself to science, and pass the rest of his days in literary solitude.

"Before you make your final choice," answered Imlac, "you ought to examine its hazards, and converse with some of those who are grown old in the company of themselves. I have just left the observatory of one of the most learned astronomers in the world, who has spent forty years in unwearied attention to the motions and appearances of the celestial bodies, and has drawn out his soul in endless calculations. He admits a few friends once a month, to hear his deductions and enjoy his discoveries. I was introduced as a man of knowledge worthy of his notice. Men of various ideas and fluent conversation, are commonly welcome to those whose thoughts have been long fixed upon a single point, and who find the images of other things stealing away. I delighted him with my remarks; he smiled at the narrative of my travels, and was glad to forget the constellations, and descend for a moment into the lower world.

"On the next day of vacation I renewed my visit, and was so fortunate as to please him again. He relaxed from that time the severity of his rule, and permitted me to enter at my own choice. I found him always busy, and always glad to be relieved. As each knew much which the other was desirous of learning, we exchanged our notions with great delight. I perceived that I had every day more of his confidence, and always found new cause of admiration in the profundity of his mind. His comprehension is vast, his memory capacious and retentive, his discourse is methodical, and his expression clear.

"His integrity and benevolence are equal to his learning. His deepest researches and most favorite studies are willingly interrupted for any opportunity of doing good by his counsel or his riches. To his closest retreat, at his most busy moments, all are admitted that want his assistance: 'For though I exclude idleness and pleasure, I will never,' says he, 'bar my doors against charity. To man is permitted the contemplation of the skies, but the practice of virtue is commanded.'"

"Surely," said the princess, "this man is happy."

"I visited him," said Imlac, "with more and more frequency, and was every time more enamored of his conversation; he was sublime without haughtiness, courteous without formality, and communicative without ostentation. I was at first, great prince, of your opinion, thought him the happiest of mankind, and often congratulated him on the blessing that he enjoyed. He seemed to hear nothing with indifference but the praises of his condition, to which he always returned a general answer, and diverted the conversation to some other topic.

"Amidst this willingness to be pleased and labor to please, I had quickly reason to imagine that some painful sentiment pressed upon his mind. He often looked up earnestly towards the sun, and let his voice fall in the midst of his discourse. He would sometimes, when we were alone, gaze upon me in silence, with the air of a man who longed to speak what he was yet resolved to suppress. He would often send for me with vehement injunctions of haste, though, when I came to him, he had nothing extraordinary to say; and sometimes, when I was leaving him, would call me back, pause a few moments, and then dismiss me.

CHAPTER XLI

THE ASTRONOMER DISCOVERS THE CAUSE OF HIS UNEASINESS

"At last the time came when the secret burst his reserve. We were sitting together last night in the turret of his house, watching the emersion of a satellite of Jupiter. A sudden tempest clouded the sky, and disappointed our observation. We sat awhile silent in the dark, and then he addressed himself to me in these words: 'Imlac, I have long considered thy friendship as the greatest blessing of my life. Integrity without knowledge is weak and useless, and knowledge without integrity is dangerous and dreadful. I have found in thee all the qualities requisite for trust—benevolence, experience, and fortitude. I have long discharged an office which I must soon quit at the call of nature, and shall rejoice in the hour of imbecility and pain to devolve it upon thee.'

"I thought myself honored by this testimony, and protested, that whatever could conduce to his happiness would add likewise to mine.

"'Hear, Imlac, what thou wilt not without difficulty credit. I have possessed for five years the regulation of the weather, and the distribution of the seasons; the sun has listened to my dictates, and passed from tropic to tropic by my direction; the clouds, at my call, have poured their waters, and the Nile has overflowed at my command; I have restrained the rage of the dog-star, and mitigated the fervors of the crab. The winds alone, of all the elemental powers, have hitherto refused my authority, and multitudes have perished by equinoctial tempests, which I found myself unable to prohibit or restrain. I have administered this great office with exact justice, and made to the different nations of the earth an impartial dividend of rain and sunshine. What must have been the misery of half the globe, if I had limited the clouds to particular regions, or confined the sun to either side of the equator?"

CHAPTER XLII

THE OPINION OF THE ASTRONOMER IS EXPLAINED AND JUSTIFIED

"I SUPPOSE he discovered in me, through the obscurity of the room, some tokens of amazement and doubt, for, after a short pause, he proceeded thus:

"'Not to be easily credited will neither surprise nor offend me; for I am, probably, the first of human beings to whom this trust has been imparted. Nor do I know whether to deem this distinction a reward or punishment; since I have possessed it, I have been far less happy than before, and nothing but the consciousness of good intention could have enabled me to support the weariness of unremitted vigilance.'

"'How long, sir,' said I, 'has this great office been in your hands?"

"'About ten years ago,' said he, 'my daily observations of the changes of the sky led me to consider, whether, if I had the power of the seasons, I could confer greater plenty upon the inhabitants of the earth. This contemplation fastened on my mind, and I sat days and nights in imaginary dominion, pouring upon this country and that the showers of fertility, and seconding every fall of rain with a due proportion of sunshine. I had yet only the will to do good, and did not imagine that I should ever have the power.

"'One day, as I was looking on the fields

withering with heat, I felt in my mind a sudden wish that I could send rain on the southern mountains, and raise the Nile to an inundation. In the hurry of my imagination I commanded rain to fall; and by comparing the time of my command with that of the inundation, I found that the clouds had listened to my lips.'

"'Might not some other cause,' said I, 'produce this concurrence? the Nile does not always rise on the same day.'

"'Do not believe,' said he with impatience, 'that such objections could escape me: I reasoned long against my own conviction, and labored against truth with the utmost obstinacy. I sometimes suspected myself of madness, and should not have dared to impart this secret but to a man like you, capable of distinguishing the wonderful from the impossible, and the incredible from the false.'

"'Why, sir,' said I, 'do you call that incredible, which you know, or think you know, to be true?'

"'Because,' said he, 'I cannot prove it by any external evidence; and I know too well the laws of demonstration to think that my conviction ought to influence another, who cannot like me be conscious of its force. I therefore shall not attempt to gain credit by disputation. It is sufficient that I feel this power, that I have long possessed, and every day exerted it. But the life of man is short, the infirmities of age increase upon me, and the time will soon come, when the regulator of the year must mingle with the dust. The care of appointing a successor has long disturbed me; the night and the day have been spent in comparisons of all the characters which have come to my knowledge, and I have yet found none so worthy as thyself.'

CHAPTER XLIII

THE ASTRONOMER LEAVES IMLAC HIS DIRECTIONS

"'HEAR, therefore, what I shall impart, with attention such as the welfare of a world requires. If the task of a king be considered as difficult, who has the care only of a few millions, to whom he cannot do much good or harm, what must be the anxiety of him on whom depends the action of the elements, and the great gifts of light and heat! Hear me therefore with attention.

"'I have diligently considered the position of the earth and sun, and formed innumerable schemes in which I changed their situation. I have sometimes turned aside the axis of the earth, and sometimes varied the ecliptic of the sun; but I have found it impossible to make a disposition by which the world may be advantaged; what one region gains, another loses, by an imaginable alteration, even without considering the distant parts of the solar system with which we are unacquainted. Do not, therefore, in thy administration of the year, indulge thy pride by innovation; do not please thyself with thinking that thou canst make thyself renowned to all future ages by disordering the seasons. The memory of mischief is no desirable fame. Much less will it become thee to let kindness or interest prevail. Never rob other countries of rain to pour it on thine own. For us the Nile is sufficient.'

"I promised, that when I possessed the power, I would use it with inflexible integrity, and he dismissed me, pressing my hand. 'My heart,' said he, 'will be now at rest, and my benevolence will no more destroy my quiet; I have found a man of wisdom and virtue, to whom I can cheerfully bequeath the inheritance of the sun.'

The prince heard this narration with very serious regard; but the princess smiled, and Pekuah convulsed herself with laughter. "Ladies," said Imlac, "to mock the heaviest of human afflictions is neither charitable nor wise. Few can attain this man's knowledge, and few practise his virtues; but all may suffer his calamity. Of the uncertainties of our present state, the most dreadful and alarming is the uncertain continuance of reason."

The princess was recollected, and the favorite was abashed. Rasselas, more deeply affected, inquired of Imlac, whether he thought such maladies of the mind frequent, and how they were contracted.

CHAPTER XLIV

THE DANGEROUS PREVALENCE OF IMAGINATION

"'DISORDERS of intellect," answered Imlac, "happen much more often than superficial observers will easily believe. Perhaps, if we speak with rigorous exactness, no human mind is in its right state. There is no man whose imagination does not sometimes predominate over his reason, who can regulate his attention wholly by his will, and whose ideas will come and go at his command. No man will be found in whose mind airy notions do not sometimes tyrannize, and force him to hope or fear beyond the limits of sober probability. All power of fancy over reason is a degree of insanity; but while this power is such as we can control and repress, it is not visible to others, nor considered as any depravation of the mental faculties: it is not pronounced madness, but when it becomes ungovernable and apparently influences speech or action.

"To indulge the power of fiction, and send imagination out upon the wing, is often the sport of those who delight too much in silent speculation. When we are alone we are not always busy; the labor of excogitation is too violent to last long; the ardor of inquiry will sometimes give way to idleness or satiety. He who has nothing external that can divert him, must find pleasure in his own thoughts, and must conceive himself what he is not; for who is pleased with what he is? He then expatiates in boundless futurity, and culls from all imaginable conditions that which for the present moment he should most desire, amuses his desires with impossible enjoyments, and confers upon his pride unattainable dominion. The mind dances from scene to scene, unites all pleasures in all combinations, and riots in delights, which nature and fortune, with all their bounty, cannot bestow.

"In time some particular train of ideas fixes the attention; all other intellectual gratifications are rejected; the mind, in weariness or leisure, recurs constantly to the favorite conception, and feasts on the luscious falsehood whenever she is offended with the bitterness of truth. By degrees the reign of fancy is confirmed; she grows first imperious, and in time despotic. Then fictions begin to operate as realities, false opinions fasten upon the mind, and life passes in dreams of rapture or of anguish.

"This, sir, is one of the dangers of solitude, which the hermit has confessed not always to promote goodness, and the astronomer's misery has proved to be not always propitious to wisdom."

"I will no more," said the favorite, "imagine myself the queen of Abyssinia. I have often spent the hours which the princess gave to my own disposal, in adjusting ceremonies and regulating the court; I have repressed the pride of the powerful and granted the petitions of the poor; I have built new palaces in more happy situations, planted groves upon the tops of mountains, and have exulted in the beneficence of royalty, till, when the princess entered, I had almost forgotten to bow down before her."

"And I," said the princess, "will not allow myself any more to play the shepherdess in my waking dreams. I have often soothed my thoughts with the quiet and innocence of pastoral employments, till I have in my chamber heard the winds whistle, and the sheep bleat; sometimes freed the lamb entangled in the thicket, and sometimes with my crook encountered the wolf. I have a dress like that of the village maids, which I put on to help my imagination, and a pipe on which I play softly, and suppose myself followed by my flocks."

"I will confess," said the prince, "an indulgence of fantastic delight more dangerous than yours. I have frequently endeavored to image the possibility of a perfect government, by which all wrong should be restrained, all vice reformed, and all the subjects preserved in tranquillity and innocence. This thought produced innumerable schemes of reformation, and dictated many useful regulations and salutary edicts. This has been the sport and sometimes the labor, of my solitude; and I start when I think with how little anguish I once supposed the death of my father and my brothers."

"Such," said Imlac, "are the effects of visionary schemes. When we first form them, we know them to be absurd, but familiarize them by degrees, and in time lose sight of their folly."

CHAPTER XLV

THEY DISCOURSE WITH AN OLD MAN

THE evening was now far past, and they rose to return home. As they walked along the bank of the Nile, delighted with the beams of the moon quivering on the water, they saw at a small distance an old man, whom the prince had often heard in the assembly of the sages. "Yonder," said he, "is one whose years have calmed his passions, but not clouded his reason; let us close the disquisitions of the night, by inquiring what are his sentiments of his own state, that we may know whether youth alone is to struggle with vexation, and whether any better hope remains for the latter part of life."

Here the sage approached and saluted them. They invited him to join their walk, and prattled awhile, as acquaintance that had unexpectedly met one another. The old man was cheerful and talkative, and the way seemed short in his company. He was pleased to find himself not disregarded, accompanied them to their house, and, at the prince's request, entered with them. They placed him in the seat of honor, and set wine and conserves before him.

"Sir," said the princess, "an evening walk must give to a man of learning, like you, pleasures which ignorance and youth can hardly conceive. You know the qualities and the causes of all that you behold, the laws by which the river flows, the periods in which the planets perform their revolutions. Every thing must supply you with contemplation, and renew the consciousness of your own dignity."

"Lady," answered he, "let the gay and the vigorous expect pleasure in their excursions; it is enough that age can obtain ease. To me the world has lost its novelty: I look round, and see what I remember to have seen in happier days. I rest against a tree, and consider, that in the same shade I once disputed upon the annual overflow of the Nile with a friend who is now silent in the grave. I cast my eyes upwards, fix them on the changing moon, and think with pain on the vicissitudes of life. I have ceased to take much delight in physical truth; for what have I to do with those things which I am soon to leave!"

"You may at least recreate yourself," said Imlac, "with the recollection of an honorable and useful life, and enjoy the praise which all agree to give you."

"Praise," said the sage with a sigh, "is to an old man an empty sound. I have neither mother to be delighted with the reputation of her son, nor wife to partake the honors of her husband. I have outlived my friends and my rivals. Nothing is now of much importance; for I cannot extend my interest beyond myself. Youth is delighted with applause, because it is considered as the earnest of some future good, and because the prospect of life is far extended; but to me, who am now declining to decrepitude, there is little to be feared from the malevolence of men, and yet less to be hoped from their affection or esteem. Something they may yet take away, but they can give me nothing. Riches would now be useless, and high employment would be pain. My retrospect of life recalls to my view many opportunities of good neglected, much time squandered upon trifles, and more lost in idleness and vacancy. I leave many great designs unattempted, and many great attempts unfinished. My mind is burdened with no heavy crime, and therefore I compose myself to tranquillity; endeavor to abstract my thoughts from hopes and cares, which, though reason knows them to be vain, still try to keep their old possession of the heart; expect, with serene humility, that hour which nature cannot long delay; and hope to possess, in a better state, that happiness which here I could not find, and that virtue which here I have not attained."

He rose and went away, leaving his audience not much elated with the hope of long life. The prince consoled himself with remarking, that it was not reasonable to be disappointed by this account, for age had never been considered as the season of felicity, and if it was possible to be easy in decline and weakness, it was likely that the days of vigor and alacrity might be happy: that the noon of life might be bright, if the evening could be calm.

The princess suspected that age was querulous and malignant, and delighted to repress the expectations of those who had newly entered the world. She had seen the possessors of estates look with envy on their heirs, and known many who enjoyed pleasure no longer than they can confine it to themselves.

Pekuah conjectured that the man was older than he appeared, and was willing to impute his complaints to delirious dejection; or else supposed that he had been unfortunate, and was therefore discontented; "For nothing," said she, "is more common, than to call our own condition the condition of life."

Imlac, who had no desire to see them depressed, smiled at the comforts which they could so readily procure to themselves, and remembered, that at the same age he was equally confident of unmingled prosperity, and equally fertile of consolatory expedients. He forbore to force upon them unwelcome knowledge, which time itself would too soon impress. The princess and her lady retired; the madness of the astronomer hung upon their minds, and they desired Imlac to enter upon his office, and delay next morning the rising of the sun.

CHAPTER XLVI

THE PRINCESS AND PEKUAH VISIT THE ASTRONOMER

THE princess and Pekuah having talked in private of Imlac's astronomer, thought his character at once so amiable and so strange, that they could not be satisfied without a nearer knowledge; and Imlac was requested to find the means of bringing them together.

This was somewhat difficult: the philosopher had never received any visits from women, though he lived in a city that had in it many Europeans, who followed the manners of their own countries, and many from other parts of the world, that lived there with European liberty. The ladies would not be refused, and several schemes were proposed for the accomplishment of their design. It was proposed to introduce them as strangers in distress, to whom the sage was always accessible; but, after some deliberation, it appeared that by this artifice no acquaintance could be formed, for their conversation would be short, and they could not decently importune him often. "This," said Rasselas, "is true; but I have yet a stronger objection against the misrepresentation of your state. I have always considered it as treason against the great republic of human nature, to make any man's virtues the means of deceiving him, whether on great or little occasions. All imposture weakens confidence, and chills benevolence. When the sage finds that you are not what you seemed, he will feel the resentment natural to a man who, conscious of great abilities, discovers that he has been tricked by understandings meaner than his own, and, perhaps, the distrust which he can never afterwards wholly lay aside, may stop the voice of counsel and close the hand of charity; and where will you find the power of restoring his benefactions to mankind, or his peace to himself?"

To this no reply was attempted, and Imlac began to hope that their curiosity would subside; but, next day, Pekuah told him, she had now found an honest pretense for a visit to the astronomer, for she would solicit permission to continue under him the studies in which she had been initiated by the Arab, and the princess might go with her either as a fellow-student, or because a woman could not decently come alone. "I am afraid," said Imlac, "that he will be soon weary of your company; men advanced far in knowledge do not love to repeat the elements of their art, and I am not certain that even of the elements, as he will deliver them, connected with inferences and mingled with reflections, you are a very capable auditress."—"That," said Pekuah, "must be my care; I ask of you only to take me thither. My knowledge is, perhaps, more than you imagine it; and, by concurring always with his opinions, I shall make him think it greater than it is."

The astronomer, in pursuance of this resolution, was told that a foreign lady, traveling in search of knowledge, had heard of his reputation, and was desirous to become his scholar. The uncommonness of the proposal raised at once his surprise and curiosity; and when, after a short deliberation, he consented to admit her he could not stay without impatience till the next day.

The ladies dressed themselves magnificently, and were attended by Imlac to the astronomer, who was pleased to see himself approached with respect by persons of so splendid an appearance. In the exchange of the first civilities he was timorous and bashful; but when the talk became regular he re-collected his powers, and justified the character which Imlac had given. Inquiring of Pekuah what could have turned her inclination towards astronomy, he received from her a history of her adventure at the Pyramid, and of the time passed in the Arab's island. She told her tale with ease and elegance, and her conversation took possession of his heart. The discourse was then turned to astronomy: Pekuah displayed what she knew: he looked upon her as a prodigy of genius, and entreated her not to desist from a study which she had so happily begun.

They came again and again, and were every time more welcome than before. The sage endeavored to amuse them, that they might prolong their visits, for he found his thoughts grow brighter in their company; the clouds of solicitude vanished by degrees, as he forced himself to entertain them, and he grieved when he was left at their departure to his old employment of regulating the seasons.

The princess and her favorite had now watched his lips for several months, and could not catch a single word from which they could judge whether he continued, or not, in the opinion of his preternatural commission. They often contrived to bring him to an open declaration; but he easily eluded all their attacks, and, on which side soever they pressed him, escaped from them to some other topic.

As their familiarity increased, they invited him often to the house of Imlac, where they distinguished him by extraordinary respect. He began gradually to delight in sublunary pleasures. He came early, and departed late; labored to recommend himself by assiduity and compliance; excited their curiosity after new arts, that they might still want his assistance; and when they made any excursion of pleasure or inquiry, entreated to attend them.

By long experience of his integrity and wisdom, the prince and his sister were convinced that he might be trusted without danger; and lest he should draw any false hopes from the civilities which he received, discovered to him their condition, with the motives of their journey, and required his opinion on the choice of life.

"Of the various conditions which the world spreads before you, which you shall prefer," said the sage, "I am not able to instruct you. I can only tell that I have chosen wrong. I have passed my time in study without experience; in the attainment of sciences which can, for the most part, be but remotely useful to mankind. I have purchased knowledge at the expense of all the common comforts of life; I have missed the endearing elegance of female friendship, and the happy commerce of domestic tenderness. If I have obtained any prerogatives above other students, they have been accompanied with fear, disquiet, and scrupulosity; but even of these prerogatives, whatever they were, I have, since my thoughts have been diversified by more intercourse with the world, begun to question the reality. When I have been for a few days lost in pleasing dissipation, I am always tempted to think that my inquiries have ended in error, and that I have suffered much and suffered it in vain."

Imlac was delighted to find that the sage's understanding was breaking through its mists, and resolved to detain him from the planets till he should forget his task of ruling them, and reason should recover its original influence.

From this time the astronomer was received into familiar friendship, and partook of all their projects and pleasures; his respect kept him attentive, and the activity of Rasselas did not leave much time unengaged. Something was always to be done: the day was spent in making observations which furnished talk for the evening, and the evening was closed with a scheme for the morrow.

The sage confessed to Imlac, that since he had mingled in the gay tumults of life, and divided his hours by a succession of amusements, he found the conviction of his authority over the skies fade gradually from his mind, and began to trust less to an opinion which he never could prove to others, and which he now found subject to variation, from causes in which reason had no part. "If I am accidentally left alone for a few hours," said he, "my inveterate persuasion rushes upon my soul, and my thoughts are chained down by some irresistible violence; but they are soon disentangled by the prince's conversation, and instantaneously released at the entrance of Pekuah. I am like a man habitually afraid of specters, who is set at ease by a lamp, and wonders at the dread which harassed him in the dark; yet, if his lamp be extinguished, feels again the terrors which he knows that when it is light he shall feel no more. But I am sometimes afraid lest I indulge my quiet by criminal negligence, and voluntarily forget the great charge with which I am intrusted. If I favor myself in a known error, or am determined by my own ease in a doubtful question of this importance, how dreadful is my crime!"

"No disease of the imagination," answered Imlac, "is so difficult of cure as that which is complicated with the dread of guilt; fancy and conscience then act interchangeably upon us, and so often shift their places, that the illusions of one are not distinguished from the dictates of the other. If fancy presents images not moral or religious, the mind drives them away when they give it pain; but when melancholic notions take the form of duty, they lay hold on the faculties without opposition, because we are afraid to exclude or banish them. For this reason the superstitious are often melancholy, and the melancholy almost always superstitious.

"But do not let the suggestions of timidity overpower your better reason: the danger of neglect can be but as the probability of the obligation, which, when you consider it with freedom, you find very little, and that little growing every day less. Open your heart to the influence of the light which from time to time breaks in upon you; when scruples importune you, which you in your lucid moments know to be vain, do not stand to parley, but fly to business, or to Pekuah, and keep this thought always prevalent, that you are only one atom of the mass of humanity, and have neither such virtue nor vice, as that you should be singled out for supernatural favors or afflictions."

CHAPTER XLVII

THE PRINCE ENTERS, AND BRINGS A NEW TOPIC

"ALL this," said the astronomer, "I have often thought, but my reason has been so long subjugated by an uncontrollable and overwhelming idea, that it durst not confide in its own decisions. I now see how fatally I betrayed my quiet, by suffering chimeras to prey upon me in secret; but melancholy shrinks from communication, and I never found a man before to whom I could impart my troubles, though I had been certain of relief. I rejoice to find my own sentiments confirmed by yours, who are not easily deceived, and can have no motive or purpose to deceive. I hope that time and variety will dissipate the gloom that has so long surrounded me, and the latter part of my days will be spent in peace."

"Your learning and virtue," said Imlac, "may justly give you hopes."

Rasselas then entered with the princess and Pekuah, and inquired, whether they had contrived any new diversion for the next day. "Such," said Nekayah, "is the state of life, that none are happy but by the anticipation of change: the change itself is nothing; when we have made it, the next wish is to change again. The world is not yet exhausted; let me see something to-morrow which I never saw before."

"Variety," said Rasselas, "is so necessary to content, that even the happy valley disgusted me by the recurrence of its luxuries; yet I could not forbear to reproach myself with impatience, when I saw the monks of St. Anthony support, without complaint, a life, not of uniform delight, but uniform hardship."

"Those men," answered Imlac, "are less wretched in their silent convent, than the Abyssinian princes in their prison of pleasure. Whatever is done by the monks is incited by an adequate and reasonable motive. Their labor supplies them with necessities; it therefore cannot be omitted, and is certainly rewarded. Their devotion prepares them for another state, and reminds them of its approach while it fits them for it. Their time is regularly distributed: one duty succeeds another, so that they are not left open to the distraction of unguided choice, nor lost in the shades of listless inactivity. There is a certain task to be performed at an appropriated hour; and their toils are cheerful, because they consider them as acts of piety by which they are always advancing towards endless felicity."

"Do you think," said Nekayah, "that the monastic rule is a more holy and less imperfect state than any other? May not he equally hope for future happiness who converses openly with mankind, who succors the distressed by his charity, instructs the ignorant by his learning, and contributes by his industry to the general system of life; even though he should omit some of the mortifications which are practised in the cloister, and allow himself such harmless delights as his condition may place within his reach?"

"This," said Imlac, "is a question which has long divided the wise, and perplexed the good. I am afraid to decide on either part. He that lives well in the world is better than he that lives well in a monastery. But, perhaps, every one is not able to stem the temptations of public life; and if he cannot conquer, he may properly retreat. Some have little power to do good, and have likewise little strength to resist evil. Many are weary of their conflicts with adversity, and are willing to eject those passions which have long busied them in vain. And many are dismissed by age and diseases from the more laborious duties of society. In monasteries, the weak and timorous may be happily sheltered, the weary may repose, and the penitent may meditate. Those retreats of prayer and contemplation have something so congenial to the mind of man, that, perhaps, there is scarcely one that does not purpose to close his life in pious abstraction, with a few associates serious as himself."

"Such," said Pekuah, "has often been my wish, and I have heard the princess declare, that she would not willingly die in a crowd."

"The liberty of using harmless pleasures," proceeded Imlac, "will not be disputed; but it is still to be examined what pleasures are harmless. The evil of any pleasure that Nekayah can image, is not in the act itself, but in its consequences. Pleasure, in itself harmless, may become mischievous, by endearing to us a state which we know to be transient and probatory, and withdrawing our thoughts from that of which every hour brings us nearer to the beginning, and of which no length of time will bring us to the end. Mortification is not virtuous in itself, nor has any other use, but that it disengages us from the allurements of sense. In the state of future perfection, to which we all aspire, there will be pleasure without danger, and security without restraint."

The princess was silent; and Rasselas, turning to the astronomer, asked him, whether he could not delay her retreat, by showing her something which she had not seen before.

"Your curiosity," said the sage, "has been so general, and your pursuit of knowledge so vigorous, that novelties are not now very easily to be found; but what you can no longer procure from the living may be given by the dead. Among the wonders of this country are the Catacombs, or the ancient repositories in which the bodies of the earliest generations were lodged, and where, by the virtue of the gums which embalmed them, they yet remain without corruption."

"I know not," said Rasselas, "what pleasure the sight of the Catacombs can afford; but, since nothing else offers, I am resolved to view them, and shall place this with many other things, which I have done because I would do something."

They hired a guard of horsemen, and the next day visited the Catacombs. When they were about to descend into the sepulchral caves, "Pekuah," said the princess, "we are now again invading the habitations of the dead; I know that you will stay behind; let me find you safe when I return."—"No; I will not be left," answered Pekuah, "I will go down between you and the prince."

They then all descended, and roved with wonder through the labyrinth of subterraneous passages, where the bodies were laid in rows on either side.

CHAPTER XLVIII

IMLAC DISCOURSES ON THE NATURE OF THE SOUL

"WHAT reason," said the prince, "can be given, why the Egyptians should thus expensively preserve those carcasses, which some nations consume with fire, others lay to mingle with the earth, and all agree to remove from their sight as soon as decent rites can be performed?"

"The original of ancient customs," said Imlac, "is commonly unknown, for the practice often continues when the cause has ceased; and concerning superstitious ceremonies it is vain to conjecture, for what reason did not dictate reason cannot explain. I have long believed, that the practice of embalming arose only from tenderness to the remains of relations or friends, and to this opinion I am more inclined, because it seems impossible that this care should have been general: had all the dead been embalmed, their repositories must in time have been more spacious than the dwellings of the living. I suppose only the rich or honorable were secured from corruption, and the rest left to the course of nature.

"But it is commonly supposed, that the Egyptians believed the soul to live as long as the body continued undissolved, and therefore tried this method of eluding death."

"Could the wise Egyptians," said Nekayah, "think so grossly of the soul? If the soul could once survive its separation, what could it afterwards receive or suffer from the body?"

"The Egyptians would doubtless think erroneously," said the astronomer, "in the darkness of heathenism, and the first dawn of philosophy. The nature of the soul is still disputed, amidst all our opportunities of clearer knowledge: some yet say that it may be material, who, nevertheless, believe it to be immortal."

"Some," answered Imlac, "have indeed said that the soul is material, but I can scarcely believe that any man has thought it, who knew how to think; for all the conclusions of reason enforce the immateriality of mind, and all the notices of sense and investigations of science concur to prove the unconsciousness of matter."

"It was never supposed that cogitation is inherent in matter, or that every particle is a thinking being. Yet, if any part of matter be devoid of thought, what part can we suppose to think? Matter can differ from matter only in form, density, bulk, motion, and direction of motion: to which of these, however varied or combined, can consciousness be annexed? To be round or square, to be solid or fluid, to be great or little, to be moved slowly or swiftly one way or another, are modes of material existence, all equally alien from the nature of cogitation. If matter be once without thought, it can only be made to think by some new modification; but all the modifications which it can admit are equally unconnected with cogitative powers."

"But the materialists," said the astronomer, "urge that matter may have qualities with which we are unacquainted."

"He who will determine," returned Imlac, "against that which he knows, because there may be something which he knows not—he that can set hypothetical possibility against acknowledged certainty—is not to be admitted among reasonable beings. All that we know of matter is, that matter is inert, senseless, and lifeless; and if this conviction cannot be opposed, but by referring us to something that we know not, we have all the evidence that human intellect can admit. If that which is known may be overruled by that which is unknown, no being, not omniscient, can arrive at certainty."

"Yet let us not," said the astronomer, "too arrogantly limit the Creator's power."

"It is no limitation of omnipotence," replied the poet, "to suppose that one thing is not consistent with another, that the same proposition cannot be at once true and false, that the same number cannot be even and odd, that cogitation cannot be conferred on that which is created incapable of cogitation."

"I know not," said Nekayah, "any great use of this question. Does that immateriality, which, in my opinion, you have sufficiently proved, necessarily include eternal duration?"

"Of immateriality," said Imlac, "our ideas are negative, and therefore obscure. Immateriality seems to imply a natural power of perpetual duration as a consequence of exemption from all causes of decay; whatever perishes is destroyed by the solution of its texture, and separation of its parts; nor can we conceive how that which has no parts, and therefore admits no solution, can be naturally corrupted or impaired."

"I know not," said Rasselas, "how to conceive anything without extension; what is extended must have parts, and you allow that whatever has parts may be destroyed."

"Consider your own conceptions," replied Imlac, "and the difficulty will be less. You will find substance without extension. An ideal form is no less real than material bulk; yet an ideal form has no extension. It is no less certain, when you think on a pyramid, that your mind possesses the idea of a pyramid, than that the pyramid itself is standing. What space does the idea of a pyramid occupy more than the idea of a grain of corn? or how can either idea suffer laceration? As is the effect, such is the cause: as thought, such is the power that thinks; a power impassive and indiscrutable."<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup>"Incapable of being broken or destroyed by dissolution of parts" (Johnson's Dictionary).

"But the Being," said Nekayah, "whom I fear to name, the Being which made the soul, can destroy it."

"He surely can destroy it," answered Imlac, "since, however unperishable, it receives from a superior nature its power of duration. That it will not perish by any inherent cause of decay, or principle of corruption, may be shown by philosophy; but philosophy can tell no more. That it will not be annihilated by him that made it, we must humbly learn from higher authority." The whole assembly stood awhile silent and collected. "Let us return," said Rasselas, "from this scene of mortality. How gloomy would be these mansions of the dead to him who did not know that he should never die, that what now acts shall continue its agency, and what now thinks shall think on for ever. Those that lie here stretched before us, the wise and the powerful of ancient times, warn us to remember the shortness of our present state: they were, perhaps, snatched away while they were busy like us in the choice of life."

"To me," said the princess, "the choice of life is become less important; I hope hereafter to think only on the choice of eternity."

They then hastened out of the caverns, and under the protection of their guard returned to Cairo.

CHAPTER XLIX

THE CONCLUSION, IN WHICH NOTHING IS CONCLUDED

IT WAS now the time of the inundation of the Nile: a few days after their visit to the catacombs, the river began to rise.

They were confined to their house. The whole region being under water gave them no invitation to any excursions, and, being well supplied with materials for talk, they diverted themselves with comparisons of the different forms of life which they had observed, and with various schemes of happiness which each of them had formed.

Pekuah was never so much charmed with any place as the convent of St. Anthony, where the Arab restored her to the princess and wished only to fill it with pious maidens, and to be made prioress of the order; she was weary of expectation and disgust, and would gladly be fixed in some unvariable state.

The princess thought, that of all sublunary things knowledge was the best: she desired first to learn all sciences, and then proposed to found a college of learned women, in which she would preside, that, by conversing with the old, and educating the young, she might divide her time between the acquisition and communication of wisdom, and raise up for the next age models of prudence, and patterns of piety.

The prince desired a little kingdom, in which he might administer justice in his own person, and see all the parts of government with his own eyes; but he could never fix the limits of his dominion, and was always adding to the number of his subjects.

Imlac and the astronomer were contented to be driven along the stream of life, without directing their course to any particular port.

Of these wishes that they had formed they well knew that none could be obtained. They deliberated awhile what was to be done, and resolved, when the inundation should cease, to return to Abyssinia.

GLOSSARY

(Words are included which occur in the poems by Chaucer, in Piers Plowman, in the Popular Ballads, and in Book I of Spenser's Faerie Queene. Words unfamiliar only by reason of their spelling, whose meaning can be determined by pronunciation, are not included. Unfamiliar words not contained in any good modern dictionary, which occur in texts other than those mentioned above, are explained in foot-notes.)

- abashed, astonished.
 abet, to uphold.
 abrayde, awoke.
 abuse, injury.
 abused, deceived.
 aby, to pay for.
 ac, but.
 accident, outward appearance.
 accompted, accounted.
 accordaunt, according.
 ac(c)orded, to be fitting, agreed.
 achaa, buying.
 achatours, buyers.
 acorse, to curse.
 acquite, release.
 address, prepared, ready, directed.
 admired, wondered at.
 affermeth, establishes as true.
 affray, to alarm; panic, terror.
 affyle his tonge, polish his speech.
 afore, before.
 after, along.
 again, near, toward.
 agast, frightened.
 agayns, when you meet.
 agraste, favored.
 agrief, amiss.
 al, although.
 al, awl.
 albe, although.
 alderbest, best of all.
 ale-stake, a stake projecting horizontally from a house to indicate that ale could be bought there.
 algate, in every case, nevertheless.
 alkin, of every kind.
 alle and somme, one and all.
 aller cok, the cock of all of us, i.e., the host called all his guests early.
 almner, almoner, giver of alms.
 aloft, on high.
 als, also.
 al-so, as.
 amate, to dismay, to dishearten.
 amazed, bewildered.
 amblere, a pacer.
- amende, to improve.
 amis, hood, cape.
 amorwe, on the morrow.
 ances, anchorites.
 and avowe, a vow.
 andvile, anvil.
 an, if.
 anc, one.
 an elles, and otherwise.
 anlas, dagger.
 anon, instantly.
 antiphoner, anthem-book.
 ape, to put "in the mannes hood an ape," to make a fool of a man.
 apyked, sharpened, trimmed.
 aread, to point out, tell, make known.
 ared, made known.
 areeds, to declare, to command.
 areste(n), to stop.
 arette, to impute.
 aright, wholly.
 armory, armor.
 arn, are.
 arras, tapestry.
 arve, disembarkation of troops; alternate reading, armee, expedition.
 ascendent, the part of the zodiac rising above the horizon.
 aslake, to assuage.
 aspye, spy.
 assay, pp. assaid, to try, touch, assail; an attack, value.
 assent, conspiracy.
 assoilling, absolution.
 assynd, pointed out.
 assyse, courts of assize.
 asterte, to escape.
 astond, amazed.
 atte beste, in the best fashion.
 atte Bowe, at Bow.
 attempre, moderate.
 Augustyn, St. Augustine.
 Austin, St. Augustine.
 avale, to descend, fall.
 avaunt, boast.
 avautour, boaster.

aventure, chance.
 avision, vision.
 avizd, perceived, considered.
 avize, to perceive, to consider.
 avouchen, to prove.
 avys, opinion.
 avysed, well advised.
 avyseth, consider.
 awayte, to watch, to wait for.
 awkwarde, backhanded.

 ba, ball.
 bachelere, young aspirant to knighthood.
 bains, banns.
 baite, to feed.
 baith, both.
 bake mete, meat pie.
 bale, injury, evil influence, fire, sorrow.
 baleful, harmful.
 balys, misfortunes.
 bands, bonds.
 barne, man.
 basnites, light helmets.
 batailed, battlemented.
 bawdrik, belt worn over one shoulder.
 baxteres, bakers (feminine).
 bayes, bathes.
 bayes, laurels.
 beadmen, men of prayer.
 beame, shaft, gleam.
 beare up, to put the helm up.
 bed, command.
 bedyde, dyed.
 beer, bore.
 beggestere, beggar-woman.
 beguyld, foiled.
 behest, bidding, command.
 behight, entrusted; to call, name.
 behot, held out hope for, promised.
 beig, necklace, collar.
 bekke, nod.
 Belmarye, Benmarin, a district in the north of Africa.
 bemeneth, means.
 bemes, trumpets.
 ben, are.
 Beneit, St. Benedict.
 bent, a field covered with coarse grass, coarse grass.
 beseemed, became.
 beseemes, befits.
 beseene (well), good looking.
 bestedd, sorely pressed, situated.
 bet, beaten.
 bet, better.
 bet, go bet, go as quickly as possible.
 betake, deliver.
 bete, to relieve.
 betide, happen.
 bever, lower part of a helmet.

bewray, to disclose.
 beye, to buy.
 bicched bones, cursed dice.
 bidder, beggar.
 bidding his bedes, saying his prayers.
 biges, necklaces.
 bihove, behooves.
 biknowe(n), to acknowledge.
 bile, bill, beak.
 bilive, swiftly, immediately.
 birk, birch.
 bisette, set to work.
 bismotered, stained.
 bisy, anxious.
 bit, commands.
 (a)-blakeberied, a-blackberrying.
 blame, injury.
 blane, stopped.
 blankmanger, creamed fowl.
 blaze, to proclaim.
 blent, blinds, blinded, deceived.
 blered, made dim.
 bless, to preserve, to brandish.
 blubbred, tear-stained.
 bochere, butcher.
 Boece, Boethius.
 boist, box.
 bokeler, buckler.
 bonched, struck.
 boot, help, remedy.
 booted, availed.
 bootelesse, unavailing.
 boras, borax.
 bord bigonne, sat at the head of the table.
 borne, brook.
 borrow, ransom.
 bosses, projections.
 bote, remedy.
 boughtes, coils, folds.
 bound, to lead.
 bourde, jest.
 bouzing can, drinking cup.
 bowne, to make ready, ready.
 bowr, house, chamber, muscle.
 boÿs, bows.
 boystrous, rough.
 bracer, a guard for the arm in archery.
 brace, hillside.
 braid letter, a long letter or one written on a broad sheet.
 brand, sword.
 brast, burst.
 braw, fine.
 brawn, muscle.
 bray, to cry out.
 brayd, cried out.
 breech, breeches.
 breem, a fresh-water fish.
 bren, bulte it to the, sift it thoroughly.
 brend, burned.

- bretful, full to the brim.
 brevet, letter of indulgence.
 brewestere, female brewer.
 brode, plainly.
 brook, to enjoy.
 brotch, brooch.
 brouke, to enjoy.
 bryttlynge, cutting up.
 buckle, to make ready.
 buegle, bugle, wild ox.
 buffe, a blow.
 bugelet, bugle.
 bugge, to buy.
 bulle, papal rescript sealed with a lump of metal called a bull.
 bulte, to sift.
 burdoun, bass.
 buske, bush.
 buske, to make ready.
 buskin, high boot.
 but, unless.
 but-if, unless.
 buxom, yielding.
 buxumnesse, submission.
 by, along.
 by, to pay for.
 by and by, immediately.
 byckarte, attacked.
 byddys, abides.
 byde, to endure.
 byears, biers.
 bylive, immediately.
 bylle, sword.
 byre, cow-house.
 bystode, hard pressed.
 caityf, captive.
 call, a netted head-dress.
 can, did, knows.
 cancred, venomous, corrupt.
 canon, a book by Avicenna.
 canon bitt, smooth round bit.
 capouns, capons.
 capull-hyde, horse-hide.
 cardiacle, a pain in the heart.
 carefull, full of care.
 carf, carved.
 carke, sorrow.
 carle, fellow.
 carline, carline wife, old woman.
 caroyne, body.
 carpe, to talk, to joke.
 carpyng, discussion.
 carver, tree used for carving.
 cas, accident.
 cast, to intend, devised.
 casten, contrived, planned.
 casuelly, by chance.
 catapuce, spurge.
 catel, property.
 caytive, captive.
 ceint, girdle.
 celle, a subordinate convent.
 centaure, centaur.
 certes, certainly.
 ceruce, lead ointment.
 chaffare, merchandise.
 channerin, fretting.
 chapman, merchant.
 charge, memory.
 chauffed, heated, rubbed, irritated.
 chaunterie, an endowment to pay for masses.
 chew, jaw; to chew.
 cheare, countenance, behavior.
 chearen, to become cheered up.
 cheffe, chief.
 cheker, exchequer.
 chere, behavior, appearance.
 cherl, fellow.
 cheven, to achieve.
 chevisaunce, arrangement.
 chide, champ.
 chiknes, chickens.
 chivachye, military expedition.
 cink } five.
 cinq }
 clappeth, chatters.
 clause, in a, briefly.
 clepen, to call; pret., cleped.
 clergealy, in a clerkly manner.
 clergeon, little school-boy.
 clerk, scholar, student.
 clinke, sound.
 cloches, clutches.
 closs, enclosure.
 clout-es, cloth, pl. rags.
 clowe, to claw, clutch.
 cod, bag; sometimes applied to the stomach.
 coffer, trunk, box.
 cokewold, cuckold.
 cold, baneful.
 colerik, of a bilious temperament (term from Galenical medicine).
 colers, collars.
 col-fox, one with much black in its fur.
 colpons, shreds.
 combred, impeded.
 combrous, harassing, laborious.
 compeer, comrade.
 complecciouns, collections of humors.
 composicioun, arrangement.
 commune, the commons.
 comyn-bell, town-bell.
 condicioun, condition, rank.
 confiture, mixture.
 conne, to learn.
 conneth, they know how.
 conning, skill, knowledge.
 conseil, a secret.

- consistone, "ecclesiastical court of an archbishop, bishop, or commissary" (Skeat).
 consort, accord.
 constraint, distress.
 contek, strife.
 contenaunce, outward show.
 contrarie, foe.
 conynges, conies, rabbits.
 cop, top, tip.
 cope, priest's cloak.
 copis, copes, cloaks.
 coppe, cup.
 corages, hearts.
 cordial, heart stimulant.
 corny, strong in corn or malt. Applied to ale.
 corse, body.
 coste, coast.
 cote, small house.
 couch, to set, place.
 couched, placed.
 coude, knew.
 counterfesaunce, an imposture.
 counterfete, to imitate.
 countour, king's legal representative in a county.
 courtepy, short upper coat.
 couthe, known, knew; as he couthe, as best he knew how.
 coverchiefs, kerchiefs.
 covyne, trickery.
 cracchy }
 cracche } to scratch.
 craftes, handicrafts.
 crafty, skillful.
 crokke, earthenware pot.
 crope, crept.
 croslet, small cross.
 crounyng, the tonsure.
 crowned, capital.
 cruddy, curdled.
 crulle, curled.
 culled, killed.
 cure, a cure of souls; care.
 curious, careful.
 curst turne, spiteful feat.
 cut, lot.

 daint, choice.
 dainty, daintiness.
 dalliance, amorous talk or play, trifling, social entertainment.
 darrayne, to prepare for battle, to prove by wager or battle.
 daun, master, from Latin dominus.
 daunce, the olde, the old game.
 daunger, control, risk.
 daungerous, overbearing.
 daunte, to tame, subdue.
 daweninge, dawn.
 dayesye, dayis.
- deadly, deathlike.
 deadly made, mortal.
 deare, injury.
 debate, fight, quarrel.
 debonaire, gracious.
 dee, do.
 deel, bit.
 dees, dice.
 defame, dishonor.
 defaute, fault.
 defeasaunce, defeat.
 defenden, to forbid; pp. defended.
 defye, to digest.
 degree, rank.
 delices, pleasures.
 deliver, active.
 delivere, to set free.
 deliverly, quickly.
 delve, to dig.
 delveres, diggers.
 demen, to judge.
 departed, divided.
 depeint, painted.
 dere, injury.
 derth, scarcity.
 deryve, to draw away.
 despight, injury.
 despiteous, cruel, malicious.
 despitous, scornful.
 despyt, in despite of.
 devoyd, empty.
 devys, decision.
 devyse, to relate, tell, describe.
 deye, dairy-woman.
 deys, dais.
 dight, adorn, put on.
 dighted, wiped.
 digne, worthy, haughty.
 dint, stroke.
 disaventrous, unfortunate.
 dischevele, disheveled.
 dispence, expenditure; esy of dispence, a small spender.
 dispiteous, unpitying.
 disple, to subject to penance.
 disport, entertainment, pleasantry.
 dispredden, spread out.
 disputisoun, disputation.
 disseized, deprived.
 dissolute, enfeebled.
 distayned, stained.
 distraine, to afflict.
 dites, lifts.
 doen, to do.
 doen to, to betake, with reflexive.
 dois, does.
 dokked, cut short.
 domes, judgments.
 doome, decree.
 doon us honge, cause us to be hanged.

dormant, table-, a side-table kept permanently filled with food.

doted, stupid.

doubtfull, fearful.

dowve, dove.

draweth cut, draw lots.

dre, endured.

drecched, troubled.

dred, dearest, loved yet feared.

drede, doubt.

dredeth, fear.

dree, can do.

dreed, object of reverence.

drenched, drowned.

drere, sadness.

dreriment, gloom, sorrow.

drery, bloody, ghastly.

dresse, set in order.

drest, prepared, disposed.

dreynt, drowned.

drie, to feel, endure.

drift, impetus, plot.

dronkelewe, drunken.

droome, a drum.

dryven forth, to pass.

dugty, doughty.

dule, grief.

dye, hazard.

dyke, make ditches.

dykers, ditchers.

dynte, stroke.

earne, to yearn.

earst, formerly.

edifyde, built.

eek, eke, also.

eek, to increase.

effraide, frightened.

eftsoones, forthwith.

eld, age.

elles, otherwise.

elyng, miserable.

embard, imprisoned.

embayd, enclosed, bathed.

embosse, to plunge.

embost, driven to extremity; encased.

embowd, arched over.

emboyled, agitated, heated.

embrew, to plunge.

embrouded, embroidered.

emmove, to move.

empeach, to hinder.

emperst, penetrated.

emprize, enterprize.

emys, uncle's.

enchace, to depict, to engrave.

encombred, involved.

endyte, write.

enfouldred, like a thunder-cloud, hurled out like thunder and lightning.

engorged, devoured.

engrave, to bury.

engyned, put on the rack for torture.

enhaunst, raised, exalted.

enlargen, to free.

enraunged, placed in a row.

ensamples, examples.

ensewen, to follow.

entente, mind.

entraile, twisted coil.

entune, to intone.

envyned, with well-stocked wine-cellar.

erbe yve, ground ivy.

erne, grieve.

erst, first.

eschewed, shunned.

ese, doon, to provide entertainment.

esloyne, to withdraw.

espye, to perceive.

essoyne, excuse, exemption.

estatly, dignified.

eugh, yew.

even cloth, smooth cloth.

evene lengthe, medium height.

everichon, everyone.

everilkon, everyone.

every-deel, in every respect.

ewghen, of yew.

excheat, gain.

expire, to breathe out.

extirpe, to extirpate.

ey, egg.

eyas, a young hawk, newly fledged.

eyne, eyes.

eyre, air.

fa', fall.

fact, deed.

facultee, profession.

fairlies, wonders.

faitor, villain, impostor.

falding, coarse cloth.

fanglenesse, showiness, the quality of being new-fashioned.

farsed, stuffed.

fashes, troubles.

faste, close, soundly; intently.

faste by, close by.

foynd, disguised.

foyteden, begged in a deceitful manner.

foytor, deceiver.

fee, wealth.

fell, befell, happened.

fell, fierce.

felly, fiercely, cruelly.

fen, chapter of a book by Avicenna; marshland.

ferd, fear.

fere, mate, comrade.

fere, on fere, together.

ferly, wonder.

- ferne, distant.
 ferre, further.
 ferthing, small portion.
 fest, fist.
 fet, feeds, fetched.
 fetis } neat, graceful.
 fetys, }
 fetisly, elegantly.
 fey, faith.
 feyne, to invent.
 ffaine, glad.
 ffare, to go.
 ffarley, strange.
 ffetteled, made ready.
 fille, fell.
 fillet, ribbon for the head.
 finch, pulle a, meaning uncertain. Perhaps to "pluck a dupe."
 finde, provide for.
 fit, division of a song, strain of music, emotion,
 condition.
 fithle, fiddle.
 flaggy, drooping.
 flee, to fly.
 fleigh, flew.
 fleshly, carnally.
 flit, to give way, to move.
 flitting, fleeting.
 florin, an English coin so called because first coined at Florence.
 flowen, flew.
 floytinge, playing the flute.
 foile, a thin sheet of metal.
 foltring, faltering.
 fond, foolish.
 fond } provided for.
 foond, }
 fone, foes.
 for, against, why.
 for-by, past.
 fordonne, ruined, overcome.
 for-dronke, very drunk.
 foreby, near.
 forelifting, lifting up in front.
 forespent, utterly wasted.
 forlete, to give up.
 for-leten, to abandon.
 forn-cast, foreordained.
 forneys, furnace.
 for-pyned, wasted away by torment.
 forrayed, ravaged.
 fors, do no fors of, pay no attention to; no
 matter.
 forsake, avoid.
 for-sleuthen, to waste in idleness.
 forster, forester.
 for-thi, therefore.
 fortunated, happened.
 fortunen, to forecast favorably.
 forwarded, tired out with wandering.
 forward, agreement.
 forwasted, laid waste.
 for-wearied, utterly wearied.
 forwoot, knows beforehand.
 forwrapped, wrapped up, concealed.
 fother, load.
 fou, a dry measure varying from two to six Winchester bushels. The Winchester bushel is slightly less than standard.
 foullys, birds.
 fourtnet, fortnight.
 freight, fraught.
 francklin } substantial farmer, freeman.
 frankeleyn }
 fraternitee, guild.
 fray, to frighten.
 frayneth, beseeches.
 frend, friend, help.
 freyke, freck, bold man.
 froe, from.
 frounce, to gather in folds.
 fruytesteres, fruit-sellers (feminine).
 fry, swarm.
 ful, very.
 fume, harmful vapor rising from stomach to
 brain.
 fumetere, fumitory.
 fumositee, fumes caused by drunkenness.
 fustian, coarse cloth.
 fynde, perhaps a corruption of fyne, meaning end, finish.
 gabbe, to jest, prate.
 gage, pledge.
 gain, to serve.
 galingale, a sort of spice.
 gall, gall-bladder.
 gamed, it pleased.
 gamen, to play.
 gan, did.
 gang, to go.
 gard(e), made.
 gare, ready.
 garget, throat.
 garlande, wreath hung on the wand in shooting contests.
 gars, makes.
 gatis, gates.
 gat-tothed, with widely spaced teeth; but possibly goat-toothed (lascivious).
 gaude, trickery, trifle.
 gauded, fitted with gauds or beads in the rosary
 that mark the five joys of the Virgin.
 Gaufred, Geoffrey de Vinsauf, Anglo-Norman Trouvère.
 gaytres beryies, berries of the buckthorn.
 gede, went.
 gees, geese.
 gent, gentle.
 gere, utensils.

german, brother.
 Gernade, Granada.
 gerner, garner.
 gest, exploit.
 gied, gave.
 gin, instrument of torture; to begin; if.
 gipoun, short doublet.
 gipser, wallet.
 girles, young people of both sexes.
 giternes, guitars.
 giusts, jousts.
 glede, glowing coal, fire.
 glent, glanced, darted.
 glistreth, shines.
 glosed, commented on, explained.
 gnarre, to growl, snarl.
 go, to walk.
 gobbet, fragment.
 golett, part covering the throat, throat.
 goliardeys, buffoon.
 good, knew his good, knew how to act.
 gorge, throat.
 gossibs, friends, relatives.
 governaunce, control.
 government, conduct, control.
 gowe, go we.
 graile, gravel.
 graine, died in graine, dyed thoroughly.
 gree, favor.
 greetin, weeping.
 grette, greeted.
 greved, grew angry.
 grevis, groves.
 greyn, grain, corn.
 griesie, gray, grizzled.
 grieslie, horrible, grim.
 griple, grasp; grasping, tenacious.
 gris, little pigs.
 grisly, horrible.
 grith, peace, "charter of peace."
 grope, test.
 grosse, heavy.
 grotes, four-penny pieces.
 ground, pattern on which lace is worked.
 grucche, murmur.
 gruf, on his face.
 gryping, grasp.
 grys, gray fur.
 gryte, great.
 guerdon, reward.
 guize, behavior, manner, custom.
 gyde, be the munkis, take charge of the monk.
 gypon, short coat.
 gyse, way.

ha, hall.
 habergeoun, coat of mail.
 habite, garment.
 hable, powerful, able.
 hagard hauke, untamed hawk.

haire, heir.
 hals, neck.
 halse, to beseech.
 halwes, saints, shrines of saints.
 halyde, hauled.
 han, have; wiste to han, knew he should have.
 handeling, usage.
 hap, lot.
 harbour, shelter.
 hardily, certainly.
 hardiment, courage.
 hardly, with difficulty.
 harlot, rogue.
 harlotryes, ribald actions or tales.
 harnaised, equipped.
 harre, hinge.
 harrow, a cry for aid.
 hasard, the game of hazard.
 hasardrye, gambling.
 haunt, limit, usual resort, skill.
 haunteden, practised.
 hauteyn, loud, lofty.
 hawe, yard.
 heasts, commands.
 heben, ebony.
 hee, high.
 hefte, raised.
 heig, high.
 heigh ymaginacioun, Heaven's foreknowledge.
 heled, hidden.
 hende, noble, gracious.
 hente, obtain, seize.
 herbergage, lodging.
 herberwe, harbor, inn.
 herde, shepherd.
 here, their.
 herien, to praise.
 heryinge, praising.
 heste, command.
 heveneriche, the kingdom of heaven.
 hew, shape, condition.
 heyre, hair.
 hight, commanded, called; on hight, aloud.
 hight }
 highte } was called.
 hii or hij, they.
 hind, deer.
 hinde, courteous.
 hindreste, hindmost.
 hire, reward.
 holde, to wager.
 holland, a kind of linen.
 holme, evergreen oak, or perhaps holly.
 holt, wood.
 homicyde, murderer.
 hond, hand; out of hond, at once.
 honest, honorable.
 hoomly, simply.
 hoor, gray.
 hord, treasure.

- hore, hoary, frosty.
 horrid, bristling, rough.
 hors, horses.
 ho-so, whoso.
 hot, was called.
 houped, whooped.
 housbondrye, economy.
 housling, sacramental.
 houves, coifs.
 hove, to rise.
 hoved, rocked about.
 howre, time.
 hulls, hills.
 humour, a term from Galenical medicine. The four humors of the body were blood, phlegm, bile, and black bile.
 hurtlen, to rush.
 husher, usher.
 hussyfskap, housewifery.
 hyne, servant.

 ilke, same.
 ilkone, each one.
 imbrew, to thrust.
 impe, scion, offspring.
 implyes, enfolds.
 improvided, unforeseen.
 incontinent, at once.
 infect, invalidated.
 infest, to attack, to make hostile.
 inspired, breathed.
 intendment, careful consideration, knowledge.
 Ise, I shall.
 ith, in the.

 janglere, babbler; jangelers, habblers.
 jangleth, chatters.
 jape, trick.
 japers, jesters.
 jaw, wave.
 jet, fashion.
 Jewerye, Jews'-quarters.
 jolitee, pleasure.
 jolly, brave, gallant, handsome.
 jott, least bit.
 journall, daily.
 jugge, to judge.
 justyse, judge.

 kairen, to go up and down.
 keep, keepe, heed.
 keeping, be at your keeping well, be on your guard.
 ken, to know.
 kend, known.
 kepe, to protect; kepe I be, care I to be.
 kest, to cast.
 kind }
 kinde } nature.
 kynde }
 kindly, natural.
 kirtle, a tunic or coat.
 kithe, of same country or people.
 kitte, cut.
 knarre, a stump of a fellow.
 knave, servant-boy.
 knobbes, swellings.
 knowes, knees.
 kynde witte, natural intelligence.
 kyngriche, kingdom.
 kyrk, church.

 laas, cord.
 latte, to leave off.
 laiike, to play.
 laith, loath.
 lake, pit, cavity.
 lap, leaped.
 large, coarsely.
 last, loads.
 lat, permit.
 latoun, an alloy similar in appearance to brass.
 laude, praise.
 laugte, caught.
 launcht, pierced.
 lauriol, spurge-laurel.
 lay, lodged.
 layn, lying.
 lay-stall, refuse-heap.
 lazar, leper.
 lea, a grassy field.
 leach (pl. leaches), physician.
 leaned, lay (concealed).
 leasing, lie.
 leed, stationary cauldron placed above furnace.
 leef, lief.
 leet, caused, left.
 leman, lover.
 lemes, flames.
 lere, to teach.
 lesinges, lies.
 lest, delight.
 leste, pleased.
 let, to prevent, to hinder; hindrance, obstacle.
 leten, allowed, considered.
 lette, to stop, to wait; hindered.
 letterure, learning.
 Lettow, Lithuania.
 letuaries, electuaries, prescriptions.
 lente }
 lewte } loyalty.
 leve, to grant.
 leve, permission, a permit.
 leved, believed.
 leven, lawn.
 lever, rather.
 lewed, ignorant, rude, common.
 libbard, leopard.
 libbyng, living.
 licour, sap.

lief(e), loved one, dear.
 liflode, means of life.
 ligen, to lie.
 light, lightly, quickly, easily.
 likerous, dainty, gluttonous.
 lilled, lolled, put out (the tongue).
 lillie leven, lovely lawn.
 limitour, one licensed to beg within certain limits.
 lin, to cease (from).
 list, pleased.
 litarge, ointment made from protoxide of lead.
 lith, limb.
 lobyas, lubbers.
 lodemenage, pilotage.
 loe, to love.
 logge, resting-place.
 lopen, leapt.
 lordinges, gentlemen.
 lorne, lost, deserted.
 losengeour, flatterer.
 loset, loosed.
 lough, laughed.
 louted, bowed.
 louting, bowing.
 love-dayes, dayes appointed for settlement of disputes.
 lovyne, to love.
 lowe, hill.
 lowed, stooped.
 Loy, St. Eligius.
 luce, carp.
 lust, delight, desire.
 lustlesse, feeble.
 Lyes, Ayas in Asiatic Turkey.
 lykam, body.
 lyking, pleasure, desire.
 lyne, linden.
 lyne, lineage.
 lyng, furze, bent grass.
 lyvinge, manner of life.
 magger of, in spite of.
 maine, force.
 maistrye, for the, to take the prize in a competition.
 make, mate.
 making, composition, poetry.
 male, wallet.
 mall, club.
 maner, kind of.
 March-parti, Borders.
 mark, money worth 13s. 4d.
 Mart, Mars.
 mart, trade.
 mary, marrow.
 mase, state of confusion, confused fancy.
 masteryes, feats of skill.
 mated, stupefied, overcome.
 maugree, in spite of.

maun, must.
 maunciple, under-servant or buyer for the Inns of Court.
 Maure, St. Maur, a disciple of St. Benedict.
 may, maid.
 mayne, strength, force.
 maynly, violently.
 mealth, melteth.
 meany, troop.
 mede, field, reward.
 meed, reward.
 meet, fitting.
 mell, mingle.
 mene, mean.
 ment, mingled, joined.
 mercenarie, hireling.
 merciable, merciful.
 mesurable, moderate.
 met, dreamt.
 mete, measure.
 meteles, a dream.
 meten, to dream.
 mette, dreamed.
 mew, den.
 mewe, coop.
 meynee, followers.
 minisht, diminished.
 mirk, murky.
 mirkesome, dark.
 miscarie, come to harm.
 mischieves, misfortunes.
 misdeem'd, misjudged.
 misfeigning, feigning with evil purpose.
 misseeming, unseemly, false show.
 mister, kind of.
 mister, trade.
 miteyn, glove.
 mo, more.
 molde, earth.
 momme, mumbling.
 monuments, traces, marks.
 moot, men moot, one should.
 mormal, a running sore.
 mort, note on horn to tell of death of deer.
 mortall, deadly.
 mortreux, a kind of stew.
 morwe, morning.
 moss, bog.
 moste, might.
 mote, may, must.
 mottelee, parti-colored costume.
 mould, form, shape.
 mountance, amount.
 mowe, may.
 mowen, may.
 moyste, new.
 muchell } much.
 muckle }
 myd, with.
 mykel, much.

myllan, Milan steel.
 mylner, miller.
 myneyeple, corruption of manople, perhaps a gauntlet.
 mys, mice.

namely, especially.
 namo, no more.
 narette, do not impute.
 natheles, nevertheless.
 nathemore, never the more.
 nayles, nails.
 ne, nor.
 nedely, of necessity.
 needments, things needed.
 neet, cattle.
 nelle, will not.
 nere, were not.
 nice, fastidious.
 nicetie, reserve.
 niste, did not know.
 nobles, coins worth 6s. 8d.
 noder, none other.
 nones, for the, for the occasion.
 noot, know not.
 norice, nurse.
 nose-thirles, nostrils.
 nosethrill, nostril.
 notabiltee, notable fact.
 note, know not.
 not-heed, cropped head.
 nould, would not.
 nourse, nurse.
 noursled, trained, reared.
 nouthe, as, just now.
 nouthur, neither.
 noyd, vexed, grieved.
 noyous, harmful.
 ny, close.
 nyce, foolish, ignorant.

observe, to favor.
 of, by.
 oght, at all.
 onis, once.
 oon, alwey after, uniform in quality.
 oppyned, opened.
 or, ere.
 origane, wild marjoram (?).
 original, source, cause.
 orlogge, clock.
 ounces, bunches.
 oures, hours of the breviary.
 outrage, clamor, violence.
 outrageous, violent.
 out-rydere, an inspector of the farms of the monastery.
 over al, everywhere.
 overeraw, to exult over.
 overlepe, outrun, catch.

owches, gems.
 ower, over.
 oweth, owneth.

paire, to impair,
 Palatye, Palathia in Anatolia.
 paled, fenced in with pales.
 palfrey, saddle-horse, especially for ladies.
 paramours, lovers.
 parbreake, vomit.
 pardale, panther.
 pardee, Fr. par dieu, an oath.
 pardoner, one who sold indulgences.
 parfourned, performed.
 parissheens, parishioners.
 paroschienes, parishioners.
 parti, upon a, aside.
 parvys, church porch, especially at St. Paul's, London.
 pas, foot-pace.
 passing, surpassing.
 passionate, to express with feeling.
 pastes, pasties.
 patente, letter of privilege.
 paynim, pagan.
 peece, structure, fabric, fortified place.
 peire, series, set (of beads).
 pennes, feathers.
 pent, enclosed.
 peny, a penny.
 perce, pierce.
 perceable, penetrable.
 peren, appear.
 perforce, of necessity.
 pers, dark, shade of blue or crimson.
 persant, piercing.
 persoun, parson.
 peyne, take trouble.
 pight, placed.
 piled, thin.
 pilwe-beer, pillowcase.
 pin, a device for raising the fastening of a door.
 pinche at, to find fault with.
 pinched, pleated.
 pine, suffering, sorrow.
 pined, exhausted by suffering.
 pitaunce, charitable gift.
 plaint, complaint.
 plat, flat, plainly.
 plat, interfolded, entwined.
 platane, oriental plane-tree.
 plededen, plead.
 pleyen, joke.
 pleyn, full.
 pleyne, to complain.
 plight, plait, fold.
 plighted, pledged.
 point (in good), in good condition; to point, completely, exactly; not a point, not a bit.
 pokkes, pustules.

- pomely, dappled.
 poraille, poor people.
 portesse, a portable breviary.
 possed, pushed.
 post, pillar.
 potage, broth.
 poudre-marchant, flavoring powder.
 pouldred, powdered.
 pounces, talons.
 pouped, sounded their horns.
 povert, poverty.
 povre, poor.
 poyse, force.
 prancke, to fold.
 preace, to strive, to press; a crowd.
 predicacioun, preaching.
 prees, crowd.
 presse, meaning uncertain, probably a device for pressing.
 pricasour, a hard rider.
 pricke-wande, rod used as a mark.
 prickes, rods used as marks in shooting.
 pricking, riding.
 priefe, experience, power.
 prime, nine o'clock in the morning; spring-time.
 privily, secretly.
 propre, own, well-made.
 propretee, peculiar quality.
 provost, chief magistrate.
 prow, brave; profit.
 Pruce, Prussia.
 prys, renown.
 puddings, sausages.
 puissance, might.
 pulled, plucked.
 purchas, pickings and stealings.
 purchase, acquisition.
 purchasing, conveyancing.
 purchasour, conveyancer.
 purfiled, fringed.
 purfled, decorated with an ornamental border.
 purtrete, draw.
 purveyaunce, provision.
 pyned, tortured.
 quad, bad.
 quaile, to become dismayed.
 quayd, subdued.
 quell, to frighten, to kill.
 quick, alive.
 quight, to release.
 quire, choir.
 quit, to release.
 quited, requited.
 quod, quoth, said.
 quoth, said.
 quyrry, the slaughtered game.
 rablement, mob.
 radly, quickly.
 raft, struck off.
 rage, to rage; romp.
 ragman, papal bull with seals of bishops attached.
 raile, to flow.
 raine, to reign.
 ramping, raging.
 rape, haste.
 rapt, carried off.
 raskall, base, worthless.
 ratones, small rats.
 raught(e), reached.
 raugte, obtained, reached.
 ravin, plunder, booty.
 ravisedest, didst draw.
 rawstye by the roote, perhaps rusted at the end with blood.
 reacheles on, heedless about.
 read, counsel, advice; to advise.
 reare, to raise.
 reas, rouse.
 reave, to take away.
 rebutte, to recoil.
 rebutted, drove back.
 recche, direct.
 recchelees, heedless.
 reccoyle, to retreat, to retire.
 recure, to restore.
 red, distinguished.
 rede, to advise.
 redily, quickly.
 redounding, overflowing.
 reed, counsel; perceive.
 reele, to roll.
 remes, realms.
 renable, talkative.
 renke, man.
 renne, to run.
 rente, income.
 repast, refreshment.
 repleccioun, repletion.
 repleet, full.
 repreveable, reprehensible.
 repreve, shame.
 reprieft, reproach.
 rethor, rhetorician.
 reve, steward.
 revers, contrary.
 reverse, to bring back.
 revokt, called back.
 revyled, scolded.
 rew, to pity, to be sorry.
 reysed, gone on a military expedition.
 ribaudye, ribaldry.
 riddes, dispatches.
 rife, strong; strongly.
 rift, a split or fissure; rent asunder.
 ring, hammer of door-knocker.
 ritt, runs about, rides.
 rive, to split, tear.

- roberdes knaves, Robertsmen, lawless robbers living at time Piers Plowman was written.
 rode, rood; harbor.
 roghte, cared.
 rompe, rump.
 roste, roast meat.
 rote, a stringed instrument.
 rouncy, farm-horse.
 route, a crowd.
 rouze, to shake up.
 rove, to shoot with arrows.
 rowd, rolled.
 Ruce, Russia.
 rudeliche, rudely.
 rue, to pity.
 ruefulness, pathos.
 rueth, to cause to pity.
 ruffin, disorderly; ruffian.
 rule, taking on.
 ruth, pity, grief.
 ryden out, to go on expeditions.
 rynd, bark, rind.
 ryotour, roisterer.
 ryve, pierce.
 sacred, accursed.
 sad, serious, sober, firm.
 saffron with, to color.
 sagely, wisely.
 sair, sore.
 sallow, variety of willow.
 salue, salute.
 salvage, savage.
 sam, together.
 sanguin, red.
 sangwyn, a term from Galenical medicine—one of the four complexions. It implies jollity and generosity.
 sapience, wisdom.
 Satalye, Adalia in Asiatic Turkey.
 sautry, psaltery.
 savour, have relish for.
 sawcefleem, covered with pimples.
 say, a fine cloth.
 sayling, used for masts of boats.
 scad, scald.
 scald, scab.
 scalle, scab.
 scalled, scabby.
 Scariot, Judas Iscariot.
 scarsly, economically.
 scath(e), harm, injury, pity.
 schrewe, a sinner.
 science, knowledge.
 scoleye, attend the university.
 scored, inscribed.
 scowre, to run, pursue.
 scrip, bag.
 scriveyn, scribe.
 scryne, chest for keeping books and papers.
 se, protect.
 sead, seed.
 seare, burning.
 seasd, penetrated.
 secree, able to keep secrets.
 securly, surely.
 see, save.
 seely, innocent.
 segges, men.
 seig, saw.
 seintuarie, a consecrated object.
 seke, sick.
 selde, seldom.
 selle, barter.
 selles, cells.
 sely, innocent, good.
 sembled, met.
 semi-cope, short cloak worn by priests.
 seminge, as it seems to me.
 sendal, a thin silk.
 sene, visible.
 sent, sensation.
 sentence, significance.
 serjaunt, serjeant.
 sermone, to preach.
 servisable, willing to serve.
 sete, inflicted.
 sethe, boil.
 sette hir aller cappe, made fools of them all.
 settyng, planting.
 sewed, followed.
 seweth, pursue.
 seye, was to, meant.
 seynd, smoked.
 shamefast, confirmed in modesty.
 shamefastnesse, bashfulness.
 shapen, to plan.
 shaply, fit.
 shaume, musical instrument similar to an oboe.
 shawes, woods.
 shear, several.
 sheeldes, French crowns.
 sheene, bright, beautiful.
 shend, to disgrace, to blame.
 shent, scolded.
 shente, injured.
 shepe, shepherd.
 shete a peny, short for a penny.
 sheugh, trench, furrow.
 shewes, appearances, marks.
 shone, shoes.
 shonye, to avoid.
 shoop, planned.
 shope me, arrayed myself.
 shopen, arrayed.
 shoures, showers.
 shradds, coppices.
 shrewe, to curse.

- shrewe, wicked person, rascal.
 shroggs, wands for marks.
 shroudes, garments.
 shryve, to shrive.
 shyars, counties.
 sic, such.
 sike, sick.
 sikerer, surer.
 sikerly, surely.
 silly, simple, harmless, innocent.
 sinke, deposit.
 sith, afterwards, since.
 sithens, since.
 slade, valley.
 slake, to moderate, abate.
 slaked, moderated.
 slawe, slain.
 sleighte, craft, trick.
 sleuthe, sloth.
 slight, trick, device.
 slon, to slay.
 smale fowles, little birds; perhaps nightingales.
 smerte, hurt.
 snibben, to rebuke.
 snubbes, snags, knobs.
 softly, gently.
 solempne, important.
 som-del, somewhat.
 somnour, summoner, an officer who cited culprits before an ecclesiastical court.
 sondry, various.
 soothly, truly.
 sop in wyn, bread or cake broken in wine.
 sort, chance, manner.
 sorwe, with, either, bad luck to him! or, to his harm.
 sote, sweet.
 soth, truth.
 sothfastnesse, truth.
 souce, to strike, to swoop upon.
 souded, confirmed.
 soukinge, sucking.
 souning, tending toward.
 soust, dipped, steeped.
 sovereygne, excellent.
 sovereynly, chiefly.
 sownd, to wield (?).
 sowne, sound.
 space, space of time.
 sparred, shut.
 spendyd, got ready.
 spersed, dispersed.
 spiced conscience, an overfastidious conscience.
 spies, glances, thrusts.
 spill, to destroy.
 sporne, to kick.
 sprente, sprang, spurted.
 spreyned, sprinkled.
 spright, spirit.
 spurn, kick (?), encounter (?).
 spyced conscience, overfastidious conscience.
 spyrrd, asked.
 stadle, prop.
 stage, at a, from a floor, story.
 stal, stole away.
 stape in age, advanced in years.
 stay, support.
 stayd, caused to stay.
 sted, place.
 stelths, thefts.
 stepe, prominent, bulging.
 stere, steersman.
 sterlinges, silver coins.
 sterne, stern(men).
 sterve, die.
 steven, voice.
 steven (unsett steven), at an unexpected time.
 stew, hot steaming place.
 stewe, fish-pond.
 stewes, brothels.
 still, ever.
 stinte, stop.
 stockes, posts.
 stole, mantle.
 stoor, farm-stock.
 storven, died.
 stot, hack, cob.
 stound, stunned.
 stound } moment, time; peril, trouble.
 stownd }
 stour, brawl, fight.
 stowre, disturbance, conflict, danger.
 straunge, foreign.
 streightes, closes.
 streit, strict, stinted.
 streite, drawn.
 stremes, currents.
 streneth, constrains.
 strete and stalle, perhaps, on the road and housed.
 streyte, strictly.
 streynes, estrays; "goods which a stranger leaves behind him at death, and which go to the king or lord for default of heirs" (Skeat:
Piers the Plowman, Glossary). strike, hank.
 stroke, moved rapidly forward.
 strowd, scattered.
 stub, the stock of a tree.
 studieth, meditate, delay.
 sturre, disturbance, tumult.
 styte, alley.
 styte, to mount.
 suar, trusty, sure.
 subject, underlying.
 subtilly, secretly.
 suffisaunce, competence.
 superfluitee, excess.
 suppress, to overcome.
 surcote, upper coat.

- sustened, maintained.
 swaid, swung.
 swal, swelled.
 swapte, smote with swords.
 swarved, swerved.
 swat, were sweating.
 sway, to swing.
 sweaven, dream.
 swelt, swelled, raged, fainted.
 swevene, dream.
 sveyved, sounded.
 swich, such.
 swunged, singed.
 swink, toil.
 swinken, to work.
 swonken, toiled.
 swote, sweet.
 swownd, swoon.
 swynke, toil.
 swythe, quickly.
 syen, see.
 syke, ditch, trench.
 syne, afterwards.
 sythes, times.
 tabard, rough coat worn by laborers.
 tackles, equipment of a ship, rigging.
 taille, by, on account.
 takel, archery-gear.
 talaunts, claws.
 talen, to tell stories.
 talent, desire.
 tand, tanned.
 tane, taken.
 tapicer, upholsterer.
 tappestere, tavern-keeper.
 targe, small shield.
 taverners, keepers of taverns.
 teade, torch.
 tear, there (?).
 teene, affliction, grief.
 telle . . . no store, set no store by.
 tellen, to count over.
 tempest thee, distress thyself severely.
 temple, college of law.
 tempred, accommodated.
 terciane, tertian.
 terme, in, in set phrases, verbatim.
 tett, lock (of hair or mane).
 that, so that, when.
 the(e), so mot I, so may I thrive.
 thee'ch, so, so may I thrive.
 thegither, together.
 then, than.
 ther-as, where.
 there, where.
 ther-to, in addition.
 thewes, manners, habits.
 thi, thy.
 thilke, that.
 thing, make a, draw up a writ.
 tho, the, those; then.
 thombe of gold, the thumb of a good miller.
 thral, slave.
 thriftily, carefully.
 thrild, pierced.
 thrill, to pierce, penetrate.
 thrillant, piercing.
 throuch-and-thro, through and through.
 throw, pang.
 tide, time.
 tikelnesse, instability.
 tilie, to cultivate.
 timely, measured.
 tipet, hood.
 tire, attire, dress, train, crew.
 tocke, took.
 toft, an exposed elevation.
 tollen, take toll.
 tolleres, collectors of tolls.
 tombesteres, female tumblers.
 tool, weapon.
 toon, toes.
 to-rente, tore asunder, torn asunder.
 torn, turn.
 tort, wrong.
 to-swinke, work overmuch.
 to-tere, tear asunder.
 tract, trace.
 traine {
 trayne { tail, trickery.
 Tramissene, Tremeyen, a district in the north of Africa.
 transmew, to transform.
 traynes, artifices, snares.
 treachour, traitor.
 treen, of trees.
 trenchand, sharp, piercing.
 trespass, sin, wrong.
 tretys, well-proportioned.
 treye, three.
 triacle, a sovereign remedy.
 trielich, choicely.
 trinall, threefold.
 tristil-tre, a tree used as a meeting-place.
 trowe, believe.
 truncked, beheaded.
 trusse, to seize and carry away.
 tukked, tucked.
 twaw, two.
 tway, two, twain.
 twinn, in, in twain, in two's.
 twinne, to depart from, to separate.
 twyne, band.
 tyde, time.
 tyne, pain, sorrow.
 tyre, head-dress.
 uche a, each.
 unbid, unprayed for.

unbrent, unburned.
 uncoupled, loose.
 uncouth, strange.
 undern, noon, from nine until twelve.
 undight, unfastened, removed.
 uneasie, uncomfortable, disturbed.
 uneath, difficult; with difficulty.
 unhardy, timid.
 unkindely, against nature.
 unlese, unloose.
 unlich, unlike.
 unnethe, scarcely.
 unthrifty, wicked.
 untill, towards, unto.
 unwary, unexpected.
 unweeting, unconscious, unknowing.
 upright, flat on the back.
 upstaring, bristling, upstarting.
 usage, custom.

vache, beast.
 vavasour, a sub-vassal, landholder.
 • veiwe, yew. venerye, hunting.
 verament, truly.
 vere, to turn.
 vernicle, copy of the Veronica picture of Christ.
 verrailly, truly.
 vertu, power.
 virtuous, powerful, virtuous.
 veyne, vein.
 viage, journey.
 viewe, yew.
 vigilyès, ceremonies held the evening before a festival.
 vildly, vilely.
 vileinye, rudeness, unfit speech.
 visour, mask, disguise.
 vitaille, victuals.
 vouché-sauf, vouchsafe, grant.

wafereres, confectioners.
 wake, to watch, wake.
 wan, pale, gloomy.
 wane, meaning uncertain; perhaps a vehicle for a missile; perhaps a number, as "one out of a number."
 wanton, wild, playful.
 wantown, playful.
 war, aware.
 ward, to guard.
 wardles make, earthly mate.
 wardmotes, meetings of a ward.
 wardrobe, privy.
 ware, to guard.
 ware, wary, sharp.
 ware, wore.
 warcine, warren.

warely, carefully.
 warente, protect.
 warison, reward.
 warrayd, made war upon.
 warsle, wrestle.
 waryce, save.
 wastel-breed, fine white bread.
 wastfull, barren.
 watering, a brook or watering-place for horses on the road to Canterbury.
 wayne, wagon, chariot.
 wayted after, demanded, expected.
 weal, clench hard.
 webbe, weaver.
 weeds, clothes.
 weene, to think.
 weening, thinking.
 weet, to know.
 welaway, alas.
 weld, to wield.
 wele, happiness.
 welke, to fade, wane.
 welked, withered.
 welkin, sky.
 wende, would have supposed.
 wenden, to go.
 wenen, think.
 werre, war.
 wex, to grow.
 weyves, waifs.
 whally, having a tinge of green, streaked.
 whelkes, pustules.
 whelp, puppy.
 wher, whether.
 whereas, where.
 whiche, what sort.
 whilom, whylom, formerly, ever.
 whot, hot.
 whyleare, erewhile, lately.
 wide, wyde, away.
 wif, woman.
 wight, strong; man, person.
 wighty, strong.
 wike, week.
 wilfull of my way, lost; "and of my morning tyde," which perhaps means, "don't know what time it is."
 wilfully, by choice.
 wimpel, covering for the head.
 wimpled, laid, lay in folds.
 win, to go.
 wise, wize, manner.
 wisly, wysly, surely.
 wist, knew.
 wit, bit of wisdom; genius.
 with, by.
 with-alle, withal, however.
 withouten, besides.
 withseye, oppose.
 wlatson, loathsome.

- wolden, wished.
 wollewebsteres, wool-weavers.
 wombe, belly.
 won(e), wonne, to dwell, live, abide.
 wone, custom, number, plenty.
 woning, dwelling.
 wonnen, won.
 wont, to be accustomed.
 wonted, accustomed.
 wood, mad.
 woodnesse, madness.
 woodweele, woodpecker or thrush
 worchyng, working.
 worm, snake, dragon.
 worship, honor.
 wortes, herbs.
 worthe, be.
 worthy, noble, distinguished.
 wot, know.
 wouche, evil.
 woxen, grown, become.
 wrattheth, becomes angry.
 wreakes, punishments, revenges.
 wrighte, carpenter.
 wring, to distress.
 wrizled, wrinkled, shriveled.
 wrocken, avenged.
 wyf, woman.
 wyld, deer.
 wyning, profit.
- wys, to make it, to make a difficult matter of it; wise.
 yaf, gave.
 yblent, blinded.
 y-chaped, furnished with the metal point of a scabbard; or, mounted.
 y-cladd, clad.
 y-corven, cut.
 ydel, in vain.
 ydrad, dreaded.
 yē, eyes.
 yeddinges, songs.
 yede, to go.
 yemen, yeomen.
 yeris, years.
 yerne, briskly.
 yes, you shall (in Twa Sisters).
 yfere, together.
 ymages, images, probably either wax images of the patient or signs of the zodiac.
 ympe, imp, scion, child, youth.
 yod, went.
 ypight, placed.
 yplaste, placed.
 Ypocras, Hippocrates.
 y-sene, visible.
 y-shrive, shriven.
 ysought, sought.
 yut, yet.
 y-wimpled, covered with a wimple.

INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND FIRST LINES OF POEMS

INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND FIRST LINES OF POEMS

Names of authors are printed in CAPITALS, and titles are printed in italics. Titles beginning with "A," "An," or "The" are indexed under their second words. In cases where the title of a poem is identical with its first line, or with the initial portion of it, the title only is indexed.

	PAGE		PAGE
A book was writ of late called Tetrachordon . . . . .	397	Captain or Colonel, or Knight in Arms . . . . .	396
A Gentle Knight was pricking on the plaine . . . . .	193	CAXTON, WILLIAM . . . . .	143
A povre widwe, somdel stape in age . . . . .	92	Charm me asleep, and melt me so . . . . .	354
A student at his book, so placed . . . . .	326	CHAUCER, GEOFFREY . . . . .	79
A sweet disorder in the dress . . . . .	353	Chaucers Wordes unto Adam, his owne Scri-
Absalom and Achitophel . . . . .	500	veyn . . . . .	106
Adam scriveyn, if ever it thee bifalle . . . . .	106	Cherry-Ripe . . . . .	353
ADDISON, JOSEPH . . . . .	532	Collar, The . . . . .	358
Ah, Ben . . . . .	357	COLLINS, WILLIAM . . . . .	623
Alas, 'tis true I have gone here and there . . . . .	338	Come, my Celia, let us prove . . . . .	344
Alexander's Feast . . . . .	529	Come, Sleep! O Sleep, the certain knot of
All for Love . . . . .	457	peace . . . . .	328
All human things are subject to decay . . . . .	514	Come, thou Monarch of the Vine . . . . .	341
All ye that lovely lovers be . . . . .	331	Come thou, who art the wine and wit . . . . .	355
And wilt thou leave me thus . . . . .	321	Comfort to a Youth that had Lost his Love . . . . .	357
Apelles' Song . . . . .	326	Complaint of a Lover Rebuked . . . . .	324
Argument of his Book, The . . . . .	353	Complaint of the Absence of her Lover . . . . .	324
Art above Nature, To Julia . . . . .	356	Complaint of Chaucer to his Empty Purse, The . . . . .	107
As once, if not with light regard . . . . .	624	Constant Lover, The . . . . .	360
Ascension Hymn . . . . .	365	Corinna's Going A-Maying . . . . .	353
Ask me why I send you here . . . . .	356	Cromwell, our chief of men, who through a
Astrophel and Stella . . . . .	327	cloud . . . . .	399
At a Solemn Music . . . . .	389	Cruel Brother, The . . . . .	125
Athelstan King . . . . .	44	Cupid's Curse . . . . .	331
Authorized Version of the Bible, The . . . . .	284	Cupid and my Campaspe played . . . . .	326
Avenge, O Lord, thy slaughtered saints,		Cyriack, this three years' day these eyes,
whose bones . . . . .	397	though clear . . . . .	399
Awake Æolian lyre, awake . . . . .	633	Cyriack, whose grandsire on the royal bench . . . . .	398
Awake, my St. John! leave all meaner things . . . . .	612
Back and Side go Bare . . . . .	326	Daughter of Jove, relentless Power . . . . .	632
BACON, FRANCIS . . . . .	292	Dear love, for nothing less than thee . . . . .	351
Bard, The . . . . .	634	Death, be not proud, though some have
Battle of Brunanburh, The . . . . .	44	called thee . . . . .	352
Battle of Maldon, The . . . . .	46	Delight in Disorder . . . . .	353
Beauty is but a Painted Hell . . . . .	343	Description of Spring Wherein each Thing Re-
Being your slave, what should I do but tend . . . . .	336	news, save only the Lover . . . . .	324
Beowulf . . . . .	1	Description of the Contrarious Passions in a
Bermudas . . . . .	363	Lover . . . . .	320
Bid me to live, and I will live . . . . .	355	Dim as the borrowed beams of moon and
Blest pair of Sirens, pledges of Heaven's joy . . . . .	389	stars . . . . .	522
Blow, Blow, thou Winter Wind . . . . .	341	Dirge in Cymbeline . . . . .	623
Book of Ruth, The . . . . .	284	Discipline . . . . .	358
Brave infant of Saguntum, clear . . . . .	347	Doctor Faustus . . . . .	166
BROWNE, SIR THOMAS . . . . .	367	DONNE, JOHN . . . . .	349
		Doubt of Martyrdom, A . . . . .	360
		Douglas Tragedy, The . . . . .	109
		DRAYTON, MICHAEL . . . . .	332
		Dream, The . . . . .	351
CAMPION, THOMAS . . . . .	342
Canterbury Tales, The . . . . .	80

	PAGE		PAGE
Drink to me only with thine eyes . . .	344	He bade each youth turn loose his horse and drive it far away . . .	46
DRYDEN, JOHN . . .	457	Hence, loathed Melancholy . . .	390
DYER, SIR EDWARD . . .	329	Hence, vain deluding Joys . . .	391
Earnest Suit to his Unkind Mistress not to For- sake Him, An . . .	321	Her eyes the glow-worm lend thee . . .	356
Ecstasy, The . . .	351	Her mother died when she was young . . .	126
Edward . . .	123	Her Triumph . . .	345
Elegy Written in a Country Church-Yard . . .	638	HERBERT, GEORGE . . .	358
Eleventh Song . . .	328	Here, a little child, I stand . . .	358
Epistle to Dr. Arbuthnot . . .	616	Here she lies, a pretty bud . . .	355
Epitaph on Elizabeth, L. H. . . .	349	HERRICK, ROBERT . . .	353
Epitaph on Salathiel Pavy . . .	349	High-spirited friend . . .	345
Epithalamion . . .	278	His Litany, to the Holy Spirit . . .	357
Essay on Criticism, An . . .	590	His Pilgrimage . . .	330
Essay on Man, An . . .	612	His Winding-Sheet . . .	355
Essays or Counsels . . .	293	Holy Sonnet . . .	352
Euphues . . .	159	Horatian Ode upon Cromwell's Return from Ireland, An . . .	361
Everyman . . .	130	How like a winter hath my absence been . . .	338
Faerie Queene, The . . .	192	How sleep the brave who sink to rest . . .	625
Fair and fair, and twice so fair . . .	331	How soon hath Time, the subtle thief of youth . . .	396
Fair Daffodils, we weep to see . . .	355	HOWARD, HENRY, EARL OF SURREY . . .	324
Fair stood the wind for France . . .	333	Hunting of the Cheviot, The . . .	118
Farewell, Love, and all thy laws for ever . . .	321	Hydriotaphia, Urn-Burial . . .	367
Fatal Sisters, The . . .	637	Hymn to Adversity . . .	632
Fear no more the Heat o' the Sun . . .	341	Hymn to Diana . . .	344
Flee fro the prees, and dwelle with sothfast- nesse . . .	106	Hymn to God the Father, A . . .	352
Fly, envious Time, till thou run out thy race . . .	389	I can love both fair and brown . . .	350
Follow a shadow, it still flies you . . .	345	I can sing of myself a true song, of my voy- ages telling . . .	41
Follow thy Fair Sun . . .	342	I cannot eat but little meat . . .	326
Follow your Saint . . .	342	I dare not ask a kiss . . .	357
Forget not yet the tried intent . . .	322	I did but prompt the age to quit their clogs . . .	397
Four and twenty bonny boys . . .	128	I find no peace, and all my war is done . . .	320
From harmony, from heav'nly harmony . . .	528	I have lost, and lately, these . . .	353
From you have I been absent in the spring . . .	338	I love, and he loves me again . . .	346
Full Fathom Five thy Father Lies . . .	342	I pray thee, leave, love me no more . . .	332
Funeral, The . . .	352	I saw Eternity the other night . . .	363
Gather ye rosebuds while ye may . . .	354	I sing of brooks, of blossoms, birds and bowers . . .	353
Get up and Bar the Door . . .	129	I struck the board, and cried, "No more; I will abroad" . . .	358
Get up, get up for shame, the blooming morn . . .	353	Idea . . .	332
Give me my scallop-shell of quiet . . .	330	If aught of oaten stop, or pastoral song . . .	627
Give place, ye lovers, here before . . .	325	If yet I have not all thy love . . .	350
Go and catch a falling star . . .	349	Il Penseroso . . .	391
Go, burning sighs, unto the frozen heart . . .	321	In a somer seson whan soft was the sonne . . .	74
Go Lovely Rose . . .	359	In Flaundres whylom was a companye . . .	100
Grace for a Child, A . . .	358	In pious times, ere priestcraft did begin . . .	501
GRAY, THOMAS . . .	630	In somer, when the shawes be sheyne . . .	113
GREENE, ROBERT . . .	331	In the hour of my distress . . .	357
Gulliver's Travels . . .	558	In vain to me the smiling Mornings shine . . .	640
Had we but world enough, and time . . .	362	Indifferent, The . . .	350
Happy the man whose wish and care . . .	590	Into these loves, who but for passion looks . . .	332
Happy those early days, when I . . .	364	It fell about the Martinmas time . . .	129
Hark, Hark! the Lark . . .	341	JOHNSON, SAMUEL . . .	641
Harvestmen A-Singing . . .	331	JONSON, BEN . . .	344
Having this day my horse, my hand, my lance . . .	328

	PAGE		PAGE
Kemp Owyne . . . . .	126	My mother's maids, when they did sew and spin . . . . .	322
Lady, that in the prime of earliest youth . . . . .	397	My Sheep are Thoughts . . . . .	329
Lak of Steadfastnesse . . . . .	106	My True-Love Hath my Heart . . . . .	329
L'Allegro . . . . .	390
LANGLAND, WILLIAM . . . . .	74	Never Love . . . . .	343
Lawrence, of virtuous father virtuous son . . . . .	398	Night-Piece, to Julia, The . . . . .	356
Leave me, O Love, which reachest but to dust . . . . .	328	No longer mourn for me when I am dead . . . . .	337
Let me not to the marriage of true minds . . . . .	339	No more! My Dear, no more these counsels try . . . . .	328
Let those who are in favor with their stars . . . . .	335	Not marble, nor the gilded monuments . . . . .	336
Like as the waves make towards the pebbled shore . . . . .	336	Now the storm begins to lower . . . . .	637
Lo I the man, whose Muse whilome did maske . . . . .	192	Now Winter Nights Enlarge . . . . .	343
Lo, praise of the prowess of people-kings . . . . .	2	Nun's Priest's Tale, The . . . . .	92
"Lordings," quod he, "in chirches whan I preche" . . . . .	99	Nymph's Passion, A . . . . .	346
Love . . . . .	359	O do not wanton with those eyes . . . . .	345
Love bade me welcome; yet my soul drew back . . . . .	359	O, for my sake do you with Fortune chide . . . . .	339
Love, that doth reign and live within my thought . . . . .	324	O for some honest lover's ghost . . . . .	360
LOVELACE, RICHARD . . . . .	360	O happy dames! that may embrace . . . . .	324
Lover beseecheth his Mistress not to Forget his Steadfast Faith and True Intent, The . . . . .	322	O Lord our Lord, thy name how merveillous . . . . .	89
Lover Compareth his State to a Ship in Perilous Storm Tossed on the Sea, The . . . . .	320	O Mistress Mine . . . . .	341
Lover Complaineth the Unkindness of his Love, The . . . . .	321	O, never say that I was false of heart . . . . .	338
Lover for Shamefastness Hideth his Desire within his Faithful Heart, The . . . . .	320	O thou by Nature taught . . . . .	624
Lover Having Dreamed of Enjoying of his Love, Complaineth that the Dream is not either Longer or Truer, The . . . . .	320	Ode, An (Jonson) . . . . .	345
Lover Sendeth Sighs to Move his Suit, The . . . . .	321	Ode for Ben Jonson, An . . . . .	357
Lovers' Infiniteness . . . . .	350	Ode on a Distant Prospect of Eton College . . . . .	631
Loving in truth, and fain in verse my love to show . . . . .	327	Ode on Solitude . . . . .	590
Lycidas . . . . .	393	Ode on the Death of a Favorite Cat . . . . .	630
LYLY, JOHN . . . . .	159, 326	Ode on the Poetical Character . . . . .	624
Lyric Poetry of the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries . . . . .	319	Ode to Evening . . . . .	627
		Ode to Liberty . . . . .	626
		Ode to Simplicity . . . . .	624
		Ode Written in the Beginning of the Year 1746 . . . . .	625
		Of Adversity . . . . .	294
		Of Anger . . . . .	318
		Of Atheism . . . . .	301
		Of Boldness . . . . .	300
		Of Discourse . . . . .	309
		Of Dispatch . . . . .	304
		Of Expense . . . . .	309
		Of Friendship . . . . .	306
		Of Great Place . . . . .	298
		Of Judicature . . . . .	316
		Of Love . . . . .	297
		Of Man's first disobedience, and the fruit. Of Marriage and Single Life . . . . .	400
		Of Nature in Men . . . . .	312
		Of Negotiating . . . . .	313
		Of Nobility . . . . .	301
		Of Parents and Children . . . . .	296
		Of Praise . . . . .	315
		Of Riches . . . . .	310
		Of Seeming Wise . . . . .	305
		Of Simulation and Dissimulation . . . . .	294
		Of Studies . . . . .	314
		Of Superstition . . . . .	303
		Of the Death of Sir T[homas] W[ylatt] . . . . .	325
Mac Flecknoe . . . . .	514
MALORY, SIR THOMAS . . . . .	143
Man . . . . .	364
Man of Life Upright, The . . . . .	344
MARLOWE, CHRISTOPHER . . . . .	166
Martial, the things that do attain . . . . .	325
MARVELL, ANDREW . . . . .	361
Means to Attain Happy Life, The . . . . .	325
Methought I saw my late espoused saint . . . . .	398
MILTON, JOHN . . . . .	388
Morte d'Arthur, Le . . . . .	143
My galley chargéd with forgetfulness . . . . .	320
My lute, awake, perform the last . . . . .	321
My Mind to me a Kingdon Is . . . . .	329
My mistress' eyes are nothing like the sun . . . . .	339

	PAGE		PAGE
Of the Mean and Sure Estate . . . . .	322	Sir Hugh, or, the Jew's Daughter. . . . .	128
Of Truth . . . . .	293	Sir Patrick Spens. . . . .	122
Of Wisdom for a Man's Self . . . . .	303	Sketch of his own Character. . . . .	640
Of Youth and Age . . . . .	313	Som tyme this world was so stedfast and
On Shakespeare . . . . .	389	stable . . . . .	106
On the Late Massacre in Piedmont . . . . .	397	Song (Donne) . . . . .	349
On Time . . . . .	389	Song, A (Jonson) . . . . .	345
Our Hoste gan to swere as he were wood . . . . .	98	Song for St. Cecilia's Day, A . . . . .	528
Out upon it, I have loved . . . . .	360	Song of Solomon, The . . . . .	288
Paradise Lost . . . . .	399	Song: That Women are but Men's Shadows . . . . .	345
Pardoner's Tale, The . . . . .	100	Song: To Celia . . . . .	344
Passions, The . . . . .	628	Sonnet on the Death of Richard West . . . . .	640
PEELE, GEORGE . . . . .	331	Spectator, The . . . . .	540
Piers the Plowman . . . . .	74	SPENSER, EDMUND . . . . .	189
Pindaric Ode, A (Jonson) . . . . .	347	Spring's Welcome . . . . .	327
Poor soul, the center of my sinful earth . . . . .	339	STEELE, SIR RICHARD . . . . .	532
POPE, ALEXANDER . . . . .	589	Still the lone one and desolate waits for his
Popular Ballads . . . . .	108	Maker's ruth . . . . .	39
Praise of his Love, Wherein he Reproveth them		Still to be Neat. . . . .	345
that Compare their Ladies with His, A . . . . .	325	Student at his Book, A. . . . .	326
Primrose, The . . . . .	356	Such vain thought as wonted to mislead me . . . . .	320
Priores's Prologue, The. . . . .	89	SUCKLING, SIR JOHN . . . . .	360
Priores's Tale, The. . . . .	89	Sweet are the Thoughts that Savor of Content . . . . .	331
Progress of Poesy, The. . . . .	633	SWIFT, JONATHAN . . . . .	557
Prologue; Canterbury Tales . . . . .	80	Take, O Take those Lips Away. . . . .	341
Prologue of the Pardoner's Tale, The . . . . .	99	Tatler, The . . . . .	533
Pulley, The . . . . .	359	Tell me, Where is Fancy Bred. . . . .	340
Queen and Huntress, chaste and fair . . . . .	344	That time of year thou mayst in me behold . . . . .	337
RALEIGH, SIR WALTER . . . . .	330	The Curfew tolls the knell of parting day . . . . .	638
Rape of the Lock, The . . . . .	600	The expense of spirit in a waste of shame . . . . .	339
Rasselas . . . . .	642	The forward youth that would appear . . . . .	361
Religio Laici . . . . .	517	The King sits in Dunfermlin town . . . . .	122
Renouncing of Love, A . . . . .	321	The long love that in my thought doth har-
Retreat, The . . . . .	364	bor . . . . .	320
Riddles Wisely Expounded. . . . .	108	The Persè owt off Northombarlonde . . . . .	118
"Rise up, rise up, now Lord Douglas," she		The soote season that bud and bloom forth
says . . . . .	109	brings . . . . .	324
Robin Hood and Guy of Gisborne. . . . .	110	Then hate me when thou wilt; if ever, now . . . . .	337
Robin Hood and the Monk. . . . .	113	Ther was in Asie, in a greet citee . . . . .	89
Robin Hood's Death. . . . .	117	There is a Garden in her Face . . . . .	342
Rose-Cheeked Laura . . . . .	343	There lived a wife at Usher's Well . . . . .	126
Ruin seize thee, ruthless King . . . . .	635	There was a lady of the North Country . . . . .	108
Seafarer, The . . . . .	41	There was three ladies playd at the ba . . . . .	125
See the chariot at hand here of Love . . . . .	345	There was twa sisters in a bower . . . . .	124
Set me whereas the sun doth parch the green . . . . .	324	There were three ravens sat on a tree . . . . .	123
SHAKESPEARE, WILLIAM . . . . .	335	There were twa brethren in the north . . . . .	124
Shall I compare thee to a summer's day . . . . .	335	They are all gone into the world of light . . . . .	365
Shut not so soon; the dull-eyed night . . . . .	355	They that have power to hurt and will do
Shut, shut the door, good John! fatigued, I		none . . . . .	337
said . . . . .	616	Thomas Rymer . . . . .	127
SIDNEY, SIR PHILIP . . . . .	327	Three Ravens, The. . . . .	123
Sigh no More. . . . .	341	Throw away thy rod . . . . .	358
Since there's no help, come, let us kiss and		Thy bosom is endeared with all hearts . . . . .	336
part . . . . .	332	'Tis hard to say, if greater want of skill . . . . .	590
Sir Gawain and the Green Knight. . . . .	51	To Althea, from Prison. . . . .	360
		To Anthea, who may Command him Anything . . . . .	355
		To Celia . . . . .	344
		To Daffodils . . . . .	355

	PAGE
To Daisies, not to Shut so Soon . . . . .	355
To draw no envy, Shakespeare, on thy name . . . . .	346
To Electra . . . . .	357
To Enjoy the Time . . . . .	355
To fair Fidele's grassy tomb . . . . .	623
To his Coy Love . . . . .	332
To his Coy Mistress . . . . .	362
To Mr. Cyriack Skinner, upon his Blindness . . . . .	399
To Music, to Becalm his Fever . . . . .	354
To the Cambro-Britons and their Harp his Bal- lad of Agincourt . . . . .	333
To the Lord General Cromwell, May, 1652 . . . . .	399
To the Memory of my Beloved Master William Shakespeare . . . . .	346
To the Virginian Voyage . . . . .	332
To the Virgins to Make Much of Time . . . . .	354
To you, my purse, and to non other wight . . . . .	107
Too poor for a bribe, and too proud to impor- tune . . . . .	640
Tragical History of Doctor Faustus, The . . . . .	166
True Thomas lay oer yond grassy bank . . . . .	127
Truth . . . . .	106
Twa Brothers, The . . . . .	124
Twa Sisters, The . . . . .	124
'Twas at the royal feast, for Persia won . . . . .	529
'Twas on a lofty vase's side . . . . .	630
Under the Greenwood Tree . . . . .	340
Unstable dream, according to the place . . . . .	320
Upon a Child that Died . . . . .	355
Upon the Loss of his Mistresses . . . . .	353
VAUGHAN, HENRY . . . . .	363
Vow to Love Faithfully Howsoever he be Re- warded . . . . .	324
W. resteth here, that quick could never rest . . . . .	325
WALLER, EDMUND . . . . .	359
Wanderer, The . . . . .	39
Waterfall, The . . . . .	365
Wavering Lover Willeth, and Dreadeth, to Move his Desire, The . . . . .	320
Weep not my Wanton . . . . .	331
Weep with me, all you that read . . . . .	349
Weighing the steadfastness and state . . . . .	364
"Wel seyð, by corpus dominus," quod our hoste . . . . .	89
When that Aprille with his shoures sote . . . . .	80
What bird so sings, yet so does wail . . . . .	327

	PAGE
What dire offense from am'rous causes springs . . . . .	601
What needs complaints . . . . .	357
What needs my Shakespeare for his honored bones . . . . .	389
When Daisies Pied . . . . .	340
When God at first made man . . . . .	359
When I behold a forest spread . . . . .	356
When I consider everything that grows . . . . .	335
When I consider how my light is spent . . . . .	398
When I have seen by Time's fell hand de- faced . . . . .	337
When Icicles Hang by the Wall . . . . .	340
When, in disgrace with Fortune and men's eyes . . . . .	335
When in the chronicle of wasted time . . . . .	338
When Love with unconfined wings . . . . .	360
When Music, heav'nly maid, was young . . . . .	628
When Robin Hood and Little John . . . . .	117
When shawes beene sheene, and shradds full fayre . . . . .	110
When Thou Must Home . . . . .	343
When to the sessions of sweet silent thought . . . . .	336
Where, like a pillow on a bed . . . . .	351
Where the remote Bermudas ride . . . . .	363
While fates permit us, let's be merry . . . . .	355
Who is it that this dark night . . . . .	328
Who is Sylvia . . . . .	340
Who shall awake the Spartan fife . . . . .	626
Whoever comes to shroud me, do not harm . . . . .	352
Why dois your brand sae drap wi bluid . . . . .	123
Why so Pale and Wan . . . . .	360
Wife of Usher's Well, The . . . . .	126
Wilt thou forgive that sin where I begun . . . . .	352
With how sad steps, O Moon, thou climb'st the skies . . . . .	327
With what deep murmurs through time's silent stealth . . . . .	365
Words of the Host . . . . .	98
World, The . . . . .	363
Would'st thou hear what man can say . . . . .	349
WYATT, SIR THOMAS . . . . .	320
Ye distant spires, ye antique towers . . . . .	631
Ye learned sisters, which have oftentimes . . . . .	278
Yet once more, O ye laurels, and once more . . . . .	393
You brave heroic minds . . . . .	332
You that do search for every purling spring . . . . .	327

DISCARDED

Boston Baptist College

* 3 1 0 4 7 0 9 *